8 (d) GUARANTEED PAYMENT ACCOUNT.—

9 (1) IN GENERAL.—The Administrator shall es-

13 participants.

14 (2) SURCHARGE.—The Administrator shall im-
15 pose, on each participant required to pay contribu-16 tions into the Fund under this Act, in addition to 17 the amount of such contributions, a reasonable sur-
18 charge to be paid into the guaranteed payment ac-
19 count in an amount that the Administrator deter-20 mines appropriate to insure against the risk of non-21 payment of required contributions by any such par-
22 ticipant.

23 (3) PROCEDURE.—The surcharge required
24 under this section shall be paid in such manner, at

1 such times, and in accordance with such procedures
2 as the Administrator determines appropriate.

3 (4) USES OF GUARANTEED PAYMENT AC-
4 COUNT.—Amounts in the guaranteed payment ac-
5 count shall be used as necessary to pay claims from 6 the Fund, to the extent that amounts in the Fund
7 are insufficient to pay such claims due to non-8 payment by any participant.

9 (5) ENFORCEMENT.—The enforcement of the 10 payment of a surcharge under this subsection may 11 be enforced in the same manner and to the same ex-12 tent as the enforcement of a contribution under sec-
13 tion 224.

15 (1) IN GENERAL.—To the extent the total 16 amount of contributions of the participants in any 20 lished within the Fund by the Administrator.

21 (2) USE OF ACCOUNT MONIES.—Monies from 22 the orphan share reserve account shall be preserved
23 and administered like the remainder of the Fund, 24 but shall be reserved and may be used only—

1 (A) in the event that a petition for relief
2 is filed and not withdrawn for the participant
3 under title 11, United States Code, after the 4 date of enactment of this Act and the partici-
5 pant cannot meet its obligations under this sub-6 title; and

7 (B) to the extent the Administrator grants
8 a participant relief for severe financial hardship
9 or exigent circumstances under this section.

10 SEC. 224. ENFORCEMENT OF CONTRIBUTIONS.

11 (a) DEFAULT.—If any participant fails to make any 12 payment in the amount and according to the schedule
13 specified in a determination of assessment, after demand 14 and 30 days opportunity to cure the default, there shall 15 be a lien in favor of the United States for the amount 16 of the delinquent payment (including interest) upon all 17 property and rights to property, whether real or personal,
18 belonging to such participant.

19 (b) BANKRUPTCY.—In the case of a bankruptcy or 20 insolvency proceeding, the lien imposed under subsection
21 (a) shall be treated in the same manner as a lien for taxes
22 due and owing to the United States for purposes of the 23 provisions of title 11, United States Code, or section 24 3713(a) of title 31, United States Code.

25 (c) CIVIL ACTION.—

1           (1) IN GENERAL.—In any case in which there
2           has been a refusal or neglect to pay the liability im-
3           posed by the final determination under section 202
4           or 212, the Administrator may bring a civil action
5           in the Federal district court for the District of Co-
6           lumbia to—

7                   (A) enforce such liability and the lien of 8                   the United States under this section; or

9                   (B) subject any property, of whatever na-
10                  ture, of the participant, or in which the partici-
11                  pant has any right, title, or interest, to the pay-12                  ment of such liability.

13           (2) DEFENSE LIMITATION.—In any proceeding
14           under this subsection, the participant shall be barred 15           from bringing any challenge to the assessment if 16           such challenge could have been made during the re-17           view period under section 202(b)(4) or 212(b)(4), or

19 SEC. 225. ADDITIONAL CONTRIBUTING PARTICIPANTS.

20           (a) DEFINED TERM.—In this section, the term “ad-21           ditional contributing participant” means any defendant in 22           an asbestos claim that is not a mandatory participant
23           under subtitle A and is likely to avoid future civil liability
24           as a result of this Act.

1 (b) ASSESSMENT.—In addition to contributions as-
2 sessed under subtitle A, the Administrator may assess ad-
3 ditional contributing participants for contributions to the 4 Fund. Any additional contributing participant assessed
5 under this section shall be treated as a defendant partici-
6 pant for purposes of procedures and appeals under this 7 Act.

8 (c) ASSESSMENT LIMITATIONS.—The Administrator
9 may assess under subsection (b), over the life of the Fund,
10 an amount not to exceed $10,000,000,000 from all addi-
11 tional contributing participants.

You Too Can Be a Judge;

If you get the nod from Bush, just follow one of the right -- far right -- roads to confirmation.

BODY:

It pays decently, you make your mother proud and, best of all, you never have to polish up your resume again. Even if you lack the qualities you think a president would look for in a judicial nominee -- real intellect, unquestionable integrity and a career-long commitment to equal justice for all -- there are other ways to get the attention of Karl Rove and the Bush administration judge pickers. Here's how:

* Support Bob Jones University. Remember Bob Jones, the South Carolina university that once excluded African Americans and banned interracial dating? Candidate George W. Bush, bruised by his New Hampshire primary defeat, sought comfort at the school, where a spirited campaign rally let him flaunt his "Southern" credentials.

Carolyn Kuhl's aggressive persuasion convinced the Reagan administration to try to restore tax-exempt status for the university. Although her argument was too radical for the Supreme Court, which ruled against her 8 to 1, it has helped earn her a Bush nomination to the U.S. 9th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Since then, however, Bob Jones lifted its interracial dating ban after Bush's visit, succumbing to the weight of bad PR for the school and the candidate, so it may not need as much help now.

* Fight against reproductive freedom. Administration officials cry "litmus test" whenever Democrats suggest they want judges who would uphold Roe vs. Wade. Yet Bush's nominees share a remarkable consistency in their opposition to choice. Alabama Atty. Gen. William H. Pryor, a Bush nominee to the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals, says the day the case was decided was "the day seven members of our highest court ... ripped out the life of millions of unborn children."

Arkansas district court nominee James Leon Holmes, while supporting a constitutional amendment banning abortion, rejected a rape and incest exception as unnecessary, saying "the concern for rape victims is a red herring because conceptions from rape occur with the same frequency as snow in Miami."

Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen was accused in a judicial opinion by Alberto Gonzales, her former colleague and now Bush's own White House counsel, of engaging in "an unconscionable act of judicial activism" for her tortured readings of the state's parental notification statute in abortion cases.

* Work for a right-wing partisan. If you helped Ken Starr investigate President Clinton, step to the head of the line. You'd be joining John Bates, who now holds the gavel in district court in Washington, and 8th Circuit nominee Steve Colloton, who honed his lawyering skills investigating phony "Filegate" allegations that Clinton officials sought confidential FBI checks of GOP appointees.

Working for senators such as Strom Thurmond and Orrin Hatch is a sure-fire path to a judgeship. Thurmond staffer Terry Wooten became a judge despite claims that he leaked an FBI file to discredit Anita Hill's allegations against Clarence Thomas, and Thurmond counsel Dennis W. Shedd now sits on the 4th Circuit. Because of her lack of trial experience, Sharon Prost, former counsel to Judiciary Committee Chairman Hatch, elicited consternation when she was nominated to the federal circuit.

Don't despair, though, if you missed the scandal and Senate boats. You can always befriend presidential consigliere Karl Rove, who pulled rank on White House counsel Gonzales to get his old client Owen (who paid Rove $250,000 for consulting during her 1994 Texas Supreme Court campaign) nominated over Gonzales' choice of Deborah Hankinson. Hankinson is, not surprisingly, considered a moderate on abortion issues.

* Oppose gay rights. If other options fail, demean gays and lesbians. When campaigning for his old boss, Jesse Helms, 4th Circuit nominee Claude Allen said Helms' opponent had links "with the queers." Bush judicial nominee Pryor warned that if the Supreme Court recognized a right to privacy for gay sex, it would have to do the same for necrophilia, bestiality, child pornography and even pedophilia.

A final note on "confirmation conversions." Although you might be tempted at your Judiciary Committee hearing to express regret for your past conduct, to plead youthful indiscretion or to blame clients for outlandish arguments you made on their behalf, don't bother. Committee Republicans will still vote for you, even as they express "concern" about your behavior. The hard part is getting picked by the president in the first place.

So study the resumes of some of the 124 Bush judges now on the bench. Or just follow one of these four options.

Bush driver plans to be with president, on new bus, for next

ÿÿ ENFIELD, N.H. (AP) _ The New Hampshire man who drove President Bush all around the state during his primary campaign in 2000 plans a new road trip with Bush, in a new bus, for his re-election campaign.

ÿÿ John LaBombard, 59, of Enfield, offered his 1995 bus to the Bush campaign as a mobile headquarters for the last campaign, with him at the wheel.

ÿÿ Next month, LaBombard is putting the bus on eBay, the Internet auction site.

ÿÿ ``It's time to get a new one,' ' said LaBombard. He's got his eye set on a 2002 bus in Tennessee, and more campaigning.

ÿÿ ``I plan on going six states or more with the president' ' in the 2004 campaign, he said.

ÿÿ LaBombard met the Bush family through an old friend, and now considers himself part of the Bush team.

ÿÿ ``I went down to a Christmas party (in Washington) last year,' ' he explained. ``(Presidential adviser) Karl Rove gives me a hug and a kiss every time he sees me. It's a tradition of the Bush people.' ' ÿÿ He said Rove told him Bush wants to go back on the road with him.

ÿÿ ``Mention New Hampshire to the president,' ' said LaBombard, ``and the first thing he thinks of is 'Big John'.' ' That's him.

ÿÿ Bush thought enough of LaBombard and the bus, that he included

ÿÿ LaBombard figures the bus has enough special perks to fetch between $1 million and $5 million.

ÿÿ He had it built originally so he and his wife could live in it in Alaska. An old friend who knew the Bush family suggested using it to help out on state campaigns, and eventually Bush hopped aboard after he announced his candidacy and made the bus his campaign headquarters, said LaBombard.

WH personnel generally does a political check on new hires for loyalty and other purposes. The question is whether they can check detailees who are detailed to the WHO. If so, the additional question is whether they should check detailees. I see no legal or policy reason that they should not check when they want to do so for people who would be filling political/administratively designated slots.
Thoughts?

The Free Congress Commentary
What Happens When Chief Justice
Rehnquist Decides To Hang Up His Robes?
By Paul M. Weyrich

A little over a week ago, I was in a meeting where a well-known journalist insisted that the White House had received what they consider to be a clear signal that Chief Justice William Rehnquist is going to retire. I challenged that assertion, but the journalist insisted that the White House was preparing for a confirmation fight later this year.

Then, last Thursday, I attended a social gathering where a well-known jurist said he had attended a meeting with people who are supposedly in the know about such things. There were those in attendance at that meeting who believed that Sandra Day O'Connor is a shoo-in for chief justice on the grounds she could be confirmed by this otherwise recalcitrant United States Senate.

I often wonder where some people get their information. First, friends of Chief Justice Rehnquist say that if he is planning to retire then he certainly is keeping it a deep, dark secret. Even relatives of his say he has given no indication of retirement. We know he is feeling a lot better now than he had been last November after suffering an injury from a bad fall.

But for the sake of argument, let's suppose my information is wrong, and Rehnquist is indeed going to hang up his robes.

Let's look at what President George W. Bush has said about the Supreme Court. I look to what Bush has said because he is, rather more than is usual for a Washington politician, a man of his word. So over and over again, during the 2000 campaign he said that his two favorite justices were Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas. He suggested that if given the opportunity, he would appoint justices such as those to the nation's court.

So if the Chief, as he is known by his colleagues, does retire, what will Bush do? While I would love nothing more than to see Justice Thomas promoted as Chief Justice Rehnquist's successor, it is unlikely to happen. Although Thomas is striking in his ability to handle controversial cases, he was only confirmed by a vote of 52 to 48 when George Herbert Walker Bush, the current President's father, still retained much of his post-Gulf War popularity. While the Senate is now in Republican hands and ideologically it must be considered a bit better than the 101st Congress, it is almost certain that the whole Anita Hill business would be fought all over again. President Bush doesn't need that.

So what about Justice Scalia? When Chief Justice Warren Burger told the Reagan White House he was going to resign, they were prepared. As soon as the resignation was public, Reagan proposed promoting Associate Justice William Rehnquist (who had been appointed to the Supreme Court by President Richard Nixon in 1971) as Burger's replacement. And to fill the vacancy that nomination created, he proposed Judge Antonin Scalia, who had been on the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. Whereas the Rehnquist nomination drew fire and a fair number of opposition votes, Scalia sailed through. The Italian community, which had never had a Supreme Court justice before, put out the word that they didn't want any trouble. Even then-governor Mario Cuomo of New York spoke in Scalia's favor. It was clear from his rulings that Judge Scalia was at least as conservative as Justice Rehnquist, but that didn't seem to bother the Senate at the time.

I suspect that if the President nominated Scalia as chief justice, there would be some fireworks this time and a goodly number of no votes, but I highly doubt he would be filibustered, for the same reason that he was easily confirmed in 1986.

It would be a very prudent appointment for two reasons. First, because Scalia has a stellar intellect and has the ability to influence others. Bush would never have to apologize for a Scalia appointment. Second, because Scalia has told friends that if he is not named chief justice, he will almost certainly resign from the court. He would have served seventeen years on the court, yet he is still young enough to make a good living to support his family. If Scalia is lost, Bush almost certainly could not get someone of his caliber through this Senate. Another high-quality candidate is likely to be filibustered.

Sandra Day O'Connor brings the President problems. She was the swing vote that kept Roe vs. Wade legal. Many of her votes over the years are highly unpopular with President Bush's base. If the President is seen as breaking his word, it would be very hurtful to him in 2004 with the evangelical and conservative Catholic and Eastern Orthodox voters.

If the President nominates someone with rock-solid values and this Senate won't confirm him (or her), whether for chief justice or for associate justice or both, it won't hurt the President and may actually help him in 2004. It almost certainly would defeat some obstructionist senators. On the other hand, if the President makes an appointment such as Justice O'Connor, so he can avoid a confirmation fight and get her through the Senate with ease, he could well suffer at the polls for it. Survey research may currently say that she has a good image and most would approve of the appointment, but that is before the talk radio shows and talk television shows and the webpages of news organizations and concerned groups would discuss her record in detail. He clearly would be seen as breaking an implied promise with that appointment.

My betting is, if the President does get the chance to nominate justices for the Supreme Court, it won't be until his second term, if indeed there is one. In a second term, the President could likely do as he wishes. If I am wrong and those appointments come soon, the President's choices may make or break his presidency.

Is this a fundraiser? Where are you speaking to them? Anyway, do not solicit contributions, do not use your official title on invitations, and do not otherwise coerce anyone into political activity. Those are the basics. We have a guidance memo from Judge going out tomorrow.

Pirates of the Senate

By The Journal Editorial Board

In James Clavell's novel "Shogun," the hero, John Blackthorne, is a 17th century English captain sailing a Dutch vessel who becomes marooned in Japan after fleeing from Spanish warships in the New World. Blackthorne is, to use the 17th century Dutch word for it, a filibuster, or a privateer who wages war against the colonies of a foreign nation.

Americans adopted the word in the mid-19th century to characterize adventurers who plundered weakly governed Central American and Caribbean countries.

Filibuster also came to refer to the tactics used to delay or defeat action in a legislative assembly, most notably in the U.S. Senate, where rules and custom allow a minority of senators to obstruct legislation from coming to a vote. Recently, Democratic senators have extended the use of the filibuster to prevent confirmation votes on two of President George W. Bush's judicial nominees - Miguel Estrada and Patricia Owen.

On May 9, President Bush took the opportunity of the second anniversary of nominating his first 11 judges to complain that three of his nominees have not received a confirmation vote, including Estrada and Owen. "This is an abdication of constitutional responsibility, and it is hurting our country," Bush said. One year ago, the president used the same occasion to complain that eight of his nominations hadn't received a vote after one year.

The progress in the past year has been due to the demotion of Sen. Tom Daschle from Senate majority leader to minority leader. A year ago, Majority Leader Daschle wouldn't allow a floor vote on nominees who hadn't received a majority of votes from the then-Democratic majority Senate Judiciary Committee. Today, Minority Leader Daschle and his Democratic colleagues are using a filibuster to block floor votes for certain nominees who have received a majority of votes from the Republican majority committee.

The Journal published an article by Sen. Daschle on Saturday (May 17) in which he defended the Senate's record of confirming judges. He notes that only two of Bush's 126 judicial nominations have not received a floor vote - a 98.4 percent confirmation rate. Daschle writes that the "confirmation process is working well" (without mentioning the unprecedented use of a filibuster to block confirmation votes) and then changes the subject midway through his article to the economy, deficits, ethanol and drought relief.

Majority Leader Bill Frist has proposed changing the Senate rules on filibusters to lower the number of votes necessary to end a filibuster after every cloture vote from 60 votes eventually to 51 votes, a simple majority of the Senate body. Filibusters were first adopted by the Senate in the mid-19th century but have been changed over time from unanimous consent needed to end debate, to a two-thirds vote in 1917, to a three-fifths vote in 1975. Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, originally proposed the Frist filibuster rule change in 1995. The problem is that changing Senate rules requires a two-thirds vote, something Democrats are unlikely to agree to unless it serves their interests.

The U.S. Constitution gives the president the power to appoint judges with the "advice and consent" of the Senate, a practice that until the present time has meant a committee hearing and a vote by the whole Senate. Basic courtesy would require that the Senate give every president's judicial nominees their chance at a timely and fair hearing and an up-or-down confirmation vote.

"There are extreme cases when extreme judges deserve no more than a cloture vote, and these two cases fit that category," Sen. Daschle said recently, an odd statement considering that both Estrada and Owen have the support of a majority of senators and have both received the highest recommendation from that hotbed of extremism, the American Bar Association. Odd, unless you're engaging in legislative piracy, or filibustering, as the Dutch would say.

Is this a fundraiser? Where are you speaking to them? Anyway, do not solicit contributions, do not use your official title on invitations, and do not otherwise coerce anyone into political activity. Those are the basics. We have a guidance memo from Judge going out tomorrow.

From the Pittsburgh Business Times

Despite Bush's protests, court vacancies are down

Jon Delano ;

"Confirm my judicial appointments." It's a familiar refrain. In recent years, presidents have called on the Senate to expedite confirmation so that their choices for the federal bench don't face endless delays.

Former President Clinton railed against the obstructionist tactics of the Republican-controlled Senate, accusing that body of partisan behavior. During Mr. Clinton's last six years in office not a single judge was confirmed for the U.S. District Court in Western Pennsylvania.

Why?

The simple answer is politics. U.S. Sen. Rick Santorum, a Republican, "blue slipped" or put on hold the consideration of Mr. Clinton's appointments in this region, arguing that he should be able to name at least one of every three appointees. When Mr. Clinton rejected that claim, there was deadlock.

Last week in the Rose Garden, President Bush sounded a lot like Mr. Clinton, denouncing "obstructionist tactics" by Senate Democrats. At a press conference last Friday, U.S. Sen. Arlen Specter, a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, got it exactly right. "When we Republicans controlled the Senate and President Clinton was in office, some things were done which shouldn't have been done," the state's senior senator opined. "And when President Bush took office and the Democrats were in control, there were some things that shouldn't have been done."

The old saying that what goes around comes around seems apt. Mr. Bush is reaping the ill will that was sown earlier. But a careful comparison of the state's federal judiciary today, particularly in Pennsylvania, suggests that this Senate, whether run by Democrats or Republicans, has treated Mr. Bush's nominees better than Mr. Clinton's. In 28 months in office, Mr. Bush has already had 100 district judges confirmed by the Senate along with 23 appellate judges. Of the 665 judges on the federal district courts across America, there are only 26 vacancies, and the vacancy rate among the 179 judges on the courts of appeals is down to 21.

Take the Western District of Pennsylvania, for example. During the years of the Santorum filibuster, that court of 10 judges had as many as five vacancies. Today, the Senate has confirmed four Bush appointees -- Judges Joy Conti, David Cercone, Terry McVerry, and Art Schwab -- and the fifth nomination, attorney Tom Hardiman, has just been sent to the Senate.

With the elevation and confirmation of Judge Brooks Smith to the U.S. Court of Appeals, the president still needs to name one more judge to the local court, but once completed, Mr. Bush, with less than three years in office, will have named -- and the Senate will have confirmed -- six of the 10 judges on the local federal court. That hardly sounds like obstructionism.

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit (Pennsylvania, Delaware, New Jersey, and the Virgin Islands), the court just under the Supreme Court, has 11 of its 14 judges in place, one appointed by President Carter, two by President Reagan, two by President Bush I, and five appointed by President Clinton.

Mr. Bush's first appointment to that appellate court, Brooks Smith, was confirmed last year, and the president only two weeks ago sent two more Republican names to the Senate: Attorney General Mike Fisher and former Richard Thornburgh aide Jay Waldman. Nobody expects much controversy over these nominees.

So what is Mr. Bush complaining about?

It turns out that what really angers him is a procedural move adopted by Democrats to deny a final vote on a few controversial nominees. Unable to put a "hold" on nominees as Mr. Santorum did when the Republicans controlled the Senate, the Democrats, the minority party, are using the filibuster to block an up-or-down vote on a few nominees. Under Senate rules, it takes 60 votes to stop a filibuster. With just 51 Republican senators, the GOP cannot force a vote unless some Democrats go along. So far, at least on the nominations of two controversial appellate court judges, Miguel Estrada and Priscilla Owens, the Democrats have stuck together.

The Democrats insist that they are not blocking all of Mr. Bush's nominees, only those with which have major problems.

But both sides are playing politics. Mr. Bush is nominating very conservative candidates to appease a wing of his party. And Democrats are denying an up-or-down vote on them to appease a wing of their party. The good news is that vacancies are down. That's progress!

Civil rights guardian, outstanding nominee

By WILLIE J. HUNTLEY JR.

Special to the Register

The Washington-headquartered, liberal witch-hunt against President Bush's federal judicial nominees has targeted its next victim, and it is one of our own: Bill Pryor, the attorney general of Alabama.

Among those leading the charge against Pryor is the mis-named group People For the American Way. This should be no surprise; PFAW has led vicious attacks against Attorney General John Ashcroft, Justice Clarence Thomas, Priscilla Owen, Miguel Estrada and numerous other Republican nominees.

PFAW is a radical leftist group that has supported broad court protection for child pornography, burning the American flag, and publicly funded art portraying the Virgin Mary splattered with elephant dung. Most recently, PFAW helped coordinate protests against the war in Iraq -- the war in which some Alabamians gave their lives for their country.

PFAW is funded by the pornography industry and Hollywood radicals, including Playboy magazine, the Screen Actors Guild, and the Center for Alternative Media & Culture. (And they call Bill Pryor an extremist.)

PFAW asserts that Pryor's appointment would devastate civil rights. What its people don't say is that after about 100 years of inaction by other leaders, Bill Pryor led a coalition that included the NAACP to rid the Alabama Constitution of its racist ban on inter-racial marriage.

Pryor then defended the repeal against a court challenge by a so-called Confederate heritage organization.

Our attorney general also took the side of the NAACP in successfully defending majority-minority voting districts -- all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court -- against a challenge by white Alabama Republicans.

Bill Pryor further opposed a white Republican redistricting proposal that would have hurt African-American voters. He did not back down to criticism from his own party -- not one inch.

He then played a key role in the successful prosecution of former Ku Klux Klansmen Bobby Frank Cherry and Thomas Blanton Jr. for the 1963 bombing of the Sixteenth Street Baptist Church in Birmingham. In fact, he will personally argue to uphold Blanton's murder conviction before the Alabama Court of Criminal Appeals later this month.

Pryor started a mentoring program for at-risk kids, and regularly goes to Montgomery public schools to teach African-American kids to read.

Because Bill Pryor has a civil rights record that very few can equal, it is no wonder that African-American leaders who know and have worked with him -- like Artur Davis, Joe Reed, Cleo Thomas and Alvin Holmes -- support his nomination to the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Ignoring Pryor's defense of voting rights for African-Americans, PFAW charges that he opposes the landmark Voting Rights Act. The truth is, he has dutifully enforced all of the Voting Rights Act every time a case has come up.

Pryor has simply stated that a procedural part of the Voting Rights Act -- Section 5 -- has problems that Congress should fix. Section 5 requires federal officials in Washington to approve even minor changes in voting practices that have nothing to do with discrimination.

For example, last year, Pryor issued an opinion that required a white replacement candidate for a deceased white state legislator to get Washington approval under Section 5 to use stickers to put his name on the ballot over the name of the deceased candidate.

Thurbert Baker, the African-American Democratic attorney general of Georgia, has voiced similar concerns about Section 5 before the U.S. Supreme Court.

Undeterred, PFAW and its allies also charge that Pryor believes in "states' rights" -- their code words for racism. The truth is that he believes in the Constitution. He has fought to protect the state's treasury from lawsuits that would have taken our tax dollars away from the state -- away from salaries for teachers and medical care for poor people.

It is the job of an attorney general to defend his client -- the state. In fact, the key Supreme Court case on defending a state from lawsuits was won not by Pryor, but by Democratic Attorney General Bob Butterworth of Florida.

Democratic attorneys general like Eliot Spitzer of New York, Jim Doyle of Wisconsin and others have all made the same arguments to defend their state budgets. I guess they are all "right-wing extremists," too.

PFAW and its allies have also attacked Pryor for being extremist on abortion rights. As a dedicated Roman Catholic, Bill Pryor loves kids and is against abortion, no doubt about it.

But even though he disagrees with abortion, he instructed Alabama's district attorneys to apply Alabama's partial-birth abortion law in a moderate way that was consistent with U.S. Supreme Court precedent.

Again, he was criticized by Republicans; pro-life activists accused him of gutting the statute. Again, he didn't back down.

Not surprisingly, PFAW and its allies have attacked Pryor for supporting the display of the Ten Commandments in courthouses. But Pryor simply took the position that if a representation of the Ten Commandments can be carved into the wall of the U.S. Supreme Court's courtroom, it can be placed in an Alabama courtroom.

PFAW also has attacked Pryor for the position he took in the Alexander vs. Sandoval case, in which a person who didn't speak English sued to force Alabama to spend its money on printing driver's license tests in foreign languages.

As broke as our state is, there are better things to spend our money on -- like teaching kids to read English so they can take the test and read road signs, and also paving the roads for them to drive on. Pryor fought this attempt to drain our state budget, and the U.S. Supreme Court agreed with him.

The truth and the record show that Bill Pryor has fought for the civil rights and voting rights of African-Americans in Alabama when PFAW was nowhere to be found. Now that President Bush has nominated Pryor to a federal judgeship, PFAW assumes that it can come here and attack him.

I, for one, suggest that PFAW pack up its pro-pornography, flag-burning, anti-religious, attack-dog tactics and go back to Hollywood and Washington.

We who actually know Bill Pryor support him 100 percent.

Willie Huntley is a former assistant U.S. attorney for the Southern District of Alabama. An African-American, he now has a private law practice in Mobile.

EDITORIAL

Charleston (WV) Gazette
May 20, 2003

LAST WEEK, President Bush told America that U.S. courts are in a crisis because Democratic senators won't confirm his judicial appointees. His statement was surprisingly false. The Senate has approved great numbers of his judge choices * and has balked only at some who hold extreme, narrow views far outside the national mainstream. The fact is that 124 have been confirmed, and two have been held back, noted Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt. You would not know that by listening to the president's remarks.

In comparison, when Democrat Bill Clinton was president, Senate Republicans blocked far more of his judicial appointments. Nonetheless, Bush wants Senate rules changed so Democrats can no longer use filibusters to prevent votes on his nominees.

Why are some Bush appointees in trouble? Because, according to The New York Times, they are far-right ideologues whose views offend most Americans.

What kind of nominees are Senate Democrats balking at? the national newspaper asked. One, an Arkansas anti-abortion activist, has written that women should be subordinate to men.

Another argued, as a Justice Department lawyer, that Bob Jones University should keep its tax-exempt status even though it discriminated against blacks.

President Bush, deeply in bed with the fundamentalist wing of the GOP, has striven to load the federal government with far-right social conservatives who will steer America toward their policies.

For example, his education secretary, Roderick Paige, told Southern Baptists that America's public schools should teach the values of the Christian community, where a child is taught to have a strong faith. That may sound harmless, but it offended millions of American Jews, Muslims, Buddhists and others.

For example, to head a federal panel on reproductive health drugs, Bush appointed Dr. David Hager of Kentucky, who refuses to prescribe birth-control pills and recommends Scripture reading as a cure for premenstrual pain.

The Republican platform seeks several harsh changes in America, such as banning abortion, which would require jailing of women and doctors involved. Appointment of judges and officials dedicated to such goals is part of the process of attaining them.

Therefore, it's commendable that Senate Democrats like Robert C. Byrd and Jay Rockefeller are striving to prevent confirmation of extreme far-right nominees.

A New York Times editorial this week against the nomination of Alabama Attorney General Bill Pryor for a federal appeals judgeship provides a textbook example of what's wrong with the way the political left sees the courts.

The editorial contends that a brief Mr. Pryor filed in defense of Texas' anti-sodomy statute makes him unfit for the judgeship because it shows the AG is against gay rights.

Nowhere in the editorial, however, is there any reference to the Constitution or to Supreme Court precedent. Instead, there is a clear assumption that laws against homosexual acts are unfair -- and that, therefore, they ought to be struck down by the courts.

The problem is that judges are not supposed to decide on their own whether a law is fair -- that's a job for legislators -- but only whether it is forbidden by the Constitution or by a superseding statute. As famed Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes once said: I don't do justice; I do the law.

In the case of the law barring homosexual sodomy, Mr. Pryor is on firm legal ground. He argued that if the courts invent, out of thin air, a right to all consensual sexual acts, then legislatures also could be forbidden from outlawing other sexual acts such as prostitution, bestiality or adult incest.

Not even the Times can argue that Mr. Pryor's argument is out of the mainstream. As noted in this space previously, the AG was citing the existing law of the land, as explained by the Supreme Court in Bowers vs. Hardwick. One of the liberal justices appointed since that case was decided, Ruth Bader Ginsburg, also has argued that the Constitution's assumed right to privacy extends to prostitution.

But the Times seems less concerned with what's in the Constitution or in court precedent than it is intent on determining its own sense of what is or isn't fair, and then turning its opinion into a constitutional right -- by judicial fiat, without any democratic processes intervening. Down that road lie not more rights, but tyranny.

Linda and Colleen,

We are going to record a Medicare video for House and Senate members to use at Town Hall meetings during the Recess. The video would highlight the President's commitment to Medicare reform. Ordinarily, the organization requesting the video would pay the costs of producing the video. The cost is $1,100.

At issue is the fact the we, the White House, are requesting the video to distribute to any Member of Congress that wants it. We are doing this because Medicare will be a priority issue in June on the Hill. We need someone to authorize the costs associated with this request. The video would be available to any Democrat or Republican House and/or Senate member to use.

