This set the stage for the September 5, 1986 meeting, at which the representatives for Uniroyal and Plastics told Polycast of the $13.3 million "rock bottom" 1986 earnings forecast for Plastics. Further negotiations between the parties ensued. Eventually, on September 23, 1986, Polycast agreed to purchase Plastics for $111.6 million. The SPA was amended on that date to reflect the new purchase price and a new closing date. Id. at 122.

The purchase price was reduced one more time following a telephone conversation on October 27, 1986, between Weber and Richard Schneider, Polycast's president. In that conversation Weber acknowledged that Plastics would not achieve its sales forecast for the month of October 1986. Polycast then negotiated a reduction in the purchase price from $111.6 to $110 million. The parties executed a further amendment to the SPA reflecting that reduction. Unlike the prior amendment reducing the purchase price to $111.6 million, the amendment did not refer to or change Uniroyal's previous 1986 earnings forecast for Plastics. The transaction closed on October 31, 1986, at the $110 million purchase price. Id. at ¶ 123.

As for the projections of Plastics' earnings for 1987 through 1990, the complaint alleges at ¶ 72 that on or about July 2, 1986, Donald A. Ware, the assistant corporate controller of Uniroyal, sent to Drexel documents forecasting Plastics' earnings before interest and taxes of $17.6 million during 1986, and forecasts of $20.7 million, $22.7 million, $24.9 million, and $27.0 million for 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990 respectively. Plaintiffs allege that these forecasts for the later years were based in part on the then-existing $17.6 million forecast for 1986, which defendants knew to be false. Complaint at ¶ 74.

*251 The third specific area of fraud plaintiffs allege concerns a contract Plastics had to supply the Northrop Corporation with fuel cells for the F/A-18 military fighter plane. The presentations made by Uniroyal and Plastics representatives to Polycast projected sales by Plastics to Northrop of these fuel cells. In mid-September 1986, Northrop cancelled its contract with Plastics. Uniroyal and Plastics did not advise Polycast of that cancellation and Polycast did not learn of it until after the closing. Polycast alleges that defendants engaged in the fraudulent non-disclosure of a material fact. Complaint at ¶¶ 106-111.

Plaintiffs place primary emphasis upon the $13.3 million estimate of Plastics' 1986 earnings articulated at the September 5, 1986 meeting. All defendants argue that as a matter of law Polycast cannot establish reliance, cognizable damages or loss causation with respect to that earnings estimate. The C & D defendants also argue that they are entitled to summary judgment on the element of scienter.

The appropriateness of summary judgment depends in part upon the "governing law," Anderson at 250, 106 S.Ct. at 2511. The trial judge must "view the evidence through the prism of the substantive evidentiary burden."

Id. at 254, 106 S.Ct. at 2513.

[3][4] In order to establish a claim for securities fraud under section 10(b) of the 1934 Act, a plaintiff must allege and prove "that, in connection with the purchase or sale of securities, the defendant, acting with scienter, made a false material representation or omitted to disclose material information and that plaintiff's reliance on defendant's actions caused him injury." Bloor v. Carro, Spanbock, Londin, Rodman & Fass, 754 F.2d 57, 61 (2d Cir.1985). In federal securities cases the plaintiff's burden of proof is the "preponderance-of-the-evidence standard generally applicable in civil actions." Herman and MacLean v. Huddelston, 459 U.S. 375, 390, 103 S.Ct. 683, 691, 74 L.Ed.2d 548 (1983). As the Second Circuit observed in Weinberger v. Kendrick, 698 F.2d 61, 78 (2d Cir.1982), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 818, 104 S.Ct. 77, 78 L.Ed.2d 89 (1983), "the plaintiff's burden of proof in a common law fraud case--clear and convincing evidence--is more demanding than in a Rule 10b-5 case." (construing New York law).

[5][6] Defendants at bar acknowledge that the forecasts of Plastics' 1986 earnings were given "in connection with the purchase or sale of securities," namely, the Plastics stock which Polycast bought. Defendants argue, however, that the September 5, 1986 forecast of $13.3 million in 1986 earnings was a forecast, and not a guarantee. Defendants cite Second Circuit authority for the propositions that "[e]conomic prognostication, though faulty, does not, without more, amount to fraud," Decker v. Massey-Ferguson, Ltd., 681 F.2d 111, 117 (2d Cir.1982) (quoting Polin v. Conductron Corp., 552 F.2d 797, 805 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 857, 98 S.Ct. 178, 54 L.Ed.2d 129 (1977)); and "[t]he sole factual elements of a projection should be that it represents management's view, that it was reached in a rational fashion and that it is a sincere view." Marx v. Computer Sciences Corp., 507 F.2d 485, 490 n. 7 (9th Cir.1974). However, as the cases cited by defendants themselves suggest, economic estimates, forecasts or projections are not insulated from claims for fraud if they were put forward in bad faith, with awareness of their inaccuracy, and an intent to deceive. "Liability may follow where management intentionally fosters a mistaken belief concerning a material fact, such as its evaluation of the company's progress and earnings prospects in the current year." Elkind v. Liggett & Myers, Inc., 635 F.2d 156, 164 (2d Cir.1980).

Defendants do not suggest that the $13.3 million earnings forecast was not a material fact in the context of the proposed purchase. There is sufficient evidence to permit a jury to find that a number of Uniroyal and Plastics officers deliberately concocted false earnings forecasts, including the $13.3 million estimate, in order to induce Polycast to purchase Plastics. Defendants argue in their briefs that these charges of falsity and scienter depend solely on the testimony of T. Oliver Kirrane, a *252 former Plastics officer. In point of fact, there is more evidence in plaintiffs' favor on the issues than that; but even if plaintiffs' case depended entirely upon the testimony of Kirrane, who the jury could find refused to go along with the fraud, his credibility would be for the jury to evaluate.

Sensibly enough, defendants do not press these points. Rather, they focus upon reliance and causation.

[7] Defendants argue that Polycast did not rely on the $13.3 million estimate. They find support for that proposition in disclaimers Polycast included in a private placement memorandum it prepared in October 1986 with a view towards financing its purchase of Plastics. Polycast included in that memorandum the earnings projections provided by Plastics and Uniroyal, and said of them:

The projections are based upon estimates and assumptions about circumstances and events that have not yet taken place, are subject to customary uncertainties inherent in making projections and may be materially affected by changes in circumstances and numerous other variables, many of which are difficult to predict and beyond the control of Polycast and Uniroyal Plastics. Therefore, the actual results achieved will vary from the projections, these variation may be material and there can be no assurance that the projected results will be attained.

Secondly, defendants rely upon communications between Uniroyal and Plastics on the one hand and Polycast on the other between September 5, 1986 and the October 31, 1986 closing. Fulfillment of the $13.3 million estimated earnings during 1986 depended in part upon Plastics' earnings during September and October 1986. Defendants point to the allegation in ¶ 123 of the complaint that "[i]n response to repeated inquiries from plaintiffs, during October 1986 Uniroyal disclosed to plaintiffs certain preliminary financial information purporting to record business activity at Plastics during September 1986", which "suggested that Plastics had not met certain financial targets for September." Defendants in their main brief at 33 omit the next sentence from ¶ 123 of the complaint, which reads: "However, defendants did not withdraw Uniroyal's 1986 earnings forecast for Plastics of $13.3 million and failed to disclose that Plastics' earnings would be materially lower than $13.3 million." That omitted language undermines the effectiveness of any admission that might otherwise be derived from the pleading.

On the reliance issue, defendants stress particularly the telephone conversation on October 27, 1986, between Weber and Schneider. In the October 27, 1986 telephone conversation between Schneider and Weber, Weber told Schneider that Plastics anticipated a shortfall of approximately $2 million in projected sales for October, with a corresponding decline of approximately $760,000 in earnings that month. Weber and Schneider did not discuss the $13.3 million estimate in their October 27 conversation. Schneider became angry. He told Weber that Polycast was paying too much for Plastics and would "take the price down." Weber Dep. at 1782. On October 29, 1986 Polycast demanded and ultimately received a $1.6 million reduction on the purchase price for Plastics: from $111.6 million to $110 million, the figure at which the deal closed on October 31. Polycast advised its potential investors that the reduction in the purchase price resulted from reductions in Plastics' projected earnings.

These facts are for the most part undisputed. The question is whether, as defendants contend, they establish that Polycast did not rely on the $13.3 estimate conveyed on September 5, 1986 in deciding to purchase Plastics at the reduced price of $110 million on October 31. Defendants say that "as a result of information provided by Uniroyal for days before the closing, Polycast did not in fact rely upon the $13.3 million projection." Reply Brief at 5.

The jury could find that Uniroyal and Plastics officers fraudulently concocted the $13.3 million forecast, which bore no resemblance to economic reality, for the express purpose of luring Polycast into going through with the deal. The jury could find this to be a modus operandi, infecting and *253 tainting the prior earning estimates. For example, there is evidence from which the jury could find that in August 1986 Flannery threatened to fire Weber after Weber told Polycast at a meeting that Plastics would earn less than the then existing estimate, and that Flannery explicitly rejected the advice of house counsel, including Elton, that all business data be disclosed to Polycast.

The jury could further find, as plaintiffs argue in their briefs, that Plastics earned only $5.2 million in 1986, and that had plaintiffs known of the depth of the deception practiced upon them, they would not have closed the deal.

I do not say that the jury will make these findings. However, viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, as required by the cases, the jury could do so.

What does "reliance" mean in this context? No rational jury could find that at the time of closing plaintiffs relied on the $13.3 million projection as "bankable", in the sense represented during the September 5 meeting:

"not subject to reduction." That perception could not, and did not, survive Schneider's October 27 conversation with Weber. Schneider, content to pay $111.6 million for Plastics on the basis of the September 5 $13.3 million projection, was content no longer. Concern for the earnings projection fueled that discontent, and led to a reduced purchase price.

But the jury could find that at the time of closing Polycast believed that the $13.3 million projection, while no longer "bankable" in that precise amount, had nonetheless been calculated and communicated in good faith by Uniroyal and Plastics. The jury could find, in other words, that Polycast continued to rely on the integrity of the process, although it no longer relied on the particular end figure. The distinction is pragmatic and accords with common sense. Plaintiffs' fraud claim is not so much that the particular $13.3 million was inaccurate, but that the process producing the projection was corrupt: a conclusion the jury could easily reach if it accepts the testimony of Kirrane, arguably corroborated by other evidence.

Polycast was entitled to rely on the defendants' good faith in projecting Plastics' earnings. It was entitled to rely on the integrity of the $13.3 million projection, even if probable cause had arisen to doubt its accuracy. If Polycast had known then what discovery has arguably revealed about the corruption of the process, it is not fanciful to suggest that plaintiffs would have cancelled the deal. At least the jury could draw that inference. Therefore, in a real sense, Polycast continued to rely on the $13.3 million estimate; or so a jury could find.

Was that continued reliance reasonable? "Whether or not reliance was justifiable is ordinarily a question of fact to be determined by the trier of fact on all of the facts and circumstances proven at trial." Stratford Group Ltd. v. Interstate Bakeries, 590 F.Supp. 859, 865 (S.D.N.Y.1984) (construing New York law). The contentions of the parties with respect to reliance raise issues of fact for trial.

[8] As for cancellation of the Northrop contract, Uniroyal and Plastics chose not to disclose the cancellation to Polycast before the closing. Accordingly "positive proof of reliance is not a prerequisite for recovery. All that is necessary is that the facts withheld be material in the sense that a reasonable investor might have considered them important in the making of [the] decision." Affiliated Ute Citizens of Utah v. United States, 406 U.S. 128, 153-54, 92 S.Ct. 1456, 1472, 31 L.Ed.2d 741 (1972). The jury could find that cancellation of the Northrop contract was material. The jurors could consider the doomsday expressions of alarm voiced by Plastics and Uniroyal officers when contemplating the possibility of a cancellation. To be sure, defendants now contend that the Northrop cancellation was a blessing in disguise because the contract was losing Plastics money. Plaintiffs dispute that proposition. The question is one of considerable cost accounting and economic complexity. It poses a triable issue of fact.

[9] *254 As for the estimates of Plastics' 1987-1990 earnings, Judge Walker recognized in one of his prior opinions that plaintiffs allege these later forecasts were " 'based in part' on the allegedly false 1986 forecasts." 728 F.Supp. at 942-43. Plaintiffs' fraud claim arising out of these later estimates poses triable issues of fact.

Defendants argue that since plaintiffs' investment bankers at the Boston office of Drexel Burnham Lambert formulated their own reduced projection for 1987 through 1990 earnings, Polycast cannot be said in law to have relied upon the higher estimates furnished by defendants on July 2, 1986. It is true that Drexel Boston performed such calculations in connection with the private placement memorandum issued by plaintiffs in October 1986. But the jury could find that all plaintiffs and their advisers did was to reduce the 1987-1990 forecasts proportionately to Uniroyal's reduction of Plastics' 1986 earnings to $13.3 million, so that in practical effect defendants were also responsible for these later projections by the other side.

[10] Next the defendants argue that plaintiffs cannot prove causation. With respect to the $13.3 million 1986 estimate, they argue, first, that the estimate did not cause Polycast any "cognizable damages"; and second, that even if damages occurred, plaintiffs cannot prove loss causation.

On the first of these contentions, defendants rely upon particular declarations made by or on behalf of plaintiffs which they regard as admissions against interest. In February 1987 Schneider met with officers of the Continental Illinois Bank and Trust Company of Chicago, a potential lender, and said according to contemporaneous documentary evidence that the $110 million purchase price paid "is fair from an historical earnings viewpoint but can be considered a bargain price if the future potential of the company is considered."

Secondly, defendants point to consolidated financial statements in UPAC's Form 10K for the year ended September 1987. Those financials included an entry for $75 million of goodwill arising from the acquisition of Plastics, which defendants say "reflects the difference between the $110 million purchase price, plus contingent liabilities recorded, less the value of Plastics' assets." Main brief at 38. The SEC staff, responding to that Form 10K, noted that while UPAC recognized and recorded on its balance sheet in September 27, 1987 $75 million in goodwill resulting from the acquisition of Plastics, it had also disclosed that Polycast had commenced suit against Uniroyal for not less than $75 million in damages caused by misrepresentations concerning Plastics' financial state, earnings potential and operating conditions. The SEC staff regarded these statements as inconsistent and asked for an explanation. Defendants contend that the reference to goodwill demonstrates as a matter of law that the purchase of Plastics caused plaintiffs no cognizable damage, as that concept is defined in section 10(b) actions by Randall v. Loftsgaardan, 478 U.S. 647, 661-662, 106 S.Ct. 3143, 3152, 92 L.Ed.2d 525 (1986) (out-of-pocket measure of damages consists of the difference between the fair value of all that the purchaser received and the fair value of what he would have received had there been no fraudulent conduct).

Plaintiffs respond that Schneider's statements to the Continental Illinois Bank as reflected in the pertinent exhibit could not have been made later than February 1987, when Schneider made his presentation to that potential investor. Schneider told the bank that, based upon his then existing impressions, Plastics would earn $10 million in 1986 and $17 million in 1987. These amounts were less than defendants had represented. More significant to the present question, plaintiffs say without contradiction that the field work on the audit of Plastics' financial statements for the ten months ended October 31, 1986 was not completed until May 1987; and it was not until then that Polycast learned that Plastics only earned $3.709 million for those 10 months. Plaintiffs say that Schneider's statements to the bank in February 1987 prove nothing more than the depth of defendants' deception.

*255 As for UPAC's correspondence with the SEC staff, plaintiffs point out that eventually the SEC concluded there was no inconsistency between the lawsuit's claims against Uniroyal and the goodwill entry in the Form 10K. That was because UPAC had allocated the goodwill to Plastics' profitable businesses, which were expected to generate sufficient pre-tax income to allow amortization of the allocated goodwill over 14 years. At the conclusion of the correspondence, the SEC was content to require UPAC and Polycast to agree that they would credit any recovery from the litigation to goodwill.

These declarations are admissible against plaintiffs under Rule 801(d)(2), F.R.Evid. However, they fall well short of establishing as a matter of law that plaintiffs suffered no cognizable economic loss, particularly since economic loss in section 10(b) cases may in certain circumstances be measured by "out-of-pocket loss, the benefit of the bargain, or some other appropriate standard." Osofsky v. Zipf, 645 F.2d 107, 111 (2d Cir.1981). Conceptually at least, a party's admissions may demonstrate beyond cavil that it has suffered no economic loss; but plaintiffs' explanations for and interpretations of the declarations upon which defendants rely pose triable issues.

Defendants also note that Polycast sold three of Plastics' businesses for amounts totalling $91 million, and indicated to the SEC that it had received offers for others. Defendants say that accordingly the total proceeds of the divestiture of Plastics' businesses "would far exceed the price Polycast paid for Plastics," main brief at 40, so that Polycast suffered no loss. Plaintiffs respond that these gross sales prices were acquired at the cost of plaintiffs assuming "immense liabilities" under the SPA, such as unfunded pension liabilities (estimated at approximately $75 million before tax or $54 million net of tax) and environmental liabilities (estimated at $13 million). Defendants reply that nonetheless, Polycast has realized a net gain (that is, the price exceeded the cash cost and the liabilities assumed) on the businesses it has sold. Reply brief at 21 n. 13.

[11] I decline to hold this record or in response to these arguments that plaintiffs cannot establish a cognizable economic loss as a matter of law. Defendants confine their analysis to out-of-pocket loss, but this is not an exclusive measure of compensatory damages, as the Second Circuit held in Osofsky. Benefit-of-the-bargain is a possible alternative measure of compensatory damages. In Levine v. Seilon, Inc., 439 F.2d 328, 334 (2d Cir.1971), Judge Friendly said in dictum that in section 10(b) cases a defrauded buyer of securities "is entitled to recover only the excess of what he paid over the value of what he got, not, as some other courts had held, the difference between the value of what he got and what it was represented he would be getting." More recently the Second Circuit has extended the benefit-of-the-bargain measure of damages under the 1934 Act to the "limited situation" where "misrepresentation is made in the tender offer and proxy solicitation materials as to the consideration to be forthcoming upon an intended merger." Osofsky at 114. But see Freschi v. Grand Coal Venture, 588 F.Supp. 1257, 1259 (S.D.N.Y.1984) (limiting Osofsky to its facts and applying out-of-pocket measure of loss to section 10(b) claim).

On this motion for summary judgment, I need not further consider the present state of appellate authority on the measures of compensatory damages available to buyers under the 1934 Act because plaintiffs at bar also assert claims for common law fraud. In Osofsky the Second Circuit said that "the benefit-of-the-bargain measure of compensatory damages is recognized as the preferable measure in common law fraud actions." Citing Prosser's text and the Restatement (Second) of Torts (1977) for that proposition, Judge Oakes went on to say at 114:

Thus, the Restatement (Second) of Torts § 549(2) (1977) provides, in the case of a fraudulent misrepresentation in a business transaction, for the recovery of "damages sufficient to give [the recipient] the benefit of his contract with the maker, if these damages are proved with reasonable certainty." Though out-of- *256 pocket loss may be the usual and logical form of compensatory relief in tort actions, Comment g on section 549(2) explains that this measure of damages does not always afford "just and satisfactory" compensation when the plaintiff has made a bargain based on fraudulent representations by the defendant. Therefore "the great majority of the American courts [have adopted] a broad general rule giving the plaintiff, in an action of deceit, the benefit of his bargain with the defendant in all cases, and making that the normal measure of recovery in actions of deceit." Id. Otherwise, in situations such as that involved in the instant case, "the defendant [would be] enabled to speculate on his fraud and still be assured that he [could] suffer no pecuniary loss," id. at Comment i.

That analysis applies squarely to the present plaintiffs' common law fraud claim, which a jury could conclude had been shown by clear and convincing evidence.

Even if the analysis be confined to out-of-pocket compensatory damages, plaintiffs' expert witness is prepared to testify that "Plastics was worth approximately $60 million on October 31, 1986." Plaintiff's brief at 67. If the jury accepts that figure, the $110 million purchase price establishes an out-of-pocket losses. To be sure, expert evaluations are subject to cross-examination and challenge; but that is the function of plenary trials, not summary dispositions.

Defendants are not entitled to summary judgment on the basis that plaintiffs suffered no cognizable damage as a matter of law. In reaching that conclusion, I have considered all of the evidence culled by the defendants from the extensive discovery record in support of their contentions, whether or not specifically addressed supra.

[12] The C & D defendants require separate consideration. They contend that even if "there is sufficient evidence as to misrepresentation and loss causation to go to the jury," defendants' brief at 88 (and there is), nonetheless the fraud claims must be dismissed as to the C & D defendants because there is no evidence suggesting they were involved in the formulation of Plastics' earning projections, including the $13.3 million projection upon which plaintiffs' fraud claims are primarily based, or that the C & D defendants had the intent to deceive plaintiffs.

In his opinion reported at 728 F.Supp. 926, Judge Walker held that Polycast's third amended complaint (identical to the present pleading in this respect) sufficiently alleged scienter on the part of the C & D defendants. Judge Walker focused upon the alleged participation of Rice and Dubilier in the events surrounding the offering of Plastics for sale and the ultimate consummation of the sale to Polycast. Judge Walker concluded his discussion on the point by saying: "Polycast's allegations of Rice and Dubilier's beneficial interest in Uniroyal's assets implicitly established a motive for committing fraud. The allegations of their involvement in the preparation of the offering memorandum demonstrate an opportunity for doing so and support the inference of knowledge on their part." Id. at 936.

The C & D defendants now argue that the allegations sufficient to support an inference of scienter have been proven hollow by the evidence, or lack of evidence, adduced during discovery. They pray for summary judgment dismissing the fraud claims against them for that reason. Consistent with the authorities cited supra, my proper function is to assess whether the C & D defendants' scienter (obviously a material fact under the governing law) presents a genuine issue requiring trial. In answering that question, I resolve all ambiguities in the evidence and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of plaintiffs and against the C & D defendants.

The motive of Rice and Dubilier to commit fraud upon a purchaser of a Uniroyal asset such as Plastics is manifest. Rice and Dubilier managed all the C & D Entities. Those entities held a 32.5% equity interest in Uniroyal. The leveraged buyout had saddled Uniroyal with $900 million in debt. To maximize a return to the C & D entities, it was necessary to maximize the *257 sale price of a Uniroyal asset like Plastics. These economic truths are illustrated by a post-closing cash distribution which occurred in December 1986. At that time C & D Private Equity received 32.5% of the cash distribution, or $60,206,250; C & D Associates received $6 or $7 million; and Rice and Dubilier each received approximately 45% of that amount.

A section 10(b) plaintiff must prove its case by a preponderance of the evidence only, and not by clear and convincing evidence. See Herman & MacLean v. Huddleston, 459 U.S. 375, 390-91, 103 S.Ct. 683, 692, 74 L.Ed.2d 548 (1983). As for scienter the Court said at 390 n. 30, 103 S.Ct. at 692 n. 30:

The Court of Appeals also noted that the proof of scienter required in fraud cases is often a matter of inference from circumstantial evidence. If anything, the difficulty of proving the defendant's state of mind supports a lower standard of proof. In any event, we have noted elsewhere that circumstantial evidence can be more than sufficient. (citing cases).

[13] Motive based upon personal gain is a recognized circumstance from which intent to commit fraud may be inferred. Rice and Dubilier had that motive to commit fraud upon a purchaser of Plastics.

Another circumstance is whether Rice and Dubilier should be regarded as "insiders" or "outsiders" in the conduct of Uniroyal's affairs.

At the pertinent times Rice and Dubilier, together with Flannery, Uniroyal's chairman, chief executive officer and president, comprised the company's three-man executive committee. Nonetheless, Rice and Dubilier say they should not be considered Uniroyal insiders. They cite Lanza v. Drexel & Co., 479 F.2d 1277, 1306 (2d Cir.1973) for that proposition. In Lanza the Second Circuit adopted an academic definition of "outside directors-i.e., directors who are not full-time employees of the corporation." Id. at 1306 (quoting Bishop, Sitting Ducks and Decoy Ducks: New Trends in the Indemnification Of Corporate Directors and Officers, 77 Yale L.J. 1078, 1092 (1968)).

More recently, the Second Circuit has said in evaluating a pleading of fraud under Rule 9(b), Fed.R.Civ.P. that no specific connections between fraudulent representations and particular defendants are necessary where "defendants are insiders or affiliates participating in the offer of the securities in question." Luce v. Edelstein, 802 F.2d 49, 55 (2d Cir.1986). See also DiVittorio v. Equidyne Extractive Industries, Inc., 822 F.2d 1242, 1247 (2d Cir.1987) (citing and applying Luce).

Applying that somewhat expanded definition of "insider" to the proof developed through discovery, I conclude that a jury could rationally regard Rice and Dubilier as Uniroyal "insiders or affiliates participating in the offer" of Plastics for sale. Accordingly the status of Rice and Dubilier is also a circumstance which the jury may consider on the issue of scienter.

The membership of Rice and Dubilier on the three-man Uniroyal Executive Committee is not determinative of the issue, although certainly it is probative. As defendants observe, between meetings of the full board of directors its powers were delegated to the executive committee; "Rice and Dubilier were never officers of Uniroyal or Plastics, and they played no role in the day-to-day management of either company." Reply Brief at 33-34. True enough, if by "day-to-day management" we mean the shipping of orders, collection of bills, and controlling inventory. But the issue is whether Rice and Dubilier were "insiders or affiliates participating in the offer" of Plastics for sale and the consummation of that sale to Polycast. There is sufficient evidence to allow that characterization. On some occasions Dubilier, on other occasions Rice attended meetings or engaged in conversations with officers of Uniroyal concerning forecasts to be included in the offering memorandum, as well as subsequent reductions in the 1986 Plastics earnings estimate, and what should be done about those reductions in the context of the ongoing negotiations with Polycast. These and other meetings and conversations *258 gave rise to contemporaneous notes or testimonial recollections the import of which the parties dispute, but to the extent they militate in favor of plaintiffs must on this motion be construed in their favor. For example, it is common ground that on February 26, 1986 Dubilier had a conversation with Graham about the offering memorandum's references to Uniroyal's projected financials. Graham made a contemporaneous note of that conversation which reads: "M. Dubilier. Tone down the language or increase the forecast." Graham, also a defendant in the case, testified that Dubilier said that the language in the offering memorandum was "too optimistic" because "it doesn't correspond with the numbers. So if the numbers are what they are, you better tone the language down because it's too positive." Graham Dep. at 258. Defendants say in their brief at 95 that "the only reasonable inference" to be drawn from Graham's testimony "is that Dubilier wanted the offering memorandum to be as accurate as possible, and took what steps were necessary to insure that it was." The trouble is that Graham's testimony dealt with only part of what his note records Dubilier as having said, namely, "tone down the language or increase the forecast." A jury could rationally regard the alternative suggested solution, namely increasing the forecast to square with the "positive" language, as a badge of fraud. The jury could also accept the testimony of Jonathan Furer, a Polycast officer, that at the crucial September 5, 1986 meeting where the $13.3 million projected 1986 earnings for Plastics was put forward as a rock bottom figure, Rice uttered reassurances purported by based upon his own prior experience in similar situations.

To be sure, there is no evidence in the record directly establishing that either Rice or Dubilier knew that the $13.3 million projection was false, or that they had expressed the specific intent to defraud Polycast. But there need not be, given the holding in Herman & Maclean v. Huddelston, supra, that scienter may be and often is proved by inferences from circumstantial evidence. Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to plaintiffs, as I am required to do, I conclude that the scienter of the C & D defendants is for the jury.

Plaintiffs are also entitled to have the jury consider their alternative theory of section 10(b) liability, that Rice and Dubilier acted with reckless disregard of the fraud of others. Even outside directors may be liable if they "failed or refused, after being put on notice of a possible material failure of disclosure, to apprise themselves of the facts where they could have done so without any extraordinary effort." Lanza v. Drexel & Co., supra, at 479 F.2d 1306 n. 98. Rice and Dubilier acknowledged that they knew of Uniroyal's several reductions in the Plastics earnings forecasts during 1986. Rice said he made no effort to find out only the forecasts were reduced, but conceded that "I could pick up the telephone any time I wanted to and call [Flannery] and say, what did the earnings do." Rice Dep. at 329-30. The ability of Rice and Dubilier to get to the bottom of the forecast reductions is inherent in their positions as members of Uniroyal's executive committee. Accepting for the sake of this analysis that Rice & Dubilier knew nothing about the reasons for the reductions in forecasts, there is evidence from which the jury could find that without "extraordinary effort" they could have discovered that Uniroyal officers were engaging in fraud.

[14][15] Lastly the liability of the C & D defendants, or at least of Rice and Dubilier as controlling persons of Uniroyal, presents a triable issue. As Judge Walker has held in the case at bar, controlling person liability under § 20(a) does not require proof of scienter. Liability attaches if there was a primary violation, control of the primary violator by the defendant and the defendant's culpable participation in the actions forming the predicate for the securities law violation. [1988-89 Transfer Binder] Fed.Sec.L.Rep. (CCH) ¶ 94,005 at 90,695-96, 1988 WL 96586. Whether or not in the particular circumstances of this case it is the C & D defendants' burden to prove good faith, cf. Marbury Management, Inc. v. Kohn, 629 F.2d 705, 716 (2d Cir.), cert. denied sub nom *Wood Walker & Co. v. 259 Marbury Management, Inc., 449 U.S. 1011, 101 S.Ct. 566, 66 L.Ed.2d 469 (1980), the issues of the control Rice and Dubilier exercised over Uniroyal in the conduct of the sales negotiations, and the propriety of that conduct, give rise to triable issues.

I deny the motions of all defendants for summary judgment dismissing the section 10(b) and common law fraud claims.

The Section 12(2) Claim

Plaintiffs' second and third claims allege violation of section 12(2) of the Securities Act of 1933, 15 U.S.C. § 771(2). The second claim charges all defendants with violating that section. Some are charged as principals, others as aiders and abettors or controlling persons. The third claim charges the C & D defendants as principals.

All defendants contend that section 12(2) is inapplicable to the transaction alleged in the complaint.

Section 12(2) of the 1933 Act provides in pertinent part:

Any person who ... offers or sells a security ... by means of a prospectus or oral communication, which includes an untrue statement of a material fact or omits to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements, in light of the circumstances under which they were made, not misleading (the purchaser not knowing of such untruth or omission), and who shall not sustain the burden of proof that he did not know, and in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known, of such untruth or omission, shall be liable to the person purchasing such security from him ... (emphasis added).

[16] Section 12 deals with the liability of "statutory sellers" of securities. See Pinter v. Dahl, 486 U.S. 622, 108 S.Ct. 2063, 100 L.Ed.2d 658 (1988) (construing section 12(1)). Section 12 liability is broader than liability for fraud. Statutory sellers "may now be liable under section 12 whether or not scienter or loss causation is shown." Wilson v. Saintine Exploration and Drilling Corp., 872 F.2d 1124, 1126 (2d Cir.1989) (applying Pinter rationale to a section 12(2) claim). See also Capri v. Murphy, 856 F.2d 473, 478 (2d Cir.1988) (under section 12(2), sellers' "material misrepresentations and omissions render them strictly liable to plaintiffs"); Ballay v. Legg Mason Wood Walker, Inc., 925 F.2d 682, 689 (3rd Cir.1991) (in contrast to section 10(b), section 12(2) "makes actionable negligent misrepresentation absent proof of scienter or fraud").

[17] Notwithstanding these less demanding standards for liability, a section 12(2) plaintiff must still prove that the defendants sold the security "by means of a prospectus or oral communication." "Prospectus" has a recognized meaning. Congress did not define the words "oral communication" in the 1933 Act. In Ballay the Third Circuit applied to the phrase "prospectus or oral communication" the maxim noscitur a sociis, that a word is known by the company it keeps, and construed the phrase to mean "that buyers may recover for material misrepresentations made in a prospectus or in an oral communication related to a prospectus or initial offering." 925 F.2d at 688. Ballay went on to hold that section 12(2) did not apply to a broker-seller of securities in the secondary market.

While defendants at bar rely on Ballay, plaintiffs correctly observe that the transaction in suit does not involve the secondary market, but rather the direct sale of securities (the outstanding shares of Plastics) as part of the sale of that company to Polycast. Nonetheless, Ballay is instructive in its implicit requirement that the prospectus or oral communication have something to do with the challenged sale.

The Second Circuit had previously made that requirement explicit in Jackson v. Oppenheim, 533 F.2d 826 (2d Cir.1976). The Second Circuit held that while a section 12(2) plaintiff need not prove the particular kinds of causation required in fraud claims, nevertheless "he must still prove that the challenged sale was effected 'by means of' the communication viewed as a whole. That is to say, the communication as a whole must have been instrumental in the sale" of the securities. Id. at 829-30. Expanding on that concept, the court of appeals *260 said that where the defendant's liability is based on a sale of securities

Section 12(2) requires there to be some causal relationship between the challenged communication and the sale, even if not "decisive." In short, the communication must have been intended or perceived as instrumental in effecting the sale. Id. at 830 n. 8.

The inquiry is fact-specific, as illustrated by Judge Tenney's opinion in Eriksson v. Galvin, 484 F.Supp. 1108-1125 (S.D.N.Y.1980):

The Court concludes, as in Jackson, that neither the challenged communications nor the so-called omissions were responsible for the plaintiff's conduct. "[T]here was an abundance of evidence of the matters the plaintiff really considered important in entering this face to face transaction," Titan Group, Inc. v. Faggen, 513 F.2d 234, 239 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 840, 96 S.Ct. 70, 46 L.Ed.2d 59 (1975), and Eriksson was well aware of the opportunities and risks inherent in his agreement with the defendants. See Seibert v. Sperry Rand Corp., 586 F.2d 949, 952 (2d Cir.1978); Spielman v. General Host Corp., 538 F.2d 39, 41 (2d Cir.1976). Accordingly, a section 12(2) claim has not been established because the alleged misrepresentations and omissions were not "instrumental in effecting the sale." Jackson v. Oppenheim, supra, 533 F.2d at 830 n. 8.

In the case at bar, plaintiffs allege that the false or misleading statements of material facts giving rise to section 12(2) liability appear in the earnings projections for Plastics described in the complaint at ¶¶ 54-55, 60-61, 67-68, 70-71, 72-74, 80-82, 87, 104-105, 112-113 and 122. See Complaint at ¶ 150. These specified allegations trace the reductions in earning projections from the offering memorandum (¶¶ 54-55) through the May 8, 1986 lowering of the 1986 earnings forecast from $24.0 million to $22.5 million (¶¶ 60-61), to the June 12, 1986 lowering from $22.5 to $20.5 million (¶¶ 67-68), to the June 24, 1986 lowering to $17.6 million (¶¶ 70-71), together with the forecasted earnings for 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990 (¶¶ 72-74), to the September 5, 1986 lowering of the 1986 forecast to $13.3 million. From these allegations plaintiffs argue in their brief at 84 that section 12(2) is implicated because the sale of the Plastics shares "was accomplished by means of a prospectus, the offering memorandum, and numerous oral communications."

[18] Only the statements made on September 5, 1986 with respect to the 1986 $13.3 million earnings projection can arguably sustain a section 12(2) claim. Plaintiffs cannot be heard to say that the offering memorandum delivered in March 1986 was "intended or perceived" by plaintiffs "as instrumental in effecting the sale" because the SPA executed on July 23, 1986 specifically provided that it superseded "all other prior ... communications of the parties, oral or written, respecting such subject matter." By the same token, the pre-September 5, 1986 earnings projections cannot be regarded as instrumental in effecting the sale. On the contrary, those repeatedly lowered forecasts caused plaintiffs to reject the sale by terminating the SPA.

The $13.3 million 1986 earnings projection Uniroyal presented to Polycast at the September 5, 1986 meeting stands on a different footing. The jury could find that Polycast terminated the SPA in late August 1986, returned to the bargaining table in early September, received Uniroyal's assurances that, unlike the earlier forecasts, the $13.3 million 1986 earnings estimate were really and truly reliable, and agreed to purchase Plastics for $111.6 million on September 23. Notwithstanding the further purchase price reduction to $110 million, a jury could find that the September 5 earnings estimate was "related to a prospectus or initial offering," Ballay, and was "intended [by Uniroyal] or perceived [by Polycast] as instrumental in effecting the sale," Jackson.

[19] Accordingly the September 5, 1986 earnings estimate gives rise to a triable issue of section 12(2) liability unless, as defendants argue in their main brief at 52, the general merger clause in the SPA bars the claim.

*261 Article 10, Section 10.12 of the SPA provides:

Entire Agreement. This Agreement, including the Letter, the Schedules hereto and the other documents delivered pursuant to this Agreement, and the confidentiality Agreement, contain all of the terms, conditions and representations and warranties agreed upon by the parties relating to the subject matter of this Agreement and supersede all other prior agreements, negotiations, correspondence, undertakings and communications of the parties, oral or written, respecting such subject matter.

Defendants argue that by this language, Polycast agreed "that any prospectus (like the Offering Memorandum) and oral communications were not part of its bargain with Uniroyal."

In one of his prior decisions, Judge Walker considered Section 10.12 within the somewhat analogous context of plaintiffs' common law claim for negligent misrepresentation. Judge Walker said that Section 10.12 is a "general merger clause ... which bars extra-contractual commitments of any kind." [1988-1989 Transfer Binder] Fed.Sec.L.Rep. (CCH) ¶ 94,005 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 25, 1988) at 90,699. After reviewing the SPA and its accompanying documents, Judge Walker concluded that the alleged misrepresentations concerning Plastics' earnings projections (including the September 5, 1986 $13.3 million estimate) "were not extracontractual and hence are properly the subject of a negligent misrepresentation claim." Ibid. I will refer again to Judge Walker's construction of Section 10.12 of the contract, which defendants did not see fit to mention in their 103-page main brief, when I consider plaintiffs' negligent misrepresentation claim infra. Suffice it to say at this juncture that I agree with him; and because I do, and for the other reasons stated, I reject defendants' contention that section 12(2) is entirely inapplicable to this transaction. The September 5, 1986 "oral communication" falls within the statute.

[20] Defendants Weber and Nevins make the alternative argument that they were not statutory sellers. Section 12(2) liability extends to a person "who successfully solicits the purchase, motivated at least in part by a desire to serve his own financial interests or those of the securities owner." Cortec Industries, Inc. v. Sum Holding L.P., 949 F.2d 42, 48 (2d Cir.1991), citing and quoting Pinter v. Dahl. Whether Weber or Nevins may be so characterized presents triable issues of fact. So does the issue of whether the C & D defendants exercised reasonable care, upon which those defendants will bear the burden of proof at trial.

I deny defendants' motion for summary judgment dismissing the section 12(2) claims.

The RICO Claim

In their fourth claim, plaintiffs charge all defendants with violating the RICO statute, 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c). They seek treble damages under § 1964(c). Defendants move to dismiss the RICO claim on the ground that their alleged conduct does not fall within the statute.

18 U.S.C. § 1962(c) makes it unlawful for persons employed by or associated with enterprises engaged in interstate or foreign commerce to conduct the affairs of such an enterprise "through a pattern of racketeering activity ..." In H.J., Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 U.S. 229, 109 S.Ct. 2893, 106 L.Ed.2d 195 (1989), the Supreme Court undertook to identify and define the ingredients and boundaries of a "pattern of racketeering activity." Justice Brennan's opinion commanded only a 5-4 majority, but it represents the Court's most recent articulation of the governing principles.

[21] H.J. holds that a "pattern of racketeering activity" requires the combination of predicate acts related to each other and continuity of conduct. 492 U.S. at 239, 109 S.Ct. at 2900.

As for relatedness, the H.J. majority derived from Title X of the Organized Crime Control Act of 1970, of which RICO formed Title IX, the rule that to be related, predicate acts must have "the same or similar purposes, results, participants, victims, or *262 methods of commission, or otherwise are interrelated by distinguishing characteristics and are not isolated events." Id. at 240, 109 S.Ct. at 2901.

However, the Court continued, the relatedness of racketeering activities is not sufficient to satisfy § 1962's "pattern" element. "To establish a RICO pattern it must also be shown that the predicates themselves amount to, or that they otherwise constitute a threat of, continuing racketeering activity." Ibid. (emphasis in original). As to continuity, the H.J. majority wrote:

"Continuity" is both a closed- and open-ended concept, referring either to a closed period of repeated conduct, or to past conduct that by its nature projects into the future with a threat of repetition. See Barticheck v. Fidelity Union Bank/First National State, 832 F.2d 36, 39 (CA3 1987). It is, in either case, centrally a temporal concept-and particularly so in the RICO context, where what must be continuous, RICO's predicate acts or offenses, and the relationship these predicates must bear one to another, are distinct requirements. A party alleging a RICO violation may demonstrate continuity over a closed period by proving a series of related predicates extending over a substantial period of time. Predicate acts extending over a few weeks or months and threatening no future criminal conduct do not satisfy this requirement: Congress was concerned in RICO with long-term criminal conduct. Often a RICO action will be brought before continuity can be established in this way. In such cases, liability depends on whether the threat of continuity is demonstrated. See S.Rep. No. 91-617, at 158. Id. at 241-42, 109 S.Ct. at 2902 (emphasis in original).

The civil complaint in H.J. alleged that at different times over the course of at least a six-year period telephone company officers and employees gave members of a state regulatory commission bribes in order to obtain approval of unfair and unreasonable utility rates. The Court noted plaintiff's "claim that the racketeering predicates occurred with some frequency at least over a six-year period, which may be sufficient to satisfy the continuity requirement." Id. at 250, 109 S.Ct. at 2906 (emphasis added). The case was remanded to the district court for further proceedings consistent with the Court's opinion.

In Beauford v. Helmsley, 865 F.2d 1386 (2d Cir.) (en banc), vacated and remanded, 492 U.S. 914, 109 S.Ct. 3236, 106 L.Ed.2d 584, original decision adhered to, 893 F.2d 1433 (2d Cir.1989), plaintiffs alleged that defendants made a number of material misrepresentations in an offering plan for the conversion of an apartment complex into condominiums. The plan was mailed to more than 800 addressees. The complaint alleged additional facts sufficient to justify an inference that defendants would in the future be making further, equally fraudulent amendments to the offering plan. The Second Circuit held these allegations sufficient to describe a pattern of racketeering activity. The en banc majority and the three dissenting judges in Beauford agreed that the concepts of "relatedness" and "continuity" were crucial; and, in a departure from prior Second Circuit authority, observed that "our analysis of relatedness and continuity has shifted from the enterprise element to the pattern element." 865 F.2d at 1391. That shift presaged the Supreme Court's analysis in H.J., which had not yet been decided.

In Beauford the Second Circuit defined Congress' goal in defining "pattern of racketeering activity" as to exclude from the reach of RICO criminal acts that were merely "isolated" or "sporadic." Consequently, Judge Kearse wrote for the en banc majority, "we must determine whether two or more acts of racketeering activity have sufficient interrelationship and whether there is sufficient continuity or threat of continuity to constitute such a pattern." Id. at 1391. Where the enterprise itself is associated with organized crime, that fact alone is sufficient to "tend to belie any notion that the racketeering acts were sporadic or isolated." United States v. Indelicato, 865 F.2d 1370, 1384 (2d Cir.1989) (en banc, decided with Beauford).

*263 When, however, there is no indication that the enterprise whose affairs are said to be conducted through racketeering acts is associated with organized crime, the nature of the enterprise does not of itself suggest that racketeering acts will continue, and proof of continuity of racketeering activity must thus be found in some factor other than the enterprise itself. Beauford at 1391.

The complaint in Beauford was legally sufficient for these reasons:

In sum, read with ordinary charity, the amended complaint alleged that on each of several occasions defendant had mailed fraudulent documents to thousands of persons and that there was reason to believe that similarly fraudulent mailings would be made over an additional period of years.

These allegations sufficed to set forth acts that cannot be deemed, as a matter of law, isolated or sporadic.
Id. at 1392.

The Supreme Court granted certiorari in Beauford, vacated the Second Circuit's judgment, and remanded the case to that court for further consideration in light of H.J. 492 U.S. 914, 109 S.Ct. 3236, 106 L.Ed.2d 584 (1989). The Second Circuit gave Beauford that mandated further consideration and adhered to its en banc decision. 893 F.2d 1433 (2d Cir.1989).

See also Jacobson v. Cooper, 882 F.2d 717, 720 (2d Cir.1989) (continuity is sufficiently alleged where related predicates extend over "a matter of years."); Official Publications, Inc. v. Kable News Co., 884 F.2d 664, 666-68 (2d Cir.1989) (allegedly fraudulent acts occurred "pursuant to a longstanding contract, over a considerable period of time"; contracts in suit were dated 1974 and 1980); Procter & Gamble v. Big Apple Industrial Buildings, Inc., 879 F.2d 10, 18 (2d Cir.1989) ("the complaint must provide allegations sufficient to infer that an enterprise exists, and that the acts of racketeering were neither isolated nor sporadic;" allegations sufficient which claimed "that defendants engaged in at least five separate fraudulent schemes"). In Creative Bath Products, Inc. v. Connecticut General Life Insurance Co., 837 F.2d 561, 564 (2d Cir.1988), the Second Circuit followed its own precedent and anticipated H.J. in holding that the plaintiffs failed to allege RICO "continuity" where their case "consisted of the proposition that defendants had made three fraudulent representations in pursuit of a single short-lived goal," i.e., the sale of four insurance policies on the lives of two individuals. See also United States v. Gelb, 881 F.2d 1155, 1163-64 (2d Cir.1989) ("The requirement of continuity is satisfied; the schemes were conducted for about five years, and but for their discovery surely would have continued"); Executive Photo, Inc. v. Norrell, 765 F.Supp. 844, 846 (S.D.N.Y.1991) ("Congress was concerned in RICO with long-term criminal conduct... Plaintiff's allegations of a scheme extending over more than two and one-half years ... fall within the scope of that concern," "citing and quoting H.J. at 492 U.S. 242, at 109 S.Ct. 2902).

In his opinion allowing Polycast to amend its complaint a fourth time, Judge Walker concluded that the allegations sufficiently pleaded a RICO claim. 728 F.Supp. at 941-49. Judge Walker considered the Supreme Court's decision in H.J., and concluded that the allegations concerning "defendants' issuance of the fraudulent $13.3 million earnings forecast, misrepresentation of Plastics' 1987-90 earnings forecast, and failure to disclose the cancellation of the Northrop contract," conduct allegedly taking place "over a period of eight and one half months" in furtherance of "a complex, multi-faceted conspiracy to defraud executed by numerous officers and stockholders," sufficiently established at the pleading stage a "pattern" of racketeering activity. Id. at 948. Adjudicating a motion to dismiss, Judge Walker read the facts alleged in the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiffs. Ibid.

[22][23] A threshold question arises as to whether Judge Walker's ruling on the motion to dismiss constitutes the law of the case, precluding a contrary ruling on the *264 present motion for summary judgment. I conclude that the law of the case doctrine does not preclude this Court's evaluation of plaintiffs' RICO claim. The policies underlying the law of the case doctrine are by no means an absolute bar to reconsideration of a prior ruling, by the district judge who made the ruling or a different judge to whom the case may have been reassigned.

"It is well established that the interlocutory orders and rulings made pre-trial by a district judge are subject to modification by the district judge at any time prior to final judgment, and may be modified to the same extent if the case is reassigned to another judge." In re United States, 733 F.2d 10, 13 (2d Cir.1984). "[T]here is no imperative duty to follow the earlier ruling—only the desirability that suitors shall, so far as possible, have reliable guidance how to conduct their affairs." Dictograph Products

Co. v. Sonotone Corp., 230 F.2d 131, 135 (2d Cir.1956) [L. Hand, J.]. Prior rulings may be re-considered in the light of now prevailing legal standards and a more complete factual record developed during discovery. See Group Health Inc. v. Blue Cross Association, 739 F.Supp. 921, 929-30 (S.D.N.Y.1990).

[24] In the case at bar, I conclude that the facts as developed during discovery do not establish the requisite element of continuity. There is no basis for a finding of open-ended continuity. The sale by Uniroyal of Plastics to Polycast was a one-shot, non-recurring deal, and the shot has been fired. It cannot be said of the conduct of the defendants at bar that, as frequently occurs in criminal cases, "by their very nature these acts threaten repetition and thereby satisfied the continuity prong of the pattern requirement." United States v. Simmons, 923 F.2d 934, 951 (2d Cir.1991).

Accordingly the element is satisfied, if at all, by the concept of closed-end continuity. Plaintiffs allege a single scheme (albeit with a number of predicate acts and participants) to defraud a single victim in a single transaction. As Judge Walker observed, a "single victim-single injury scheme" may under H.J. satisfy "the continuity prong of the pattern requirement." Id. at 948 n. 5. But these considerations remain pertinent to a determination of whether the defendants' conduct falls within the scope of congressional concern for "long-term criminal conduct."

Plaintiffs allege as RICO predicate acts violations of the securities laws and of the mail and wire fraud statutes. The first securities violation plaintiffs allege in the fourth amended complaint occurred on or about July 2, 1986, when the "defendants" (unspecified) communicated to Polycast false earnings forecasts for Plastics for 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990. ¶ 166. The second securities predicate act is alleged to be defendants' failure to advise Polycast that Northrop had cancelled its contract with Plastics. ¶ 167. Northrop cancelled the Plastics contract in September 1986. ¶ 168. The third securities law predicate act alleged relates to the September 5, 1986 representation of the $13.3 million 1986 earnings estimate, an estimate repeated in the letter agreement dated September 23, 1986. ¶¶ 168, 169. The fourth securities law violation alleged as a predicate act is the selling of Plastics' shares to plaintiffs on October 31, 1986. ¶ 170. Lastly, plaintiffs allege as securities law violations by defendants the issuance, placing and sale by plaintiffs of debt securities in reliance upon defendants' misrepresentations. ¶ 171.

As for mail and wire fraud, the predicate acts alleged begin with a telephone conversation on February 13, 1986, between Dubilier and Castaldi, Alvine, and Nevins concerning the inclusion of expense information about Plastics in the Plastics Offering Memorandum. ¶¶ 174, 176. The last mail or wire fraud predicate act alleged occurred on September 18, 1989, when Kirrane sent a copy to Castaldi of a facsimile transmission Kirrane had received on September 16, 1986 from Nevins with respect to 1986 Plastics' earnings forecast, whose contents are alleged to be fraudulent. ¶¶ 120, 121.

When Judge Walker considered the legal sufficiency of plaintiffs' RICO claim in their proposed amended pleading, he rejected *265 plaintiffs' effort to allege earlier earnings estimates as predicate acts. It is useful to quote Judge Walker's reasoning on that point:

Polycast's allegations of fraud in the revised earnings forecasts do not satisfy these requirements and are deficient as separate section 10(b) claims. Polycast states in its complaint that it relied on the final $13.3 million forecast in entering its final, successful bid for Plastics. Proposed Amended Complaint at ¶ 122. Plaintiffs cannot maintain that they ultimately relied on both the earlier, higher estimates and the final, reduced forecast simultaneously. While plaintiffs may have relied on the earlier forecasts in deciding to pursue the bidding process with Uniroyal, this reliance is not actionable under section 10(b) which gives private plaintiffs a right of action only if that reliance culminates in an actual sale or purchase of securities. Although Polycast did ultimately purchase securities, they purchased in reliance on the $13.3 million forecast, not the earlier projections. Where a claim of fraud under section 10(b) is deficient for failure to adequately allege causation, it cannot serve as a predicate act for a civil RICO claim.

728 F.Supp. at 941-42.

The temporal boundaries in plaintiffs' amended pleading following Judge Walker's opinion, their fourth amended complaint, reflect the limitations properly imposed by the judge's analysis.

In their brief on the present motion, plaintiffs now argue that "[d]iscovery has proven that defendants' fraudulent scheme actually lasted well over a year." Brief at 93. The scheme began, according to plaintiffs' present contention, in October 1985, when Uniroyal and Plastics prepared a budget, also known as the "profit plan", for Plastics. Brief at 7. Plaintiffs say that "Uniroyal dictated a forecast figure of $24.9 million" for inclusion in that profit plan, which in turn became "the basis for the $24 million forecast in the offering memorandum." Id. at 94. Plaintiffs cite deposition testimony from Weber and Kirrane to the effect that they believed the $24.9 million forecast was overstated when included in the profit plan.

Plaintiffs further argue in their present brief that the fraudulent scheme continued well after the closing. Specifically, plaintiffs say that on January 30, February 13, March 11, and March 24, 1987 "defendants" (unspecified) "mailed letters to plaintiffs demanding payments they alleged were due under the Purchase Agreement." Id. at 95. These mailings, plaintiffs say, constitute separate acts of mail fraud which could serve as predicate acts under RICO.