Please let me know what else you might need to complete the necessary paperwork. We will help complete the form if you will help authorize it.

Thanks

Subject: Medicare Video

Linda and Colleen,

We are going to record a Medicare video for House and Senate members to use at Town Hall meetings during the Recess. The video would highlight the President's commitment to Medicare reform. Ordinarily, the organization requesting the video would pay the costs of producing the video. The cost is $1,100.

At issue is the fact the we, the White House, are requesting the video to distribute to any Member of Congress that wants it. We are doing this because Medicare will be a priority issue in June on the Hill. We need someone to authorize the costs associated with this request. The video would be available to any Democrat or Republican House and/or Senate member to use.

Please let me know what else you might need to complete the necessary paperwork. We will help complete the form if you will help authorize it.

Thanks

Israel

Brett,
Can you and Ashley let me know if Counsel Gonzales/White House Counsel's Office already has distributed any instructions or memoranda or advisory information to EOP staff related to the Bush-Cheney '04 campaign and permissible activities related to the campaign? If so, can National get a copy?
You may recall that in the previous administration, such a communication was distributed by Counsel Mikva at the outset of the '96 campaign.
Thank you in advance for your help.

Dear Abel,
I got your email address from Nina Bishop and you are remembered at US Soccer as a soccer fan and someone who has helped our teams. There is a good possibility that the USA will be hosting the 2003 Womens World Cup and I want to know if you are interested on serving on the host organizing committee. Service will involve some conference calls and helping with international relations. We should know by this weekend if we are getting the Cup. If we do, we will need to hit the ground running and your help especially with government relations will be invaluable. I also left a voice mail in your office. Looking forward to hearing from you.
Warmest regards,

The Yale Law School Association of DC has monthly events. I was a guest speaker at one about judges. It actually was originally scheduled for someone else's house on Cap Hill but was snowed out. Then it was re-scheduled for the next month and that month's event was at the house of her and her husband. (She used to be on board of YLSA of DC so hosts them now and then). Why?

FEDERAL JUDGESHIP: Jurist Jones possible nominee

White House declines to confirm whether Nevadan is Bush's choice for post

By JANE ANN MORRISON

REVIEW-JOURNAL

The White House, after working with U.S. Sen. John Ensign, is poised to nominate U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Robert Clive Jones to a federal District Court judgeship.

Ensign, a Republican, originally proposed the son of Democratic U.S. Sen. Harry Reid, as well as others, but the Bush administration sought to expand that list.

Republicans had criticized Ensign for proposing Leif Reid, a 35-year-old Democrat with seven years of experience.

Jones is 56, has been on the bankruptcy court for 20 years and has experience both as a certified public accountant and an attorney prior to that.

Jones' name had not been made public until Thursday, when Ensign's spokesman Jack Finn said, "We can confirm he is the White House selection. The senator is very proud of not only Judge Jones, but of all the people we submitted to the White House. They are carefully reviewed and we think the world of all of the others in terms of experience, integrity and abilities."

Finn declined to say how many Nevadans had been considered by the White House, but legal sources said at least seven were submitted.

Along with Leif Reid, the other contenders included former U.S. Attorney Rick Pocker, District Judge Ron Parraguirre, U.S. Magistrate Robert McQuaid of Reno, Las Vegas attorney Sandy Smagac and at least one other person.

"Senator Ensign is extremely pleased and extremely proud of this choice," Finn said. "Judge Jones will absolutely uphold the integrity of the federal judiciary."

Each state's senior senator of the party in power at the White House recommends judicial candidates to the president. After background investigations are complete, the administration nominates its choice. The U.S. Senate must confirm the administration's choice.

White House spokesman Ken Lisaius declined to confirm whether Jones is President Bush's choice. "We don't speculate on personnel. The White House makes announcements when we have announcements to make."

Jones has a good reputation within the Las Vegas legal community.

Defense attorney Richard Wright said Jones was a good choice because of his "maturity, experience and seasoning in federal litigation. He's a gentleman, courteous and polite."

Jones is one of those judges who is enjoyable to practice before, Wright said. "He's had wide-ranging litigation on the federal bench in bankruptcy court. He's well-respected and well-qualified."

In the 1980s, he decided the buyer of the bankrupt Aladdin. He was in the same position earlier this year, choosing Planet Hollywood as the best offer for the rebuilt Las Vegas Strip property.

Jones was born and raised in Las Vegas and graduated from Brigham Young University in 1971 with a degree in accounting and English. He obtained his law degree from UCLA in 1975, graduating in the top 10 percent of his class.

After working as a certified public accountant, he started practicing law in 1976. His practice focused on taxation, real estate, commercial law and bankruptcy. In February 1983, he was appointed the the bankruptcy court, where he now serves. He was appointed to the 14-year-term after Lloyd George was elevated from the bankruptcy court to U.S. District Court, a lifetime position.

A registered Republican, he served in the California Air National Guard and the Nevada Army Guard.

He is a former board member of Opportunity Village of Clark County and the Las Vegas Chapter of the American Cancer Society.

The judgeship is becoming available because U.S. District Judge David Hagen is taking senior status.

don't mean to push the envelope -- but would "material additional costs" be a reasonable change? I'm just trying to think of how to avoid the $1.00 reimbursement checks for using 4 sheets of paper in a photocopier -- the Government probably spends more to process a $1.00 reimbursement check than it gets back in the check itself.

With respect to use of equipment, for those uses of equipment that can incur additional costs (resulting primarily from paper and any long-distance costs), your Office will be contacted by the Office of Management and Administration regarding appropriate reimbursement by the relevant political entity. Also, as necessary and appropriate, separate equipment may be installed in certain offices.

Can someone clarify what authority the President delegated to the OA Director? I'm sorry to put this on your plate. Let me know if there is someone else I can ask without going directly to OA.

We need to schedule a brief conference call Tuesday morning. I know Boyden is out of town and General Meese is leaving for the CA around 12:00 so we need to pick a time. How does 9:30 sound? Or we can wait until the General lands in CA since it is 3 hours back. Maybe 4:30 our time.
Please let me know what times are not an option. Thanks.

Q What's the White House response, Ari, to the letter Senator Lieberman has sent to the Chief of Staff, asking for help in tracking down whatever federal government involvement there might be with the missing Texas Democratic legislature?

MR. FLEISCHER: Let me make sure I understand this correctly. Is this the letter that's dated today that was given to the Washington Post yesterday before it was even given to the White House? That very serious letter that -- yes. Well, I think you can tell by the manner in which this letter was sent to the White House, it was intended less to be a serious letter and more to be a campaign gambit by somebody who is running for the presidency. Otherwise I think it would have been treated as most letters are, sent to the White House first, received, and then it would have been discussed publicly if the author had intended it to be discussed publicly, which would have been fine. But there -- as you know, Homeland Security is taking a look at this, and that's where the matter lies.

Brett,

What role can I play in helping the campaign determine who's who in the administration, ie. politicals in the Departments, and how these individuals can be of help to the campaign or even potential hires for the campaign ?

Are there any restrictions with me serving as a reference for any of the politicals with in the Administration... commenting to campaign employees on the individual's skill set, work ethic, background/experience ?

Thank you for your help,

Elizabeth Hogan

IN THE PRESIDENT'S WORDS:
Advancing Freedom and Fighting AIDS
Tuesday, May, 27 2003

As the President prepares to sign H.R. 1298, the United States Leadership Against HIV/AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria Act of 2003, we take a look back at U.S. leadership on this issue through the President's words.

For more information on American leadership to combat HIV/AIDS, please visit <http://www.whitehouse.gov/infocus/hiv aids/>

Also, please note that Dr. Joseph O'Neill, Director of the Office of National AIDS Policy, will host "Ask the White House" today at 4 pm.
<http://www.whitehouse.gov/>

"The advance of freedom and hope is challenged by the spread of AIDS...It is a desperate struggle for any person, or any nation, to build a better future in the shadow of death. Yet, this shadow can be lifted. AIDS can be prevented, and AIDS can be treated. Lives can be saved, and others extended by many years...When I travel to Europe next week, I will challenge our allies to make a similar commitment which will save even more lives. I will remind them that the clock is ticking -- that every single day 8,000 more people will die from AIDS in Africa. There will be 14,000 more infections. I will urge our European partners, and Japan, and Canada, to join a great mission of rescue, and to match their good intentions with real resources." Remarks on the Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief at the Coast Guard Academy, May 21, 2003

"Fighting AIDS on a global scale is a massive and complicated undertaking. Yet, this cause is rooted in the simplest of moral duties. When we see this kind of preventable suffering, when we see a plague leaving graves and orphans across a continent, we must act. When we see the wounded traveler on the road to Jericho, we will not, America will not pass to the other side of the road."

Remarks Urging Congress on HIV/AIDS Initiative, April 29, 2003

"As we show our compassion here at home, I feel strongly about our need to show our compassion abroad, as well. Some of you have been to Africa, and have seen the suffering. Some of you know firsthand the stories about thousands of abandoned children who are in orphanages, crowded orphanages, because their mom...and/or dad have died because of AIDS. Some of you know the startling statistics that the people of the continent face. It's a pandemic. It's destruction of human life, the likes of which the modern world hasn't seen. And we need to do something about it."

Remarks at the 2003 "Congress of Tomorrow"

Republican Retreat Reception, February 9, 2003

"Because the AIDS diagnosis is considered a death sentence, many folks don't seek treatment, and that's a reality. It's as if the AIDS pandemic just continues to feed upon itself over and over and over again, because of hopelessness. This country needs to provide some hope -- because this disease can be prevented and it can be treated, that's important for our fellow citizens to know. Anti-retroviral drugs are now dramatically more affordable in many nations, and these drugs are used to extend the lives of those with HIV. In other words, these drugs are really affordable. And when the treatment has come to Africa, it is also important for our citizens to understand the effect of that treatment. It's called the Lazarus effect. When one patient is rescued by medicine, as if back from the dead, many others with AIDS seek testing and treatment, because it is the first sign of hope they have ever seen. We have the opportunity to bring that hope to millions."

Speech on Fighting HIV/AIDS, January 31, 2003

"Part of being a compassionate country also means we need to be compassionate abroad. That's one of the reasons I laid out a powerful AIDS initiative for the citizens in Africa who suffer from AIDS. It's an initiative that I believe will lend the great heart of the American people to the salvation of life after life after life on that continent."

Remarks to the USA Freedom Corps, January 30, 2003

"We have confronted, and will continue to confront, HIV/AIDS in our own country. And to meet a severe and urgent crisis abroad, tonight I propose the Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief -- a work of mercy beyond all current international efforts to help the people of Africa. This comprehensive plan will prevent 7 million new AIDS infections, treat at least 2 million people with life-extending drugs, and provide humane care for millions of people suffering from AIDS, and for children orphaned by AIDS."

State of the Union Address, January 28, 2003

"The United States will also continue to lead the world in providing the resources to defeat HIV-AIDS. In addition, we have pledged to help poor countries get access to the emergency life-saving drugs they need to fight HIV-AIDS and other infectious epidemics. The AIDS pandemic has caused extraordinary loss and suffering across your continent and the world, and all governments have a moral obligation to confront it."

Videotaped Remarks to the African Growth and Opportunity Act Forum, January 15, 2003

"Now, therefore, I, George W. Bush, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and laws of the United States, do hereby proclaim December 1, 2002, as World AIDS Day. I invite the ...American people to join me in reaffirming our commitment to combating HIV/AIDS. I encourage all Americans to participate in appropriate commemorative programs and ceremonies...to remember those who have lost their lives to this deadly disease and to comfort and support those living with and impacted by HIV/AIDS."
Proclamation of 2002 World AIDS Day, November 27, 2002

"Every year -- it's important for my fellow Americans to understand this statistic -- every year, approximately 2 million HIV-infected women give birth. More than one in three will pass the virus on to her baby, meaning that on the continent of Africa there are close to 2,000 more infected infants every day. We will begin to save many of these young lives by focusing our efforts on countries where the problem is most severe, and where our help can have the greatest impact. We will pursue proven and effective medical strategies that we know will make a difference. And when the lives of babies and mothers are at stake, the only measure of compassion is real results."
Remarks at a Summit Dinner, June 20, 2002

"The global devastation of HIV/AIDS staggers the imagination and shocks the conscience. The disease has already killed over 20 million people and it's poised to kill at least 40 million more. In Africa, the disease clouds the future of entire nations and threatens to hold back the hopes of an entire continent. In the hardest-hit countries of sub-Saharan Africa as much as one-third of the adult population is infected with HIV, and 10 percent or more of the school teachers will die of AIDS within five years. The wasted human lives that lie behind these numbers are a call to action for every person on the planet and for every government."
Remarks in the Rose Garden, June 19, 2002

"As we enter the third decade of the AIDS pandemic, our hearts go out to those who have been afflicted with or affected by this deadly disease. We resolve to stand together as a Nation and with the world to fight AIDS on all fronts. We resolve to provide the resources necessary to combat HIV/AIDS. And we resolve to ensure that those suffering with HIV/AIDS receive effective care and treatment, compassionate understanding, and encouraging hope."
Remarks about 2001 World AIDS Day, November 30, 2001

"We must bring peace and health to Africa -- a neighbor to Europe, a heritage to many Americans, a continent in crisis, and a place of enormous potential. We must work together to...fight the spread of AIDS that may make 40 million children into orphans; and help all of Africa share in the trade and promise of the modern world."
Remarks at Warsaw University (Poland), June 15, 2001

"The devastation across the globe left by AIDS...the sheer number of those infected and dying is almost beyond comprehension. Suffering on the African continent has been especially great. AIDS alone has left at least 11 million orphans in sub-Saharan Africa. In several African countries, as many as half of today's 15-year-olds could die of AIDS. In a part of the world where so many have suffered from war and want and famine, these latest tribulations are the cruelest of fates."

"Part of being a compassionate country also means we need to be compassionate abroad. That's one of the reasons I laid out a powerful AIDS initiative for the citizens in Africa who suffer from AIDS. It's an initiative that I believe will lend the great heart of the American people to the salvation of life after life after life on that continent."

Remarks to the USA Freedom Corps, January 30, 2003

"We have confronted, and will continue to confront, HIV/AIDS in our own country. And to meet a severe and urgent crisis abroad, tonight I propose the Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief -- a work of mercy beyond all current international efforts to help the people of Africa. This comprehensive plan will prevent 7 million new AIDS infections, treat at least 2 million people with life-extending drugs, and provide humane care for millions of people suffering from AIDS, and for children orphaned by AIDS."

State of the Union Address, January 28, 2003

“The United States will also continue to lead the world in providing the resources to defeat HIV-AIDS. In addition, we have pledged to help poor countries get access to the emergency life-saving drugs they need to fight HIV-AIDS and other infectious epidemics. The AIDS pandemic has caused extraordinary loss and suffering across your continent and the world, and all governments have a moral obligation to confront it.”

Videotaped Remarks to the African Growth and Opportunity Act Forum, January 15, 2003

“Now, therefore, I, George W. Bush, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and laws of the United States, do hereby proclaim December 1, 2002, as World AIDS Day. I invite the ... American people to join me in reaffirming our commitment to combating HIV/AIDS. I encourage all Americans to participate in appropriate commemorative programs and ceremonies...to remember those who have lost their lives to this deadly disease and to comfort and support those living with and impacted by HIV/AIDS.”

Proclamation of 2002 World AIDS Day, November 27, 2002

“Every year -- it's important for my fellow Americans to understand this statistic -- every year, approximately 2 million HIV-infected women give birth. More than one in three will pass the virus on to her baby, meaning that on the continent of Africa there are close to 2,000 more infected infants every day. We will begin to save many of these young lives by focusing our efforts on countries where the problem is most severe, and where our help can have the greatest impact. We will pursue proven and effective medical strategies that we know will make a difference. And when the lives of babies and mothers are at stake, the only measure of compassion is real results.”

“The global devastation of HIV/AIDS staggers the imagination and shocks the conscience. The disease has already killed over 20 million people and it's poised to kill at least 40 million more. In Africa, the disease clouds the future of entire nations and threatens to hold back the hopes of an entire continent. In the hardest-hit countries of sub-Saharan Africa as much as one-third of the adult population is infected with HIV, and 10 percent or more of the school teachers will die of AIDS within five years. The wasted human lives that lie behind these numbers are a call to action for every person on the planet and for every government.”

Remarks in the Rose Garden, June 19, 2002

“As we enter the third decade of the AIDS pandemic, our hearts go out to those who have been afflicted with or affected by this deadly disease. We resolve to stand together as a Nation and with the world to fight AIDS on all fronts. We resolve to provide the resources necessary to combat HIV/AIDS. And we resolve to ensure that those suffering with HIV/AIDS receive effective care and treatment, compassionate understanding, and encouraging hope.”

Remarks about 2001 World AIDS Day, November 30, 2001

“We must bring peace and health to Africa -- a neighbor to Europe, a heritage to many Americans, a continent in crisis, and a place of enormous potential. We must work together to...fight the spread of AIDS that may make 40 million children into orphans; and help all of Africa share in the trade and promise of the modern world.”

Remarks at Warsaw University (Poland), June 15, 2001

“The devastation across the globe left by AIDS...the sheer number of those infected and dying is almost beyond comprehension. Suffering on the African continent has been especially great. AIDS alone has left at least 11 million orphans in sub-Saharan Africa. In several African countries, as many as half of today's 15-year-olds could die of AIDS. In a part of the world where so many have suffered from war and want and famine, these latest tribulations are the cruelest of fates.”

Proposal of a Global Fund to Fight HIV/AIDS, May 11, 2001

Q           What's the White House response, Ari, to the letter Senator Lieberman has sent to the Chief of Staff, asking for help in tracking down whatever federal government involvement there might be with the missing Texas Democratic legislature?

MR. FLEISCHER: Let me make sure I understand this correctly. Is this the letter that's dated today that was given to the Washington Post yesterday before it was even given to the White House? That very serious letter that -- yes. Well, I think you can tell by the manner in which this letter was sent to the White House, it was intended less to be a serious letter and more to be a campaign gambit by somebody who is running for the presidency. Otherwise I think it would have been treated as most letters are, sent to the White House first, received, and then it would have been discussed publicly if the author had intended it to be discussed publicly, which would have been fine. But there -- as you know, Homeland Security is taking a look at this, and that's where the matter lies.

*****KEY POINTS: AIDS IN AFRICA*****

"The United States of America has a long tradition of sacrifice in the cause of freedom, and generosity in the service of humanity. We are the nation of the Marshall Plan, the Berlin Airlift, and the Peace Corps. And now we are the nation of the Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief."
- President Bush, 5/27/03

*HIV/AIDS is one of the greatest medical challenges of our time. The disease has killed more than 20 million people. Today, 42 million more are living with HIV. Across Africa, this disease is filling graveyards and creating orphans and leaving millions in a desperate fight for their own lives.

*This legislation authorizes $15 billion to combat HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, and malaria, making it the largest up front commitment in history for an international public health initiative.

*America believes in the value and dignity of every human life. In the face of preventable death and suffering, we have a moral duty to act, and we are acting.

*This Act of Congress addresses one of the most urgent needs of the modern world. Because of the AIDS pandemic, a child born today in sub-Saharan Africa has a life expectancy of 47 years. This disease falls most heavily on women and children. Nearly 60 percent of those infected by HIV in sub-Saharan Africa are women.

*During his trip to Europe later this week, President Bush will challenge our partners and our friends to follow our lead and to make similar commitments -- so, together, we can save even more lives.

*The suffering in Africa is great. The suffering in the Caribbean is great. America has the power and we have the moral duty to help.

Nanette

I am hoping you might be able to help me explain to a candidate the limits on political activity imposed on PAS appointees.

We are considering someone for the Inter-American Foundation, which is a part-time position, and before moving forward she has questions about what type of limits would apply to her in terms of her political activity.

Specifically, she is interested in participating in the 2004 presidential campaign as a volunteer and also may be asked to serve as treasurer for a congressional campaign. Would she be allowed to take part in such activities if she was a member of the Inter-American Foundation board?

Any help or direction you could provide would be most helpful!

Thank you.

III. GENERAL (PUBLIC)

1. An ethical consideration under Canon 2 of the American Bar Association's Code of Professional Responsibility calls for "every lawyer, regardless of professional prominence or professional workload, to find some time to participate in serving the disadvantaged." Describe what you have done to fulfill these responsibilities, listing specific instances and the amount of time devoted to each.

2. The American Bar Association's Commentary to its Code of Judicial Conduct states that it is inappropriate for a judge to hold membership in any organization that invidiously discriminates on the basis of race, sex, or religion. Do you currently belong, or have you belonged, to any organization which discriminates -- through either formal membership requirements or the practical implementation of membership policies? If so, list, with dates of membership. What you have done to try to change these policies?

3. Is there a selection commission in your jurisdiction to recommend candidates for nomination to the federal courts? If so, did it recommend your nomination? Please describe your experience in the entire judicial selection process, from beginning to end (including the circumstances which led to your nomination and interviews in which you participated).
4. Has anyone involved in the process of selecting you as a judicial nominee discussed with you any specific case, legal issue or question in a manner that could reasonably be interpreted as asking how you would rule on such case, issue, or question? If so, please explain fully.
5. Please discuss your views on the following criticism involving "judicial activism."

The role of the Federal judiciary within the Federal government, and within society generally, has become the subject of increasing controversy in recent years. It has become the target of both popular and academic criticism that alleges that the judicial branch has usurped many of the prerogatives of other branches and levels of government.

Some of the characteristics of this "judicial activism" have been said to include:

- a. A tendency by the judiciary toward problem-solution rather than grievance-resolution;
- b. A tendency by the judiciary to employ the individual plaintiff as a vehicle for the imposition of far-reaching orders extending to broad classes of individuals;
- c. A tendency by the judiciary to impose broad, affirmative duties upon governments and society;

- d. A tendency by the judiciary toward loosening jurisdictional requirements such as standing and ripeness; and
- e. A tendency by the judiciary to impose itself upon other institutions in the manner of an administrator with continuing oversight responsibilities.

IV. CONFIDENTIAL

Brett -

As you know, I currently conduct vetting for Presidential Schedule items (greeters and venues) for the Scheduling Office. Now that we are moving quickly into the Presidential election campaign, I wanted to get some guidance from your office on what items we are allowed to vet for campaign events and which ones we are prohibited from doing.

Since the scheduling office serves the President wherever he goes, are we allowed to vet the following items using government resources:

- 1) Presidential Campaign Sites
- 2) Presidential Greeters and Participants at Campaign Events

Thanks,

- Andrew Ciafardini

PS - On a separate note, James Waters will be replacing me on around the week of June 13 and assuming my current responsibilities.

Dear Doug,

REV_00119987

Each month or so Leadership Institute hosts a conference call with our high-dollar donors and a Member of Congress or a federal official. The call lasts 20 minutes and is held at a time that fits the schedule of the highlighted guest.

I am writing to see whether the Secretary of the Interior might be willing to participate in a conference call in late June or July.

The format is very simple. Secretary Norton would talk for 10 minutes or so about something that she thinks is important or gives a briefing on what is happening in her department. There is a 10-minute period for questions if time permits.

These conference calls give our donors opportunities to get to know conservative leaders and to learn up-to-date information that they might not know otherwise.

No fundraising is done during this call.

The conference call needs to take place after 1:00 pm due to time zone changes. It can be done from any location as long as a phone is available.

I need about two weeks ahead of time to schedule the conference call with the vendor and to announce it to the donors who might participate.

Please ask Secretary Norton to give this invitation her consideration.

Sincerely,

Walter Longyear
Vice President for Development
The Leadership Institute

The Leadership Institute has invited Norton to do a call with their "Donors" - but say money is not being raised with the call. Is this something she can do?

Dear Doug,

Each month or so Leadership Institute hosts a conference call with our high-dollar donors and a Member of Congress or a federal official. The call lasts 20 minutes and is held at a time that fits the schedule of the highlighted guest.

I am writing to see whether the Secretary of the Interior might be willing to participate in a conference call in late June or July.

The format is very simple. Secretary Norton would talk for 10 minutes or so about something that she thinks is important or gives a briefing on what is happening in her department. There is a 10-minute period for questions if time permits.

These conference calls give our donors opportunities to get to know conservative leaders and to learn up-to-date information that they might not know otherwise.

No fundraising is done during this call.

REV_00120001

The conference call needs to take place after 1:00 pm due to time zone changes. It can be done from any location as long as a phone is available.

I need about two weeks ahead of time to schedule the conference call with the vendor and to announce it to the donors who might participate.

Please ask Secretary Norton to give this invitation her consideration.

Sincerely,

Walter Longyear
Vice President for Development

I've compared last year's answers to this year's. There was a great deal of information provided last year in some of the categories. For example, detailed breakdowns of President, VP and First Lady and staff travel were provided; extensive OHS information was provided; etc.

I think we should cut back the OA answers in a few categories of questions that were not addressed last year. My list is:

Questions concerning reimbursement procedures for political travel
Questions concerning reimbursement procedures for photographic services and the list of reimbursement of photos by outside sources
Questions concerning WH tours and access to the WH
Questions concerning bonuses paid to political appointees
Questions concerning WH renovations

What do you think? Also, would you be willing to draft something appropriate on the political travel questions (the ones which are currently answered by reference to a Boyden Gray memo)? I'll do the others.

thanks

JN

Dear Doug,

Each month or so Leadership Institute hosts a conference call with our high-dollar donors and a Member of Congress or a federal official. The call lasts 20 minutes and is held at a time that fits the schedule of the highlighted guest.

I am writing to see whether the Secretary of the Interior might be willing to participate in a conference call in late June or July.

The format is very simple. Secretary Norton would talk for 10 minutes or so about something that she thinks is important or gives a briefing on what is happening in her department. There is a 10-minute period for questions if time permits.

These conference calls give our donors opportunities to get to know conservative leaders and to learn up-to-date information that they might not know otherwise.

No fundraising is done during this call.

The conference call needs to take place after 1:00 pm due to time zone changes. It can be done from any location as long as a phone is available.

I need about two weeks ahead of time to schedule the conference call with the vendor and to announce it to the donors who might participate.

Please ask Secretary Norton to give this invitation her consideration.

Sincerely,

Walter Longyear

I've compared last year's answers to this year's. There was a great deal of information provided last year in some of the categories. For example, detailed breakdowns of President, VP and First Lady and staff travel were provided; extensive OHS information was provided; etc.

I think we should cut back the OA answers in a few categories of questions that were not addressed last year. My list is:

Questions concerning reimbursement procedures for political travel
Questions concerning reimbursement procedures for photographic services and the list of reimbursement of photos by outside sources
Questions concernig WH tours and access to the WH
Questions concerning bonuses paid to political appointees
Quesions concerning WH renovations

What do you think? Also, would you be willing to draft something appropriate on the political travel questions (the ones which are currently answered by reference to a Boyden Gray memo)? I'll do the others.

thanks

JN

Desiree, Brett, and Harriet,

Here is what I have received from Cuddy Johnson:

As you may remember, we have had two recent rallies at which a number of constituents (with tickets) were unable to get into the events.

One of the things we did last time this happened (NC - Winston-Salem Freedom Corps Rally - Jan. 30, 2002) was gather the addresses of those who complained to the ticketing organization (in the case of NC, it was the office of Congressman Burr) and send those supporters a letter from the President. The letter did not put the President in the position of apologizing, but did recognize their difficulty in getting in and express appreciation for their effort and support. We are sending them to Desiree because the events were official White House events focused on the President's priorities.

The two most recent events where this happened were:

- 1) Lima, OH: Tank Plant Event (April 24, 2003) - 14 received addresses.
- 2) Indianapolis, IN: Economic Rally (May 15, 2003) - 450 received addresses.

It is really important to send letters to these folks. Attached are drafts of the letters, already formatted and ready to be signed. Please call if you have any questions about postage or anything else.

Thanks

Iz

Brett:

Karl thought, and I strongly agree, it would be a good idea for Matt and me to sit down with you to discuss ethics matters as they relate to the campaign. I was planning to meet with people both inside and outside the administration, to seek their guidance and counsel as it relates to the White House and '04, and I want to make sure in advance that I know the "do's and don'ts" in terms of what to ask and how to frame matters. I want to be whatever I do is wholly appropriate -- and your guidance would be invaluable.

Could you let me know when's a good time for us to meet?

Many thanks.

Pete

I believe that each of you is currently assigned to do a brief write up on possible judicial candidates.; To permit the judge to keep on schedule with potential upcoming meetings, please make every effort to complete those write ups by early next week -- say, COB Tuesday.; Chris has already completed one such write up, and seems to have followed a useful format if you're wondering what the work product might look like.; Many thanks.;

Just a process argument -- so far.
<<<Editorial asserts that the Bush administration should withdraw the nomination of Claude Allen to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 4th Circuit in order to preserve "a semblance of balance on a court that observers say is already the most conservative in the nation." Allen, a Virginian, would fill the seat of the late Marylander Judge Francis Murnaghan Jr., "a liberal thinker, a progressive and a distinguished advocate of civil rights." The previous nominee for this seat "was rejected by Maryland's Democratic senators ... because he was not a member of the Maryland bar." Arguing that the 4th Circuit needs "a variety of viewpoints," the editorial calls on Gov. Robert Ehrlich Jr. (R.) to "exercise whatever clout he has in the White House to put a Marylander in the Maryland seat." Editorial, 4th Circuit Balance, Baltimore Sun, May 27, 2003. <<http://www.sunspot.net/bal-ed.court27may27,0,575632.story>> >>>

Brett,
This might be a silly question. I am running invites with Ken's name on them by counsel at the campaign.
Since it has the President's name on it.... Ken Mehlman, Campaign Manager, Bush-Cheney '04..... should I run them by you still? or is this only a campaign issue?
Please advise.
Thanks,

Bush Camp Seeks To Mobilize Evangelical Base For 2004. Howard Fineman writes on the Newsweek web site (5/28), &The Bush Crowd loathes talking to the press, but they don't hide their aims. Their straightforward goal for '04 is to boost turnout of +The Base, -- defined, in the modern Republican Party, as voters who practice traditional religions in traditional ways. That means evangelical Christians, of course, but also, and increasingly, socially conservative (if economically liberal) Roman Catholics, adherents of various strains of Eastern Orthodoxy and non-Reform Jews. Here's one of the most salient facts of politics today: There is a close and growing correlation between dutiful church attendance and identification with the GOP. The president's visit to Krakow-the start of a trip that will include stops in Russia, France and the Middle East-is perfectly timed. He'll be there on Saturday, so that news of his visit to the hometown of the Polish Pope will be in every Sunday paper. You think they'll notice that in, say, Pittsburgh or Chicago? I asked Karl Rove more than a year ago what his goal was for '04. His straightforward, unblinking answer: to increase evangelical turnout.<sup>8</sup> Fineman continues, &You don't tend to think of the Department of the Interior as a hotbed of religiosity or, for that matter, the Federal Emergency Management Agency. Sure enough, though, FEMA recently decided to allow religious groups to be paid for taking part in storm and earthquake relief efforts. And the Department of Housing and Urban Development is funneling money into construction of religious centers, as long as the dominant purpose of the structure is +social service.,<sup>8</sup> Fineman also notes, &There's only one high-profile matter that is truly risky: the choice of a nominee for the Supreme Court. To make this strategy work, the president has to pick a religious traditionalist of some kind, which means one who openly-proudly-opposes abortion and favors a Human Life Amendment to the constitution. That kind of nominee would generate the kind of fight the White House doesn't really want to see, for it could mobilize the other side. Better to fly below radar. Which is why, inside the White House, they might want to invent their own kind of religious practice: praying for the health of the members of the High Court.<sup>8</sup>

We send out regular emails from our government computers to state leadership about upcoming Administration Travel in their state. The list includes the chief of staffs for all GOP congressional, statewide, and target county officials, as well as select Party leadership.