Judge Walker's opinion granting plaintiffs leave to file a fourth amended complaint asserting a RICO claim was dated November 21, 1989. Plaintiffs say that in a letter dated June 30, 1989, their counsel advised Judge Walker that plaintiffs could plead these additional predicate acts if, "in light of H.J., the allegations of the complaint were not sufficient to make out a pattern under RICO." Plaintiffs say they never pleaded those additional predicate acts because Judge Walker held that the allegations in the proposed pleading were sufficient to fulfill the pattern requirement. Nevertheless, plaintiffs argue on the present motion, these acts "may properly be considered as proof in deciding whether plaintiffs have met the RICO pattern requirement," citing United States v. Alkins, 925 F.2d 541 (2d Cir.1991). [FN1]

FN1. In Alkins, a criminal case, the court of appeals considered testimony of conduct beyond "the acts charged as predicates in the indictment" in concluding that open-ended continuity had been proven: "The evidence indicates that this activity would have continued but for its discovery." 925 F.2d at 552-53. There is no comparable evidence in the case at bar.

Lastly, in an effort to extend the life of the alleged scheme, plaintiffs say in their brief at 96:

During the time that defendants committed these unpleaded predicate acts, their fraudulent scheme was kept alive by defendant Alfred Weber, who stayed on as President of Plastics after the closing and eventually entered into an employment *266 contract with Plastics. Unbeknownst to Polycast, during the months following the closing, Weber continued to supply Polycast with fraudulent forecasts. He also concealed the fact that the forecasts that had been given to Polycast by Uniroyal were fraudulent and that he had personally participated in the fraud.

Weber and the other conspirators have kept close ties since the closing. Defendants Alvine, Nevins and Weber are in business together at Charter Power, a company they set up. Defendant Flannery now works for defendants Rice and Dubilier at C & D. Certain of the defendants remain together as trustees of the Liquidating Trust. Thus, the RICO enterprise has not disbanded.

I will assume for this discussion that plaintiffs may offer a brief as the functional equivalent of moving under Rule 15 for leave to file a fifth amended complaint for the purpose of alleging additional predicate acts. Considering those allegations on their merits, they do nothing to extend the duration of the fraudulent scheme, as alleged in the fourth amended complaint, or as revealed by the proof (viewing the latter in the light most favorable to plaintiffs).

As for the asserted earlier starting date of the scheme, plaintiffs are foreclosed by Judge Walker's prior analysis from relying upon October 1985 events resulting in the $24 million Plastics earning forecast first appearing in the profit plan and then in the offering memorandum. Plaintiffs argued before Judge Walker that the C & D defendants' role in the deception "began in December 1985 when they began preparing the allegedly fraudulent offering memorandum upon which Polycast relied in purchasing Plastics and continued until the sale of Plastics closed on October 31, 1986." 728 F.Supp. at 933. But Judge Walker held that the earlier projections could not form the basis for a claim of fraud under section 10(b), and consequently could not serve as predicate acts for a RICO claim. I adopt Judge Walker's reasoning on that point, not because of the law of the case, but because it is manifestly correct. The same result obtains with respect to mail or wire communications generated in the course of producing those earlier projections.

Plaintiffs' efforts to extend the duration of the alleged scheme after the closing are equally unavailing. The four letters Uniroyal sent to Polycast in January, February and March 1987 related to Polycast's obligation, disputed by the parties, to pay taxes under the SPA for the first ten months of 1986. Such correspondence, while generated by the purchase, contained no fraudulent statements or omissions resulting in the purchase, which had closed on October 31, 1986. These subsequent mailings, innocent in themselves and only tangentially related to the underlying and previously accomplished fraud, play no part in continuity analysis. See Kehr Packages, Inc. v. Fidelcor, Inc., 926 F.2d 1406, 1414, 1417-18 (3d Cir.1991) ("But the continuity test requires us to look beyond the mailings and examine the underlying scheme or artifice.... [A] defendant's deceptive actions are more important to the continuity analysis than otherwise innocent mailings. Thus, the relevant criminal conduct occurred during the initial eight month period, when the misrepresentations were made."); United States Textiles, Inc. v. Anheuser-Busch Companies, Inc., 911 F.2d 1261, 1268 (7th Cir.1990) (where "each allegation of mail fraud and wire fraud apparently relates back to the extortion allegedly achieved by the December, 1980 contract," subsequent mail and wire transactions "and the length of time over which those transactions occurred was pure happenstance in light of the underlying concern which is the 'continuity' of the criminal activity.").

Nor do the post-closing activities of Weber and certain other defendants serve to extend the duration of the scheme. Plaintiffs say of Weber that for a time after the closing he continued as president of Plastics, continued to issue fraudulent forecasts, and "concealed" (that is, did not admit) the falsity of the prior earnings forecasts and the part he played in them. Plaintiffs also say that Alvine, Nevins and Weber are now in business together, Flannery works at C & D, and certain of the *267 defendants remain as trustees of the Liquidating Trust. Thus, plaintiffs say ominously, "the RICO enterprise has not disbanded."

As for Weber's post-closing activities as president of Plastics, plaintiffs do not say whether he "continued to supply Polycast with fraudulent forecasts" by means of mail or wire communications, so as to lay the basis for further predicate acts in considering continuity. By definition, Weber's failure to say anything about prior fraud does not implicate the mail fraud and wire fraud statutes, which deal with communications, not silence. Assuming for this discussion that Weber mailed or wired to Polycast post-closing fraudulent forecasts of Plastics' earnings, there is authority in criminal cases considering the statute of limitations for the proposition that attempts to "lull" the defrauded party into believing that no fraud has occurred fall within the statutes prohibiting mail or wire fraud. See United States v. Lane, 474 U.S. 438, 451-52, 106 S.Ct. 725, 733, 88 L.Ed.2d 814 (1986); United States v. Elkin, 731 F.2d 1005, 1008 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 822, 105 S.Ct. 97, 83 L.Ed.2d 43 (1984) (a fraudulent verification letter sent to the Defense Department some two years after the defendant had received improperly obtained money from the government was a part of the scheme to defraud the government); United States v. Rubin, 609 F.2d 51 (2d Cir.1979), aff'd., 449 U.S. 424, 101 S.Ct. 698, 66 L.Ed.2d 633 (1981). But even assuming that plaintiffs could somehow take advantage of this line of authority, Polycast had learned enough of the alleged fraud to give Uniroyal a written notice of claim under the SPA on December 10, 1986. See discussion of plaintiffs' seventh and eighth claims, infra. That notice of claim stated that Plastics' actual earnings in 1986 would be "materially less" than the $13,300,000 projected on September 23, 1986, as the result of a number of specified factors "known by a Responsible Officer [of Uniroyal] and wilfully withheld from [Polycast]." Thus any "lulling" effect of Weber's post-closing conduct had been dissipated not later than December 10, 1986, and the duration of the fraudulent scheme must be measured in months, not years.

If the reference in plaintiffs' brief to the present associations among certain defendants is intended to suggest the threat of repetition of the alleged scheme, thereby satisfying open-ended continuity, I find the suggestion to be entirely without substance. There is no suggestion that these defendants are proposing to sell other Uniroyal divisions to other purchasers in a comparably fraudulent manner. Nor can these defendants be said to have formed a "long-term association that exists for criminal purposes." H.J. at 242-243, 109 S.Ct. at 2902.

In consequence, the scheme of which plaintiffs may complain for RICO purposes began in February 1986 and was brought to a successful conclusion on October 31, 1986, or at the very latest on December 10, 1986. The scheme was intended to achieve, and did achieve, a single contract: the SPA by which plaintiffs purchased Plastics from Uniroyal.

Such a transaction, extending over a period of such limited duration, does not satisfy the continuity requirement of a RICO claim. That would be true even if, contrary to my conclusions just expressed, the duration of the scheme at bar had a duration somewhat in excess of one year, rather than eight months. I agree with the analysis of the Seventh Circuit in United States Textiles, supra, which after discussing H.J. said at 1269:

If the concern is "continuity", however, and the price for that "continuity" is treble damages, costs and reasonable attorneys fees, see 18 U.S.C. § 1964, a natural and common sense approach to the pattern element of RICO would instruct that identical economic injuries suffered over the course of two years stemming from a single contract were not the type of injuries which Congress intended to compensate via the civil provisions of RICO.

See also Kehr Packages, supra at 1418 ("an eight-month period of fraudulent activity directed at a single entity does not constitute a pattern, absent a threat of *268 future criminal acts."); Continental Realty Corporation v. J.C. Penney Company, 729 F.Supp. 1452, 1454-1455 (S.D.N.Y.1990) ("long-term criminal conduct" requirement of H.J. not satisfied by allegations that defendants "committed several acts of mail and wire fraud over a period of more than one year" in furtherance of a scheme "narrowly directed toward a single allegedly fraudulent goal."); Airlines Reporting Corp. v. Aero Voyagers, Inc., 721 F.Supp. 579, 585 (S.D.N.Y.1989) (repeated acts of mail fraud occurring "over thirteen months" insufficient to establish closed-end continuity). See also as the unreported district court cases cited in defendants' reply brief at 42.

The case at bar falls squarely within the holding in H.J. that "[p]redicate acts extending over a few weeks or months and threatening no future criminal conduct do not satisfy [the continuity] requirement: Congress was concerned in RICO with long-term criminal conduct." 492 U.S. at 242, 109 S.Ct. at 2902.

Plaintiffs' RICO claim will be dismissed.

Negligent Misrepresentation Claim

Plaintiffs' sixth claim, against all defendants, charges them with a failure to exercise reasonable care in making representations to plaintiffs concerning the financial status, earnings potential, and operating condition of Plastics. In aid of that claim plaintiffs allege that the defendants were under a duty to exercise reasonable care in making those representations which arose from "their relationship of trust and reliance with plaintiffs," Complaint, ¶ 192. The individual defendants Elton, Dubilier, Flannery, Graham, and Rice are sued only in their capacities as trustees of the Liquidating Trust for the negligent misrepresentations of Uniroyal and CDU Holding, Inc.

[25][26][27] This claim is governed by New York law. The law of negligent misrepresentation, as declared by New York courts, recognizes that "generally there is no liability for words negligently spoken" but that "there is an exception when the parties' relationship suggests a closer degree of trust and reliance than that of the ordinary buyer and seller." American Protein Corp. v. AB Volvo, 844 F.2d 56, 63-64 (2d Cir.), cert. denied 488 U.S. 852, 109 S.Ct. 136, 102 L.Ed.2d 109 (1988) (citing and quoting Coolite Corp. v. American Cyanamid Co., 52 A.D.2d 486, 384 N.Y.S.2d 808, 811 (1st Dept.1976)). To be liable for negligent misrepresentation, the speaker must be "bound by some relation of duty, arising out of contract or otherwise." White v. Guarante, 43 N.Y.2d 356, 363, 401 N.Y.S.2d 474, 478, 372 N.E.2d 315, 319 (1977). By definition, the elements of fraud need not be proven to establish a claim for negligent misrepresentation. However, the existence of a duty to exercise reasonable care in making representations depends in turn upon a special relationship between the parties. "In the absence of fraud and in the absence of a special relationship giving rise to a duty, it is up to the party hearing words he deems important to make them part of the contract." American Protein Corp. at 64.

An early articulation of the tort of negligent misrepresentation in New York appears in International Products Co. v. Erie R.R. Co., 244 N.Y. 331, 155 N.E. 662, cert. denied, 275 U.S. 527, 48 S.Ct. 20, 72 L.Ed. 408 (1927). In International Products the New York Court of Appeals said that to state a claim for negligent misrepresentation, in addition to the other elements of the tort, the relationship of the parties, arising out of contract or otherwise, must be such that in morals and good conscience the one has the right to rely upon the other for information, and the other giving the information owes a duty to give it with care [citations omitted]. An inquiry made of a stranger is one thing; of a person with whom the inquirer has entered or is about to enter into a contract concerning the goods which are or are to be its subject is another.... When such a relationship as we have referred to exists may not be precisely defined. All that may be stated is the general rule.

244 N.Y. at 338, 155 N.E. at 664 (emphasis added).

[28] *269 In the case at bar, defendants move for summary judgment dismissing plaintiffs' negligent misrepresentation claim on two grounds. First, defendants say that no special relationship of trust and reliance existed between Polycast and Uniroyal. Second, defendants say that the provisions of the SPA "preclude recovery for extra-contractual representations of any kind," Main Brief at 59.

At the pleading stage, defendants made both these arguments to Judge Walker, who rejected them both in his August 25, 1988 opinion reported in the CCH service. Defendants make no reference to that decision in their lengthy main brief in support of the present motion. That omission left it to plaintiffs to cite and quote from Judge Walker's opinion in opposing defendants' motion for summary judgment. Defendants then had the last word on the subject in their reply brief, having deprived plaintiffs of the opportunity to address defendants' contentions in the summary judgment context by leaving Judge Walker's decision out of their main brief. While defendants' views of Judge Walker's opinion, first expressed in the reply brief, presumably came as no surprise to plaintiffs, nevertheless this tactic on the part of defendants' counsel smacks of sharp practice and I do not appreciate it.

On the special relationship issue, Judge Walker said during a careful review of the New York cases that he was "persuaded that Polycast enjoyed a relationship with defendants that was closer than that of buyer and seller." Id. at 90, 697. Of course that cannot be regarded as a finding of fact; Judge Walker was dealing only with the legal sufficiency of the proposed amended pleading, a distinction which the judge made clear later in his opinion when he wrote that "the Court, at the pleading stage, rejects defendants' argument that the claim must be dismissed because the parties enjoyed no special relationship." Id. at 90, 698-99.

The Coolite case stated that the requisite closer degree of trust and reliance is not found between "the ordinary buyer and seller," a choice of words suggesting that there may be extraordinary circumstances, even in the context of a negotiated contract for purchase and sale. The International Products case made that clear over 60 years ago; the inquiry is intensely fact specific. Judge Walker characterized as "a case with strikingly similar facts" Judge Keenan's decision in Delta Holdings, Inc. v. National Distillers and Chemical Corp., [1988-1989 Transfer Binder] Fed.Sec.L.Rep. (CCH) ¶ 93, 700 at 98, 221, 1988 WL 36330 (S.D.N.Y. April 8, 1988), which involved a negligent misrepresentation claim by a plaintiff who had purchased defendant's subsidiary and thereafter contended that the subsidiary's net worth was much less than the figure its balance sheet carried at the time the deal was struck. Judge Keenan denied a motion to dismiss the claim for negligent misrepresentation, notwithstanding that the underlying stock purchase agreement was entered into after months of negotiation and investigation by outside experts. Judge Keenan did not regard the fact that the parties had entered into a negotiated commercial relationship as dispositive. He relied on the language I have quoted from International Products to conclude that "such a black-letter rule is inappropriate. The 'special relationship' concept must be adaptable to numerous contexts, and turns on the facts of each case." Id. at 98, 228.

Not surprisingly, the New York cases generally hold that "[t]he issue of whether a 'special relationship' exists sufficient to make out a cause of action for negligent representation should ... be left to the finder of fact." AFA Protective Systems v. American Telephone and Telegraph Co., 57 N.Y.2d 912, 914, 456 N.Y.S.2d 757, 758, 442 N.E.2d 1268, 1269 (1982) (in action by central station alarm company to recover damages for alleged misrepresentations by suppliers of private telephone lines essential to company's security alarms systems, summary judgment properly denied on issue of whether a "special relationship" existed between the parties). See also Hutchins v. Utica Mutual Insurance Co., 107 A.D.2d 871, 484 N.Y.S.2d 686 (3rd Dept.1985) (whether "special relationship" existed between claimants and an insurance *270 adjuster sufficient to impose a duty upon the adjuster to provide correct information as to applicable law gave rise to question of fact precluding summary judgment); Raymond Corp. v. Coopers & Lybrand, 105 A.D.2d 926, 482 N.Y.S.2d 377, 380 (3rd Dept.1984) (Special Term's grant of summary judgment dismissing third-party claim for negligent misrepresentation against an individual who stated that corporation's financial records were accurate reversed; "[t]he existence of such a 'special relationship' presents a question of fact, not to be resolved at this preliminary stage of the proceedings"). Hutchins and Raymond both cite and follow AFA Protective Systems. [FN2]

FN2. In Mallis v. Bankers Trust Co., 615 F.2d 68, 81 n. 12 (2d Cir.1980), the Second Circuit, undertaking to construe New York law, said: "Whether a relationship exists between the parties that will bring the negligent misrepresentation doctrine into play ... is generally treated as a question of law for the courts." The court of appeals cited to a comment in the 1974 edition of N.Y. Pattern Jury Instructions. AFA Protective Systems, which the New York Court of Appeals decided in 1982 and its progeny clearly establish a contrary view.

In his August 25, 1988 opinion, after reviewing a number of New York cases, Judge Walker said:

Polycast has alleged that during an extended negotiation period, defendants repeatedly vouched for their projections of Plastics' earnings, knowing that such earnings were critical to Polycast's willingness to consummate the transaction. Indeed, in August 1986, Polycast went so far as to withdraw from the Purchase agreement precisely because earnings expectations were lowered, only to agree to the deal again upon defendant's reassurances that this time earnings projection was accurate. Further, Polycast has alleged that defendants had superior information about Plastics throughout the negotiation period, and that it only gained complete access to the books after the deal was consummated. Additionally, in order to effect the transaction, Polycast formed a new corporation capitalized with $35 million of stock and $95 million in debt. From these facts, a relationship closer than the ordinary buyer-seller relationship can be inferred. Id. at 90,698.

I agree with Judge Walker that if such allegations are sustained by the evidence, the jury would be permitted in law to find the existence of that special relationship necessary to a claim for negligent misrepresentation. The question on defendants' present motion for summary judgment is whether the evidence adduced on discovery shows that there is a genuine issue requiring trial as to the material fact of the existence vel non. of the special relationship. It bears repeating that I must resolve any ambiguities in the evidence against the defendants, as well as drawing any reasonable inferences against them. Having performed those exercises, I conclude without difficulty that the nature of the relationship between Polycast and the defendants presents an issue requiring trial. As Judge Walker recognized, the accuracy of Plastics' earnings projections lies at the heart of the case. I am mindful of defendants' argument that the special relationship and the reliance Polycast seeks to derive from that relationship are inconsistent with the amount of due diligence Polycast performed prior to the closing, with the assistance of experts of various kinds, shapes and sizes. This is a perfectly respectable argument but it is for the jury. The record also contains declarations of witnesses, admissible against Polycast, which could be read to suggest that the special relationship did not exist and Polycast did not place upon the earnings projections that reliance which a viable claim for negligent misrepresentation requires. Again, these arguments demonstrate triable issues of fact, but do not entitle the defendants to a summary disposition.

Alternatively, defendants claim that provisions in the SPA preclude any claim for negligent misrepresentation. As I noted during discussion during the section 12(2) claim, defendants made that argument based upon the general merger clause, Section 10.12, to Judge Walker, who rejected it in his August 25, 1988 opinion at 90,699. Judge Walker considered the SPA and the *271 other documents which together form the parties' agreement. He concluded that the 1986 earnings projection for Plastics formed a part of the parties' agreement and consequently was not affected by the general merger clause, whose function was to bar reliance upon extra-contractual commitments of any kind. Unlike plaintiff's RICO claim, where between defendants' motion to dismiss and their motion for summary judgment the law evolved and the facts were developed during discovery, the purchase documents which were before Judge Walker are the same which are before me, and there have been no pertinent developments in the law. I decline defendants' invitation to read the contract differently than did Judge Walker. I think he was right. Nor does the modification clause, SPA Section 10.2, which states that the agreement that "shall not be amended or modified except by a writing duly executed" by the parties, add anything of substance to defendants' argument.

Defendants' motion for summary judgment dismissing plaintiff's negligent misrepresentation claim will accordingly be denied.

Contract Claims

Polycast's seventh and eighth claims sound in contract. The SPA is the contract governing the parties' rights and obligations. The parties negotiated that contract. They exchanged drafts. Polycast's drafts expanded its rights and Uniroyal's obligations. Uniroyal's drafts contracted them. The SPA evolved. The parties executed it.

The seventh claim alleges breaches of warranties Uniroyal gave in the SPA. In the eighth claim Polycast seeks indemnity under the SPA for the alleged breaches of warranty.

Article 3 of the SPA, captioned "Representations and Warranties of Seller," contains the warranties Polycast says Uniroyal breached. § 3.9 provides:

Absence of Undisclosed Liabilities. Except for liabilities reflected or reserved against in the Financial Statements, reflected in the Letter, or incurred in the ordinary course of business subsequent to the Balance Sheet Date, the Company and its Subsidiaries do not have any liabilities or obligations of any nature, whether absolute, accrued, contingent or otherwise, which liabilities would be material to the business, operations or financial condition of the Company and the Subsidiaries taken as a whole.

The "Financial Statements" referred to in this section include Plastics' balance sheet as of December 29, 1985. The "Letter" is a Disclosure Letter furnished by Uniroyal which accompanied the SPA.

Section 3.10 provides in pertinent part:
Absence of Certain Changes or Events.

Since the Balance Sheet Date, all operations and business of the Company and each Subsidiary have been conducted in all respects only in the ordinary course, and there has not been: (a) any material adverse change in the business, operations, properties, financial condition or prospects of the Company and the Subsidiaries taken as a whole; ...

Section 3.19 provides:

Completeness of Disclosure. No representation or warranty by Seller in this Agreement contains or on the date of the Closing will contain any untrue statement of material fact or omits or on the Closing date will omit to state a material fact necessary to make the statements made not misleading. (emphasis added).

The parties agree that the effect of the italicized language is to "bring forward" the Section 3.9 and 3.10 warranties to the closing. The closing occurred on October 31, 1986.

Article 8 is captioned "Indemnification." Section 8.1 provides in its entirety:

Non-Survival of Representations and Warranties. All representations and warranties contained in Article 3 and 4 or made pursuant thereto shall not survive but shall expire upon the Closing and be of no further force or effect thereafter and subsequent to the Closing, no party shall have any liability to any other party with respect thereto, except that (a) the representations and warranties in the *272 last sentence of Section 3.2(c), in the second sentence of Section 3.7, and in the first three sentences of Section 3.16 shall survive until December 31, 1987; and (b) the representations and warranties in Section 3.9 and 3.10, in the first sentence of Section 3.12 and in Section 3.14 shall survive until December 10, 1986; provided, however, that Buyer shall not be entitled to be indemnified under Section 8.2 for a breach of any representation or warranty in Section 3.9, 3.10 (except for 3.10(b)), 3.12 or 3.14 unless any officer or employee of Seller or the Company designated as a Responsible Officer in the Letter had knowledge of such breach as of the Closing Date and willfully withheld such knowledge from Buyer.

Section 8.2(a) obligates Uniroyal as Seller: to indemnify and hold harmless the Buyer Indemnitee against and in respect of any and all

(i) claim, suits, actions, proceedings (formal and informal), investigations, judgments, deficiencies, damages, settlement, liabilities, and legal and other expenses (including legal fees and expenses of attorneys chosen by the Buyer Indemnitee) as and when incurred arising out of or based upon (A) subject to Section 8.1, any breach of any representation, warranty, covenant, or agreement of Seller or the Company contained in this Agreement ...

Section 8.2(a)(ii) provides for indemnity by the Seller in respect of claims by third parties. Section 8.2(b) sets forth the indemnity obligations of Polycast as Buyer.

Section 8.2(c) provides in pertinent part: Defense of Claims. No right to indemnification under this Section 8.2 shall be available to any Buyer Indemnitee or Seller Indemnitee (an "indemnified Party") unless such Indemnified Party shall have given to a person or persons obligated to provide indemnification to such Indemnified Party (an "Indemnitor") a notice (a "Claim Notice") describing in reasonable detail the facts giving rise to any claim for indemnification hereunder within 60 days after receipt of knowledge of the facts upon which such claim is based (but the failure to so notify shall not relieve an Indemnitor from any liability he may have other than pursuant to this Section 8.2).

On December 10, 1986 Polycast gave Uniroyal written claim notice under Section 8.2(c). Polycast claimed breaches of the warranties contained in Sections 3.10 and 3.9.

As to Section 3.10, Polycast's claim notice said in part:

Seller states in the September 23, 1986 amendment included in the Agreement that actual earnings of the Company since December 29, 1985 through August 31, 1986 and projected earnings from September 1, 1986 through December 31, 1986 are currently estimated to aggregate approximately $13,300,000.

Actual earnings for the Company in 1986 will be materially less than $13,300,000. In addition, projected earnings for the Company in 1987 are materially less than the projections furnished by Seller to Buyer.

Polycast went on to ascribe these earnings reductions to a number of commercial factors, withheld from it by a responsible officer of Uniroyal. Polycast contends that these earnings reductions constitute a "material adverse change" within the ambit of Section 3.10.

As to Section 3.9, Polycast's claim notice said that there existed "material liabilities" not reflected or reserved against in the financial statements. Polycast listed those liabilities in Exhibit A to the claim notice. Exhibit A stated that Polycast's review of 1986 transactions revealed understated expenses and accruals at December 29, 1985 totalling $10,573,513. Exhibit A gave an itemized list. However, plaintiffs' brief on this motion at 122 abandons their warranty and indemnity claims with respect to the expenses and accruals listed on Exhibit A to the claim letter. Plaintiffs press warranty and indemnity claims for undisclosed and unreserved liabilities or obligations allegedly revealed by a subsequent audit of Plastics' October 31, 1986 financial statements.

273 To these warranty and indemnity claims, Uniroyal in its main and reply briefs makes several alternative arguments (not necessarily in the following order):

1. The SPA provides at least implicitly that after the closing, indemnification would be the exclusive remedy for breaches of warranty. Accordingly no "direct" breach of warranty action is allowed and the seventh claim must be dismissed.

2. Polycast's claim notice of December 10, 1986 does not give notice of the warranty and indemnity claims plaintiffs now assert.

3. Plaintiffs' direct claims for Section 3.9 and 3.10 breaches of warranty existing at the time of execution of the SPA are time barred because plaintiffs did not commence suit on them on or before December 10, 1986. (In making that argument, Uniroyal concedes that claims for indemnification arising out of Sections 3.9 and 3.10 breaches existing at the time of the SPA's execution were preserved by the December 10, 1986 claim letter).

4. Direct claims or indemnity claims relating to material liabilities (Section 3.9) or adverse changes (Section 3.10), arising after the execution of the SPA and known as of the closing, are time barred because such claims are governed by Section 3.19, and plaintiffs neither cancelled the contract nor sued upon the claims prior to the closing date of October 31, 1986.

5. In any event, the claims plaintiffs now assert, having been defined and refined by the discovery and motion process, do not fall within the Sections 3.9 and 3.10 warranties.

Uniroyal's first point is well taken, but makes no practical difference. While contract and tort law frequently speak of "indemnification" in the context of third-party liability, the SPA uses the word in a broader sense. Section 8.2(a)(ii) creates Uniroyal's obligation to indemnify Polycast in respect of "claims ... of persons not a party to this Agreement ..." Section 8.2(a)(i) imposes that obligation in respect of "claims ... arising out of or based upon ... any breach of any ... warranty ... of Seller of the Company contained in this Agreement ..." Thus we see that "Indemnity" is the word the parties applied to, inter alia, claims for breach of warranty. The seventh and eighth claims pleaded in the complaint are accordingly duplicitious. The distinction is technical, not substantive.

[29] The timeliness of plaintiff's warranty and indemnity claims turns upon the SPA's provisions for survival of the warranties.

Section 8.1 begins with unambiguous intimations of mortality: "[a]ll representations and warranties contained in Articles [] shall not survive, but shall expire on the Closing and be of no further force or effect thereafter and subsequent to the Closing, no party shall have any liability to any other party with respect thereto ..." That language has about it the terrible finality and clarity of the Last Trump: except that, as lawyers will, they inserted the word "except" after the language and then drafted 14 more lines of text. The language pertinent to the present issue provides that the warranties in Sections 3.9 and 3.10 "shall survive until December 10, 1986," with the proviso that Buyer shall not be indemnified under Section 8.2 for breach of Sections 3.9 or 3.10 warranties unless a responsible officer of Uniroyal or Plastics "had knowledge of such breach as of the Closing Date and willfully withheld such knowledge from Buyer." In other words, the last lines of Section 8.1 grant warranty claims a stay of execution from the closing date to December 10, 1986.

Section 8(c) conditions the Buyer's right to indemnity under Section 8.2 upon the giving of a claim notice. Polycast gave Uniroyal a claim notice on December 10, 1986.

As for the warranty provisions themselves, I agree with Uniroyal that Sections 3.9 and 3.10 speak of conditions existing at the time of execution of the SPA. That establishes the raison d'être of Section 3.19. It "brings forward" the Sections 3.9 and 3.10 warranties to the closing date. If Sections 3.9 and 3.10 extended by their own terms to the closing date, Sections 3.19 would have no office to perform.

*274 At this point in its argument Uniroyal cries "Gotcha!" Because Section 3.19, in contrast to Section 8.1, contains no provision for a stay of execution beyond the closing date, warranty claims in respect of conditions arising after execution of the SPA must be sued upon (not just asserted) on or before the closing date. So runs Uniroyal's argument.

The argument is too clever by half, and I reject it. As Uniroyal points out, albeit for a different purpose, Article 8 contains the only provisions in the SPA dealing with the Buyer's remedies for breaches of warranty by the Seller. Giving the SPA a symmetrical reading which gives effect to all its provisions, the following scheme emerges. The warranties of Section 3.9 and 3.10 are brought forward to the closing date by Section 3.19. Accordingly those warranties were in full force and effect on the closing date, and extended to any conduct or circumstances arising between the execution date and the closing date. With those warranties firmly in place on the closing date, Section 8.1 goes on to provide that they survive until December 10, 1986. There was no need for Section 8.1 to refer to Section 3.19 in granting a stay of execution to the warranties until December 10, 1986. Section 3.19 had a limited office to perform. It brought the warranties forward to the closing date. At that point in time, Section 8.1 came into play and carried the warranties further forward to December 10, 1986. On that date Polycast gave the claim notice required by Section 8.2(c). Any other reading is strained, hypertechnical, and cannot be regarded as expressing the intent of the parties.

Uniroyal refers repeatedly in its brief to the "statute of limitations" expressed in the contract for asserting claims, but the SPA contains no explicit limitation upon the time within which suit must be filed. The limitation upon which Uniroyal relies arises, if at all, only from an interpretation of the contract which I reject for the reasons stated.

[30] Accordingly the question becomes whether Polycast's December 10, 1986 letter embraces the claims which plaintiff now make. Uniroyal says it does not because a series of fraudulently exaggerated earnings forecasts (the "core" of plaintiffs' case) cannot be characterized as "undisclosed liabilities" under Section 3.9 or "material adverse changes" arising in the "ordinary course" of the business under Section 3.10. There is a surface appeal to this argument, but it does not justify summary dismissal of plaintiffs' contract claims. Summary judgment is not appropriate on plaintiffs' fraud claims, for the reasons stated supra; but plaintiffs should not suffer summary dismissal of their contract claims and be required to go to trial solely on tort theories. Contract and tort theories may interrelate. For example, defendants profess that they did not act fraudulently. At trial they may seek to justify the repeatedly lowered earnings projections by material adverse changes in the business which Uniroyal and Plastics did not disclose to Polycast, arguably in breach of the warranty. The Northrop contract is a case in point. It is common ground that Northrop cancelled its contract with Plastics prior to the closing, and that Uniroyal and Plastics did not tell Polycast of the cancellation. Arguably that cancellation constituted a "material adverse change in the business" of Plastics, as that phrase is used in Section 3.10. Certainly the appalled and horrified language with which Uniroyal's top officers described the possibility of a Northrop cancellation would support that argument. Uniroyal's position on this motion is that the loss of the Northrop contract was a blessing in disguise because it cost Plastics money. The briefs contain conflicting economic analyses of Byzantine complexity. Whether Plastics was making money or losing money on the Northrop contract poses a fact issue not appropriate for summary judgment. Depending on how the trial proof comes in, plaintiffs' contract claims may be subject to motion practice under Rule 50. But that is for a later day.

The conclusion I reach is that neither the seventh nor the eighth claims will be dismissed on summary judgment. The duplicitous nature of these contract claims can be *275 dealt with under Rule 50 or in appropriate jury instructions.

Damages Issues

Defendants include in their motion two arguments which in effect ask for rulings in limine limiting plaintiffs' damages in an event of a finding of liability.

[31] First, defendants challenge Polycast's claim that it is entitled to recover as consequential damages the interest it has been paying on increasing rate notes ("IRNs") that it issued to finance a portion of the purchase price of Plastics. Second, defendants contend that plaintiffs' claim for punitive damages should be stricken.

The challenged item of consequential damages is embraced by the allegations in ¶ 4 of the complaint and in ¶ A of the prayers for relief, which begin on page 74 of the pleading. I gather from these portions of the pleading that plaintiffs seek to recover these particular damages under their first through third claims, which arise under the federal securities laws, and on the fifth claim, which is founded upon common law fraud.

The same test applies to both classes of fraud claims. Judge Friendly made that clear in Zeller v. Bogue Electric Manufacturing Corp., 476 F.2d 795, 803 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 908, 94 S.Ct. 217, 38 L.Ed.2d 146 (1973), where he wrote: "A plaintiff seeking consequential damages for fraud, at common law or under federal securities legislation, must establish the causal nexus with a good deal of certainty." At that point a footnote was dropped from the text which said: "We would see nothing wrong in a principle varying the required degree of certainty somewhat inversely with the depth of the fraud." Judge Friendly went on to say in text that "[s]ince consequential damages are an addition to or in lieu of what would ordinarily constitute a fair recovery," it was not appropriate to apply those "liberal principles" which courts use when "some liberality is required to enable an injured plaintiff to recover anything."

Polycast financed the purchase of Plastics through the issuance of debt securities. $75 million of the debt securities issued took the form of IRNs whose interest rates increased quarterly. Polycast says that it engaged in that type of financing only because it contemplated refinancing the IRNs with bank financing soon after the closing. However, as the extent of Plastics' 1986 earnings shortfall began to be known to Polycast, and in turn disclosed by Polycast to the banks, the banks lost interest and Polycast was unable to obtain refinancing for the IRNs. There is evidence in the record from which the jury could find these assertions to be true.

In two securities fraud cases, the Second Circuit has rejected claims for consequential damages based upon interest charges incurred by the purchaser of securities. The first of these is Chris-Craft Industries, Inc. v. Piper Aircraft Corp., 516 F.2d 172 (2d Cir.1975), rev'd on other grounds, 430 U.S. 1, 97 S.Ct. 926, 51 L.Ed.2d 124 (1977). Chris-Craft involved a battle for control of the Piper Aircraft Corporation. Plaintiff Chris-Craft Industries, which acquired significant amounts of Piper stock, successfully claimed that it had been damaged as the result of defendants' violations of the federal securities laws. Having reached that conclusion on the merits, the Second Circuit remanded the case to the district court for the calculation of damages. Judge Pollack's damages decision on remand is reported at 384 F.Supp. 507 (S.D.N.Y.1974). Chris-Craft "requested that the interest charges it has borne on loans which financed its Piper investment be awarded to it as consequential damages." 384 F.Supp. at 526. Chris-Craft contended that it had been carrying a "locked-in" Piper investment since being reduced to a minority position. Judge Pollack concluded that there was no proof Chris-Craft had been "locked in" so that sale of its Piper stock had been impossible. He went on to say that "[t]he cost of the use of credit or margin to acquire stock is not a proper element of damage to a purchaser's interest," and that "[c]onsequential damages are awarded only upon a clear showing of causal connection with the misconduct and the consequence claimed," citing Zeller. Judge Pollack rejected the *276 claim. The Second Circuit affirmed, also citing Zeller. 516 F.2d at 191-92. The Second Circuit said:

Absent any showing of an actual, albeit futile, attempt by CCI to sell its holdings, we find it difficult to find a "causal nexus" between its interest payments and BPC's violations "with a good deal of certainty." We affirm the district court's refusal to award such interest expense.

In Bennett v. United States Trust Co. of New York, 770 F.2d 308 (2d Cir.1985), the plaintiffs claimed that U.S. Trust knowingly or recklessly misrepresented to them that the Federal Reserve's margin rules did not apply to public utility stock deposited with a bank as collateral. Relying on that misrepresentation plaintiffs borrowed money from U.S. Trust to purchase public utility stock, depositing the stock with U.S. Trust as collateral. Over time the dividends generated by the stock proved insufficient to cover the interest expenses on the loans; the outstanding principal and interest on the loans increased; the market value of the stock decreased; and U.S. Trust liquidated plaintiff's account. Plaintiffs wound up losing their equity in the $1 million in public utility stock deposited in U.S. Trust, and also owed U.S. Trust $1.2 million on the loans.

Plaintiffs sued U.S. Trust on a number of federal and state law theories, including section 10(b) and Rule 10(b)-5. The Second Circuit affirmed the district court's dismissal of the securities fraud claim because plaintiffs "failed to establish loss causation between the alleged misrepresentation and the plaintiffs' own unwise investment decisions," 770 F.2d at 314. At that point in text the Second Circuit dropped a footnote disposing of the plaintiffs' alternative claim, for the loss resulting from the interest charges which they had to pay on the loans from U.S. Trust. The court of appeals said at 314 n. 1:

The Bennetts also argue that even if we hold that the misrepresentation did not cause the loss resulting from the decline in the stock's value, they should still be entitled to recover the loss resulting from the interest charges. We find this argument unconvincing. U.S. Trust is not alleged to have made any misrepresentation with respect to the loans; the Bennetts received the money that they sought, for the purpose desired, and under conditions that they understood and found agreeable. The interest expense would have been the same no matter how the Bennetts used the loan proceeds. Thus, we cannot accept the complaint's characterization of the interest expense as an element of damages.

A comparable concept of loss transaction is reflected in Monetary Management Group v. Kidder Peabody & Co., 615 F.Supp. 1217 (D.C.Mo.1985). A management adviser brought an action against a brokerage firm alleging that the firm agreed to provide marginable bonds and that two sets of bonds plaintiff purchased were not marginable in accordance with federal reserve regulations. Plaintiff asserted that the brokerage firm's misrepresentation violated section 12(2) of the Securities Act of 1933, and also alleged violation of state law and common-law misrepresentation. The district court found a violation of section 12(2). In calculating damages, the court rejected plaintiff's request for return of the interest charges associated with the bonds in question, stating at 1223:

Defendants' objection is well-taken. The interest charges in question were incurred by MMG, because Kidder, Peabody in fact margined the bonds in question. During the period of time that MMG had an account with Kidder, Peabody, MMG received exactly what it bargained for, namely, marginable bonds or an investment on credit. In this regard, Kidder Peabody and Martin did not make any misrepresentations with respect to what MMG was receiving for its interest payments.

Plaintiffs say that Chris-Craft is distinguishable and rely upon Minpeco, S.A. v. Hunt, 686 F.Supp. 420 (S.D.N.Y.1988). That was an antitrust case in which defendants manipulated the silver market. As the result of defendants manipulation plaintiffs, who held short positions in the market, were forced to borrow money "which *277 was required to meet margin calls and close silver futures and forward positions." Id. at 425. Judge Lasker held that the interest plaintiffs paid on those borrowed funds was properly claimable as damages stemming from defendants' antitrust violation. He rejected defendants' argument that the interest claim was the legal equivalent of a claim for prejudgment interest, a concept defendants urged because "prejudgment interest is granted only sparingly in antitrust actions, it can only be calculated that the close of trial after damages, if any, have been established, and it may not be included for the purposes of trebling damages." Id. at 426. Judge Lasker rejected the analogy to prejudgment interest and allowed the claim, denying defendants' in limine motion to preclude it.

In Freschi v. Grand Coal Venture, 588 F.Supp. 1257 (S.D.N.Y.1984), plaintiff invested in a limited partnership as a tax shelter. Defendants were held liable to him for violation of section 10(b) of the 1934 Act and state law fraud. Plaintiff claimed as an item of damages an interest penalty assessed by the IRS after its disallowance of plaintiff's tax deductions. Judge Sweet denied the claim, reasoning that plaintiff's use of the unpaid tax money prior to the IRS assessment approximately equalled the interest penalty. Judge Sweet said: "Accordingly, Freschi has failed to meet the heavy burden a Rule 10b-5 plaintiff faces in attempting to prove consequential damages, see Zeller, supra, and an award for the interest penalty is impermissible." 588 F.Supp. at 1260.

None of these cases is squarely on point. But I think that defendants have the better of the argument. Chris-Craft stands for the proposition that a section 10(b) plaintiff claiming consequential damages bears the heavy burden of establishing a causal nexus "with a good deal of certainty." Plaintiffs at bar say they have done so: "Because plaintiffs overpaid by $50 million, they had to issue an extra $50 million of IRNs. Because they issued an extra $50 million of IRNs they have had to pay interest on them." Brief at 134. That may satisfy transaction causation, but more recent authority illustrated by Bennett requires loss causation as well, and there is no suggestion that defendants' misrepresentations played a direct part in the form or conditions of the debt Polycast incurred, or that Polycast did not obtain what it bargained for in borrowing the money.

I conclude that defendants' objection to this item of damages is well taken.

[32] I deny defendant's motion to strike plaintiffs' claim for punitive damages. Punitive damages are not recoverable in a section 10(b) action, but may be recovered under pendent state claims. See Meyers v. Moody, 693 F.2d 1196, 1220 (5th Cir.1982), reh'g denied, 701 F.2d 173, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 920, 104 S.Ct. 287, 78 L.Ed.2d 264 (1983). Plaintiffs at bar assert state and common law claims against defendants for fraud. Under New York law, which governs, "punitive damages may be awarded when fraud is gross, wanton or willful, whether or not directed at the public generally." Ostano Commerzanstalt v. Telewide Systems, Inc., 880 F.2d 642, 649 (2d Cir.1989) citing New York cases. See also Roy Export Co. Establishment of Vaduz v. CBS, Inc., 672 F.2d 1095, 1106 (2d Cir.) ("New York law clearly permits punitive damages where a wrong is aggravated by recklessness or willfulness"), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 826, 103 S.Ct. 60, 74 L.Ed.2d 63 (1982). In Ostano the court of appeals confirmed an award of punitive damages on the basis of the district court's finding that defendant "entered this transaction from the outset with a clear and blatant intent to defraud." 880 F.2d at 646.

In the case at bar, plaintiffs allege that defendants deliberately exaggerated Plastics' projected earnings, thereby manifesting "a clear and blatant intent to defraud." That intent was implemented most recently, plaintiffs argue, when Polycast renounced the SPA because of the reduced earnings forecasts, only to be lured back to the negotiating table with assurances of the accuracy of the September 5, 1986 $13.3 million projection. There is evidence in the record which would permit, although it would not require, the jury to conclude that at least certain defendants engaged in *278 "gross, wanton or willful" fraud. Accordingly I deny the motion to strike the claim for punitive damages.

Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, defendants' motion for summary judgment dismissing plaintiffs' fourth claim under the RICO statute is granted. There being no just reason for delay, the Clerk of the Court is directed to enter judgment dismissing that claim. See Rule 54(b), Fed.R.Civ.P.

As required by the Second Circuit authority, see, e.g., National Bank Washington v. Dolgov, 853 F.2d 57 (2d Cir.1988), I state my reasons for certifying a judgment dismissing plaintiffs' RICO claim at this time.

Whether or not plaintiffs can satisfy the continuity requirement of the RICO claim poses a discrete question which is capable of resolution on the present record. Whether or not trebled damages are available to plaintiffs if they prevail on the merits is a question of considerable importance to all parties. An appellate ruling on the issue in advance of trial may enhance settlement negotiations.

If the parties decline to negotiate or nothing comes of settlement efforts, then the alternative to a Rule 54(b) certification on the RICO question at this time is to send the case to trial with the question unresolved at the appellate level. For the reasons stated in this Opinion, I do not think plaintiffs state a viable RICO claim. Accordingly I will not submit that claim to the jury. If my judgment on the issue is reversed by the court of appeals after what is sure to be a protracted trial, then the case will have to be tried again with the RICO claim reinstated.

There are accordingly compelling reasons of practicality and expediency for certifying a judgment under Rule 54(b) dismissing plaintiffs' RICO claim under Rule 54(b). There is recent Second Circuit authority for doing so. See Cullen v. Margiotta, 811 F.2d 698, 712-13 (2d Cir.1987).

Defendants' motion for summary judgment is in all other respects denied.

It is SO ORDERED.

Third-party Defendants.

No. 99 Civ. 3794(BSJ).

Sept. 11, 2003.

Shareholder brought action against corporation and its investment banker, alleging fraud, breach of contract, negligent misrepresentation, breach of fiduciary duty, and aiding and abetting breach of fiduciary duty. Defendants impleaded third-party defendants, asserting claims of contribution and indemnification. Upon defendants' and third-party defendants' motions for summary judgment, the District Court, Jones, J., held that: (1) defendants could not be held liable for common law fraud under New York law since shareholder could not establish element of reasonable reliance; (2) negligent misrepresentation claim was duplicative of shareholder's breach of contract claim; (3) summary judgment in favor of corporation was precluded on breach of contract claim; and (4) contribution was not available when the underlying claim was for breach of contract.

Corporation's motion granted in part and denied in part; investment banker's and third-party defendants' motions granted.

Opinion

JONES, J.

*1 Plaintiff PPI Enterprises (U.S.), Inc. ("PPIE") filed this action in May of 1999 against Defendant Del Monte Foods Company ("Del Monte") and Defendant Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc. ("Morgan Stanley") alleging fraud, breach of contract, negligent misrepresentation, breach of fiduciary duty, and aiding and abetting breach of fiduciary duty. Del Monte and Morgan Stanley moved to dismiss PPIE's claims pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(c), and this Court issued an opinion on their motions in September 2000. [FN1] In the 2000 opinion, the Court granted Del Monte's motion to dismiss the breach of fiduciary duty claim, but denied its motion to dismiss the breach of contract, fraud, and negligent misrepresentation claims. With respect to Morgan Stanley's motion, the Court dismissed PPIE's claims of negligent misrepresentation and aiding and abetting a breach of fiduciary duty. It denied, though, Morgan Stanley's motion to dismiss the fraud claim. After this opinion issued, Del Monte and Morgan Stanley filed motions for summary judgment on the remaining claims. These motions are now before the Court.

FN1. The September 2000 opinion amended an earlier decision issued on August 18, 2000.

Also before the Court are motions by the Third-Party Defendants in this case, W.R. Huff Asset Management, Co., L.P., W.R. Huff Asset Management, Co., L.L.C. (collectively "Huff Asset Management"), and Charterhouse Equity Partners, L.P. ("Charterhouse"). Del Monte impleaded these Third-Party Defendants, asserting claims of contribution and indemnification. The Third-Party Defendants have moved for summary judgment as to these claims.

I. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

The following chronology of events is based on the Court's review of the extensive record in this matter. Unless otherwise indicated, all facts are undisputed.

A. Preliminary Background

PPIE was formed in May 1988 by its corporate parent, Polly Peck International PLC ("Polly Peck"), to expand Polly Peck's global presence in the produce industry. (Compl.¶ 11). In January 1990, PPIE acquired for $12.6 million all of the outstanding shares of Series D Preferred Stock and 10,000 shares of Class A Common Stock of Del Monte Foods Company ("Del Monte"), a Maryland corporation previously known as DMPF Holdings Corp. (Compl.¶ 13). PPIE's stake in Del Monte represented approximately 2.6% of Del Monte's total common stock and 5.9% of the liquidation value of Del Monte's preferred stock, which had been issued in a number of series. Dividends on the Series D Preferred Stock (as well as the other series) were payable in-kind, and Series D Preferred Stock was, by its terms, junior in liquidation preference to the Series A and B Preferred Stock, which had been issued to other stockholders. The other major stockholders of Del Monte included Huff Asset Management Co. (which held approximately 37.7% of the liquidation value of Del Monte's total preferred stock outstanding and 24.7% of its total common stock outstanding), Charterhouse (which held approximately 18.4% of the liquidation value of Del Monte's total preferred stock outstanding and 8.2% of its total common stock outstanding), Merrill Lynch, Kikkoman Corporation and members of Del Monte management.

*2 In connection with the acquisition of the Del Monte stock, PPIE, the other stockholders and Del Monte entered into a Stockholders Agreement dated January 9, 1990 (the "Stockholders Agreement"). (Compl.¶ 14). The Stockholders Agreement placed restrictions on the transferability of the preferred stock and provided the holders of the preferred stock with veto rights with respect to certain change of control transactions. (DM Ex. 2, §§ 3, 4). In addition, the Stockholders Agreement provided in § 2.12 that:

[Del Monte] shall, at its expense, provide to each Stockholder ... (b), as promptly as practicable, such financial statements and other information, including, without limitation, monthly management reports as such Stockholder may reasonably request. (Compl.¶ 14.).

In October 1990, Polly Peck was placed in insolvency administration, the U.K. equivalent of a bankruptcy proceeding. (Compl.¶ 20). The administrators of Polly Peck were employees of the accounting firm Coopers & Lybrand, now known as PriceWaterhouseCoopers. (Kett Dep. at 16-18). Thereafter, PPIE's primary focus was to liquidate its assets and reduce its expenses. (Compl.¶ 20). These efforts were led by Michael Herz ("Herz"), PPIE's sole employee, who was at the time based in Connecticut. [FN2] (Herz Dep. at 13, 459). In carrying out his activities, Herz apparently conferred regularly with Polly Peck's London-based administrators, primarily Anthony Kett ("Kett"). (Herz Dep. at 13-14; 33).

FN2. In November 1996, Herz moved from Connecticut to New York.

In September 1991, PPIE vacated its office space in Manhattan, despite the fact that its lease had seven years remaining. (Compl.¶ 20). The landlord, Solow Building Company, which was controlled by Shelden Solow (together "Solow"), commenced litigation against PPIE in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York in November 1991. (Compl.¶ 20). In October 1992, Solow won a judgment against PPIE, but an assessment of damages was deferred pending a separate trial. (Compl.¶ 20).

In September 1992, PPIE asked whether Merrill Lynch, another stockholder of Del Monte, would be interested in acquiring its Del Monte stock. (Compl.¶ 16). In response to Merrill Lynch's indication that it might be interested in acquiring PPIE's Del Monte stock for approximately $2 million and to the fact that Del Monte itself might be interested in acquiring PPIE's Del Monte stock for $2.5 million, PPIE requested from Del Monte the opportunity to review information that would assist it in evaluating a potential sale of the Del Monte stock at these values. (Compl. ¶ 17). After executing a confidentiality agreement prepared by Del Monte, PPIE was given the opportunity to review all relevant non-public financial information in Del Monte's possession. (Compl. ¶ 17). PPIE subsequently decided not to sell its Del Monte stock at that time. (Compl. ¶ 17).

In July 1993, an investor group led by Mexican financier Carlos Cabal offered to purchase Del Monte for an equity value of $325 million, an offer that was subsequently reduced to $276 million. (DM Exs. 6, 7). In October 1993, Del Monte's investment banker notified Del Monte's stockholders, including PPIE, of the proposed transaction with Cabal. (Compl. ¶ 18). During the course of the negotiations that took place after the offer was made, PPIE was provided with detailed information about the proposed transaction and, subject to the confidentiality agreement, was invited to participate in negotiating sessions with Cabal and in meetings of Del Monte's Board of Directors. (Compl. ¶ 18). Thereafter, the stockholders, relying upon information provided by Del Monte, agreed among themselves about the allocation of the proposed purchase price, with PPIE to receive approximately $10 million for its Del Monte stock. (Compl. ¶ 19). In June 1994, Del Monte entered into a merger agreement with Cabal. (DM Ex. 1). However, the transaction failed to close for reasons unrelated to this matter. (Compl. ¶ 19).

B. 1995: PPIE's Seeks to Sell Its Del Monte Stock

*3 In June 1995, Herz (PPIE's sole employee) and Kett, as representative of Polly Peck's London-based administrators, Coopers & Lybrand, met with Del Monte in an attempt to convince Del Monte and/or its other stockholders to allow PPIE to sell or transfer its Del Monte stock to Solow. (Compl. ¶ 21). Alternatively, they asked whether Del Monte or any of the other stockholders would be interested in acquiring its Del Monte stock for a "fair price." (Compl. ¶ 21). At that meeting, Del Monte resisted any sale or transfer to Solow, and indicated that it was unlikely to be interested in acquiring PPIE's Del Monte stock for a price in excess of $500,000, since the total equity value of the company had declined to less than $100 million. (Compl. ¶ 12; DM Exs. 8, 9; Kett Dep. at 46; see DM Mem. at 6, DM Ex. 8 at 6414). Del Monte discussed some of the operational and financial challenges that it was currently facing and told Herz and Kett that it expected to hire Morgan Stanley as its new investment banker to advise Del Monte on its alternatives, including an operational restructuring, a potential sale of non-U.S. assets and/or a financial restructuring, with the potential for an initial public offering within two years time. (DM Ex. 8 at 6413-14).

Shortly after this meeting, Del Monte sent Kett detailed financial information, including its internal financial projections for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1996, upon condition that this information be kept confidential. (DM Ex. 13 at 6388). In late June or early July 1995, PPIE asked Prudential Securities Incorporated ("Prudential") to provide it with a "desk assessment" of the value of PPIE's Del Monte stock and to act as "financial advisor" to PPIE. (DM Ex. 14 at 6903-04). On July 7, 1995, Kett sent financial information on Del Monte, including financial projections, [FN3] to Prudential. (See DM Ex. 14). On August 1, 1995, Prudential sent a letter to Kett stating its view that the value of PPIE's stock was $3-$5 million to a financial buyer, but perhaps up to $12 million if the shares could be converted into common stock and traded publicly. (DM Ex. 15 at 6963-64).

FN3. The cover letter from Kett to Prudential indicates that Del Monte's "forecast income statements for the years 1994 to 2001 as submitted to the banks" were enclosed. These forecasts are not themselves part of the record of this case. It is unclear from the record which projections were actually sent to Prudential.

In August 1995, Morgan Stanley was formally retained as Del Monte's financial advisor. [FN4] (DM Ex. 10). In October 1995, Morgan Stanley provided Del Monte's Board of Directors with a preliminary analysis of the company's restructuring alternatives, and advised that the company pare back its non-core, non-U.S. businesses. (MS Exs. 15 at 6-7; 20 at 13). Morgan Stanley suggested that, once such restructuring steps were taken, Del Monte would be better situated for a potential sale, merger or initial public offering. (MS Ex. 15). Del Monte's Board instructed Morgan Stanley to convey to the market that Del Monte was not for sale, but would be willing to listen to unsolicited proposals. (MS Ex. 16 at 81). From November 1995 through August 1996, Del Monte streamlined its business by selling a number of non-core businesses and changed its pricing strategy, which enabled it to improve financial performance and better position itself for a potential sale, merger or initial public offering. (MS Exs. 15 at 6-7, 20 at 13).

FN4. PPIE was aware that Morgan Stanley was (or was about to be) Del Monte's investment banker as early as July 14, 1995. (See DM Ex. 11 at 6364).

C. 1996: PPIE's Continued Efforts to Sell Its Del Monte Stock

*4 On January 31, 1996, a representative of Coopers & Lybrand, acting on behalf of PPIE, offered to sell its Del Monte stock to Del Monte for $4 million, the midpoint of the valuation range that had been suggested by Prudential. (MS Ex. 7). On March 6, 1996, Del Monte's Board of Directors authorized the company to pay up to $2 million for PPIE's Del Monte stock, and instructed Morgan Stanley to approach PPIE with an initial offer of $1 million. (Herz Dep. at 5). At about the same time, representatives of Texas Pacific Group ("TPG"), a financial buyer of operating businesses, expressed to Morgan Stanley and to Huff Asset Management (Del Monte's largest shareholder) its strong interest in exploring the acquisition of Del Monte. [FN5] (PPIE Ex. 50 at 962). At that time, TPG was told that Del Monte was in the midst of restructuring its operations and would not consider offers for the company until that process was complete. (PPIE Ex. 50).

FN5. The March 1996 expression of interest by TPG is referred to only in a September 1996 letter from TPG to Morgan Stanley discussed infra. No other details are part of the record in this case.

On April 4, 1996, in response to Solow's motion to set a trial date for the damages phase of its action against PPIE for breach of the lease, PPIE filed for bankruptcy in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Delaware, the state of its incorporation. Despite PPIE's bankruptcy filing, negotiations among the parties regarding the possible sale of PPIE's stock to Del Monte continued.

On April 30, 1996, Kett met with Morgan Stanley and requested Del Monte's latest interim financial results. (Kett Dep. at 171-173). On May 2, 1996, Del Monte provided Kett with its interim financial results for the quarters ending September 30 and December 31, 1995 and its internal financial model dated April 30, 1996, which contained projections for the remaining two months in its fiscal year ending June 30, 1996. (DM Ex. 19 at 18669). This financial model showed projected earnings before interest, taxes, depreciation and amortization ("EBITDA") of $85 million for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1996. (DM Ex. 19).

The aggregate value of the company was then estimated by multiplying the projected EBITDA by a multiple, which was based on an analysis of comparable companies and transactions. The company's debt was then subtracted from the aggregate value to arrive at an estimate of the equity value of the company. [FN6] (DM Ex. 19). Based on an EBITDA multiple of 6.25x and approximately $420 million of projected debt, these materials showed a total equity value of Del Monte of $102.5 million. (DM Ex. 19). This estimate stood in contrast to the accreted value [FN7] of the four series of preferred stock senior to the Series D Preferred Stock held by PPIE (designated Series A1, Series A2, Series B and Series C), which as of June 30, 1996, [FN8] was projected to be approximately $384 million. (DM Ex. 19). As a result, in a liquidation scenario that generated $102.5 million of equity value, PPIE's Series D Preferred Stock would have no "economic value." In a sale or liquidation, the Series D Preferred Stock would, however, have some "holdup" value, given its veto rights with respect to certain types of transactions.

FN6. This method of valuation, known as the EBITDA multiple method, is a widely used method of valuation. PPIE has not contested the appropriateness of this methodology.

FN7. The preferred stock paid dividends "in-kind," meaning that rather than a cash payment the holders received additional face value of preferred stock on every dividend date. As a result, the face value of the preferred stock "accreted," or increased in value, periodically.

FN8. PPIE makes reference to an April 30, 1996 analysis prepared by Morgan Stanley, which they argue shows that, in fact, PPIE's Del Monte stock could have been worth up to $5.6 million at that time. (PPIE Mem. at 29-30). The meaning of the Morgan Stanley analysis referred to and included in the record, however, is not self-evident and there is no explanation of it, in testimony or otherwise. (See PPIE Ex. 15). The Court, therefore, places little weight on the significance of this analysis.

*5 In the May 2, 1996 cover letter to Kett that accompanied these financial materials, Del Monte's Chief Financial Officer wrote that Del Monte was projecting "a very strong performance" for its fiscal fourth quarter ending June 30, 1996, and invited Kett to call with any questions. (DM Ex. 19). Kett does not recall asking any follow-up questions or forwarding any of this material to Herz. (DM Mem. at 9). On May 7, 1996, though, Kett informed Del Monte that he intended to provide the financial information to Prudential. [FN9] Kett also requested that Del Monte send him interim financial statements for its fiscal third quarter ending March 30, 1996 when available. (Kett Dep. at 174-75). On May 22, 1996, Del Monte complied with this request by sending Kett the company's interim results for the quarter ending March 31, 1996. (DM Ex. 20).

FN9. Although Kett also indicated that he would be authorizing Prudential to speak directly on PPIE's behalf, there is no evidence that Prudential ever actually did so.

Shortly thereafter, on June 4, 1996, Kett spoke with Robert Berner ("Berner") of Morgan Stanley [FN10] to continue the negotiations regarding Del Monte's willingness to buy back PPIE's Del Monte stock. (PPIE Ex. 7, pp. 82-84). Berner told him that he believed the total equity value of Del Monte to be between $90-$175 million as of June 30, 1996, based on a multiple of 6-7x projected EBITDA of $85 million and $420 million of projected debt. (MS Ex. 29). Berner also told him that PPIE's Del Monte stock thus had "zero economic value" because the senior series of preferred stock had an aggregate accreted value of $384 million. (MS Ex. 29). Berner further stated that the value of the senior series of preferred stock had been increasing at a greater rate than the rate at which Del Monte's earnings were growing, thus suggesting that time was working against PPIE in the negotiations. (MS Ex. 29; Tr. 185-87).

FN10. Berner was a Principal in Morgan Stanley's Investment Banking Department, and apparently had primary senior-level responsibility for Morgan Stanley's assignments on behalf of Del Monte, which included making presentations to Del Monte's Board of Directors.

In that same conversation, Kett asked Berner whether there was "any prospect on the horizon" for a sale of Del Monte. (MS Ex. 29). Berner replied "no" and added that the company had been up for sale for a time but that there had been no buyers, particularly none in the food industry. (MS Ex. 29). However, Kett's notes of the conversation, which he adopted at his deposition, indicate that Berner went on to say that there was "likely to be a financial buyer in a year's time." (Kett Dep. at 212-213; MS Ex. 29). Notably, Kett did not inform either Prudential or Herz of Berner's statement about the likelihood of a financial buyer. [FN11] (Kett Dep. at 212-213; MS Ex. 29).

FN11. Kett explains that he did not inform

Prudential or Herz of Berner's statement because he did not take Berner's comment literally, believing instead that there was "no real prospect for a sale." (Kett Dep. at 213-215). Nonetheless, it is undisputed that Berner did tell Kett there would be a financial buyer in a year's time.

D. June--September 1996: PPIE Negotiates with Del Monte Regarding a Sale of Its Del Monte Stock and Makes Requests for Information

On June 24, 1996, Berner wrote to Kett and indicated that Del Monte was prepared to pay $1 million for PPIE's Del Monte stock, and that this offer would remain open until July 15, 1996. (MS Ex. 9 at 6780-81). As justification for this offer, the letter stated that, using an EBITDA valuation methodology and a range of multiples of 6-7x, the total equity value of Del Monte would be in the range of $105-$190 million. (MS Ex. 9). The letter further stated that, at this range of equity values, PPIE's Del Monte stock had "no economic value" since the accreted value of the senior series of preferred stock was $384 million. (MS Ex. 9). Kett forwarded this letter to Herz shortly after he received it. (Herz Dep. at 143).

*6 Herz then spoke with Philip Shantz, a Senior Vice-President at Prudential, in an apparent attempt to reconcile the $1 million offer from Del Monte with Prudential's previous view that PPIE's Del Monte stock was worth $3-$5 million. (DM Ex. 26 at 2994; Herz Dep. at 254). Prudential orally replied that it was their current belief that Prudential could not sell PPIE's Del Monte stock for much more than $1 million, and that the earlier $3-$5 million valuation was based on factors that were no longer present. [FN12] (DM Ex. 26 at 2995). As a result, Prudential "strongly recommended" that PPIE accept the $1 million offer. (DM Ex. 26 at 2295). Herz did not share with Del Monte the fact that Prudential had revised its valuation downward, as Herz understood that he and Del Monte were engaged in "arm's length" negotiations regarding the sale of the Del Monte stock. (Herz Dep. at 274; 255-257).

FN12. In particular, Prudential based its conclusions on a belief that Del Monte had not achieved its targeted results for the nine months ending March 31, 1996, "[would] most likely not achieve their targeted results for the year," and that Del Monte's business volume appeared to be declining rather than growing. The record is not clear regarding what information Prudential relied upon in making these assessments.

During the summary of 1996, Herz spoke to Berner a number of times about Del Monte's $1 million offer. (See Herz Dep. at 231). In one of their July 1996 conversations, Herz asked Del Monte for "any and all information regarding Del Monte, its affairs, in order to assist [PPIE] in determining whether or not a million dollars was a fair price and the highest and best price that [PPIE] could achieve." (Herz Dep. at 182). Herz acknowledged that he did not specify what information he wanted and that he left it to Del Monte to determine what information to send to PPIE. (Herz Dep. at 185-86). Del Monte replied that the company year-end financial statements (for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1996) would be published shortly and would be delivered to Herz at that time. (Herz Dep. at 184). On August 23, 1996, Herz again spoke to Del Monte and asked specifically for the June 30, 1996 audited financial statements. (Herz Dep. at 194). Although the final audited financial statements had not yet been completed, on August 28, 1996, Del Monte sent Herz detailed drafts of its June 30, 1996 financial statements. (DM Ex. 27). Subsequently, Herz was provided with the final audited financial statements. (MS Ex. 32).

Additionally, during their conversations that summer, Berner told Herz that PPIE's Del Monte stock had no inherent value but only had blocking or veto power. (Herz Dep. at 2993). He also told Herz several times during those months that Del Monte was regularly receiving unsolicited, general expressions of interest from potential buyers, but that there was nothing "specific." (Herz Dep. at 2993; see also Herz Dep. at 230-31). Finally, Berner informed Herz that no due diligence concerning a potential acquisition of Del Monte was occurring. (Herz Dep. at 231).

On September 4, 1996, Herz asked Berner for any other information, in addition to the June 30 financial statements which he had already received, [FN13] that Morgan Stanley could provide that would help him evaluate the $1 million offer. (MS Ex. At 10). In response, Berner referred to the existence of an offering memorandum related to an exchange offer and agreed to send it to Herz. [FN14] (Herz Dep. at 287). Also during this September 4, 1996 conversation, Berner told Herz that Del Monte "had been in play and was on a regular basis receiving inquiries from potential interested parties." (Herz Dep. at 287, 299). Herz made no further inquiries about the identities of these interested parties, nor did he convey the fact that Del Monte had received such inquiries to Prudential, though he did convey it to Kett. (Herz Dep. at 301).

FN13. It is unclear whether Herz had received the final audited statements at this time or only the draft financial statements.

FN14. This document was provided to PPIE in November 1997 and is discussed infra.

*7 In response to PPIE's request for an extension of the deadline on Del Monte's $1 million offer for the Del Monte stock (apparently made by Herz during this same September 4, 1996 conversation), by letter dated September 4, 1996 Berner confirmed to Herz that the deadline had been extended through September 30, 1996. (DM Ex. 28 at 2344-45). Using identical language to the language used in Berner's June 24, 1996 letter to Kett (which Herz had previously seen), this letter to Herz again estimated the equity valuation of Del Monte at $105-$190 million. (DM Ex. 28 at 2344-45). Herz understood that the valuation contained in the September 4 letter was based on Del Monte's EBITDA as of June 30, 1996, and therefore that the September 4 letter did not contain an updated valuation of Del Monte. (Herz Dep. at 208-09).

Then, on September 23, 1996, TPG wrote a letter to Berner of Morgan Stanley in which it reiterated its "strong interest in exploring the acquisition of Del Monte" and stated that it understood that "the Company's board is now considering the sale of Del Monte itself." (PPIE Ex. 50 at 962). This document was not provided to PPIE.

Later that month, on September 30, 1996, Del Monte provided Huff Asset Management (its largest shareholder) with its internal financial projection model dated as of September 26, 1996. (PPIE Ex. 51 at 144-151). This model showed that Del Monte's actual EBITDA for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1996 (after adjusting for a number of non-recurring items) was $92 million, or $7 million higher than the $85 million that the model provided to PPIE on June 2, 1996 had shown. [FN15] (PPIE Ex. 51 at 144-151). It also showed a projected EBITDA of $103 million for the twelve months ending December 31, 1996 (i.e. a different time period than that used in the projections previously provided to PPIE). (PPIE Ex. 51 at 144-51) (emphasis added). Using a multiple range of 6-7x and a projected debt balance as of December 31, 1996 of $357 million (compared to $420 million as of June 30, 1996), Del Monte indicated that its projected total equity value as of December 31, 1996 was $262-$365 million. (PPIE Ex. 5 at 144-151) (emphasis added). The foregoing analysis was also not provided to PPIE. [FN16]

FN15. In calculating the $92 million figure, Del Monte made a number of pro forma adjustments to reflect the sale of certain non-core assets that it had completed during fiscal 1996. Although PPIE had received the detailed draft of the June 30, 1996 financial statements as well as the actual audited financial statements, it is unlikely that it would have been able to arrive at the $92 million figure on its own from these documents. However, as mentioned before, the September 4, 1996 supplement to the July 15, 1996 offering memorandum, which was provided to PPIE, stated that the company's actual operating performance in fiscal 1996 was $6-11 million higher than earlier projected. PPIE would have been able to calculate the EBITDA at $91 to $97 million had they used this information.

FN16. The Court notes, however, that even at the top end of the range of values included in the analysis given to Huff Asset Management, PPIE's

Del Monte stock would still have had no "economic value."

E. October-December 1996: Del Monte Exchanges Confidential Information with Potential Acquirers and Provides Disclosure Updates to PPIE

Meanwhile, Del Monte had begun to position itself for a major structural transition: either an "equity restructuring" or a "sale/merger." (PPIE Ex. 49 at 19469). In September or October 1996, Morgan Stanley created a new project name for its work in this regard with Del Monte, which it called "Project Lodge." [FN17] (Weinberg Tr. at 15-16). The existence of this new "Project Lodge" was not divulged to PPIE. (PPIE Mem. at 14). Specifically, on October 7, 1996, Del Monte executed an engagement letter with Morgan Stanley, pursuant to which Morgan Stanley was retained to work with Del Monte "in connection with the exploration of certain strategic alternatives, including the sale, recapitalization or initial public offering" of the company. (PPIE Ex. 52 at 10736).

FN17. Morgan Stanley's previous work for Del Monte, which involved advising on the sale of certain assets and a possible refinancing of certain of its indebtedness, had been called "Project Kilimanjaro." (Weinberg Tr. at 15-16; Halpern Ex. 19, 22).

*8 At an October 22, 1996 special meeting of Del Monte's Board of Directors, Morgan Stanley informed the Board that "certain informal inquiries had been received from certain potential buyers interested in obtaining information with respect to [Del Monte's] U.S. business ." (MS Ex. 33 at 2). After discussion, the Board formally authorized Del Monte's management and Morgan Stanley to respond to these inquiries, execute confidentiality agreements and provide preliminary financial and business information to interested parties. (MS Ex. 33 at 2).

On October 28, 1996, apparently in connection with its preparation of a financial information package for distribution to potential buyers, Del Monte provided to Morgan Stanley an updated internal financial model, showing projected pro forma EBITDA for calendar 1996 of $115 million. [FN18] (PPIE Ex. 56 at 153). This model also showed projected pro forma EBITDA of $120 million for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1997. [FN19] (PPIE Ex. 56 at 153). On this same date in October, Herz spoke to Del Monte's Chief Financial Officer by phone, and again inquired whether Del Monte had any additional information that could assist PPIE in evaluating the $1 million offer for the Del Monte stock. (Compl. ¶ 33). Herz was told that no further information existed. (Compl. ¶ 33). Moreover, Del Monte made no reference to Project Lodge, to the Board's recent decision to enter into confidentiality agreements with potential buyers or to the projection model that had been provided on that date to Morgan Stanley. [FN20]

FN18. The significant difference between this figure and the $103 million figure that had been provided to Huff on September 30, 1996 is not accounted for in the record. The Court assumes that it relates to additional or different pro forma adjustments that the company was making in order to present its best face to the market in the upcoming sale process.

FN19. This is the first reference to projections for the full fiscal year ending June 30, 1997.

FN20. As discussed infra, a more complete disclosure of the status of the potential sale process was provided to Herz approximately two weeks later.

Between October 28, 1996 and November 5, 1996, TPG and Hicks Muse (another financial buyer of operating assets) entered into confidentiality agreements with Del Monte and were provided with certain business and financial information about Del Monte. (DM Exs. 29 at 21413, 30). On November 7, 1996, TPG held business and financial due diligence meetings with Del Monte's management. [FN21] (PPIE Ex. 72 at 2805).

FN21. Hicks Muse held a similar meeting with Del Monte on November 19, 1997. (PPIE Ex. 72 at 2802).

On November 8, 1996, Morgan Stanley made a presentation to Del Monte's Board of Directors. (PPIE Ex. 60). Morgan Stanley reported to the Board that Del Monte's equity value had been enhanced by the restructuring of its operations and favorable business conditions, and that the timing might be right to pursue a sale of the company. (PPIE Ex. 60 at 369). Morgan Stanley's preliminary valuation analysis as of that date suggested that the equity value of Del Monte could be in the range of $270-$375 million. [FN22] (PPIE Ex. 60 at 377). Morgan Stanley recommended that Del Monte formally respond to the expressions of interest that had been received, and proceed to more detailed discussions and information sharing only if acceptable valuation ranges were provided. (PPIE Ex. 60 at 408).

FN22. This analysis was based on Del Monte's average pro forma EBITDA for the three years ending June 30, 1996 through June 30, 1998 of $113 million and an estimated debt balance of $420 million. (PPIE Ex. 60 at 378). The upper end of the valuation range was based on a discounted cash flow analysis. (PPIE Ex. 60 at 378). The Court again notes that, even at the upper end of this valuation range, PPIE's Del Monte stock would have had no economic value due to the liquidation value of the senior series of preferred stock, although, presumably, the "hold-up" value would increase with an increasing valuation range.

PPIE was not made aware of or given access to the materials presented by Morgan Stanley at this Board meeting. However, Del Monte's outside counsel and Del Monte's Chief Financial Officer called Herz immediately after the November 8 Board meeting and told Herz that potential buyers had approached Del Monte, that Del Monte's Board of Directors had authorized management to go forward with the sale process, that confidentiality agreements had been signed and that prospective purchasers were to begin due diligence. [FN23] (Samuels Dep. at 181-82). Herz asked for no additional information.

FN23. PPIE does not offer evidence to dispute that this disclosure was made and the record does contain a letter from Meyers to Herz that refers to a

November 8 phone call between them. (PPIE Ex. 30 at 5465)

*9 Rather, between November 5, 1996 and November 11, 1996, Herz and Berner continued, by phone, to negotiate the price that Del Monte was willing to pay for the stock. By November 11, 1996, the parties had agreed to a price of $1.6 million, plus an additional $400,000 payment if Del Monte were sold within two years. [FN24] (PPIE Ex. 33; Herz Tr. at 322, 324, 329-32, 355-60).

FN24. Although PPIE alleges in its Memorandum of Law that during these negotiations it relied on "the defendants' persistent and repeated representations that the stock had nothing more than nuisance value and that no sale of the company was in process" (PPIE Ex. 60 at 378), this claim is unsupported. The record does not contain any evidence that Morgan Stanley made any representation that PPIE's Del Monte stock had "nothing more than nuisance value" during any of these November phone calls and it reflects that Herz knew that a sale of Del Monte might be in progress.

On November 14, 1996, Del Monte's Chief Financial Officer sent Herz a draft stock purchase agreement for PPIE's Del Monte stock, which reflected the $1.6 million agreement, along with certain "disclosure updates which I described in our telephone conversation of Friday [November 8]." (PPIE Ex. 30 at 5465). The "disclosure updates" included (1) an Offering Memorandum to the holders of certain of Del Monte's subordinated debt securities (the "Offering Memorandum"), dated July 15, 1996 with supplements dated August 22, 1996 and September 4, 1996; (2) a draft notice of redemption to be sent to the holders of certain of Del Monte's subordinated debt securities, dated November 18, 1996 (the "Draft Notice of Redemption"); (3) a copy of the audited financial statements for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1996; and (4) Del Monte's unaudited interim financial statements for the quarter ending September 30, 1996. (DM Exs. 1, 35).

These documents contained information previously disclosed to PPIE only orally. For example, Page 7 of the Offering Memorandum stated:

The Company believes that the completion of a financial restructuring ... coupled with the focus by the Company on its core ... operations [and] divestiture of non-core operations ... will increase the Board of Directors' flexibility in reviewing its options to maximize shareholder value through a sale of the Company or an initial public offering The Board of Directors intends after the completion of the Exchange Offer ... to monitor the success of the Company's recently implemented business strategy ... and the efforts to sell Del Monte Latin America and to restructure the Company's equity, and to consider all relevant factors to determine what additional measures could be implemented to maximize shareholder value, including a sale or initial public offering, which could occur at any time.

(DM Ex. 1 at 5188) (emphasis added). Page 2 of the Draft Notice of Redemption (which contains only two pages in total) stated in a section entitled "Inquiries from Interested Parties":

The Company has recently received unsolicited inquiries from certain parties which have requested information to determine if they may be interested in pursuing an acquisition of [Del Monte]. The Company has executed confidentiality agreements with such parties and has made certain financial and business information available to them. The Board of Directors of the Company has not solicited offers and has made no determination to sell the Company.

(DM Ex. 35 at 5510) (emphasis added). The September 4, 1996 supplement to the Offering Memorandum also informed the reader that the company's actual operating performance in fiscal 1996 was $6-$11 million higher than previously projected. (MS Ex. 32 at 5153). The September 1997 interim financial statement, for its part, showed that Del Monte's earnings were significantly higher in the three months ending September 30, 1996 than in the comparable year-earlier period, with operating income having increased by $16 million and gross margin increasing from 13.9% to 21.5% (DM Ex. 35 at 5514, 5518). Although the cover letter accompanying these financial statements invited Herz to call either Del Monte or Morgan Stanley with any questions, Herz did not do so. (Herz Dep. at 348).

*10 In fact, Herz reviewed these disclosure documents only "briefly" and then filed them. He did not send these documents to Prudential and does not recall whether he had sent them to Kett or to anyone at Coopers & Lybrand. (DM Ex. Herz Dep. at 337-38). Nor does he recall reading the disclosure regarding the execution of confidentiality agreements and the commencement of due diligence. (Herz Dep. at 334-337).

Herz conceded that, had he been aware that confidentiality agreements were executed and certain parties were conducting due diligence--the very information contained in the Offering Memorandum and Draft Notice of Redemption--he would have considered it important and would have asked follow up questions of Del Monte. (Herz Dep. at 330-31). Kett testified to the same effect, i.e. that, had he seen the disclosure contained in the Offering Memorandum and Draft Notice of Redemption, he would have asked Del Monte to disclose the identities of the interested parties and to provide copies of any information provided to these parties. (Kett Dep. at 227; 502-504).

Nevertheless, on or about November 21, 1996, PPIE's bankruptcy counsel filed a motion with the Bankruptcy Court specifically asking it to approve the sale of PPIE's Del Monte stock to Del Monte on the terms contained in the draft stock purchase agreement. [FN25] (Compl.¶ 35). The draft stock purchase agreement included an express disclaimer by PPIE of reliance on any representations by Del Monte not contained in the agreement, including representations regarding the "operations, financial condition, plans, [or] prospects" of Del Monte. (PPIE Ex. 30 at 5475). In addition, the draft stock purchase agreement contained a representation by PPIE that, among other things, it was a sophisticated investor and was satisfied that all its questions had been answered. [FN26] (PPIE Ex. 30 at 5475-76).

FN25. Because PPIE had filed a bankruptcy petition, it required the approval of the Bankruptcy Court before it could enter into a binding agreement to sell its Del Monte stock.

FN26. The stock purchase agreement that PPIE executed with Solow on January 23, 1997 (discussed infra) contained a similar representation by PPIE.

F. December 1996--January 14, 1997: The Parties' Dealings with the Bankruptcy Court

On December 3, 1996, TPG indicated to Morgan Stanley that it did not think the total equity value of Del Monte was greater than $100-$150 million. (MS Ex. 6 at 43). This amount was much lower than the values projected by Morgan Stanley in its November 8, 1996 presentation to Del Monte's Board of Directors, and was considered an "insult" by Del Monte management. (MS Ex. 6 at 44, 46). Because Del Monte's Board of Directors had informed Morgan Stanley that it was unlikely to entertain offers below a $200 million total equity value, Morgan Stanley did not regard this valuation range as potentially leading to the sale of Del Monte. (MS Ex. 44, 46). PPIE was not informed of this offer.

The following day, December 4, 1996, the Bankruptcy Court held a hearing on PPIE's proposed sale of its stock to Del Monte. PPIE told the court that it had concluded "based on valuations that had been provided [by] Del Monte ... [that] the equity [of its Del Monte stock] [wa]s worth little or nothing." (Compl. ¶ 39). Solow, PPIE's largest unaffiliated creditor, objected to PPIE's agreement to sell its Del Monte stock to Del Monte for $1.6 million. (Peress Dep. 3/29/01 at 13-14). Consequently, at a December 19, 1996 hearing, the Bankruptcy Court ordered that PPIE's Del Monte stock be auctioned. (DM Ex. 38 at 1289). At that hearing, Del Monte's outside counsel pressed the Bankruptcy Court to require that the auction be concluded by January 15, 1997. When asked by the Bankruptcy Court for its rationale for this date, Del Monte's counsel referred to an ongoing financial restructuring of Del Monte in an attempt to ward off a potential bankruptcy filing by Del Monte itself as well as to "other dynamics that will come into play [after January 15] which I'm not at liberty to discuss." (PPIE Ex. 85 at 559). PPIE claims that Del Monte's representations were not true, arguing that there is circumstantial evidence--namely that Del Monte was acquired in April 1997--that Del Monte wanted this January 15 date so that it could more easily proceed with that sale. Regardless, the Bankruptcy Court ordered that the auction be concluded by January 10, 1997. (DM Ex. 38 at 1287).

*11 In preparation for a Bankruptcy Court hearing scheduled for January 8, 1997 to address a motion by Solow to dismiss the bankruptcy proceeding, PPIE's bankruptcy counsel, David Peress ("Peress"), and Herz held a conference call with Del Monte's Chief Financial Officer and Berner of Morgan Stanley on January 7, 1997. (Herz Dep. at 410; Peress Dep. 3/8/01 at 44). During that call, Berner told him that Del Monte was "exploring all avenues of investment or potential investment" and that it was still "in play" but that there was "nothing in the offing or nothing that they felt [he] should be aware of." (Peress Dep. 3/8/01 at 46).

Peress took this to mean that there were "no imminent transactions ... nothing that could be identified." (Peress Dep. 3/8/03 at 46-47). Peress explained that, in his mind, the terms "offers" and "expressions of interest" were synonymous, so he was left with the impression that there had also not been any expressions of interest by potential buyers. (Peress Dep. 3/8/03 at 47). Peress did assume, however, that it was likely that interested parties had entered into confidentiality agreements and were conducting due diligence (MS Ex. 3 at 54-55). Indeed, at the time of this conversation, Peress had read in certain publicly available documents that Morgan Stanley had been retained by Del Monte "for the purposes of pursuing additional investment or transactions, such as the sale of all or part of the company." (Peress Dep. 3/8/01 at 45) (emphasis added).

On January 9, 1997, Del Monte's Board of Directors met telephonically to discuss the potential purchase of PPIE's Del Monte stock at the upcoming auction, which had been mandated by the Bankruptcy Court. (PPIE Exs. 62, 63). At that meeting, the Board of Directors authorized Del Monte to spend up to $15 million to purchase the Del Monte stock from PPIE. (PPIE Exs. 62, 63). A spreadsheet prepared by Morgan Stanley on that same date analyzed the allocation of Del Monte's total equity value, assuming that PPIE's Del Monte stock had been repurchased by Del Monte from PPIE, at a total equity valuation range of $350-$450 million. [FN27] (PPIE Ex. 70 at 2720). The Court notes that this analysis appears to contemplate scenarios in which the junior series of preferred stock would receive a partial payout before the senior series of preferred stock received a 100% payout. There is no assertion that anyone outside Morgan Stanley was sent this document, nor is there anything on the record as to what prompted its creation.

FN27. As discussed supra, on November 8, 1996 (about two months earlier) Morgan Stanley had advised Huff Asset Management that the total equity value was in the range of $270-375 million.

By the close of business on January 10, 1997, Del Monte's $1.6 million bid for PPIE's Del Monte stock was the only offer that had been received. (Peress Dep. 3/8/01 at 202). On that date, therefore, both Peress and Herz sought information from Del Monte and Morgan Stanley to assist PPIE in convincing the Bankruptcy Court to approve the sale at a hearing scheduled for the following Monday, January 13, 1997. (Peress Dep. 3/8/01 at 198; Peress Dep. 2/29/01 at 130-31). PPIE required this information because neither Del Monte nor Morgan Stanley was willing to make a representative available to testify at the January 13 hearing. (Peress Dep. 3/8/01 at 202).

*12 Peress asked Morgan Stanley whether it had prepared any "analyses in connection with the efforts to seek investment or possible acquisition." (Peress Dep. 3/8/01 at 203). Morgan Stanley responded that it was "in the process of working with the company to provide and prepare analyses of value, but that there was nothing available" for PPIE to review. (MS Ex. 4 at 2-162). Peress was "suspicious" about whether or not that was true. (MS Ex. 4 at 2-162).

Herz contacted Del Monte and "requested a schedule prepared by [Del Monte's Chief Financial Officer] or somebody under his control to support the notion [before the Bankruptcy Court] that there was little or no economic value to the [PPIE's Del Monte stock]" and "to convey to the court that [PPIE was] getting the highest and best offer" for the stock. (Herz Dep. at 392, 394). Herz told Del Monte that he wanted the most current information possible in the analysis. (Herz Dep. at 392). Later that day, Del Monte's Chief Financial Officer faxed to Herz a one-page chart showing that the total equity value for all of Del Monte was $35 million. (DM Ex. 39 at 6078-79). This chart was clearly labeled that it was based on the audited financial statements for the fiscal year 1996, which ended on June 30, 1996. (DM Ex. 39 at 6079). The chart stated that Del Monte's EBITDA for that period was $82 million, to which was applied a multiple of 6.0x. From an aggregate enterprise value of $492 million, debt of $457 million was subtracted, yielding an equity value of $35 million. [FN28] (DM Ex. 39 at 6079).

FN28. The "as of June 30, 1996" $35 million valuation analysis differs significantly from the valuation analysis provided to Kett by Morgan Stanley on June 24, 1996 (which showed a valuation range of $105-190 million). The June 24, 1996 analysis used an (a) EBITDA of $85 million, (b) a range of multiples of 6-7x, and (c) an estimated debt of $420 million.

What if any impact the receipt of this valuation had upon PPIE is unclear for two reasons. First, Herz testified that he did not consider the valuation further due diligence to use in analyzing the value of Del Monte. (Herz Dep. at 391). Second, given the large differential between the $35 million valuation provided on January 10, 1997 and the $105-$190 million valuation previously provided to PPIE on June 24, 1996, it is unlikely that PPIE actually believed that, as of January 10, 1997, the total equity value of all of Del Monte was only $35 million.

On January 12, 1997, Herz again spoke with Del Monte's Chief Financial Officer, (Herz Dep. at 411), who told him that PPIE's Del Monte stock had no economic, veto or blocking value, and that it had only "nuisance value." (Herz Dep. at 412). Herz was left with the "general understanding" from that conversation that Del Monte was not being sold, though he does not recall specifically what words were used. (Herz Dep. at 412-13). Herz also noted that his conversations with Morgan Stanley during this time period similarly left him with the "understanding" that there "was no definitive sale of Del Monte, proposed or contemplated" and that no definitive offers had been made. (Herz Dep. at 417-421).

On or around January 12, 1997, the Bankruptcy Court received a bid from Solow of $1.65 million for the Del Monte stock, and ordered PPIE's bankruptcy counsel to proceed with an auction between Solow and Del Monte. (Compl. ¶ 45; DM Ex. 40). The bidding continued until Del Monte bid $10.15 million. (Compl. ¶ 48). Solow then increased his bid to $10.6 million plus $400,000 if Del Monte were sold within two years. At this point, the auction was adjourned for the day. (Compl. ¶ 48).

*13 On the morning of January 14, 1997, Del Monte withdrew from the bidding. (Compl. ¶ 50). Later that afternoon, the Bankruptcy Court held an in-chambers conference during which it asked Del Monte's counsel why Del Monte had been willing to pay so much more than its previous $1.6 million offer, and whether there was a transaction or event that provided the impetus for Del Monte's bid. (Herz. Dep. at 541-42; see also Peress Dep. 3/29/01 at 47-48). Del Monte's counsel was specifically asked by Solow's attorney whether any transaction was "in prospect", to which Del Monte's counsel responded "no." (Peress Dep., 3/29/01 at 60). Del Monte's counsel further stated that there was "nothing more than that which had already been disclosed to the court and the parties" and that Del Monte's bidding was motivated by a desire to "simplify its capital structure." (MS Ex. 4 at 2; Peress Dep. 3/29/01 at 48). Del Monte's counsel also told the court that Del Monte was undergoing a financial restructuring and that part of the financial restructuring was "seeking interest by investors or potential acquirers." (Peress Dep. 3/29/01 at 59).

At a hearing later in the afternoon of January 14, 1997, Peress told the Bankruptcy Court that:

If asked whether [PPIE] would consider holding the stock at this point, ... Mr. Herz's answer would be no; that Del Monte's fortunes have declined ... with the income trend being a downward one as profitable operations have been sold in order to raise funds ... leaving Del Monte with the ... relatively unprofitable ... canning business; that [its Del Monte Stock is subject to] the risk that Del Monte might one day have to engage in a restructuring transaction which could have the effect of further diluting ... or eliminating [PPIE's] interests. [FN29]

FN29. The Court notes that Peress's assessment is inconsistent with the interim financial statements for the quarter ending September 30, 1996 which had been provided to PPIE. (DM Ex. 4 at 35-36). The Bankruptcy Court, therefore, orally approved the sale to Solow on the afternoon of January 14, 1997. However, because Solow had not decided whether he was willing to purchase the Del Monte stock subject to the Stockholders Agreement, a written order approving the sale was not entered on that date. (DM Ex. 4 at 44-46). Thus, as of January 14, 1997, there was no final sale of the stock.

G. January 15-21, 1997: Morgan Stanley Provides Del Monte with an Updated Valuation and Solicits Firm Bids for the Company

In response to an early January 1997 request from Charterhouse (another of Del Monte's stockholders) for a valuation of its stake in Del Monte for purposes of its own efforts to raise capital, on January 15, 1997, Morgan Stanley provided Charterhouse with a written valuation stating that the total equity value of Del Monte was $350-$450 million. (MS Ex. 23, 24). This valuation was based on projected average EBITDA for the two fiscal years ending June 30, 1997 of $113 million and a range of multiples of 6.5-7.5, and incorporated "values implicit in recent unsolicited indications of interest." [FN30] (MS Ex. 23 at 190, 196). The letter to Charterhouse describing this valuation referred to a "possible sale of Del Monte." (MS Ex. 23 at 190). A spreadsheet attached to this valuation shows an allocation to PPIE's Del Monte stock of $13.3-$23.7 million, based on a range of values of $350-$450 million. (MS Ex. 23 at 197). On January 21, 1997, Morgan Stanley sent an almost-identical letter to Del Monte, including a valuation of $350-$450 million, to be used by Del Monte for "income tax purposes ." (DM Ex. 42 at 4017, 4109).

FN30. This apparently refers to TPG's early December 1996 assessment that Del Monte's equity was worth $100-150 million. Morgan Stanley testified that this indication caused it to reduce, rather than increase, the valuation range that it provided to Charterhouse. (See MS Ex. 6 at 119).

14 On January 21, 1997, Morgan Stanley circulated to Del Monte a draft of a letter dated January 27, 1997 to be sent to interested parties. (MS Ex. 25). This letter instructed the interested parties to submit firm offers for Del Monte by February 12, 1997. (MS Ex. 25). Later on January 21, Del Monte's Board of Directors authorized Morgan Stanley to send out the letter and solicit firm bids. [FN31] (MS Ex. 6 at 113).

FN31. The bid solicitation letters, along with a draft Merger Agreement, were sent to TPG and Hicks Muse on January 29, 1997. (MS Mem. at 19). These letters asked for firm bids by February 12, 1997.

H. January 23, 1997: Del Monte Provides Further Disclosure to the Bankruptcy Court and the Sale to Solow is Approved

On January 23, 1997, Del Monte's counsel submitted a letter to the Bankruptcy Court and to PPIE's counsel to "supplement the information provided to the [Bankruptcy] Court on January 14, 1997 respecting Del Monte's equity restructuring and sale process." (DM Ex. 43). The letter explained that, since that date, Del Monte had received an analysis from Morgan Stanley suggesting that the fair market value of all of Del Monte's equity was in the range of $350-$450 million, and that the range of values for PPIE's Del Monte Stock was $13.3-$23.7 million. (DM Ex. 43). The letter acknowledged that Morgan Stanley had reviewed "the values implicit in certain non-binding, unsolicited indications of interest expressed by certain potential purchasers of Del Monte." (DM Ex. 43). The letter emphasized that the values set forth were based on a possible sale of Del Monte, that such a sale may not be consummated at all or at the valuation indicated, and that the value stated was "subject to significant uncertainties." (DM Ex. 43). At the time this letter was received by the Bankruptcy Court, it had yet to enter a written order approving the sale of PPIE's Del Monte stock to Solow.

Peress discussed the letter with both Del Monte's counsel as well as with Herz immediately after it was received. (Peress Dep. 2/29/01 at 65-66). There is no evidence that either Herz nor Peress sought any clarification of the letter from Del Monte or its counsel. At the following Bankruptcy Court hearing on January 23, 1997, Peress explained that he still wanted to go through with the sale to Solow, because "it isn't like [Del Monte or its counsel] are saying we have a deal in hand that is going to return 13 million dollars." (MS Ex. 42 at 6). Peress told the court that, despite being aware that Morgan Stanley was having discussions with potential acquirers, "the record shouldn't really change in the sense that [PPIE] has gotten the highest and best offer for the [Del Monte S]tock," and he indicated his belief that there was no benefit to remarketing PPIE's Del Monte stock. (PPIE Ex. 73 at 1073). Likewise, Herz believed that "a bird in hand is always worth more than two in the bush." (Herz Dep. at 103). In addition, Del Monte's counsel explained to the Bankruptcy Court that "it [was] not Del Monte's position that the letter should alter what the Court would otherwise do." (PPIE Ex. 73 at 1075). Thus, late in the afternoon of January 23, 1997, the Bankruptcy Court entered a written order approving the sale of the Del Monte stock to Solow for $10.6 million, plus $400,000 in the event that Del Monte was sold within two years. (DM Ex. 45 at 4). As part of the Stock Purchase Agreement between PPIE and Solow, PPIE signed a disclaimer similar to the one it had proposed to the Bankruptcy Court.

I. February--April 1997: Del Monte is Sold to TPG

*15 On February 12, 1997, in response to the bid solicitation letter which it had sent out, Morgan Stanley received bids for Del Monte from TPG, Hicks Muse, Dole Foods and Tri-Valley Growers, though the only bids that were not subject to further due diligence were from TPG and Hicks Muse. (DM Ex. 47-50). TPG bid for an aggregate enterprise value [FN32] of $890 million which equated to total equity value of $436 million), while Hicks Muse bid $220 million total equity value. (DM Ex. 49 at 830; Ex. 48 at 1290). Morgan Stanley was "stunned" by the amount of TPG's bid, particularly given the great value differential between the TPG and Hicks Muse bids. (Bernier Dep. at 290-291; see also Meyers Dep. at 405).

FN32. Aggregate enterprise value refers to the total value to be paid for the company's business, before subtracting amounts necessary to pay off all of the company's existing indebtedness. For example, if Del Monte had $400 million of debt and received a bid for an aggregate enterprise value of $800 million, the total equity value would be $400 million ($800 million minus $400 million).

PPIE argues that Del Monte was actually aware that TPG would bid an aggregate enterprise value of approximately $800 million as early as January 8, 1996. It points to a January 8, 1997 presentation that TPG made to potential financing sources related to a potential bid for Del Monte for that amount. (PPIE Ex. 64; Meyers Dep. at 281-82). A copy of this presentation, prepared by TPG in connection with this meeting, was discovered in the files of Del Monte's Treasurer. (PPIE Ex. 64 at 11519). PPIE argues that because this document was found in Del Monte's files, it must have had access to this document prior to the sale of the stock. However, Del Monte's General Counsel knew of no Del Monte employees who had attended the January 8 meeting nor any Del Monte employees who were aware of the amount that TPG would bid for the company before bids were actually received on February 12, 1997. (Sawyers Dep. at 137). Further, Thomas Gibbons, Del Monte's Treasurer since 1995, has submitted a declaration stating that "I did not receive, see or learn of this document ... until mid-April 1997, nor did I have any knowledge of the contents of that document until after February 12, 1997." [FN33] (DM Gibbons Decl. ¶¶ 2-4). Morgan Stanley also denies having had knowledge of what TPG was going to bid for the company prior to February 12, 1997.

FN33. A notation in a Morgan Stanley contact sheet indicates that Del Monte's Controller participated in a conference call with TPG on January 8, 1997. (MS Ex. 34 at 2805). However, Del Monte's Controller has submitted a declaration that, while it is possible that he participated in such a conversation, he is certain that TPG did not indicate to him prior to February 12, 1997 what it intended to bid for Del Monte. (DM French Decl. ¶ 3).

On February 14, 1997, Del Monte's stockholders (including Solow) met to discuss a possible allocation of the $436 million of proceeds that they were to receive in the TPG transaction. (Banks Dep. at 262-63). Solow took an aggressive negotiating posture, threatening to veto the transaction if he did not receive a very favorable allocation of the proceeds. (Banks Dep. at 131-32; 263-65). The other stockholders eventually acceded to Solow's demands, and he received a $31 million allocation, which was a higher percentage of the accreted value of his stock than was received by at least one class of preferred stock higher in seniority to the stock held by Solow. (Banks Dep. at 132, 264; DM Ex. 52-53). In mid-April 1997, TPG acquired Del Monte, with Solow receiving $31 million for his Del Monte stock. (Compl. at ¶ 54; DM Ex. 53 at 3243).

II. SUMMARY JUDGMENT STANDARD

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56(c) provides that summary judgment is proper "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to the interrogatories and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(c); Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 106 S.Ct. 2548, 91 L.Ed.2d 265 (1986). Mere "conclusory statements, conjecture or speculation by the party resisting the motion will not defeat summary judgment." Kulak v. City of New York, 88 F.3d 63, 71 (2d Cir.1996). If the moving party meets its burden of identifying those portions of the record that it believes demonstrate the absence of genuine issues of material fact, "the burden then shifts to the non-moving party to demonstrate to the court the existence of a genuine issue of material fact." Lendino v. Trans Union Credit Info. Co., 970 F.2d 1110, 1112 (2d Cir.1992). To meet this burden, the nonmoving party "must come forward with affirmative evidence showing a genuine issue of material fact exists for trial." Chandra Corp. v. Val-Ex, Inc., Civ.A. No.99-9061, 2001 WL 669252, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. Jun.14, 2002) (citing Celotex, 477 U.S. at 324)).

*16 Summary judgment is improper if "there is any evidence in the record from any source from which a reasonable inference could be drawn in favor of the nonmoving party." Chambers v. TRM Copy Ctrs. Corp., 43 F.3d 29, 37 (2d Cir.1994). Nonetheless, "the mere existence of some alleged factual dispute between the parties will not defeat an otherwise properly supported motion for summary judgment; the requirement is that there be no genuine issue of material fact." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 247-48, 106 S.Ct. 2505, 91 L.Ed.2d 202 (1986).

In this case, PPIE claims the evidence demonstrates disputed facts as to whether Del Monte and Morgan Stanley lied and omitted material facts when negotiating to purchase PPIE's holdings of Del Monte stock. PPIE claims, inter alia, that Del Monte failed to inform PPIE, before it sold its stock to Solow, that: (1) Del Monte had retained Morgan

Stanley to explore strategic alternatives, including the sale of Del Monte; (2) third parties had expressed an interest in purchasing Del Monte; (3) prospective purchasers were conducting due diligence of Del Monte; and (4) Del Monte's financial condition was improving. With respect to its fraud claim against Morgan Stanley, PPIE claims that Morgan Stanley (1) misrepresented that there were no prospective buyers for Del Monte at the time that Morgan Stanley was engaged in serious negotiations with several potential buyers; (2) made false representations about the value of the Series D Shares and told PPIE that the Series D shares had "no economic value" and were "worthless"; and (3) "knew to a near certainty by no later than December 1996 that Del Monte would receive offers from one or more interested purchasers that would value the equity in excess of $350 million." (MS Ex. 43 at ¶ 68). PPIE alleges that due to these misrepresentations and omissions, it suffered approximately $20 million in losses: the difference between the auction price of its Del Monte Stock and the price that Solow later received for the stock when TPG acquired Del Monte.

Del Monte and Morgan Stanley for their parts deny making affirmative misstatements and assert that they made appropriate disclosures to PPIE. They assert that PPIE's claims must be dismissed because the record demonstrates sufficient disclosures so as to negate the notion of misstatements or omissions. Additionally, they argue that because of their disclosures, PPIE could not justifiably rely on any purported misstatements or omissions, and to the extent that PPIE lacked information it was due to its own indifference to the information that Del Monte had provided.

III. CHOICE OF LAW

[1] Before turning to the substantive law to decide whether there are disputes as to material issues of fact in this case, this Court must determine which state law applies to the tort and contract claims. While the parties agree that Maryland law governs PPIE's contract claim against Del Monte due to a choice of law provision in the contract at issue, they dispute which state law should govern the tort claims. [FN34] See Lazard Freres & Co. v. Protective Life Ins. Co., 108 F.3d 1531, 1540 (2d Cir.1997) ("It is possible that, under New York's choice of law rules, the law of different jurisdictions can apply to the tort and contract claims in a given suit."). This case involves three sets of tort claims: a claim for fraud and a claim for negligent misrepresentation against Del Monte and a claim for fraud against Morgan Stanley. PPIE argues that either Delaware or Maryland should apply to these tort claims. Del Monte and Morgan Stanley each seek application of New York law.

FN34. It is worth noting that the contract between Del Monte and PPIE does not influence the choice of law as to the tort claims in this case. The pertinent contract provision provides that "this Agreement shall be construed and enforced in accordance with and governed by the law of the State of Maryland." Such language is too narrow to apply to the tort claims asserted by PPIE in this case. See Krock v. Lipsay, 97 F.3d 640, 645 (2d Cir.1996) (finding that a choice of law provision stating that the contract "shall be governed by and construed with the laws of [Massachusetts]" did not apply to the tort claims asserted by the plaintiff).

*17 "It is well-settled that, in diversity cases, federal courts must look to the laws of the forum state to resolve issues regarding conflicts of law." Krock v. Lipsay, 97 F.3d 640, 645 (2d Cir.1996) (citing Klaxon Co. v. Stentor Elec. Mfg. Co., 313 U.S. 487, 496, 61 S.Ct. 1020, 85 L.Ed. 1477 (1941)). Since this suit was brought in the Southern District of New York, the Court must look to New York law to determine which state's law should apply. Generally, "New York law employs an 'interest analysis' in choice of law analysis of tort claims, under which courts apply 'the law of the jurisdiction having the greatest interest in the litigation.'" Cromer Finance Ltd. v. Berger, 158 F.Supp.2d 347, 357 (S.D.N.Y.2001) (quoting Curley v. AMR Corp., 153 F.3d 5, 12 (2d Cir.1998)).

According to this principle, "fraud claims are governed by the laws of the jurisdiction where the injury is deemed to have occurred--which usually is where the plaintiff is located." Pinnacle Oil Co. v. Triumph Oklahoma, L.P., Civ.A. No.93-3434, 1997 WL 362224, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. Jun. 27, 1997) (citing Sack v. Low, 478 F.2d 360, 366 (2d Cir.1973) (Friendly, J.); Cooney v. Osgood March., Inc., 81 N.Y.2d 66, 72, 595 N.Y.S.2d 919, 612 N.E.2d 277 (1993) ("If conflict-regulating laws are at issue, the law of the jurisdiction where the tort occurred will generally apply because that jurisdiction has the greatest interest in regulating behavior within its borders."). Indeed, "[t]he traditional view has been that ... when a person sustains loss by fraud, the place of wrong is where the loss is sustained, not where fraudulent misrepresentations are made." Sack, 478 F.2d at 366 (citations omitted). "For business entities such as corporations, the place of injury is the principal place of business or location of the business, as opposed to the place of incorporation or organization." Pinnacle, 1997 WL 362224, at * 1.

Under this traditional interest analysis, PPIE and Del Monte disagree as to whether New York or Delaware has a greater interest. [FN35] Upon review of the record, it is clear that New York law should apply. The fraud alleged in this case was committed in pertinent part from June 1995 through January 1997. During this period, PPIE has alleged that Del Monte made false statements to Herz and Kett. During those periods, Herz, PPIE's sole representative in the United States, was first based in Connecticut and, as of mid to late 1996, he relocated to New York. As he conducted business from his residence, the Court views his home as PPIE's principal place of business. Kett was either in New York or London. [FN36] In addition, New York was not only PPIE's principal place of business, but it was also the place of the great majority of communications at issue in this case, which were transmitted from California, where Del Monte's Chief Financial Officer David Meyers worked, to Herz in New York. Such communications included the myriad phone calls, faxes, and mailings described earlier.

FN35. PPIE does not argue that Maryland law should apply based on this analysis, but relies instead on the internal affairs doctrine discussed infra.

FN36. Neither party argues that Connecticut or British law should apply in this case. In any event, the Court would find that New York still has the greatest interest because the majority of the alleged fraud was completed in New York.

18 Far less communication between Del Monte and PPIE occurred in Delaware, and these communications were limited to the month of January 1997, when PPIE auctioned its stock under the auspices of the Delaware Bankruptcy Court. During this month, Del Monte made specific representations to PPIE that it had no information to turn over to it that it had not already disclosed. These representations replicated earlier representations made to PPIE in New York. The other set of representations made by Del Monte in Delaware involve the January 23, 1997 letter in which Del Monte reassessed the value of PPIE's Del Monte Stock. While perhaps significant, this one letter communication does not trump the series of communications that allegedly occurred in New York. Therefore, the Court concludes that New York has the greater interest in this lawsuit.