As you know, Administration surrogates are beginning to travel to states to attend fundraisers for the President's re-election campaign. Are we allowed to notify this same list of those travel dates? Please see an example email below to Ohio's state leadership list - note the 6/24 and 6/30 events by FLOTUS and VPOTUS, respectively, and the event listing as "a political event".

1) We have a pending FOIA request for copies of documents (broadly defined) to and from chemical industry entities regarding policy recommendations on the issue of chemical security or the vulnerability of chemical plants to terrorism within the time frame October 1, 2001 to April 28, 2003. One responsive document is a 9/23/2002 letter to Karl Rove and Mr. Rove's 10/31/2003 reply forwarding that letter to us. I need to find out if there would be objections to the release of the incoming letter and/or Mr. Rove's response. I can withhold Mr. Rove's response as falling outside the scope of the request (it's not a CEQ communication) but that argument doesn't really justify withholding the incoming letter.

2) The last of the lawsuits challenging President Clinton's use of the Antiquities Act (designating the Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument) is moving forward on cross-motions for summary judgment. DOJ has had a motion to dismiss/summary judgment pending for some time but this case had been on a long hiatus while the 10th Circuit resolved intervention and congressional ratification issues. On 10/31/2002, Judge Benson (D. Utah) entered an amended scheduling order for dispositive motions. Plaintiffs and defendant-intervors have now filed their motions for summary judgment and the U.S. response/reply brief is due July 7. Would you be the point of contact for reviewing that brief (expected the week of June 23)?

Brett,
This might be a silly question. I am running invites with Ken's name on them by counsel at the campaign.
Since it has the President's name on it.... Ken Mehlman, Campaign Manager, Bush-Cheney '04..... should I run them by you still? or is this only a campaign issue?
Please advise.
Thanks,

The Associated Press
Wednesday, May 28, 2003; 6:48 PM
WASHINGTON - Racial and ethnic data are essential to health care, law enforcement and criminal justice policy, social scientists said Wednesday, discussing a ballot initiative that would bar California from collecting such information.
Studies on disparate medical treatment, incarceration rates and loan approvals for blacks and whites would be threatened if voters in March approve the racial privacy initiative championed by affirmative action opponent Ward Connerly, the sociologists said at a forum on Capitol Hill. The information is vital "so long as race is used as a basis of access or denial," said Troy Duster, a professor at the University of California at Berkeley and New York University.
The measure could strike the "race box" from many government forms by forbidding state and local governments from classifying students, contractors or employees by race, ethnicity, color or national origin. The measure exempts some data collected for medical research, descriptions of prisoners or criminal suspects, and cases where the federal government requires that agencies report racial data.
Connerly said the arguments against the initiative use circular reasoning. "They say we can't get rid of the categories until we're colorblind. Until we get rid of the categories, we can't be colorblind," he said in a telephone interview following the forum.
Connerly, who says he is part white, part American Indian and part African-American, argues that identifying people by race is meaningless and a form of segregation.
Eight years ago, Connerly led the fight to drop race in University of California admissions and went on to successfully dismantle many public affirmative action programs statewide.
Connerly, who is a University of California regent, says his initiative is the next step toward a "colorblind society."
But two weeks ago, fellow regents went on record in opposition to Connerly's campaign.
Duster called Connerly's argument "seductive," noting that recent polls show 60 percent of California voters support the initiative.
But he said the appeal is illusory because race is a factor in decisions throughout society. "I don't have racial privacy when I drive my car down the street or I go for loan," Duster said.
Statistics on the racial composition of juries in Texas played a key role in the Supreme Court's decision in February to strike down a death sentence, he said.
Brian Smedley, a senior program officer at the Institute of Medicine, said medical studies have shown persistent disparities in the treatment of black and white patients, regardless of insurance or income.
"We couldn't find a single area of disease or illness where these disparities were not evident," Smedley said.
Former San Diego Police Chief Jerry Sanders said authorities would never root out the practice of racial profiling if they could not compile data to document its existence.
Duster said he is frustrated that the debate over racial and ethnic data is so starkly framed. On the one hand, mixed-race families are increasingly common and molecular biologists say that race is irrelevant in their research. On the other hand, race remains an important social marker.

"It can be both whimsical and arbitrary and also deeply embedded," Duster said. "That's hard to handle in a debate."

Karl thought, and I strongly agree, it would be a good idea for Matt and me to sit down with you to discuss ethics matters as they relate to the campaign. I was planning to meet with people both inside and outside the administration, to seek their guidance and counsel as it relates to the White House and '04, and I want to make sure in advance that I know the "do's and don'ts" in terms of what to ask and how to frame matters. I want to be whatever I do is wholly appropriate -- and your guidance would be invaluable.

Could you let me know when's a good time for us to meet?

Many thanks.

Subject: St. Pete (FL)Times (5/30/03) EDITORIAL re: A terrible court choice

A terrible court choice
A Times Editorial
St. Petersburg Times
published May 30, 2003

While high-profile battles rage in the Senate over some of President Bush's more controversial nominees to the federal appellate bench, less attention is being paid to his district court picks. One, James Leon Holmes, an attorney in private practice in Arkansas, is particularly worrisome. The choice of Holmes is further evidence that Bush is trying to pack the courts with conservative ideologues.

Holmes, a former president of Arkansas Right to Life, is a man whose view of the world is so dated and backward that he shouldn't be put in charge of a classroom, much less a federal district courtroom. He questions the basic premise of gender equality. In a 1997 article he co-wrote with his wife, Holmes states that the Bible dictates a subordinate role for wives, saying "the woman is to place herself under the authority of the man." He writes that choosing any other way is "distorting the relationship between male and female" and "is as sacrilegious as profaning any of the other sacraments."

The article excoriates modern feminism, charging that it has brought society "artificial contraception and abortion on demand with recognition of homosexual liaisons soon to follow."

"No matter how often we condemn abortion," Holmes writes, "to the extent we adopt the feminist principle that the distinction between the sexes is of no consequence and should be disregarded in the organization of society . . . we are contributing to the culture of death."

In other writings Holmes has equated abortion rights supporters with Nazis, and he dismissed concerns over the impact of a total ban on abortion on rape victims with the inaccurate and compassionless assertion that "conceptions from rape occur with approximately the same frequency as snowfall in Miami." He has said since he regrets that comment.

This is the man Bush has plucked from obscurity to elevate to the federal bench. Senate Democrats may not have handled every judicial nomination fairly, but in some cases Bush has gone out of his way to find some of the most narrow-minded, extreme thinkers on the political right to place in judicial lifetime appointments.

Holmes' twisted notions of women's equality are out of step with constitutional law and modern thinking. He shouldn't be given a chance to impose his rigid moralism for the rest of his life from the bench.

Donation To GOP From Tribe Seeking Meeting With Norton Draws Attention.
The AP (5/30, Yost) reports, &Just months after President Bush took office, the Republican Party accepted a $100,000 check from an Indian tribe seeking help in getting a meeting with Interior Secretary Gale Norton, according to internal GOP records. After the check was sent, the lobbyist for the Agua Caliente Indian band sent a thank-you letter to the GOP suggesting Norton's office was considering its meeting request. The leader of the tribe eventually got to air its concerns to the interior secretary during a congressional tour near the tribe's home in Palm Springs, Calif.<sup>8</sup> Republican Party &officials say tribal officials were never promised anything in return for their six-figure check in 2001. +We may pass along a request, but that's the extent of it,, said Jim Dyke, a spokesman for the Republican National Committee.<sup>8</sup> Agua Caliente tribal chairman Richard Milanovich &said Thursday there was no connection between the tribe's check and the request for a meeting with Norton, adding, +It wasn't to look for any particular favors from anyone.,<sup>8</sup>

So Much Process, So Little Peace
By John O'Sullivan

No agreement should be made with opponents who are ambiguous on the key point of whether they can and will halt terrorism. Arafat claims that he cannot control terrorist groups; Sinn Fein promised only to try to persuade the IRA to halt violence. These were legalistic fictions. Any future peace process must establish with absolute clarity that the insurgent side will both halt its own terrorism and assist the lawful repression of terrorism mounted by others. Or the deal is off. Moreover, governments that embark on a peace process must have--and tell people they have--a Plan B in case the process fails. The constant recital by British ministers of the line "there is no Plan B" merely let Sinn Fein-IRA know that they could ratchet up their demands indefinitely with no fear that the Blair government might walk away from the table. How could it do so? It had no Plan B. Israel's doves were similarly handicapped.

Hide and Seek... and Seek
By Jim Lacey

As the hunt goes on, there are some simple truths that many seem to be forgetting: 1) At one time, Saddam had enough chemical weapons and toxins to annihilate the eastern United States; 2) in the past, he used those weapons against his enemies, internal and external; and 3) he was an aggressive dictator who massacred his own people and bullied and periodically invaded neighboring countries. For the past ten years, Saddam may have found it too costly or too difficult to maintain his WMD program. If that is true, we have U.N. sanctions to thank--and the United States, which maintained pressure on the Iraqi regime and those who appeased it. Which leads to the greatest truth of all: In time, sanctions would have been relaxed and U.S. attention would have shifted elsewhere. And when that happened, Saddam would have had the ability, wherewithal, and proven inclination to quickly reconstitute a WMD program. The world is better off without that risk.

Arrest <I>This</I>
By Lee A. Casey & David B. Rivkin Jr.

Once the war against Saddam Hussein reached a successful conclusion, the war against that war entered a new phase. Activists, asserting that the United States committed "war crimes" in Iraq, are even now in the process of initiating criminal prosecutions against American officials, including President George W. Bush and Gen. Tommy Franks, as well as British prime minister Tony Blair. These actions have been brought in Belgium and Switzerland; the Belgian government already has "referred" the Franks case to the U.S. Justice Department--giving the U.S. an opportunity to punish its general lest the Belgian government do it for us. This Belgian missive should be rejected and returned forthwith, along with a note politely explaining that the writ of Albert II, king of the Belgians, does not run on these shores. To give this referral any other consideration would work to validate the profoundly flawed legal theory on which Belgium's actions are based.

Rich Man, Poor Man
By Kevin A. Hassett

As the 2004 campaign begins in earnest, it appears the Democrats' preferred strategy will be to tie a weak economy to President Bush's economic policies. But what will they talk about if the economy gets strong? Several pieces in the <I>New York Times</I> suggest the answer: income inequality. The best example is a <I>Times Magazine</I> piece by Paul Krugman contending that we are entering a new Gilded Age as "extravagant as the original." He recounts anecdotes of truly awe-inspiring wealth, of executives being treated like "royalty," and reports that in 1998 the 13,000 richest families had about the same combined income as the 20 million poorest households. The data are pretty striking, and reveal that income is far more concentrated at the top than it used to be. What should one do about it?

How Firm a Foundation
By Neal B. Freeman

At mid-century, the Ford family was confronted by three influences: its own awakening sense of charitable obligation; the mounting concern among its lawyers that the estate tax could dislodge the family from control of the Ford Motor Company; and the urgency felt by Ford PR executives to associate the family name with good works. Thus was born the first American mega-foundation. The later history of the Ford Foundation has been one of trust betrayed--and audacity rewarded. Consider the problem of the American Left at mid-century. They had grand designs, as ever--vast plans for what other people should do with their time and their money--but precious few resources. The truly left-wing capitalists--the Cyrus Eatons and so forth--were famous in a man-bites-dog way, but they were always few in number. To reshape the American economy in its own image, the Left resolved to use the assets of America's proto-capitalist, the first great entrepreneur of the American century: Henry Ford.

St. Mugg at 100
By Paul Johnson

Mugg was never a tub-thumper. He made the fullest use of TV, as well as the presses, but he was always subtle, cogent, hugely literate, often witty, always humorous, never angry or fumiferous. His appeal was always a halfway house between the powerful reasoning of St. Paul in his Epistle to the Romans and the mysticism of St. John of the Cross. His model was Mother Teresa, whose work he helped to popularize. Mugg had a contorted self-taught version of the pre-war English upper-class accent which was sui generis and gave to his TV sayings and sermons an unforgettable allure. His white hair and bronzed monkey-face, creased in laughter and often illuminated by joy, turned him into one of the most arresting sights on the box. He loved TV and hated it; admitted it was the most intoxicating vice of all, subsuming all the rest, but found it indispensable to his work of evangelism, as well as an irresistible temptation to vanity.

Getting to the Bottom of This 'Neo' Nonsense By Ramesh Ponnuru

The principal theoretical debate between neoconservatives and other kinds of conservatives in the 1990s did not concern whether the internal character of states affects their external behavior and should therefore affect U.S. policy. It concerned, rather, the wisdom of military intervention for purely (or almost purely) humanitarian purposes. Neocons supported military action against Slobodan Milosevic for moral reasons. Most conservatives either opposed it, or supported it grudgingly and only because previous American action in the Balkans had created derivative national interests there. The war on terrorism has settled this question for the moment, and not in the neocons' favor. We are involved in a war to protect a core national interest: the physical security of our countrymen. Merely humanitarian intervention is a luxury that we are doing without. If Milosevic were starting an ethnic-cleansing rampage in the Balkans today, we probably would not be taking military action against him.

Presidential Pants on Fire? By Byron York

What seems particularly galling to liberal writers is the notion that Bush is getting away with his lies even as his predecessor was flayed for lesser offenses. "If a Democrat, say, Bill Clinton, engaged in Bush-scale dishonesty, the press would be all over him," Drake Bennett and Heidi Pauken wrote in a recent issue of <I>The American Prospect</I>. "Unless the voters and the press start paying attention, all the president's lies will have little political consequence--except to certify that we have become something less than a democracy." What's going on here? Certainly George W. Bush, like every other politician, has said things, sometimes in off-the-cuff remarks, that were wrong. But was he lying? Like Bill Clinton? As appealing as the idea may be to the president's opponents, a look at the record shows that the charges just don't stand up to scrutiny.

A Conservative View of the Court By Michael S. Greve

Not so long ago, liberals could be counted on to agitate for a "living Constitution," and conservatives for "strict construction." But those fronts have been crumbling. In the fights over President Bush's judicial nominees, Democrats are now inveighing against "conservative judicial activism"--as evidenced by the Rehnquist Court's perceived contempt for precedent and the democratic process. To counter these charges, Republicans must begin by recognizing that judicial "activism" is a question of constitutional substance, not judicial style. A decision that elevates judicial power over republican government without a constitutional warrant is plainly activist. A decision to reverse that precedent is the opposite. Such a reversal might be termed "activist" in the trivial sense that it involves a change in the status quo. But the Supreme Court must, on appropriate occasions, overrule its own precedents. A consistent failure to do so would signal that the Supreme Court considered its own edicts, rather than the Constitution itself, to be the supreme law of the land.

A terrible court choice

© St. Petersburg Times

published May 30, 2003

While high-profile battles rage in the Senate over some of President Bush's more controversial nominees to the federal appellate bench, less attention is being paid to his district court picks. One, James Leon Holmes, an attorney in private practice in Arkansas, is particularly worrisome. The choice of Holmes is further evidence that Bush is trying to pack the courts with conservative ideologues.

Holmes, a former president of Arkansas Right to Life, is a man whose view of the world is so dated and backward that he shouldn't be put in charge of a classroom, much less a federal district courtroom. He questions the basic premise of gender equality. In a 1997 article he co-wrote with his wife, Holmes states that the Bible dictates a subordinate role for wives, saying "the woman is to place herself under the authority of the man." He writes that choosing any other way is "distorting the relationship between male and female" and "is as sacrilegious as profaning any of the other sacraments."

The article excoriates modern feminism, charging that it has brought society "artificial contraception and abortion on demand with recognition of homosexual liaisons soon to follow."

"No matter how often we condemn abortion," Holmes writes, "to the extent we adopt the feminist principle that the distinction between the sexes is of no consequence and should be disregarded in the organization of society . . . we are contributing to the culture of death."

In other writings Holmes has equated abortion rights supporters with Nazis, and he dismissed concerns over the impact of a total ban on abortion on rape victims with the inaccurate and compassionless assertion that "conceptions from rape occur with approximately the same frequency as snowfall in Miami." He has said since he regrets that comment.

This is the man Bush has plucked from obscurity to elevate to the federal bench. Senate Democrats may not have handled every judicial nomination fairly, but in some cases Bush has gone out of his way to find some of the most narrow-minded, extreme thinkers on the political right to place in judicial lifetime appointments.

Holmes' twisted notions of women's equality are out of step with constitutional law and modern thinking. He shouldn't be given a chance to impose his rigid moralism for the rest of his life from the bench.

good idea. brett, do you guys have any sort of conference call mechanism that you use with agency general counsels? we have a twice weekly conf call with chiefs of staff (mondays and thursdays at 9:20) which we could expand to include GCs and white house liaisons, and could get you and matt on that call to go over the fine points and make the push as you suggest.

MEMORANDUM FOR WHITE HOUSE STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES
COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT
SUBJECT: POLITICAL ACTIVITY

This memorandum summarizes rules and policies with respect to political activity for a candidate, campaign, political group, or political party. We will renew and supplement this guidance as appropriate before the 2004 elections. At all times, you should contact the Counsel's Office if you have any questions about appropriate political activity. You also should keep in mind, as always, that appearance and propriety issues can occasionally arise even with respect to perfectly lawful activity. Finally, the Chief of Staff has asked me to remind you that the decision whether to engage in political activity or make contributions to political entities or campaigns, including with respect to the re-election campaign of the President, is a personal matter for each employee and that no one is under any obligation to engage in such activity.

Basic Rules and Policies

The basic rules and policies you should follow with respect to your political activity are straightforward. You are permitted to engage in a variety of political activity, as detailed more fully below, subject to certain important restrictions:

- First, you may not use your official authority for the purpose of interfering with or affecting the result of an election. That means, for example, that you may not knowingly permit your official title to be used on invitations to political fundraisers. (If your title is used by others inadvertently and without your knowledge, you should contact the Counsel's Office promptly about appropriate steps to take.) You also may not use your official authority to coerce any person to engage in or refrain from political activity.
- Second, you may not personally solicit, receive, or accept political contributions. Also, you may not host or sponsor political fundraisers. However, you may speak at, attend, and be the featured guest at political fundraisers so long as you do not personally solicit contributions. But you should always clear such activity with the Office of Political Affairs and the Counsel's Office before accepting an invitation to be a guest speaker at a fundraiser.

On-Duty and On-Site Activity

All employees are responsible at all times for performing their official duties and responsibilities. White House employees whose duties can continue after normal duty hours and away from the normal duty post also are permitted by law to engage while on duty and in the office in otherwise permitted political activity, such as meetings and telephone calls related to elections, campaigns, or political parties. (Note that political fundraising and fundraisers may never occur on official government property.) However, any such political activity should be limited so that it is not inconsistent with official duties or otherwise inappropriate. In addition, any non-incidental costs that the government would not have incurred but for any political activity should be paid or reimbursed by a political entity. Finally, detailees are not permitted to engage in political activity while on duty and in their offices, but may do so off duty and off site.

It is important to note that certain White House employees may be required in the performance of their official duties to assist or accompany the President, the Vice President, the First Lady, Mrs. Cheney, or others with respect to political activity. This may entail, for example, duties related to security, scheduling, advance, or communications, among other duties. Such assistance is permissible and appropriate.

Travel and Costs

When a government officer or employee engages in political activity, the government should not pay (or must be reimbursed) for non-incidental costs that it would not have incurred but for the political activity.

The issue arises primarily with respect to travel costs. The appropriate political entity ordinarily pays the relevant travel costs associated with political activity (or the costs for the political portion of mixed official-political travel). The government is not reimbursed, however, for: (i) the costs that result from security needs; or (ii) the compensation or expenses of persons required to accompany or assist the official engaging in political activity. Also, White House cars ordinarily should not be used for transportation to political events except as necessary for security purposes or to accompany the President, Vice President, First Lady, or Mrs. Cheney.

With respect to office equipment, your Office will be contacted by the Office of Management and Administration regarding appropriate reimbursement by the relevant political entity for those uses of equipment that can incur non-incidental additional charges (primarily from paper and long-distance costs). As appropriate, separate equipment may be installed in certain offices by the Office of Management and

Select List of Permitted Political Activities

Subject to applicable prohibitions, including the prohibitions on improper use of official title and solicitation of contributions discussed above, you may engage in the following political activities:

- participation in political organizations, which includes:
  - being a member of a political party;
  - serving as an officer of a political party;
  - attending and participating in nominating caucuses;
  - participating in a political convention or rally; and
  - serving as a delegate to a political convention.
- participation in political campaigns, which includes:
  - canvassing for votes;
    - endorsing or opposing a candidate in an advertisement, broadcast, campaign literature, or similar material;
    - addressing a convention, caucus, rally, or similar gathering of a political party or political group; and
    - actively managing the political campaign of a partisan political candidate or candidate for political party office.
- participation in elections, including:
  - voting; and
  - driving voters to polling places.
- attendance and speaking at fundraising events:

You may not solicit, receive, or accept political contributions, and you may not host or sponsor fundraisers. However, you may:

  - make lawful political contributions;
- attend political fundraisers;
  - manage or organize political fundraisers hosted and sponsored by others (you may not host or sponsor fundraisers or otherwise personally solicit contributions);
  - speak as a featured guest at political fundraisers so long as you do not solicit contributions and so long as the event otherwise complies with the legal requirements of the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act;

- be listed as a guest speaker on the invitation for a fundraiser so long as the invitation does not list your official title; and
- solicit, accept, or receive uncompensated volunteer services for a campaign from any individual (however, a superior may not ask his or her subordinate employee to provide such services, nor may he or she target a company or entity with official matters pending before the agency for provision of such services).

Employees of the Vice President

Employees of the Vice President (and especially those whose salary is disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate) should consult the Counsel to the Vice President regarding political activity or contributions.

Conclusion

Above all, please remember that we are all employees of the President or Vice President and that our performance reflects upon them. All of us must comply with applicable laws and regulations, and must also comply with the high ethical standards they have set for us.

Brett: If the campaign were to start asking cabinet members and other administration officials to do Bush/Cheney 2004 events, can they ask them to do the following:

1. Fundraisers for BC2004: these would be a part of a coordinated plan of FRs throughout the country.
2. Meetings with political leadership: these would be meetings with BC2004 state & local leadership when the travel to states
3. Bush Team Leader recruitment events: these events would be a reward for volunteers joining the grassroots organizations in the states.
4. Phone calls to donors: these would be curtesy calls to state finance leadership for BC2004 - money would not be raised on these calls

If the campaign gets the OK to start asking Administration officials to do this, can they do the following two things to get the ball rolling:

1. Host a conference call in which BC2004 staff, WH staff, and agency staff
2. Produce memos for agency leads on relavant requests

Myers' judicial nod turns controversial

By TED MONOSON Washington bureau

WASHINGTON -- Ranchers and environmentalists are facing off over the nomination of a former aide to retired Wyoming U.S. Sen. Alan Simpson to serve on the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Ranchers say that William G. Myers III, a 47-year-old Idaho native who is currently the Interior Department's top lawyer, would bring knowledge of the West and respect for ranchers' rights to the Ninth Circuit.

Critics of the Ninth Circuit, which is based in San Francisco, say that it produces many liberal decisions that are out of step with the law and the interests of the West.

"It's a very liberal court and environmentalists don't want to see him on it," National Cattlemen's Beef Association (NCBA) lobbyist Chandler Keys said. "If he gets confirmed, he's not going to have a bunch of soul mates. He will be drinking coffee by himself."

Before his appointment as Interior Department solicitor in July 2001, Myers was executive director of the Public Lands Council and director of federal lands for the Cattlemen.

The Public Lands Council represents the NCBA as well as the American Sheep Industry Association, the American Farm Bureau Federation and the Association of National Grasslands. Myers also served as a lawyer for the Denver-based firm Holland and Hart LLP doing work for the livestock industry that some environmentalists say makes him unfit to serve as a judge.

"He obviously comes in with a clear ideology," said National Parks Conservation Association Northern Rockies Office Senior Director Tony Jewett. "His history has been in defending commodity uses, not public uses of federal lands. His confirmation would be another nail in the administration's attempt to hand over the public lands to private industry." Jewett and other environmentalists are particularly concerned about Myers' opposition to grazing regulations that were put in place when Bruce Babbitt led the Interior Department during the Clinton administration.

The 1995 regulations eliminated rules that permitted only ranchers to own grazing permits and gave the federal government ownership of range improvements, like fencing and stockwater wells. Before the change, grazing permit holders' owned the range improvements. Myers also opposed the re-introduction of wolves to Yellowstone National Park and President Clinton's prohibition on building roads in parts of the National Forest system.

Myers' critics say that as the Interior Department's top lawyer, he has continued to look after the interests of ranchers and other industries that use federal lands, while seeking to limit environmental regulations.

The Associated Press reported that Myers told a Winnemucca, Nev., gathering of the Nevada Cattlemen's Association on Nov. 15, 2002, "It has gotten to the point where you can hardly dig a post hole without having to do an environmental analysis." Myers supporters say that his decisions would be based on the law and not on his personal opinions.

"In my dealings with him he has never been hesitant to point out that your emotions may be here, but reality is over there," said Jim Magagna, executive vice president of the Wyoming Stock Growers Association. "It wasn't what we always wanted to hear, but it was the correct legal opinion." Magagna said that many of Myers' opinions that concern environmentalists are the positions of the organizations that he worked for and it was his job to express those opinions.

Myers began his career in government as a legislative counsel for former Republican Wyoming Sen. Alan K. Simpson.

The former senator does not share environmentalists' concerns about Myers position on public lands issues and said that his former aide would be a good addition to the Ninth Circuit.

"He'd be terrific and lord knows they need him," Simpson said. "That is the goofiest court in America."

Simpson noted that a large number of the Ninth Circuit's decisions have been overturned by the Supreme Court. The court was sharply criticized by both Democrats and Republicans for ruling that the word "God" should be removed from the Pledge of Allegiance.

"The frustration with the Ninth Circuit is that there are states in it that are not California," Simpson said. "It needs somebody who understands the West and knows about commodities and grazing." The addition of judges like Myers is necessary to rein in the environmentalists who control the court, according to Simpson.

"I always wonder about the enviros and their opposition to commodities," Simpson said. "If they have their way instead of having cattle pooping on the prairie, they would have subdivisions and people pooping on the prairie."

"He'll never satisfy the tree huggers," Simpson said. "They'd love to eat him alive."

Tom France, the director of the Missoula-based Northern Rockies office of the National Wildlife Federation, said that he expects Myers to be confirmed. France does not object to his nomination.

"He has different opinions on policies than I do, but I don't think that makes him unfit to serve on the federal bench," France said.

The Ninth Circuit has jurisdiction over cases in Alaska, Arizona, California, Hawaii, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, and Washington, the U.S. Territory of Guam, and the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Island. The court has decided many issues that also have an impact on Wyoming.

The Tenth Circuit, which is based in Denver, has jurisdiction over Colorado, Kansas, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Utah and Wyoming.

President Bush nominated Myers on May 15. The Senate Judiciary Committee has not scheduled a hearing for him yet. Senate Democrats and Republicans have been at loggerheads over several of the administration's judicial nominees. It is unclear if there will be significant disagreement over Myers' nomination.

As Interior Department solicitor, Myers is in charge of more than 300 lawyers at the National Park Service, Fish and Wildlife Service, Bureau of Land Management and Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Magagna said that he was optimistic that many of the Western Democrats who represent large numbers of ranchers would support Myers' nomination.

double-checked that with him tonight. The change will be reflected in Judge's op-ed tomorrow. Just wanted you to know before you pick up the SHIELDS: Kate O'Beirne.

O'BEIRNE: The latest judicial nominee to face vehement opposition from Senate Democrats is Judge Carolyn Kuhl of California Superior Court, nominated to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Threatening another filibuster raises the question of whether Democrats are holding women and minorities, like Priscilla Owen and Miguel Estrada, and now Kuhl, to a double standard. The complaint against Judge Kuhl, about an abortion case she worked on 17 years ago, was never raised about a male nominee who worked with her on the case.

Women and minorities need not apply?

Democrats to Court Nominees: Only White Males Need Apply

By David Freddoso

In their zeal to bar conservatives from the federal bench*especially those who appear to have the potential for later elevation to the Supreme Court* Senate Democrats have chosen to mount their most aggressive anti-confirmation battles against President Bush,s minority and female nominees, a conservative legal group is charging.

This disparity of treatment, say members of the Committee for Justice (CFJ), is most clearly demonstrated by the Democratic opposition to Carolyn Kuhl, whom Bush has nominated to the San Francisco-based U.S. Court of Appeals for the 9th Circuit.

Kuhl, whom liberal groups are referring to as &Scalia in a skirt,8 is a California Superior Court judge who served as deputy assistant attorney general under President Reagan.ÿ Senate Democrats are currently considering preventing Kuhl,s confirmation by filibuster, just as they are currently filibustering the appellate court nominations of Miguel Estrada, an Hispanic, and Priscilla Owen, who,ÿ like Kuhl, is a conservative woman. Democrats have not yet reached a final decision on whether to do so, however, said David Carle, spokesman for Sen. Patrick Leahy (D.-Vt.), the ranking Democrat on the Judiciary Committee.

Liberals have attacked Kuhl because of a 1986 amicus brief that she co-authored on behalf of the Reagan Administration.ÿ The brief, filed in the 1986 U.S. Supreme Court case of Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, urged overturning Roe v. Wade, the 1973 decision that legalized abortion on demand in all 50 states.

That this brief should form the basis of the Democratic opposition to Kuhl is telling, because last November Senate Democrats allowed, by unanimous consent, the confirmation of John M. Rogers to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 6th Circuit.ÿ With Kuhl, Rogers co-authored the Thornburgh brief.ÿ He is a white male.

When asked why the Democrats would allow the confirmation of Rogers but not Kuhl, Leahy,s spokesman, Carle, said he would try to call back with an explanation.ÿ He had not done so as of press time.

CFJ Chairman Boyden Gray noted in a written statement that Rogers was not even asked about the Thornburgh brief during his confirmation hearing last June.ÿ The Judiciary Committee approved Rogers in July on a voice vote. CFJ spokesman Sean Rushton, pointing to the filibusters against Estrada and Owen*both of whom are rated &well-qualified8 by the American Bar Association*told Human Events that Democrats fear confirming qualified conservative nominees who are not stereotypical middle-aged white males.ÿ Democrats will have a harder time politically trying to stop a female, non-whitenominee if Bush later tries to elevate one to the Supreme Court, he said.ÿ

&They don,t want to see a conservative woman judge who may, for example, oppose Roe v. Wade,8 he said.ÿ &That doesn,t fit the script for them.8ÿ On May 9, the Judiciary Committee recommended Kuhl,s confirmation in a 10-to-9 party-line vote.

Sen. Dianne Feinstein (D.-Calif.), a committee member who represents Kuhl, s home state, praised the nominee at her April 1 confirmation hearing.ÿ &I have never had so many letters from judges in support of a [judicial] candidate,8 she said.ÿ &These letters are clearly not pro forma.ÿ She is obviously an extraordinarily bright woman.8ÿ However, Feinstein was ultimately convinced by Democrats to vote against recommending confirmation.ÿ

California,s other senator, Barbara Boxer (D.), has opposed Kuhl all along, denouncing her as &anti-choice.

&Carolyn Kuhl has a long and troubling record as a right-wing ideologue and as a judge whose record demonstrates indifference to the rights of individuals,8 wrote Ralph Neas, president of the leftist group People for the American Way.ÿ &She does not deserve a powerful lifetime seat on the federal appeals court.8ÿ

Neas is a key player in the Democrats, plan to filibuster Bush appellate court nominees, and his far-left group has released highly critical and hyperbolic reports on several, calling them &extremists.8ÿ

Bush,s appointment of Kuhl is meant to balance out the radical San Francisco-based 9th Circuit, whose judges recently ruled that God must be struck from the Pledge of Allegiance and that the 2nd Amendment to the Bill of Rights does not contain an individual right to keep and bear arms (see Human Events, Jan. 6 issue, coverbox).ÿ Both of these decisions are being appealed.

Ashley--

For tomorrow's notebook, am looking at the following passage from Knight Ridder on May 13. Dems say it violates Sec. 623 of treasury-postal approps (printed below). I assume you folks have ways to avoid this (separate phones, faxes etc) and would like to know what those are. Thanks much.

DM 334 7570.

It was the latest in a recent spate of Air Force One visits to states where senators are resisting Bush's program. But the president's personal interventions came only after persistent coordination between the White House and top employers in those states aimed at bending key senators to their wills, according to senators, congressional aides and lobbyists.

"We've done ads, we've done mailings," said John J. Castellani, president of The Business Roundtable, an influential group of top executives, many of them major employers in crucial states. "We've had visits in the states. We've had meetings, written op-eds. The only thing we haven't done is a prayer breakfast."

Working through its political office and its office of business liaison, the White House has contacted local business leaders either directly or through national business groups to get them to lobby their senators on behalf of Bush's tax cuts. Among senators who said they'd been lobbied this way are Nelson, Max Baucus, D-Mont., Olympia Snowe, R-Maine, and George Voinovich, R-Ohio. Other targets include Sens. Mary Landrieu, D-La., and Blanche Lincoln, D-Ark.

SEC. 623. No part of any funds appropriated in this or any other Act shall be used by an agency of the executive branch, other than for normal and recognized executive-legislative relationships, for publicity or propaganda purposes, and for the preparation, distribution or use of any kit, pamphlet, booklet, publication, radio, television or film presentation designed to support or defeat legislation pending before the Congress, except in presentation to the Congress itself.

Subject: Boston Globe story on filibusters and Supreme Court

HIGH COURT NOMINATIONS MAY HINGE ON FILIBUSTER DEBATE

SENATE IS DIVIDED ON CONSTITUTIONALITY

BODY:

WASHINGTON - Talk of a possible vacancy on the Supreme Court is rising with the arrival of June and the last month of the current term. If there is an opening, however, a nominee's fate may depend on what happens to the filibuster rule in the Senate, now under siege.

A filibuster, one of the Senate's most cherished eccentricities, is a debate that can go on and on - a blocking maneuver that works simply because it is so hard to stop in a closely divided Senate. This year, its use against lower court nominations has run on for months.

The continuing slowdown on two conservative nominees is widely regarded as a rehearsal for coming battles if a Supreme Court justice retires and President Bush picks a controversial replacement.

Aware of that prospect, and frustrated by the current filibuster, President Bush last month complained that "we are facing a crisis in the Senate, and therefore a crisis in our judiciary."

But the Democratic leader in the Senate, Tom Daschle of South Dakota, has said there is no crisis and there is nothing wrong with the filibuster rule. "If it ain't broke, don't fix it," he said in May.

The precedent for filibustering judicial nominations was set in 1968 when Republican senators thwarted the Democratic nomination of Justice Abe Fortas to become chief justice. The technique was not renewed on judgeships until this year, when Democrats brought it back to try to head off two of Bush's nominees to federal appeals courts - Miguel Estrada and Priscilla Owen.

As the Supreme Court's future is pondered, the filibuster looms large in the background.

The filibuster is now under fierce challenge in all three branches of government. The most drastic form of a challenge would involve a ruling from the Senate chair, occupied for the occasion by Vice President Dick Cheney, that filibusters no longer can be used against judicial nominees - a simple, unmistakable display of power that could leave the Democratic minority with no option but to stall virtually all Senate business.

"It is not called the nuclear option for nothing," said Elliot M. Minberg, legal director of People for the American Way, a liberal group that supports the current filibustering.

This is not something that either Republican or Democratic senators are actively talking about in public, because it looks drastic in the gentle-mannered Senate. But lobbyists seem preoccupied with it these days.

Supporters of the option, like conservative legal advocate Jay Alan Sekulow of the American Center for Law and Justice, prefer to call it "the constitutional option." They argue that filibusters aimed at judicial nominations are unconstitutional, and their option would simply restore majority rule on those nominations.

Short of that option, there are other challenges building. The president, reaching deep into the Senate's own affairs, has suggested that the chamber speed up its process on judgeships. The Senate's own Republican leadership is seeking to weaken the filibuster rule.

The rule is also under assault from a number of conservative activist groups. And among academics, there is a continuing debate whether the filibuster is unconstitutional. The Senate will begin formal study of all of the options on Thursday, when its Rules Committee holds an afternoon hearing.

One conservative group, Judicial Watch - a legal advocacy organization that in nine years of existence has brought suit more than 100 times, mainly against the government - has filed a lawsuit claiming that the filibuster of judgeship nominees is unconstitutional.

Judicial Watch asked the US District Court to strike down the filibuster rule and order the Senate and its officers to let the two pending appeals court nominations come to a final vote - one that would ensure the nominees' confirmation.

In a rare display of agreement on the emotionally charged subject of filibusters, the Senate last month voted unanimously and without debate to defend itself against that lawsuit.

At this point, however, it is unclear what the Senate's defense will be. Some freshman Senate Republicans have talked publicly about pursuing the constitutional claim in court themselves, so there may be some resistance to mounting a legal argument that the issue is none of the courts' business. The Senate Legal Counsel will begin framing a defense shortly.

Each of the several options has its critics, but there is no consensus yet that all of them ultimately will fail.

The new rumbling over the filibuster can be traced to simple numbers: the 100-member Senate is divided 51-49, with Republicans holding control. The filibuster this year has taken that control away from them on at least two court nominations.

Senate Rule 22, the filibuster rule, requires 60 votes, not a majority of 51, to stop a filibuster and let the Senate proceed to a final vote. That means that if 41 senators want to keep a filibuster going, it can't be stopped because 59 opposing votes would not be enough.

Although changing the Senate rules ordinarily would require only a simple majority of 51 votes, a proposed change can itself be filibustered, and another Senate rule says it takes 67 votes (not 60) to end a filibuster against a rule change. That means 34 senators can block a rule change even if 66 want it.

Senate rules would have to be changed to adopt President Bush's suggestion for a more rapid timetable of Senate review of judicial nominees or to approve a Senate GOP leaders' proposal to reduce in steps the votes required to shut off a filibuster, from 60 to 51. Both ideas, if they make it to the Senate floor, would be subject to filibuster.

Thus, two out of three options now being discussed may be in for a seemingly endless struggle. Advocates on opposite sides of the filibuster controversy, like Minckberg and Sekulow, agreed that the two options suggested by Bush and Senate GOP leaders could be doomed.

That is what has brought on talk of the third option. It would work this way: Republicans would raise a parliamentary point that Rule 22 does not apply at all to judicial nominations, and so a majority of 51 prevails.

Does same analysis applies to section 623 of treasury-postal approps as well? Indeed, is WHO an "agency" for purposes of approps bill?

SEC. 623. No part of any funds appropriated in this or any other Act shall be used by an agency of the executive branch, other than for normal and recognized executive-legislative relationships, for publicity or propaganda purposes, and for the preparation, distribution or use of any kit, pamphlet, booklet, publication, radio, television or film presentation designed to support or defeat legislation pending before the Congress, except in presentation to the Congress itself.

THE GLOBAL MESSENGER

Tuesday, June 03, 2003

***KEY POINTS: FROM THE G-8 SUMMIT***

President Bush went to the G-8 Summit in Evian, France to encourage cooperation on key global priorities: spurring economic growth; combating terrorism; preventing the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction; and promoting prosperity in the developing world.

*Combating HIV/AIDS

? President Bush's new initiative for 5-year, $15 billion Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief triples U.S. spending on combating HIV/AIDS. The President urged other G-8 leaders to make similar commitments.

*MCA - The President discussed his pledge of $1.3 billion in 2004 to assist countries with sound development policies. This new plan for linking development assistance to policies is known as the Millennium Challenge Account initiative, and U.S. funding levels will increase to $5 billion annually by 2006.

*Famine Relief - President Bush called for urgent action to address famine, in particular to assist the 38 million people at risk of starving in Sub-Saharan Africa. America is the world's leading donor to the UN World Food Program. The President urged his European partners to reconsider policies that discourage African farmers from using safe biotechnology to increase agricultural productivity.

*Increasing Trade - The President called on all countries to contribute to the goal of opening global markets and increasing prosperity through free trade, pointing out how the U.S. increased its share of Sub-Saharan exports from 1996 to 2001.

*****TODAY'S SCHEDULE*****

President Bush meets with leaders from the region, Sharm el Sheikh, Egypt

***MASS GRAVES***

Many mass grave sites have been identified in Iraq, providing further evidence of Saddam Hussein's atrocities against the Iraqi people. The Coalition is working to help grieving families search for lost relatives and preserve evidence for future prosecutions by the new Iraqi government against the perpetrators. Some activities include:

*A team of U.S. forensic experts has arrived to assess the sites and determine security needs. They will work with other Coalition assessment teams.

*To strike the delicate balance between the interests of families searching for loved ones and broader justice issues, ORHA is working with local leaders where digging has already begun to coordinate the process; providing security at sites where digging has not begun; and sending forensic teams to conduct exhumations of grave sites.

*ORHA will work with existing Iraqi organizations to establish an Iraqi Committee on Missing Persons (ICMP). It will collect the records of Iraqis who have disappeared and compile a national database to integrate the information with findings of the forensic investigative teams.

*Prosecution of crimes against humanity committed by the former regime will be conducted through an Iraqi-led process assisted and supported by the international community as needed.

*To ensure that prosecutors have access to evidence, ORHA will form an evidence coordination team. The team will create centralized and systematic warehouses for the storage, documentation and preservation of evidence.

***KEY QUOTE***

"America and Europe are called to advance the cause of freedom and peace, and these two commitments are inseparable. It is human rights and private property, the rule of law and free trade and political openness that undermine the appeal of extremism and create the stable environment that peace requires. We are determined to demonstrate the power of these ideals in the reconstruction of Afghanistan and Iraq. And these ideals will provide the foundation for a reformed and peaceful and independent Palestinian state."

> This is to invite you to participate in a roundtable discussion at Heritage, on June 6 at 12 noon, on free trade in aviation. The session will feature a presentation by Dorothy Robyn and James Reitzes of the Brattle Group, authors of a recent study on the issue entitled "The Economic Impact of an EU-US Open Aviation Area," followed by open discussion among the attendees. It's a particularly timely issue, given the vast changes that are already taking place in aviation both here and in Europe. We are hoping that -- with your participation -- to have a lively and useful debate on these international aviation issues.

> I hope you can join us. To RSVP, please contact Margaret Hamlin of our office (margaret.hamlin@heritage.org, 608-6244) or reply directly to me. Also, if you know of any associates who would be interested in participating, please feel free to pass on this invitation to them, or let me know. Full details are in the attached invitation.

> I looking forward to seeing you here on June 6. (My apologies if you have received multiple copies of this invitation).

The past two years have been rough ones for the airline industry, both in the U.S. and internationally. Terrorism, wars, and SARS have reduced passenger volumes and increased costs. At the same time, challenges from low-cost airlines have further challenged the way traditional carriers do business. With all this, could now be the time to introduce more competition by lowering transatlantic trade barriers that hinder transatlantic competition and integration? Dorothy Robyn and James Reitzes say yes, and outline the potential benefits in a study recently completed by the Brattle Group for the European Commission. Please join us for what should be a lively and informative discussion of this controversial issue.

Seating is limited, so please confirm your attendance at your earliest convenience to Margaret.hamlin@heritage.org, or call 608-6166.

Profile: Judge Carolyn Kuhl, nominated to the US 9th Circuit Court of Appeals, faces opposition from Senate Democrats

2 June 2003
NPR: Morning Edition

JOHN YDSTIE, host: A Los Angeles Superior Court judge is the latest judicial nominee to face stiff opposition from Senate Democrats, including both of her home state senators. President Bush has nominated Judge Carolyn Kuhl to the US 9th Circuit Court of Appeals. She has the support of many local lawyers, but her opponents say her record as a Justice Department lawyer and as a judge reflects a conservative bias they find troubling. NPR's Richard Gonzalez reports.

RICHARD GONZALEZ reporting:

Carolyn Kuhl is a 52-year-old St. Louis native, who graduated with high honors from Princeton and Duke University Law School. Fresh out of school, she clerked for then judge, now Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy, when he sat on the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals, the same panel for which Kuhl is nominated. Some supporters say Kuhl, a conservative, would bring balance to the 9th Circuit, which is known for its left-leaning decisions. Sean Rushton is executive director of the Committee for Justice, a Washington, DC-based group organized to support President Bush's judicial nominees.

Mr. SEAN RUSHTON (Executive Director, Committee for Justice): She is considered, by both Democrats and Republicans who know her in the state of California, as an independent judge. She is not an ideologue. She sticks to the rule of law and interprets the law as is clearly written.

Ms. JUDITH SCHAEFFER (People for the American Way): This is not someone who has the right judgment to be given a lifetime appointment on the federal appellate court, which is the second most important court in our country.

GONZALEZ: Judith Schaeffer is with People for the American Way, a liberal group that promotes protection of First Amendment rights. She says Kuhl has a long record of hostility towards women's rights, civil rights and access to justice by ordinary Americans. For example, she says, as a young political appointee to the Reagan Justice Department, Kuhl argued for the Supreme Court to overturn Roe v. Wade, the court ruling that effectively legalized abortion. She also played a key role in persuading the Justice Department to restore tax-exempt status to Bob Jones University, despite that institution's policy of banning interracial dating. The Bob Jones decision set off a firestorm and eventually the Supreme Court ruled that the university was not entitled to tax-exempt status. In her recent Senate confirmation hearing, Kuhl acknowledged that she had been wrong.

Judge CAROLYN KUHL: It was wrong because the Justice Department should have been defending the traditional position of the IRS and it was wrong because it didn't put non-discrimination first, and that's where the emphasis should have been.

GONZALEZ: Kuhl was also asked about her ruling in a privacy case. In 1999, she dismissed a suit brought by a breast cancer survivor, Azucena Sanchez-Scott. Two years earlier, during a breast examination, Sanchez-Scott's doctor had brought another man into the room without disclosing that the man was a drug company salesman. Sanchez-Scott filed suit against the doctor, the drug salesman and his company, alleging they had violated her privacy rights. Sanchez-Scott says she was let down twice, first by her doctor and then by Judge Kuhl.

Ms. AZUCENA SANCHEZ-SCOTT: She denied my case because she said that it was my responsibility to take care of my privacy, that the doctor was not responsible for protecting my privacy and didn't give me a chance to go before a jury so that they can determine that.

GONZALEZ: Kuhl ruled that because Sanchez-Scott had not explicitly objected to the drug salesman's presence, then there was no reasonable expectation of privacy. The California Appeals Court unanimously overturned Kuhl's ruling and at her confirmation hearing, several senators, among them Illinois Democrat Richard Durbin, asked Kuhl to clarify her position.

Senator RICHARD DURBIN (Democrat, Illinois): Would you like to explain your concept of privacy as it applies to that fact situation?

Judge KUHL: Yes, Senator. First of all, I think the woman, I'm sure, was very upset with her doctor and had a right to be upset with her doctor for allowing this third person into the examining room. And they also...

Sen. DURBIN: It's a pretty outrageous situation, isn't it?

Judge KUHL: I think it is an outrageous situation.

Sen. DURBIN: But you didn't see it as an invasion of privacy.

Judge KUHL: Well, I was trying to interpret California law. I think that the Court of Appeals has clarified that law in this area. I'm happy that it's been clarified and I certainly would follow that in the future.

Sen. DURBIN: I would think common sense would have clarified that.

GONZALEZ: Kuhl's opponents say that when it comes to discrimination against women, labor relations, veterans rights or protections for whistle-blowers, she has a troubling record. Still, she is rated well qualified by the American Bar Association and has the support of the litigation section of the Los Angeles Bar Association. Among her defenders is Leo Terrell, a Democrat and civil rights attorney for the NAACP in Los Angeles. Terrell says Kuhl sided with his client in a job discrimination suit brought against the city.

Mr. LEO TERRELL (NAACP): I would not go out and support this judge if I didn't have personal experience with her. And my personal interaction with her, I can describe her in one word: fair.

GONZALEZ: The Senate Judiciary Committee voted to send Kuhl's nomination to the Senate floor with 10 Republicans supporting her and nine Democrats opposed. One Republican senator, Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania, said that he has some misgivings about Kuhl's record and would not commit to voting for her. No date has been set for the floor action. Richard Gonzalez, NPR News, San Francisco.

Confirm Judge Pickering
by Alberto R. Gonzales

The controversy over President Bush's nomination of Judge Charles Pickering to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, and the recent threats by some Senators to filibuster to prevent an up-or-down Senate vote, illustrate how far the judicial confirmation process has degenerated. Judge Pickering is well-qualified, he should receive an up-or-down Senate vote (as should all judicial nominees), and he should be confirmed.

In 1990, the Democrat-controlled Senate confirmed Judge Pickering unanimously to be a federal district judge, and he has since served with distinction. He previously worked in private practice and as a county prosecutor, city judge, and state legislator. He graduated first in his law school class. He has been extraordinarily active in community service activities. The American Bar Association rated him &well-qualified.<sup>8</sup> And he has very strong bipartisan support, including from Democrat Governor Musgrove, Democrat Attorney General Moore, Clinton Administration Assistant Attorney General Frank Hunger, and 18 past Presidents of the state bar, among many others.

While sometimes cloaked in other language, the opposition to Judge Pickering has boiled down to a single allegation: that he has demonstrated racial insensitivity during his life. That is a serious charge; indeed, no allegation with respect to a prospective judicial nominee is taken more seriously by President Bush. But the allegation does not square with Judge Pickering's record, both professional and personal. Judge Pickering has a long record of advancing racial harmony and progress in Mississippi. His efforts began in the 1960,s and have continued to the present. As Charles Evers, the brother of slain Mississippi civil rights leader Medgar Evers, stated, Judge Pickering &was standing up for blacks in Mississippi when no other white man would.<sup>8</sup> An account of these efforts demonstrates that the attacks against Judge Pickering have been ill-informed.

In the 1960,s, Judge Pickering was a county prosecutor in Mississippi who aggressively investigated and prosecuted the Ku Klux Klan. Charles Harrison, the first African-American police officer in the Laurel, Mississippi, police department, explained that &Charles Pickering worked with the FBI to investigate and prosecute violent KKK members. He put his, his wife,s, and his children,s lives at risk by doing this.<sup>8</sup> And as a direct result, Judge Pickering lost his re-election as county attorney. Chet Dillard, a Mississippi District Attorney at the time, stated: & Charles has always stood tall for justice when very few people would make a stand at all.<sup>8</sup>

In the 1960,s and 1970,s, Judge Pickering sent his children to majority-black public schools in Mississippi. He explained: &My young daughters ) the first year that they paired schools, which meant that they would be going to a majority-black school; it was a previously all-black school ) they went to the previously black school and that is where they got their education. We stayed with the public schools. We helped integrate the public schools.<sup>8</sup>

In 1971, Judge Pickering ran for state senate and received two-thirds of the African-American vote. Then in 1976, soon after he became chair of the state Republican Party, Judge Pickering hired the state party's first African-American staffer, James King. Mr. King has stated that Judge Pickering was a &mentor<sup>8</sup> and added: &I have known Judge Pickering for 25 years and can and do state without hesitation that he is a man of great morals and principles and I have found him to be completely void of racism in his approach to dealing with issues of race.<sup>8</sup>

In 1981, as a private lawyer, Judge Pickering defended an African-American man accused of robbing a white woman at knifepoint. The defendant's father stated that &Judge Pickering believed that my son was entitled to a good defense even though it was not a popular move for him politically.<sup>8</sup>

In 1983, while Judge Pickering was President of the Mississippi Baptists, the Southern Baptist Convention invited an African-American pastor to speak at the convention for the first time. And in the late 1980's, when an African-American was denied admission to a fraternity that Judge Pickering had belonged to, Judge Pickering discussed the matter with his son (Congressman Pickering), who flew down from Washington, addressed the chapter, and integrated it.

Judge Pickering's efforts have continued to this day. In 1988 and 1989, Judge Pickering chaired a bi-racial, bipartisan commission in Jones County that was formed to advance race relations. In 1998, Judge Pickering became a member of the University of Mississippi Institute for Racial Reconconciliation and later served on the board. And Judge Pickering authored a 1999 article entitled &Racial Harmony Requires Commitment.<sup>8</sup>

Based on this extensive record, numerous people ) black and white, Republican and Democrat ) have written letters of support that debunk the Washington-based criticism of Judge Pickering. The former president of the NAACP in Forrest County wrote that Judge Pickering has been a &major bridge builder<sup>8</sup> and has &developed platforms that have eased racial tensions.<sup>8</sup> Former Democrat Governor Winter wrote that Judge Pickering & has been one of this state's most dedicated and effective voices for breaking down racial barriers.<sup>8</sup> Johnny Dupree, the African-American Mayor of Hattiesburg, wrote that &Judge Pickering is a model citizen<sup>8</sup> and &has received much praise from local and state African American leaders who can attest to his commitment to being fair toward all citizens.<sup>8</sup> Judge Damon Keith, one of the country's leading appeals court judges and an African-American appointee of President Carter, wrote that he was & absolutely convinced that Judge Pickering's entire life has been dedicated to the principle spelled out in the Declaration of Independence that says all men are created equal.<sup>8</sup> Finally, Frank Hunger, who was Assistant Attorney General under President Clinton and is Al Gore's brother-in-law, wrote: &I have known Judge Pickering for nearly thirty years and have the utmost respect for him as a fair-minded judge who would never knowingly do anything improper or unethical. He is a person of great integrity, strong moral character, courage and compassion who treats all who come before him in a fair and dignified way. . . I think it most regrettable that his nomination has become controversial.<sup>8</sup>

Opponents have ignored this record and support and instead seized on two main issues to try to demonize Judge Pickering. First, Judge Pickering wrote a student paper in 1959 that analyzed Mississippi's law against inter-racial marriage (nearly two dozen states had such laws in force before the Supreme Court finally declared them unconstitutional in 1967). The article analyzes the law, but does not take a moral position on it, and critics have seized on the lack of criticism to attack Judge Pickering. The law was reprehensible and warrants explicit condemnation, as Judge Pickering himself has explained. The 1959 student paper does not negate Judge Pickering's extensive 40-year history of promoting racial harmony and progress for African-Americans in which he has worked to integrate his state, his church, his public schools, his fraternity, and his dinner table.

Second, some have pointed to Judge Pickering's actions in a cross-burning case in 1994, arguing that he was lenient in sentencing a convicted cross-burner. That allegation is a gross distortion. Four facts bear emphasis. First, there were three defendants involved, and the prosecutors inexplicably allowed two (including the ringleader) to plead guilty with no prison time. Second, Judge Pickering sentenced the third defendant to 27 months, imprisonment, which was more prison time than the Justice Department had offered this defendant in plea bargain negotiations; moreover, the Justice Department did not appeal the sentencing decision. Third, Judge Pickering expressed concern about the inequitable sentences imposed on the three defendants and the possible disparity that might arise if a mandatory minimum sentence applied (he has expressed similar concerns in other cases), all of which stemmed from the fact that the prosecutors had allowed the ringleader of the incident to plead guilty with no prison time. Fourth, and most important for present purposes, there is no doubt that Judge Pickering believed the crime reprehensible. At the sentencing hearings, Judge Pickering stated the following: "This is conduct that is reprehensible. It cannot, it will not be tolerated . . . . You are going to the penitentiary because of what you did. And it is an area that we have got to stamp out, that we have got to learn to live races among each other. And the type of conduct that you exhibited cannot and will not be tolerated. You did that which does hinder good race relations and was a despicable act. I would suggest to you that during the time that you are in the prison that you do some reading on race relations."

Judge Pickering is, as the American Bar Association concluded, well qualified. His record should be debated and analyzed fairly, he should receive an up-or-down Senate vote, and he should be confirmed.

Color Us Neutral
by Terry Eastland, for the Editors
06/09/2003, Volume 008, Issue 38

WHILE THE NATION AWAITS the Supreme Court's rulings in the Michigan affirmative action cases, the Bush administration has launched an effort designed to stimulate interest in race-neutral means of enhancing educational opportunities for racial and ethnic minorities. The project has proceeded quietly, with the Education Department taking the lead. One must hope that the Court's decisions in the Michigan cases won't cut short this important initiative.

It began in March when the Education Department's Office for Civil Rights issued "Race-Neutral Alternatives in Postsecondary Education: Innovative Approaches to Diversity." The publication provides information on the various race-neutral programs that are being implemented around the country, without endorsing any particular one, the point being to make them more widely known and to encourage educators to consider them seriously, even to come up with new ones of their own.

In late April, the Office for Civil Rights followed up with a two-day conference in Miami attended by representatives of more than 100 colleges and universities, including Brown, Penn, Notre Dame, Baylor, Virginia Tech, Brigham Young, and Southern Methodist. Since then the office has continued to collect and distribute information on race-neutral alternatives.

The result has been to broaden discussion of this subject beyond where the Justice Department left it in its Michigan briefs. At issue in those cases are the undergraduate and law schools' race-based admissions policies. In arguing that the Constitution forbids "race-based policies when race-neutral alternatives are available," the Justice Department gave as examples of the latter the policies used by Texas, California, and Florida that guarantee admission to the highest-ranked students in each high school graduating class--the top 10 percent in Texas, the top 4 percent in California, and the top 20 percent in Florida.

Those policies--and their results so far--are spelled out in "Race-Neutral Alternatives in Postsecondary Education," and representatives of the three states discussed them in Miami. But the Office for Civil Rights is also publicizing socioeconomic affirmative action, which Texas, California, and Florida are using on a limited basis. Under this approach, as Richard Kahlenberg, author of "The Remedy: Class, Race, and Affirmative Action," explained during the conference, preferences are extended to students who have performed well academically despite having faced various social and economic obstacles. In determining socioeconomic disadvantage, admissions officers take into account, among other factors, parents' education, family income, family structure, and school quality.

Both the class-rank and socioeconomic approaches operate at the point where students seek admission. Yet it is widely recognized that many students need help much earlier in their schooling if they are to have the skills, resources, and abilities actually to compete for places in good colleges--and then succeed.

For this reason, the Office for Civil Rights is also drawing attention to "developmental" approaches--such as "partnerships" in which universities work with nearby low-performing elementary and secondary schools. The University of California, the University of Pennsylvania, the University of Vermont, and the University of Florida have partnerships with such schools. The partnerships take various forms, depending on the need. In some cases, the universities tutor and mentor students, and advise them about the courses they need to take to prepare for college. In other cases, they help schools devise curricula, train teachers, or even provide classroom instruction.

Another developmental approach involves the expansion of Advanced Placement courses. As "Race-Neutral Alternatives" points out, taking AP courses helps high school students in at least three ways: They may learn more because they are in more demanding courses; they may get higher GPAs as a result of taking AP courses, which sometimes carry extra points; and they may earn college credits. Unfortunately, many inner-city and rural high schools, if they offer AP courses at all, offer fewer than other high schools do. Texas and Florida have undertaken to change that, and the results so far are impressive. In Texas, student participation in AP courses has climbed by 57 percent since 1999, with most of the increase coming from schools that had never before offered such courses. And in Florida, the number of students in low-performing schools who are taking AP courses has increased from 4,000 to 7,000 in the past two years.

It's hard not to notice that most of the race-neutral alternatives the Department of Education is publicizing are found in Texas, California, and Florida. There is a reason for that: Those states were forced to abandon racial preferences--which meant, if they were to pursue diversity, they had to do so by race-neutral means. A court (the federal appeals court for the 5th Circuit) told Texas to quit using racial preferences. A majority of the people in California (voting for Proposition 209) told California to use them no more. And a savvy governor (Jeb Bush) employed an executive order to tell Florida that the era of racial preferences was over.