Nevertheless, PPIE argues that Maryland law should apply due to a specialized application of the interest analysis rule: the internal affairs doctrine. See BBS Norwalk One, Inc. v. Raccolta, Inc., 60 F.Supp.2d 123, 129 (S.D.N.Y.1999). The internal affairs doctrine "recognizes that only one State should have the authority to regulate a corporation's internal affairs--matters peculiar to the relationships among or between the corporation and its current officers, directors, and shareholders--because otherwise a corporation could be faced with conflicting demands." Edgar v. MITE Corp., 457 U.S. 624, 645-46, 102 S.Ct. 2629, 73 L.Ed.2d 269 (1982). Accordingly, PPIE maintains that since Del Monte is a Maryland corporation, Maryland laws should control the relationship between Del Monte and PPIE, one of its shareholders. However, this doctrine appears to apply only in those cases where a corporation owed a fiduciary duty to shareholders. See, e.g., Walten v. Morgan Stanley & Co., 623 F.2d 796, 798 (2d Cir.1980); BBS Norwalk One, 60 F.Supp.2d at 129; Hart v. General Motors Corp., 129 A.D.2d 179, 185, 517 N.Y.S.2d 490 (1st Dep't 1987). In this case, though, the remaining tort claims do not involve a claim for a breach of fiduciary duty. Moreover, the allegations in this case are not peculiar to the corporate setting and could have arisen between two parties with no corporate relationship. Therefore, the internal affairs doctrine is inapplicable, and the Court will apply New York law to PPIE's claims against Del Monte.

Likewise, the Court applies New York law to PPIE's fraud claim against Morgan Stanley. As with its claims against Del Monte, PPIE argues under the interest analysis doctrine, that Delaware law should apply. However, New York has a greater interest in PPIE's claims against Morgan Stanley than Delaware. With regard to the domicile of the parties, Morgan Stanley's principal place of business was in New York at all times relevant to this action. PPIE, operating out of Herz's office in New York during the times relevant to this claim, was also domiciled in New York. The locus of the alleged tort also requires the application of New York law. Berner, the only Morgan Stanley representative to communicate with PPIE, worked out of Morgan Stanley's New York office. In November 1996, when Berner was discussing the sale of PPIE's Del Monte stock with Herz, PPIE was also domiciled in New York. (Second Herz Dep. at 480). Thus, any alleged misrepresentations made by Berner were sent from Morgan Stanley and received by PPIE in New York. By contrast, Delaware has no relationship whatsoever to PPIE's fraud claims against Morgan Stanley; Morgan Stanley did not participate in any of the Delaware Bankruptcy Court proceedings, nor did it attend the auction of PPIE's Del Monte stock. Under the circumstances, New York has the greater interest in this case, and, therefore, New York law applies.

*19 The Court also rejects the suggestion that the internal affairs doctrine dictates the application of Maryland law to PPIE's claims against Morgan Stanley. Morgan Stanley has no corporate, contractual or statutory relationship whatsoever with PPIE. PPIE's fraud claims against Morgan Stanley are separate and distinct from PPIE's relationship with Del Monte. Accordingly, the Court is not dissuaded from its conclusion that New York law should apply.

[2] Alternatively, the Court would apply New York law in this case because PPIE has not demonstrated that New York law differs significantly from either Maryland or Delaware law. The proponent of foreign law must show that it differs materially from New York law. Dornberger v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 961 F.Supp. 506, 530-31 (S.D.N.Y.1997) (the law of the forum state applies where there is a false conflict). The only difference that PPIE claims between New York's and Delaware and Maryland's laws focuses on the reasonable reliance element of a fraud claim, which all three states share. PPIE claims that, unlike New York, neither Delaware nor Maryland take a plaintiff's sophistication into account in deciding whether reliance is justifiable. (PPIE brief at 26-27). This, however, is not accurate.

Courts in both Delaware and Maryland do consider the sophistication of a plaintiff when considering whether reliance is justifiable. See, e.g., Steigerwald v. Bradley, 136 F.Supp.2d 460, 470 (D.Md.2001) ("As an experienced businessman," plaintiff could not justifiably rely); J.A. Moore Constr. Co. v. Sussex Assocs., L.P., 688 F.Supp. 982, 990-91 (D.Del.1998); Gaffin v. Teledyne, Inc., 611 A.2d 467, 475 (Del.1992); Maryland Nat'l Bank v. Traenkle, 933 F.Supp. 1280, 1285 (D.Md.1996); Mater City Bagels, L.L.C. v. Am. Bagel Co., 50 F.Supp.2d 460 (D.Md.1999). Based on the similarity of the law in all three states, this Court is required to apply the tort law of New York state with respect to PPIE's claims against Del Monte.

IV. PPIE'S FRAUD CLAIMS AGAINST DEL MONTE AND MORGAN STANLEY ARE DISMISSED

To prove common law fraud under New York law, a plaintiff must show that: (1) the defendant made a material false statement or omission; [FN37] (2) the defendant intended to defraud the plaintiff; (3) the plaintiff reasonably relied upon the representation or omission; and (4) the plaintiff suffered damage as a result of such reliance. Banque Arabe de Internationale D'Investissement v. Maryland Nat'l Bank, 57 F.3d 146, 153 (2d Cir.1995). Also, under New York law, the plaintiff bears the burden of proving each element of a fraud claim by clear and convincing evidence, and not a mere preponderance. See Computerized Radiological Servs. v. Syntex Corp., 786 F.2d 72, 76 (2d Cir.1996) (citing Accusystems, Inc. v. Honeywell Info. Sys. Inc., 580 F.Supp. 474, 482 (S.D.N.Y.1984) (citing cases)). "This evidentiary standard demands a high order of proof ... and forbids the awarding of relief whenever the evidence is loose, equivocal or contradictory." Abrahami v. UPC Constr. Co., 224 A.D.2d 231, 638 N.Y.S.2d 11, 13 (1st Dep't 1996) (internal citation omitted).

FN37. To prove concealment, a plaintiff must also establish that the defendant had a duty to disclose information to the plaintiff. See Brass v. Am. Film Tech., Inc., 987 F.2d 142, 152 (2d Cir.1992).

*20 [3] In this case, the question of whether Del Monte and Morgan Stanley made material misrepresentations or omissions with respect to their knowledge of a pending sale of Del Monte or their valuations of PPIE's Del Monte stock is a close one. As the factual record recounted earlier shows, there is no direct evidence, although there is some circumstantial evidence, that the companies knew that a sale of Del Monte to TPG was in the making at the time of PPIE's stock sale. More significantly, there is evidence that the two companies had increased their valuations of Del Monte, and, therefore, PPIE's Del Monte Stock. Of course, valuations of companies, by their nature, are not facts but rather are estimates of a range of values based upon assumptions. That said, the companies chose to turn over only selected portions of these valuations to PPIE. This Court, accordingly, cannot determine as a matter of law that a reasonable juror could not find that Del Monte and Morgan Stanley made material misstatements or omissions. This is so even under New York's heightened pleading standard. Nevertheless, PPIE cannot demonstrate that it has met its burden under the third element of New York's fraud standard: reasonable reliance. The Court, therefore, turns to an analysis of this element.

A. New York's Reasonable Reliance Standard

In New York, it is well settled that a plaintiff cannot establish justifiable reliance when "by the exercise of ordinary intelligence" it could have learned of the information it asserts was withheld. Abrahami, 638 N.Y.S.2d at 14 (quoting Schumaker v. Mather, 133 N.Y. 590, 596, 30 N.E. 755 (1982)). It is equally well settled that the level of scrutiny applied to a plaintiff in fraud cases is heightened in transactions between sophisticated business entities. When sophisticated parties fail to exercise care in their affairs, they "will not be heard to complain that [they were] induced to enter into the transaction by misrepresentations." Abrahami, 638 N.Y.S. at 471 (quoting Schumaker, 133 N.Y. at 596, 30 N.E. 755); see also Grumman Allied Indus. Inc. v. Rohr Indus., Inc., 748 F.2d 729, 737 (2d Cir.1984) ("Where sophisticated businessmen engaged in major transactions enjoy access to critical information but fail to take advantage of that access, New York courts are particularly disinclined to entertain claims of justified reliance."); Lazard Freres & Co. v. Protective Life Ins. Co., 108 F.3d 1531, 1543 (2d Cir.1997) ("[A] party will not be heard to complain that he had been defrauded when it is his own evident lack of due care which is responsible for his predicament."); Siemens Solar Indus. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 251 251 A.D.2d 82, 673 N.Y.S.2d 674, 674 (1st Dep't 1998) ("[S]ophisticated entity's opportunities to obtain knowledge of the matters that are subjects of the alleged misrepresentations preclude its claims of reasonable reliance.").

Accordingly, even if a defendant made a misrepresentation or material omission, this is "not enough to eliminate the [plaintiff's] duty to examine current financial statements and other information about the [defendant's] business." Giannacopoulos v. Credit Suisse, 37 F.Supp.2d 626, 632 (S.D.N.Y.1999). This is particularly true when a party possesses, but fails to read the very disclosures it claims were withheld from it. See Treacy v. Simmons, Civ.A. No. 89-7052, 1991 WL 67474, at *4-*5 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 23, 1991) (plaintiff's reliance on a broker's alleged misrepresentations was unjustifiable because the plaintiff failed to read the investments' prospectuses); Brown v. E.F. Hutton Group, 735 F.Supp. 1196 (S.D.N.Y.1990) (same), aff'd, 991 F.2d 1020 (2d Cir.1993). In short, "The 'justifiable reliance' requirement ensures that a causal connection exists between the misrepresentation and the plaintiff's injury.... Reckless conduct by the plaintiff that rises to a level of culpability comparable to the defendant's breaks this chain of causation and renders the plaintiff's reliance unjustifiable...." Treacy, 1991 WL 67474, at 5 (quoting Grubb v. Fed. Deposit Ins. Co., 868 F.2d 1151, 1163 (10th Cir.1989)).

B. PPIE is a Sophisticated Business Entity Subject to Higher Level of Scrutiny

*21 It is clear that PPIE qualifies under New York law as a sophisticated entity with a heightened duty to investigate and protect itself in business transactions. PPIE, incorporated in the United States, was formed in 1988 (almost ten years prior to the stock sale at issue in this case) to acquire companies in both North and South America in order to expand the global presence of its corporate parent, Polly Peck International PLC. (MS Ex. 43 at ¶ 11). Herz, PPIE's sole employee at the time of the stock sale, was a certified public accountant who had been in charge of PPIE's affairs since 1991. Additionally, during the stock negotiations, PPIE was advised by its administrators in London, Coopers & Lybrand, one of the largest accounting firms in the world. It had the further advice of Prudential, the investment bank it had hired specifically to assist it in valuing the worth of its Del Monte stock.

Notably, during its interactions with Del

Monte throughout 1996 and 1997, PPIE viewed itself as a sophisticated business entity involved in an arms-length transaction with Del Monte, the initial intended buyer of PPIE's Del Monte stock. Indeed, Herz noted that he felt he was under no obligation to reveal the information that Prudential gave to him with regard to the price of PPIE's Del Monte stock because PPIE and Del Monte were involved in an "arms-length" transaction. (Herz Dep. at 274). In fact, when PPIE submitted to the Bankruptcy Court for its approval the draft stock purchase agreement between itself and Del Monte in which it would sell its Del Monte stock for $1.6 million, it included a section in that agreement that contained a representation by PPIE that it was a "sophisticated investor with a long-time equity interest in [Del Monte] and its business ... that it ha[d] engaged and received the advice of an investment banking firm with respect to the value of the Shares, and that [PPIE was] fully able to evaluate the merits of the transaction contemplated by this Agreement." (DM Ex. 3 at 5475-76). PPIE made a similar representation again in its stock purchase agreement with Solow. (DM Ex. 3). This record, therefore, clearly establishes that PPIE was not only a sophisticated business entity but that it viewed itself as such and professed to function in such a manner.

C. PPIE Failed to Heed Critical Information Disclosed by Del Monte and Morgan Stanley

Despite its sophistication, the record demonstrates that PPIE either failed to pursue or failed to reasonably incorporate into its own analysis of its Del Monte stock's value a series of disclosures made by Del Monte and Morgan Stanley. For example, by letter dated May 2, 1996, Meyers, Del Monte's Chief Financial Officer, sent Kett a Del Monte internal Financial Model and the Del Monte quarterly financial statements for the quarters ending September 30, 1995 and December 31, 1995. The cover letter to this package indicated Del Monte was "expecting a very strong performance in the fourth quarter, which ends June 30, 1996." By letter dated May 22, 1996, Meyers sent Kett the Del Monte third quarter financial statements ending March 31, 1996, which showed a continuing improvement in financial performance. This improved performance was confirmed by the September 30, 1996 quarterly financial statements, which were higher in the three months ending September 30, 1996 than in the comparable year-earlier period, with operating income having increased by $16 million. This statement also showed earnings of $6-$11 million higher than Del Monte's previous projections, which Del Monte had disclosed to PPIE.

*22 With this and other information, PPIE easily could have performed its own analysis of Del Monte's value to discover that the projections it had earlier received from Del Monte were no longer relevant. In fact, based upon this information, William Purcell, [FN38] Del Monte's uncontroverted expert whom the Court credits, explained that a reasonable investor "would have arrived at an independent valuation of $350 million to $450 million or higher for the equity value of the Company." [FN39] (DM Ex. 36, p. 17). Notably, this is the same estimate as that offered to PPIE in the January 23, 1997 letter. To reach this conclusion, Purcell used a similar analysis to that used by Prudential in August 1995 and July 1996, when PPIE had asked Prudential to conduct an independent valuation of its Del Monte stock. [FN40]

FN38. Purcell has been an investment banker for over 30 years, and was elected Managing Director at Dillon, Read & Co. Inc ("Dillon Read") in 1982. He specializes in all areas of corporate finance, especially mergers and acquisitions. Currently, he is the Managing Director of investment banking firms in Washington, D.C. Purcell has a B.A. in economics from Princeton University and an MBA from New York University.

FN39. Purcell explained that had PPIE compared the September 30, 1995 quarterly statement with the September 30, 1996 quarterly statement, PPIE would have concluded that the rolling EBITDA for Del Monte was between $107 million and $115 million, and with an assumption of reasonable growth of 5%-15%, could have projected a June 30, 1997 fiscal year end EBITDA of $120 million.

(DM Ex. 36 at 17). Using the same EBITDA multiple valuation method described in Berner's June 24, 1996 letter, PPIE on its own could have easily arrived at an estimated equity of $350 million to $450 million.

FN40. The Court also notes, as Purcell commented in his report, that "experienced financial people clearly know that an equity valuation is not a guarantee that one can 'take to the bank,' but that it is a best estimate range based on various assumptions some of which might be inaccurate, subject to valid differences of opinion, or speculative." (DM Ex. 36, p. 6).

In fact, in September 1996, Herz "thought it important to have some third party make a determination as to the value of the [Series D Shares]." (Herz Dep. at 134). He sent the financial information he had received from Del Monte [FN41] to Prudential and requested that Prudential update the valuations it had previously performed. (Herz Dep. at 129-30). However, while Prudential had agreed to perform the previous valuation at no charge, it refused to conduct another valuation without a fee. (Herz Dep. at 130). Because PPIE did not have the funds available to pay for this valuation, Herz asked the Administrators for financial assistance, but Kett and the Administrators refused his request. (Herz Dep. at 132). Thus, despite the fact that in 1996 the Administrators thought it prudent to obtain an independent valuation before responding to Del Monte's offer to purchase PPIE's Del Monte stock (MS Ex. 17), and the fact that the Administrators received approximately $1.5 million to $3 million for their services to Polly Peck in 1996, (MS Ex. 5 at 324), they nonetheless refused to pay for a valuation of the Series D Shares. Therefore, before the sale of its stock to Solow, PPIE did not obtain an independent evaluation from Prudential or conduct its own valuation to update the valuations Prudential had performed in August of 1995 and July of 1996. Such neglect does not comport with the duty imposed by New York law to investigate. [FN42]

FN41. Herz did not specify which information he gave Prudential, remembering only that he sent the most recent information that he had. (Herz Dep. at 129).

FN42. Herz's inattention is perhaps explained by the fact that the Administrators for Polly Peck had, by the fall of 1996, stopped paying Herz for his services, and by the end of 1996, were in arrears to Herz for approximately $10,000. (Herz Dep. 315-317; 339).

Another prime example of inattention occurred on January 14, 1997, when PPIE represented to the Bankruptcy Court that Del Monte's "fortunes [had] declined ... with the income trend being a downward one...." (DM Ex. 4 at 35). This assessment was clearly wrong in light of Del Monte's September 1996 financial statements, which were in PPIE's possession as early as November 1996. The record is clear that while there may have been information upon which PPIE relied to its detriment, it did so in the face of disclosures that clearly indicated an increase in the value of Del Monte and, hence, its Del Monte stock.

Likewise, despite PPIE's claims that Del Monte and Morgan Stanley withheld information from it with regard to Del Monte's potential sale, the record demonstrates that PPIE was given numerous indications that a sale of the company was likely. The record also shows, that as with the financial projections, PPIE failed to use the information that it was given to assess the value of its Del Monte stock. For example, Kett testified that as early as June of 1996, Berner of Morgan Stanley told him that while there were no prospects on the horizon for a sale of Del Monte in the food industry, there would "likely ... be a financial buyer in a year's time." (Kett Dep. at 212-213; MS Ex. 29). Kett did not believe this information to be of significance and did not report it to Herz. Herz, for his part, testified that from his few conversations with Berner, he was aware that Morgan Stanley has been retained by Del Monte to explore strategic alternatives, including a potential sale. (Herz Dep. at 225, 226). Herz acknowledged that a sale of Del Monte "had always been a possibility" and that Berner had informed him that Del Monte was receiving unsolicited expressions of interest. (Herz Dep. at 225-226, 228-30).

*23 Herz also admitted that later, in September 1996, Berner told him that Del Monte was "in play" and was receiving inquiries from potentially interested parties on a regular basis. (Herz Dep. at 299). Despite this disclosure, Herz neither shared this information with Kett nor did he make an effort to ascertain the identity of the potential purchasers or the status of their inquiries. (Herz Dep. at 299-300). Such conduct fails to demonstrate the level of care expected of a sophisticated party in carrying out its duty to investigate.

A series of significant disclosures were also made in November 1996. On or about November 8, Del Monte's outside counsel and Del Monte's CFO Meyers orally informed Herz that Del Monte's Board of Directors had authorized management to proceed with the sale process and that Del Monte had executed confidentiality agreements with prospective purchasers, who had already begun due diligence. (Samuels Dep. at 181-82). Also in November 1996, Del Monte provided Herz with the Offering Memorandum containing detailed financial information about Del Monte. (See DM Ex. 1). Although Herz admits Meyers sent this to him in response to Herz's request for information that could assist PPIE in deciding whether to sell the Del Monte stock, Herz only "spent a few minutes looking" at the Offering Memorandum and failed to provide it to Coopers & Lybrand, Prudential or anyone else. (Herz Dep. at 345-46). Herz's inattention caused him not to notice the pointed disclosure on page 7 that "a sale of the Company ... could occur at any time." (DM 1 at 7; Herz Dep. at 347).

He also apparently did not read the two-page November 18, 1996 draft notice of mandatory redemption that Meyers sent him in November. (Herz Dep. at 594-5). Thus, Herz did not read the paragraph--under the clear heading "Inquiries From Interested Parties"--disclosing that prospective purchasers had signed confidentiality agreements with Del Monte and were conducting due diligence. As a result, Herz was unaware of these executed agreements. Significantly, Herz admits that had he been aware, he would have investigated further, asked who the prospective purchasers were and sought to see the due diligence material. (Herz Dep. at 330-31). Herz did none of these things, nor did he even contact Meyers or Berner of Morgan Stanley with any follow-up questions after receipt of these documents, despite Meyers' express written invitation to do so. (DM Ex. 33 at 5465; Herz Dep. at 348).

Kett acknowledged that Herz's failure to forward these documents to Coopers & Lybrand or to tell them about Del Monte's sale process might have been a mistake. (Kett Dep. at 387). Had Herz told him of these disclosures, he "would have asked questions to understand more fully what was meant by these statements" and sought the "identity of these potential third party purchasers" and "copies of information or documents that were provided to third parties pursuant to the confidentiality agreements." (Kett Dep. at 460, 504). Kett testified that had he known of these disclosures beforehand, he would not have approved the initial agreement to sell the Del Monte stock to Del Monte and would have conducted a further investigation before approving the later agreement to sell the Del Monte stock to Solow. (Kett Dep. at 461).

*24 Thus, before PPIE auctioned its stock on January 12, 1997, it had been provided with ample financial information to perform updated valuations of Del Monte and its Del Monte stock, (DM Ex. 36 at ¶¶ 30-38), but had chosen not to do so. It had also been informed about the progress of Del Monte's sale process, but had failed to read Del Monte's disclosures. Clearly, PPIE acted indifferently toward its own business (indeed, its only asset) and ignored the critical information it was given. Under these circumstances, it cannot now complain that it reasonably relied on selected segments of Del Monte's and Morgan Stanley's representations, ignoring those disclosures that contained red flags that its Del Monte stock was more valuable than previously thought.

Moreover, after PPIE had agreed to the sale of its stock to Solow, but before finalization of that sale by the Bankruptcy Court, Del Monte made yet another disclosure to PPIE. On January 23, 1997, Samuels, Del Monte's lawyer, informed PPIE that Morgan Stanley had provided it with valuations estimating that the Del Monte stock could be worth more than double what Solow had bid. Nevertheless, Herz instructed his attorney to inform the court that PPIE still wanted to complete the sale. Herz explained at deposition his belief that it was worth seizing the "bird in the hand." (Herz Dep. at 103, 444). This is further evidence of the lack of causation between Del Monte's disclosures and PPIE's decision to sell its stock. [FN43]

FN43. Recognizing the implication of their decision to complete the sale to Solow in the face of the January 23, 1997 letter disclosure, PPIE claims that it did so for the additional reason that it feared that Solow would sue if it backed out. Significantly, PPIE does not support this claim with any evidence that it actually spent any time considering holding on to its stock, that it discussed this option and its consequences with its counsel, or even thought to raise the subject with the Bankruptcy Court. PPIE's utter failure to weigh the advantages--the potential for a higher sale price against the unsupported fear of litigation make this claim nothing more than speculation. Of course, even assuming it was PPIE's fear of litigation that motivated its decision to go through with the sale, the Court's conclusion that PPIE's reliance was unreasonable before the January 1997 letter remains unchanged.

PPIE has pointed to several cases in which courts refused to grant summary judgment against a plaintiff because they found the defendant had withheld information that was "peculiarly within defendant's knowledge." See Mallis v. Bankers Trust Co., 615 F.2d 68, 80 (2d Cir.1980). It is true that under New York law, "[w]hen matters are held to be peculiarly within defendant's knowledge, it is said that plaintiff may rely without prosecuting an investigation, as he was no independent means of ascertaining the truth." Mallis, 615 F.2d at 80; Lazard Freres & Co. v. Protective Life Ins. Co., 108 F.3d 1531, 1542 (2d Cir.1997). However, the Second Circuit has noted that the fact that information may be peculiarly known to one entity does not end the analysis in the case of sophisticated players. Lazard Freres, 108 F.3d at 1543. As the Second Circuit has noted, sophisticated players must protect themselves from misrepresentations and can do so by including protective language to that effect. [FN44]

FN44. In fact, PPIE did calculate for the risk that Del Monte could be sold shortly after it sold its stock. It negotiated with Del Monte and then with Solow for an equity kicker, which provided that if Del Monte were to be sold within two years of the date of the Stock Sale Agreement, the buyer would pay PPIE an additional amount over the purchase price not to exceed $400,000. (DM Ex. 3 at 2 ¶ 4).

In DynCorp v. GTE Corp., 215 F.Supp.2d 308, 321 (S.D.N.Y.2002), the district court encountered a situation similar to the one in this case where a sophisticated plaintiff argued that the peculiar information exception should apply. In that case, the court concluded that where the plaintiff had signed a waiver of representations and knew that it was in possession of only selected information, it could not demonstrate reasonable reliance. See DynCorp, 215 F.Supp.2d at 321-22.

*25 Likewise, here, PPIE was on notice that it was in possession of only selected information. For example, the Offering Memorandum indicated that Del Monte had entered confidentiality agreements with potential buyers, but Del Monte did not specify to PPIE who those potential buyers were. Despite being on notice that it had received partial and not full information, however, it signed a contract with Solow in which it stated that "it [was] knowledgeable about Del Monte and its business and the industry in which Del Monte operates, that it ha[d] engaged and received the advice of an investment banking firm with respect to the value of the Shares, and that [it was] fully able to evaluate the merits on the transaction contemplated by [the Stock Sale] Agreement." (DM Ex. 3 at 5-6 at ¶ 9). [FN45] Under such circumstances, PPIE cannot now complain that it was harmed by information that Del Monte did not turn over when it was the party that failed to pursue clear disclosures.

FN45. PPIE had also been willing to sign an agreement with Del Monte when it believed that Del Monte would be the purchaser of its stock, and it had submitted this agreement to the Bankruptcy Court for approval. If signed, PPIE would have disclaimed any reliance on Del Monte's express or implied representations. It also would have acknowledged that it had "the full opportunity to ask questions of and obtain information from the Company with respect to all matters relating to the transaction contemplated by this Agreement." (PPIE Ex. 30).

Indeed, even if certain misrepresentations or omissions had been made by Del Monte, "[p]arties cannot demand judicial protection when they could have protected themselves with a reasonable inquiry into any misrepresented facts." Giannacopoulos, 37 F.Supp.2d at 632. PPIE cannot now, in hindsight, make out a claim for fraud because it regrets its decision to sell to Solow and wishes to hold Del Monte responsible for its own lack of attention and care to its business affairs. For these reasons, this Court finds that PPIE (1) was a sophisticated business entity, (2) did not heed the significant disclosures by Del Monte that indicated its stock's value was in excess of $1.6 million and (3) did not justifiably rely on alleged misrepresentations and omissions by either Del Monte or Morgan Stanley. Indeed, "[w]here, as here, a party has been put on notice of the existence of material facts which have not been documented and [it] nevertheless proceeds with a transaction without securing the available documentation or inserting appropriate language in the agreement for his protection, [it] may truly be said to have willingly assumed the business risk that the facts may not be as represented." Lazard Freres, 108 F.3d at 1543 (2d Cir.1997) (quoting Rodas v. Manitaras, 159 A.D.2d 341, 552 N.Y.S.2d 618, 620 (1st Dep't 1990)). Accordingly, PPIE's fraud claims are dismissed.

V. PPIE'S NEGLIGENT MISREPRESENTATION CLAIM AGAINST DEL MONTE IS DISMISSED

[4] PPIE has brought a claim against Del

Monte for negligent misrepresentation based on an alleged breach of a duty of care stemming from the contractual relationship between the parties. PPIE claims that based on the contractual relationship, namely the Stockholders Agreement, Del Monte had a duty to disclose information to PPIE, which Del Monte violated by allegedly withholding information as well as disclosing misinformation.

In order to recover on a theory of negligent misrepresentation, a plaintiff must establish that because of some special relationship with the defendant which generally implies a closer degree of trust than the ordinary buyer-seller relationship, the law imposes on that defendant a duty to use reasonable care to impart correct information, that the information is false or incorrect, and that the plaintiff reasonably relied upon the information given.

*26 Pappas v. Harrow Stores, Inc., 140 A.D.2d 501, 528 N.Y.S.2d 404 (2d Dep't 1988) (emphasis added). As argued by PPIE, New York law does permit a finding of such a special relationship in a commercial context based upon a contract that places two parties in privity. See Kimmel v. Schaefer, 89 N.Y.2d 257, 263, 652 N.Y.S.2d 715, 675 N.E.2d 450 (1987) (citing Int'l Prods. Co. v. Erie R.R. Co., 244 N.Y. 331, 338, 155 N.E. 662 (1927)); Schrodgers, Inc. v. Hogan Systems, Inc., 137 Misc.2d 738, 522 N.Y.S.2d 404, 406 (N.Y.Sup.Ct.1987) (Baer, J).

In this case, if the Court were to find a special relationship existed between Del Monte and PPIE, the duty of care imposed upon Del Monte would be a duty of care in the disclosure of information to PPIE. This, however, is the same duty that the parties codified in the Stockholders Agreement. As noted earlier in this Opinion, the Stockholders Agreement provides in § 2.12 that Del Monte provide "as promptly as practicable, such financial statements and other information, including, without limitation, monthly management reports as such Stockholder may reasonably request." Thus, under the Stockholders Agreement, Del Monte was required to reasonably respond to requests for information in good faith. See Wootton Enters., Inc. v. Subaru of American, Inc., 134 F.Supp.2d 698, 704 n. 5 (D.Md.2001) ("Under Maryland law, there is an implied duty of good faith and fair dealing in all contracts."). Thus, the duty of care under the negligent misrepresentation theory in this case would be no greater than the scope of the obligation arising from the contract itself.

New York law, however, does not permit a tort claim to stand when it merely duplicates an alleged breach of contract.

It is a well-established principle that a simple breach of contract is not to be considered a tort unless a legal duty independent of the contract has been violated.... This legal duty must spring from circumstances extraneous to, and not constituting elements of, the contract, although it may be connected with and dependent on the contract.

Here, the contract itself is the sole basis for the imposition of a special duty, but that duty only extends as far as the contract's scope--the reasonable disclosure of information by Del Monte to PPIE. PPIE "failed to show that there was a legal duty imposed upon [Del Monte] independent of the contract itself, or that [Del Monte] engaged in tortious conduct 'separate and apart from [its] failure to fulfill [its] contractual obligations.'" D'Ambrosio v. Engel, 292 A.D.2d 564, 741 N.Y.S.2d 42, 44 (2d Dep't 2002) (quoting New York Univ. v. Cont'l Ins. Co., 87 N.Y.2d 308, 316, 639 N.Y.S.2d 283, 662 N.E.2d 763 (1995)). In other words, "[i]f [Del Monte's] conduct is evaluated as if there were no contract here, [PPIE] clearly would not be able to claim that" Del Monte was liable for negligent misrepresentation because "the underlying foundation for such a claim would be [PPIE's] reliance on [Del Monte's duty to disclose information to it], an untenable position if not for the contract." Robehr Films, 1989 WL 111079, at *3; Edwil Indus., Inc. v. Stroba Instruments Corp., 131 A.D.2d 425, 516 N.Y.S.2d 233, 233 (2d Dep't 1987) (dismissing plaintiff's tort claim because a contract obligated the defendant to render accurate statements of sales, which was the "gravamen" of the tort claim); Maharaja Travel, Inc. v. Bank of India, CIV.A. No.94-8308, 1997 WL 154044, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Apr.2, 1997) ("It is insufficient as a matter of law to assert a tort claim along with a breach of contract claim unless the Complaint alleges negligent misrepresentation regarding circumstances wholly collateral to the breach of contract claim or there is a legal duty independent of the contract that exists between the parties.").

*27 Moreover, the Court must consider that "New York's 'economic loss' rule restricts a claimant who has not suffered personal or property injury, but only 'economic loss,' to an action in contract for the benefit of its bargain." Robehr Films, 1989 WL 111079, at *4. New York retains this rule in order to preserve the distinction between tort and contract, in an "attempt to keep contract law 'from drown[ing] in a sea of tort.'" Carmania Corp., N.V. v. Hambrecht Terrel Intern., 705 F.Supp. 936, 938 (1989) (quoting East River S.S. Corp. v. Transamerica Delaval Inc., 476 U.S. 858, 866, 106 S.Ct. 2295, 90 L.Ed.2d 865 (1986)). Therefore, "[i]f the damages suffered are of the type remediable in contract, a plaintiff may not recover in tort ." Carmania, 705 F.Supp. at 938.

In this case, PPIE "alleges only economic loss in its proposed negligence claim. It does not claim any personal injury or damage to property, as is required to recover in tort." Robehr Films, 1989 WL 111079, at *5. This factor, therefore, also points to the fact that, although PPIE's claim sounds in tort, it is actually a claim for a breach of contract. See Maharaja Travel, 1997 WL 154044, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Apr.2, 1997) (dismissing plaintiff's fraudulent misrepresentation claim because, inter alia, "[a]ll damages alleged by [plaintiff] as arising from the alleged fraud are recoverable as damages under [plaintiff's] breach of contract claim"). Accordingly, PPIE's claim for negligent misrepresentation is dismissed.

[5] In any event, the Court would dismiss the negligent misrepresentation claim for the same reason that it dismissed the fraud claims: that PPIE could not have reasonably relied on the alleged misrepresentations or omissions. [FN46] The Second Circuit has explained that even where a duty to disclose may exist, it does not necessarily follow that a party, even one with a special relationship, reasonably relied on misrepresentations or omissions. Hydro Investors, Inc. v. Trafalgar Power Inc., 227 F.3d 8, 21 (2d Cir.2000) (affirming summary judgment against plaintiff's negligent misrepresentation claim because plaintiff could not establish reasonable reliance); Consol. Edison, Inc. v. Northeast Utils., 249 F.Supp.2d 387, 409 (S.D.N.Y.2003) (dismissing negligent misrepresentation claim despite fact that there might have been special relationship because plaintiff failed to establish reasonable reliance); Nasik Breeding & Research Farm Ltd. v. Merck & Co., Inc., 165 F.Supp.2d 514, 536 (S.D.N.Y.2001) (same).

FN46. The Second Circuit has noted that omissions are "nothing more than affirmative misrepresentations" for purposes of deciding whether a party has a duty to disclose. Grumman, 748 F.2d at 738 (1984).

In this case, as explained above, PPIE had access to critical information, including: (1) a statement by Berner of Morgan Stanley in June 1996 that he believed that there would be a financial buyer for Del Monte within one year's time; (2) oral disclosures that Del Monte was "in play" and was on a regular basis receiving inquiries from potential interested parties; (3) Del Monte's September 1996 quarterly financial statement, which disclosed that Del Monte's operating income in the first fiscal quarter of 1997 was $16 million higher than the previous year; (4) Del Monte's Offering Memorandum and Draft Notice of Redemption, which indicated that potential purchasers of Del Monte who had executed confidentiality agreements were conducting due diligence of the Company; (5) a November 1997 oral disclosure by Del Monte's outside counsel and CFO to the same effect; and (6) the January 1997 letter informing PPIE and the Bankruptcy Court that Del Monte now valued PPIE's Del Monte stock at $13.3-$23.7 million.

*28 This information should have indicated to PPIE that the value of its Del Monte stock had likely increased since Del Monte had offered it $1.6 million for the stock in November 1996. Therefore, PPIE's reliance on Del Monte's earlier representations and alleged omissions was not reasonable, but rather reckless, as it demonstrated that PPIE "acted in 'disregard of a risk known to [it] or so obvious that [it] must be taken to have been aware of it, and so great as to make it highly probable that harm would follow.'" Stern & Stern Textiles, Inc. v. LBY Holding Corp., CIV.A. No. 84-3295, 1987 WL 6434, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. Feb.5, 1987) (quoting Dupuy v. Dupuy, 551 F.2d 1005 (5th Cir.1977, per Judge Wisdom) (quoting W. Prosser, Handbook of the Law of Torts § 34 at 185 (4th ed.1971)). Accordingly, PPIE's claim for negligent misrepresentation is dismissed both because it is duplicative of the breach of contract claim and because PPIE could not reasonably rely on the alleged misrepresentations and omissions of Del Monte as a matter of law.

VI. PPIE'S BREACH OF CONTRACT CLAIM

[6] PPIE alleges that Del Monte failed to provide information it was required to provide--upon request--under the Stockholders Agreement. As noted above, § 2.12 of the Stockholders Agreement required Del Monte to provide to PPIE all information that PPIE reasonably requested. [FN47] It is undisputed that PPIE made repeated requests for any and all information that might help it evaluate the value of its Del Monte stock. The question is whether Del Monte satisfied its obligation once these requests were made.

FN47. Again, the precise language of the contract stated that Del Monte must provide: "as promptly as practicable, such financial statements and other information, including, without limitation, monthly management reports as such stockholder may reasonably request."

Under Maryland law, "[t]he interpretation of a written contract is ordinarily a question of law for the court..." ABC Imaging of Washington, Inc. v. The Travelers Indem. Co. of Am., 150 Md.App. 390, 820 A.2d 628, 632 (Md.Ct.Spec.App.2003). Furthermore, Maryland courts adhere to the "objective interpretation of contracts" principle, under which courts give the words of a contract "their ordinary and usual meaning, in light of the context within which they are employed" as opposed to the meaning that the parties may have intended at the time. ABC Imaging, 820 A.2d at 633. Thus, where the terms of a contract are unambiguous, the court determines its meaning and application as a matter of law. See Auction & Estate Representatives, Inc. v. Ashton, 354 Md. 333, 731 A.2d 441, 444 (Md.1999) ("[T]he clear and unambiguous language of an agreement will not give way to what the parties thought the agreement meant or was intended to mean."). The Maryland Court of Appeals has also made clear that "language which is merely general in nature or imprecisely defined is not necessarily ambiguous." Truck Ins. Exch. v. Marks Rentals, Inc., 288 Md. 428, 418 A.2d 1187, 1190 (Md.1980).

Nonetheless, "when there is a bona fide ambiguity in the contract's language or legitimate doubt as to its application under the circumstances ... the contract [is] submitted to the trier of the fact for interpretation." Monumental Life Ins. Co. v. U.S. Fid. And Guar. Co., 94 Md.App. 505, 617 A.2d 1163, 1174 (Md. Ct. of Spec.App.1993) (citing Board of Trustees v. Sherman, 280 Md. 373, 373 A.2d 626 (Md.1977); 4 Williston on Contracts § 616 (1961)). "Ambiguity arises if, to a reasonably prudent person, the language used is susceptible of more than one meaning and not when one of the parties disagrees as to the meaning of the subject language." The Board of Educ. of Charles County v. Plymouth Rubber Co., 82 Md.App. 9, 569 A.2d 1288, 1296 (Md.Ct.Spec.App.1990) (citing Truck Ins., 418 A.2d at 1187)). In such cases--where "the writing is not clear as to preclude doubt by a reasonable man of its meaning"--the interpretation function passes from the court to the jury. Bethesda Place Ltd P'ship v. Reliance Ins. Co., Civ.A. No.91-1719, 1992 WL 97342, at *2 (D.Md. Apr. 22, 1992).

*29 The contract in this case "require[s] a factual determination as to what is deemed to be" a reasonable disclosure of documents by Del Monte. Trimed, Inc. v. Sherwood Medical Co., 772 F.Supp. 879, 885 (D.Md.1991) (finding that the interpretation of a "best efforts" clause in a contract was properly submitted to the jury). Whether the requests for documents by PPIE were reasonable and whether Del Monte adequately responded to those reasonable requests is a question best left to a trier of fact who is "in the best position to make this factual determination, which is dependent on the circumstances of the case." Trimed, 772 F.Supp. at 885; see also Wood v. Allstate Ins. Co., 21 F.3d 741, 747 (7th Cir.1994) (finding that whether defendant satisfied her contractual duty to respond to reasonable requests made by her insurance company was a material question of fact for the jury). The jury's decision may, of course, be influenced by evidence as to custom and usage in the industry, evidence that was not presented on this motion. See Goodman v. Resolution Trust Corp., 7 F.3d 1123, 1126 (4th Cir.1993) ("If ... resort to extrinsic evidence in the summary judgment materials leaves genuine issues of fact respecting the contract's proper interpretation, summary judgment must of course be refused and interpretation left to the trier of fact.") (citing World-Wide Rights Ltd. P'ship v. Combe Inc., 955 F.2d 242, 245 (4th Cir.1992)). Thus, the Court finds that the interpretation of the contract as well as its application should be referred to the jury.

Del Monte argues that the contract claim should nonetheless be dismissed because, regardless of the meaning and application of § 2.12, its "supposed duty to provide information never came into effect." (DM Memo at 44). Del Monte points to § 6.6 of the Stockholder's Agreement, which provides that "All notices and other communications provided for herein shall be in writing and shall be delivered by hand or sent by certified mail ... to the Company." Del Monte claims that because PPIE never made a written request pursuant to § 6.6, PPIE's claim under § 2.12 must fail. [FN48]

FN48. There is in the record, however, evidence that PPIE made one written request for a copy of Del Monte's Board minutes, to which, PPIE alleges, Del Monte did not respond. (PPIE Ex. 39). Whether such a request qualifies as reasonable request under the § 2.12 is a question for the jury.

As explained above, when the language of the contract is unambiguous, it is within the province of the Court to interpret the contract. Here, § 6.6 clearly provides that "all notices and other communications" with Del Monte, which are provided for in the contract, are to be in writing. This language is unambiguous, and the Court finds that it is broad enough to incorporate those communications contemplated by § 2.12. To find otherwise, would be to disregard the plain language of § 6.6. Therefore, according to the contract, PPIE should have made requests in writing.

Nevertheless, PPIE argues that Del Monte waived any claim that it might have to enforce § 6.6 with regard to § 2.12 because of its course of conduct, namely its continual response to PPIE's oral requests for documents and information. [FN49] In response to this claim, Del Monte points to § 6.5 of the Stockholders Agreement, which states that: "[a]ny term of [the] Agreement ... may be amended and the observance of any such term may be waived ... only with the written consent of (a) the Company and (b) Stockholders holding at least 66-2/3% of the outstanding Shares held by all the Stockholders." Del Monte maintains that because the contract has a specific waiver provision requiring written waiver, it could not have waived § 2.12 through its conduct.

FN49. There are many instances of such behavior, exemplified by the following two examples. In July of 1996, Herz orally asked Del Monte for "any and all information regarding Del Monte" that would "assist" PPIE in evaluating Del Monte's one million dollar offer. In response to this, Del Monte promised to send its June 30, 1996 financials, which would soon be completed. On August, 23, 1996, Herz again spoke to Del Monte to obtain those financials, which Del Monte did eventually send. Later, when Herz requested financial information from Del Monte that it could bring to the Bankruptcy Court to substantiate the reasonableness of Del Monte's offer, Del Monte faxed PPIE a chart showing Del Monte's total equity value at $35 million.

*30 However, under Maryland law, parties to a contract may waive provisions of that contract by behavior that is "inconsistent with the intention to insist upon enforcing such provisions." Parks v. CAI Wireless Systems, Inc., 85 F.Supp.2d 549, 555 (D.Md.2000). The Maryland Court of Appeals has defined waiver as "the intentional relinquishment of a known right, or such conduct as warrants an inference of the relinquishment of such right, and may result from an express agreement or be inferred from the circumstances." BarGale Indus., Inc. v. Robert Realty Co., 275 Md. 638, 343 A.2d 529, 533 (Md.1975); Guardian Life Ins. Co. v. U.S. Tower Servs., Ltd., 122 Md.App. 550, 714 A.2d 204, 210-211 (Md.Ct.Spec.App.1998) (same). Moreover, parties to a contract can make an oral agreement, expressly or implicitly, that effectively waives the requirements of a written contract. See Hoffman v. Glock, 20 Md.App. 284, 315 A.2d 551, 554-55 (Md.Ct.Spec.App.1974); Fantle v. Fantle, 140 Md.App. 678, 782 A.2d 377, 382 (Md.Ct.Spec.App.2001). Notably, "[t]his is so notwithstanding a written agreement that any change to a contract must be in writing." Univ. of Nat'l Bank v. Wolfe, 279 Md. 512, 369 A.2d 570, 576 (Md.1977) (emphasis added) (citing Taylor v. University Nat'l Bank, 263 Md. 59, 282 A.2d 91, 93-94 (Md.1971)). [FN50] Such an FN50. The University Nat'l Bank case involved a similar waiver provision to the one in this case. It provided that "[t]he rights or authority of the Bank under [the] agreement shall not be changed or terminated by said depositors or either of them except by written notice." 369 A.2d 576. The waiver provision in this case differs to the extent that it involves a third party--the other stockholders of the company. While this difference is important, Maryland law appears clearly to favor upholding the common law rule of waiver by course of conduct. Since PPIE attempts to hold only Del Monte liable based on its course of conduct, not the other stockholders, their lack of a direct stake in the action counsels against precluding a finding by the jury of waiver by course of conduct.

oral modification of a written contract may be established by a preponderance of the evidence.... Of course, if the written contract provides that it shall not be varied except by an agreement in writing, it must appear that the parties understood that this clause was waived. However, such a clause may be waived by implication as well as by express agreement.

Taylor, 282 A.2d at 93-94 (internal citations omitted) (quoting Freeman v. Stanbern Const. Co., 205 Md. 71, 106 A.2d 50, 55 (Md.1954))) (emphasis added); Battista v. Savings Bank of Baltimore, 67 Md.App. 257, 507 A.2d 203, 209 (Md.Ct.Sp.App.1986) (noting that "the decisions permitting waiver of contractual rights despite a non-waiver clause requiring a written waiver are consistent with Maryland decisions"); Mayor and City Council of Baltimore v. Ohio Cas. Ins. Co., 50 Md.App. 455, 438 A.2d 933, 936 (Md.Ct.Spec.App.1982) ("oral modification of a contract, despite a provision requiring all modifications to be in writing, is permitted in Maryland"). Therefore, it is possible under Maryland law for Del Monte to have waived both the waiver provision and the written notice provision.

The question of waiver, though, is one for the fact-finder and should therefore go to the jury. See Battista, 507 A.2d at 209 (stating that "the question of waiver [is] one for the jury," as the question of whether defendant intended to waive is "best left to the fact-finder"); Ohio Cas., 438 A.2d at 936 (factual disputes regarding the extent of modification are for the jury to resolve).

Finally, Del Monte argues that PPIE's breach of contract claim fails because "PPIE can point to no piece of information Del Monte withheld that would have altered the outcome one iota." (DM Memo at 46). While it may indeed be difficult to assess damages in this case, "in Maryland, [i]t is well settled that every injury to the rights of another imports damages, and if no other damages is established, the party injured is at least entitled to a verdict for nominal damages." ' Planmatics, Inc. v. Showers, 137 F.Supp.2d 616, 624 (D.Md.2001) (quoting Cottman v. Dep't of Natural Res., 51 Md.App. 380, 443 A.2d 638, 640 (1982) (quoting Baltimore v. Appold, 42 Md. 442, 457 (1875)). In any event, it is a question of fact whether or not there were actual damages in this case, and, therefore, this issue too shall be left for the jury. [FN51] Accordingly, for the above reasons, Del Monte's motion for summary judgment on the breach of contract claim is denied.

FN51. Del Monte also argues that § 3.4(a)(ii) of the Stockholders Agreement restricts PPIE's breach of contract claim with respect to PPIE's assertion that Del Monte withheld information from it with respect to the potential sale of the company. Section 3.4(a)(ii) provides that a stockholder shall "provide written notice ... of such Offer to the Company and to each of the Other Stockholders not later than the thirtieth day prior to the consummation of the sale...." Del Monte argues that, based on this clause PPIE was not entitled to such information prior to thirty days before a sale of Del Monte. This interpretation of the clause, however, is inapposite to the plain language of § 3.4(a)(ii) for two reasons. First, § 3.4(a)(ii) refers to the obligation of the stockholders to inform one another and the company of a potential sale. It does not create an obligation for Del Monte. Second, the language of the clause clearly establishes the minimum time frame by which stockholders must notify one another and the company of a sale. It does not limit disclosure prior to that time frame.

VII. THE MOTIONS FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT ON THE THIRD-PARTY

COMPLAINT

*31 As noted above, Del Monte's Third-Party Complaint impleaded Charterhouse and Huff Asset Management, Del Monte's former stockholders, alleging claims against them for indemnification and contribution for any liability it may incur with respect to PPIE's tort and contract claims against it. According to Del Monte, Charterhouse and Huff Asset Management ("Third-Party Defendants") were primarily responsible for, actively engaged in and were the parties that stood to benefit from the allegedly wrongful conduct pleaded in PPIE's Complaint. Del Monte alleges that due to the Third-Party Defendants' control of Del Monte, they owed fiduciary duties to both PPIE and Del Monte, including the duty to disclose all material information to PPIE regarding the real value of or any potential sale of Del Monte. Del Monte alleges that since the Third-Party Defendants breached their fiduciary duties, they caused PPIE's alleged damages and thus Del Monte is entitled to indemnity or contribution for any damages it may incur from PPIE's suit. Third-Party Defendants now move for summary judgment on the Third-Party Complaint.

While Del Monte initially brought claims for indemnification and contribution as to the fraud, negligent misrepresentation, and breach of contract claim, the only claim that has survived summary judgment is the breach of contract claim. The Court therefore considers whether Del Monte can bring these claims for contribution and indemnification with respect to PPIE's breach of contract claim.

[7] The contribution claim clearly falls. Under New York law, it is firmly established that contribution is not available when the underlying claim is for breach of contract. [FN52] See, e.g., Board of Educ. of Hudson City School Dist. v. Sargent, Webster, Crenshaw & Folley, 71 N.Y.2d 21, 28, 523 N.Y.S.2d 475, 517 N.E.2d 1360 (1987); Rothberg v. Reichelt, 270 A.D.2d 760, 705 N.Y.S.2d 115, 117-118 (2d Dep't 2000); County of Chautauqua v. Pacos Constr. Co., 195 A.D.2d 1021, 600 N.Y.S.2d 585, 586 (4th Dep't 1993); Lawrence Dev. Corp. v. Jobin

Waterproofing, Inc., 167 A.D.2d 988, 562 N.Y.S.2d 902, 902-903 (4th Dep't 1990). As the New York Court of Appeals has confirmed, the principles of contribution codified by N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 1401 apply only to tort liability and no other common-law form of contribution is applicable to liability arising from contract. Sargent, 71 N.Y.2d at 26-29, 523 N.Y.S.2d 475, 517 N.E.2d 1360 (quoting Lawrence Dev. Corp., 562 N.Y.S.2d at 902-03). Thus, "the remedy of contribution is not available to a defendant whose potential liability to the plaintiff is for economic loss resulting from an alleged breach of contract." County of Chatauqua, 600 N.Y.S.2d at 586. In keeping with this unambiguous rule, Del Monte's claim for contribution on PPIE's underlying claim for breach of contract is dismissed.

FN52. The parties appear to agree that New York law applies to the contribution and indemnification claims. See Int'l Bus. Mach. Inc. v. Liberty Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 303 F.3d 419, 423 (2d Cir.2002).

[8] The Court next turns to Del Monte's indemnification claims. Del Monte does not allege that the Third-Party Defendants were contractually bound to indemnify Del Monte, but rests its claim on a theory of implied indemnification. Implied indemnification is available where a defendant is held vicariously liable for the tortious acts of others, or where the liability is based on a defendant's passive negligence in failing to discover or remedy the wrongdoing of another party. See Trustees of Columbia Univ., 492 N.Y.S.2d at 375; County of Westchester, 478 N.Y.S.2d at 314; Am. Transtech Inc. v. U.S. Trust Corp., 933 F.Supp. 1193, 1202 (S.D.N.Y.1996).

*32 However, where as here, a plaintiff's underlying complaint charges a defendant with direct liability for breach of contract and not constructive or vicarious liability based on its relationship with other parties, there can be no third-party claim for indemnification for that breach of contract. See Lawrence Dev. Corp., 562 N.Y.S.2d at 903 ("because plaintiff seeks to hold defendant liable for its active negligence and breach of contract, defendant has no cause of action ... based upon the theory of implied indemnity"); Columbus v. McKinnon Corp. v. China Semiconductor Co., 867 F.Supp. 1173, 1178-1179 (W.D.N.Y.1994) (dismissing third-party complaint for failure to state a claim for indemnification and contribution with respect to breach of contract claims); City of Rochester v. Holmsten Ice Rinks, Inc., 548 N.Y.S.3d 959, 960-61 (4th Dep't 1989) (defendants could not seek indemnity because the "complaint charge[d] [defendants] only with direct liability for breach of contract and not vicarious liability based upon their relationship to another party. Thus, there is no basis for express or implied indemnity against [third-party defendant]."); Resolution Trust Corp. v. Young, 925 F.Supp. 164, 169 (S.D.N.Y.1996) (dismissing indemnification claim where no contractual provision or vicarious liability alleged).

In the instant case, a finding of liability against Del Monte on any of PPIE's claims would be a finding of active misconduct, thereby precluding Del Monte's eligibility for indemnification as a matter of law. Indeed, if Del Monte were found liable to PPIE on the basis of the breach of contract, its liability would be grounded in its own breach of its § 2.12 duty to provide financial information to PPIE and its other stockholders. [FN53] Section 2.12 of the Stockholders Agreement unequivocally creates an exclusive obligation from Del Monte to its stockholders. The stockholders have no such contractual obligation to one another and none is alleged. Accordingly, indemnification is not available to Del Monte for its alleged breach of its contractual obligation to PPIE. The Third-Party complaint is therefore dismissed

FN53. Del Monte argues that indemnity is available here because any potential wrongdoing that occurred was "done by and at the direction" of Third-Party Defendants in violation of their fiduciary duty to Del Monte and because Third-Party Defendants were relatively more at fault than it. These arguments are unavailing. Although a passively negligent party may obtain indemnification from an actively negligent third-party, it is clear in this case that, if Del Monte were to be held liable, it would be for their active participation in wrongdoing--albeit at the alleged behest of Third-Party Defendants. "[W]here the party seeking indemnification is himself at least partially at fault, indemnity will not be implied." Columbus, 867 F.Supp. 1178.