Education officials clearly believe that race-neutral approaches will eventually yield racial and ethnic diversity--meaning an integrated student body. The department doesn't contend, however, that this integration must be defined numerically. The Office for Civil Rights thus parts company with Michigan and other schools using race-based policies that require a "critical mass" of underrepresented students in a class if the educational benefits of diversity are to be secured. For Michigan, the chief educational benefit is supposed to be a transformation of the attitudes of all students, especially those in the majority. "Race-Neutral Alternatives" doesn't critique that idea of diversity--which is vigorously disputed in the Michigan litigation. Both Justice and Education have shied away from the issue, no doubt because President Bush has at times seemed to support diversity as a tool of social engineering. So a still broader conversation on diversity has been left for others to join. Soon enough, we'll know whether the Supreme Court has engaged it.

"Race-Neutral Alternatives" correctly notes that "any race-neutral program is unlikely to produce racial diversity with the precision that using race will"--meaning the precision achieved by a critical-mass quota. And some race-neutral alternatives have drawn criticism on grounds that they aren't really race-neutral. Class-rank and percentage plans in particular are said to be constitutionally dubious. They use race-neutral criteria, goes the argument, yet those criteria were chosen in order to favor certain groups--and disfavor others. But wherever one comes down on that issue, the class-rank plans at least have the merit of not treating individuals differently on account of their race.

The conversation the Education Department has begun is worth having precisely because it is past time that colleges and universities stopped treating applicants in a racially discriminatory manner. "We've spent a lot of time defining the present [preferential] system," said Gerald Reynolds, the assistant secretary for civil rights, during the Miami conference. "Why can't we spend time on this?" The nation will be able to spend a lot more time on race-neutral alternatives if the Court renders--as it should--an unambiguous judgment against racial preferences.

As you know, I currently conduct vetting for Presidential Schedule items (greeters and venues) for the Scheduling Office. Now that we are moving quickly into the Presidential election campaign, I wanted to get some guidance from your office on what items we are allowed to vet for campaign events and which ones we are prohibited from doing.

Since the scheduling office serves the President wherever he goes, are we allowed to vet the following items using government resources:

- 1) Presidential Campaign Sites

Thanks,

- Andrew Ciafardini

PS - On a separate note, James Waters will be replacing me on around the week of June 13 and assuming my current responsibilities.

Josefiak will approve at the Campaign. Sending this to you to make sure there are no problems from Counsel and Mrs. Bush's office.

Please respond. Regrettably, this is time sensitive so a quick response would be greatly appreciated.

Thanks

One additional point: It should be printed in the program in the same size font as the rest of the text. If they have a draft, we would like to see it before they go to final. Thanks.

The National Park Service does not want to accept the yoyos because they are going to be given away. (Since NPS is a cosponsor of the Egg Roll they have a little more latitude in accepting gifts for that event.) They are leery of jeopardizing their status that allows them to accept various items and services "for the good go the national parks."

Is there some easy way for the RNC to accept the donation and then give to us? We don't want to make a big issue out of this. In fairness though, I need to let the yoyo people know quickly if we need to cancel.

thanks

Yes. The National Park Service has the legal authority to accept gifts to the White House in certain circumstances. From what you've told me I think this would qualify, but I would suggest that you contact Ann Bowman Smith, the White House liaison for the National Park Service. She can check with her legal advisors there and confirm that it is OK. Assuming it is, they can then advise on the paperwork necessary.

Hope that helps.

Jennifer,

We are planning the annual picnic for members of congress and their families to be held on June 18. For past picnics we have had plastic cups printed to give to each guest. I believe that the RNC has covered this expense.

For this year we would like to change to giving guests a yoyo, yes, I said yoyo. We have a company interested in donating them. This is the same company that donated them to the Easter Egg Roll for the past 2 years.

Could you give me some guidance on how to go about accepting these legally?

We should just tell them that they can contact the Bush-Cheney campaign or the RNC and that they can get in contact with those entities through the Internet or by calling telephone information. I would not routinely give out specific numbers as that may look overly suggestive as this point.

We should find out whether the RNC really paid for the plastic cups (if not the food) given out at past picnics, as suggested below, and if so under what authority they were accepted.

Brett - is the picnic for all members of Congress, or just Republicans?
If all, it doesn't make sense that RNC was the cup donor.

Tussle likely in filling judgeship
Kohl, Feingold to fight for use of commission
By CRAIG GILBERT
cgilbert@journalsentinel.com
Last Updated: June 3, 2003
Washington - The Bush White House and Wisconsin's two Democratic senators appear headed for a clash over how to fill a key vacancy on the federal appeals bench.
In interviews Tuesday, Sens. Herb Kohl and Russ Feingold both said they would fight to ensure the use of a bipartisan commission in Wisconsin to choose finalists for an expected vacancy on the 7th Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals in Chicago.
The White House has gone along with the commission process for federal trial judges.
But it says it wants more leeway in the case of an appellate judge and would not rely on the recommendations of a commission.
"Then we have a battle," said Kohl Tuesday. "Who knows where it will go. We'll fight the fight."
Feingold made similar comments, saying, "If the White House wants to tangle on whether or not we should have a commission, I think this is something Sen. Kohl and I will stand up for."
Both senators sit on the Judiciary Committee, which approves nominees to the federal bench. Along with the deference usually accorded home-state senators, that puts the two Democrats in a position to make confirmation difficult for a Wisconsin judicial nominee whom they oppose.
The vacancy will occur when 81-year-old Judge John L. Coffey of Whitefish Bay assumes senior status and a reduced workload. Coffey was appointed by President Reagan in 1982.
Commissions have been used in the state for years to generate short lists of candidates for presidents to choose from when nominating federal judges and prosecutors. They exist not by statute but by agreement of the political actors involved.
But the Bush White House is taking the position that an appellate seat is different.
The fiercest nomination battles between the Republican White House and Senate Democrats have been over the appellate courts, which do far more to shape law in the country than trial judges.
White House spokesman Scott Stanzel said Tuesday that commissions have not been used anywhere else in the country to generate finalists for the appellate courts since Bush has been president.
"The president looks forward to choosing a highly qualified candidate with experience and integrity," Stanzel said.
The last appellate nominee from Wisconsin, Terence Evans in 1995, went through the commission process. Others before him, including Coffey, did not.

Kohl said the Democratic White House of Bill Clinton resisted the use of a commission before the Evans nomination was made, and "we had to fight it through with him."

Past commissions have been made up of appointees from the bar association and lawmakers in both parties, providing a bipartisan mechanism for recommendations.

But in today's landscape, a commission's political significance is that it gives two Democratic U.S. senators some say in winnowing the field of candidates under a Republican president.

"I think we should resist the White House on this. They are treading on a very solid Wisconsin tradition," Feingold said.

Asked whether he would oppose any nominee who does not go through the commission process, Feingold said, "I'm not even going to think about it. I am going to assume cooler heads will prevail."

But Feingold said that in concert with Kohl, "I'll take whatever steps are necessary to preserve the commission."

Kohl said he didn't think the president would be giving up much control over the process by using a commission.

"All he has to do is put his person through the commission, and there's probably 98 percent chance this person would come through the commission," Kohl said. "I think you can work it out in a way that pretty much gets him what he wants, but we still preserve the idea of a commission."

Also expected to have input into the nomination is the state's senior Republican congressman, House Judiciary Chairman Jim Sensenbrenner of Menomonee Falls.

In an interview Tuesday, Sensenbrenner said how the White House selects a nominee is up to the White House.

"I'd hope the senators would look at the nominee rather than the process," Sensenbrenner said.

Sensenbrenner said his "one fear" if there's a deadlock over the vacancy is that the White House might end up going outside the state to fill the position. Coffey's seat on the federal court is Wisconsin's by tradition, not by statute.

Brett,

As of June 16, I will be handling the vetting for the President's events -- taking Andrew Ciafardini's job. He and I have been asked to go over the RNC this Friday, June 6 to give the Bush-Cheney campaign a Vetting Seminar. Andrew will lead the meeting, and I'd like to attend just so I'm in the loop with their team.

Before we finalize the meeting we wanted to make sure there's no issue with me attending the meeting since I'm on the OMB payroll till June 15.

Thanks.

Dear Brett,

Just a brief note of thanks for taking the time to give a thorough reading to the two sections from our article that I sent you and to make the corrections to the quotes attributed to our interview. As it turns out, the timing for our connecting was fine. I have been in touch with David Richert, the Editor of Judicature, and he is presently doing the necessary editing of our piece. So our window of opportunity for making these changes was still open and I have FAXed them to him.

Thanks, again, for all of your assistance in our work on this piece. I'll look forward to the prospect of doing this again when we work on the "end of term" piece in about a year and a half.

All best wishes.

Also, you should know that I am changing jobs at DOJ. As of 6/16 I will be the Chief Assistant US Attorney in the Eastern District of New York.

When there is motorcade travel on behalf of the campaign, the campaign will reimburse the costs of equivalent large rental vehicles. This is a variation on a question you asked the other day, so I wanted to make sure this was clear. We are preparing the basic travel cost/allocation memo that will cover such travel-cost issues.

The Washington Times

A broken tradition
By John Cornyn
THE WASHINGTON TIMES
Published June 5, 2003

The current struggle to establish democracy in Iraq reminds us that no society can be either just or prosperous without the rule of law. New and old nations alike need independent and impartial courts as the foundation of government, and civilized nations must vigilantly maintain, not undermine, these institutions.

Today, the Senate Rules Committee will discuss whether the current filibusters of judicial nominations pose a threat to our own independent judiciary. I welcome today's discussion because I believe we need reform: Indeed, senators from both sides of the aisle agree that our process for confirming judges is broken and needs to be fixed.

The American people need the courts to be fully staffed. Our judicial selection process should focus simply on identifying and confirming well-qualified jurists committed to enforcing the law, not their will or agenda.

For too long, this process has been caught in a downward spiral of politics and delay. During the administrations of former Presidents Bush and Clinton, for example, too many appeals court nominees were never voted on at all.

The problem is even worse today.

For months, a bipartisan Senate majority has tried to hold up-or-down votes on a number of judicial nominees. A partisan minority of senators, however, is blocking the Senate from holding those votes. As one leader of the current filibusters has said, "there is not a number [of hours] in the universe that would be sufficient" for debate on certain nominees. The result: vacant judgeships and empty courtrooms, compelling the U.S. Judicial Conference to declare "judicial emergencies" across the country. People seeking redress for their injuries wait years for their cases to be tried and appealed, while judicial nominees languish in the Senate waiting for an up-or-down vote. The broken confirmation process translates into denial of access to justice in our nation's most important courts.

The use of filibusters ? not to ensure adequate debate, but to block a Senate majority from confirming judges ? is unprecedented and wrong. This indefinite, needless and wasteful delay distracts the Senate from other important business. And it leaves would-be judges in limbo, along with thousands of litigants. President Bush has rightly called the situation "a disgrace."

It doesn't have to be this way. As all 10 freshman senators detailed in a bipartisan letter to Senate leadership on April 30, it is time for a fresh start. The ill will of the past should not dictate the terms and direction of the future. And 12 senators have proposed a bipartisan reform to guarantee full debate on nominees, while ensuring the ability of a Senate majority to hold up-or-down votes. This proposal deserves wide support.

More than 175 newspaper editorials representing the home states of 70 senators condemn the current filibusters of judicial nominees. Law professor and former Clinton adviser Michael Gerhardt has condemned supermajority requirements for confirming nominees, saying they "would be more likely to frustrate rather than facilitate the making of meritorious appointments." And last month, legal scholars told the Senate Constitution Subcommittee that filibusters of judicial nominations are uniquely offensive to our nation's constitutional design.

Proposals like the one being debated today in the Rules Committee have been endorsed by congressional experts from think tanks as diverse as the American Enterprise Institute, Brookings and Cato. An even more aggressive reform proposal in 1995 was endorsed by 19 Senate Democrats, as well as the New York Times, which editorialized that, "now is the perfect moment ... to get rid of an archaic rule that frustrates democracy and serves no useful purpose."

For nearly its first two decades, a Senate majority had the explicit power under the rules to call for votes. And since that time, senators have consistently obeyed an unwritten rule not to block the confirmation of judicial nominees by filibuster.

As renowned former Senate parliamentarian Floyd Riddick once said, senators are expected to "restrain themselves" and "not abuse the privilege" of debate. Out of respect for an independent judiciary, senators have historically and consistently exercised such restraint. But this Senate tradition has now been broken. The Rules Committee and the Senate must respond. Reforming filibusters in the judicial nominations context would restore both majority rule and Senate tradition.

There is precedent for such action: The Senate has previously considered at least 30 proposals to eliminate filibusters altogether. In fact, there are dozens of laws on the books that prevent a minority of senators from delaying action in certain areas ? from the Budget Act of 1974 to the War Powers Resolution, and covering such diverse subjects as international trade, arms control, environmental law, employee retirement protection and nuclear waste. Judicial confirmations should likewise be immunized from filibuster abuse.

For far too long, our judicial selection process has been tainted by coarse politics and hampered by wasteful delay. The Senate needs a fresh start.

Sen. John Cornyn is chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on the Constitution. He served previously on the Supreme Court of Texas and as the state's attorney general.

Miami New Times (Florida)

May 15, 2003 Thursday

SECTION: Bestof/City Life

LENGTH: 131 words

HEADLINE: BEST LOCAL GIRL MADE GOOD

Cecilia Altonaga

BODY:

On May 6, 2003, by a unanimous vote of the U.S. Senate, Altonaga became the nation's first female Cuban-American federal judge. President George W. Bush personally nominated her, sidestepping a list of South Florida candidates forwarded by the state's two senators, Bill Nelson and Bob Graham. The move provoked cries of foul. It's clear Bush wanted a Cuban female in the position, and in Altonaga he found a winner. The Yale-educated Coral Gables resident was a career prosecutor with the Miami-Dade State Attorney's Office until she became a county court judge in 1996 and then circuit court judge three years later. Even Nelson and Graham, two Democrats, conceded the point of her qualifications and ended up backing the president's pick.

Subject: Gov. Pataki

The Governor's counsel, Richard Platkin, called to say that the Governor is very unhappy with the proposal from Sen. Schumer yesterday - he & the counsel think it compares unfavorably with the "deal" they had tried to work out earlier (essentially for the reasons in my email last night). They said that if we intend to go forward the Governor would want to speak with the Judge "and with the President" about his concerns.

Matt and I are going to talk further this afternoon about this.

You might want to forward this to your staff. :)

Note: The change in withholding is prospective, even though the rates were cut retroactive to January 1st of 2003. This means that, in addition to a bigger paycheck beginning on 6/20, you should also expect to see a slightly bigger-than-expected rebate next year when you file your taxes, accounting for the amount that has now been overwithheld for the first five months of this year.

May be old news to you but picked up yesterday that NARAL is planning a national buy in june.

Ads were shown to dem leadership on hill last week. Focus is on prospect of justice retiring. Starts with 10seconds on "turning back the clock" and " we're only one judge away from taking away your freedom of choice", something in between and then call to action. Supposedly, ads are eye catching and pretty effective. z

Viewing the Bench
Constitutional principle for conservatives.
By Michael S. Greve

espite a few narrow victories, the administration is faring poorly in the war of attrition over its judicial nominees. GOP protests about Democratic obstructionism and a growing number of filibusters have manifestly failed to resonate beyond the Beltway. However legitimate, procedural complaints are no substitute for a substantive theme or agenda that would generate public support for the administration's nominees.

ÿ

The Democrats, of course, have a theme. While the contours of each battle depend on the individual nominee's vulnerabilities (as defined by Ralph Neas), the Democrats' consistent refrain is "conservative judicial activism" * as evidenced by the Rehnquist Court's perceived contempt for precedent and the democratic process. Repeated often enough, unanswered charges will eventually take their toll * especially when, as here, they have a veneer of plausibility. At some point, the GOP must pick and win a nomination fight over substance, not merely procedure. To that end, Republicans must recognize, and emphasize, that judicial "activism" is a constitutional question, not a matter of judicial style.

A judicial debate on constitutional terrain * where the GOP has not trod in decades * will severely tax the party's political acumen and courage. But Republicans have no other choice.

WHOSE "ACTIVISM"?

Liberals have come a long way, from rallying for a "living Constitution" to denouncing judicial activism. Their about-face began at the end of the Clinton era, in response to the Rehnquist Court's federalism decisions. In May 2000, for example, the Court held that a portion of the federal Violence Against Women Act exceeded the powers of Congress. "Who do these people think they are?" Sen. Joseph Biden, the act's chief sponsor, foamed at the justices.

The Democratic party, liberal advocacy groups, and their legions of supporters in academia and in the media have since warmed to the theme. The Senate Judiciary Committee has held hearings on what then-chairman Patrick Leahy described as the Rehnquist Court's "judicial activism of the most dangerous, anti-democratic kind." Dire warnings of a return to an "antebellum jurisprudence" and to the Articles of Confederation have been issued by Laurence Tribe, Cass Sunstein, Jeffrey Rosen, and Linda Greenhouse, among others.

The liberals' conversion gained momentum after the 2000 presidential election. Bush v. Gore gave Democrats a taste of the bitter sense of disenfranchisement previously reserved for right-to-lifers and other "red state" constituencies. A Bush presidency also meant that the Supreme Court and the federal appellate courts would become more conservative; accordingly, liberals now see it as their first priority to preserve the legacy of the Brennan era, through adherence to precedent. Roe v. Wade is the central precedent, but far from the only one.

The most meaningful definition of judicial activism is "a departure from the text, structure, and logic of the Constitution." By that standard, the liberal posture * which couples hysterical denunciations of the Rehnquist Court's federalism with a continued insistence on Roe v. Wade as a judicial litmus test * is fundamentally incoherent. In a sense, liberals no longer know whose side they're on. Alas, that is also true of conservatives * except more so.

The GOP's predominant response has been indignation at the Democrats' shameless theft of an anti-activist slogan that had served Republicans (albeit not very well) for over a generation. Paired with that indignation has been the steadfast incantation of a "judicial restraint" formula that long ago stopped being useful. President Bush, for example, has professed his intent to nominate "strict constructionists" * and has held out Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas as model jurists. That, they are. But they are not strict constructionists. (Scalia has publicly disavowed the label.)

The continued currency of "judicial restraint" slogans in GOP circles reflects a dismaying lack of intellectual mobility. In fairness, though, a more usable theme is not easy to come by. A principal reason is the Rehnquist Court.

THE REHNQUIST LEGACY

Activist Supreme Courts * the Marshall Court, the Lochner Court, and the Warren-Brennan Court * have typically enacted the agenda of identifiable political constituencies and, usually, of a political party. The politics have varied: The Lochner Court curtailed the Democratic party's program, while the Brennan Court promoted it. But the identification was close in each case, which gave the "activism" charges of those eras their plausibility.

More important, the convergence of judicial posture and partisan interest gave the Court's political supporters a potent reason to paint "activism" charges as an attack on the judiciary's institutional independence. The Rehnquist Court, in contrast, has given conservative constituencies little reason to take that tack.

The Court has worked only two constitutional shifts. First, it has gradually moved from a "no government aid to religion" interpretation of the Establishment Clause to the view that the Constitution commands government neutrality among religions, and between religion and non-religion. Second, the Rehnquist Court has resurrected federalism as a judicially enforceable constitutional principle. While both innovations are "conservative" in the sense of being the work of moderate-to-conservative justices, their actual political effects are ambiguous.

The religious-neutrality baseline has permitted the inclusion of religious parents and institutions in government-sponsored school-choice programs * a high-ranking item on the conservative agenda. But the Rehnquist Court has adhered to the neutrality baseline even when the outcome was unfavorable to conservative and religious constituencies, notably by invalidating the federal Religious Freedom Restoration Act. Similarly, the Supreme Court's federalism does not always and immediately favor conservative constituencies (certainly not big business, which detests federalism). Its principal beneficiaries have been state and local governments, which are bipartisan; and criminal defendants * who make up a constituency, but not a conservative one. Conversely, judicially enforced federalism guarantees are often useful for liberal constituencies. For example, the Court's decisions probably mean that the national government may not criminalize the mere possession of marijuana.

So the Rehnquist Court has done little to mobilize conservative constituencies for a defense of its institutional prerogatives. It has in fact done quite a bit to dispirit them, through its lamentable adherence to * and occasional extension of * Brennan-era precedents. The principal theme of those precedents is the assertion of invented constitutional rights * in short, judicial imperialism. So long as those decisions remain on the books, conservatives cannot mount a full-throated defense of the Rehnquist Court. In fact, they may gain more from discrediting the Court than from defending it.

CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT

What, then, does the GOP think of the Rehnquist Court, and what does it expect of its judicial nominees? The most compelling response is that the GOP stands for, and expects of its nominees, a commitment to democratic, decentralized government * and that judicial "activism" in pursuit of that constitutional arrangement is no vice. The Democrats stand for unlimited national power. The pursuit of that ideology * by judges or, for that matter, by legislators * is a vice. This stance would refocus attention on constitutional substance, and would be broadly consistent with the GOP's long-term interests and agenda. It would also yield an effective response to the liberal-activism charge, and make possible an accurate assessment of the Rehnquist Court's record.

The central point of the liberals' charges of activism is the Rehnquist Court's challenge to the central institution par excellence: Congress. In invalidating congressional enactments on federalism grounds, liberals say, the Rehnquist Court has launched an unprecedented assault on democratic government. The critics charge that even the Warren Court did not invalidate federal statutes with such regularity. The liberal account of the Warren Court is technically accurate, but misleading (that Court specialized in trampling on the states). The account of the Rehnquist Court is almost entirely false.

During Chief Justice Rehnquist's tenure, the Supreme Court has issued 36 decisions holding portions of federal statutes to be unconstitutional. Only eleven of those cases implicate federalism, compared to 15 First Amendment decisions. If that count supports an activism debate about the Court's federalism, it just as easily supports a debate about a judicial "First Amendment rampage."

On closer inspection, the Rehnquist Court has tended to aim its federalism fire at symbolic federal enactments, which resemble congressional press releases more than serious operational statutes * the Gun-Free School Zones Act, for example, or the Violence Against Women Act. First Amendment decisions, by contrast, have affected statutes of intense interest to regulated industries (such as the telecom sector) and to the general public. Similarly, most of the Rehnquist Court's states' rights decisions do not "strike down" anything at all, but merely bar private plaintiffs from enforcing federal statutes by suing for money. Those plaintiffs, as well as the federal government itself, can still enforce those same statutes by suing for injunctions.

Further, federalism decisions are far less anti-democratic than individual-rights decisions. Judicial decisions that expand individual constitutional rights terminate democratic debate and decision-making at all levels of government. Federalism decisions hold at most that the national government may not pursue a particular objective; states are still free to do so. In fact, limitations on national power invite public debate and politicking in the states, and state-level decisions often reflect varying popular sentiments and preferences more accurately than a uniform national rule. In these important respects, constitutional limitations on congressional power promote democratic government. The Rehnquist Court has issued its fair share of activist decisions. But they are precisely not federalism decisions. For what it's worth, they are also not conservative decisions. Rather, they are ruthlessly centralizing precedents that, through expanding judicial interpretations of individual rights, drastically curtail state and local autonomy. The Rehnquist Court has invalidated state laws in well over 70 cases. While most of those decisions are probably right, the Court's lapses into extra-constitutional imperialism are sufficiently common to warrant a serious debate about judicial activism. From Roe v. Wade * in itself more profoundly anti-democratic than the Rehnquist Court's entire federalism corpus * that debate might move on to Planned Parenthood v. Casey and Stenberg v. Carhart, the two decisions that affirmed Roe. It might also consider Romer v. Evans * which, in invalidating a Colorado referendum barring local gay-rights ordinances, very nearly held that democracy is unconstitutional. The liberal converts to "judicial restraint" insist on adherence to precedent. Anything else, they say, is "activism." But the shoe is on the other foot. A decision that elevates judicial power over republican government without a constitutional warrant is plainly activist. A decision to reverse that precedent is the opposite. Such a reversal might be termed "activist" in the trivial sense that it involves a change in the status quo. But the Supreme Court must on appropriate occasions overrule its own precedents. A consistent failure to do so would signal that the Supreme Court considered its own edicts, rather than the Constitution itself, to be the supreme law of the land.

LET PRYOR BE PRYOR

In response to the Democrats' "activism" drumbeat, the administration has insisted on its nominees' declared willingness to follow Supreme Court precedent. Even the purveyors of that defense surely understand, though, that appellate judges enjoy enormous latitude and, in virtually all cases, operate as final decision-makers. (The Supreme Court operates as an absentee landlord.) Besides, what is a future Supreme Court nominee to say along these lines * that (as John Ashcroft conceded while fighting for his appointment as attorney general) Roe is "settled law"? Already, the retreat to the familiar terrain of judicial restraint and precedent is failing even for appellate nominees * the filibustered Priscilla Owen, for example, who earned her "activist" reputation through a few of her opinions as a justice on the Texas Supreme Court. It will prove wholly incongruous in the case of Alabama attorney general Bill Pryor, nominated for a seat on the Eleventh Circuit. In the words of liberal activist Nan Aron, Pryor has done "something to offend virtually every constituency in the country," by which she means every liberal interest group (including trial lawyers). In the face of a coming assault that will make the Estrada, Pickering, or Owen nominations look like child's play, the administration appears to have muzzled Bill Pryor * and has said not much more on his behalf than that he will "apply the law."

That, he will * as would hundreds of less distinguished (and controversial) jurists. But the reason for the nomination, and the focal point of the liberals' wrath, is Pryor's role as a leading advocate for federalism and limited national government. Though liberals have unleashed the usual torrent of scurrilous allegations against Pryor, Ralph Neas's shrill protest that Pryor is an "aggressive advocate" for enumerated powers is not a calumny. It is a fact. As a Supreme Court advocate, attorney general, law-review author, and occasional columnist, Bill Pryor has done more than anyone to propagate and promote a federalist renewal. He cannot and will not run from his record. What Pryor (who is an exceptionally persuasive and telegenic advocate) can do is to explain and defend his constitutional vision. Let him do so, and let * nay, make * Ralph Neas and Nan Aron defend unlimited, centralized government.

PRINCIPLES AND PRAGMATISM

The Democrats' true understanding of "activism" is a departure from judicially enshrined liberal shibboleths. That obvious observation, though, provides no useable platform for Republicans: Thanks partly to its past preoccupation with judicial "restraint" and style, the GOP lacks the capacity to engage in any direct debate about constitutional hot-button issues. The debate surrounding the administration's position in the Michigan affirmative-action cases showed, and whatever decision is reached in those cases this coming June will show again, that not one Republican official of national stature can speak confidently about the subject. Nor can the party speak confidently and sensibly about "gay rights." (The expectation that the issue will play poorly for the GOP is a plausible reason for the four liberal justices' appalling and otherwise inexplicable decision to yank a trumped-up sodomy case from Texas onto this year's Supreme Court docket.) And on it goes.

Perhaps, though, the GOP can still pick a fight over democratic self-government, as against the Democrats' wrongheaded centralization of power. That principle operates at one remove from the social issues that paralyze the party's leaders. It is also a substantive and attractive constitutional principle. The GOP desperately needs such a principle * for the most practical, political reasons.

AT LAW

Justice Served

Nabbing illegal aliens isn't a violation of civil rights.

BY BRADFORD A. BERENSON AND RICHARD KLINGLER

Monday, June 9, 2003 12:01 a.m.

Justice Department Inspector General Glenn Fine released a 198-page report last week criticizing the department's handling of the post-Sept. 11 terrorism detainees. Media and interest-group reaction was swift and gleeful, treating the report as confirmation that the administration has trampled civil rights in the war on terrorism. Various articles featured claims by Anthony Romero, executive director of the ACLU, that the report showed that "the war on terror quickly became a war on immigrants." In fact, Mr. Fine's report did nothing of the sort. It examined the treatment of 762 indisputably illegal aliens, most of whom were later deported. His most pointed concerns arose from the treatment of 84 detainees at the Metropolitan Detention Center in Brooklyn, all of whom the FBI had classified as among the most high-risk terrorism-related detainees.

To be sure, the report documents a number of problems and areas in which the federal government's actions could have been made more fair or efficient. But the full report shows consistent efforts to meet the demands of security and civil liberties in the most trying circumstances.

Much of the discussion is actually quite mundane. The report describes bureaucratic problems and inefficiencies in carrying out a variety of complex tasks relating to the detainees, rather than wholesale or intentional violations of legal rights. More importantly, nowhere does the report claim that the Department of Justice violated the law--or that the detainees did not. It does not dispute that the department's detention policies were lawful or that all of the detainees were illegal aliens who had no right to be here at all.

If the problems identified in the inspector general's report are the worst things that we as a nation did in the immediate aftermath of the slaughter of thousands of American civilians in an epochal terrorist attack, we have done very well indeed.

The first of the three most salient criticisms leveled by the report relate to the Justice Department's policy of holding without bond all individuals detained as part of the post-Sept. 11 investigation until the FBI cleared them of connections to terrorism. Here, of course, Mr. Fine is forced to acknowledge that he "do[es] not criticize the decision to require FBI clearance of aliens to ensure that they had no connection to the September 11 attacks or terrorism in general." Instead, the gist of the report's complaint on this score is "that the FBI's clearance process was understaffed and not accorded sufficient priority."

But which special agents exactly would the inspector general have taken off of the active investigation of the Sept. 11 attacks to put on the task of trying to clear the names of those terrorism suspects that had already been removed from the streets? And which of the FBI's priorities in the immediate aftermath does Mr. Fine believe was too high?

The report itself notes that "within a week of the attacks, the FBI had assigned more than 7,000 employees to the task of tracking down anyone who had aided the terrorists and attempting to prevent additional attacks." Critical field offices were also preoccupied with investigating the anthrax attacks, the murder of Wall Street Journal reporter Daniel Pearl in Pakistan, searching for evidence in the debris of the World Trade Center and helping with security at the Winter Olympics. Keeping agents working on these matters rather than detainee clearance hardly seems unreasonable, even if that meant it took an average of 80 days to clear detainees rather than the "few weeks" some officials had initially expected.

In another section, the inspector general focuses on the department's delays in meeting its own objectives for notifying detainees of charges against them and deporting them. The stated notification goal of 72 hours, however, was not any sort of legal requirement. And yet, despite disruptions and difficult conditions, the INS still met its goal in 59% of cases and provided notice in most of the remainder shortly thereafter. As for delays in removal, the report's main criticism is that officials did not seek legal clarification soon enough--although when they did, the ruling supported their decision.

The inspector general's third main criticism, while serious, is not as sensational as it sounds. The report found "physical and verbal abuse" directed at the 84 detainees at the MDC in Brooklyn, but not at the hundreds of others at Passaic. While any abuse is wrong, the facts as outlined in the report do not support the more overheated criticisms. Officers subjected the MDC detainees, all of whom had been classified as high-risk by the FBI, to high security lock-downs, including limited time outside their cells. Officers moved detainees in shackles, and the most serious allegations concerned handcuffs that were too tight and officers who shoved detainees against walls upon intake or movement of prisoners. Some officers also threatened detainees and called them names, including racial epithets. But the U.S. Attorney's Office investigated the allegations and found that evidence did not support criminal charges. In other words, particular corrections officers acted inappropriately in certain cases against a small group of detainees in one facility, but no serious injuries were substantiated and no broad government policy was implicated.

In context, it is remarkable that the allegations were not more extreme. In the immediate aftermath of Sept. 11, hardened corrections officers were overseeing illegal aliens suspected of being terrorists, in a facility within a subway's ride of the remnants of the World Trade Center. Comparing the report to how critics have characterized the detentions confirms that a vocal minority suffers from a loss of perspective. Critics and their media amplifiers have raised dramatic alarms about military tribunals, confinement of material witnesses, and other alleged misdeeds. In each case, the government's actions have proved to have a sound basis in law and a limited scope. Now, with this widely touted report, another cause celebre has evaporated.

Of course we all want the administration of justice to be as close to perfect as possible, and self-evaluation and self-criticism are valuable. But exaggerated claims and unbalanced fear-mongering have consequences. Crying wolf deprives critics of moral authority that would be valuable when a true injustice arises. Bureaucracies tend to inertia and are naturally cowed by public criticism, well-founded or not. They err on the side of delicacy rather than robustness. Given the threats at hand, robustness has its virtues.

Brett-

OPA is asking if it is okay to give out the Bush Cheney '04 campaign and fax #'s. Also, should they stay away from using it around the office on directories and other things of that sort.

Ganter, will you check with Brett on two things for me:

- 1) Is it legal for us to have the Bush Cheney '04 main campaign number on our office phone list, and
- 2) is it legal for us to give out that number and their fax number?

Thank you.

MEMORANDUM FOR WHITE HOUSE OFFICE STAFF
OFFICE OF POLICY DEVELOPMENT STAFF
NATIONAL SECURITY COUNCIL STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES, COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

Please read this entire memorandum carefully. It deals with legal obligations that apply to you.

The National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States ("Commission") was established in the legislative branch, principally to inquire into, and report to the President and Congress on, the terrorists attacks of September 11, 2001 and the extent of U.S. preparedness for and immediate response to the attacks (Public Law 107-306, November 27, 2002). The Executive Office of the President (EOP) is cooperating with the Commission effort, consistent with the policy set forth in the memorandum of March 19, 2003 from the President's Chief of Staff.

The Commission has submitted "EOP Document Request No. 2" (attached) seeking executive materials from the EOP. The first category of materials sought by "EOP Document Request No. 2" will be the subject of a separate memorandum. The remaining categories are:

2. The President's Daily Diary for September 11, 2001, and logs from the White House Situation Room, the Presidential Emergency Operations Center (PEOC), and the White House Military Office for September 11, 2001.
3. Contemporaneous notes of individuals present in the PEOC or accompanying the President on September 11, 2001, including notes of White House officials other than the President.
4. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by White House staff of meetings at the principals or deputies level, including the Domestic Consequences Principals Committee, from September 11 through September 20, 2001 that concerned domestic policy responses to the terrorist attacks upon the United States.
5. Information sufficient to describe the activation and implementation of continuity of operations and emergency response plans and measures for the White House complex on September 11, 2001.

You must complete the following steps expeditiously:

1. Search for all materials you possess or control that fall within any of the categories set forth above. Your search for materials must be reasonable, diligent, and conducted in good faith, and must include any materials which may previously have been sent to the Office of Records Management. Retrieve all materials that fall within any of the categories set forth above and photocopy them.
2. Complete the attached certification, attach any photocopies produced under Step 1, and submit the certification and photocopies to Elizabeth Farrell 456-5942, EEOB Room 154, as early as possible but in all events not later than the close of business on Monday, June 16, 2003. NSC staff should submit their signed certification, along with any photocopies produced under Step 1, to William Leary, in the NSC Records Directorate, EEOP Room 392, 456-9201, as early as possible but in all events not later than the close of business on Monday, June 16, 2003.

Also, please be aware that we anticipate additional Commission requests for information concerning the extent of U.S. preparedness for and immediate response to the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001. It is important that you and your staff preserve all records which may potentially be responsive to this or a future request.

Please call Jennifer Newstead, Associate White House Counsel, at 456-1984, if you have any questions. Thank you for your assistance.

EOP DOCUMENT REQUEST No. 2

The National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States (the "Commission") requests that the Executive Office of the President (the "respondent") provide the Commission with the following documents and information no later than June 25, 2003 (the "production date"). The Commission requests that the respondent inform the Commission promptly if the production date poses a problem for certain categories of documents, such as documents from the previous Administration that may be in the custody of the National Archives and Records Administration, and meet promptly with the Commission staff to set a schedule for the production of those documents.

1. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by NSC staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by NSC staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by NSC staff of Principals and Deputies Committee meetings held from January 1, 1998, through September 20, 2001 that concerned:

- (a) Al-Qa'ida, Usama bin Laden, and/or Afghanistan;
- (b) the policy and budget development, implementation, or review of the overall counterterrorism policies of the United States, including PDD-62 (1998), the Five Year Counterterrorism Plan, and any successor NSPDs; and/or
- (c) counterterrorism issues involving threats to or attacks on the United States or American persons or assets in relations with Malaysia, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, the United Arab Emirates, and Yemen, other than materials that focus only on Palestinian terrorist activities.

Principals meetings include any such meeting whether chaired by the President or by the National Security Adviser. This request applies to principals or deputies level meetings addressing these topics wholly or in part regardless of the title used for the group or whether conducted in person or by SVTS, including meetings of the "Foreign Policy Team," the "Small Group," and the Counterterrorism Security Group (including CSG meetings chaired by the National Coordinator), as well as relevant meetings at Camp David.

2. The President's Daily Diary for September 11, 2001, and logs from the White House Situation Room, the Presidential Emergency Operations Center (PEOC), and the White House Military Office for September 11, 2001.

3. Contemporaneous notes of individuals present in the PEOC or accompanying the President on September 11, 2001, including notes of White House officials other than the President. (A request for such documents directed to the Office of the Vice President will be submitted separately.)
4. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by White House staff of meetings at the principals or deputies level, including the Domestic Consequences Principals Committee, from September 11 through September 20, 2001, that concerned domestic policy responses to the terrorist attacks upon the United States.
5. Information sufficient to describe the activation and implementation of continuity of operations and emergency response plans and measures for the White House complex on September 11, 2001.

The Commission requests that the documents requested above be provided as soon as they are available, even though all requested documents may not be provided at the same time, through means of a "rolling" production.

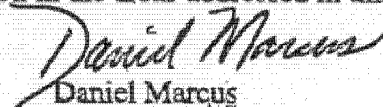

If any requested documents are withheld from production, even temporarily, based on an alleged claim of privilege or for any other reason, the Commission requests that the respondent, as soon as possible and in no event later than the production date, identify and describe each such document or class of documents, as well as the alleged basis for not producing it, with sufficient specificity to allow a meaningful challenge to any such withholding.

If the respondent does not have possession, custody or control of any requested documents but has information about where such documents may be located, the Commission requests that the respondent provide such information as soon as possible and in no event later than the production date.

If the respondent has any questions or concerns about the interpretation or scope of these document requests, the Commission requests that any such questions or concerns be raised with the Commission as soon as possible so that any such issues can be addressed and resolved prior to the production date.

The Commission intends to make further document requests as its work develops and reserves the right to request additional documents and information in the areas addressed in this request.

MEMORANDUM FOR WHITE HOUSE OFFICE STAFF
OFFICE OF POLICY DEVELOPMENT STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES, COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

Please read this entire memorandum carefully. It deals with legal obligations that apply to you.

The National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States ("Commission") was established in the legislative branch, principally to inquire into, and report to the President and Congress on, the terrorists attacks of September 11, 2001 and the extent of U.S. preparedness for and immediate response to the attacks (Public Law 107-306, November 27, 2002). The Executive Office of the President (EOP) is cooperating with the Commission effort, consistent with the policy set forth in the memorandum of March 19, 2003 from the President's Chief of Staff.

The Commission has submitted "EOP Document Request No. 2" (attached) seeking executive materials from the EOP. The first category of materials sought by "EOP Document Request No. 2" will be the subject of a separate memorandum. The remaining categories are:

2. The President's Daily Diary for September 11, 2001, and logs from the White House Situation Room, the Presidential Emergency Operations Center (PEOC), and the White House Military Office for September 11, 2001.
3. Contemporaneous notes of individuals present in the PEOC or accompanying the President on September 11, 2001, including notes of White House officials other than the President.
4. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by White House staff of meetings at the principals or deputies level, including the Domestic Consequences Principals Committee, from September 11 through September 20, 2001 that concerned domestic policy responses to the terrorist attacks upon the United States.
5. Information sufficient to describe the activation and implementation of continuity of operations and emergency response plans and measures for the White House complex on September 11, 2001.

You must complete the following steps expeditiously:

1. Search for all materials you possess or control that fall within any of the categories set forth above. Your search for materials must be reasonable, diligent, and conducted in good faith, and must include any materials which may previously have been sent to the Office of Records Management. Retrieve all materials that fall within any of the categories set forth above and photocopy them.
2. Complete the attached certification, attach any photocopies produced under Step 1, and submit the certification and photocopies to Elizabeth Farrell 456-5942, EEOB Room 154, as early as possible but in all events not later than the close of business on Monday, June 16, 2003. NSC staff should submit their signed certification, along with any photocopies produced under Step 1, to William Leary, in the NSC Records Directorate, EEOP Room 392, 456-9201, as early as possible but in all events not later than the close of business on Monday, June 16, 2003.

Also, please be aware that we anticipate additional Commission requests for information concerning the extent of U.S. preparedness for and immediate response to the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001. It is important that you and your staff preserve all records which may potentially be responsive to this or a future request.

Please call Jennifer Newstead, Associate White House Counsel, at 456-1984, if you have any questions. Thank you for your assistance.

EOP DOCUMENT REQUEST No. 2

The National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States (the "Commission") requests that the Executive Office of the President (the "respondent") provide the Commission with the following documents and information no later than June 25, 2003 (the "production date"). The Commission requests that the respondent inform the Commission promptly if the production date poses a problem for certain categories of documents, such as documents from the previous Administration that may be in the custody of the National Archives and Records Administration, and meet promptly with the Commission staff to set a schedule for the production of those documents.

1. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by NSC staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by NSC staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by NSC staff of Principals and Deputies Committee meetings held from January 1, 1998, through September 20, 2001 that concerned:

- (a) Al-Qa'ida, Usama bin Laden, and/or Afghanistan;
- (b) the policy and budget development, implementation, or review of the overall counterterrorism policies of the United States, including PDD-62 (1998), the Five Year Counterterrorism Plan, and any successor NSPDs; and/or
- (c) counterterrorism issues involving threats to or attacks on the United States or American persons or assets in relations with Malaysia, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, the United Arab Emirates, and Yemen, other than materials that focus only on Palestinian terrorist activities.

Principals meetings include any such meeting whether chaired by the President or by the National Security Adviser. This request applies to principals or deputies level meetings addressing these topics wholly or in part regardless of the title used for the group or whether conducted in person or by SVTS, including meetings of the "Foreign Policy Team," the "Small Group," and the Counterterrorism Security Group (including CSG meetings chaired by the National Coordinator), as well as relevant meetings at Camp David.

2. The President's Daily Diary for September 11, 2001, and logs from the White House Situation Room, the Presidential Emergency Operations Center (PEOC), and the White House Military Office for September 11, 2001.

3. Contemporaneous notes of individuals present in the PEOC or accompanying the President on September 11, 2001, including notes of White House officials other than the President. (A request for such documents directed to the Office of the Vice President will be submitted separately.)
4. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by White House staff of meetings at the principals or deputies level, including the Domestic Consequences Principals Committee, from September 11 through September 20, 2001, that concerned domestic policy responses to the terrorist attacks upon the United States.
5. Information sufficient to describe the activation and implementation of continuity of operations and emergency response plans and measures for the White House complex on September 11, 2001.

The Commission requests that the documents requested above be provided as soon as they are available, even though all requested documents may not be provided at the same time, through means of a "rolling" production.

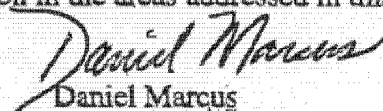

If any requested documents are withheld from production, even temporarily, based on an alleged claim of privilege or for any other reason, the Commission requests that the respondent, as soon as possible and in no event later than the production date, identify and describe each such document or class of documents, as well as the alleged basis for not producing it, with sufficient specificity to allow a meaningful challenge to any such withholding.

If the respondent does not have possession, custody or control of any requested documents but has information about where such documents may be located, the Commission requests that the respondent provide such information as soon as possible and in no event later than the production date.

If the respondent has any questions or concerns about the interpretation or scope of these document requests, the Commission requests that any such questions or concerns be raised with the Commission as soon as possible so that any such issues can be addressed and resolved prior to the production date.

The Commission intends to make further document requests as its work develops and reserves the right to request additional documents and information in the areas addressed in this request.

Q Ari, does the President feel the members of his own party might be interfering with or usurping executive branch authority or powers by, A, Tom DeLay involving the Homeland Security Department, Justice Department, Transportation Department in the Texas legislature situation? And, B, Senator Craig putting a hold on Air Force promotions?

MR. FLEISCHER: The question of holds is a long-lasting Senate tradition that often can be problematic. And it's part of working with the Senate and helping the Senate to make progress, particularly on the question of appointments and nominees.

On the first question you asked, as you know, the Department of Homeland Security and the Department of Transportation are reviewing all the facts and circumstances in this matter. And that's where it lies.

Q Well, on the Craig putting the hold on the Air Force promotions, you have complained repeatedly about Democrats blocking judicial -- the progress of judicial nominees. What's the difference?

MR. FLEISCHER: Well, I think that there is, in the case of the judicial nominees, a determination to at all costs block even a vote on the floor, with no end in sight, and that's why it's a filibuster. On the question of holds, we have seen holds come and go before. Holds are often lifted that results in a vote. If the Democrats were to relieve the filibuster and allow a vote to take place, then I think you would have an analogous situation. That's the difference between holds, frankly, and a filibuster.

Red meat for Dems

By Nat Hentoff
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

Adding to the Senate Democrats' attacks on the president's nominations to federal appeals courts, George W. Bush has given his filibustering opponents welcome ammunition by his remarkably misguided nomination of Alabama Attorney General Bill Pryor to the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Were I on the Senate Judiciary Committee, I would unhesitatingly vote against Mr. Pryor, because his clear record and public statements reveal that he would be the very definition of a judicial activist, letting his hostility toward key parts of the Bill of Rights determine his votes. But I would also urge my colleagues to send his nomination to the floor so that the entire Senate can vote on him — as the Constitution requires.

I would not vote against Mr. Pryor because he is a conservative — in the current battles over nominees, I would have voted for conservatives Priscilla Owen and Charles Pickering, because their opponents have distorted their records. But Mr. Pryor is capable of such extremism that a unanimous U.S. Supreme Court, in a decision written by Antonin Scalia, rejected Mr. Pryor's definition of federalism, which was included in his amicus brief and claimed municipalities have a "state sovereignty" right to be exempted from federal laws (Jinks vs. Richland County).

Not even the 19th-century secessionists advocated such reckless undermining of federal law. And Justice Scalia, dismissing Mr. Pryor's argument, is hardly one of the court's liberals.

As for the separation of church and state, Mr. Pryor, in a speech four years ago to the Christian Coalition, declared unambiguously that "we derive our rights from God and not from government." Why, then, do we have a Constitution in which there is no mention of God, except for the date of the end of the 1787 Constitutional Convention? And what of American citizens who are nonbelievers? If government abuses their rights, have they no recourse but a religious conversion?

With regard to Mr. Pryor's capacity as a judge, to deal fairly with all litigants and their attorneys before him, there is this statement by Mr. Pryor at a rally supporting the display of the Ten Commandments in the rotunda of the Alabama Judicial Building: "I became a lawyer because I wanted to fight the ACLU — the American "Anti-Civil" Liberties Union."

Will "Judge" Pryor recuse himself in all cases in which the American Civil Liberties Union has provided the attorney of record?

Then there was Mr. Pryor's vigorous brief to the Supreme Court, in Hope vs. Pelzer (2002), defending Alabama's practice of handcuffing unruly prisoners to chest-high metal bars with rings attached (hitching posts) for long periods of time. A 6-3 majority of the court ruled that this form of discipline was a clear violation of the Eighth Amendment's prohibition of cruel and unusual punishment.

The practice, said the majority — turning away Mr. Pryor's legal brief — was "antithetical to human dignity" and "both degrading and dangerous."

Mr. Pryor's support of capital punishment is shared by the president, but Mr. Pryor, in his ardor, said to the Supreme Court — as was heard in a National Public Radio May 12 profile — that the electric chair in his state "remains a method that is instantaneous and painless."

But overwhelming evidence contradicts Mr. Pryor's claim. In 1983, for instance, John Evans caught on fire during an Alabama execution and was not pronounced dead until 20 minutes later. In 1989, it took three applications of electricity before Horace Dunkins was terminated in Alabama's electric chair. And a 1991-2000 report on executions in the state showed severe burning, scarring and other traumas in the bodies of many prisoners sent "painlessly" to eternity in that electric chair.

In 1999, Mr. Pryor was a founder of the Republican Attorneys Generals Association (part of the Republican National Committee). RAGA took in contributions, as reported in The Washington Post (March 30, 2002), from powerful corporations involved in, or trying to head off, lawsuits against them by some of the states whose attorney generals were RAGA members. Pryor said that accepting money from such sources "does not create a conflict of interest."

How does he define "conflict of interest?"

REV_00121327

As surely as night follows day, there will be a furious, tumultuous Senate battle when Mr. Bush has his first chance to nominate a Supreme Court justice. By deciding to nominate Mr. Pryor to the federal bench now, the president has thrown red meat to the Democrats, and most likely will create an even more divisive national debate on his eventual choice for the Supreme Court. If Karl Rove is as judicious a presidential adviser as he is purported to be, I wonder if, for once, his fabled research skills failed him this time.

Might you or someone else from Counsel's Office be available to participate in one of our conference calls we do with agency chiefs of staff and briefly discuss BC campaign do's/don'ts? (per the Judge Gonzales memo)

I think you guys are talking with their respective general counsels, but it might be good for the agency chiefs of staff to hear the details direct from you.; We do the calls on Monday and Thursday mornings at 9:20.; Your portion wouldn't take more than 3-4 minutes.

Thank you.

ps: As you have probably heard, the President discussed this issue during today's Cabinet Meeting.

FYI, Sheila possesses all previous BIs done on past federal judicial nominees. Plus, she is more discreet than the FBI, and won't require the judge to sign a waiver form, if that matters to you. Feel free to communicate with her directly if you want any of them.

Brett-
OPA is asking if it is okay to give out the Bush Cheney '04 campaign and fax #'s. Also, should they stay away from using it around the office on directories and other things of that sort.

Ganter, will you check with Brett on two things for me:
1) Is it legal for us to have the Bush Cheney '04 main campaign number on our office phone list, and
2) is it legal for us to give out that number and their fax number?

Thank you.

MEMORANDUM FOR WHITE HOUSE STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES

SUBJECT: POLITICAL ACTIVITY

This memorandum summarizes rules and policies with respect to political activity for a candidate, campaign, political group, or political party. We will renew and supplement this guidance as appropriate before the 2004 elections. At all times, you should contact the Counsel's Office if you have any questions about appropriate political activity. You also should keep in mind, as always, that appearance and propriety issues can occasionally arise even with respect to perfectly lawful activity. Finally, the Chief of Staff has asked me to remind you that the decision whether to engage in political activity or make contributions to political entities or campaigns, including with respect to the re-election campaign of the President, is a personal matter for each employee and that no one is under any obligation to engage in such activity.

Basic Rules and Policies

The basic rules and policies you should follow with respect to your political activity are straightforward. You are permitted to engage in a variety of political activity, as detailed more fully below, subject to certain important restrictions:

- First, you may not use your official authority for the purpose of interfering with or affecting the result of an election. That means, for example, that you may not knowingly permit your official title to be used on invitations to political fundraisers. (If your title is used by others inadvertently and without your knowledge, you should contact the Counsel's Office promptly about appropriate steps to take.) You also may not use your official authority to coerce any person to engage in or refrain from political activity.

- Second, you may not personally solicit, receive, or accept political contributions. Also, you may not host or sponsor political fundraisers. However, you may speak at, attend, and be the featured guest at political fundraisers so long as you do not personally solicit contributions. But you should always clear such activity with the Office of Political Affairs and the Counsel's Office before accepting an invitation to be a guest speaker at a fundraiser.

On-Duty and On-Site Activity

All employees are responsible at all times for performing their official duties and responsibilities. White House employees whose duties can continue after normal duty hours and away from the normal duty post also are permitted by law to engage while on duty and in the office in otherwise permitted political activity, such as meetings and telephone calls related to elections, campaigns, or political parties. (Note that political fundraising and fundraisers may never occur on official government property.) However, any such political activity should be limited so that it is not inconsistent with official duties or otherwise inappropriate. In addition, any non-incidental costs that the government would not have incurred but for any political activity should be paid or reimbursed by a political entity. Finally, detailees are not permitted to engage in political activity while on duty and in their offices, but may do so off duty and off site.

It is important to note that certain White House employees may be required in the performance of their official duties to assist or accompany the President, the Vice President, the First Lady, Mrs. Cheney, or others with respect to political activity. This may entail, for example, duties related to security, scheduling, advance, or communications, among other duties. Such assistance is permissible and appropriate.

Travel and Costs

When a government officer or employee engages in political activity, the government should not pay (or must be reimbursed) for non-incidental costs that it would not have incurred but for the political activity.

The issue arises primarily with respect to travel costs. The appropriate political entity ordinarily pays the relevant travel costs associated with political activity (or the costs for the political portion of mixed official-political travel). The government is not reimbursed, however, for: (i) the costs that result from security needs; or (ii) the compensation or expenses of persons required to accompany or assist the official engaging in political activity. Also, White House cars ordinarily should not be used for transportation to political events except as necessary for security purposes or to accompany the President, Vice President, First Lady, or Mrs. Cheney.

With respect to office equipment, your Office will be contacted by the Office of Management and Administration regarding appropriate reimbursement by the relevant political entity for those uses of equipment that can incur non-incidental additional charges (primarily from paper and long-distance costs). As appropriate, separate equipment may be installed in certain offices by the Office of Management and Administration.

Select List of Permitted Political Activities

Subject to applicable prohibitions, including the prohibitions on improper use of official title and solicitation of contributions discussed above, you may engage in the following political activities:

- participation in political organizations, which includes:
  - being a member of a political party;
  - serving as an officer of a political party;
  - attending and participating in nominating caucuses;
  - participating in a political convention or rally; and
  - serving as a delegate to a political convention.
- participation in political campaigns, which includes:
  - canvassing for votes;
    - endorsing or opposing a candidate in an advertisement, broadcast, campaign literature, or similar material;
    - addressing a convention, caucus, rally, or similar gathering of a political party or political group; and
    - actively managing the political campaign of a partisan political candidate or candidate for political party office.
- participation in elections, including:
  - voting; and
  - driving voters to polling places.
- attendance and speaking at fundraising events:

You may not solicit, receive, or accept political contributions, and you may not host or sponsor fundraisers. However, you may:

- make lawful political contributions;
- attend political fundraisers;
  - manage or organize political fundraisers hosted and sponsored by others (you may not host or sponsor fundraisers or otherwise personally solicit contributions);
  - speak as a featured guest at political fundraisers so long as you do not solicit contributions and so long as the event otherwise complies with the legal requirements of the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act;
  - be listed as a guest speaker on the invitation for a fundraiser so long as the invitation does not list your official title; and
  - solicit, accept, or receive uncompensated volunteer services for a campaign from any individual (however, a superior may not ask his or her subordinate employee to provide such services, nor may he or she target a company or entity with official matters pending before the agency for provision of such services).

Employees of the Vice President

Employees of the Vice President (and especially those whose salary is disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate) should consult the Counsel to the Vice President regarding political activity or contributions.

Conclusion

Above all, please remember that we are all employees of the President or Vice President and that our performance reflects upon them. All of us must comply with applicable laws and regulations, and must also comply with the high ethical standards they have set for us.

Subject: Barbour Event in Chicago

Brett,

The nature of the event has changed. Rather than being a fundraiser for Haley, it is a Republican Governors Association fundraising event. Secretary Thompson is not listed as a "featured guest" in the event invite. Instead, he is just planning on flying up commercial paid for by RGA, as a participant of the event, but not a featured part of the event. He is likely to give a very brief introduction to Haley.

Our ethics folks have looked at it and are comfortable with his participation in the event.

Sorry, for the late change, but information had not been communicated to us well. Are you ok with the Secretary's participation, as conceptualized?

MEMORANDUM FOR WHITE HOUSE STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES

SUBJECT: POLITICAL ACTIVITY

This memorandum summarizes rules and policies with respect to political activity for a candidate, campaign, political group, or political party. We will renew and supplement this guidance as appropriate before the 2004 elections. At all times, you should contact the Counsel's Office if you have any questions about appropriate political activity. You also should keep in mind, as always, that appearance and propriety issues can occasionally arise even with respect to perfectly lawful activity. Finally, the Chief of Staff has asked me to remind you that the decision whether to engage in political activity or make contributions to political entities or campaigns, including with respect to the re-election campaign of the President, is a personal matter for each employee and that no one is under any obligation to engage in such activity.

Basic Rules and Policies

The basic rules and policies you should follow with respect to your political activity are straightforward. You are permitted to engage in a variety of political activity, as detailed more fully below, subject to certain important restrictions:

- First, you may not use your official authority for the purpose of interfering with or affecting the result of an election. That means, for example, that you may not knowingly permit your official title to be used on invitations to political fundraisers. (If your title is used by others inadvertently and without your knowledge, you should contact the Counsel's Office promptly about appropriate steps to take.) You also may not use your official authority to coerce any person to engage in or refrain from political activity.
- Second, you may not personally solicit, receive, or accept political contributions. Also, you may not host or sponsor political fundraisers. However, you may speak at, attend, and be the featured guest at political fundraisers so long as you do not personally solicit contributions. But you should always clear such activity with the Office of Political Affairs and the Counsel's Office before accepting an invitation to be a guest speaker at a fundraiser.

On-Duty and On-Site Activity

All employees are responsible at all times for performing their official duties and responsibilities. White House employees whose duties can continue after normal duty hours and away from the normal duty post also are permitted by law to engage while on duty and in the office in otherwise permitted political activity, such as meetings and telephone calls related to elections, campaigns, or political parties. (Note that political fundraising and fundraisers may never occur on official government property.) However, any such political activity should be limited so that it is not inconsistent with official duties or otherwise inappropriate. In addition, any non-incidental costs that the government would not have incurred but for any political activity should be paid or reimbursed by a political entity. Finally, detailees are not permitted to engage in political activity while on duty and in their offices, but may do so off duty and off site.

It is important to note that certain White House employees may be required in the performance of their official duties to assist or accompany the President, the Vice President, the First Lady, Mrs. Cheney, or others with respect to political activity. This may entail, for example, duties related to security, scheduling, advance, or communications, among other duties. Such assistance is permissible and appropriate.

Travel and Costs

When a government officer or employee engages in political activity, the government should not pay (or must be reimbursed) for non-incidental costs that it would not have incurred but for the political activity.

The issue arises primarily with respect to travel costs. The appropriate political entity ordinarily pays the relevant travel costs associated with political activity (or the costs for the political portion of mixed official-political travel). The government is not reimbursed, however, for: (i) the costs that result from security needs; or (ii) the compensation or expenses of persons required to accompany or assist the official engaging in political activity. Also, White House cars ordinarily should not be used for transportation to political events except as necessary for security purposes or to accompany the President, Vice President, First Lady, or Mrs. Cheney.

With respect to office equipment, your Office will be contacted by the Office of Management and Administration regarding appropriate reimbursement by the relevant political entity for those uses of equipment that can incur non-incidental additional charges (primarily from paper and long-distance costs). As appropriate, separate equipment may be installed in certain offices by the Office of Management and Administration.

Select List of Permitted Political Activities

Subject to applicable prohibitions, including the prohibitions on improper use of official title and solicitation of contributions discussed above, you may engage in the following political activities:

- participation in political organizations, which includes:
  - being a member of a political party;
  - serving as an officer of a political party;
  - attending and participating in nominating caucuses;
  - participating in a political convention or rally; and
  - serving as a delegate to a political convention.
- participation in political campaigns, which includes:
  - canvassing for votes;
    - endorsing or opposing a candidate in an advertisement, broadcast, campaign literature, or similar material;
    - addressing a convention, caucus, rally, or similar gathering of a political party or political group; and
    - actively managing the political campaign of a partisan political candidate or candidate for political party office.
- participation in elections, including:
  - voting; and
  - driving voters to polling places.
- attendance and speaking at fundraising events:

You may not solicit, receive, or accept political contributions, and you may not host or sponsor fundraisers. However, you may:

- make lawful political contributions;
- attend political fundraisers;
  - manage or organize political fundraisers hosted and sponsored by others (you may not host or sponsor fundraisers or otherwise personally solicit contributions);
  - speak as a featured guest at political fundraisers so long as you do not solicit contributions and so long as the event otherwise complies with the legal requirements of the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act;
  - be listed as a guest speaker on the invitation for a fundraiser so long as the invitation does not list your official title; and

- solicit, accept, or receive uncompensated volunteer services for a campaign from any individual (however, a superior may not ask his or her subordinate employee to provide such services, nor may he or she target a company or entity with official matters pending before the agency for provision of such services).

Employees of the Vice President

Employees of the Vice President (and especially those whose salary is disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate) should consult the Counsel to the Vice President regarding political activity or contributions.

Conclusion

Above all, please remember that we are all employees of the President or Vice President and that our performance reflects upon them. All of us must comply with applicable laws and regulations, and must also comply with the high ethical standards they have set for us.

As I try to close out of the WH, I wanted to run by the email I'd like to send to fellow WH staff - and make sure it works from an appropriateness and timing standpoint.

Dear Friends:

I will be moving to the President's re-election campaign and I wanted to drop you a quick note to thank for your friendship and the wonderful experience working with each of you has been.

As you know, there will be a lot of changes in the Political affairs Office. As of next Monday, I will no longer be checking this email address or my WH phone. For questions related to Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota, please contact Darren Bearson at 6-5275 or Darren_Bearson@who.eop.gov. He is the new Associate Director for that part of the country.