CONCLUSION

Del Monte's motion for summary judgment is granted with respect to PPIE's fraud and negligent misrepresentation claims and denied with respect to PPIE's breach of contract claim. Morgan Stanley's motion for summary judgment on the fraud claim is granted. Charterhouse and Huff's motion for summary judgment on the Third-Party Complaint is granted.

Del Monte and PPIE are ordered to submit a joint pre-trial order on or before October 23, 2003.

v.

Estelle G. FURLONG, Appellee.

Nos. 96-954, 96-998, 96-1002, 96-1011 and 96-1012.

Sept. 17, 1997.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 8, 1998.

Testator's nephew filed petition for administration of testator's final will.
Testator's stepdaughter filed petitions to set aside final will as product of undue influence and for administration of earlier will.
Stepdaughter subsequently brought equitable action against testator's sister, brother, and nephew, testator's bank, and certain bank officers alleging conspiracy to deprive testator of her estate through undue influence or breach of fiduciary duty and that testator lacked testamentary capacity. The Circuit Court, Dade County, Moie J.L. Tendrich, J., determined that there was conspiracy, found that bank was additionally negligent in its hiring, training, retention, and supervision of its employees, and declined to admit final will to probate. Appeal was taken. The District Court of Appeal, Green, J., held that: (1) evidence was insufficient to establish conspiracy; (2) bank did not impliedly consent to trial of unpled negligence theory; (3) evidence was insufficient to establish lack of capacity; and (4) final will was not product of undue influence.

Reversed and remanded with directions.

West Headnotes

[1] Conspiracy 1.1
91k1.1

Civil conspiracy requires agreement between two or more parties to do unlawful act or to do lawful act by unlawful means, the doing of some overt act in pursuance of conspiracy, and damage to plaintiff as a result of acts done under the conspiracy.

[2] Conspiracy 1.1
91k1.1

Actionable civil conspiracy requires actionable underlying tort or wrong.

[3] Conspiracy 8
91k8

Testator's sister's telephonic request to her son that he contact testator to render assistance to her after her late husband's death was insufficient to establish civil conspiracy to deprive testator of her money and assets during her lifetime through exercise of undue influence or breach of fiduciary duty.

[4] Conspiracy 19
91k19

While civil conspiracy may be proven by circumstantial evidence, this may be done only when inference sought to be created by such circumstantial evidence outweighs all reasonable inferences to the contrary.

[5] Conspiracy 19
91k19

Receipt of some benefits from testator, without any evidence of knowledge of alleged conspiracy to deprive testator of her money
and assets during her lifetime through exercise of undue influence or breach of fiduciary duty, was insufficient to establish parties' participation in alleged conspiracy.

[6] Contracts 96
95k96

Mere affection, kindness, or attachment of one person for another does not itself constitute undue influence.

[7] Banks and Banking 51
52k51

[7] Pleading 427
302k427

Trial court should not have found testator's bank negligent for the hiring, retention, and supervision of its employees, in testator's stepdaughter's equitable action, as this theory was not pled or tried by consent. West's F.S.A. RCP Rule 1.190(b).

[8] Pleading 427
302k427

Testator's bank's failure to object to evidence of its failure to supervise and train employees, in testator's stepdaughter's equitable action, was not implicit consent to trial of unpled negligence theory, as evidence was also directly relevant to issue of bank's breach of fiduciary duty to testator. West's F.S.A. RCP Rule 1.190(b).

[9] Pleading 427
302k427

Failure to object cannot be construed as implicit consent to try unpled theory when evidence introduced is relevant to other issues properly being tried. West's F.S.A. RCP Rule 1.190(b).

[10] Wills 50
409k50

To execute valid will, testator need only have testamentary capacity, that is, ability to mentally understand in general way the nature and extent of property to be disposed of, testator's relation to those who would naturally claim substantial benefit from his will, and general understanding of practical effect of will as executed.

[11] Wills 36
409k36

[11] Wills 43
409k43

[11] Wills 44
409k44

Testator may still have testamentary capacity to execute valid will even though he may frequently be intoxicated, use narcotics, have enfeebled mind, failing memory, or vacillating judgment.

409k37

Insane individual or one who exhibits queer conduct may execute valid will as long as it is done during lucid interval.

[13] Wills 21
409k21

For valid will, it is only critical that testator possess testamentary capacity at time of execution of will.

[14] Wills 400
409k400

Appellate court will not interfere with probate court's finding of testamentary capacity unless there is absence of substantial competent evidence to support finding or unless it appears that probate court has misapprehended effect of evidence as a whole.

[15] Wills 400
409k400

It is duty of appellate court to examine all of the evidence to determine whether there is substantial and competent evidence to support probate court's finding of testamentary capacity and whether probate court may have misinterpreted legal effect of evidence as a whole.

[16] Wills 400
409k400

When probate court has misinterpreted legal effect of evidence in its entirety, its finding of testamentary capacity will not be affirmed merely because there is evidence that is contradicted on which findings may be predicated.

[17] Evidence 571(2)

Neurologist's testimony that testator suffered from severe dementia was insufficient to establish lack of testamentary capacity, given that neurologist categorically testified that he was unable to offer any opinion as to testamentary capacity at any given time and will contestant offered no evidence that testator was incompetent or not lucid at time she executed contested will.

When will is challenged on grounds of undue influence, influence must amount to over persuasion, duress, force, coercion, or artful or fraudulent contrivances to such extent that there is destruction of free agency and willpower of testator.

[19] Wills 163(2)
409k163(2)

[19] Wills 163(8)
409k163(8)

Presumption of undue influence arises in favor of will contestant if it is established that substantial beneficiary under will occupied confidential relationship with testator and was active in procuring contested will.

[20] Wills 163(8)
409k163(8)

Once presumption of undue influence arises, burden shifts to beneficiary of will to come forward with reasonable explanation of his or her active role in preparation of decedent's will.

[21] Wills 166(1)
409k166(1)

If presumption of undue influence goes un rebutted, it alone is sufficient to sustain will contestant's burden.

[22] Wills 166(1)
409k166(1)

If presumption of undue influence is rebutted, will contestant must establish undue influence by preponderance of evidence.

[23] Wills 164(6)
409k164(6)

Any undue influence used to procure earlier will was wholly irrelevant to question of whether subsequent will was also product of undue influence.

[24] Wills 163(2)

Although testator's nephew was beneficiary under challenged will and enjoyed confidential relationship with testator, presumption of undue influence was not raised, as nephew did not procure attorney for testator, nephew did not give any instructions to attorney as to preparation of challenged will, nephew did not have knowledge of dispositive provisions of will, nephew was not present at execution of challenged will, and nephew did not take possession of will after its execution.

[25] Wills 163(2)
409k163(2)

Even if presumption of nephew's undue influence had arisen in connection with contested will, presumption was rebutted by nephew's explanation that he merely facilitated testator's independent decision to change her will after her bitter dispute with stepdaughter over proceeds of treasury bill.

[26] Wills 155

Testator's final will, which disinherited her stepdaughter's family, was not product of nephew's undue influence, as testator's sole motivation for disinheriting stepdaughter's family was testator's anger and animosity towards stepdaughter due to dispute over proceeds of treasury bill.

Before LEVY, GERSTEN and GREEN, JJ.

GREEN, Judge.

This is a consolidated appeal of five appeals from an adverse final judgment entered after a non-jury equitable action and a will contest action. In its final judgment of the equitable action, the lower court, in essence, found that all of the appellants had conspired using undue influence to deprive the decedent (Evelyn S. Gruber) of her money and assets prior to her death in March 1995 and had caused her to execute her final will in their favor which they sought to admit to probate. As a result, the lower court awarded both compensatory and punitive damages against each of the appellants in the equitable action. Further, the court refused to admit the decedent's last will to probate in favor of an earlier executed will. The appellants argue, on this appeal, that the lower court's findings and conclusions are unsupported by competent substantial evidence in the record and/or the court misapprehended the effects of the evidence. We agree for the reasons which follow and reverse.

1276 FACTUAL BACKGROUND

The undisputed evidence adduced at trial, taken in the light most favorable to appellee, reflects that prior to her death, the decedent, Evelyn Gruber, was the widow of Jacob Gruber. Evelyn and Jacob had been married for approximately 18 years when he died in March 1993. It had been a second marriage for both and had produced no children. Appellee, Estelle Furlong was Jacob's only child from his prior marriage and the decedent's stepdaughter. The decedent had no children of her own. Jacob and Evelyn had each amassed considerable wealth prior to their marriage to each other, Jacob as a successful New York attorney and investor and Evelyn as a buyer for a women's clothier. Evelyn's net worth, however, was considerably more than Jacob's.

Jacob's daughter, Estelle, a practicing probate attorney in Miami, rendered legal services to her father and stepmother, which included the drafting of their respective wills. Estelle's husband, Dr. James Furlong, was the personal physician to both Evelyn and Jacob. During their lifetime, Jacob and Evelyn interacted and socialized frequently with the Furlongs and bestowed generous gifts upon the Furlongs. Evelyn rarely saw or visited her blood family members which consisted of her sister, appellant, Ida Raimi and brother, appellant, Edward L. Schultz, both of whom resided in Michigan, or her nephew (i.e., Ida's son) and his wife, appellants, Manuel ("Manny") and Renee Raimi, who resided in St. Petersburg, Florida. Despite their lack of frequent interaction, however, Evelyn did generously bestow both monetary and non-monetary gifts upon her sister Ida due to her limited financial resources. [FN1]

FN1. Evelyn's brother Edward owned a business and was financially secure in his own right.

A. "THE LOST WILL" DATED JANUARY 23, 1992

On January 23, 1992, Jacob and Evelyn executed identical wills which were prepared by Estelle Furlong. As for Jacob's will, the bulk of his estate, estimated as being between $1.5 and $1.8 million, was left to Evelyn. Estelle and Evelyn were named co-personal representatives of Jacob's estate. Evelyn's will similarly left the bulk of her estate, estimated at approximately $3.3 million to Jacob. Jacob and Estelle were named co-personal representatives of Evelyn's estate. In the event that Evelyn predeceased Jacob, it was provided that 75% of the residue of Evelyn's estate (as well as 100% of her jewelry, tangible property and $200,000) would go to Estelle Furlong and 25% of the residue would go to Evelyn's sister, Ida. [FN2] In the event that Ida predeceased Evelyn, a third of her $1 million share would go to appellant, Manny Raimi.

FN2. In this will, Evelyn also made a $15,000 bequest to Ida's son, Manny Raimi and his wife, Renee.

Shortly before Jacob's death in March of 1993, Evelyn asked Estelle for the original of her January 23, 1992 will. Estelle returned the original of Evelyn's will to her as requested and it was never seen again. This will, dubbed "The Lost Will" in the proceedings below, was the will ultimately admitted to probate by the lower court in the will contest action.

B. "THE BLAUSTEIN WILL" DATED APRIL 8, 1993

Approximately one week after the death of her husband Jacob, Evelyn had a friend, Rose Alpert, drive her to see Donna Blaustein, Esq., a probate attorney with the law firm of Broad and Cassel in Miami, for the purpose of procuring a new will. According to Ms. Blaustein's unrefuted testimony, Evelyn was anxious to have a new will drawn which would divide her estate equally between her sister, Ida and brother, Edward Schultz, and their heirs, and completely disinherit Estelle and Dr. Furlong. Although Ms. Blaustein had some initial concerns that Evelyn did not have a complete understanding of the size of Jacob's or her estate, [FN3] she *1277 deemed Evelyn competent to execute a new will and dispose of her estate. Ms. Blaustein explained that in her experience as a probate lawyer, it was not uncommon for elderly widows such as Evelyn not to fully comprehend probate matters.

FN3. For example, Ms. Blaustein testified that even though Jacob had left Evelyn 77% of his estate, Evelyn believed that Jacob had disinherited her. Ms. Blaustein further testified that Evelyn feared that she was going to be left destitute despite her being worth more than $3 million dollars in her own right.

Ms. Blaustein then proceeded to draft a new will in accordance with Evelyn's instructions. In this new will, ("The Blaustein Will"), Evelyn divided her estate evenly between her brother Edward and sister Ida [FN4] and made no provisions whatsoever for the Furlongs. Alvin Cassel was named the personal representative in this will. Evelyn executed "The Blaustein Will" on April 8, 1993, and at the time, Ms. Blaustein was satisfied that Evelyn fully understood the size of her and Jacob's estate, its income, and disbursements. Ms. Blaustein thereafter retained the original of this will for six weeks. During this period, Ms. Blaustein wrote a letter to Evelyn memorializing Evelyn's instruction that she "did not wish to waive any of [her] inheritance from [her] husband, especially since [she was not] anxious to have those assets passed directly to Estelle and her family."

FN4. In "The Blaustein Will," Evelyn's friend, Rose Alpert was made a beneficiary of a $50,000 bequest.

Approximately one and a half months after Evelyn's execution of "The Blaustein Will," Estelle learned of its existence. Dr. Furlong testified that Estelle was upset when she learned about "The Blaustein Will" and thought it "only fair" that the Furlongs be put back into Evelyn's will. Thereafter, Estelle telephoned Ms. Blaustein to terminate her services as Evelyn's lawyer. Estelle also prepared a letter signed by Evelyn which directed Ms. Blaustein to return to Evelyn "the original interim will which you prepared for me dated April 8, 1993, which I intend to destroy."

Estelle and Evelyn picked up "The Blaustein Will" on May 24, 1993 from Ms. Blaustein's office. At that time, Ms. Blaustein gave Evelyn a letter memorializing her concern of Estelle's inherent conflict of interest in representing Evelyn where Estelle had borrowed stock from her late father which was still owed and unpaid to the estate and hence, Evelyn. Estelle's loan was documented by five notes from Jacob which instructed Evelyn to recoup the stock or deduct its value (i.e., approximately $96,000) from Estelle's inheritance under Jacob's will. Within two days of their visit to Ms. Blaustein, Estelle drafted a disclaimer for Evelyn's signature wherein Evelyn disclaimed any interest in the stock. Evelyn executed the disclaimer and Estelle maintained in the proceedings below that Evelyn was completely lucid and competent during this time.

Later, Estelle, as co-personal representative of her late father's estate, wrote to appellant, SunTrust Bank, formerly known as SunBank Miami, N.A., to inquire about her father's assets at the bank. Appellant, Theresa Heidel, a private banker at SunTrust responded in a letter. Later, Estelle and Evelyn, acting as co-personal representatives of Jacob's estate, then personally met with Heidel. At that time, Estelle asked to be the sole signatory of Jacob's estate to facilitate the payment of expenses as needed and Heidel explained that that would require Evelyn's written authorization. Evelyn did provide such authorization in writing.

C. "THE FURLONG WILL" DATED JUNE 1, 1993 AND THE ALLEGED INCEPTION OF
CONSPIRACY

After Evelyn retrieved the original "Blaustein Will," Estelle drafted another will for Evelyn which she executed on June 1, 1993. In this will, Estelle was named as the personal representative and pursuant to its terms, the Furlongs were to receive 40% of Evelyn's estate and the remaining 60% of her estate was to be divided evenly between Evelyn's sister, Ida and brother, Edward.

At or about the time of Evelyn's execution of this will, Ida telephoned her son, Manny in St. Petersburg, Florida, to express her concern about Evelyn. According to Manny's unrefuted testimony, his mother told him that Evelyn was very depressed about Jacob's death and did not understand what Estelle was doing with Jacob's estate matters. Manny further testified that his mother wanted him to do whatever he could to *1278 help Evelyn. Shortly thereafter, Manny telephoned Evelyn at her home and re-introduced himself as he and Evelyn had not been particularly close prior to that time. He subsequently visited his aunt at her home.

According to Manny's testimony, Evelyn asked him to review and explain some documents for her, namely, the stock disclaimer that Estelle had asked her to sign, the five stock notes, the SunTrust document designating Estelle to serve as the sole signator on Jacob's estate account, and "The Furlong Will" dated June 1, 1993. Manny stated that Evelyn was unhappy with the terms of her latest will and that Estelle had not adequately explained these documents to her. Manny detected that his elderly aunt who was 82 at the time of his arrival had "difficulty understanding documents." Manny further testified that Evelyn asked if he knew of an attorney who could draft another will for her.

D. THE BROIDA WILL DATED JULY 9,

Because Manny was unfamiliar with any attorney in the Miami area, he procured an attorney and friend, Joel Broida, from his hometown of St. Petersburg to prepare a new will for Evelyn. He immediately flew back to St. Petersburg alone to meet with Mr. Broida with both Evelyn's latest will and Jacob's will in hand. [FN5] Mr. Broida drafted a new will ("The Broida Will") for Evelyn without ever meeting or speaking to her. Manny was named as the personal representative for "The Broida Will." In this will, Ida received 20% of Evelyn's estate plus 100% of all tangible property, jewelry, and autos. Manny and his wife, Renee received 19% of Evelyn's estate. Edward and Evelyn's niece each received 5% of the estate and the remaining 51% of the estate was divided among Evelyn's other family members. With the exception of the bequest of a piano, the Furlongs were completely disinherited under "The Broida Will." Manny also had Mr. Broida draft a durable power of attorney for Evelyn's signature which, among other things, gave Manny the unrestricted and unlimited power to sell and dispose of Evelyn's assets.

FN5. While he was away, Evelyn travelled with the Furlongs to Atlantic City, New Jersey to gamble and attend Dr. Furlong's 45th high school reunion.

When Manny returned to Miami with "The Broida Will" and power of attorney, he learned that Evelyn had arranged a meeting with Estelle to discuss the return of Jacob's stock. At this meeting, held on June 25, 1993 in Estelle's office, Evelyn requested Estelle to return the stock. Estelle declined to return the stock and insisted that Evelyn had voluntarily relinquished this stock to her as a gift. During this same meeting, Manny requested Estelle, as co-personal representative of Jacob's estate, to place some of Jacob's securities into the names of Evelyn and Manny or Renee, as joint tenants with rights of survivorship. Estelle declined this request as well. Prior to the conclusion of this meeting, Manny and/or Evelyn requested the return of the original "The Furlong Will" dated June 1, 1993.

At or about this time, Evelyn executed the durable power of attorney in favor of Manny which had been prepared by Mr. Broida. Manny immediately took possession of it. At this time, Evelyn also notified Heidel of SunTrust that she wanted Jacob's personal bank account transferred into her [Evelyn's] own name. Heidel, in turn, notified Estelle who agreed to the transfer. Later, Evelyn and Manny went to see Heidel at the bank for the purpose of having Evelyn named the sole signatory on Jacob's estate account. Heidel notified Estelle of the requested change and informed Estelle that she needed to immediately fax a letter of authorization for the same as Evelyn wanted to effectuate the change without delay.

On July 9, 1993, Evelyn executed "The Broida Will," bequeathing approximately 77% of her estate to Manny and his immediate family, at SunTrust Bank where Heidel and two other bank employees served as witnesses. Heidel testified that she never detected a lack of understanding or mental incapacity on Evelyn's part when she executed this will. Manny kept the original Broida Will and power of attorney in his home in St. Petersburg. Evelyn placed a copy of the will in her safe deposit box, where Estelle later found it. During this same time, Evelyn also *1279 rescinded Estelle's authority as sole signatory on Jacob's estate account.

During the summer and fall months of 1993, Manny increasingly spent more time with Evelyn and actually stayed at her home several days per week. In addition to serving as Evelyn's chauffeur, Manny became increasingly involved in her financial affairs. For example, he wrote out checks for Evelyn's signature and reconciled her bank statements.

On or about July 14, 1993, Evelyn and Manny went to see Heidel at the bank about the purchase of some securities because Evelyn was concerned that her assets were not generating sufficient income. Heidel introduced them to Blanca Lola-Teriele, an investment consultant at the bank. Teriele believed Evelyn to be in full control of her faculties and recommended that Evelyn purchase either a Franklin Insured Tax Free Income Mutual Fund or Putnam Municipal Fund. After discussing various options, Evelyn read and signed the application completed by Teriele and purchased approximately $450,000 in tax free securities. In purchasing these securities, Evelyn specifically requested that they be issued jointly in her name and either Ida or Manny's name so that no one else could gain control of them. Evelyn made it clear, however, that she wanted the income checks from these securities to be placed in her name alone as it was not her intent to make a present gift of the same to Ida or Manny.

Subsequently, Evelyn decided that she wanted these tax free securities to be placed in her name alone rather than jointly with Ida or Manny and informed Estelle of the same. Estelle, who had no reason to question Evelyn's competency to make this change, called Teriele at the bank to arrange for the transfer of securities. Estelle then told Ida and Manny of the requested transfer and procured their signatures on the requisite paperwork to effectuate the change. Thereafter, the securities were reregistered in Evelyn's name alone.

Sometime at or around this time period, Estelle became concerned about what she perceived as Manny's increasing influence over Evelyn's financial affairs. Estelle testified that she went to the bank to voice her concerns to Heidel and to solicit her assistance. Specifically, Estelle warned Heidel that "there is a shark in the water." Heidel responded "oh, she's all right, they're all right." Heidel took no actions as a result of Estelle's statements or concerns.

In late August, Estelle telephoned Heidel to inquire whether Manny had been in the bank with Evelyn. When Heidel replied yes, Estelle stated that she was very concerned that "there may be overreaching going on." Heidel testified that during her 1 1/2 year interaction with Evelyn both inside and outside of the bank, Evelyn never demonstrated any lack of understanding or mental defect. She characterized Evelyn as being "sharp as a tack" and "feisty."

Thereafter, on September 2, 1993, Evelyn went to Heidel for the purpose of cashing a check in the amount of $9,800. Heidel wrote the check for Evelyn's signature. Heidel then authorized this check to be cashed. On the next day, Evelyn again cashed another check for $9,800 with Heidel's authorization. Heidel never questioned Evelyn about her need for any of this money. There is no record evidence of whether Manny was physically present inside of the bank with Evelyn when either of these checks were cashed.

Sometime late in the summer or early in the fall of 1993, Manny notified Dr. Furlong, Estelle's husband, that Evelyn was experiencing continuing depression and having memory problems. Dr. Furlong referred Evelyn to his friend, Dr. Peritz Scheinberg, a neurologist. On the day before her scheduled visit with Dr. Scheinberg, however, Evelyn went in to see Dr. Furlong. According to Dr. Furlong, Evelyn appeared to have understood and responded to his questions appropriately. He opined that she seemed to suffer from a type of aphasia (i.e., word forgetting) typical in octogenarians. Dr. Furlong saw no signs of Alzheimer's disease, incompetence, or dementia of any kind.

On September 2, 1993, Evelyn met with Dr. Scheinberg for a thirty minute examination.

Dr. Scheinberg asked Evelyn questions and made clinical observations. Based upon his examination, Dr. Scheinberg opined and testified at the trial below on behalf of Estelle that Evelyn was suffering from "[p]robable *1280 senile dementia of the Alzheimer's type" which impaired her judgment. Dr. Scheinberg further opined that her dementia was so severe that it pre-existed her visit to him by at least one year and that he expected this condition to progressively worsen. This opinion was based upon his experience in general with Alzheimer patients rather than his particular examination of Evelyn. Notwithstanding his general conclusions about Evelyn, Dr. Scheinberg could not opine that the dementia affected her cognitive ability to understand the extent of her estate and heirs at any given time. [FN6] He further allowed for the possibility of variations in that Evelyn could have had good days and bad days in terms of her decision-making process. [FN7]

FN6. Dr. Scheinberg testified as follows: Q. Did she have the cognitive ability to know approximately what her estate consisted of, or are you unable to venture an opinion on that? A. I can't answer that. I suspect that she had the cognitive ability to know a figure. Whether she understood the significance of that figure, I don't really know. She definitely had problems with arithmetic calculations, and with reading comprehension.

* * * * *

Q. Did she have the cognitive ability to know who her heirs were? A. I didn't ask her that question. I can't really--I can't decide that.

* * * * *

Q. Does [sic] judgment impairment prevent her from knowing what her estate consists of and who her heirs are? A. I don't think necessarily. It depends on the extent of the dementia.

* * * * *

FN7. In this regard, Dr. Scheinberg further testified as follows: Q. Is it reasonably possible that some five, six, seven months before you saw her, that she had a far greater cognitive ability than what you saw on September 2, 1993? A. Is it possible? Q. Reasonably possible. A. What does that mean, 51 percent? Q. Okay, 51 percent. A. I would have to say that based in medical probability, that for the preceding year, that her judgment was impaired to the point that I would have viewed her as demented. Is there a possibility, yes I mean, there can be variations. Her depression might not have been as severe. And she may have been an aberrant or unusual case, I don't know, I didn't see her before.

* * * * *

Q. If some approximately six months prior to the time that you saw her she's asked a series of questions, such as when did your husband die; she answers appropriately: How long have you been married; and she answers appropriately: Where do you live; and she gives the address and the telephone number of where she lives and gives the zip code number. And is asked what her purpose in visiting the lawyer is, and she tells the lawyer that she wants to be represented in connection with her husband's estate, and she wants to prepare a new will: That she gives the lawyer her maiden name: That she tells the lawyer who her heirs are, and that she tells the lawyer how she wants her estate distributed, do you have an opinion as to whether or not that's an indication that she intellectually understood what was going on and knew what she was doing at that time? A. It suggests it. It suggests that there were--that superficially at least she knew the things which you have described. I want to remind you that my role in this process was to see her as a neurologist on a specific occasion, and then was subsequently asked to extrapolate backwards and determine how long I thought there had been the same kind of problem present. But I cannot quantitate it.

Dr. Scheinberg testified that after he examined Evelyn, he told Manny of his findings and gave him a copy of the medical report. Dr. Scheinberg also immediately telephoned Dr. Furlong to apprise him as well. Dr. Furlong testified that he, in turn, withheld Dr. Scheinberg's findings about Evelyn from Estelle because Estelle was a "sick girl" and the news about Evelyn might be devastating to her health. Neither Dr. Furlong nor Manny ever told anyone at SunTrust about Dr. Scheinberg's findings. Manny later mailed a copy of Dr. Scheinberg's medical report to Manny's nephew, an internist in Michigan, to see if he could suggest any treatment. Manny's nephew informed him of a new memory drug which Dr. Furlong, at Manny's request, then prescribed for Evelyn. Evelyn never had any follow-up visits with any other doctors regarding Dr. Scheinberg's findings.

During the fall of 1993, Evelyn's relationship with the Furlongs was amicable as Evelyn, Manny, and the Furlong family dined out together frequently. It was during this period that Evelyn informed Manny that she was no longer satisfied with the terms of "The Broida Will" and the power of attorney. According to Manny's testimony, Evelyn *1281 wanted the will to be redrafted and the power of attorney destroyed.

Prior to having her will redrafted, Estelle took Evelyn to SunTrust in November 1993 to inquire about a custodial account for Evelyn. There they met with appellant Lucille Clum, a trust officer at the bank. Estelle explained to Clum that Evelyn was recently widowed and needed assistance with her checks and finances. During this meeting, Estelle told Clum that Manny had taken over Evelyn's affairs and that she "was very concerned that there might be some overreaching." Evelyn said little except that she was sad about the death of Jacob and stated that she wanted to know what the bank's role would be in a custodial account. Clum explained to her that the bank could do as much or as little as she wanted--"safe-keep the assets, collect the income, and pay ... out the income to her in whatever form she wanted." Evelyn told Clum that she would think about it and get back to her. On their way out of the bank building, Estelle and Evelyn ran into Heidel, at which time Estelle repeated her concerns about Manny.

E. THE FURLONG WILL A/K/A "THE HAPPY FAMILY WILL" DATED
DECEMBER 22, 1993

Sometime in late December 1993, Estelle and Evelyn went to Evelyn's safe deposit box where Estelle read "The Broida Will" and power of attorney. Estelle testified of her "shock" when she saw these documents as she was certain that they were the product of undue influence. Subsequently, she met with Evelyn and Manny to discuss the terms for a new will which Estelle intended to prepare herself. The new Furlong will ("The Happy Family Will") gave 40% of Evelyn's estate to the Furlongs, 10% to Ida, 30% to Manny, 15% to Edward and 5% to Edward's daughter. Estelle and Manny would be appointed co-personal representatives. Evelyn executed this will on December 22, 1993 in Estelle's office. Manny was not present. Prior to Evelyn's execution of the will, Estelle again explained its terms and Evelyn appeared to be contented. According to Lynee Blum, an attorney who witnessed the execution, Evelyn seemed to have understood the terms of the will and appeared to be lucid. After Evelyn's execution of this new Furlong will, Estelle testified that all of the relatives were "one big happy family." Estelle, however, never told anyone at SunTrust about this new will because "it was none of their business."

From December 1993 until May 1994, Evelyn lavished both her immediate family and the Furlong family with cash and other non-monetary gifts. Even Manny's mother-in-law, appellant Freida Pantzer, who occasionally stayed over at Evelyn's apartment, received gifts. At no time did any of the gift recipients question Evelyn's competency to make such gifts or offer to return them. With the exception of her brother Edward who was not a gift recipient, Evelyn gave gifts and cash to Manny and his family totalling approximately $1.5 million dollars. The Furlong family received gifts and cash totalling over $500,000. Dr. Furlong testified that Evelyn's generosity was not new as she has always been "a very generous lady."

One of Evelyn's "gifts" to Estelle led to the ultimate rift between the two and the end of the "happy family" relationship. On or about May 20, 1994, Estelle accompanied Evelyn to the bank where Evelyn signed the proceeds of a maturing $350,000 treasury bill over to Estelle. Estelle then deposited the same into her personal checking account. Within a few weeks thereafter, Evelyn sought the return of this money and explained to both, Estelle and Dr. Furlong, that she had mistakenly given Estelle the treasury bill and had not intended it as a gift. Estelle refused to return the money and responded that Evelyn knew exactly what she was doing when she made the gift. This exchange between Evelyn and Estelle was extremely bitter and Estelle thereafter testified that she deemed herself "out of the picture" as a result of this incident.

F. "THE BARASH WILL" DATED JULY 8,

Thereafter, on June 30, 1994, Evelyn and Manny went to see Miami attorney, Jeffrey Barash, about a new will for Evelyn. Evelyn and Manny selected Barash by virtue of his ad in the telephone book and his office's proximity to Evelyn's home. When they arrived at Barash's office, Manny initially remained *1282 in the waiting room while Evelyn had her consultation with Barash. Barash testified that Evelyn told him that she had been born in Russia and when her family came to America, they settled in Detroit. She also told him about her career as a purchaser for a women's clothier, her life with Jacob, and her sadness at his passing. She further told him of her family and her deteriorating relationship with the Furlongs which was the reason that she desired a new will. Evelyn explained to Barash that the Furlongs were no longer treating her the way they had when Jacob was alive.

When Evelyn described her estate as being approximately $2 1/2 to $3 million dollars, Barash recommended that she have a revocable trust. Evelyn then requested that Manny be allowed in so that Barash could explain the workings of a trust to both of them. Manny then joined this consultation. Evelyn questioned Barash about her control of the trust and how it would operate in the event of her disability. After Barash explained about the trust, Evelyn selected Manny as successor trustee. Because Manny wasn't a resident of Dade County, Barash suggested that Evelyn also appoint a local successor co-trustee such as a bank. Evelyn selected appellant, SunTrust.

On her next visit to Barash's office, Evelyn discussed the dispositive provisions of her proposed new will. Evelyn told Barash that she wanted 40% of her estate to be left to Manny and his wife, Renee; 30% to be left to Edward; and 30% to be left to Ida. She further bequeathed $100,000 to Dr. and Mrs. Furlong and $25,000 to each of their children. Manny was not present in the room with Evelyn and Barash at this time or at any other time when the will provisions were being discussed.

Evelyn executed the "The Barash Will and Trust" on July 8, 1994. Barash had arranged for Clum from SunTrust to serve as a witness for Evelyn's execution of the will and trust as he anticipated an attack on Evelyn's testamentary capacity by virtue of the fact that Evelyn had substantially disinherited the Furlongs. Although Manny had driven Evelyn to Barash's office, he remained outside during the execution of these documents. Prior to her execution of the documents, Barash reviewed them with Evelyn to make sure that she understood all of the provisions. Barash testified that Evelyn appeared to have fully understood what was explained to her.

After her execution of "The Barash Will and Trust," Evelyn later returned to Barash's office to express her frustration at Estelle's refusal to return the proceeds of the $350,000 treasury bill. Barash suggested that she could compensate for the loss by merely amending her trust to further decrease her gifts to the Furlongs. Accordingly, on August 11, 1994, Evelyn executed an amendment to "The Barash Will and Trust" which reduced the bequest to the Furlongs to just $1,000. The reason for the reduction was explicitly stated in the amendment. "The Barash Will and Amended Trust" ultimately was the final will executed by Evelyn.

At or about the time that Evelyn was preparing to execute "The Barash Will and Trust," during the summer of 1994, Dr. Furlong contacted Evelyn's brother, Edward, to find out why Manny was sequestering Evelyn. Dr. Furlong testified that he told Edward that Evelyn could be "the victim" of stealing and financial draining by Manny. Edward thanked him for calling and told Dr. Furlong that he would get back to him within two weeks. Edward never telephoned Dr. Furlong again.

Further, during this period, Manny's mother-in-law, Frieda, increasingly spent more time with Evelyn and drove her around town. As a result of their friendship, Evelyn began to see Frieda's personal doctor, Dr. Ernest Herried, instead of Dr. Furlong. Dr. Herried found Evelyn to be mentally alert and responsive to his questions about her medical problems.

EVELYN'S FINAL MONTHS

In January 1995, Jacob's estate was closed and Estelle forwarded the closing documents to Evelyn for her signature along with the remaining $9,400 from his estate account. Evelyn executed and returned the documents along with $9,400 to Estelle.

Evelyn became ill in early March 1995. She went to see Dr. Harried but refused to comply with his suggestion that she be hospitalized. *1283 Evelyn died from her illness in her apartment on March 3, 1995.

I PROCEEDINGS BELOW

Approximately two weeks after Evelyn's death, Manny and SunTrust as co-personal representatives of Evelyn's estate of "The Barash Will and Amended Trust" filed a petition for administration of that will. Shortly thereafter, Estelle filed a petition for administration of "The Furlong Will" (a/k/a

"The Happy Family Will") dated December 22, 1993 and a verified petition to set aside "The Barash Will and Amended Trust" on the grounds that they had been procured through undue influence and overreaching. Edward and Ida as named beneficiaries under "The Barash Will and Amended Trust" were granted permission to intervene in this proceeding.

Subsequently, Estelle filed a "Substituted Petition for Administration" requesting that "The Lost Will" dated January 23, 1992 be admitted to probate rather than "The Happy Family Will" dated December 22, 1993. Estelle also filed a two count amended petition against appellants alleging that they conspired to deprive Evelyn of her estate through undue influence, duress, and intimidation and that Evelyn lacked testamentary capacity. [FN8] Estelle sought equitable relief in the form of an accounting, restitution, and the imposition of a constructive trust. Estelle also sought to have "The Barash Will and Amended Trust" declared void and of no effect. Later, Estelle amended these pleadings to allege that all of Evelyn's wills after "The Lost Will" dated January 23, 1992 were the products of Evelyn's incompetency and/or appellants' undue influence. Estelle never sought compensatory or punitive damages in any of her pleadings. Rather, ten days prior to trial, Estelle moved to amend her petition to assert a claim for punitive damages. The lower court did not entertain this motion to amend until two days prior to the end of the eleven day trial. When the appellants objected to the proposed amendment on the grounds that Estelle had made no threshold showing of an entitlement to punitive damages, the trial court decided to take the matter under advisement pending its final judgment in the cause. [FN9]

FN8. Specifically, Count I alleged that: [b]eginning approximately April/May, 1993 and continuing to the date of Evelyn S. Gruber's death, Manuel Raimi, Renee Raimi and Ida Raimi, enjoying a confidential and/or fiduciary relationship with Evelyn S. Gruber, conspired, using undue influence, duress and intimidation to deprive Evelyn

S. Gruber of her money and assets. That conspiracy was later joined by Frieda Pantzer, Edward Schultz, Theresa Heidel, Lucille Clum, and SunBank/Miami, N.A., each of whom also enjoyed a confidential and/or fiduciary relationship with Evelyn S. Gruber. As a result of the conspiracy, the conspirators deprived Evelyn S. Gruber of substantial monies and other assets. Count II alleged the same conspiracy and continued as follows: On July 8, 1994, in furtherance of said conspiracy, the respondents caused Evelyn S. Gruber to execute a Last Will and Testament and a Revocable Trust. On August 11, 1994, in furtherance of said conspiracy, the respondents caused Evelyn S. Gruber to execute a First Amendment to Evelyn S. Gruber Revocable Trust dated July 8, 1994. A copy of these respective documents are [sic] attached hereto as Exhibits 1, 2 and 3. On the date of the execution of Exhibits 1, 2 and 3, Evelyn S. Gruber lacked testamentary capacity. Alternatively, and/or additionally, the execution of Exhibits 1, 2 and 3 was procured by the conspirators by duress, intimidation and undue influence.

FN9. We note also that counterclaims and crossclaims for fraud, undue influence, and tortious interference were likewise filed against Estelle and Dr. Furlong which were ultimately dismissed by the lower court. Because the appellants have not elected to appeal their dismissal, we do not address the same.

II

FINAL JUDGMENT OF LOWER COURT

The trial court entered its final judgment finding that there was clear and convincing evidence that a reprehensible conspiracy had been formed by the appellants to deprive Evelyn of her money and assets during her lifetime through undue influence and in the case of the bank and its employees, through a breach of their fiduciary duty. The court found that the bank was additionally negligent in its hiring, training, retention, and supervision of its employees, Heidel and Clum. Accordingly, the lower court entered a *1284 final judgment in the equitable action in favor of Evelyn's estate and against the appellants, jointly and severally, in the amount of $1,533,689.55, including prejudgment interest. The court further assessed punitive damages against SunTrust Bank in the amount of $4,500,000; Manny in the amount of $2,000,000; Edward and Frieda each in the amount of $1,000,000.

In the will contest litigation, the lower court declined to admit "The Barash Will and Amended Trust" to probate on the grounds that it had been procured by undue influence and overreaching by Manny and that the decedent lacked testamentary capacity to execute the same. In fact, the court declared that all of the decedent's wills executed subsequent to "The Lost Will" dated January 23, 1992 had been procured by undue influence and/or the decedent lacked testamentary capacity to execute the same. Accordingly, the lower court admitted "The Lost Will" dated January 23, 1992 to probate. This appeal followed.

III EQUITABLE CLAIMS LITIGATION

We first address the final judgment as it relates to the equitable claims litigation. Appellants assert, among other things, that the judgments entered against them must be reversed where the evidence adduced by appellee Furlong was insufficient to make a prima facie showing of any civil conspiracy to deprive the decedent of her money and assets during her lifetime through undue influence and/or breach of a fiduciary duty. The bank further asserts that the lower court erred in imposing liability against it for the negligent hiring, training, and retention of Clum and Heidel where these theories were never pled or tried by consent.

[1][2] Based upon our careful review of the record, we agree with the appellants that all of the judgments entered against them must be reversed where the evidence was insufficient to establish the existence of a civil conspiracy [FN10] in the first instance. A civil conspiracy requires: (a) an agreement between two or more parties, (b) to do an unlawful act or to do a lawful act by unlawful means, (c) the doing of some overt act in pursuance of the conspiracy, and (d) damage to plaintiff as a result of the acts done under the conspiracy. See Florida Fern Growers Assoc., Inc. v. Concerned Citizens of Putnam County, 616 So.2d 562, 565 (Fla. 5th DCA 1993); Nicholson v. Kellin, 481 So.2d 931, 935 (Fla. 5th DCA 1985). Additionally, an actionable conspiracy requires an actionable underlying tort or wrong. See Florida Fern Growers, 616 So.2d at 565; Wright v. Yurko, 446 So.2d 1162, 1165 (Fla. 5th DCA 1984).

FN10. Our holding in this regard thus obviates our need to address the appellants' further challenge to the entry of a judgment for compensation and punitive damages in an equitable proceeding.

Thus, a cause of action for civil conspiracy exists ... only if 'the basis for the conspiracy is an independent wrong or tort which would constitute a cause of action if the wrong were done by one person.'

Blatt v. Green, Rose, Kahn & Piotrkowski, 456 So.2d 949, 951 (Fla. 3d DCA 1984) (citing American Diversified Ins. Servs., Inc. v. Union Fidelity Life Ins., 439 So.2d 904, 906 (Fla. 2d DCA 1983)). In this case, the appellee apparently maintained below that the underlying actionable torts were the appellants' undue influence and the bank's breach of fiduciary duty.

[3][4][5][6] Appellee Furlong's sole proof of the inception of the conspiracy was Ida's telephonic request to her son, Manny, that he contact the decedent to render assistance to her after her late husband's death. Without more, we find this evidence to be wholly insufficient for the establishment of a conspiracy. As Manny and Ida were the only parties privy to this telephonic conversation, Furlong obviously had no direct proof of any agreement to use undue influence to loot the decedent of her assets during her lifetime. While Furlong correctly asserts that a conspiracy may be proven by circumstantial evidence, this may be done "only when the inference sought to be created by such circumstantial evidence outweighs all reasonable inferences to the contrary." Diamond v. Rosenfeld, 511 So.2d 1031, 1034 (Fla. 4th DCA 1987), rev. denied, 520 So.2d 586 (Fla. 1988). Here, it cannot be said that the inference of a conspiracy outweighs all reasonable inferences to the contrary. A reasonable inference can be made that Ida's sole motivation *1285 for telephoning Manny was her sheer concern for the well-being of her elderly, recently widowed sister who had always been kind to her. The finding of the formation of a conspiracy during this telephone conversation would be pure speculation at best, and insufficient to sustain the civil judgment. Moreover, there was absolutely no evidence that the remaining appellants had knowledge of the alleged conspiracy or that they knowingly participated in it. See James v. Nationsbank Trust Co. Nat'l Assoc., 639 So.2d 1031, 1033 (Fla. 5th DCA 1994) (mortgagors failed to establish bank's involvement in conspiracy where it was alleged only that bank had knowledge that development company's continuing fraud was aided if bank supplied the loan); see also Menendez v. Beech Acceptance Corp., 521 So.2d 178, 180 (Fla. 3d DCA 1988) (some proof of knowledge of a conspiracy and participation by tortfeasor must be shown to survive summary judgment); Trautz v. Weisman, 809 F.Supp. 239, 246 (S.D.N.Y.1992) (mere knowledge of the conspiracy is insufficient; there must be an actual knowing participation). To assume or speculate, as appellee would have us do, that the remaining appellants participated in a conspiracy formed by Ida and Manny merely because they ultimately received some benefits from the decedent is insufficient for the imposition of liability against them. [FN11] See Karnegis v. Oakes, 296 So.2d 657, 659 (Fla. 3d DCA 1974), cert. denied, 307 So.2d 450 (Fla.1975). Thus, we find that the lower court erred in finding that the appellants participated in a conspiracy to extract gifts and benefits from the decedent during her lifetime through the exercise of undue influence or the breach of a fiduciary duty.

FN11. The entire basis for appellee's conspiracy claim appears to be that the appellants were the recipients of the decedent's generosity in some manner during her lifetime. The undisputed record evidence, however, disclosed that the decedent had a long history of being generous to others and mere affection, kindness, or attachment of one person for another does not itself constitute undue influence. See In re Dunson's Estate, 141 So.2d 601, 605 (Fla. 2d DCA 1962). Ironically, if we were to follow appellee's reasoning, she and her family members would also have to be declared co-conspirators since they too were benefactors of the decedent's generosity during her lifetime.

[7][8][9] We also agree with the appellant bank that the lower court erred in finding it negligent for the hiring, retention, and supervision of appellants Heidel and Clum where this theory was never pled or tried by consent. Appellee asserts, however, that this theory was implicitly tried by consent where the bank failed to lodge an objection below. We disagree. A failure to object cannot be construed as implicit consent to try an unpled theory when the evidence introduced is relevant to other issues properly being tried. See Bilow v. Benoit, 519 So.2d 1114, 1116 (Fla. 1st DCA 1988); Wassil v. Gilmour, 465 So.2d 566, 569 (Fla. 3d DCA 1985). Here, we think that appellee's evidence of the bank's failure to supervise and train Heidel and Clum was directly relevant to the issue of the bank's breach of fiduciary duty to the decedent. Thus, the bank's failure to object to this evidence cannot properly be construed as its implicit consent to the trial of this unpled theory. Rule 1.190(b), Fla. R. Civ. P., which permits unpled issues to be expressly or implicitly tried by consent of the parties was never intended to allow one party to catch the opposing party off guard and inject new unpled issues that are relevant and related to other issues properly before the court.

For all of these reasons, we reverse all the judgments entered against the appellants and remand with instruction that final judgment be entered in their favor on the main action.

IV WILL CONTEST LITIGATION

Finally, we address that portion of the final judgment which relates to the will contest litigation. Appellants, with the exception of the bank and its employees, [FN12] urge that the lower court erred as a matter of law in admitting "The Lost Will" dated January 23, 1992 to probate upon its conclusion that the decedent's last executed will, "The Barash Will and Amended Trust," was void due to the decedent's lack of testamentary capacity and/or Manny's undue influence. We agree and reverse this portion of the final judgment as well.

FN12. These appellants take no position on this issue.

*1286 TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY

[10][11][12][13] It has long been emphasized that the right to dispose of one's property by will is highly valuable and it is the policy of the law to hold a last will and testament good wherever possible. See In re Weihe's Estate, 268 So.2d 446, 451 (Fla. 4th DCA 1972), quashed on existing facts, 275 So.2d 244 (Fla.1973); In re Dunson's Estate, 141 So.2d at 604. To execute a valid will, the testator need only have testamentary capacity (i.e. be of "sound mind") which has been described as having the ability to mentally understand in a general way (1) the nature and extent of the property to be disposed of, (2) the testator's relation to those who would naturally claim a substantial benefit from his will, and (3) a general understanding of the practical effect of the will as executed. See In re Wilmott's Estate, 66 So.2d 465, 467 (Fla.1953); In re Weihe's Estate, 268 So.2d at 448; In re Dunson's Estate, 141 So.2d at 604. "A testator may still have testamentary capacity to execute a valid will even though he may frequently be intoxicated, use narcotics, have an enfeebled mind, failing memory, [or] vacillating judgment." In re Weihe's Estate, 268 So.2d at 448. Moreover, an insane individual or one who exhibits "queer conduct" may execute a valid will as long as it is done during a lucid interval. See Id. Indeed, it is only critical that the testator possess testamentary capacity at the time of the execution of the will. See Id.; see also Coppock v. Carlson, 547 So.2d 946, 947 (Fla. 3d DCA 1989) (whether testator had the required testamentary capacity is determined solely by his mental state at the time he executed the instrument), rev. denied, 558 So.2d 17 (Fla.1990).

[14][15][16] An appellate court will not interfere with a probate court's finding of testamentary capacity unless there is an absence of substantial competent evidence to support the finding or unless it appears that the probate court has misapprehended the effect of the evidence as a whole. See In re Weihe's Estate, 268 So.2d at 449. It is the duty of the appellate court to examine all of the evidence to determine whether there is substantial and competent evidence to support the findings of the probate court and whether the probate court may have misinterpreted the legal effect. Further, where the probate court has misinterpreted the legal effect of the evidence in its entirety, its findings will not be affirmed merely because there is evidence that is contradicted on which the findings may be predicated. See Lambrose v. Topham, 55 So.2d 557, 558 (Fla.1951) (citing Hooper v. Stokes, 145 So. 855, 857, 107 Fla. 607, 610 (1933)). Any rule to the contrary would render a probate court's finding of testamentary capacity virtually unassailable on appeal.

[17] In the instant case, the lower court, citing to Dr. Scheinberg's testimony, concluded that the decedent lacked the requisite testamentary capacity to execute "The Barash Will and Amended Trust." Our review of the evidence leads us to find that the lower court's conclusion in this regard was erroneous as a matter of law and that the court simply misinterpreted the legal effect of Dr. Scheinberg's testimony. Although Dr. Scheinberg opined that the decedent suffered from severe dementia which would progressively worsen, and that her judgment was significantly impaired on the date of his exam, he categorically testified that he was unable to offer any opinion as to her testamentary capacity at any given time. Moreover, Dr. Scheinberg did allow for the possibility of the decedent having "lucid intervals" in her decision-making process. The appellee offered no evidence that the decedent was incompetent or not lucid at the time she made the "The Barash Will and Amended Trust." See Coppock 547 So.2d at 947. In fact, the evidence was to the contrary. Given that the presumption of testamentary capacity is so strong in Florida that it allows for a demented or insane person to execute a valid will during a "lucid interval," see Murrey v. Barnett Nat'l Bank, 74 So.2d 647, 649 (Fla.1954), the trial court's conclusion that the decedent lacked testamentary capacity to execute "The Barash Will and Amended Trust" simply did not comport with the evidence adduced at trial and may not stand as a matter of law.

UNDUE INFLUENCE

[18][19] The lower court additionally found that "The Barash Will and Amended Trust" was void because it was procured by "undue influence and overreaching by Manny *1287 in violation of a confidential or fiduciary relationship." When a will is challenged on the grounds of undue influence, the influence must amount to over persuasion, duress, force, coercion, or artful or fraudulent contrivances to such an extent that there is a destruction of free agency and willpower of the testator. See In re Carpenter's Estate, 253 So.2d 697, 704 (Fla.1971); In re Dunson's Estate, 141 So.2d at 605; see also Estate of Brock, 692 So.2d 907, 911 (Fla. 1st DCA 1996), rev. denied, 694 So.2d 737 (Fla.1997). A presumption of undue influence arises in favor of a will contestant if it is established that a substantial beneficiary under the will occupied a confidential relationship with the testator and was active in procuring the contested will. See In re Carpenter's Estate, 253 So.2d at 701; Brock, 692 So.2d at 911; Elson v. Vargas, 520 So.2d 76, 76 (Fla. 3d DCA), rev. denied, 528 So.2d 1181 (Fla.1988). The origin of the confidence between the benefactor and testator is immaterial and the confidential relationship is broadly defined:

The rule embraces both technical fiduciary relations and those informal relations which exist wherever one man trusts in and relies upon another.

* * * * *

The relation and the duties involved in it need not be legal. It may be moral, social, domestic, or merely personal.
In re Carpenter's Estate, 253 So.2d at 701

(citing Quinn v. Phipps, 113 So. 419, 421, 93 Fla. 805, 810 (1927)). As for a determination of whether a substantial beneficiary was active in the procurement of the will, our supreme court in In re Carpenter's Estate outlined the following nonexclusive list of factors for the court's consideration:

- a) presence of the beneficiary at the execution of the will;
- b) presence of the beneficiary on those occasions when the testator expressed a desire to make a will;
- c) recommendation by the beneficiary of an attorney to draw the will;
- d) knowledge of the contents of the will by the beneficiary prior to execution;
- e) giving of instructions on preparation of the will by the beneficiary to the attorney drawing the will;
- f) securing of witnesses to the will by the beneficiary; and
- g) safekeeping of the will by the beneficiary subsequent to execution.

253 So.2d at 702. These listed criteria are only general guidelines and a will contestant is not required to prove them all to establish active procurement. See Id. Each case is fact specific and the significance of any (or all) of such criteria must be determined with reference to the particular facts of the case.

[20][21][22] Once the presumption of undue influence arises, the burden shifts to the beneficiary of the will to come forward with a reasonable explanation of his or her active role in the preparation of the decedent's will. See Brock, 692 So.2d at 912. If the presumption goes un rebutted, it alone is sufficient to sustain the contestant's burden. See Id. On the other hand, if the presumption is rebutted, the contestant must establish undue influence by a preponderance of the evidence. See Tarsagian v. Watt, 402 So.2d 471, 472 (Fla. 3d DCA 1981).

[23] With reference to "The Barash Will and Amended Trust," the lower court found that a presumption of undue influence was created by virtue of Manny's: 1) role in finding Mr. Barash; 2) role in procuring "The Barash Will and Amended Trust"; and 3) control of the decedent's personal and financial affairs.

[FN13] The court further found *1288 that the presumption had not been rebutted by a reasonable explanation for Manny's acts and conduct. Alternatively, the lower court found that even in the absence of the presumption, Manny's undue influence had been proven by the greater weight of substantial and competent evidence. We do not agree that the evidence supports either of the lower courts' alternative conclusions.

FN13. Curiously, the lower court also justified the presumption of undue influence on Manny's role in procuring the earlier Broida will and durable power of attorney and retaining these documents for safekeeping after their execution. Assuming without deciding that the creation and execution of these documents were the products of Manny's undue influence, it is undisputed that they were both destroyed at the decedent's request a year prior to the execution of "The Barash Will and Trust." Any undue influence utilized to procure the Broida documents was wholly irrelevant to the question of whether the subsequent Barash documents were also the product of undue influence. Consequently, we think that appellee, as the contestant to the Barash documents, was required to come forth with independent evidence that "The Barash Will and Amended Trust" was likewise the product of Manny's undue influence. See Martin v. Martin, 687 So.2d 903, 906 (Fla. 4th DCA 1997) ("A finding that the decedent was susceptible to undue influence on one of the dates would not have been conclusive as to his state of mind on the other date."); see also In re Dunson's Estate, 141 So.2d at 604 (mental capacity of testator at the time he executed will is determinative factor).

[24] First of all, we do not agree that the record evidence was sufficient to create a presumption of undue influence. Although Manny was a substantial beneficiary under the challenged will and does not contest the fact that he enjoyed a confidential relationship with the decedent during her final years, there was insufficient evidence to establish that he was active in the procurement of this will. Although Manny was present when the decedent expressed her desire to revoke the Furlong "The Happy Family Will" and make a new will, the unrefuted evidence below does not support the lower court's finding that Manny procured attorney Barash for the decedent or that Manny was even familiar with this attorney for that matter. [FN14] According to the only evidence adduced, Barash was randomly selected from the yellow pages by virtue of his proximity to the decedent and specialty. There was no evidence that Manny gave any instructions to attorney Barash as to the preparation of the challenged will and trust; nor was there any evidence that Manny had knowledge of the dispositive provisions of the decedent's proposed final will. [FN15] Further, Manny was not present at the execution of the challenged will and all of the witnesses to the decedent's execution of this will were independently procured by Barash. Finally, Manny did not see or take possession of these documents after the decedent's execution of the same.

FN14. Indeed, the unrefuted evidence was that Manny was totally unfamiliar with any attorney in the Dade County area.

FN15. Although Barash brought Manny into his office briefly to explain the mechanics of a trust, Barash testified that at no time was Manny present when the dispositive provisions of the will and trust were discussed with the decedent.

[25] Under these facts, we do not believe that a presumption of undue influence properly arose. Even assuming, arguendo, that such a presumption could be created, we find that there was a clear and reasonable explanation to rebut this presumption. The decedent expressed her desire to revoke the Furlong "Happy Family Will" and disinherit the Furlongs in the aftermath of her bitter dispute with appellee over the proceeds of the $350,000 treasury bill. It was uncontroverted that the decedent was extremely angry because she perceived (whether correctly or incorrectly) that her stepdaughter had wrongfully taken advantage of her by misappropriating the proceeds of the treasury bill. The expressed reason given by the decedent for further diminishing her bequest to Estelle with the amendment to the challenged will was to compensate for the unreturned proceeds from the treasury bill.

Given these unrefuted facts, Manny's explanation that he merely facilitated the decedent's independent decision to change her will after her dispute with Estelle was reasonable under these circumstances. [FN16] admitted to probate.

Reversed and remanded with directions.

702 So.2d 1273, 22 Fla. L. Weekly D2184

FN16. It is noteworthy that the decedent's decision to disinherit the Furlongs in "The Barash Will and Amended Trust" was not without precedent. Prior to Manny's arrival and alleged undue influence, the decedent had disinherited the Furlongs in the Blaustein Will. This occurred at or about the time of the decedent's dispute with appellee over the appellee's failure to repay the borrowed securities from Jacob's estate. Thus, the record evidence suggests that the decedent appears to have disinherited her stepdaughter's family during those times when she believed that they were mistreating her.

[26] In the absence of the presumption, we similarly cannot agree that appellee met her burden of establishing undue influence by the greater weight of the evidence. See In re Carpenter's Estate, 253 So.2d at 704-05; Coppock, 547 So.2d at 947. The unrefuted record evidence indicates that the decedent's sole motivation for disinheriting the appellee's family from her final will was the decedent's anger and animosity towards appellee over the treasury bill incident. Thus, the lower court's finding that the decedent was somehow "duped" into making her last will by Manny is not sustainable by the record evidence and must be reversed.

1289 In conclusion, given the sound policy of this state to effectuate the last wishes of a decedent as expressed in his or her final will and given the dearth of substantial evidence of lack of testamentary capacity or undue influence, in this cause, we are compelled to respect the decedent's last wishes as expressed in "The Barash Will and Amended Trust." See Coppock, 547 So.2d at 947. Accordingly, we reverse that portion of the final judgment directing that the decedent's will dated January 23, 1992 (i.e., "The Furlong Will" or "The Lost Will") be admitted to probate and remand with instructions that the decedent's last executed will and amendment thereto, "The Barash Will and Amended Trust," be

Department, New York.

ROTTERDAM VENTURES, INC., et al.,
Appellants,
v.
ERNST & YOUNG LLP, Respondent.

Dec. 26, 2002.

Investors brought action against company's auditor for negligent misrepresentation and gross negligence, alleging that they had purchased stock conversion rights based upon misleading information contained in company's financial statements. The Supreme Court, Schenectady County, Reilly Jr., J., dismissed complaint, and investors appealed. The Supreme Court, Appellate Division, Crew III, J.P., held that: (1) investors failed to plead fraud claims with sufficient particularity, and (2) investors' reliance on auditor's "comfort letter" to company was not reasonable.

Affirmed.

Investors' claims against company's auditor for gross negligence in connection with its failure to detect company's fraudulent transactions actually sounded in fraud, and thus each element of investors' claims had to be pled with particularity. McKinney's CPLR 3016(b).

Investors did not reasonably rely on auditors "comfort" letter to company reaffirming its prior position regarding company's financial health, and thus could not base fraud claims against auditor on statements made in letter, where letters were addressed only to company, and expressly stated that they were "not to be used, circulated, quoted, or otherwise referred to for any purpose, including but not limited to the purchase or sale of securities," and investors had access to relevant financial statements and their own means of ascertaining company's financial viability.

Appeal from an order of the Supreme Court (Reilly Jr., J.), entered August 1, 2001 in Schenectady County, which, inter alia, granted defendant's motion to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a cause of action.

This action arises out of certain investments made by plaintiffs in what was at all relevant times a publicly traded telecommunications company named AMNEX Inc. In January 1997, plaintiff Francesco Galesi acquired between one and two percent of AMNEX's stock and became a member of the company's board of directors. Shortly thereafter, in a bid to increase its available cash, AMNEX elected to make a bond *747 offering, and HSBC Securities Inc. was selected as the underwriter. HSBC apparently expressed concern regarding the number of individuals holding stock conversion rights in AMNEX and advised the company of the need to eliminate, or at least reduce, this "market overhang." To that end, Galesi was asked to purchase and then exercise a portion of the conversion rights in order to enable the bond offering to go forward.

Prior to acquiescing to this request, Galesi asked his chief operating officer and financial advisor, David Buicko, a certified public accountant, to determine whether an investment in AMNEX was financially prudent. Upon reviewing AMNEX's 1996 10-

K or annual report, which allegedly contained a report from defendant, AMNEX's auditors, representing that such financial statements "present[ed] fairly, in all material respects, the consolidated financial position of AMNEX * * * at December 31, 1996 and 1995," Buicko recommended that Galesi go forward with the transaction if he could obtain the conversion rights for approximately one half of AMNEX's then common stock price. Galesi thereafter entered into a note purchase agreement that, insofar as is relevant to this appeal, conditioned the transaction upon AMNEX not having suffered a "material adverse change in its business or financial condition" between the date of the execution of the note purchase agreement and the scheduled September 30, 1997 closing.

Prior to closing, defendant issued two "comfort letters" to AMNEX and HSBC in September 1997 essentially reaffirming *964 its prior position regarding AMNEX's financial health. Galesi thereafter purchased the conversion rights as scheduled for approximately $3.1 million and, together with plaintiff Rotterdam Ventures, Inc., allegedly continued to invest in and extend loans to AMNEX, totaling several million dollars, until AMNEX filed for bankruptcy in May 1999. According to plaintiffs, they entered into such transactions based upon misleading information contained in AMNEX's financial statements.

In May 2000, plaintiffs commenced this action against defendant alleging two causes of action for negligent misrepresentation and two causes of action for gross negligence. Supreme Court granted defendant's subsequent motion to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a cause of action, finding that plaintiffs' claims for negligent misrepresentation failed due to a lack of privity between plaintiffs and defendant. As to the causes of action for gross negligence, the court concluded that plaintiffs failed to satisfy the pleading requirements of CPLR 3016(b). Supreme Court also denied plaintiffs' request for additional discovery--namely, disclosure of defendant's work papers for the subject audit. This appeal by plaintiffs ensued.

[1] Plaintiffs, as so limited by their brief, contend that Supreme Court erred in dismissing the causes of action sounding in gross negligence. Preliminarily, although characterized as claims for "gross negligence," plaintiffs' causes of action in this regard actually sound in fraud in which a showing of gross negligence or recklessness will permit the trier of fact to draw the inference that a fraud was in fact perpetrated (see State St. Trust Co. v. Ernst, 278 N.Y. 104, 112, 15 N.E.2d 416; Foothill Capital Corp. v. Grant Thornton L.L.P., 276 A.D.2d 437, 715 N.Y.S.2d 389). To plead a prima facie case of fraud, the plaintiff must allege "a material misstatement, known by the perpetrator to be false, made with an intent to deceive, upon 748 which the plaintiff reasonably relies and as a result of which he sustains damages" (Megarix Furs v. Gimbel Bros., 172 A.D.2d 209, 213, 568 N.Y.S.2d 581 [emphasis omitted]), and each element must be pleaded with particularity (see CPLR 3016(b)). Specifically, "[a] complaint alleging fraud by an accountant is expected to identify the particular manner in which an item included in the financial statement relied upon has been intentionally or recklessly misrepresented" (Lampert v. Mahoney, Cohen & Co., 218 A.D.2d 580, 582, 630 N.Y.S.2d 733; see, La Salle Natl. Bank v. Ernst & Young, 285 A.D.2d 101, 109, 729 N.Y.S.2d 671).

The crux of plaintiffs' complaint is that AMNEX engaged in four specified transactions, as a result of which AMNEX (1) overstated the goodwill valuation associated with the company's acquisition of Capital Network Systems, Inc., (2) failed to write *965 down the $4.1 million in intangible assets recorded as part of a transaction with an entity known as Teleplus, (3) failed to write down or write off allegedly uncollectible receivables from an entity known as Microtel, and (4) recorded as an asset sale to Transaction Network Services what actually was a disguised loan to AMNEX. By failing to detect these purported "red flags," the argument continues, defendant violated Generally Accepted Auditing Standards and misrepresented the financial viability of AMNEX.

Assuming, without deciding, that plaintiffs have alleged material misrepresentations, plaintiffs have not alleged any facts suggesting that defendant was aware of the alleged problems associated with the foregoing transactions (compare Foothill Capital Corp. v. Grant Thornton L.L.P., supra; John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. KPMG Peat Marwick, 232 A.D.2d 283, 648 N.Y.S.2d 911, lv. denied 89 N.Y.2d 809, 655 N.Y.S.2d 889, 678 N.E.2d 502; Simon v. Ernst & Young, 223 A.D.2d 506, 637 N.Y.S.2d 375). Indeed, plaintiffs' argument on appeal, that they should be afforded additional discovery in order to obtain defendant's work papers and definitively ascertain what defendant knew and when defendant knew it, is a tacit acknowledgment that the complaint, on its face, is lacking in particularity on this point. To the extent that plaintiffs allege that the subject transactions at least should have placed defendant on notice of a potential problem, this constitutes nothing more than an allegation of ordinary negligence, which is insufficient to identify the specific manner in which the identified transactions were intentionally or recklessly misrepresented (see La Salle Natl. Bank v. Ernst & Young, supra at 109, 729 N.Y.S.2d 671). Notably, the facts and allegations underlying plaintiffs' gross negligence claims mirror those set forth in plaintiffs' causes of action for negligent misrepresentation, the dismissal of which plaintiffs have not challenged on appeal, and the case law makes clear that "[t]he mere conclusory assertion of recklessness and intent, appended to the identical set of facts as are alleged in the negligence claim, do not meet the special pleading standards required under CPLR 3016(b)" (Marine Midland Bank v. Grant Thornton L.L.P., 260 A.D.2d 318, 319, 689 N.Y.S.2d 81).

[2] Finally, even assuming that plaintiffs could satisfy the additional elements of falsity and scienter, we agree with Supreme Court that plaintiffs could not, as a matter of law, establish justifiable reliance. The comfort letters issued by defendant, upon which plaintiffs so steadfastly relied, were addressed only to AMNEX and 749 HSBC and expressly stated that they were issued solely for the benefit of such entities and were "not to be used, circulated, quoted, or otherwise referred to for *966 any purpose, including but not limited to the purchase or sale of securities." Additionally Galesi, a member of AMNEX's board of directors and a self-described "respected investor and entrepreneur," plainly had both access to the relevant AMNEX financial statements and the wherewithal, through his own financial advisors, to ascertain the financial viability of that entity (cf. Lampert v. Mahoney, Cohen & Co., supra at 582-583, 630 N.Y.S.2d 733). Thus, as plaintiffs had the means to ascertain the truth of the alleged representations, they cannot prevail in an action for fraud (see Cohen v. Colistra, 233 A.D.2d 542, 543, 649 N.Y.S.2d 540). Plaintiffs' remaining contentions, to the extent not specifically addressed, have been examined and found to be lacking in merit.

ORDERED that the order is affirmed, with costs.

David SCHNELL, Plaintiff,

v.

CONSECO, INC. and Sands Brothers & Co.,
Ltd., Defendants.

No. 98 Civ. 2527.

March 31, 1999.

Shareholder sued another shareholder and investment banker, alleging violation of Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) and market manipulation in violation of §10(b). Defendants moved to dismiss. The District Court, Barrington D. Parker, Jr., J., held that: (1) shareholder did not commit acts of mail or wire fraud constituting "racketeering activity" for (RICO) purposes; (2) open-ended pattern of racketeering activity was not shown; (3) closed-ended pattern of racketeering activity was not shown; (4) causality element of RICO claim was not established; (5) market manipulation claims were subject to heightened pleading requirements of Private Securities Litigation Reform Act (PSLRA); (6) averments made on information and belief were too vague to satisfy PSLRA; (7) claim that investment banker artificially increased price of shares to increase transaction fees did not establish scienter required for securities fraud claim; and (8) scienter was not established by citing to optimistic statements and comparing them to what actually happened.

Complaint dismissed.

MEMORANDUM DECISION AND ORDER

BARRINGTON D. PARKER, Jr., District Judge.

Plaintiff David Schnell brings this action against Conseco, Inc. ("Conseco") and Sands

Brothers & Co., Ltd. ("Sands"), on behalf of a purported class of public investors in NAL Financial Group, Inc. ("NALF") for injuries suffered as a result of Conseco's alleged fraud in violation of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. § 1961, et seq., (Count I), and the manipulation of the market for NALF securities allegedly committed by Sands, in violation of Section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. § 78j(b), and Rule 10b-5 promulgated thereunder by the Securities Exchange Commission ("SEC") (Count II). Essentially, Schnell alleges that Conseco, with the assistance of Sands, unlawfully effected a series of transactions--principally the sale of convertible debentures in NALF--to gain control of NALF by acquiring its common stock at artificially low prices to the detriment of its remaining public shareholders.

Defendants now move to dismiss plaintiff's claims against them pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) and 9(b). For the reasons stated below, defendants' motions are granted.

BACKGROUND

In deciding a motion pursuant to Rule 12(b), the court is, of course, obligated to construe the pleadings in the plaintiff's favor. Cooper v. Parsky, 140 F.3d 433, 440 (2d Cir.1998); Mills v. Polar Molecular Corp., 12 F.3d 1170, 1174 (2d Cir.1993); Bankers Trust Co. v. Rhoades, 859 F.2d 1096, 1098 (2d Cir.1988). The following facts are accordingly construed.

*441 Conseco is a financial services holding company incorporated under the laws of the state of Indiana and engaged in the development, marketing, and administration of annuity, supplemental health, and individual life insurance products. Sands is an investment banking firm that is also a broker and dealer in securities.

NALF is a Delaware corporation, engaged in the purchase, securitization, and servicing of automobile finance contracts to consumers with high credit risks. Through an insurance subsidiary, NALF provides insurance and insurance-related products to automobile dealers and their customers, and, through a remarketing subsidiary, NALF disposes of some of its repossessed and off-lease vehicles. On March 23, 1998, NALF filed a Chapter 11 petition for bankruptcy. No claims are asserted in this action against NALF.

On April 23, 1996, Beneficial Standard Life Insurance Co. ("BSLIC") and Great American Reserve Insurance Co. ("GARCO"), two Conseco subsidiaries, each acquired $5,000,000 worth of 9% Subordinated Convertible Debentures of NALF. The debentures had a life span of eighteen months, expiring in October 1997, and were convertible at any time into NALF common stock at the lesser of $12.00 per share or 80% of the market price of the stock on the date of conversion. NALF also issued to the subsidiaries warrants to purchase 500,000 restricted shares of NALF common stock at an exercise price of $12.65 per share.

By late 1996, approximately $11 million in NALF debentures with conversion features similar to the Conseco debentures were owned by other investors, including Merrill Lynch, Westminster Capital, and Michael Karp. Millions of dollars in warrants similar to those granted to the Conseco subsidiaries in April 1996 were also issued by NALF to other private investors.

Plaintiff contends that the debentures gave Conseco an incentive to artificially depress the price of NALF's stock at the end of the eighteen month conversion period so that Conseco could acquire the shares at the depressed price. In connection with Conseco's purchase of the debentures, Conseco was also allowed to designate one director to NALF's Board of Directors. Plaintiff claims that NALF's May 2, 1996 mailing of a proxy statement to its public stockholders and its electronic filing with the SEC was a result of Conseco's designation of a director to NALF's Board and was in furtherance of Conseco's scheme to defraud.

Plaintiff alleges that through phone calls to investors and dissemination of false opinions on the value of NALF stock, Sands, who has acted as Conseco's investment banker, artificially inflated the price of NALF stock through an illegal "pump and dump" scheme to enable Sands to make increased profits on sales of NALF stock. [FN1] Plaintiff also contends that Sands, which acted as Conseco's financial advisor and received a placement fee in connection with the private placement of Conseco debentures, failed to inform public investors that Conseco itself derived substantial benefits from the Conseco debentures and was positioning itself to acquire NALF at 80% of the market price of NALF stock, which Conseco allegedly expected to be severely depressed at the end of the conversion period.

FN1. The alleged markups were based on a percentage of the purchase price paid by the investors and represented Sands' fees for the transactions.

After Conseco's purchase of NALF shares, plaintiff alleges that defendants began to position NALF to be acquired at a sharp discount by Conseco. Plaintiff contends that after selling NALF stock to the public at artificially inflated prices, Sands took NALF stock off its recommended list and stopped its aggressive efforts to market NALF shares, resulting in a precipitous decline in the stock's value.

On June 23, 1997, when NALF common stock was trading below $2 per share, Conseco, *442 pursuant to a Credit Agreement, loaned an additional $5,000,000 to NALF secured by a note maturing on December 31, 1997. In connection with this note, NALF issued to Conseco warrants to purchase 275,000 shares of NALF common stock at an exercise price of $.15 per share and agreed to amend the exercise price of the Conseco warrants to $.15 per share from $12.625 and $14.25 per share.

On August 21, 1997, NALF and Conseco entered into an Investment Agreement, and a first amendment to the June 23, 1997 Credit Agreement. In the Investment Agreement, Conseco acquired 5,000,000 shares of NALF stock for $5 million, and purchased all of NALF's outstanding convertible debentures held by third parties other than Conseco. The Investment Agreement also provided that Conseco would not "initiate or cooperate in the initiation of any reorganization or liquidation proceeding with respect to the Company under the Bankruptcy Act" until the date of Closing, which was October 1, 1997.

On October 1, 1997, Conseco converted many of the debentures it owned into NALF common stock, which resulted in Conseco's ownership of 73.6% of the company, and agreed to convert its remaining debentures into NALF common stock once the company had sufficient authorized shares available for issuance upon conversion. In addition, NALF's Board of Directors was increased from four to six members and the number of Conseco designees on the Board was raised from one to four. Conseco also agreed that it would not pursue a cash-out merger of NALF's public shareholders prior to March 23, 1998 without the approval of a majority of the company's minority stockholders, and that it would not pursue a cash-out merger prior to December 23, 1998 without the approval of a majority of disinterested NALF Directors.

Plaintiff alleges that on November 29, 1997, Conseco caused NALF to mail to its shareholders and file electronically with the SEC its November 1997 Proxy. [FN2] The proxy disclosed that NALF was continuing to experience serious difficulties, and was mailed with an amendment to the Company's Certificate of Incorporation that increased the number of authorized NALF shares from 50,000,000 to 100,000,000, allegedly to allow Conseco to convert its remaining debentures and increase its control to 86%.

FN2. This Court can take judicial notice of documents filed with the SEC on a motion to dismiss. Kramer v. Time Warner Inc., 937 F.2d 767, 774 (2d Cir.1991).

On March 23, 1998, NALF filed a Chapter 11 petition for bankruptcy. Plaintiff alleges that Conseco caused the filing of this petition, and that the filing was improperly intended to enable Conseco to acquire NALF without adequate consideration to its public shareholders.

Plaintiff alleges two claims. First, plaintiff asserts a claim against Conseco for violation of RICO on behalf of himself and a purported class of all other persons and their successors in interest who purchased NALF common stock on or after April 25, 1996, and who still own such stock. Second, plaintiff asserts a claim against Sands, for violation of Section 10(b) of the Exchange Act and Rule 10b-5 promulgated thereunder, on behalf of himself and a purported class consisting of purchasers of NALF common stock between April 25, 1996 and August 21, 1997. Both Conseco and Sands move pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. Rules 12(b)(6) and 9(b), alleging that the complaint fails to state a claim under RICO or Rule 10b-5.

DISCUSSION

I. Count I-Plaintiff's RICO Allegations

A. Mail and Wire Fraud

Conseco's challenges to the complaint's RICO allegations are essentially that they do not adequately allege a scheme to defraud, a pattern of racketeering activity, or *443 causation. In relevant part, RICO prohibits any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt.

18 U.S.C. § 1962(c). [FN3] A "pattern of racketeering activity" requires at least two acts of racketeering activity within the past ten years. 18 U.S.C. § 1961(5). Mail and wire fraud are included within the definition of "racketeering activity." 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1).

FN3. While plaintiff's RICO statement states that his RICO claim against Conseco is brought pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §§ 1962(b) and (c), his complaint mentions only § 1962(c). In this case, however, the relevant analysis for both sections is the same.

The elements of a mail or wire fraud violation are (1) a scheme to defraud, (2) money or property as the object of the scheme, and (3) the use of the mails or wires to further the scheme. United States v. Dinome, 86 F.3d 277, 283 (2d Cir.1996) (citing United States v. Miller, 997 F.2d 1010, 1017 (2d Cir.1993)). Allegations of mail and wire fraud must be pleaded with particularity under Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(b). McLaughlin v. Anderson, 962 F.2d 187, 191 (2d Cir.1992); A. Terzi Productions, Inc. v. Theatrical Protective Union, 2 F.Supp.2d 485, 499 (S.D.N.Y.1998). This means that the "complaint must adequately specify the statements it claims were false or misleading, give particulars as to the respect in which plaintiffs contend the statements were fraudulent, state when and where the statements were made, and identify those responsible for the statements." McLaughlin, 962 F.2d at 191 (citing Cosmas v. Hassett, 886 F.2d 8, 11 (2d Cir.1989)). "Plaintiffs asserting mail [or wire] fraud must also identify the purpose of the mailing within the defendant's fraudulent scheme." Id.

[1] While it is true that mail or wire communications that contain no false information may satisfy the transmission element of the offenses, the mail or wire communications must be "incident to an essential part of the scheme." Schmuck v. United States, 489 U.S. 705, 712, 715, 109 S.Ct. 1443, 103 L.Ed.2d 734 (1989). In other words, in cases in which the communications are not themselves misleading, "a detailed description of the underlying scheme and the connection therewith of the mail and/or wire communications, is sufficient to satisfy Rule 9(b)." In re Sumitomo Copper Litigation, 995 F.Supp. 451, 456 (S.D.N.Y.1998).

[2] In this case, plaintiff does not contend that the mail and wire communications that allegedly formed the RICO predicate acts contained false or misleading information. Rather, plaintiff claims that the mails and wires were used in furtherance of the scheme to defraud. Thus, the ability of plaintiff's mail and wire fraud allegations to withstand this motion to dismiss depends first on the adequacy of the plaintiff's pleading of the scheme to defraud.

Plaintiff cites United States v. Trapilo, 130 F.3d 547 (2d Cir.1997) in support of his argument that his complaint sufficiently alleges a scheme to defraud. In that case, our Court of Appeals found that smuggling came within the meaning of a "scheme to defraud," stating, "[t]he term 'scheme to defraud' is measured by a 'nontechnical standard. It is a reflection of moral uprightness, of fundamental honesty, fair play and right dealing in the general [and] business life of members of society.'" Trapilo, 130 F.3d at 550 n. 3 (citing United States v. Von Barta, 635 F.2d 999, 1005 n. 12 (2d Cir.1980)) (other citations omitted). As the A. Terzi Productions, Inc. court noted, however, Trapilo merely "underscor[ed] the accepted notion that a defendant, by his conduct alone, can intend to deceive another and engage in a scheme to defraud, even though the defendant's *444 statements themselves contain no misrepresentations." A. Terzi Productions, Inc., 2 F.Supp.2d at 501. Thus, while smuggling was an inherently dishonest and deceptive act, the conduct challenged in A. Terzi Productions, Inc.--coercing plaintiffs into entering a labor agreement through threatening and abusive conduct--was not dishonest or deceptive, and did not constitute a scheme to defraud. [FN4] Id. at 500.

FN4. The cases cited by plaintiff, in which courts found schemes to defraud where inherently deceptive acts were alleged, are not to the contrary. See, e.g., General Credit Corp. v. Goldfarb, No. 98 Civ. 3188(DLC), 1998 WL 851592, *2 (S.D.N.Y. Dec.9, 1998) (finding scheme to defraud where defendants wrote, then disavowed, multiple checks to the congregation with which they were affiliated in attempt to defraud check factoring corporation and Internal Revenue Service; defendants' actions included submission of false affidavits of forged endorsement to the bank); In re Sumitomo Copper Litigation, 995 F.Supp. 451, 456-57 (S.D.N.Y.1998) (finding scheme to defraud where defendants acted in concert to manipulate copper prices over period of seven years, restricting available supply of copper, which resulted in copper prices reaching an artificially high level).

[3] In fact, a scheme to defraud "requires 'fraudulent or deceptive means, such as material misrepresentation or concealment.'" A. Terzi Productions, Inc. v. Theatrical Protective Union, 2 F.Supp.2d 485, 499 (S.D.N.Y.1998) (quoting Center Cadillac, Inc. v. Bank Leumi Trust Co., 808 F.Supp. 213, 227 (S.D.N.Y.1992), aff'd, 99 F.3d 401 (2d Cir.1995)) (other citations omitted). Here, however, plaintiff's complaint contains no allegations that Conseco employed fraudulent or deceptive means. While plaintiff alleges that Conseco moved to acquire a controlling interest by arranging to acquire NALF shares at a discount and attempting to acquire the remaining interest without paying adequate consideration, no fraudulent or deceptive actions are alleged with respect to Conseco. In addition, while plaintiff claims that Conseco caused NALF to file for bankruptcy on the first day it could contractually do so, this allegation is also insufficient to support the existence of a scheme to defraud. [FN5] And while plaintiff contends that Conseco's actions were "coercive," coercion alone does not constitute a scheme to defraud. See, e.g., A. Terzi Productions, Inc., 2 F.Supp.2d at 500 (allegations of threats and abusive conduct do not constitute scheme to defraud) (citing Fasulo v. United States, 272 U.S. 620, 47 S.Ct. 200, 71 L.Ed. 443 (1926)).

FN5. While plaintiff states in his brief that Conseco's acquisition of NALF was undertaken without the approval of NALF's board of directors and public shareholders, and that Conseco's causing NALF to file for bankruptcy came without the approval of the non-Conseco members of NALF's board of directors, those allegations appear nowhere in plaintiff's complaint. See O'Brien v. National Property Analysts Partners, 719 F.Supp. 222, 229 (S.D.N.Y.1989) ("[I]t is axiomatic that the Complaint cannot be amended by the briefs in opposition to a motion to dismiss."). Further, although plaintiff suggests in his RICO statement that the required shareholder approval was not attained, he does so first only generally (RICO Statement, Resp. 2), and then qualifies his belief with the term "suspects." (RICO Statement, Resp. 4). Neither of these statements is sufficiently well-pleaded to support the existence of a scheme to defraud.

In essence, the complaint alleges, at most, that from time to time Conseco and NALF voluntarily entered into various contractual agreements. Under those agreements, NALF received large cash infusions from Conseco, and NALF ultimately granted Conseco the express rights to obtain ownership of 86% of NALF's shares. The terms of the agreements in question were disclosed to NALF's shareholders, and Conseco's conduct in acquiring and converting debentures, in increasing its ownership of NALF stock and expanding its presence on NALF's Board of Directors were all acts consistent with the parties' agreements. The agreements expressly delineated Conseco's right to initiate NALF's reorganization in bankruptcy and there are no sufficient allegations in the complaint *445 that Conseco's actions violated the parties' agreements. However aggressive or self-interested the bargains Conseco struck for itself might have been, the fact remains that there is "nothing deceptive about the exercise of an express contractual right." Samuels v. Old Kent Bank, No. 96 C 6667, 1997 WL 458434, *9 (N.D.Ill. Aug.1, 1997). Since plaintiff has failed to properly allege a scheme to defraud, his RICO allegations against defendant Conseco must be dismissed.

B. Pattern of Racketeering Activity

Even if plaintiff's mail and wire fraud allegations were sufficient, plaintiff has failed to properly allege a pattern of racketeering activity. In order to plead a pattern of racketeering activity, plaintiff must allege two or more predicate acts by defendant that are sufficiently related and amount to, or pose a threat of, continued criminal activity. H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 U.S. 229, 240, 109 S.Ct. 2893, 106 L.Ed.2d 195 (1989). Showing the threat of continued criminal activity requires the allegation of either an "open-ended" (i.e., past criminal conduct with a threat of future criminal conduct) or "closed-ended" (i.e., past criminal activity extending over a substantial period of time) pattern of racketeering activity. GICC

Capital Corp. v. Technology Fin. Group, Inc., 67 F.3d 463, 466 (2d Cir.1995).

With respect to an open-ended pattern of racketeering activity, our Circuit has noted: in cases in which the acts of the defendant or the enterprise were inherently unlawful, such as murder or obstruction of justice, and were in pursuit of inherently unlawful goals, such as narcotics trafficking or embezzlement, the courts generally have concluded that the requisite threat of continuity was adequately established by the nature of the activity, even though the period spanned by the racketeering acts was short. In contrast, in cases concerning alleged racketeering activity in furtherance of endeavors that are not inherently unlawful, such as frauds in the sale of property, the courts generally have found no threat of continuing criminal activity arising from conduct that extended over even longer periods.

United States v. Aulicino, 44 F.3d 1102, 1111 (2d Cir.1995). In this case, plaintiff challenges the manner in which Conseco acquired another company, an endeavor that is not inherently unlawful. The predicate acts that plaintiff alleges are the mailings of proxy statements and the making of phone calls that were not in themselves false or deceptive. As Conseco points out, once NALF's bankruptcy petition is confirmed, Conseco's alleged scheme to gain control of NALF at the expense of its public shareholders will end. As such, the allegations in the complaint carry with them no threat of continued or future criminal activity. While plaintiff suggests that the manner in which Conseco acquired NALF is the regular way that Conseco conducts its ongoing business in the sub-prime auto lending industry, plaintiff does not allege that Conseco's acquisition of other companies came as a result of any illegal, much less racketeering activity. As such, plaintiff's speculative allegations regarding Conseco's other acquisitions do not give rise to a threat of future criminal activity. Accordingly, plaintiff's complaint fails to allege an open-ended pattern of racketeering activity.

[4] Whether a closed-ended pattern of racketeering activity exists depends on analysis of a number of non-dispositive factors, including the length of time over which the alleged predicate acts took place, the number and variety of acts, the number of participants, the number of victims, and the presence of separate schemes. GICC Capital Corp., 67 F.3d at 467. Our Circuit has been sparing in finding closed-ended continuity. See id. (noting that since H.J. Inc., the Second Circuit had found closed-ended continuity only twice). Here, plaintiff alleges that Consecos racketeering conduct began May 2, *446 1996, with the mailing of a proxy statement to NALF shareholders, and continued until March 23, 1998, with the filing of the Chapter 11 petition. That period of almost twenty-three months, plaintiff claims, is sufficient to support a finding of closed-ended continuity. See Metromedia v. Fugazy, 983 F.2d 350, 369 (2d Cir.1992) (finding two year period sufficient to support closed-ended continuity, stating, "Periods of 19 or 20 months ... have been held sufficient to support a finding of continuity"). While, when taken in isolation, the time period of the alleged racketeering conduct may support a finding of closed-ended continuity, such a finding is not automatic in light of the other factors to be considered. See Feirstein v. Nanbar Realty Corp., 963 F.Supp. 254, 260 (S.D.N.Y.1997) (finding plaintiffs' allegations insufficient for closed-ended continuity although acts occurred over a three-year period).

Plaintiff's RICO claim alleges a scheme to defraud by a single defendant, Consecos, with the goal of seizing control of NALF at the expense of a single class of victims--NALF's public shareholders. While plaintiff's complaint alleges a number of predicate mail and wire fraud acts in furtherance of this scheme, these acts are in themselves innocuous and are not alleged to be false or misleading in any way. These acts, though allegedly undertaken over a period of 23 months, are insufficient to state a closed-ended pattern of racketeering activity. As the court in Pier Connection, Inc. v. Lakhani, 907 F.Supp. 72 (S.D.N.Y.1995) stated, in language equally applicable here, the Complaint demonstrates that Defendants engaged in one scheme whose single goal was to seize control of Pier Connection's business. That Defendants used several different tactics to achieve this goal does not turn Defendants' scheme into one with multiple goals and/or victims, and does not mandate a finding of continuity sufficient to support a RICO claim.

Id. at 78. Likewise, in this case, plaintiff alleges that Consecos was engaged in one scheme, with the single goal of seizing control of NALF as cheaply as possible. Despite plaintiff's claims that the predicate acts occurred over a period of twenty-three months, the fact that Consecos allegedly used mail and wire communications that in themselves contained no deceptive or misleading statements to further its single goal does not mandate a finding of closed-ended continuity. Plaintiff's RICO allegations are deficient as a consequence of their failure to state a pattern of racketeering activity. [FN6]

FN6. As a result of its dismissal of plaintiff's RICO claims, this Court need not address Consecos's other arguments.

An additional deficiency in plaintiff's RICO allegations is his failure adequately to allege that his injury was both caused in fact, and proximately caused, by the conduct alleged to constitute the predicate acts under RICO. Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 268, 112 S.Ct. 1311, 117 L.Ed.2d 532 (1992); Hecht v. Commerce Clearing House, Inc., 897 F.2d 21, 23 (2d Cir.1990). Hecht teaches that an injury is "proximately caused" by a RICO violation if the predicate acts "are a substantial factor in the sequence of responsible causation, and if the injury is reasonably foreseeable or anticipated as a natural consequence." Hecht, 897 F.2d at 23-24.

[5] Two types of potential injuries are alleged in the complaint. The first is a decline in the NALF share price as a result of defendants' conduct. The second is the anticipated future loss to all common shareholders (including plaintiff and Consecos) when, and if, a reorganization plan is formulated, approved by the creditors, and confirmed by the bankruptcy court. But this latter injury is simply too speculative to meet the causation requirements articulated in Holmes and Hecht and cannot, therefore, constitute RICO injury. See, *447 e.g., First Nationwide Bank v. Gelt Funding Corp., 27 F.3d 763, 767 (2d Cir.1994); Hecht, 897 F.2d at 24; Bankers Trust Co. v. Rhoades, 859 F.2d 1096, 1105-06 (2d Cir.1988).

[6] With respect to the first type of injury alleged, although the complaint asserts proximate causation in a conclusory fashion, our Court of Appeals requires that a plaintiff allege loss causation with enough particularity to permit a determination whether the factual basis for a claim, if proven, could support an inference of proximate cause. First Nationwide Bank, 27 F.3d at 770. Here, plaintiff's RICO claims contain no facts that, if proven, would establish a nexus between the loss in share price alleged and Consec's conduct. Even on plaintiff's version of events, NALF's share price dropped because of a fundamental deterioration in NALF's business and the reflection of that fact in its share price. "When factors other than the defendant's fraud are an intervening direct cause of plaintiff's injury, the same injury cannot be said to have occurred by reason of defendant's action." First Nationwide Bank, 27 F.3d at 769. See also Powers v. British Vita, P.L.C., 57 F.3d 176, 189 (2d Cir.1995). Thus, in view of plaintiff's failure to allege properly a scheme to defraud, a pattern of racketeering activity, or proximate causation in either his complaint or RICO statement, plaintiff's RICO claims are dismissed with prejudice, and his motion to amend his complaint is denied.

II. Count II--Plaintiff's Security Fraud Allegations

Plaintiff also asserts claims against Sands for the alleged violation of § 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. § 78j(b), and Rule 10b-5 promulgated thereunder by the SEC. Section 10(b) prohibits: "any person ... to use or employ, in connection with the purchase or sale of any security ... any manipulative or deceptive device or contrivance in contravention of [SEC rules]." 15 U.S.C. § 78j(b); Santa Fe Industries, Inc. v. Green, 430 U.S. 462, 471, 97 S.Ct. 1292, 51 L.Ed.2d 480 (1977). Rule 10b-5 provides:

It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, by the use of any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or of the mails or of any facility of any national securities exchange, (a) to employ any device, scheme, or artifice to defraud, (b) to make any untrue statement of a material fact necessary in order to make the statements made, in light of the circumstances under which they were made, not misleading, or (c) to engage in any act, practice or course of business which operates or would operate as a fraud or deceit upon any person, in connection with the purchase or sale of any security.

17 C.F.R. § 240.10b-5.

In 1995, Congress passed the Private Securities Litigation Reform Act (the "Reform Act"). In part, the Reform Act imposed a heightened pleading standard for § 10(b) actions that allege misrepresentations and omissions under Rule 10b-5. Thus, § 78u-4(b) of the Reform Act provides:

(b) Requirements for securities fraud actions

(1) Misleading statements and omissions

In any private action arising under this chapter in which the plaintiff alleges that the defendant--

(A) made an untrue state of a material fact; or

(B) omitted to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements made, in the light of the circumstances in which they were made, not misleading;

the complaint shall specify each statement alleged to have been misleading, the reason or reasons why the statement is misleading, and, if an allegation regarding the statement or omission is made on information and belief, the complaint *448 shall state with particularity all facts on which that belief is formed.

15 U.S.C. § 78u-4(b).

[7] Plaintiff contends that the terms of 15 U.S.C. § 78u-4(b) apply only to claims based on misrepresentations and omissions under Rule 10b-5(b) and not those, as here, based on market manipulation. As Sands points out, however, plaintiff's allegations of misconduct by Sands are largely based on misrepresentations and omissions. Specifically, plaintiff alleges that Sands employed the following activities to artificially inflate the price of NALF stock: (1) Sands published and disseminated to investors two Research Reviews that apparently contained a number of misrepresentations (Complaint, ¶ 21); (2) Sands used fictitious investor names to send false opinions on the value of NALF stock to real investors (Complaint, ¶ 20); (3) Sands' brokers made cold calls to unsuspecting investors to solicit sales of NALF stock at the highest price maintainable through Sands' market-making efforts (Complaint, ¶ 20); and (4) Sands failed to inform the public that Conseco, not NALF, obtained the benefit from the Conseco Debentures and that Conseco was positioning itself to acquire NALF (Complaint, ¶ 21(b)). Because the allegations are based on Sands' claimed misrepresentations and omissions, the heightened pleading standard of the 1995 Reform Act applies. See 15 U.S.C. § 78u-4(b).

[8] Here, plaintiff's complaint is based largely on "information and belief." Consequently, in order to survive a motion to dismiss, plaintiff must "state with particularity all facts on which that belief is formed." 15 U.S.C. § 78u-4(b). Plaintiff's complaint, however, fails to meet that standard, complaining generally of, for example, Sands' "issuance of materially false and misleading Research Reviews," and its "use of the internet to send fictitious messages to potential investors in NALF stock falsely touting NALF stock." (Complaint, ¶ 52.) Such allegations, bereft of any facts on which plaintiff's belief of Sands' misconduct is based, are insufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss.

If plaintiff's claim is considered one for market manipulation, as plaintiff contends it should be, plaintiff must allege (1) damage, (2) caused by reliance on defendants' misrepresentations or omissions of material fact, or on a scheme by the defendants to defraud, (3) scienter, (4) in connection with the purchase or sale of securities, (5) furthered by the defendants' use of the mails or any facility of a national securities exchange. Dietrich v. Bauer, No. 95 Civ. 7051(RWS), 1999 WL 126438, *19 (S.D.N.Y. Mar.10, 1999) (citing Cowen & Co. v. Merriam, 745 F.Supp. 925, 929 (S.D.N.Y.1990)). Plaintiff has failed to properly plead scienter.

[9][10] A plaintiff may plead scienter by establishing a motive to commit fraud and an opportunity to do so. Acito v. IMCERA Group, Inc., 47 F.3d 47, 52 (2d Cir.1995); Gruntal & Co., Inc. v. San Diego Bancorp, 901 F.Supp. 607, 613 (S.D.N.Y.1995). Where motive is not apparent, a plaintiff can plead scienter by identifying circumstances indicating conscious fraudulent behavior or recklessness. Shields v. Citytrust Bancorp, Inc., 25 F.3d 1124, 1129 (2d Cir.1994); Beck v. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., 820 F.2d 46, 50 (2d Cir.1987), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1005, 108 S.Ct. 698, 98 L.Ed.2d 650 (1988), overruled on other grounds, United States v. Indelicato, 865 F.2d 1370 (2d Cir.1989) (en banc). In such a case, the strength of the circumstantial allegations must be correspondingly greater. Beck, 820 F.2d at 50. In assessing a defendant's fraudulent intent, a court must assume that "the defendant is acting in his or her informed economic self-interest." Laro, Inc. v. Chase Manhattan Bank, 866 F.Supp. 132, 138 (S.D.N.Y.1994), aff'd, 60 F.3d 810 (2d Cir.1995) (quoting Shields v. Citytrust Bancorp, Inc., 25 F.3d 1124, 1130 (2d Cir.1994)). "Scienter can be alleged by conclusory allegations if they are supported by facts giving rise to a strong inference of *449 fraudulent intent." In re Blech Securities Litigation, 961 F.Supp. 569, 579 (S.D.N.Y.1997).

[11] Here, plaintiff has not adequately pleaded Sands' motive to commit the alleged securities fraud. While plaintiff does suggest that Sands artificially inflated the price of NALF stock in order to realize greater transaction fees, these allegations alone cannot show an improper motive. See, e.g., Acito v. IMCERA Group, Inc., 47 F.3d 47, 54

(2d Cir.1995); Fisher v. Offerman & Co., Inc., No. 95 Civ. 2566(JGK), 1996 WL 563141, *6 (S.D.N.Y. Oct.2, 1996) ("[A]n underwriter's alleged motive to earn its underwriting fees is not alone sufficient to sustain a strong inference of fraudulent intent. If it were, every underwriter, law firm, accountant, and investment advisor whose compensation or commission depended on the completion of an initial public offering would have a motive to commit fraud, which would make Rule 9(b) wholly meaningless."). In addition, other than stating that Sands and Conseco had a close relationship, plaintiff has not otherwise explained Sands' motive in suddenly seeking to depress NALF's stock price to benefit Conseco.

[12] Nor has plaintiff pleaded circumstances indicating conscious misbehavior or recklessness on Sands' part sufficient to withstand this motion to dismiss. Rather, plaintiff cites various optimistic statements and news releases by Sands and holds them against what actually happened to show that Sands had the fraudulent intent necessary to support a claim of securities fraud. These allegations are insufficient. See Shields, 25 F.3d at 1129 ("[M]isguided optimism is not a cause of action, and does not support an inference of fraud. We have rejected the legitimacy of 'alleging fraud by hindsight.' ") (quoting Denny v. Barber, 576 F.2d 465, 470 (2d Cir.1978)). Accordingly, as plaintiff has not properly pleaded scienter, his market manipulation claim is dismissed.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, plaintiff's complaint is dismissed. Because plaintiff has filed both a complaint and a RICO statement with respect to its RICO claim against Conseco, plaintiff's claim against Conseco is dismissed without leave to replead. With respect to plaintiff's claim against Sands, this Court is mindful of the fact that plaintiff has not yet had a chance to amend his complaint, and cannot at this point say that any amendment would be futile. Thus, dismissal of plaintiff's claim against Sands is without prejudice. This dismissal becomes "with prejudice" unless an amended complaint is filed within thirty days of the date of this Order.

SO ORDERED.

CITYTRUST BANCORP, INC., George F.
 Taylor and Irwin Engelman, Defendants-Appellees.

No. 802, Docket 93-7738.

Argued Jan. 14, 1994.

Decided June 2, 1994.

Shareholder of bank corporation brought securities fraud action against corporation and two of its senior executives, alleging that they concealed and misrepresented corporation's financial condition, in particular, facts concerning its loan portfolio and loan loss reserves. The United States District Court for the District of Connecticut, Eginton, J., dismissed complaint for failure to plead fraud with sufficient particularity. Shareholder appealed. The Court of Appeals, Jacobs, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) shareholder failed to plead fraud with sufficient particularity, and (2) dismissal was proper, even though court did not grant shareholder leave to amend her complaint.

Affirmed.

JACOBS, Circuit Judge:

As the aggrieved holder of somewhat less than one share of stock in Citytrust Bancorp, Inc. ("Citytrust"), Sarah B. Shields brought this class action claiming that Citytrust and two of its senior executives concealed and misrepresented Citytrust's financial condition--in particular, facts concerning its loan portfolio and loan loss reserves--in violation of Section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (the "1934 Act"), 15 U.S.C. § 78j(b); Rule 10b-5 promulgated thereunder, 17 C.F.R. § 240.10b-5; and New York law on negligent misrepresentation. The senior executives named in the complaint, George F. Taylor and Irwin Engelman, were also sued as "controlling persons" under Section 20 of the 1934 Act. 15 U.S.C. § 78t(a). Defendants signed a stipulation, so ordered by the district court, certifying the class and designating Shields as class representative. Thereafter, Citytrust and co-defendants Taylor and Engelman moved to dismiss the Complaint pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, or, alternatively, pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(b) for failure to plead fraud with particularity. On June 18, 1993, the United States District Court for the District of Connecticut (Eginton, J.) found that the Complaint failed to satisfy the pleading requirements of Rule 9(b) and dismissed. We affirm.

BACKGROUND

A. Shields's Allegations

We must accept as true all facts alleged in the Second Amended Complaint dismissed by the district court. See Luce v. Edelstein, 802 F.2d 49, 52 (2d Cir.1986). At all relevant times, Citytrust was a bank holding company organized under the laws of Connecticut. Citytrust's principal asset was Citytrust Bank, Connecticut's third largest commercial bank on the basis of total assets. Taylor was *1126 chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Citytrust and the Bank. Engelman was a director, president and chief operating officer of Citytrust and the Bank.

Between 1984 and 1988, Citytrust's reported assets rose from $1.5 billion to $2.6 billion, and its reported net income increased sixty percent. In July 1988, Citytrust announced that it expected to realize record earnings for the eleventh consecutive year, and voted a twenty cent quarterly dividend. Shields alleges that Taylor, at that time, falsely and unjustifiably stated that Citytrust's loan portfolio was "extremely healthy, as evidenced by net charge-offs of approximately 1/4 of 1 percent of loans over the past four years," a rate "well below the average for our industry." In October 1988, Citytrust reported a 10% increase in earnings and voted another twenty cent quarterly dividend. In January 1989, Citytrust reported that it had achieved its eleventh consecutive year of record net income as expected, which Taylor called "a solid performance," and had voted yet another twenty cent dividend for the quarter.

Shields alleged that Citytrust's financial health was deteriorating throughout this period largely because, in respect of a number of loans in its portfolio, Citytrust had accepted a right to share in equity appreciation in lieu of its usual collateral. As a result of such "shared appreciation loans," Citytrust was critically vulnerable to any drop in real estate values. Shields alleged that this risk was intentionally concealed by the defendants. In April 1989, Citytrust announced another increase in net income and Taylor stated that "prospects appear bright for further gains in earnings and returns on assets and equity. Our plan calls for 1989 to be our 12th consecutive year of record earnings."

Two months later, however, on June 15, 1989, Citytrust announced that, following an "intensive review" of its loan portfolios, it was necessary to take a $40 million charge against earnings in order to increase its loan loss reserves. Citytrust also stated that this charge would result in its reporting a loss in the second quarter of 1989, as well as for the entire 1989 fiscal year. Furthermore, Citytrust projected non-performing loans of up to $130 million for the second quarter of 1989 (up from $96 million in the first quarter) and noted that the amount could further increase in the second half of 1989.

The day after the June 15 announcement, Citytrust's stock dropped from $40- 7/8 per share to $34- 7/8, despite Taylor's declaration "that the second half of 1989 will be profitable for Citytrust because of a strong performance from the rest of our businesses and the continued underlying strength of the Company's earnings." Although Citytrust reported a net loss for the second quarter of 1989, Taylor allegedly continued his effort to mislead the investing public by stating: "While we are concerned with the extent of our loan problems, it is important to note that the underlying earnings of the bank remain strong." He also made the alleged misrepresentation that "[t]he addition to reserves is a prudent and conservative action in view of current negative real estate market conditions. We have assessed the underlying value of the bank's real estate related assets and provided for both the current exposure and potential for further decline in value."

The first of the two plaintiff sub-classes certified by the district court is composed of purchasers of Citytrust common stock in the period between March 31, 1989 and June 16, 1989 during which the events just described took place. The second plaintiff sub-class is composed of such purchasers in the period between June 17, 1989 and December 20, 1989, the date on which Citytrust announced further unnerving developments, including the elimination of its dividend for 1990. We recount the highlights of the second sub-class period, as alleged by Shields, in the following paragraphs.

Citytrust issued a news release on August 9, 1989, in which it claimed to be "moving aggressively" to overcome its problems, in part by making a "forceful drive to expand market share." Taylor again asserted that "the underlying earnings of the bank remain firm" and claimed that Citytrust was "committed to delivering solid earnings in the third and fourth quarters despite the pressure from our non-performing loans." On August 10, 1989, Citytrust filed a Form 10-Q that stated "management believes the current *1127 level of the allowance is adequate to provide for both the current loss exposure and the potential for a further decline in value." On October 18, 1989, Citytrust declared a quarterly dividend of twenty-eight cents per share, allegedly to create an illusion of renewed financial health.

Two months later, on December 20, 1989, Citytrust announced a significant addition to its loan loss reserves, reflecting an increase in non-performing loans, which would cause it to report a considerable loss for the fourth quarter. Citytrust also announced the elimination of its dividend for 1990. During the second sub-class period, the price of Citytrust stock declined from $33 on June 16, 1989 to $11 on December 20, 1989.

B. Procedural History

Shields filed her class action on June 16, 1989, the day after Citytrust's first announcement that it would take a charge against earnings in order to increase its loan loss reserves. Defendants filed their answer on July 11, 1989, pleading as defenses failure to state a claim and failure to plead fraud with the requisite particularity.

In the months that followed, Citytrust permitted Shields to review certain documents relating to her allegations and to interview one of its executives. Shields moved to amend her complaint on February 5, 1990, in the wake of Citytrust's December 20, 1989 announcement of additional loan loss reserves and a resulting substantial quarterly loss. That motion and other issues were the subject of a "Revised Stipulation and Pretrial Order No. 1," entered into by the parties on September 27, 1990, and so ordered by the district court on October 23, 1990. The stipulation and order provided that the case would proceed as a class action, with two subclasses, both represented by Shields; allowed Shields to serve and file an amended complaint; arranged for the organization of class counsel; and implemented certain housekeeping arrangements.

Shields filed the present Complaint on December 13, 1990, which included allegations relating to Citytrust's December 20 announcement and extended the class period accordingly. On February 15, 1991, Defendants moved to dismiss the Complaint and ten days later filed a motion to stay discovery pending a decision on the motion to dismiss. The district court granted the motion to stay discovery on June 21, 1991.

In August 1991, federal banking regulators declared Citytrust Bank insolvent and appointed the Federal Deposit Insurance Company as receiver. Citytrust succeeded in converting the bankruptcy into a Chapter 11 proceeding in September 1991, and an amended plan of reorganization was confirmed by the bankruptcy court on March 27, 1992. The amended plan had the effect of dissolving the automatic stay imposed by 11 U.S.C. § 362 with respect to the present lawsuit.