For the other states I've worked in (Montana, North Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska, Illinois, and who could forget South Dakota), please contact Matt Schlapp until he announces new Associate Directors. Thanks again!

Subject: NYT op-ed page today

Judging by Where You Sit

By DAVID A. SCHKADE and CASS R. SUNSTEIN

Ideology matters when choosing judges - perhaps too much, as the battles between President Bush and Senate Democrats show. But how much does ideology matter once judges are on the bench?

As it turns out, it matters a lot. We have studied thousands of votes by federal appellate judges, who are randomly assigned to three-judge panels, which then make decisions by majority vote. According to our research, judges appointed by Republican presidents show more conservative voting patterns, while Democratic appointees are more liberal.

These findings may not be surprising. The most striking lesson of our research, however, is the influence of what might be called the majority ideology. For both Democratic and Republican appointees, the likelihood of a liberal vote jumps when the two other panel members are Democrats, and drops when the two other panel members are Republicans.

The effect of ideology on panel decisions is clear. Consider, for example, a case in which a woman has complained of sex discrimination. In front of an appellate panel of three Democratic appointees, she wins 75 percent of the time. But if the panel has fewer Democratic appointees, her chances decline. With two Democratic and one Republican appointee, she wins 49 percent of the time; with one Democratic and two Republican appointees, she wins 38 percent of the time. And with a panel of three Republican appointees, she wins just 31 percent of the time.

Or consider cases in which a company has claimed that an environmental regulation is unlawful. Before an all-Democratic panel, the company wins about a quarter of the time. But before an all-Republican panel, the company wins about three-quarters of the time. Or consider a case in which white people are challenging an affirmative action program; they win two times out of three before three Republican appointees - but only one time in six before three Democratic appointees. The same pattern can be found in many other areas of the law.

Of course, judges are not politicians or ideologues. If the facts and the law argue strongly for one side, it will prevail, regardless of the political affiliation of the president who appointed the judges. But in the hardest cases that make their way to the federal appellate courts, the evidence is clear: Republican-appointed judges tend to vote like Republicans and Democratic-appointed judges tend to vote like Democrats.

There are some interesting exceptions. In criminal appeals, Republican and Democratic appointees do not differ. Contrary to the stereotype, Democratic appointees are not "softer on crime." And in cases involving abortion and capital punishment, judges appear not to be influenced by their colleagues. No matter what the composition of the panel, Republican appointees are much more likely to vote to uphold restrictions on abortion and to permit executions to go forward.

Ideology also has a more subtle effect on individual judges: in general, both Republican and Democratic appointees are affected by their panel colleagues. A Republican appointee sitting with two other Republicans votes far more conservatively than when the same judge sits with at least one Democratic appointee. A Democratic appointee, meanwhile, shows the same tendency in the opposite ideological direction.

For example, on an all-Republican panel, Republican judges are far more likely than not to vote to strike down affirmative action and campaign finance reform - and also to rule against people claiming that they have been discriminated against on the basis of sex or disability. But in the very same areas, Republican appointees show a much more moderate pattern of votes when there is at least one Democrat on the panel. The same holds true for Democratic appointees, who show extremely liberal voting patterns when sitting with fellow Democratic appointees, a tendency that shifts in the conservative direction when they sit with one or more Republican appointees.

These findings explain what the current battle is all about. Even on the lower federal courts, judicial ideology matters, and in a way that is crucial to the development of the law. The ideology of a judge is important not only because of how that judge will vote, but also because of the judge's effect on his or her colleagues.

Thus the fight over judicial nominations is no symbolic battle. The debate between President Bush and Democratic senators, between the executive and the legislative branches, is about more than politics. It about the future shape of the law.

David A. Schkade is professor of business at the University of Texas at Austin. Cass R. Sunstein is professor of law at the University of Chicago.

Hatch Insisting On Asbestos Litigation Markup Next Week

Senate Judiciary Chairman Hatch today vowed to forge ahead with his legislation aimed at reforming the asbestos litigation system, saying a markup planned for next week will come off even if concerns over the controversial bill are not assuaged. "I'm looking forward to voting on it," Hatch said during a session of the Judiciary Committee today in which he reaffirmed his decision to hold the markup next week "in any event." Some key Democrats have withheld support for the bill, which creates a separate court system and a $108 billion trust fund -- financed by insurers and defendant companies in asbestos-exposure cases -- to compensate victims of asbestos-related illnesses.

Meanwhile, Sen. Ben Nelson of Nebraska, the measure's Democratic cosponsor, said he was working on three possible solutions to one of the biggest Democratic complaints about the bill -- that it does not include a mechanism to ensure that the trust fund will not run dry. Hatch previously opposed the use of a federally funded "backstop," but Nelson indicated that using public funds was not completely off the table. Nelson said he was "vetting" the ideas among colleagues and may be ready "to go public with them by midweek." Asked if Hatch was supportive of the proposals, Nelson answered, "It is my approach never to surprise people." Hatch today said he would work with Senate colleagues to address their concerns ahead of the markup. "We're coming very close to be able to satisfy [concerns] or at least get the parties together," Hatch said. -- by Emily Heil

I think he was confused about the fact that political entities have leased charter aircraft from charter companies in the past to provide transportation to him and others. That is different from leasing a plane from a corporate entity and is not encompassed by this memo. I will edit to make that clear.

Pryor's backers are pleased

06/12/03

By SEAN REILLY

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON -- In occasionally heated exchanges Wednesday, Alabama Attorney General Bill Pryor told the Senate Judiciary Committee that he would place the law above his personal convictions if approved for a federal appeals court judgeship, while Democrats on the panel peppered him with skepticism over his ability to serve impartially.

But after the Mobile native had spent more than three hours taking questions, the hearing abruptly concluded in mid-afternoon, when no Democratic senators showed up after a lunch break. Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, interpreted their absence as a tribute to the Mobile native's performance. Echoing that assessment was U.S. Sen. Jeff Sessions, R-Mobile, who confidently declared that "nobody laid a glove on him."

While a "long tough battle" lies ahead, Sessions said, "we made real progress today."

In a statement issued afterward, however, the committee's top Democrat, Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont, said "the hearing made ever clearer to everyone that this has been and remains an extremely controversial nomination."

Although senators can submit written questions to Pryor until Tuesday, Hatch said, the Republican-run committee will probably vote to send his nomination to the full Senate within the next two weeks.

Observers on both sides have suggested that Democrats might then try to block the nomination on the Senate floor through stalling tactics that they are already employing with two other Bush nominees. Leahy's statement didn't look that far ahead, saying only that committee members will decide how to vote in light of Pryor's answers at Wednesday's hearing and to follow-up written questions.

Pryor, a 41-year-old Republican, is the latest in a string of Bush judicial candidates to arouse controversy since the White House announced his nomination two months ago for a lifetime seat on the Atlanta-based 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. On abortion, states' rights and other issues, critics say that Pryor's past positions raise troubling doubts about his future potential to make an even-handed judge.

In the last week, several advocacy organizations have published lengthy reports documenting what they label as Pryor's record of right-wing activism. The day before Wednesday's hearing, a half-dozen groups joined in a news conference calling on the Senate to keep him off the bench.

"Bill Pryor is a proud and distinguished ideological warrior. I respect him for it," U.S. Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., said in his opening statement Wednesday. But ideological warriors of any political stripe "tend to make law, not interpret law," Schumer continued. "And that's not what any of us should want from our judges."

Pryor, clad in sober pin-stripes and accompanied by his wife and two young daughters, responded that as attorney general he had always stayed within settled legal boundaries and would continue to do so on the bench.

On the abortion issue, for example, Pryor repeatedly asserted that he had more narrowly interpreted a 1997 Alabama statute banning the procedure commonly known as "partial-birth abortion" than some anti-abortion advocates and then-Gov. Fob James had wanted.

"It was my best judgment of what the law required," Pryor said. Asked by Hatch whether he would continue to follow the precedent set by the 1973 U.S. Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion, Pryor replied: "You can take it to the bank, Mr. Chairman."

Even so, Pryor did not disavow his one-time characterization of that 1973 ruling as "the worst abomination in the history of constitutional law." In his opening statement, Schumer seemed to muse whether that ruling was truly worse than earlier high court decisions upholding slavery, racial segregation and the internment of Japanese-Americans during World War II.

Pryor yielded no ground Wednesday.

"It has led to the slaughter of millions of innocent unborn children," he said later in the hearing.

Pryor also defended a friend-of-court brief filed earlier this year in support of Texas's criminal sodomy law. The brief had drawn fire from gay rights groups, who say that it equates private same-sex relations with necrophilia and possession of child pornography. But Pryor contended that he was simply following the lead of the late U.S. Supreme Court Justice Byron White in a 1986 opinion upholding a Georgia law that also made homosexual sodomy a crime.

And in response to friendly questioning from Hatch, Pryor gladly acknowledged that the high court has several times taken his side on controversial cases involving the balance of power between state and federal governments.

In a 2001 ruling on a challenge brought by Pryor, for example, the Supreme Court on a 5-4 vote dramatically restricted the right of state workers to sue for disability discrimination under federal law. Not long before, Pryor was the only attorney general in the nation to file a friend-of-court brief arguing the unconstitutionality of a provision in another law giving rape victims the ability to sue their attackers in federal court. Three-dozen other attorneys general took the opposite view, but in another 5-4 decision, the Supreme Court again landed in Pryor's corner.

"I think the fact the Supreme Court agreed with you in a number of these cases indicates that your arguments are hardly outside the mainstream," Hatch said.

Pryor did make a small concession after U.S. Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., challenged his comment three years ago that "nine octogenarian lawyers who happen to sit on the Supreme Court" should not decide whether an Alabama death row inmate got a temporary reprieve.

Pryor first described the remark as "overheated political rhetoric," but after Kennedy continued to prod him, then called it "an inappropriate statement."

Pryor also clashed with Sen. Russell Feingold, D-Wis., over disclosure of political contributions to the Republican Attorneys General Association, an organization that Pryor helped found in the late 1990s, although he is no longer an officer. The group has drawn criticism for raising money from corporations that may have a stake in the official actions of its members. After Pryor repeatedly referred questions about specific donors to the Republican National Committee, Feingold retorted that he took those responses as a "refusal" to provide the information.

To the surprise of at least one opponent, the panel never brought up Pryor's well-publicized refusal to sue tobacco companies to recover taxpayers' cost of smoking-related health problems. Also unmentioned during the hearing was a newly released evaluation by an American Bar Association review committee giving Pryor lackluster grades on his professional qualifications.

Before beginning his testimony, Pryor was introduced by Sessions, Sen. Richard Shelby, R-Tuscaloosa, and U.S. Rep. Jo Bonner, R-Mobile. Bonner highlighted a letter of support written by state Rep. Alvin Holmes, a black Montgomery Democrat who urged swift confirmation for Pryor "because of his constant efforts to help the causes of blacks in Alabama."

In anticipation of a substantial crowd, the setting for Wednesday's hearing was moved to a larger room in a Senate office building than was first planned. At the outset, the standing room only audience numbered more than 200, but eventually dwindled to a few dozen. Pryor supporters were readily identifiable by lapel stickers that proclaimed him "A Judge for America." In a display of concern over Pryor's role in spearheading the disability discrimination case, several disabled people on indoor motor scooters also attended under the motto, "Don't Roll Back our Rights."

The 12 judges on the 11th Circuit hear appeals from Alabama, Georgia and Florida. Because the U.S. Supreme Court takes relatively few cases, the 11th Circuit is frequently the court of last resort in the three-state territory. The judges make $164,000 annually.

'SANCHEZ-SCOTT' DECISION IS HARDLY LAPSE IN JUDGMENT

Forum Column

By Lawrence C. Waddington

Against the recommendations of Sens. Dianne Feinstein and Barbara Boxer, the Senate Judiciary Committee approved the nomination of Los Angeles County Superior Court Judge Carolyn Kuhl to the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The battle now moves to the full Senate. Feinstein stated she received 21,367 letters in opposition to Kuhl's nomination and only 114 letters in support. The precision of this mathematical count is remarkable. The numbers presumably are attributable, in part, to Kuhl's decision in Sanchez-Scott v. Alza Pharmaceuticals, a case reversed by the Court of Appeal. See Sanchez-Scott v. Alza Pharms., 86 Cal.App.4th 365 (2001). Most of Kuhl's critics, uninformed of the facts or law and agitated by special interest groups, cite this single case for their hostility. Undoubtedly, only a small percentage of Kuhl's opponents are lawyers or have read the decision. Other complaints against Kuhl relate to her advocacy as a lawyer. Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., attributed to Kuhl a "lapse of judgment that gives me great pause." If Specter did read the appellate opinion allegedly causing this moral anxiety, we should doubt his own judgment.

Feinstein found the opinion "startling." Boxer manifested her knowledge of the case by filing a "blue slip" disapproving of the nominee. The Sanchez-Scott case consists only of allegations in a complaint. According to Azucena Sanchez-Scott, during her breast examination, conducted by a doctor to determine the possibility of cancer, a man later identified as a drug company representative remained in the room. At no time did the man touch Sanchez-Scott, participate in the examination, solicit unwelcome advances, offer salacious or offensive comments or discuss the examination publicly. According to her allegations, Sanchez-Scott became embarrassed at the presence of the third party, unidentified by the doctor. Although the doctor subsequently apologized, Sanchez-Scott elected to file suit and, in the absence of settlement, eventually would have asked a jury for monetary compensation for her embarrassment. These are the sum total of facts agitating the minds of U.S. Senators. What Feinstein, Specter and those who oppose Kuhl's nomination apparently do not understand is that allegations are not proof. No trial had been held; the doctor and sales representative had not answered the complaint formally, except to object to its legal sufficiency on demurrer. In their responsive papers, the defendants also denied the allegations (unnecessary in a demurrer) and contended that the doctor informed Sanchez-Scott of the identity of the representative and that she voiced no objection. To resolve this credibility conflict, assuming a defense of consent, a jury eventually would determine who is telling the truth. Kuhl concluded only that the facts stated by Sanchez-Scott, even if true, were legally insufficient under California law. Sanchez-Scott had alleged two legal theories: invasion of her right to privacy under the California Constitution and violation of a common-law right of privacy. On appeal, she abandoned her constitutional right-of-privacy claim. The Court of Appeal dismissed it, in effect, confirming Kuhl on this allegation. The appellate court then embarked on an extensive analysis of the common-law right of privacy. The right, by the court's own admission, is amorphous and contingent on numerous factors. Unlike an assault evidenced by personal injury, violation of the common-law right of privacy involves no personal injury and consists of subjective perception of emotional harm. The court spends innumerable pages trying to explain the contours of "privacy" and concedes the difficulty in fashioning a bright line. Privacy is quintessentially fact-specific. Precise definition rarely is achieved. Apparently, this single case, decided by Kuhl as a judge, disqualifies her as a federal judge. If appellate reversals are the test, then the senators should look to the 9th Circuit itself as an example. The U.S. Supreme Court has reversed the 9th Circuit repeatedly. The high court's current docket calendars more 9th Circuit cases for review than any other Circuit Court. Only a few weeks ago, the Supreme Court reversed four of its cases in one day. Professor Karl Manheim of Loyola Law School cannot resist adding his opinion. "'Sanchez-Scott' Decision by Kuhl Proves Her Unfitness," Forum, May 14. Manheim finds Kuhl's decision to evidence "an appalling ignorance of the existing law on privacy or a disturbing willingness to ignore that law." This is Manheim's hyperbolic characterization of a ruling on demurrer. Presumably, Sanchez-Scott's run-of-the-mill tort claim for damages, alleging no physical injury or economic loss, exceeds the embarrassing reversal record of the 9th Circuit. Although the Court of Appeal dismissed Sanchez-Scott's claim alleging violation of her constitutional right of privacy, Manheim announces that the law on common-law invasion of privacy is "clear." Here are his three "clear" cases:

- * Shulman v. Group W. Prods. Inc., 18 Cal.4th 2000 (1998). A television news crew rode in an ambulance with a seriously injured woman, recorded her statements and aired them on television. In a 112-page split opinion, the state Supreme Court held that this conduct constituted an invasion of privacy.
- * Wilkins v. NBC, 71 Cal.App.4th 1066 (1999). Television reporters disguised their true identity and interviewed advertisers suspecting of engaging in fraud.
- * DeMay v. Roberts, 46 Mich. 160 (1881). In this out-of-state case, the defendant assaulted the plaintiff during childbirth.

These three cases not only lack clarity but also are irrelevant as precedent or, as courts tactfully phrase this kind of analysis by an advocate, factually distinguishable.

Is Sanchez-Scott the case (face) that will launch a thousand filibusters (ships) - a trial court ruling, sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend, involving a single count of common-law invasion of privacy, no tangible damages, no economic loss, no publicity and monetary damages for hurt feelings?

Is this the case that senators and a law school professor find to be startling and a lapse of judgment?

Forum Column

By Lawrence C. Waddington

Against the recommendations of Sens. Dianne Feinstein and Barbara Boxer, the Senate Judiciary Committee approved the nomination of Los Angeles County Superior Court Judge Carolyn Kuhl to the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The battle now moves to the full Senate.

Feinstein stated she received 21,367 letters in opposition to Kuhl's nomination and only 114 letters in support. The precision of this mathematical count is remarkable. The numbers presumably are attributable, in part, to Kuhl's decision in Sanchez-Scott v. Alza Pharmaceuticals, a case reversed by the Court of Appeal. See Sanchez-Scott v. Alza Pharmaceuticals, 86 Cal.App.4th 365 (2001).

Most of Kuhl's critics, uninformed of the facts or law and agitated by special interest groups, cite this single case for their hostility. Undoubtedly, only a small percentage of Kuhl's opponents are lawyers or have read the decision. Other complaints against Kuhl relate to her advocacy as a lawyer.

Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., attributed to Kuhl a "lapse of judgment that gives me great pause." If Specter did read the appellate opinion allegedly causing this moral anxiety, we should doubt his own judgment. Feinstein found the opinion "startling." Boxer manifested her knowledge of the case by filing a "blue slip" disapproving of the nominee.

The Sanchez-Scott case consists only of allegations in a complaint. According to Azucena Sanchez-Scott, during her breast examination, conducted by a doctor to determine the possibility of cancer, a man later identified as a drug company representative remained in the room. At no time did the man touch Sanchez-Scott, participate in the examination, solicit unwelcome advances, offer salacious or offensive comments or discuss the examination publicly.

According to her allegations, Sanchez-Scott became embarrassed at the presence of the third party, unidentified by the doctor. Although the doctor subsequently apologized, Sanchez-Scott elected to file suit and, in the absence of settlement, eventually would have asked a jury for monetary compensation for her embarrassment. These are the sum total of facts agitating the minds of U.S. Senators.

What Feinstein, Specter and those who oppose Kuhl's nomination apparently do not understand is that allegations are not proof. No trial had been held; the doctor and sales representative had not answered the complaint formally, except to object to its legal sufficiency on demurrer.

In their responsive papers, the defendants also denied the allegations (unnecessary in a demurrer) and contended that the doctor informed Sanchez-Scott of the identity of the representative and that she voiced no objection. To resolve this credibility conflict, assuming a defense of consent, a jury eventually would determine who is telling the truth.

Kuhl concluded only that the facts stated by Sanchez-Scott, even if true, were legally insufficient under California law.

Sanchez-Scott had alleged two legal theories: invasion of her right to privacy under the California Constitution and violation of a common-law right of privacy. On appeal, she abandoned her constitutional right-of-privacy claim. The Court of Appeal dismissed it, in effect, confirming Kuhl on this allegation.

The appellate court then embarked on an extensive analysis of the common-law right of privacy. The right, by the court's own admission, is amorphous and contingent on numerous factors. Unlike an assault evidenced by personal injury, violation of the common-law right of privacy involves no personal injury and consists of subjective perception of emotional harm.

The court spends innumerable pages trying to explain the contours of "privacy" and concedes the difficulty in fashioning a bright line. Privacy is quintessentially fact-specific. This is Manheim's hyperbolic characterization of a ruling on demurrer. 'SANCHEZ-SCOTT' DECISION IS HARDLY LAPSE IN JUDGMENT

Forum Column

By Lawrence C. Waddington

Against the recommendations of Sens. Dianne Feinstein and Barbara Boxer, the Senate Judiciary Committee approved the nomination of Los Angeles County Superior Court Judge Carolyn Kuhl to the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The battle now moves to the full Senate. Feinstein stated she received 21,367 letters in opposition to Kuhl's nomination and only 114 letters in support. The precision of this mathematical count is remarkable. The numbers presumably are attributable, in part, to Kuhl's decision in Sanchez-Scott v. Alza Pharmaceuticals, a case reversed by the Court of Appeal. See Sanchez-Scott v. Alza Pharms., 86 Cal.App.4th 365 (2001). Most of Kuhl's critics, uninformed of the facts or law and agitated by special interest groups, cite this single case for their hostility. Undoubtedly, only a small percentage of Kuhl's opponents are lawyers or have read the decision. Other complaints against Kuhl relate to her advocacy as a lawyer. Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., attributed to Kuhl a "lapse of judgment that gives me great pause." If Specter did read the appellate opinion allegedly causing this moral anxiety, we should doubt his own judgment. Feinstein found the opinion "startling." Boxer manifested her knowledge of the case by filing a "blue slip" disapproving of the nominee. The Sanchez-Scott case consists only of allegations in a complaint. According to Azucena Sanchez-Scott, during her breast examination, conducted by a doctor to determine the possibility of cancer, a man later identified as a drug company representative remained in the room. At no time did the man touch Sanchez-Scott, participate in the examination, solicit unwelcome advances, offer salacious or offensive comments or discuss the examination publicly. According to her allegations, Sanchez-Scott became embarrassed at the presence of the third party, unidentified by the doctor. Although the doctor subsequently apologized, Sanchez-Scott elected to file suit and, in the absence of settlement, eventually would have asked a jury for monetary compensation for her embarrassment. These are the sum total of facts agitating the minds of U.S. Senators.

What Feinstein, Specter and those who oppose Kuhl's nomination apparently do not understand is that allegations are not proof. No trial had been held; the doctor and sales representative had not answered the complaint formally, except to object to its legal sufficiency on demurrer. In their responsive papers, the defendants also denied the allegations (unnecessary in a demurrer) and contended that the doctor informed Sanchez-Scott of the identity of the representative and that she voiced no objection. To resolve this credibility conflict, assuming a defense of consent, a jury eventually would determine who is telling the truth.

Kuhl concluded only that the facts stated by Sanchez-Scott, even if true, were legally insufficient under California law. Sanchez-Scott had alleged two legal theories: invasion of her right to privacy under the California Constitution and violation of a common-law right of privacy. On appeal, she abandoned her constitutional right-of-privacy claim. The Court of Appeal dismissed it, in effect, confirming Kuhl on this allegation.

The appellate court then embarked on an extensive analysis of the common-law right of privacy. The right, by the court's own admission, is amorphous and contingent on numerous factors. Unlike an assault evidenced by personal injury, violation of the common-law right of privacy involves no personal injury and consists of subjective perception of emotional harm.

The court spends innumerable pages trying to explain the contours of "privacy" and concedes the difficulty in fashioning a bright line. Privacy is quintessentially fact-specific. Precise definition rarely is achieved. Apparently, this single case, decided by Kuhl as a judge, disqualifies her as a federal judge.

If appellate reversals are the test, then the senators should look to the 9th Circuit itself as an example. The U.S. Supreme Court has reversed the 9th Circuit repeatedly. The high court's current docket calendars more 9th Circuit cases for review than any other Circuit Court. Only a few weeks ago, the Supreme Court reversed four of its cases in one day.

Professor Karl Manheim of Loyola Law School cannot resist adding his opinion. "'Sanchez-Scott' Decision by Kuhl Proves Her Unfitness," Forum, May 14.

Manheim finds Kuhl's decision to evidence "an appalling ignorance of the existing law on privacy or a disturbing willingness to ignore that law." This is Manheim's hyperbolic characterization of a ruling on demurrer. Presumably, Sanchez-Scott's run-of-the-mill tort claim for damages, alleging no physical injury or economic loss, exceeds the embarrassing reversal record of the 9th Circuit.

Although the Court of Appeal dismissed Sanchez-Scott's claim alleging violation of her constitutional right of privacy, Manheim announces that the law on common-law invasion of privacy is "clear." Here are his three "clear" cases:

her statements and aired them on television. In a 112-page split opinion, the state Supreme Court held that this conduct constituted an invasion of privacy.

* Wilkins v. NBC, 71 Cal.App.4th 1066 (1999). Television reporters disguised their true identity and interviewed advertisers suspecting of engaging in fraud.

* DeMay v. Roberts, 46 Mich. 160 (1881). In this out-of-state case, the defendant assaulted the plaintiff during childbirth.

These three cases not only lack clarity but also are irrelevant as precedent or, as courts tactfully phrase this kind of analysis by an advocate, factually distinguishable.

Is Sanchez-Scott the case (face) that will launch a thousand filibusters (ships) - a trial court ruling, sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend, involving a single count of common-law invasion of privacy, no tangible damages, no economic loss, no publicity and monetary damages for hurt feelings?

Is this the case that senators and a law school professor find to be startling and a lapse of judgment?

Lawrence C. Waddington is a retired Superior Court judge, a mediator and arbitrator for JAMS and an adjunct professor at Pepperdine University School of Law. The views expressed are his own.

Janice Brown: The next U.S. Supreme Court justice?
DAVID KRAVETS
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO - It's not hard to understand why California Supreme Court Justice Janice Rogers Brown is often mentioned as a potential nominee to the U.S. Supreme Court.

In many ways, her line of thinking mirrors both the Bush administration and recent U.S. Supreme Court precedent. A Christian black woman from the segregated South, Brown supports limits on abortion rights and corporate liability, routinely upholds the death penalty and opposes affirmative action.

As speculation surges about the rumored retirements of Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justice Sandra Day O'Connor this summer, talk of potential replacements is on the rise, and Brown is among them.

"She has some real fans in Washington who are very impressed with what she's done on the California Supreme Court," said Gerald Uelman, a Santa Clara University School of Law scholar who follows both courts.

The first black woman to sit on California's highest court, Brown, 54, is one of the most conservative of the seven justices and a prolific opinion writer, authoring more opinions and dissents last term than any other justice.

She caught the attention of conservatives and the Bush administration with her majority opinion in 2000 striking down a San Jose ordinance that required government contractors to solicit bids from companies owned by women and minorities. Brown's lengthy opinion traced the legal history of race in America, portraying it as ebbing and flowing on whether government should treat all races equally.

Her conclusion, based in part on the California voters' decision to outlaw race- and gender-based hiring practices by approving Proposition 209: all people should be treated equally, regardless of race. Instead of affirmative action, she said, "equality of individual opportunity" is what the constitution demands.

Chief Justice Ronald M. George, in a concurring opinion, attacked Brown's portrayal of affirmative action as "entitlement based on group representation," calling it a "serious distortion of history." George wrote that affirmative action could be viewed as aiding the underrepresented in an effort to create equality.

Still, Brown's opinion meshes well with the philosophy of the Bush administration, which has told the U.S. Supreme Court in a pending case that it opposes the University of Michigan's race-based admissions policies.

The daughter of a sharecropper from rural Alabama who brought his family to Sacramento after joining the Air Force, Brown graduated in 1977 from the University of California, Los Angeles School of Law.

She was admitted at a time when the university's affirmative action program had an expressed goal of producing "ethnic and racial diversity," said law school spokeswoman Jessica Copen. Still, "no one would have been admitted to the law school unless they had the ability to do well," she said.

Brown hasn't given media interviews for years and declined to be interviewed for this story.

Close friend Douglas Kmiec, departing dean of the Catholic University of America's Columbus School of Law, where Brown gave a commencement address last month, said she became a lawyer after her grandmother espoused the virtues of civil rights attorney Fred Gray, who defended Rosa Parks and Martin Luther King Jr.

"That was held out to her at an early age," Kmiec said.

Brown also finds inspiration in her religion, Kmiec said. While introducing Brown to the graduating law students on May 24, he said she formulates opinions "in prayer and quiet study of the Bible." And in her commencement address, she criticized philosophers and scientists for trying to mold society "as if God did not exist."

The law, she said, is the "terrain on which Americans are struggling to decide what kind of people they are."

Brown worked for 12 years as a state government lawyer before joining a lobbying and legislative law firm led by former Republican Gov. George Deukmejian's chief of staff, Steve Merksamer. Then she became Republican Gov. Pete Wilson's legal affairs secretary before he nominated her to a state appellate court.

Two years later, Wilson nominated her to the California Supreme Court. She was confirmed in 1996 over the concerns of the state's judicial vetting committee, which rated her "not qualified" because of her limited judicial experience.

Brown, who has two children and lives in Sacramento with her husband, jazz musician Dewey Parker, is a "very private person," Merksamer and others said.

"When you grow up as a sharecropper's daughter in the segregated South, I think you have a certain perspective when you're able to come out of that and go to college and law school," Merksamer said.

While well known for her affirmative action opinion, Brown's rulings have shown sympathy at times to the plight of minorities.

Last year, the state Supreme Court upheld the conviction of a black bicyclist who was stopped by police for riding his bicycle the wrong way on a one-way street. Police searched Conrad McKay and found methamphetamine. He was sentenced to nearly three years.

The majority, in upholding the conviction, left it to the "judgment of the arresting officer" on whether to arrest or follow a "cite-and-release procedure" whereby violators of non-criminal infractions could be ticketed and released. Brown, in a lone dissent, said the decision left open the door to racial profiling.

But when it comes to the death penalty, Brown routinely affirms death sentences. Two years ago, she wrote that "murderers do not deserve a fate better than that inflicted on their victims."

The White House, which is trying to expand the use of federal death penalty statutes, declined comment on rumors that its lawyers have interviewed Brown in the event a seat on the high court opens. Merksamer wouldn't confirm whether he has been interviewed by White House lawyers on her behalf.

Others being talked about as potential nominees include Alberto Gonzalez, who as White House counsel is a close Bush adviser; Harvie Wilkinson III of the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and Edith Jones of the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, and Deputy Attorney General Larry Thompson.

Just whom the White House might nominate is one of Washington's most closely guarded secrets.

"No one at this point has mentioned any intention to retire," White House spokesman Scott McClellan said. "It would be speculative to start discussing the possibility."

On the abortion front, Brown wrote a scathing dissent in 1977 to a ruling which struck down a parental consent law, calling her colleagues on the court "philosopher kings." And when it comes to corporate liability, she wrote three years ago that companies should be shielded from paying exorbitant civil damages, a move endorsed by the U.S. Supreme Court this year.

In terms of gun control, Brown's thinking appears to align closely with Attorney General John Ashcroft's policies. Both support the right to firearm ownership, but believe the government may impose certain restrictions.