On June 18, 1993, the district court ruled that Shields's allegations "do not satisfy the specificity requirements of Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(b) and, thus, fail to state a 10b-5 securities fraud claim under Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6)," and granted Defendants' motion to dismiss. The district court also dismissed Shields's claims against Taylor and Engelman for secondary liability under Section 20 of the 1934 Act, and declined to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the asserted state law claim for negligent misrepresentation. Shields filed a timely notice of appeal.

DISCUSSION

[1][2] In reviewing a district court's grant of a motion to dismiss, we accept the facts alleged in the Complaint as true. Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S.Ct. 1683, 1686, 40 L.Ed.2d 90 (1974); IUE AFL-CIO Pension Fund v. Herrmann, 9 F.3d 1049, 1052 (2d Cir.1993). Generally, we will uphold a district court's dismissal of a claim only if it appears that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts upon which relief may be granted. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S.Ct. 99, 101-02, 2 L.Ed.2d 80 (1957). When fraud is asserted, however, we must also view the complaint in light of Rule 9(b), which requires that "the circumstances constituting fraud ... be stated with particularity." Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(b). Securities fraud allegations under § 10(b) and Rule 10b-5 are subject to the pleading requirements of Rule 9(b), and a *1128 complaint making such allegations must "(1) specify the statements that the plaintiff contends were fraudulent, (2) identify the speaker, (3) state where and when the statements were made, and (4) explain why the statements were fraudulent." Mills v. Polar Molecular Corp., 12 F.3d 1170, 1175 (2d Cir.1993) (citing Cosmas v. Hassett, 886 F.2d 8, 11 (2d Cir.1989)).

[3] Rule 9(b) also provides that "[m]alice, intent, knowledge, and other condition of mind of a person may be averred generally." However, since Rule 9(b) is intended "to provide a defendant with fair notice of a plaintiff's claim, to safeguard a defendant's reputation from improvident charges of wrongdoing, and to protect a defendant against the institution of a strike suit," O'Brien v. National Property Analysts Partners, 936 F.2d 674, 676 (2d Cir.1991) (internal quotes omitted); see also Ross v. Bolton, 904 F.2d 819, 823 (2d Cir.1990); DiVittorio v. Equidyne Extractive Industries, Inc., 822 F.2d 1242, 1247 (2d Cir.1987), the relaxation of Rule 9(b)'s specificity requirement for scienter " 'must not be mistaken for license to base claims of fraud on speculation and conclusory allegations.' " O'Brien, 936 F.2d at 676 (quoting Wexner v. First Manhattan Co., 902 F.2d 169, 172 (2d Cir.1990)). Therefore, to serve the purposes of Rule 9(b), we require plaintiffs to allege facts that give rise to a strong inference of fraudulent intent. See Mills, 12 F.3d at 1176; O'Brien, 936 F.2d at 676; Ouaknine v. MacFarlane, 897 F.2d 75, 79 (2d Cir.1990).

The requisite "strong inference" of fraud may be established either (a) by alleging facts to show that defendants had both motive and opportunity to commit fraud, or (b) by alleging facts that constitute strong circumstantial evidence of conscious misbehavior or recklessness. See In re Time Warner Inc. Securities Litigation, 9 F.3d 259, 268-69 (2d Cir.1993), cert. denied, --- U.S. ---, 114 S.Ct. 1397, 128 L.Ed.2d 70 (1994); Beck v. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., 820 F.2d 46, 50 (2d Cir.1987), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1005, 108 S.Ct. 698, 98 L.Ed.2d 650 (1988), overruled on other grounds by United States v. Indelicato, 865 F.2d 1370 (2d Cir.1989) (en banc). We agree with the district court that Shields has failed to plead facts sufficient to raise a strong inference of fraud, and that the Complaint therefore must be dismissed for failure to meet the specificity requirements of Rule 9(b).

A. Waiver

[4] Shields argues that compliance with the requirements of Rule 9(b) is not in issue because the defendants waived their right to invoke that rule by answering Shields's original complaint without moving for dismissal on that ground. We see no such waiver. "It is well established that an amended complaint ordinarily supersedes the original, and renders it of no legal effect." International Controls Corp. v. Vesco, 556 F.2d 665, 668 (2d Cir.1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1014, 98 S.Ct. 730, 54 L.Ed.2d 758 (1978); see also O & G Carriers, Inc. v. Smith, 799 F.Supp. 1528, 1534 (S.D.N.Y.1992). Shields relies on Gilmore v. Shearson/American Express, Inc., 811 F.2d 108, 112 (2d Cir.1987), for the proposition that an amended complaint "does not automatically revive all of the defenses and objections that a defendant has waived in response to the original complaint." However, the defenses and objections that are irrevocably waived by answering an original complaint are those that "involve[] the core issue of a party's willingness to submit a dispute to judicial resolution," such as objections to "lack of personal jurisdiction, improper venue, insufficiency of process and insufficiency of service." Id. Defendants' invocation of Rule 9(b), however, is an effort to achieve judicial resolution of the controversy, not to foreclose it. So Gilmore does not argue for waiver, particularly since the answer to the original complaint pleaded "failure to plead fraud with particularity" as a defense.

B. Scienter

[5] Shields contends that defendants acted with scienter in (1) expressing confidence in the adequacy of its reserve for bad loans, (2) failing to disclose the hazards of its shared appreciation loans, and (3) issuing optimistic statements concerning future prospects. In virtually each instance, Shields cites press releases and publicly filed corporate *1129 documents to establish the statements and nondisclosures that she contends are false or reckless. She has thereby satisfied the Rule 9(b) pleading requirements concerning the "time, place, speaker, and sometimes even the content of the alleged misrepresentation." See Ouaknine, 897 F.2d at 79. What is lacking from all of Shields's allegations are particularized facts to support the inference that the defendants acted recklessly or with fraudulent intent.

Shields's pleading technique is to couple a factual statement with a conclusory allegation of fraudulent intent. For example, she claims that defendants "knew or were reckless in not knowing" that the loan loss reserve was inadequate; that defendants "intentionally concealed" the vulnerability to real estate losses inherent in shared appreciation loans; that defendants "knew but concealed" the poor condition of Citytrust's loan portfolio; and that defendants "knew or should have known" that Citytrust's loan problems were growing worse and that the loan loss reserve would have to be increased a second time. However, she does not allege facts that would give rise to a strong inference that defendants knew or recklessly disregarded the fact that the loan loss reserve was inadequate, or that continuing erosion of the real estate market would render the loan portfolio precarious, or that the outlook was poor. Shields's frequent conclusory allegations--that Defendants "knew but concealed" some things, or "knew or were reckless in not knowing" other things--do not satisfy the requirements of Rule 9(b). We have held in the context of securities fraud claims that such allegations are "so broad and conclusory as to be meaningless." Decker v. Massey-Ferguson, Ltd., 681 F.2d 111, 119-20 (2d Cir.1982).

1. Conscious Misconduct or Recklessness.

Nowhere in her Complaint does Shields adduce the kind of circumstantial evidence that would indicate conscious fraudulent behavior or recklessness. Shields records statements by defendants predicting a prosperous future and holds them up against the backdrop of what actually transpired. In April 1989, for example, Taylor announced that Citytrust was expecting that year to be its twelfth consecutive year of record earnings. Then, two months later, Citytrust announced that it would instead report a loss for 1989 as a result of an increase in its loan loss reserve. Similarly, Shields claims that Citytrust filed a document in August 1989 stating that it believed its loan loss reserve was adequate. Yet the following October it turned out that the reserve was inadequate and that Citytrust would make a significant addition to it. This technique is sufficient to allege that the defendants were wrong; but misguided optimism is not a cause of action, and does not support an inference of fraud. We have rejected the legitimacy of "alleging fraud by hindsight." Denny v. Barber, 576 F.2d 465, 470 (2d Cir.1978).

The facts alleged in the Second Amended Complaint show a dimming of the company's prospects as subsequent reviews were conducted of the company's loan portfolio, and resulting cascades of bad news and dropping stock prices. Shields does not allege that the company's disclosures were incompatible with what the most current reserve reports showed at the time the disclosures were made. The closest she comes is to allege that "[d]efendants knew or were reckless in not knowing ... that Citytrust's reserves for loan losses were completely inadequate in light of the risks which the loan portfolio entailed, and that such reserves would have to be substantially increased" (Second Amended Complaint at ¶ 27); and that "[d]efendant Taylor ... knew or should have known that Citytrust's loan problems had worsened materially and were worsening and that it was highly likely, if not certain, that Citytrust would soon again greatly increase its loan loss reserves" (Second Amended Complaint at ¶ 34). These allegations do not say, however, that the company's disclosures were inconsistent with current data. The pleading strongly suggests that the defendants should have been more alert and more skeptical, but nothing alleged indicates that management was promoting a fraud. People in charge of an enterprise are not required to take a gloomy, fearful or defeatist view of the future; subject to what current data indicates, they can be expected to be confident *1130 about their stewardship and the prospects of the business that they manage. The district court did not err in concluding that the allegations of the Second Amended Complaint are insufficient to support an inference of fraud.

2. Motive and Opportunity.

Scienter can also be pleaded by alleging facts that demonstrate both motive and opportunity to commit fraud. Motive would entail concrete benefits that could be realized by one or more of the false statements and wrongful nondisclosures alleged. Opportunity would entail the means and likely prospect of achieving concrete benefits by the means alleged. Shields argues that the following allegation supports the inference that Taylor and Engelman had the motive and opportunity to commit fraud:

The purpose and effect of said scheme was (i) to inflate the price of the common stock of the Company and to conceal the adverse facts concerning the Company's business, liabilities, revenues, earnings, assets, forecasts and future prospects; and (ii) to maintain artificially high market prices for the common stock of Citytrust and to induce plaintiff and the other members of the Class to purchase Citytrust common stock ... at artificially inflated prices so that individual defendants could protect their executive positions and the compensation and prestige they enjoy thereby.

[6] To allege a motive sufficient to support the inference that optimistic but erroneous statements were fraudulently made, a plaintiff must do more than merely charge that executives aim to prolong the benefits of the positions they hold. See Ferber v. Travelers Corp., 785 F.Supp. 1101, 1107 (D.Conn.1991) (Nevas, J.) ("Incentive compensation can hardly be the basis on which an allegation of fraud is predicated. On a practical level, were the opposite true, the executives of virtually every corporation in the United States could be subject to fraud allegations."). In looking for a sufficient allegation of motive, we assume that the defendant is acting in his or her informed economic self-interest. See Atlantic Gypsum Co. v. Lloyds International Corp., 753 F.Supp. 505, 514 (S.D.N.Y.1990) (Mukasey, J.) ("Plaintiffs' view of the facts defies economic reason, and therefore does not yield a reasonable inference of fraudulent intent."). It is hard to see what benefits accrue from a short respite from an inevitable day of reckoning. There is no claim here that false statements were made in an effort to sell off shares held by management, or to delay a criminal prosecution. For related reasons, the Complaint fails to allege a sufficient opportunity to derive a benefit from the alleged misstatements and nondisclosures: the ordinary course of bank business would lead to the review of the loan portfolios, as it did. If motive could be pleaded by alleging the defendant's desire for continued employment, and opportunity by alleging the defendant's authority to speak for the company, the required showing of motive and opportunity would be no realistic check on aspersions of fraud, and mere misguided optimism would become actionable under the securities laws. While some fraud may go unpunished as a result of Rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading standard, we recently acknowledged that we cannot eliminate all opportunities for "unremedied fraud" without creating opportunities for "undeserved settlements." See In re Time Warner, 9 F.3d at 263-64.

Shields relies on Cosmas v. Hassett, 886 F.2d 8, 13 (2d Cir.1989), to demonstrate that she has alleged a motive sufficient to raise a strong inference of fraud. However, Shields misreads that decision. In Cosmas, plaintiff alleged that Inflight Services' chief executive officer touted sales to the People's Republic of China as an important new source of revenue and predicted increasing sales and per share earnings for the coming year. However, prior to these announcements, the People's Republic of China had imposed import restrictions that made such predicted sales improbable. Id. at 10. As it happened, the sales did not occur. The holding of Cosmas is that these allegations support an inference of fraud by pleading adequate circumstantial evidence to indicate conscious misconduct by the defendants, i.e., that defendants knew of the import restrictions at the time they made the allegedly fraudulent statements. Id. at 13. We went on, however, briefly to consider the plaintiff's allegations of motive and opportunity, *1131 a distinct and alternative method of pleading scienter under Rule 9(b). Shields directs us to the statement in Cosmas that a motive was established there by allegations "that the defendants owned shares of Inflight ... and that the allegedly fraudulent statements artificially inflated or maintained the prices of Inflight securities." Cosmas relies on the following language and analysis of Goldman v. Belden, 754 F.2d 1059, 1070 (2d Cir.1985): "the ... implication of the Complaint is that the alleged failure to qualify the bullish statements was intended to permit individual defendants to profit from an inflated market price before the truth became known." Although the Cosmas opinion does not recite specific allegations of insider stock sales, the Goldman defendants sold tens of thousands of shares during the period that the allegedly defrauded customers were purchasing them. Id. at 1063. Absent some comparable allegation to explain how a defendant benefits from an inflated stock price, stock ownership does not provide sufficient motive to sustain the pleading burden under Rule 9(b). Here, Shields does not allege that defendants owned stock, but rather that defendants made fraudulent statements intending to inflate the stock price so that they "could protect their executive positions and the compensation and prestige they enjoy thereby." Following Goldman, we require of Shields more specific factual allegations before we will infer from defendants' positions as executives that incorrect predictions were made with fraudulent intent.

C. Additional issues.

Shields claims that the district court committed legal error by relying upon Steiner v. Shawmut National Corp., 766 F.Supp. 1236 (D.Conn.1991), Salit v. Centerbank, 767 F.Supp. 429 (D.Conn.1990), and Haft v. Eastland Fin. Corp., 755 F.Supp. 1123 (D.R.I.1991). She contends that these cases were overruled by the Supreme Court's decision in Virginia Bankshares, Inc. v. Sandberg, 501 U.S. 1083, 111 S.Ct. 2749, 115 L.Ed.2d 929 (1991). The district court made no error in applying these cases. Virginia Bankshares held that a statement of reasons, opinion or belief can be a material fact if the person who makes the statement is reasonably presumed to have expertise, to have access to internal corporate information, and to owe an obligation to exercise judgment in the interest of the stockholders. A statement of reasons, opinion or belief by such a person when recommending a course of action to stockholders can be actionable under the securities laws if the speaker knows the statement to be false. Id. at ---, 111 S.Ct. at 2757-60. The defect in the pleading here is not that it alleges fraudulent misrepresentation of mere opinion or belief, but that it fails adequately to allege that the expression of the opinions and beliefs was fraudulent. Virginia Bankshares does not address the pleading requirements of Rule 9(b), and does not alter them. The district court in this case properly found that Shields's pleading failed to satisfy those requirements.

Shields also directs our attention to a recent case from the Ninth Circuit, In re Wells Fargo Securities Litigation, 12 F.3d 922 (9th Cir.1993), claiming that that case takes a less demanding view of the pleading requirements in securities fraud cases, and urging us to adopt the Ninth Circuit's approach. We decline the invitation, noting that Wells Fargo did not discuss the pleading requirements of Rule 9(b) (although the dissent by Judge Trott did). Moreover, there is some tension between Wells Fargo and another Ninth Circuit case, In re Glenfed, Inc. Securities Litigation, 11 F.3d 843 (9th Cir.1993), which the Ninth Circuit has recently undertaken to reconsider in banc. The issue in that case was whether Glenfed misrepresented its financial condition by concealing deficiencies in how it monitored the quality and value of its assets, understating reserves for loan losses, and failing to disclose that its plan to divest subsidiaries was not feasible in the prevailing market for such transactions. Id. at 846-47. Glenfed relies on several cases from this Circuit in concluding that the real question to consider in determining whether a plaintiff has met the scienter pleading requirement of Rule 9(b) "must be whether the facts in the amended complaint would give rise to an inference that the Defendants either did not believe the statements or knew that the statements were false." Id. at 849. In our view, the opinion *1132 in Glenfed and the dissent by Judge Trott in Wells Fargo are more consonant with case law in this Circuit. See Luce v. Edelstein, 802 F.2d 49, 57 (2d Cir.1986) (when amending their complaint to remedy deficiencies under Rule 9(b), plaintiffs "must allege particular facts demonstrating the knowledge of defendants at the time that such statements were false.").

[7] Shields further argues that, even if we decide that she has not met the requirements of Rule 9(b), we nevertheless must find that the district court abused its discretion in dismissing her claim without granting her leave to amend her complaint. We discern no abuse of discretion. Shields had already substantively amended her complaint once before. She did not ask the district court for leave to amend it further. Although federal courts are inclined to grant leave to amend following a dismissal order, we do not deem it an abuse of the district court's discretion to order a case closed when leave to amend has not been sought. See Carl Sandburg Village Condominium Ass'n v. First Condominium Development Co., 758 F.2d 203, 206 n. 1 (7th Cir.1985); cf. Luce v. Edelstein, 802 F.2d 49, 56-57 (2d Cir.1986) (where plaintiff specifically sought leave to amend, dismissal without granting leave to amend was abuse of discretion). It is not clear that the failure of pleading could be remedied by further amendment, nor has Shields suggested how that could be done.

Finally, because we find that the primary violation asserted by Shields is not adequately pleaded and therefore properly dismissed by the district court, we also find no error in the district court's dismissal of the claims of secondary liability under § 20 of the 1934 Act against Taylor and Engelman, or in the district court's refusal to exercise jurisdiction over Shields's state law claim of negligent misrepresentation, in the absence of any remaining federal claim.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, we affirm the district court's order dismissing Shields's claims under § 10(b) and Rule 10b-5 for failure to plead fraud with the particularity required by Rule 9(b). We also affirm the district court's dismissal of the claims of secondary liability under § 20, and of the claim of negligent misrepresentation under state law.

Foreign investor brought action seeking damages relating to investment in foreign business, alleging fraud and misrepresentation claims. The Supreme Court, New York County, Karla Moskowitz, J., granted defendants' motion for summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court, Appellate Division, held that: (1) mere puffery did not support fraud claim, and (2) no confidential relationship existed between investor and law firm defendants.

Affirmed.

416 Order, Supreme Court, New York County (Karla Moskowitz, J.), entered May 20, 2002, which, insofar as appealed from, granted defendants' motion for summary judgment dismissing the causes of action for fraud and negligent misrepresentation, unanimously affirmed, without costs.

[1] In this action by a foreign investor seeking damages relating to his investment in a foreign business, the motion court correctly found that the alleged misrepresentations did not support a fraud claim because they consisted of mere puffery, opinions of value or future expectations (see Longo v. Butler Equities II, L.P., 278 A.D.2d 97, 718 N.Y.S.2d 30; Sheth v. New York Life Ins. Co., 273 A.D.2d 72, 74, 709 N.Y.S.2d 74), rather than false statements of value (compare *561 P.T. Bank Central Asia v. ABN AMRO Bank, N.V., 301 A.D.2d 373, 754 N.Y.S.2d 245, 251). Plaintiff-appellant's attempt to set forth a new theory in opposition to summary judgment was unavailing, since the remark relied upon was taken out of context and merely stated unremarkably that shares of a closely held entity, especially one incorporated in a foreign country, are "worthless," in the sense of lacking any realistic market, unless they become publicly traded.

[2] The negligent misrepresentation cause of action was not viable in the absence of a confidential relationship imposing upon defendants a duty to speak (see Kimmell v. Schaefer, 89 N.Y.2d 257, 263-265, 652 N.Y.S.2d 715, 675 N.E.2d 450; Ravenna v. Christie's, Inc., 289 A.D.2d 15, 734 N.Y.S.2d 21). No such relationship arose from appellant's single meeting with the law firm defendants. We reject appellant's contention that these defendants are liable for conduct, statements or omissions by a codefendant as a result of their being co-venturers, since appellant failed to raise an issue of fact as to the existence of an agreement, express or implied, to share losses, and, thus, as to the existence of a joint venture (see Chanler v. Roberts, 200 A.D.2d 489, 606 N.Y.S.2d 649, lv. denied 84 N.Y.2d 903, 621 N.Y.S.2d 506, 645 N.E.2d 1204).

We have considered appellant's other contentions and find them unavailing.

No. 03 CIV.364 VM.

Jan. 14, 2004.

Background: Equipment supplier for power plant construction project sued project's engineering, procurement, and construction services (EPC) contractor and its sureties, seeking reimbursement of liquidated damages paid to project's owners. Contractor asserted counterclaims for, inter alia, negligent misrepresentation, and also filed third-party complaint against owners, project's original EPC contractor, and subcontractors. After supplier moved for partial summary judgment, contractor sought leave to file amended answer and counterclaim and to amend third-party complaint, and third-party defendants moved to dismiss.

Holdings: The District Court, Marrero, J., held that: (1) contractor was not justified in relying on supplier's alleged assurances about operational readiness of its combustion turbines, precluding supplier's liability for alleged fraudulent concealment or negligent misrepresentation; (2) contractor's third-party claims did not satisfy rule governing third-party practice, necessitating dismissal of third-party complaint; and (3) leave to amend third-party complaint was not warranted.

Ordered accordingly.

DECISION AND ORDER

MARRERO, District Judge.

Defendant and third-party plaintiff Dick Corporation ("Dick") moves this Court for leave to file a second amended answer and counterclaim for the purpose of, among other things, adding updated counterclaims of negligent misrepresentation and fraudulent concealment. Plaintiff Siemens Westinghouse Power Corporation ("SWPC") opposes the motion on the ground that the proposed amended filing would be futile with respect to those counterclaims. The Court agrees that those claims would not survive a motion to dismiss because they fail to sufficiently allege justifiable reliance upon the alleged misrepresentations and omissions. The motion is therefore denied with respect to those proposed amendments, and, in all other respects, granted.

The Court also addresses motions to dismiss Dick's third-party complaint. Because the third-party complaint is not proper under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 14, it is dismissed. Dick seeks to amend its third-party complaint, as well. However, the proposed new filing does not remedy the Rule 14 defect and therefore the motion to amend is denied.

I. BACKGROUND

SWPC and Dick formed a Consortium for the purpose of constructing a power plant in Londonderry, New Hampshire on behalf of global power company AES Corporation ("AES"). Two AES subsidiaries, AES Londonderry, LLC, and Sycamore Ridge Co., LLC (collectively, the "Owners"), are signatories to the relevant contracts parties to this action. Because of delays in the project, SWPC has paid extensive liquidated damages to the Owners. SWPC filed a complaint seeking reimbursement of those payments from Dick, and from Dick's sureties. SWPC moved the Court for partial summary judgment, and the Court granted, in part, SWPC's motion. See Siemens Westinghouse Power Corp. v. Dick Corp., 293 F.Supp.2d 336, 2003 WL 22383284 (S.D.N.Y. Oct.14, 2003). The Court determined that, under the Consortium Agreement, Dick was responsible for paying liquidated damages to the Owners in the first instance and that the parties were to later determine, by applying certain formulas in the Consortium Agreement, SWPC's share of those damages. See id. at 340. Accordingly, the Court determined that, for now, Dick owed SWPC about $15 million. Id. at 343-44.

In opposing that summary judgment motion, Dick asserted that the Consortium Agreement was the product of negligent misrepresentation. The Court found that defense, as stated in the first amended answer and counterclaim, to lack the particularity required under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b). See id. at 343. While the summary judgment motion was in briefing, Dick filed a motion for leave to file a second amended answer and counterclaim. The proposed new filing contained, among other changes, more specific allegations of negligent misrepresentation and a related counterclaim for fraudulent concealment. Specifically, Dick alleges that SWPC, via misrepresentations and omissions, disguised the fact that a certain combustion turbine SWPC supplied to the project was still experimental and therefore not ready for commercial operation. Dick maintains that these counterclaims serve as valid defenses to SWPC's contract remedies at issue in the summary judgment motion.

The Court did not address the updated allegations because it had yet to determine *245 whether Dick was entitled to leave to amend, and because SWPC's motion related to Dick's first amended answer and counterclaim. The Court stayed entry of its judgment for the purpose of determining whether Dick was entitled to leave to amend, and if so, whether those counterclaims would suffice as defenses to defeat SWPC's motion for partial summary judgment. See id. This Decision and Order addresses the issue of whether Dick is entitled to leave to amend.

Dick's second amended counterclaims for negligent misrepresentation and fraudulent concealment describe the following facts, which the Court will assume are true for purposes of this motion. At the inception of the power plant project in December 1999, Stone & Webster, Inc. ("Stone & Webster") agreed with the Owners to supply engineering, procurement, and construction services (the "EPC contract") to the project. SWPC agreed to provide around $164 million in equipment, including two combustion turbines. When Stone & Webster went bankrupt shortly thereafter, the remaining parties scrambled to find a new EPC contractor.

The Owners hoped to get SWPC to agree to be the EPC contractor, but SWPC refused. The Owners and SWPC then approached Dick in May 2000 with the prospect of joining the project. Dick "diligently attempted to investigate the Project ..., but the time period afforded to Dick to investigate the prior design and construction efforts on the Project, as well as its overall viability, was extremely short." Proposed Second Amended Counterclaim ¶ 25. The other project participants, including SWPC, knew that time was short and that Dick would rely on their representations in deciding whether to join the project. By September 2000, Dick and SWPC agreed to complete the project as a Consortium. The Consortium Agreement incorporated SWPC's previous commitment to supply the equipment.

Dick now asserts it never would have joined the project if it had known the truth about its viability. Dick alleges that SWPC, among others, made several material misrepresentations and omissions in the period between May and September 2000, when Dick was deciding whether to participate.

The Consortium Agreement provided that SWPC would have a total of seventy-five (75) days--called "pool days"--to perform "corrective work" on certain equipment it supplied, before being responsible for any delay attributable to defects in the equipment. Dick therefore anticipated that SWPC would require around that many days in corrective work. It turns out that SWPC spent over two hundred (200) days doing corrective work, causing a massive delay in the project overall. Dick attributes the unanticipated delay to the fact that SWPC's combustion turbine was still experimental and, therefore, not commercially viable. Dick states that SWPC knew or should have known this fact, but never alerted Dick before Dick signed the Consortium Agreement.

Dick directs the Court's attention to a March 2000 bond offering prospectus for a company formed to build and operate a power plant in Pennsylvania, and for which SWPC supplied two of the exact model of combustion turbine at issue here. Under the heading "Summary of Risk Factors," that prospectus states: "The success of our project and future operations may be impaired because ... the combustion turbine to be used in our facility has no significant operating experience, and we may incur problems relating to start-up, commissioning and performance." Second Affidavit of Keith A. Moatz, dated Dec. 4, 2004, Ex. 14, at 19. The prospectus also states that the turbines in question were to *246 become only the third and fourth ones of that make and model in operation. Id. at 20. SWPC's failure to inform Dick of the true nature of its combustion turbines is the essence of Dick's counterclaims for negligent misrepresentation and fraudulent concealment.

SWPC opposes the motion for leave to amend only with respect to the proposed changes regarding negligent misrepresentation and fraudulent concealment, and only upon the ground that the changes would be futile. The issue here is therefore narrow: whether Dick's proposed second amended answer and counterclaim states claims for relief for either negligent misrepresentation or fraudulent concealment.

II. DISCUSSION

A. LEAVE TO AMEND

[1][2] Although leave to amend "shall be freely given," Fed.R.Civ.P. 15(a), and the Court must generally have good reason to deny the motion, "[o]ne good reason to deny leave to amend is when such leave would be futile." Acito v. IMCERA Group, Inc., 47 F.3d 47, 55 (2d Cir.1995). "Determinations of futility are made under the same standards that govern Rule 12(b)(6) motions to dismiss." Nettis v. Levitt, 241 F.3d 186, 194 n. 4 (2d Cir.2001).

[3] In reviewing a motion to dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), the Court must accept as true the factual allegations of the non-moving party (here, counter-claimant and defendant Dick) and must draw all reasonable inferences in favor of that party. Bernheim v. Litt, 79 F.3d 318, 321 (2d Cir.1996). The Court may not grant the motion "unless it appears beyond doubt" that the counter-claimant "can prove no set of facts" which would entitle it to relief. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S.Ct. 99, 2 L.Ed.2d 80 (1957). Allegations of "fraud or mistake" will be dismissed unless they are stated "with particularity." Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(b). The particularity requirement of Rule 9(b) also applies to claims of negligent misrepresentation. Marcus v. Frome, 275 F.Supp.2d 496, 503 (S.D.N.Y.2003).

SWPC puts forth several reasons why the proposed counterclaims would be futile, including that Dick has failed to meet the particularity requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b), and failed to allege causes of action sufficiently distinct from its breach of contract counterclaim. Without addressing all of those arguments, the Court agrees with SWPC on a point which is dispositive of this motion: Dick's proposed amended counterclaims do not allege justifiable reliance and would therefore not survive a motion to dismiss. Accordingly, to the extent Dick seeks to add these claims in an amended pleading, the motion is denied.

[4][5] To recover under either a theory of fraud or negligent misrepresentation, the plaintiff (or, in this case, the counter-claimant) must allege facts demonstrating reliance on the alleged fraud or misrepresentation, and that the reliance was justified under the circumstances. See Rotanelli v. Madden, 172 A.D.2d 815, 569 N.Y.S.2d 187, 188 (App. Div.2d Dep't 1991); Cudemo v. Al & Lou Constr. Co., Inc., 54 A.D.2d 995, 387 N.Y.S.2d 929, 930 (App. Div.2d Dep't 1976). Dick alleges it justifiably relied on SWPC's assurances that the combustion turbines did not have any major problems, and upon SWPC's implicit assurances that they could be successfully installed without delays beyond the seventy-five pool days provided in the *247 Consortium Agreement. [FN1] The Court disagrees.

FN1. Although Dick's briefing suggests that SWPC made certain affirmative representations regarding the viability of the combustion turbines, the proposed second amended complaint does not identify any particular alleged misrepresentation. Instead, it merely makes the broad assertion that SWPC "knowingly concealed/failed to disclose" the true state of affairs. Proposed Second Amended Counterclaim ¶ 131.

[6] Where there is a "meaningful" conflict between a written contract and prior oral representations, a party will not be deemed to have justifiably relied on the prior oral representations. Bango v. Naughton, 184 A.D.2d 961, 584 N.Y.S.2d 942, 944 (2d Dep't 1992) ("[T]he conflict between the provisions of the written contract and the oral representations negates the claim of reliance upon the latter."). In this case, any reliance upon SWPC's explicit or implicit assurances was unjustified because the Consortium Agreement expressly contemplates the eventuality that SWPC would incur delays beyond the allotted pool days. Specifically, the Consortium Agreement provides a formula for SWPC's liability, in the event SWPC exceeded its pool days to perform corrective work. See Affidavit of Howard F. Jenkins, dated July 17, 2003, Ex. B, at 23-28. In fact, the Consortium Agreement specifically states that "Corrective Work" includes work performed "in connection with ... implementation of a design change in the [combustion turbine] ... which has been identified by [SWPC] as a problem with similar equipment which must be corrected or implemented prior to the operation of the [combustion turbine]" Id. at 25. In other words, the parties contemplated design modifications which would come to light because of problems with "similar equipment."

By accounting for the eventuality of delay for corrective work, these provisions implicitly contradict the alleged assurances and omissions suggesting that the combustion turbine would be operational more swiftly. Cf. Clanton v. Vagianelis, 187 A.D.2d 45, 592 N.Y.S.2d 139, 141 (App. Div.3d Dep't 1993) (holding that, even though contract language did "not expressly contradict defendants' prior alleged oral misrepresentation," the implicit conflict sufficiently precluded allegations of justified reliance) (emphasis in original). The fact that the contemplated delays ended up being allegedly much more extensive than anticipated means only that Dick may be entitled to more relief under the Consortium Agreement, not that Dick is entitled to declare the whole agreement a fraud.

[7] Moreover, under New York law, "[w]here sophisticated businessmen engaged in major transactions enjoy access to critical information but fail to take advantage of that access, New York courts are particularly disinclined to entertain claims of justifiable reliance." Grumman Allied Indus., Inc. v. Rohr Indus., Inc., 748 F.2d 729, 737 (2d Cir.1984); see also Rudolph v. Turecek, 240 A.D.2d 935, 658 N.Y.S.2d 769, 771 (App. Div.3d Dep't 1997) ("[W]here a party has the means, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, to ascertain the truth or falsity of material representations, he or she cannot assert justifiable reliance."). Dick does not deny that the parties to this multimillion-dollar deal are sophisticated businesses; Dick instead asserts that the combustion turbine problems were uniquely within SWPC's knowledge. However, Dick's own filings demonstrate that it was aware of several other SWPC projects involving the combustion turbine at issue. For example, Dick's proposed second amended counterclaim indicates that it based much of its pricing on the power plant project in Pennsylvania-- *248 precisely the project whose prospectus identifies the prototypical nature of the combustion turbine. Dick fails to explain why it could not obtain this prospectus--a public document--or any other relevant information about this and other SWPC power plant projects at any time between May and September 2000. Importantly, Dick does not allege that SWPC took any affirmative steps to prevent Dick from discovering these facts. If the facts are as Dick alleges, Dick will have to seek relief against SWPC under the terms of the Consortium Agreement.

Dick proposes a few more amendments to its counterclaims, and SWPC does not appear to challenge those. Accordingly, Dick's motion is granted in that regard only. Because Dick no longer has raised any valid defense to its liability to pay liquidated damages in the first instance, the Court will enter judgment on SWPC's behalf on the terms of the Court's previous Decision and Order. See Siemens Westinghouse Power Corp., 293 F.Supp.2d at 343.

B. MOTIONS TO DISMISS THIRD-PARTY COMPLAINT

[8] Limbach Company, the project's piping subcontractor, Stone & Webster, and the Owners (collectively, the "Third-Party Defendants") brought separate motions to dismiss Dick's first amended third-party complaint. Dick's first amended third-party complaint seeks, among other things, to hold liable the Third-Party Defendants for misrepresenting the nature of the project to Dick, and for various shortcomings in executing the project. The motions raise many arguments, but they share a common and dispositive argument, with which the Court agrees: the third-party claims do not meet the standard of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 14(a) and therefore must be dismissed.

[9] Under Rule 14(a), a defendant may bring claims against any person who "is or may be liable to the third-party plaintiff for all or part of the plaintiff's claim against the third-party plaintiff." Fed.R.Civ.P. 14(a). "The crucial characteristic of a Rule 14 claim is that defendant is attempting to transfer to the third-party defendant the liability asserted against him by the original plaintiff." 6 Charles Alan Wright, Arthur R. Miller, & Mary Kay Kane, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1446, at 377 (2d ed.1990). In other words, "[t]he outcome of the third-party claim must be contingent on the outcome of the main claim" Nat'l Bank of Canada v. Artex Indus., Inc., 627 F.Supp. 610, 613 (S.D.N.Y.1986) (emphasis added).

As explained more fully in the Court's summary judgment Decision and Order, SWPC's complaint against Dick raises the narrow issue of whether Dick must reimburse SWPC for the up-front payments of certain liquidated damages, before SWPC and Dick apportion the responsibility between each other. See Siemens Westinghouse Power

Corp., 293 F.Supp.2d at 341. Whether any Third-Party Defendant committed contract breaches or torts affecting the ultimate apportionment of liquidated damages is not contingent in any way upon the narrow question of which Consortium member is liable for the up-front payments under the Consortium Agreement.

[10] Even though the third-party claims involve the same power plant project as the principal complaint, "[t]he mere fact that the alleged third-party claim arises from the same transaction or set of facts as the original claim is not enough." 6 Wright, supra, at 377-79; see also Int'l Paving Sys., Inc. v. Van-Tulco, Inc., 866 F.Supp. 682, 687 (E.D.N.Y.1994). The fact that the allegations in the third-party complaint may depend on the adjudication of Dick's own counterclaims against SWPC is *249 also insufficient because the plain language of Rule 14(a) requires the third-party claim to depend upon the "the plaintiff's claim against the third-party plaintiff." Fed.R.Civ.P. 14(a); see also Baltimore & Ohio R. Co. v. Central Ry. Services, Inc., 636 F.Supp. 782, 786 (1986). Accordingly, Dick's first amended third-party complaint must be dismissed.

[11] Dick has moved to amend its first amended third-party complaint and has submitted a proposed second amended third-party complaint. The Court finds nothing in the proposed second amended third-party complaint that remedies the deficiencies identified here. Thus, the proposed new filing would be futile, and the motion is denied.

III. ORDER

For the reasons stated, it is hereby ORDERED that the motion of defendant and third-party plaintiff Dick Corporation ("Dick") for leave to amend and file a second amended answer and counterclaim is granted in part and denied in part. To the extent Dick seeks to add or update claims or defenses of negligent misrepresentation or fraudulent concealment, the motion is denied. In all other respects the motion is granted; it is further

ORDERED that Dick is found liable to plaintiff Siemens Westinghouse Power Corporation ("SWPC") for breach of contract in the amount of $15,041,327.98, in accordance with the Court's Decision and Order dated October 14, 2003, and the Clerk of Court is directed to enter judgment on SWPC's behalf in that amount; it is further

ORDERED that the first amended third-party complaint of Dick is dismissed and the Clerk of Court is directed to enter judgment on behalf of third-party defendants Limbach Company, AES Londonderry, LLC, Sycamore Ridge Co., LLC, and Stone & Webster, Inc., dismissing Dick's claims against them; and it is finally ORDERED that Dick's motion to amend its first amended third-party complaint is denied.

SO ORDERED.

District Court of Appeal of Florida,
First District.

Timmy SKOW and Linda Skow, Appellants,
v.
DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION,
Appellee.

No. AW-260.

May 1, 1985.

Employee of contractor who was injured while working on a bridge being constructed under contract with the Department of Transportation brought suit against Department. The Circuit Court, Leon County, Ben C. Willis, J., entered final summary judgment in favor of DOT, and employee appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Zehmer, J., held that: (1) although DOT actively participated in inspection of work done by contractor, inspection was done only to ascertain results of work and not to control method of performance or to insure contractor's compliance with safety regulations, and such supervision did not amount to an exercise of control by DOT that was legally sufficient to make it liable to employee of contractor, and (2) contract did not impose an explicit duty on DOT to monitor, inspect, and correct safety violations by contractor.

Affirmed.

Ervin, C.J., dissented with opinion.

Although contract between Department of Transportation and contractor for construction of bridge provided that contractor would comply with all applicable state and federal laws governing safety and provide safeguards and safety equipment for its employees, and provided that DOT had authority to shut down jobsite for contractor's breach of such requirements, contract did not impose explicit duty on DOT to monitor, inspect, and correct violations by contractor so as to make DOT liable for injuries sustained by contractor's employee.

ZEHMER, Judge.

Timmy Skow, an employee of Capelletti Brothers, Inc., was injured while working on a bridge being constructed under a contract between Capelletti Brothers (Capelletti), the contractor, and the Department of Transportation (DOT). Skow was working high above the river without a safety belt when he lost his footing, slipped, and grabbed a pile driver, which crushed his hand. He and his wife, Linda Skow, appeal a final summary judgment for DOT on their claim for personal injury damages. We affirm.

[1] Appellants argue that DOT owed Timmy

(Cite as: 468 So.2d 422, *423)

Skow a legal duty to eliminate unsafe working conditions that it knew or should have known would expose workers to a substantial risk of harm. Notwithstanding the general rule that one who hires an independent contractor is not liable for injuries sustained by that contractor's employees in their work, Van Ness v. Independent Construction Co., 392 So.2d 1017 (Fla. 5th DCA 1981), appellants argue that a legal duty arose because DOT assumed such detailed control over the work that the independent-contractor relationship between DOT and Capelletti ceased to exist. Additionally, appellants assert that Timmy Skow's work was inherently dangerous, that he was allowed to work without a safety belt, and that DOT breached its duty to enforce the requirements of the Capelletti/DOT contract and federal safety regulations by failing to require Capelletti *424 to provide bridge workers with safety belts.

[2] The undisputed facts in the record support the conclusion that although DOT actively participated in the inspection of work done by Capelletti, this was done only to ascertain the results of the work and not to control the method of performance or to insure Capelletti's compliance with safety regulations. DOT provided supervision only in the sense that its inspectors generally observed the work for compliance with the contract. The several instances of specific instruction given by DOT employees to Capelletti's employees constituted general supervision in this sense and did not amount to an exercise of control by DOT that is legally sufficient to take this case out of the general rule of Van Ness, supra.

[3] Although the contract provided that Capelletti would comply with all applicable state and federal laws governing safety and provide safeguards and safety equipment for its employees, and provided that DOT had authority to shut down the job site for Capelletti's breach of this requirement, the contract did not impose an explicit duty on DOT to monitor, inspect, and correct violations by Capelletti. There is no indication in this record that DOT, as owner, created or contributed to the dangerous condition alleged to have caused Timmy Skow's injuries.

Since appellants' cause of action is not predicated on a showing that "the contracting owner by positive act of negligence or negligent omission on his part caused injury" to the independent contractor's employee, Florida Power & Light Co. v. Price, 170 So.2d 293, 297 (Fla.1964), no duty, delegable or nondelegable, was owed by DOT to Timmy Skow. Ibid.; Conklin v. Cohen, 287 So.2d 56 (Fla.1973); Van Ness v. Independent Construction Co., supra.

Accordingly, the judgment is AFFIRMED.

MILLS, J., concurs.

ERVIN, C.J., dissents with written opinion.

ERVIN, Chief Justice, Dissenting.

I respectfully dissent. In my opinion, there remains a genuine issue of material fact regarding the issue of the Department of Transportation's (DOT) control over Capelletti.

First, there is testimony that a DOT representative was present at the job site on a continual basis just prior to and at the time of appellant's injury. Second, DOT representatives admitted that they had authority to stop construction at sites if a contractor, including Capelletti, was not abiding by certain specifications. Finally, the following deposition testimony of Timmy Skow clearly places at issue the question of DOT's exercise of direct control on the job site:

Q. Did you ever hear anybody from the D.O.T. give any instructions of any nature to anybody at Capeletti [sic]?

A. Certainly.

Q. What kind of instructions?

A. For instance, driving the piling, they tell you when to stop, you know, they tell you how deep.

Say, for instance, if I am the pile driver in this instance, I look at the pile hammer which is diesel, and you pull the cord to stop it or to kill the diesel, and I look at the D.O.T. man to see when he is ready to have me stop it. It is up to him.

Q. All right. Now, these piles have to be driven a certain depth in order to be in compliance with specifications of the job; right?

A. Yes.

Q. You are saying he would have told you when the specifications of the job had been complied with and they had been driven as far as they were supposed to be?

A. Yes.

Q. Any other instructions he would give you?

A. Well, that is just one instance.

Q. Give me the instances that you can think of.

*425 A. For instance, sheet piling or something, if it is leaning out, it shouldn't be leaning out, he comes by and tells you if it is straight or not.

Q. He tells you if the work you have done is acceptable under the contract?

A. Yes, if it is acceptable or if it is not acceptable. It is up to him. It is his discretion.

Q. Generally, would it be fair to say that the communications from the D.O.T. to Capeletti's [sic] people would have related to the quality of the finished product?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you think of any times that the D.O.T. would have given instructions to Capeletti's [sic] people where the instructions would not have related to the quality of the finished product?

A. Like in the movement of barriers, they describe where to put the barriers. They tell you how fast you can move the barriers. Let's say, for instance, you are closing a lane of traffic. They will tell you.

Q. Right. Yes. Go on. Movement of barriers, where to put them.

A. What kind of equipment you can have out on the road, they tell you that.

BY MS. SHER:

Q. Mr. Skow, during the four months that you were out on this bridge project, the one on which you hurt your hand, would people from the Department of Transportation be on that jobsite [sic] on a daily basis?

A. Certainly. There was always at least one.

Q. Did people from the Department of Transportation give you orders or directions directly on that jobsite [sic]?

A. Yes, ma'am.

Q. When they gave you directions, they did not transmit them first to your immediate supervisor, Varallo, but they gave them to you directly?

A. To me directly.

Q. Did they give directions directly to the other people who were working on the jobsite [sic] that you observed?

A. On my crew, they would have; yes.

Q. At times when you were given directions by people from the Department of Transportation, was your immediate supervisor, Lew Varallo, present?

A. Yes. Sometimes. Sometimes not.

Q. Can you give me an average as to what--for what portion of the workday somebody from the Department of Transportation would be present on the worksite [sic]?

A. Probably 80 percent minimum.

Q. Daily?

A. Daily.

Q. Did anybody from the Department of Transportation ever order you directly to remove any piles you had driven?

A. Yes.

Q. And that is in addition to what you had already told Mr. Bloomquist about the other areas of your work that were corrected by somebody from the Department of Transportation?

MR. BLOOMQUIST: Object to the form of the question. You can answer, of course.

THE WITNESS: Yes.

Q. (By Ms. Sher) Such as what? Do you call it the sheet?

A. Sheet pilings.

Q. I don't remember if you mentioned that. Did they ever correct any of your work relative to driving of the H-beams?

A. Not driving the H-beams. I had a piling corrected.

Q. And this was by someone on the jobsite [sic]?

How did you know that these were the Department of Transportation people?

A. They all drive yellow trucks. It says
D.O.T. on the side.

In order "[t]o impose liability on ... [DOT] for retention of control over ... [Capelletti], there must be such right of supervision or direction that ... [Capelletti] is not entirely free to do the work ... *426 [its] own way." Van Ness v. Independent Construction Co., 392 So.2d 1017, 1019 (Fla. 5th DCA 1981). Restated, the decisive factor in determining whether an individual has the status of an independent contractor, agent, or employee depends upon the degree of control exercised by the alleged employer. As we observed in DeBolt v. Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services, 427 So.2d 221, 226 (Fla. 1st DCA 1983):

If there is no question as to the existence or non-existence of a master/servant or employer/employee relationship, the issue is one then for the court to determine. If, however, the issue is unclear, it becomes a question of fact for the trier of fact to decide based on the evidence presented. See Gregg v. Weller Grocery Co., 151 So.2d 450 (Fla. 3d DCA 1963).

In DeBolt, we reversed a summary judgment entered in an action for damages brought on behalf of a minor who had been placed in an "attention home" as a result of a contract executed between HRS and the owners of the home. The minor was injured while in custody, suit was brought, and summary judgment entered on the ground, among others, that the home's owners could not be considered employees or agents of HRS, because the owners were designated in the contract as independent contractors. We determined that the lower court should have directed its attention beyond the labels stated in the contract, and focused instead upon the indicia of control actually exercised over the home's operations by HRS. We observed that there were a number of conditions and limitations imposed by HRS upon the operators during the time the child was in their care, "which, at the very least, create a factual dispute as to their status, thus precluding summary judgment." 427 So.2d at 226-227.

Similarly, based on the foregoing testimony in the case at bar, there remain in my judgment unresolved genuine issues of material fact as to the liability of DOT; primarily the question of whether DOT retained control over Capelletti's method of performance on the job so as to constitute active participation "in the construction to the extent that ... [DOT] directly ... [influenced] the manner in which the work ... [was] performed." Conklin v. Cohen, 287 So.2d 56, 60 (Fla.1973).

I would reverse the summary judgment and remand the case for further trial proceedings.

DECISION and ORDER

TELESCA, J.

INTRODUCTION

*1 Plaintiff Patricia K. Sofia ("plaintiff"), brings this action as executrix of the estate of her mother, Catherine M. Sofia ("Mrs. Sofia"), seeking to recover a premium Mrs. Sofia paid to defendant Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company ("Mass Mutual" or "defendant") to purchase a Single Premium Immediate Annuity ("SPIA"). Mrs. Sofia purchased the SPIA shortly before her death from Michael Mooney ("Mooney"), an independent agent of Mass Mutual. Plaintiff alleges that the contract for the purchase of the SPIA between her mother and Mass Mutual was invalid because: (1) Mooney fraudulently misrepresented the terms of the SPIA to Mrs. Sofia; (2) Mooney breached his fiduciary duties to Mrs. Sofia; (3) Mooney negligently/recklessly misrepresented the terms of the SPIA to Mrs. Sofia; (4) Mrs. Sofia lacked the mental capacity to lawfully purchase the SPIA; and (5) the SPIA's terms are unconscionable.

Mass Mutual moves for summary judgment pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56, dismissing all of plaintiff's claims, alleging that: (1) plaintiff offers no evidence of fraud on Mooney's part; (2) as an insurance agent, Mooney owed no fiduciary duty to Mrs. Sofia; (3) Mooney could not have negligently or recklessly misrepresented the terms of the SPIA because he had no "special relationship" with Mrs. Sofia; (4) plaintiff presents no medical evidence that Mrs. Sofia was mentally incompetent; and (5) the transaction is not unconscionable because the New York State Department of Insurance expressly permits the sale of SPIAs to individuals in their eighties. For the reasons set forth below, Mass Mutual's motion for summary judgment is granted in its entirety.

BACKGROUND

On December 18, 2000, an independent representative of Massachusetts Mutual Insurance Corporation named Michael Mooney visited 81 year-old Catherine Sofia at her home. Mooney, who had previously met with Mrs. Sofia in May and November of that year, visited at her request to discuss rearranging her investments so that she could receive larger monthly income payments. At that time, Mrs. Sofia was contemplating purchasing a home near her daughter and granddaughter, and believed that she would need additional cash to make monthly mortgage payments. Mooney presented Mrs. Sofia with several investment options, including exchanging an annuity that she held which was issued by The Principal Mutual Life Insurance Company ("Principal") and valued at $275,055.44, for a Single Premium Immediate Annuity ("SPIA") issued by Massachusetts Mutual. [FN1] The SPIA differed from Mrs. Sofia's Principal annuity in two respects. First, it would provide Mrs. Sofia with monthly income of approximately $3,100, whereas the Principal annuity only provided her $2,490.81 per month. Second, while it guaranteed specified monthly payments to Mrs. Sofia for her entire life, it was "non-refundable," and would pay no additional amount to her estate upon her death. Mooney explained to Mrs. Sofia that if she died within the first seven years of the annuity that she would not recoup the entire $275,055.44 she invested, but that if she lived seven years she would recover the entire amount, and if she lived longer than seven years she, over the life of the annuity, would receive a greater sum of money than she invested initially.

FN1. The parties concede that since Mooney was not authorized to sell Principal financial products, he presented Mrs. Sofia no information regarding the desirability or availability of various Principal investment vehicles.

*2 That day, Mrs. Sofia decided to transfer the money she held in her Principal annuity to Mass Mutual to purchase the SPIA. In so doing, she executed numerous acknowledgment and release forms required under New York State Insurance Law. Although Mooney took those forms with him when he left Mrs. Sofia's house that day, he also subsequently mailed copies to her. Principal was notified of the action, but did not attempt to retain Mrs. Sofia's business. [FN2] For his part in the sale, Mooney received a commission of $8,001.11.

FN2. The parties advise the Court that it is common practice that upon the transfer of annuity funds from one carrier to another, the previous annuity holder is given notice of the change prior to the actual transfer date. The purpose of this notice is to allow the previous annuity holder to attempt to compete to retain the annuity, and make an offer for new terms in exchange for avoiding the transfer.

On January 18, 2001, Mass Mutual issued Mrs. Sofia her first monthly payment under the SPIA. On February 8, 2001, Mrs. Sofia acknowledged receipt of the policy detailing the SPIA. [FN3] Tragically, Mrs. Sofia was diagnosed with cancer in May 2001 and passed away June 12, 2001. She would have received her sixth payment under the SPIA on June 18, 2001. Mrs. Sofia bequeathed her entire remaining estate, totaling approximately $800,000, to her granddaughter and her children. Mass Mutual paid no amount of the SPIA balance to Mrs. Sofia's beneficiaries upon her death. Plaintiff brings this action, claiming that, on behalf of Mrs. Sofia's beneficiaries, they are entitled to a portion of the SPIA.

FN3. Thus, for purposes of New York State Insurance Regulations (No. 60), Mrs. Sofia's 60-day rescission period began to run on February 8, 2001.

DISCUSSION

Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides that a party is entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law only where, "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact...." F.R.C.P. 56(c) (2003). The party seeking summary judgment bears the burden of demonstrating that no genuine issue of material fact exists, and in making the decision the court must draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the party against whom summary judgment is sought. Ford v. Reynolds, 316 F.3d 351, 354 (2d Cir.2003) (citing Marvel Characters v. Simon, 310 F.3d 280, 285-86 (2d Cir.2002)). "Summary judgment is improper if there is any evidence in the record that could reasonably support a jury's verdict for the non-moving party." Id.