"Her writings have indicated an appreciation of the right to self defense and the practical reality that firearms are an effective tool for that purpose," said Chuck Michel, an attorney with the California Rifle and Pistol Association. Michel added, however, that some of Brown's thinking on gun control is "ill conceived."

Some scholars suggest Bush would have a struggle to confirm Brown, given Senate Democrats' recent filibusters on two conservative federal appellate nominees.

"Her name is being circulated," said Erwin Chemerinsky, a University of Southern California legal scholar who has taken several cases to the U.S. Supreme Court this term. "I think the question is: Does the Bush administration want to have a confirmation fight?"

Brett--I'd like to meet briefly to fill you in on what we have been doing with regard for the handling of the Federal Excise Tax that applies to Press Charters. This was something that was impacted by the recent changes to the handling of Press charters, such as Air Partner and the new billing using Amex accounts. We've reached a stage where I would like to speak to offices in the IRS which we have spoken to and corresponded with in the past regarding the FET to confirm our resolution of this situation. Previously, we were required to collect and pay the tax directly to the IRS, now we believe it is appropriate for Air Partner to do this (as we no longer handle the funds), and our contact would of course be limited to confirming that resolution. Also, in working this issue and reviewing the charter agreement Eric uses with Air Partner, there are some changes I would like to suggest. I know that we have discussed this briefly before, but my inclination was that this was at a stage where it would be a good idea to fill you in.

It would be great if you can indicate some times and we can accommodate to you. Adam

Republicans poised to strengthen hold on Senate in 2004 elections

By Donald Lambro

THE WASHINGTON TIMES

Senate Republicans are in a position to make gains in 2004 because of a combination of vulnerable Democratic seats and likely retirements, according to congressional election analysts.

While other political variables, including a weakened economy and a decline in President Bush's popularity, could influence the outcome of next year's Senate races, analysts say Republicans are favored to strengthen their hold on the Senate, which they control 51-48, with one Democratic-leaning independent.

"At this point in the cycle, we believe the Republicans are positioned to make Senate gains, most likely in the range of one to three seats. But that could change as retirement decisions are made, and as new economic numbers come in," election analyst Stuart Rothenberg said in his latest newsletter, the Rothenberg Political Report.

One advantage for Republicans is that the Democrats have more seats to defend this year — 19 seats compared with 15 for Republicans — and most of the states where these elections will take place are friendlier to Republicans than Democrats.

"Only three of the 15 states with GOP senators up for re-election in '04 were won by Democrat Al Gore in 2000 — Illinois, Iowa and Pennsylvania," Mr. Rothenberg said. "In contrast, nine of the 19 states with Democratic senators up for re-election were carried by Gore, nine went for Bush and [Florida] was a virtual tie.

"This gives the Republicans an advantage, as long as Bush remains popular. And a Democratic nominee who is associated with the left could add to Democratic Senate problems in those more Republican and conservative states," he said.

Other independent Senate election analysts agree with Mr. Rothenberg's overall assessment. "The target list is bigger and friendlier for Republicans. The Democratic target list is a lot smaller," said Jennifer Duffy, who analyzes Senate races for the Cook Political Report.

The Democrats' biggest potential problem is that several incumbents who may not seek re-election are from more conservative states that have become increasingly Republican. That could give the Republican Party its best chance in years to pick up several open seats.

Democrat Zell Miller of Georgia, one of his party's most conservative legislators, has decided to call it quits after one term, making his seat the Republicans' best bet for a pickup in a state where the Democrats have gone into a steep decline. They lost a Senate race, the governorship and some major state legislative contests last year.

Several Republicans are running for the seat, including Reps. Johnny Isakson and Mac Collins. Herman Cain, the chief executive officer of Godfather's Pizza, also is running. A number of Democrats also are thinking about entering the race. Among them are state Attorney General Thurbert Baker and freshman Rep. Jim Marshall.

Next on the Democrats' most-vulnerable list is Sen. John Edwards of North Carolina, who has spent most of his first term running for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Mr. Edwards, who remains in the low single digits in virtually all of the party primary polls, has not said whether he will seek a second term if he abandons his White House bid. But his home state polls suggest that he is in trouble there. A Raleigh News & Observer survey in May found that 32 percent said he deserved re-election, 32 percent said they would consider another candidate and 35 percent said they would vote to replace him.

Democrats in the state say the senator is under pressure to make a decision about a second term and that he is expected to decide around Labor Day.

"I don't think he'll run," Miss Duffy said.

Rep. Richard M. Burr, the likely Republican nominee, has raised more than $2 million for the race. Several Democrats have expressed interest in running, including former White House Chief of Staff Erskine Bowles, who lost last year's Senate race to Elizabeth Dole.

Seven-term Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, South Carolina Democrat, is likely to announce his retirement, opening up a big opportunity in this strongly Republican state. At 81, he has been sending signals that his wife does not want him to run and he has recently given the Democratic state chairman the green light to look for other candidates.

Democrats have a longer list of names of those who are not interested in running for Mr. Hollings' seat than those who are, election analysts say. On the Republican side, Rep. Jim DeMint has been running for months.

"Without Hollings in the race, I think it is enormously hard for the Democrats to hold onto the seat," Miss Duffy said.

Also on the Republicans' retirement watch is Sen. Bob Graham of Florida, whose late entry into the Democratic presidential race has failed to stir much interest. He has given no clue as to whether he will run for a fourth term if he drops out of the primary contests. Mr. Graham underwent extensive heart surgery earlier this year, and some party advisers said they think he will decide to call it quits.

With Republicans controlling the governorship and 17 of 25 congressional seats, Florida is one of the party's strongest states. Republican Rep. Mark Foley is the front-runner for the nomination, but several Democratic candidates also have indicated their interest if Mr. Graham steps down.

Thus far, Illinois Sen. Peter G. Fitzgerald is the only Republican who has announced that he will not run again, handing the Democrats their best opportunity to pick up a Republican seat. Republicans' attempts to recruit former Gov. Jim Edgar have failed, and eight Democrats are seeking the seat, including millionaire investment banker Blair Hull and trial lawyer John Simmons, who say they are willing to fully finance their races from their personal fortunes.

Sen. Lisa Murkowski, Alaska Republican, also is in jeopardy. She was appointed by her father, Gov. Frank H. Murkowski, to fill his Senate vacancy, and that decision sparked Democratic cries of nepotism that could hurt her. Former Alaska Gov. Tony Knowles, a Democrat, is close to announcing his candidacy for the Senate seat.

MEMORANDUM FOR WHITE HOUSE OFFICE STAFF
OFFICE OF POLICY DEVELOPMENT STAFF
NATIONAL SECURITY COUNCIL STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES, COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

Please read this entire memorandum carefully. It deals with legal obligations that apply to you.

The National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States ("Commission") was established in the legislative branch, principally to inquire into, and report to the President and Congress on, the terrorists attacks of September 11, 2001 and the extent of U.S. preparedness for and immediate response to the attacks (Public Law 107-306, November 27, 2002). The Executive Office of the President (EOP) is cooperating with the Commission effort, consistent with the policy set forth in the memorandum of March 19, 2003 from the President's Chief of Staff.

The Commission has submitted "EOP Document Request No. 2" (attached) seeking executive materials from the EOP. The first category of materials sought by "EOP Document Request No. 2" will be the subject of a separate memorandum. The remaining categories are:

2. The President's Daily Diary for September 11, 2001, and logs from the White House Situation Room, the Presidential Emergency Operations Center (PEOC), and the White House Military Office for September 11, 2001.
3. Contemporaneous notes of individuals present in the PEOC or accompanying the President on September 11, 2001, including notes of White House officials other than the President.
4. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by White House staff of meetings at the principals or deputies level, including the Domestic Consequences Principals Committee, from September 11 through September 20, 2001 that concerned domestic policy responses to the terrorist attacks upon the United States.
5. Information sufficient to describe the activation and implementation of continuity of operations and emergency response plans and measures for the White House complex on September 11, 2001.

You must complete the following steps expeditiously:

1. Search for all materials you possess or control that fall within any of the categories set forth above. Your search for materials must be reasonable, diligent, and conducted in good faith, and must include any materials which may previously have been sent to the Office of Records Management. Retrieve all materials that fall within any of the categories set forth above and photocopy them.
2. Complete the attached certification, attach any photocopies produced under Step 1, and submit the certification and photocopies to Elizabeth Farrell 456-5942, EEOB Room 154, as early as possible but in all events not later than the close of business on Monday, June 16, 2003. NSC staff should submit their signed certification, along with any photocopies produced under Step 1, to William Leary, in the NSC Records Directorate, EEOP Room 392, 456-9201, as early as possible but in all events not later than the close of business on Monday, June 16, 2003.

Also, please be aware that we anticipate additional Commission requests for information concerning the extent of U.S. preparedness for and immediate response to the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001. It is important that you and your staff preserve all records which may potentially be responsive to this or a future request.

Please call Jennifer Newstead, Associate White House Counsel, at 456-1984, if you have any questions. Thank you for your assistance.

EOP DOCUMENT REQUEST No. 2

The National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States (the "Commission") requests that the Executive Office of the President (the "respondent") provide the Commission with the following documents and information no later than June 25, 2003 (the "production date"). The Commission requests that the respondent inform the Commission promptly if the production date poses a problem for certain categories of documents, such as documents from the previous Administration that may be in the custody of the National Archives and Records Administration, and meet promptly with the Commission staff to set a schedule for the production of those documents.

1. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by NSC staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by NSC staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by NSC staff of Principals and Deputies Committee meetings held from January 1, 1998, through September 20, 2001 that concerned:

- (a) Al-Qa'ida, Usama bin Laden, and/or Afghanistan;
- (b) the policy and budget development, implementation, or review of the overall counterterrorism policies of the United States, including PDD-62 (1998), the Five Year Counterterrorism Plan, and any successor NSPDs; and/or
- (c) counterterrorism issues involving threats to or attacks on the United States or American persons or assets in relations with Malaysia, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, the United Arab Emirates, and Yemen, other than materials that focus only on Palestinian terrorist activities.

Principals meetings include any such meeting whether chaired by the President or by the National Security Adviser. This request applies to principals or deputies level meetings addressing these topics wholly or in part regardless of the title used for the group or whether conducted in person or by SVTS, including meetings of the "Foreign Policy Team," the "Small Group," and the Counterterrorism Security Group (including CSG meetings chaired by the National Coordinator), as well as relevant meetings at Camp David.

2. The President's Daily Diary for September 11, 2001, and logs from the White House Situation Room, the Presidential Emergency Operations Center (PEOC), and the White House Military Office for September 11, 2001.

3. Contemporaneous notes of individuals present in the PEOC or accompanying the President on September 11, 2001, including notes of White House officials other than the President. (A request for such documents directed to the Office of the Vice President will be submitted separately.)
4. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by White House staff of meetings at the principals or deputies level, including the Domestic Consequences Principals Committee, from September 11 through September 20, 2001, that concerned domestic policy responses to the terrorist attacks upon the United States.
5. Information sufficient to describe the activation and implementation of continuity of operations and emergency response plans and measures for the White House complex on September 11, 2001.

The Commission requests that the documents requested above be provided as soon as they are available, even though all requested documents may not be provided at the same time, through means of a "rolling" production.

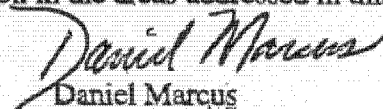

If any requested documents are withheld from production, even temporarily, based on an alleged claim of privilege or for any other reason, the Commission requests that the respondent, as soon as possible and in no event later than the production date, identify and describe each such document or class of documents, as well as the alleged basis for not producing it, with sufficient specificity to allow a meaningful challenge to any such withholding.

If the respondent does not have possession, custody or control of any requested documents but has information about where such documents may be located, the Commission requests that the respondent provide such information as soon as possible and in no event later than the production date.

If the respondent has any questions or concerns about the interpretation or scope of these document requests, the Commission requests that any such questions or concerns be raised with the Commission as soon as possible so that any such issues can be addressed and resolved prior to the production date.

The Commission intends to make further document requests as its work develops and reserves the right to request additional documents and information in the areas addressed in this request.

A quick look at the ten argued cases still pending on the U.S. Supreme Court's docket: With one week remaining on the schedule

<<http://www.supremecourtus.gov>>:

1. United States v. American Library Assn., Inc., involving the constitutionality of a federal law that requires Internet filtering in public libraries (oral argument transcript here

2. Wiggins v. Smith, to what degree must defense counsel in a death penalty case investigate mitigating evidence, perhaps entitling the defendant to a sentence other than death, to be effective (oral argument transcript here

3. Lawrence v. Texas, presenting a constitutional challenge to a state law prohibiting homosexual sodomy (oral argument transcript here <http://www.supremecourtus.gov/oral\_arguments/argument\_transcripts/02-102.pdf>).

4. Stogner v. California, may a State eliminate the statute of limitations applicable to a crime without running afoul of the constitutional rights of those offenders whose prosecution would otherwise be time-barred (oral argument transcript here

5. Grutter v. Bollinger, may a state-run law school use racial preferences in deciding which students to admit (oral argument transcript here

6. Gratz v. Bollinger, may a state-run undergraduate school use racial preferences in deciding which students to admit (oral argument transcript here

7. Green Tree Financial Corp. v. Bazzle, does the Federal Arbitration Act prohibit a case subject to arbitration from proceeding forward in arbitration as a class action where the arbitration agreement is silent on the matter (oral argument transcript here

8. American Ins. Assn. v. Garamendi, does California's Holocaust Victim Insurance Relief Act survive scrutiny under federal law (oral argument transcript here

9. Nike, Inc. v. Kasky, should the "commercial speech" doctrine continue to exist under the First Amendment <<http://www.law.cornell.edu/constitution/constitution.billofrights.html>>, and if so was it properly applied here (oral argument transcript here

10. Georgia v. Ashcroft, a redistricting challenge that could become moot at any second depending on how the Supreme Court of Georgia <<http://www2.state.ga.us/courts/supreme/>> rules in a companion case (oral argument transcript here <http://www.supremecourtus.gov/oral\_arguments/argument\_transcripts/02-182.pdf>).

Republicans poised to strengthen hold on Senate in 2004 elections

By Donald Lambro
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

~~~~~Senate Republicans are in a position to make gains in 2004 because of a combination of vulnerable Democratic seats and likely retirements, according to congressional election analysts.
~~~~~While other political variables, including a weakened economy and a decline in President Bush's popularity, could influence the outcome of next year's Senate races, analysts say Republicans are favored to strengthen their hold on the Senate, which they control 51-48, with one Democratic-leaning independent.
~~~~~"At this point in the cycle, we believe the Republicans are positioned to make Senate gains, most likely in the range of one to three seats. But that could change as retirement decisions are made, and as new economic numbers come in," election analyst Stuart Rothenberg said in his latest newsletter, the Rothenberg Political Report.
~~~~~One advantage for Republicans is that the Democrats have more seats to defend this year * 19 seats compared with 15 for Republicans * and most of the states where these elections will take place are friendlier to Republicans than Democrats.
~~~~~"Only three of the 15 states with GOP senators up for re-election in '04 were won by Democrat Al Gore in 2000 * Illinois, Iowa and Pennsylvania," Mr. Rothenberg said. "In contrast, nine of the 19 states with Democratic senators up for re-election were carried by Gore, nine went for Bush and [Florida] was a virtual tie.

~~~~~"This gives the Republicans an advantage, as long as Bush remains popular. And a Democratic nominee who is associated with the left could add to Democratic Senate problems in those more Republican and conservative states," he said.

~~~~~Other independent Senate election analysts agree with Mr. Rothenberg's overall assessment. "The target list is bigger and friendlier for Republicans. The Democratic target list is a lot smaller," said Jennifer Duffy, who analyzes Senate races for the Cook Political Report.

~~~~~The Democrats' biggest potential problem is that several incumbents who may not seek re-election are from more conservative states that have become increasingly Republican. That could give the Republican Party its best chance in years to pick up several open seats.

~~~~~Democrat Zell Miller of Georgia, one of his party's most conservative legislators, has decided to call it quits after one term, making his seat the Republicans' best bet for a pickup in a state where the Democrats have gone into a steep decline. They lost a Senate race, the governorship and some major state legislative contests last year.

~~~~~Several Republicans are running for the seat, including Reps. Johnny Isakson and Mac Collins. Herman Cain, the chief executive officer of Godfather's Pizza, also is running. A number of Democrats also are thinking about entering the race. Among them are state Attorney General Thurbert Baker and freshman Rep. Jim Marshall.

~~~~~Next on the Democrats' most-vulnerable list is Sen. John Edwards of North Carolina, who has spent most of his first term running for the Democratic presidential nomination.

~~~~~Mr. Edwards, who remains in the low single digits in virtually all of the party primary polls, has not said whether he will seek a second term if he abandons his White House bid. But his home state polls suggest that he is in trouble there. A Raleigh News & Observer survey in May found that 32 percent said he deserved re-election, 32 percent said they would consider another candidate and 35 percent said they would vote to replace him.

~~~~~ Democrats in the state say the senator is under pressure to make a decision about a second term and that he is expected to decide around Labor Day.

~~~~~"I don't think he'll run," Miss Duffy said.

~~~~~Rep. Richard M. Burr, the likely Republican nominee, has raised more than $2 million for the race. Several Democrats have expressed interest in running, including former White House Chief of Staff Erskine Bowles, who lost last year's Senate race to Elizabeth Dole.

~~~~~Seven-term Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, South Carolina Democrat, is likely to announce his retirement, opening up a big opportunity in this strongly Republican state. At 81, he has been sending signals that his wife does not want him to run and he has recently given the Democratic state chairman the green light to look for other candidates.

~~~~~Democrats have a longer list of names of those who are not interested in running for Mr. Hollings' seat than those who are, election analysts say. On the Republican side, Rep. Jim DeMint has been running for months.

~~~~~"Without Hollings in the race, I think it is enormously hard for the Democrats to hold onto the seat," Miss Duffy said.

~~~~~Also on the Republicans' retirement watch is Sen. Bob Graham of Florida, whose late entry into the Democratic presidential race has failed to stir much interest. He has given no clue as to whether he will run for a fourth term if he drops out of the primary contests. Mr. Graham underwent extensive heart surgery earlier this year, and some party advisers said they think he will decide to call it quits.

~~~~~With Republicans controlling the governorship and 17 of 25 congressional seats, Florida is one of the party's strongest states. Republican Rep. Mark Foley is the front-runner for the nomination, but several Democratic candidates also have indicated their interest if Mr. Graham steps down.

~~~~~Thus far, Illinois Sen. Peter G. Fitzgerald is the only Republican who has announced that he will not run again, handing the Democrats their best opportunity to pick up a Republican seat. Republicans' attempts to recruit former Gov. Jim Edgar have failed, and eight Democrats are seeking the seat, including millionaire investment banker Blair Hull and trial lawyer

John Simmons, who say they are willing to fully finance their races from their personal fortunes.

Sen. Lisa Murkowski, Alaska Republican, also is in jeopardy. She was appointed by her father, Gov. Frank H. Murkowski, to fill his Senate vacancy, and that decision sparked Democratic cries of nepotism that could hurt her. Former Alaska Gov. Tony Knowles, a Democrat, is close to announcing his candidacy for the Senate seat.

MEMORANDUM FOR WHITE HOUSE OFFICE STAFF
OFFICE OF POLICY DEVELOPMENT STAFF
NATIONAL SECURITY COUNCIL STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES, COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

Please read this entire memorandum carefully. It deals with legal obligations that apply to you.

The National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States ("Commission") was established in the legislative branch, principally to inquire into, and report to the President and Congress on, the terrorists attacks of September 11, 2001 and the extent of U.S. preparedness for and immediate response to the attacks (Public Law 107-306, November 27, 2002). The Executive Office of the President (EOP) is cooperating with the Commission effort, consistent with the policy set forth in the memorandum of March 19, 2003 from the President's Chief of Staff.

The Commission has submitted "EOP Document Request No. 2" (attached) seeking executive materials from the EOP. The first category of materials sought by "EOP Document Request No. 2" will be the subject of a separate memorandum. The remaining categories are:

2. The President's Daily Diary for September 11, 2001, and logs from the White House Situation Room, the Presidential Emergency Operations Center (PEOC), and the White House Military Office for September 11, 2001.
3. Contemporaneous notes of individuals present in the PEOC or accompanying the President on September 11, 2001, including notes of White House officials other than the President.
4. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by White House staff of meetings at the principals or deputies level, including the Domestic Consequences Principals Committee, from September 11 through September 20, 2001 that concerned domestic policy responses to the terrorist attacks upon the United States.
5. Information sufficient to describe the activation and implementation of continuity of operations and emergency response plans and measures for the White House complex on September 11, 2001.

You must complete the following steps expeditiously:

1. Search for all materials you possess or control that fall within any of the categories set forth above. Your search for materials must be reasonable, diligent, and conducted in good faith, and must include any materials which may previously have been sent to the Office of Records Management. Retrieve all materials that fall within any of the categories set forth above and photocopy them.
2. Complete the attached certification, attach any photocopies produced under Step 1, and submit the certification and photocopies to Elizabeth Farrell 456-5942, EEOB Room 154, as early as possible but in all events not later than the close of business on Monday, June 16, 2003. NSC staff should submit their signed certification, along with any photocopies produced under Step 1, to William Leary, in the NSC Records Directorate, EEOB Room 392, 456-9201, as early as possible but in all events not later than the close of business on Monday, June 16, 2003.

Also, please be aware that we anticipate additional Commission requests for information concerning the extent of U.S. preparedness for and immediate response to the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001. It is important that you and your staff preserve all records which may potentially be responsive to this or a future request.

Please call Jennifer Newstead, Associate White House Counsel, at 456-1984, if you have any questions. Thank you for your assistance.

EOP DOCUMENT REQUEST No. 2

The National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States (the "Commission") requests that the Executive Office of the President (the "respondent") provide the Commission with the following documents and information no later than June 25, 2003 (the "production date"). The Commission requests that the respondent inform the Commission promptly if the production date poses a problem for certain categories of documents, such as documents from the previous Administration that may be in the custody of the National Archives and Records Administration, and meet promptly with the Commission staff to set a schedule for the production of those documents.

1. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by NSC staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by NSC staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by NSC staff of Principals and Deputies Committee meetings held from January 1, 1998, through September 20, 2001 that concerned:

- (a) Al-Qa'ida, Usama bin Laden, and/or Afghanistan;
- (b) the policy and budget development, implementation, or review of the overall counterterrorism policies of the United States, including PDD-62 (1998), the Five Year Counterterrorism Plan, and any successor NSPDs; and/or
- (c) counterterrorism issues involving threats to or attacks on the United States or American persons or assets in relations with Malaysia, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, the United Arab Emirates, and Yemen, other than materials that focus only on Palestinian terrorist activities.

Principals meetings include any such meeting whether chaired by the President or by the National Security Adviser. This request applies to principals or deputies level meetings addressing these topics wholly or in part regardless of the title used for the group or whether conducted in person or by SVTS, including meetings of the "Foreign Policy Team," the "Small Group," and the Counterterrorism Security Group (including CSG meetings chaired by the National Coordinator), as well as relevant meetings at Camp David.

2. The President's Daily Diary for September 11, 2001, and logs from the White House Situation Room, the Presidential Emergency Operations Center (PEOC), and the White House Military Office for September 11, 2001.

3. Contemporaneous notes of individuals present in the PEOC or accompanying the President on September 11, 2001, including notes of White House officials other than the President. (A request for such documents directed to the Office of the Vice President will be submitted separately.)
4. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by White House staff of meetings at the principals or deputies level, including the Domestic Consequences Principals Committee, from September 11 through September 20, 2001, that concerned domestic policy responses to the terrorist attacks upon the United States.
5. Information sufficient to describe the activation and implementation of continuity of operations and emergency response plans and measures for the White House complex on September 11, 2001.

The Commission requests that the documents requested above be provided as soon as they are available, even though all requested documents may not be provided at the same time, through means of a "rolling" production.

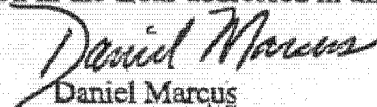

If any requested documents are withheld from production, even temporarily, based on an alleged claim of privilege or for any other reason, the Commission requests that the respondent, as soon as possible and in no event later than the production date, identify and describe each such document or class of documents, as well as the alleged basis for not producing it, with sufficient specificity to allow a meaningful challenge to any such withholding.

If the respondent does not have possession, custody or control of any requested documents but has information about where such documents may be located, the Commission requests that the respondent provide such information as soon as possible and in no event later than the production date.

If the respondent has any questions or concerns about the interpretation or scope of these document requests, the Commission requests that any such questions or concerns be raised with the Commission as soon as possible so that any such issues can be addressed and resolved prior to the production date.

The Commission intends to make further document requests as its work develops and reserves the right to request additional documents and information in the areas addressed in this request.

MEMORANDUM FOR WHITE HOUSE OFFICE STAFF
OFFICE OF POLICY DEVELOPMENT STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES, COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

Please read this entire memorandum carefully. It deals with legal obligations that apply to you.

The National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States ("Commission") was established in the legislative branch, principally to inquire into, and report to the President and Congress on, the terrorists attacks of September 11, 2001 and the extent of U.S. preparedness for and immediate response to the attacks (Public Law 107-306, November 27, 2002). The Executive Office of the President (EOP) is cooperating with the Commission effort, consistent with the policy set forth in the memorandum of March 19, 2003 from the President's Chief of Staff.

The Commission has submitted "EOP Document Request No. 2" (attached) seeking executive materials from the EOP. The first category of materials sought by "EOP Document Request No. 2" will be the subject of a separate memorandum. The remaining categories are:

2. The President's Daily Diary for September 11, 2001, and logs from the White House Situation Room, the Presidential Emergency Operations Center (PEOC), and the White House Military Office for September 11, 2001.
3. Contemporaneous notes of individuals present in the PEOC or accompanying the President on September 11, 2001, including notes of White House officials other than the President.
4. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by White House staff of meetings at the principals or deputies level, including the Domestic Consequences Principals Committee, from September 11 through September 20, 2001 that concerned domestic policy responses to the terrorist attacks upon the United States.
5. Information sufficient to describe the activation and implementation of continuity of operations and emergency response plans and measures for the White House complex on September 11, 2001.

You must complete the following steps expeditiously:

1. Search for all materials you possess or control that fall within any of the categories set forth above. Your search for materials must be reasonable, diligent, and conducted in good faith, and must include any materials which may previously have been sent to the Office of Records Management. Retrieve all materials that fall within any of the categories set forth above and photocopy them.
2. Complete the attached certification, attach any photocopies produced under Step 1, and submit the certification and photocopies to Elizabeth Farrell 456-5942, EEOB Room 154, as early as possible but in all events not later than the close of business on Monday, June 16, 2003. NSC staff should submit their signed certification, along with any photocopies produced under Step 1, to William Leary, in the NSC Records Directorate, EEOP Room 392, 456-9201, as early as possible but in all events not later than the close of business on Monday, June 16, 2003.

Also, please be aware that we anticipate additional Commission requests for information concerning the extent of U.S. preparedness for and immediate response to the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001. It is important that you and your staff preserve all records which may potentially be responsive to this or a future request.

Please call Jennifer Newstead, Associate White House Counsel, at 456-1984, if you have any questions. Thank you for your assistance.

EOP DOCUMENT REQUEST No. 2

The National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States (the "Commission") requests that the Executive Office of the President (the "respondent") provide the Commission with the following documents and information no later than June 25, 2003 (the "production date"). The Commission requests that the respondent inform the Commission promptly if the production date poses a problem for certain categories of documents, such as documents from the previous Administration that may be in the custody of the National Archives and Records Administration, and meet promptly with the Commission staff to set a schedule for the production of those documents.

1. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by NSC staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by NSC staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by NSC staff of Principals and Deputies Committee meetings held from January 1, 1998, through September 20, 2001 that concerned:

- (a) Al-Qa'ida, Usama bin Laden, and/or Afghanistan;
- (b) the policy and budget development, implementation, or review of the overall counterterrorism policies of the United States, including PDD-62 (1998), the Five Year Counterterrorism Plan, and any successor NSPDs; and/or
- (c) counterterrorism issues involving threats to or attacks on the United States or American persons or assets in relations with Malaysia, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, the United Arab Emirates, and Yemen, other than materials that focus only on Palestinian terrorist activities.

Principals meetings include any such meeting whether chaired by the President or by the National Security Adviser. This request applies to principals or deputies level meetings addressing these topics wholly or in part regardless of the title used for the group or whether conducted in person or by SVTS, including meetings of the "Foreign Policy Team," the "Small Group," and the Counterterrorism Security Group (including CSG meetings chaired by the National Coordinator), as well as relevant meetings at Camp David.

2. The President's Daily Diary for September 11, 2001, and logs from the White House Situation Room, the Presidential Emergency Operations Center (PEOC), and the White House Military Office for September 11, 2001.

3. Contemporaneous notes of individuals present in the PEOC or accompanying the President on September 11, 2001, including notes of White House officials other than the President. (A request for such documents directed to the Office of the Vice President will be submitted separately.)
4. The briefing materials prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees for; any summaries prepared or compiled by White House staff and distributed to attendees of the discussions held at and/or conclusions emerging from; and any minutes prepared or compiled by White House staff of meetings at the principals or deputies level, including the Domestic Consequences Principals Committee, from September 11 through September 20, 2001, that concerned domestic policy responses to the terrorist attacks upon the United States.
5. Information sufficient to describe the activation and implementation of continuity of operations and emergency response plans and measures for the White House complex on September 11, 2001.

The Commission requests that the documents requested above be provided as soon as they are available, even though all requested documents may not be provided at the same time, through means of a "rolling" production.

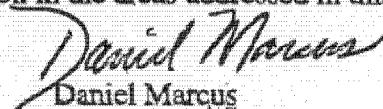

If any requested documents are withheld from production, even temporarily, based on an alleged claim of privilege or for any other reason, the Commission requests that the respondent, as soon as possible and in no event later than the production date, identify and describe each such document or class of documents, as well as the alleged basis for not producing it, with sufficient specificity to allow a meaningful challenge to any such withholding.

If the respondent does not have possession, custody or control of any requested documents but has information about where such documents may be located, the Commission requests that the respondent provide such information as soon as possible and in no event later than the production date.

If the respondent has any questions or concerns about the interpretation or scope of these document requests, the Commission requests that any such questions or concerns be raised with the Commission as soon as possible so that any such issues can be addressed and resolved prior to the production date.

The Commission intends to make further document requests as its work develops and reserves the right to request additional documents and information in the areas addressed in this request.