A. Fraudulent Misrepresentation Claim

Under New York State common law, a plaintiff alleging fraudulent misrepresentation must prove five elements: (1) that the defendant misrepresented a material fact; (2) that representation was false; (3) at the time he made the representation the knew it was false; (4) plaintiff's reliance on that representation; and (5) injury to the plaintiff as a result of that reliance. Freschi v. Grand Coal Venture, 767 F.2d 1041, 1050 (2d Cir.1985), vacated on other grounds by Freschi v. Grand Coal Venture, 478 U.S. 1015, 106 S.Ct. 3325, 92 L.Ed.2d 731 (1986). Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b) imposes an additional burden on a plaintiff alleging fraud, namely that "[i]n all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity."

Fed.R.Civ.P. 9 (2004). Whereas, "[m]alice, intent, knowledge, and other condition of mind of a person" need only be averred generally. Id.

*3 Here, plaintiff offers no evidence that Mooney made false statements to Mrs. Sofia to induce her to purchase the SPIA. The record contains no statements or promises which could be considered fraudulent. In fact, the disclosures Mrs. Sofia executed were approved for use by the New York State Insurance Department. The only promise Mooney made to Mrs. Sofia was that she would be paid approximately $3,100 a month until she died. She received what she bargained for. As such, plaintiff, as a matter of law, is unable to sustain a fraudulent misrepresentation claim, and thus, Mass Mutual is entitled to summary judgment in its favor on this cause of action.

B. Breach of Fiduciary Duty Claim

Under New York State law an insurance agent owes no fiduciary duty to his client aside from the common law duty to obtain the requested coverage. Murphy v. Kuhn, 90 N.Y.2d 266, 270, 660 N.Y.S.2d 371, 682 N.E.2d 972 (1997). "Insurance agents are not personal financial counselors and risk managers, approaching guarantor status. Insureds are in a better position to know their assets...." Id. at 273, 660 N.Y.S.2d 371, 682 N.E.2d 972. However, an individual who holds himself out to be a financial advisor does owe a fiduciary duty to the client because of the "special relationship" between the two. Rasmussen v. A.C.T. Environmental Services, Inc., 292 N.Y.S.2d 220 (3rd Dep't.2002). A special relationship may be found where: (1) the agent receives compensation for consultation beyond any premium payments; (2) the insured relies on the expertise of the agent regarding a raised question of coverage; or (3) there is an extended course of dealing sufficient to put objectively reasonable agents on notice that their advice was being relied upon. Murphy at 270, 660 N.Y.S.2d 371, 682 N.E.2d 972.

While it is undisputed that the only service Mooney provided to Mrs. Sofia was the sale of the SPIA, plaintiff contends that he held himself out to be an investment advisor, and as such, owed Mrs. Sofia a fiduciary duty. To support this claim, plaintiff offers: (1) Mooney's business card, which identifies him as a "financial services professional;" (2) a statement Mrs. Sofia made to her real estate agent that Mooney was her financial advisor; and (3) a general statement by her granddaughter that Mrs. Sofia did not understand financial arrangements.

Mass Mutual argues that Mooney's service to Mrs. Sofia never exceeded that of an insurance agent because: (1) the only payment he received from her was the commission paid for his work on the SPIA; (2) the relationship lasted only two years; (3) she had numerous investments with at least five named financial advisors; and (4) that he did not help her pay bills or balance her checkbook.

I find that no reasonable jury could conclude that Mooney's duties exceeded those of an insurance agent. First, Mooney received no fees other than the commission on the SPIA arising from his business relationship with Mrs. Sofia. Second, Mrs. Sofia was the one who recruited Mooney for help rearranging her investments. Third, he sold her an annuity, and to that end, provided her with several different options from which to choose. However, Mrs. Sofia chose which option best suited her financial needs and goals at that time. Fourth, Mr. Barberi, Mrs. Sofia's former CPA, testified at his deposition that she could understand the financial transaction options once they were explained to her. Lastly, they had only two business dealings in two years. Accordingly, defendant is entitled to summary judgment in its favor on plaintiff's breach of fiduciary duty claim.

C. Negligent/Reckless Misrepresentation Claim

*4 For plaintiff to establish a negligent or reckless misrepresentation claim, she must prove that a "special relationship" existed between Mooney and Mrs. Sofia. See White v. Guarante, 43 N.Y.2d 356, 401 N.Y.S.2d 474, 372 N.E.2d 315 (1977). "Liability for negligent misrepresentation has been imposed only on those persons who possess unique or specialized expertise, or who are in a special position of confidence and trust with the injured party such that reliance on the negligent misrepresentation is justified." Kimmell v. Schaefer, 87 N.Y.2d 257, 263 (1996). Since, as described above, I find that no reasonable jury could conclude that Mooney engaged in a "special relationship" with Mrs. Sofia other than as an insurance agent, plaintiff, as a matter of law, is unable to sustain her negligent misrepresentation claim. Thus, defendant is entitled to summary judgment in its favor on this cause of action as well.

D. Lack of Capacity Claim

To demonstrate that an individual lacked the capacity to enter into a business transaction under New York State law, a plaintiff must prove, "that the party did not understand the nature of the transaction at the time of the conveyance as a result of mental disability." Lopresto v. Brizzolara, 91 A.D.2d 952, 458 N.Y.S.2d 881, 884 (1st Dep't 1986).

Plaintiff's only evidence of her alleged diminished capacity is deposition testimony from her grandson-in-law that "she didn't look well" at Christmastime 2000.

I find that plaintiff offers insufficient evidence indicating that Mrs. Sofia suffered from any mental deficiency at the time she purchased the SPIA. First, plaintiff offers no medical evidence that Mrs. Sofia suffered from a mental deficiency. Second, while it is true that she was 81 years old, her friend Mrs. Sacheli testified that she did not have any problems getting around or taking care of herself. Third, Mooney states in his affidavit that she seemed as lucid in 2000 as she did when he first met her in 1998. [FN4] Since plaintiff presents no evidence that Mrs. Sofia lacked the mental capacity to enter into the SPIA sales contract, that cause of action is dismissed.

FN4. It should also be noted that plaintiff does not contest the validity of gifts Mrs. Sofia made to her granddaughter around the same time that she purchased the SPIA, including an automobile and jewelry.

E. Unconscionability Claim

In New York State a business transaction is unconscionable only if it is so grossly unreasonable or unconscionable in light of the mores and business practices of the time and place according to its literal terms. Because the New York State Insurance Department allows insurance agents to sell SPIAs to 81 year-old people, this transaction can not be deemed unconscionable. Therefore, plaintiff's unconscionability claim is also denied.

F. Unsuitability Claim

Lastly, plaintiff argues that the SPIA should be rescinded because the investment was "unsuitable" for Mrs. Sofia. [FN5] Since there is no such cause of action in New York State, plaintiff may not rely on this assertion to defeat Mass Mutual's motion for summary judgment. Accordingly, plaintiff's "unsuitability" claim, to the extent that it was alleged, is dismissed.

FN5. Nowhere does plaintiff allege "unsuitability" as a cause of action in her Complaint. See Defendant's Notice of Removal, Ex. A (Doc. No. 1).

CONCLUSION

*5 For the reasons set forth above, I find that Mrs. Sofia's purchase of the Mass Mutual SPIA was a valid financial transaction. Accordingly, defendant's motion for summary judgment is granted in its entirety, and each of plaintiff's claims is dismissed with prejudice.

ALL OF THE ABOVE IS SO ORDERED.

Laser eye-surgery patients brought medical malpractice claims against surgeon and medical clinic, and brought claims against surgeon, clinic, and manufacturer of surgical laser for negligent misrepresentation and concealment, violation of deceptive acts and practices law, and strict products liability. The Supreme Court, Onondaga County, Stone, J., granted surgeon's and clinic's motion for severance of claims of the eight patients, and granted manufacturer's motion to dismiss. Patients appealed. The Supreme Court, Appellate Division, held that: (1) severance was warranted; (2) patients failed to state claims for deceptive practices or for negligent misrepresentation and concealment; but (3) patients were entitled to replead their strict products liability claims.

Affirmed as modified.

West Headnotes

[1] Action 60
13k60

Severance was warranted as to medical malpractice claims of eight laser eye-surgery patients, against one surgeon and the surgeon's medical clinic; individual issues predominated, concerning particular circumstances applicable to each patient, and resulting and cumulative prejudice to surgeon and clinic from permitting jury, in one trial, to determine multiple claims of malpractice far outweighed benefit derived from conduct of joint trial. McKinney's CPLR 603.

[2] Action 60
13k60

[2] Appeal and Error 949
30k949

Severance of claims is a matter of judicial discretion which will not be disturbed on appeal absent an abuse of discretion or prejudice to a substantial right of the party seeking severance. McKinney's CPLR 603.

92Hk38

Patients of laser eye-surgeon failed to state a claim, under deceptive acts and practices law, of surgical laser manufacturer's deceptive practices, where patients failed to allege that manufacturer engaged in consumer-oriented conduct that was deceptive or misleading. To establish a prima facie violation of the deceptive acts and practices law, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the defendant is engaging in "consumer oriented" conduct that is deceptive or misleading in a material way, and that plaintiff has been injured because of that conduct. 827 MEMORANDUM:

Plaintiffs commenced this action to recover damages for personal injuries that each sustained as a result of laser eye surgery performed by defendant Sylvia W. Norton, M.D. (Dr. Norton) using a surgical laser manufactured by defendant Visx, Inc. (Visx). The amended complaint asserts a cause of action for medical malpractice against Dr. Norton and defendants Sylvia W. Norton, M.D., P.C., and Sylvia W. Norton, M.D., P.C., doing business as Jerva Eye Center (collectively, Norton defendants), and causes of action for an alleged 828 violation of article 22-A of the General Business Law, "negligent representations and concealment," and strict products liability and breach of warranty against all defendants.

[1][2] Contrary to plaintiffs' contention, Supreme Court did not abuse its discretion in granting the motion of the Norton defendants pursuant to CPLR 603 to sever the claims of the eight plaintiffs. "Severance, under CPLR 603, is a matter of judicial discretion which will not be disturbed on appeal absent an abuse of discretion or prejudice to a substantial right of the party seeking severance" (Finning v. Niagara Mohawk Power Corp., 281 A.D.2d 844, 844, 722 N.Y.S.2d 613; see Southworth v. Macko, 294 A.D.2d 920, 741 N.Y.S.2d 813; County of Chenango Indus. Dev. Agency v. Lockwood Greene Engrs., 111 A.D.2d 508, 509, 488 N.Y.S.2d 890). Here, the record establishes that "individual issues predominate, concerning particular circumstances applicable to each plaintiff" (Bender v. Underwood, 93 A.D.2d 747, 748, 461 N.Y.S.2d 301; see Abbondandolo v. Hitzig, 282 A.D.2d 224, 225, 724 N.Y.S.2d 26; see also DeAngelis v. New York Univ. Med. Ctr., 292 A.D.2d 237, 237-238, 738 N.Y.S.2d 671). In addition, "the resulting and cumulative prejudice to [the Norton defendants] by permitting the jury, in one trial, to determine the multiple claims of malpractice at issue here, far outweighs the benefit derived from the conduct of a joint trial" (Bender, 93 A.D.2d at 748, 461 N.Y.S.2d 301; see Abbondandolo, 282 A.D.2d at 225, 724 N.Y.S.2d 26). Indeed, these eight wholly separate malpractice claims "are primarily linked by the fact that the same doctor is charged with malpractice and that the different plaintiffs are represented by the same lawyer" (Reid v. Hafer, 88 A.D.2d 873, 874, 451 N.Y.S.2d 775). Furthermore, in view of the fact that there are eight claims, the court, in granting the motion, properly considered the potential for jury confusion (see Abbondandolo, 282 A.D.2d at 225, 724 N.Y.S.2d 26; Bender, 93 A.D.2d at 748, 461 N.Y.S.2d 301).

[3][4][5] The court also properly granted the motion of Visx to dismiss the amended complaint against it pursuant to CPLR 695 3211(a)(7) for failure to state a cause of action. The first cause of action is for an alleged violation of article 22-A of the General Business Law. Because the amended complaint alleges that defendants committed "deceptive practices," plaintiffs presumably are alleging a violation of General Business Law § 349(a). To establish a prima facie violation of that statute, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the defendant is engaging in "consumer oriented" conduct that is deceptive or misleading in a material way, and that plaintiff has been injured because of that conduct (Gaidon v. Guardian Life Ins. Co., 94 N.Y.2d 330, 344, 704 N.Y.S.2d 177, 725 N.E.2d 598; see Oswego Laborers' Local 214 Pension Fund v. Marine Midland Bank, 85 N.Y.2d 20, 24-26, 623 N.Y.S.2d 529, 647 N.E.2d 741; St. Patrick's Home for Aged & Infirm v. Laticrete Intl., 264 A.D.2d 652, 655, 696 N.Y.S.2d 117). Plaintiffs failed to state a *829 cause of action under General Business Law § 349 because they failed to allege that Visx engaged in consumer-oriented conduct that was deceptive or misleading (see St. Patrick's Home for Aged & Infirm, 264 A.D.2d at 655, 696 N.Y.S.2d 117). Plaintiffs' allegation that Visx conspired with the Norton defendants to engage in deceptive practices is not sufficient to defeat the motion because there are no allegations of fact from which it can be inferred that there was an agreement or understanding between Visx and the Norton defendants to cooperate in any fraudulent or deceptive scheme (see Abrahami v. UPC Constr. Co., 176 A.D.2d 180, 574 N.Y.S.2d 52; National Westminster Bank v. Weksel, 124 A.D.2d 144, 147, 511 N.Y.S.2d

[6] The second cause of action is styled as one for "negligent representations and concealment." Assuming that the second cause of action is one for negligent misrepresentation, we conclude that plaintiffs failed to allege the requisite "actual privity of contract between [plaintiffs and Visx] or a relationship so close as to approach that of privity" (Prudential Ins. Co. v. Dewey, Ballantine, Bushby, Palmer & Wood of Am., 80 N.Y.2d 377, 382, 590 N.Y.S.2d 831, 605 N.E.2d 318, rearg. denied 81 N.Y.2d 955, 597 N.Y.S.2d 940, 613 N.E.2d 972; see Ossining Union Free School Dist. v. Anderson LaRocca Anderson, 73 N.Y.2d 417, 424, 541 N.Y.S.2d 335, 539 N.E.2d 91; McNar Indus. v. Feibes & Schmitt, Architects, 245 A.D.2d 993, 994, 667 N.Y.S.2d 88, lv. denied 91 N.Y.2d 812, 672 N.Y.S.2d 848, 695 N.E.2d 717). Thus, the court properly dismissed the second cause of action against Visx (see IT Corp. v. Ecology & Env'tl. Eng'g, 275 A.D.2d 958, 960, 713 N.Y.S.2d 633, lv. denied 96 N.Y.2d 702, 722 N.Y.S.2d 794, 745 N.E.2d 1016).

[7] The court also properly dismissed the fourth cause of action against Visx insofar as it alleges claims for strict products liability. The allegations of plaintiffs in support of their strict products liability claims against Visx "are devoid of a factual basis and are vague and conclusory" (Rose v. Gelco Corp., 261 A.D.2d 381, 382, 688 N.Y.S.2d 259). The factual allegations are also insufficient to support the claim that the surgical laser was defectively designed or manufactured (see id.). In addition, the court properly dismissed the fourth cause of action against Visx insofar as it alleges claims for breach of warranties of merchantability and fitness for a particular purpose. Privity of contract is an essential element of those claims (see Martin v. Dierck Equip. Co., 43 N.Y.2d 583, 589-590, 403 N.Y.S.2d 185, 374 N.E.2d 97; Antel Oldsmobile-Cadillac v. Sirius Leasing Co., Div. of Sirius Enters., 101 A.D.2d 688, 475 N.Y.S.2d 944; Manufacturers & Traders 696 Trust Co. v. Stone Conveyor, 91 A.D.2d 849, 850, 458 N.Y.S.2d 116). There is no allegation of privity between plaintiffs and Visx, nor is there any allegation that the Norton defendants acted as the agent of Visx to constitute a claim of *830 privity (see Manufacturers & Traders Trust Co., 91 A.D.2d at 850, 458 N.Y.S.2d 116; cf. Antel Oldsmobile-Cadillac, 101 A.D.2d at 689, 475 N.Y.S.2d 944).

[8] Finally, we conclude that the court did not improvidently exercise its discretion in denying that part of the request of plaintiffs for leave to replead the first and second causes of action and that part of the fourth cause of action insofar as it alleges claims for breach of warranty (see CPLR 3211 [e]; Parlante v. Cross County Fed. Sav. Bank, 251 A.D.2d 476, 673 N.Y.S.2d 591, lv. dismissed 92 N.Y.2d 946, 681 N.Y.S.2d 476, 704 N.E.2d 229; Ott v. Automatic Connector, 193 A.D.2d 657, 658, 598 N.Y.S.2d 10). However, although the court properly concluded that the amended complaint failed to state any claims against Visx for strict products liability, the record indicates that the defects in pleading those claims may be the result of poor draftsmanship, and that plaintiffs may possess meritorious claims for strict products liability against that defendant (see Metro Envelope Corp. v. Westvaco, 72 A.D.2d 695, 695, 421 N.Y.S.2d 366). We conclude that plaintiffs should be afforded an opportunity to replead those claims (see Lambert v. Marks, 96 A.D.2d 578, 578-579, 464 N.Y.S.2d 1018; Metro Envelope Corp., 72 A.D.2d at 696, 421 N.Y.S.2d 366). We therefore modify the order in the exercise of our discretion by granting that part of plaintiffs' request for leave to replead the fourth cause of action insofar as it alleges claims for strict products liability against Visx upon condition that plaintiffs shall serve a second amended complaint within 30 days of service of a copy of the order of this Court with notice of entry.

*827 It is hereby ORDERED that the order so appealed from be and the same hereby is unanimously modified in the exercise of discretion by granting that part of plaintiffs' request for leave to replead the fourth cause of action insofar as it alleges claims for strict products liability against defendant Visx, Inc. upon condition that plaintiffs shall serve a second amended complaint within 30 days of service of a copy of the order of this Court with notice of entry and as modified the order is affirmed without costs.

Nos. 92-0877, 92-1326.

April 13, 1994.

Employee of independent contractor brought action against orange grove owners for injuries sustained while driving vehicle used to pick oranges. The Circuit Court, St. Lucie County, Rupert Jason Smith, J., entered judgment for employee, and owners appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Klein, J., held that owners were not liable for employee's injuries, since they did not exercise control over independent contractor.

Reversed and remanded.

ON MOTION FOR REHEARING

KLEIN, Judge.

The opinion of this court filed February 23, 1994, is withdrawn and the following opinion, which is identical except for footnote 1, is substituted. Appellee's motion for rehearing is denied.

Plaintiff injured himself while using equipment owned by his employer. He sued the defendants, for whom his employer was performing services as an independent contractor, on the theory that the defendants exercised direction and control over the manner in which the independent contractor was carrying out its work and negligently caused the plaintiff's injury. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff, and defendants appeal, arguing that they were not participating in the details of the work so as to make them liable to the employee of an independent contractor. We agree and reverse for entry of a directed verdict.

Defendants are grove owners/operators (grove owners) who employed Gordy Harvesting to pick its fruit. It is undisputed that Gordy was an independent contractor.

The independent contractor's job was to remove the fruit from the trees and get it to the edge of the orange grove, where it could be transported by another contractor to a processing factory. The independent contractor employed fruit pickers including plaintiff and owned the equipment which it used, including vehicles known as goats. A goat is a 2 1/2 ton dump truck, which has been stripped down and reconfigured by the addition of a high-lift bin and a boom. Goats have no doors or seatbelts and are specifically designed to be used in citrus groves. They are not designed for use on the highways, however, they are routinely driven on the highways.

The workers pick the fruit from the trees and put it into tubs. The goat's boom lifts the tubs and then tilts them, dumping the fruit into the goat's bin. The goat is then driven to the edge of the grove so that the fruit can be loaded onto trucks, which deliver the fruit to a processing factory. When loaded with fruit a goat has a higher center of gravity than when empty, which makes it more susceptible to rolling over in a turn.

[1] Plaintiff was injured, while driving a goat loaded with fruit from one grove to another, when he turned a corner too fast and caused the goat to roll over. His cause of action against the defendant grove owners was based on the theory that defendants' foreman negligently "directed" that this goat be moved from one grove to another, 2 1/2 miles away, without making sure that the goat was unloaded before it made the trip. Plaintiff argues that if the grove owners had a truck at the edge of the grove so that the goat could have been unloaded prior to being driven to the next grove, the center of gravity would have been lower, and it would not have rolled over.

[2] Generally one who hires an independent contractor is not liable for injuries sustained by employees of the independent contractor. In Conklin v. Cohen, 287 So.2d 56, 60 (Fla.1973), however, our supreme court *39 held that there was an exception to this rule where the owner actively participates "to the extent that he directly influences the manner in which the work is performed" and negligently creates or allows a dangerous condition to exist resulting in injury to the employee of the independent contractor. Viewing the facts in a light most favorable to plaintiff, we conclude that this case falls within the general rule, and not the Conklin exception.

The specific facts relating to defendants' involvement in this accident began when the defendant grove owners' foreman told the independent contractor's foreman that enough fruit had been picked at one grove, and that the crew was to pick fruit at another grove, a few miles away. At that time the goat which the crew was using was loaded with fruit, and there was no truck at the edge of the grove into which the fruit could be loaded so that the goat could be emptied. Defendant's foreman was aware that the independent contractor was going to take this loaded goat down to the next grove. Defendant's foreman helped the crew place a cover over the fruit, which was required when it was being transported because of the possibility of spreading citrus canker.

The independent contractor's foreman testified that he normally drove the goat, but since he had to drive the van to transport the workers to the next grove, he told the plaintiff to drive the goat. The plaintiff was not experienced in driving the goat on the highway, and, during the trip, as he was making a turn from the highway onto a dirt road, the goat rolled over and injured him.

Plaintiff bottoms his claim on the fact that defendants' foreman "directed" that this loaded goat be taken to the next grove; however, the most that can be said is that defendants' foreman directed the crew to pick at another grove and was aware that the crew would take its loaded goat to the other grove. [FN1]

FN1. Throughout his brief plaintiff's counsel emphasizes that defendants' foreman "directed" that the loaded goat be taken to the next grove, with record references. For example on page four of appellee's brief it is stated: One customary option available to Mr. O'Neal [defendants' foreman] in such a circumstance was to have Mr. Gordy's crew unload the goat into tubs at the edge of the grove, where they could be loaded into a semi-trailer at a later time (R. 951). Mr. O'Neal did not utilize this option, however. Instead, he "directed" Mr. Gordy's crew leader to move the fully-loaded goat 2 1/2 miles over a public highway to Ten Mile Creek's "Pennsylvania Grove," where an empty semi-trailer was available for unloading the goat (R. 524, 541-42, 564-66, 590-93, 606, 611-13, 647, 718, 918, 948, 954, 972-73). The use of quotes around the word directed is an indication that these were words used by someone else, and that someone else, particularly in light of the record references at the end of the sentence, was a witness. The American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language 1073 (new college ed. 1981) defines quotation marks as "a pair of punctuation marks used to mark the beginning and end of a passage attributed to another and repeated word for word." No witness testified that the defendants' foreman directed that the goat be taken to the next grove nor was there any testimony that could even loosely be interpreted as such. It is not only the use of quotation marks which is improper. With or without quotation marks this was a mischaracterization of the testimony which was central to the issue on appeal. In his motion for rehearing counsel for plaintiff points out that although the primary definition of quotation marks is as set forth above, there are secondary uses of quotation marks which do not indicate the exact words of another. He also notes that his brief contained other words in quotation marks. He says that he did not intend to mislead the court into thinking he was quoting testimony. Although we have decided, in fairness to counsel, to publish his explanation, it does not persuade us to reconsider our comment. Appellate judges should not have to wonder, when reading factual statements containing words in quotes followed by record references, what counsel intended.

In all of the cases relied on by plaintiff, including Conklin, the injury to the employee of the independent contractor occurred while work was being performed on defendant's premises and the defendant was actively participating in the direction of the work or failing to provide a safe place to work. Hogan

v. Deerfield 21 Corp., 605 So.2d 979 (Fla. 4th DCA 1992); Boatwright v. Sunlight Foods, Inc., 592 So.2d 261 (Fla. 3d DCA 1991); Life From the Sea, Inc. v. Levy, 502 So.2d 473 (Fla. 3d DCA 1987); Cadillac Fairview of Florida, Inc. v. Cespedes, 468 So.2d 417 (Fla. 3d DCA 1985); and Atlantic Coast Development Corp. v. Napoleon Steel *40 Contractors, Inc., 385 So.2d 676 (Fla. 3d DCA 1980).

In the present case, unlike those on which plaintiff relies, plaintiff was not injured because of any condition of the defendants' premises or equipment. Nor were defendants exercising any control over the manner in which this crew was performing its work. Defendants' foreman told the independent contractor's foreman when the crew had picked enough fruit at one grove, and where the crew should begin picking thereafter, but exercised no control over how the crew got to the next grove, what equipment was used, what route the crew took, how fast the crew went, or who drove the goat. The goat, which was allegedly dangerous, was owned by the independent contractor, not the defendants. The plaintiff, who was not experienced in driving the goat on the highway, was told to drive the goat by the foreman of the independent contractor, not the defendants.

In Van Ness v. Independent Construction Co., 392 So.2d 1017, 1019 (Fla. 5th DCA 1981), a wall collapsed during construction and injured the employee of an independent contractor. He sued the owner, alleging that it actively participated; however, the fifth district affirmed a summary judgment in favor of the owner because the facts reflected that there was insufficient participation by the owner, stating:

To impose liability on the owner for retention of control over an independent contractor, there must be such right of supervision or direction that the contractor is not entirely free to do the work his own way. Restatement of Torts (Second), section 414, comment (c).

In Skow v. Department of Transportation, 468 So.2d 422 (Fla. 1st DCA 1985), an employee of the general contractor constructing a bridge for the DOT was injured when he was working without a safety belt and fell. He sued the DOT claiming that it had assumed detailed control over the work and failed to enforce safety regulations. The first district affirmed a summary judgment for the DOT because the undisputed facts reflected that the DOT only participated to the extent necessary to ascertain the results of the work, and not to control the method of performance.

In the present case the facts are undisputed that the grove owners exercised no control over the independent contractor other than to direct the independent contractor in regard to the amount of fruit to be harvested and from which grove. The grove owners had no control over what equipment was used by the independent contractor, how that equipment was used or by whom it was used.

In the Boatwright case, on which plaintiff relies, the equipment on which the independent contractor was working on the owner's premises was designed and modified by the owner. In addition, the independent contractor had requested the owner to install a guardrail around the equipment, which was up on a platform, and the owner had refused to do so. In contrast, in the present case the allegedly dangerous piece of equipment was owned and operated under the direction of the independent contractor, and when the independent contractor was directed to pick at another grove, no one gave any indication to the grove owners' foreman that moving the loaded goat was a problem. If the defendants had owned the goat and required the independent contractor's employees to use it in a dangerous manner, defendants might well have been liable. We have been cited no authority, however, which would allow recovery from the party for whom the independent contractor was performing services under the circumstances of this case.

Plaintiff argues in the alternative that Maldonado v. Jack M. Berry Grove Corp., 351 So.2d 967 (Fla.1977), supports his position. In that case, which also involved an injury by a goat, the parents brought their three-year-old child to the citrus grove and put him in an empty tub while they filled other tubs with fruit. The driver of the goat, who was employed by an independent contractor, negligently backed over the child, who had climbed out of the tub. The supreme court held that because the owner of the grove was aware that workers were bringing small children on the premises, the fact that the dangerous condition was created by an independent contractor would not shield the employer/landowner from liability *41 if the employer/landowner negligently failed to alleviate the dangerous situation. The accident in the present case did not occur on defendants' premises. These defendants could not be held liable, as the Maldonado defendant was, for failing to alleviate a known dangerous condition on their premises. Maldonado does not, therefore, provide a theory to support recovery here.

We therefore reverse and remand for entry of a directed verdict in favor of the defendants.

No. 91 Civ. 0748(MJL).

April 29, 1996.

In retrocedent's action against broker for negligent misrepresentation in connection with negotiation of treaty retrocession contract, retrocedent moved for reargument of summary judgment granted in favor of broker. The District Court, Lowe, J., held that broker was not in special relationship with retrocedent and could not be held liable on theory of negligent misrepresentation.

Motion denied.

OPINION AND ORDER

LOWE, District Judge.

Before the Court is the motion of Plaintiff St. Paul Fire and Marine Insurance Company ("St. Paul"), pursuant to Rule 3(j) of the United States District Courts for the Southern and Eastern Districts of New York Joint Rules ("Local Rule 3(j)") and Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 59(e) ("Rule 59(e)", to reargue 200 or to "clarify" issues decided by this Court's December 30, 1995 Opinion. Specifically, St. Paul moves to reargue the portion of the December 30, 1995 Opinion that grants summary judgment to Defendant Heath Fielding Insurance Broking Ltd. ("Heath") on St. Paul's negligent misrepresentation claim. Alternatively, St. Paul asks the Court to "clarify" the portion of the December 30, 1995 Opinion for which it seeks reargument. For the reasons discussed below, St. Paul's motion is denied.

BACKGROUND

The facts and prior proceedings in this diversity action are fully set forth in the prior opinions of this Court. See St. Paul Fire and Marine Ins. Co. v. Heath Fielding Ins. Broking Ltd., 1993 WL 187778 (S.D.N.Y. May 25, 1993) ("May 1993 Opinion"); St. Paul Fire and Marine Ins. Co. v. Heath Fielding Ins.

Broking Ltd., 1996 WL 19028 (S.D.N.Y. December 30, 1996) ("December 1995 Opinion"). The facts relevant to the instant motion are presented below.

St. Paul, a Minnesota corporation engaged in the insurance and reinsurance business, entered into a treaty retrocession contract ("Contract") with Farex G.I.E. ("Farex") and its constituent French insurance/reinsurance companies. Heath, a United Kingdom insurance broker, negotiated the Contract on Farex's behalf. The Heath brokers were Duncan Playford ("Playford") and John MacKensie-Green ("MacKensie-Green"). Defendant Michael P. Kearney ("Kearney"), previously employed as an insurance underwriter by an affiliate of St. Paul, accepted the Contract on St. Paul's behalf. The Contract bound St. Paul to pay losses on certain property risks insured by American International Group, Inc. ("AIG") and reinsured by Farex over a two-year period.

Two years after the execution of the Contract, Farex sought payment from St. Paul of approximately $40 million allegedly due under the Contract. Thereafter, St. Paul filed this action. St. Paul asserted fraud and negligence claims against Heath. With respect to the negligence claim, Count VI of the Original Complaint alleged, inter alia, that Heath (1) knew or should have known that Kearney acted without authority, (2) did not take proper steps to alert St. Paul, and (3) made material misrepresentations concerning the risks insured under the Contract. Original Complaint ¶¶ 59-68, 92-96. The Original Complaint further alleged that "[a] reinsurance broker owes a duty of care as a professional to all parties in the negotiation and placement of reinsurance and retrocession transactions." Id. ¶ 93.

Heath moved to dismiss the Original Complaint. The Court referred the motion to Magistrate Judge Barbara A. Lee pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 636(b)(1)(B). The Magistrate Judge issued a Report and Recommendation dated November 15, 1991 ("November 1991 Report"). The November 1991 Report recommended dismissal of St.

Paul's negligence claim because St. Paul "ha[d] not identified any source of duty that could give rise to a cause of action for negligence against Heath." November 1991 Report at 62-64. St. Paul never objected to this portion of the Magistrate Judge's report.

In its May 1993 Opinion, the Court addressed various objections to a number of the rulings of the Magistrate Judge. St. Paul Fire and Marine Ins. Co., 1993 WL 187778, at *4-*8. As to the negligence claim asserted against Heath, the Court adopted the Magistrate Judge's recommendation, dismissing the claim with prejudice pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). Id. at *8. The Court granted St. Paul leave to amend its complaint against Heath to adequately allege fraud damages. Id.

In December 1993, St. Paul filed an amended complaint ("First Amended Complaint"). The First Amended Complaint expands St. Paul's claims that Heath and Farex misrepresented the risks insured under the Contract, alleging that Heath made misrepresentations to Kearney which induced him to sign the Contract. First Amended Complaint *201 ¶¶ 72-76. The First Amended Complaint adds a cause of action against Heath for negligent misrepresentation. Id. ¶¶ 189-95. Specifically, St. Paul alleges that Playford made false representations in November 1988 to induce Kearney to enter into the Contract on behalf of St. Paul. Id. at ¶¶ 48-50. The claim is based on a duty "to provide correct information" arising out of "possession of superior knowledge not available to Plaintiff; taking positive actions to conceal the true facts; knowledge that Plaintiff was acting under a mistaken belief; the duty to disclose present in every reinsurance transaction; or creating a false impression by providing some facts but concealing others." Id. ¶ 192.

After the completion of discovery, Heath moved for summary judgment on St. Paul's negligent misrepresentation claim. Heath argued that: (1) the Court had already ruled that Defendant owed no duty to Plaintiff to support a negligence claim, and (2) Plaintiff failed to demonstrate a "special relationship" between it and Defendant. (See Def.'s Mem. Supp. Mot. S.J. at 29-31.) That motion was subsequently referred to Magistrate Judge Lee to issue a report and recommendation.

The Magistrate Judge issued a Report and Recommendation dated July 26, 1995 ("July 1995 Report"). The July 1995 Report recommended that the Court grant Heath's motion for summary judgment. July 1995 Report at 46. The Magistrate Judge held that this Court's prior dismissal of St. Paul's negligence claim constituted the "law of the case," barring the negligent misrepresentation claim. Id. at 46-52. Alternatively, the Magistrate Judge found St. Paul's negligent misrepresentation claim legally insufficient because nothing in the record showed a "special relationship" between St. Paul and Heath. Id. at 52-54. St. Paul objected to this portion of the July 1995 Report pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 72.

In its December 1995 Opinion, the Court adopted the Magistrate Judge's finding that St. Paul's negligent misrepresentation claim was barred by the law of the case. St. Paul Fire and Marine Ins. Co., 1996 WL 19028, at *9. Thus, the Court declined to review the Magistrate Judge's alternate ruling concerning the sufficiency of the negligent misrepresentation claim. Id. at *10.

On January 31, 1996, St. Paul filed a motion, pursuant to Local Rule 3(j) and Rule 59(e), for reargument of the portion of this Court's December 1995 Opinion granting summary judgment to Heath on its negligent misrepresentation claim. St. Paul also moved for clarification of the December 1995 Opinion. For the reasons set forth below, the motion is denied.

DISCUSSION

I. St. Paul's Motion for Reargument

A. The Legal Standards of Rule 59(e) and Local Rule 3(j)

The standards governing a motion for reargument pursuant to Local Rule 3(j) and a motion to amend judgment pursuant to Rule 59(e) are identical. [FN1] See, e.g., Monaghan v. SZS 33 Assocs., L.P., 153 F.R.D. 60, 65 (S.D.N.Y.1994).

FN1. Because the standard for St. Paul's Local Rule 3(j) and Rule 59(e) motion is the same, the Court refers to the motion as a "motion for reargument."

Local Rule 3(j) provides in pertinent part: "there shall be served with the notice of motion [for reargument] a memorandum setting forth concisely the matters or controlling decisions which counsel believes the court has overlooked." S.D.N.Y. R. 3(j). In order for a court to grant reargument, a movant must demonstrate that the Court overlooked factual matters or controlling decisions put before it in the underlying motion. Walsh v. McGee, 918 F.Supp. 107, 110-11 (S.D.N.Y.1996); Monaghan, 153 F.R.D. at 65. A motion for reargument "may not advance new facts, issues, or arguments not previously presented to the court." Walsh, 918 F.Supp. at 110 (citing Litton Indus., Inc. v. Lehman Bros. Kuhn Loeb, Inc., No. 86 Civ. 6447, 1989 WL 162315, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Aug.4, 1989)).

[1][2] To avoid repetitive arguments on issues already considered fully by the court, *202 Local Rule 3(j) and Rule 59(e) are narrowly construed and strictly applied. In re Houbigant, Inc., 914 F.Supp. 997, 1001 (S.D.N.Y.1996); Ameritrust Co. Nat'l Ass'n v. Dew, 151 F.R.D. 237, 238 (S.D.N.Y.1993). A motion for reargument "is not a motion to reargue those issues already considered when a party does not like the way the original motion was resolved." In re Houbigant, 914 F.Supp. at 1001. Moreover, as this Court has previously held, reargument is not a "forum for new theories or for 'plugging the gaps of a lost motion with additional matters.'" CMNY Capital, L.P. v. Deloitte & Touche, 821 F.Supp. 152, 162 (S.D.N.Y.1993) (Lowe, J.) (citing McMahan & Co. v. Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette Secs. Corp., 727 F.Supp. 833, 833 (S.D.N.Y.1989)). Nevertheless, when the requisites of a motion for reargument have not been met, a court may address the merits of the movant's argument to apprise the movant that, even if reargument had been permitted, it would have been unsuccessful. See, e.g., id.

B. St. Paul's Claims for Reargument

St. Paul essentially makes the following three claims in support of reargument: (1) the Court "inadequately considered" caselaw that negligent misrepresentation sounds in fraud, which would preclude application of this Court's dismissal of its negligence claim as the law of the case; (2) the Court overlooked caselaw that its negligent misrepresentation claim is based on a different kind of duty than the previously dismissed negligence claim; and (3) the Court overlooked the discretionary nature of the "law of the case" doctrine in light of new evidence establishing a "special relationship" between it and Heath.

1. Negligent Misrepresentation as a Fraud Claim

[3] St. Paul's assertion that its negligent misrepresentation claim is a fraud-based claim raises the very same argument previously considered and rejected by this Court in its December 1995 Opinion. St. Paul Fire and Marine Ins. Co., 1996 WL 19028, at *9 n. 24. The Court held that negligent misrepresentation is not a fraud action, as its essential elements (e.g., duty of care) differ from fraud (e.g., scienter). Id. Because St. Paul has failed to cite any controlling decisions overlooked by the Court in the December 1995 Opinion, its motion for reargument on this ground is denied. [FN2]

FN2. In further support of this argument, St. Paul contends that this Court's May 1993 Opinion, which held that a fraud action may lie where a party has a duty to disclose information, casts doubt on its finding in the December 1995 Opinion that negligent misrepresentation is not a fraud action. (See Pl.'s Mem. Supp. Mot. Recons. at 4.) St. Paul never argued this point in its original motion. To do so in a motion for reargument is improper. See, e.g., McMahan & Co. v. Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette Secs. Co., 727 F.Supp. 833, 834 (S.D.N.Y.1989) (denying reargument on issue not previously raised by movant in original motion because motion cannot "plug gaps" with additional matters).

2. Duty Alleged in Negligent Misrepresentation Claim

St. Paul also seeks reargument because, it claims, a "fundamental" difference exists between the duty of a negligent misrepresentation claim (pleaded in the First Amended Complaint) and a negligence claim (pleaded in the Original Complaint). (See Pl.'s Mem. Supp. Mot. Recons. at 6-11; Pl.'s Mem. Further Supp. Mot. Recons. at 8.) St. Paul argues that the Court overlooked caselaw that its negligent misrepresentation claim is based on a different duty than the previously dismissed negligence claim. The Court, however, did not "overlook" St. Paul's "new duty" claim. To the contrary, the Court's December 1995 Opinion explicitly addressed the argument, [FN3] but simply did not agree with *203 Plaintiff's characterization. St. Paul Fire and Marine Ins. Co., 1996 WL 19028, at *10. The Court found no fundamental difference between the negligent misrepresentation claim, which was simply more detailed, and the previously dismissed negligence claim. Id. at *10 n. 25. The court held that the duty element of both claims "arose out of the same factual predicate." Id. at *10.

FN3. In fact, the December 1995 Opinion discusses the same paragraphs of the Original Complaint and the First Amended Complaint that St. Paul cites in its Memorandum of Law in Support of Motion for Reconsideration or Reclarification. Compare St. Paul Fire and Marine Ins. Co., 1996 WL 19028, at *9-*10 n. 25 (discussing ¶¶ 68, 93-94 of Original Complaint in conjunction with ¶¶ 72-75, 190, 192 of First Amended Complaint) with Pl.'s Mem. Supp. Mot. Recons. at 10-11 (comparing ¶¶ 68, 94 of Original Complaint with First Amended Complaint).

Here, once again, St. Paul offers no set of facts or caselaw overlooked by the Court in reaching its determination. [FN4] Even if the Court granted reargument on this ground, St. Paul's "new duty" claim is unavailing. In the Original Complaint, St. Paul alleged that "[a] reinsurance broker owes a duty of care as a professional to all parties in the negotiation and placement of reinsurance and retrocession transactions." Original Complaint ¶ 93. Similarly, in its motion papers, St. Paul bases its negligent misrepresentation claim on "allegations that Heath acted as a professional independent reinsurance broker." (See Pl.'s Mem. Supp. Mot. Recons. at 7.) These claims allege the same duty, that of a "professional broker" to a reinsurer. Thus, contrary to St. Paul's argument, no new duty has been asserted.

FN4. St. Paul also argues that the Court overlooked the fact that the Original Complaint did not include a negligent misrepresentation claim and, thus, incorrectly "conclud[ed] that the new negligent misrepresentation claim was always part of St. Paul's negligence claim that had been dismissed." (See Pl.'s Mem. Supp. Mot. Recons. at 9-10.) Once again, St. Paul attempts to make arguments not previously raised in its original motion. Thus, reargument is inappropriate on this ground. In any event, St. Paul's argument is unpersuasive because it misperceives this Court's "law of the case" ruling. Contrary to St. Paul's reading of the Court's December 1995 Opinion, the Court did not find that St. Paul pled negligent misrepresentation in the Original Complaint, thereby requiring dismissal under the "law of the case" doctrine. Rather, the Court discarded St. Paul's negligent misrepresentation claim because it agreed with the July 1995 Report's finding that St. Paul "had not identified any source of a duty that could give rise to a cause of action for negligence against Heath." St. Paul Fire and Marine Ins. Co., 1996 WL 19028, at *9. This finding pertained to all negligence claims, including negligent misrepresentation. Cf. Hudson Eng'g Assocs. v. Kramer, 204 A.D.2d 277, 277, 614 N.Y.S.2d 157, 158 (2nd Dep't 1994) (upholding summary judgment for defendant on negligence and negligent misrepresentation claims because no triable issue of fact existed as to whether defendant owed duty of care to plaintiff).

3. Failure to Properly Exercise Discretion

St. Paul argues that the Court "failed to give proper consideration" to the discretionary nature of the law of the case doctrine in light of new facts evidencing its "special relationship" with Heath. (See Pl.'s Mem. Supp. Mot. Recons. at 11-13.) St. Paul, however, did not make this argument before the Court in its original motion. This new assertion, therefore, does not provide a basis for reargument. See, e.g., Walsh, 918 F.Supp. at 114-15 (denying reargument because movant did not raise argument in original motion).

C. Negligent Misrepresentation Claim Would Still Fail

[4] Even if the Court granted St. Paul reargument on its "special relationship" claim, it would prove unavailing. In the July 1995 Report, Magistrate Judge Lee found St. Paul's negligent misrepresentation claim legally insufficient because the record failed to reflect a "special relationship" between St. Paul and Heath. July 1995 Report at 52-54. The Court agrees.

[5][6] Under New York law, there is no cause of action for negligent misrepresentation absent a "special relationship of trust or confidence between the parties." American Protein Corp. v. AB Volvo, 844 F.2d 56, 63-64 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 852, 109 S.Ct. 136, 102 L.Ed.2d 109 (1988). Something more than the trust and reliance between an ordinary buyer and seller must be established. Id.; Estate of T.C. Sabarese v. First Nat'l Inv. Corp., No. 92 Civ. 8139(LAP), 1994 WL 573320, at *4 (S.D.N.Y.1994). Furthermore, to establish a special relationship, an "arm's length business relationship is not enough." United Safety of Am., Inc. v. Consolidated Edison Co., 213 A.D.2d 283, 623 N.Y.S.2d 591, 593 (1st Dep't 1995); see, e.g., Banque Arabe Et Int'l D'Investissement v. Maryland Nat'l Bank, 819 F.Supp. 1282, 1292-93 (S.D.N.Y.1992) (no "special relationship" found between sophisticated financial institutions who negotiated agreement in arms-length transaction), aff'd, 57 F.3d 146 (2d Cir.1995). Finally, where no triable issue of fact as to the "special relationship" element exists, summary judgment on the negligent misrepresentation claim is appropriate. See, e.g., Congress Finan. Corp. v. John Morrell &

Co., 790 F.Supp. 459, 474 (S.D.N.Y.1992) (granting summary judgment for defendant on negligent misrepresentation claim upon finding no evidence that parties had "closer degree of trust and confidence" than ordinary contractual relationship).

[7][8] St. Paul contends that a professional "independent insurance broker owes a duty of care" to a third-party reinsurer who contracted with its principal. (See Pl.'s Mem. Supp. Mot. Recons. at 8, 13 (citing Ambassador Ins. Co. v. Truly Nolan of Am., Inc., 514 F.Supp. 985 (S.D.N.Y.1981) ("Ambassador I").) St. Paul's argument fails. An ordinary relationship of broker to insurer does not, by itself, give rise to a "special relationship." See Ambassador Ins. Co. v. Euclid Servs., Inc., No. 80 Civ. 1235 (CBM), 1984 WL 341 (S.D.N.Y.1984) ("Ambassador II"). [FN5] St. Paul asks this Court to extend the law to permit any conduct by a broker with regard to reinsurer who contracts with its principal to result in a "special relationship." This request has no basis in law or the facts of this case.

FN5. St. Paul's reliance on Ambassador I is unpersuasive, as the court subsequently dismissed plaintiff insurer's negligent misrepresentation claim on a motion for summary judgment. See Ambassador II, 1984 WL 341, at *4. In that case, the court held that no "special relationship" arose, as a matter of law, from the "normal relationship of broker to insurer." Id. Two factors convinced the court that no "special relationship" existed between the parties. First, there was no contract binding plaintiff insurer and defendant broker. Id. Second, "nothing in their conduct [during negotiations] created a special relationship." Id. Because plaintiff failed to show that defendant had assumed obligations beyond the conventional duties of a broker as in other cases, the court granted summary judgment on the negligent misrepresentation claim to defendant. Id. In this case, nothing in the record suggests that Heath assumed any responsibilities beyond its conventional duties as a broker.

St. Paul also argues that its "face-to-face negotiations" with Heath give rise to a "special relationship." (See Pl.'s Mem. Supp. Mot. Recons. at 13 (citing MEI Int'l Inc. v. Schenkers Int'l Forwarders, Inc., 807 F.Supp.

979 (S.D.N.Y.1992); Polycast Technology Corp. v. Uniroyal, Inc., 792 F.Supp. 244 (S.D.N.Y.1992).) [FN6] Contrary to St. Paul's assertions, "ordinary arm's length negotiations" do not create a special relationship sufficient to sustain an action for negligent misrepresentation. American Protein Corp., 844 F.2d at 64; see also, Accusystems, Inc. v. Honeywell Information Sys., Inc., 580 F.Supp. 474, 481 (S.D.N.Y.1984) (finding no special relationship between plaintiff buyer and defendant seller after months of negotiations and assurances by defendant's salesmen as to quality of goods); Sanitoy, Inc. v. Shapiro, 705 F.Supp. 152, 155 (S.D.N.Y.1989) (if seller's "representation that a buyer can rely on his expertise and the buyer's reliance were enough to create the necessary special relationship, the exception would swallow the rule.").

FN6. In further support of this argument, St. Paul cites Mallis v. Bankers Trust Co., 615 F.2d 68, 82-83 (2d Cir.1980), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1123, 101 S.Ct. 938, 67 L.Ed.2d 109 (1981). The Mallis court applied the majority rule, derived from § 552 of the Restatement (2d) of Torts, which provides: "that the seller be acting in the course of his business, that the information be supplied for the guidance of the buyer, and that the buyer justifiably relied on it." Id. at 83. The Second Circuit predicted that the New York courts would adopt the Restatement test. Id. However, in 1989, the New York Court of Appeals rejected the Restatement test, adopting the more-restrictive limited privity rule. See Ossining Union Free Sch. Dist. v. Anderson, 73 N.Y.2d 417, 541 N.Y.S.2d 335, 338, 539 N.E.2d 91, 95 (1989) (defining duty element "more narrowly than other jurisdictions" and rejecting Restatement rule). Accord Susan L. Martin, If Privity is Dead, Let's Resurrect It: Liability of Professionals to Third Parties for Economic Injury Caused By Negligent Misrepresentation, 28 Am. Bus. L.J. 649, 656 (1991) (noting Ossining's rejection of Restatement's actually foreseen test and adoption of limited privity rule); Michael W. Martin, Fairness Opinions and Negligent Misrepresentation: Defining Investment Bankers' Duty to Third-Party Shareholders, 60 Fordham L.Rev. 133, 153-156 (1991) (same). Thus, Mallis is unpersuasive.

The cases upon which St. Paul relies to support this argument are not analogous. In *205 MEI Int'l Inc., the plaintiff sought the professional advice of the defendant, a customs broker that "held itself out as an expert." 807 F.Supp. at 986. The court imposed a duty of care on the defendant because the plaintiff's specific request that the defendant act as an "honest broker," as it had done on two prior occasions, created a reasonable expectation between the parties that the plaintiff would rely on the defendant's professional advice. Id. Here, on the other hand, Heath negotiated with St. Paul on Farex's behalf. There is nothing in the record to suggest that St. Paul sought Heath's advice. Nor does the evidence in the record support a finding that Heath acted as a "broker" ("honest" or otherwise) on St. Paul's behalf.

Polycast is also distinguishable. In that case, the corporate defendants sold their subsidiary to the plaintiff. Polycast, 792 F.Supp. at 247. In denying defendants' summary judgment motion, the court found a special relationship between the parties because the defendants "repeatedly vouched for their projections" of the earnings of the subsidiary, had superior information throughout the negotiations, and formed a new corporation capitalized with over $100 million to effect the transaction. Id. at 270. In this case, by contrast, no evidence suggests, nor does St. Paul assert, that Heath made assurances, promises, or warranties to induce St. Paul to sign the Contract. No evidence in the record supports a finding that the negotiations for the Contract required any additional effort or investment by Heath to effect the transaction.

Lastly, St. Paul argues that the "long-term relationship between Kearney and Heath" gives rise to a "special relationship." (See Pl.'s Mem. Supp. Mot. Recons. at 14 (citing Thomas v. N.A. Chase Manhattan Bank, 1 F.3d 320 (5th Cir.1993).)) St. Paul's reliance on Thomas is misplaced. In that case, an investor, not a party to the case, hired defendant broker to locate an investment partner. Thomas, 1 F.3d at 322. Defendant contacted plaintiff, its business cohort on other projects, as a prospective partner for the investor. Id. at 327. Defendant sought a broker's fee from plaintiff and the investor. Id. at 324. Plaintiff formed a partnership with the investor based on defendant's assurances that the investor was a "highly-valued client"; the relationship, however, proved ruinous. Id. at 322.

Plaintiff sued defendant for negligent misrepresentation and the court found a "special relationship" between the parties based on their prior dealings and evidence in the record that defendant approached plaintiff for a "broker's fee." Id. at 327. The court held that defendant "was not directly opposite" to plaintiff in the transaction, but instead served as an "intermediary" between plaintiff and the investor. Id. at 324. Here, nothing in the record suggests that Heath served in any way as a broker on St. Paul's behalf or that Heath acted as an "intermediary" between St. Paul and Farex. Thus, Thomas is inapposite.

As the foregoing discussion has demonstrated, the cases finding a "special relationship" between parties with prior or ongoing dealings involve more intimate associations than ordinary business transactions. See, e.g., Brown v. Stinson, 821 F.Supp. 910, 915 (S.D.N.Y.1993) (finding "special relationship" between defendant investment advisor and plaintiff because plaintiff relinquished control of her money to defendant and viewed defendant as her advisor); Mathis v. Yondata, 125 Misc.2d 383, 480 N.Y.S.2d 173, 178 (Sup.Ct. Monroe County 1984) (denying defendants' motion for summary judgment on negligent misrepresentation claim because detailed promises, representations, and warranties made by defendants for purpose of guiding plaintiffs in business relationship created "special relationship" between parties); Coolite Corp. v. American Cyanamid Co., 52 A.D.2d 486, 384 N.Y.S.2d 808, 811 (1st Dep't 1976) (finding "intrinsically [] more intimate association" than ordinary business relationship between parties because defendant required plaintiffs to form new company with solid capitalization before parties could enter distributorship agreement); see also supra pp. 204-05 (distinguishing MEI, Polycast, and Thomas).

Nothing in the record shows that Heath committed itself to any additional effort, expense, or warranty with regard to the Contract. As evidence of a special relationship, *206 St. Paul offers: (1) Kearney's testimony concerning his prior dealings with Heath and their discussions about the Contract, and (2) MacKensie-Green's testimony regarding his relationship with Kearney. This evidence, however, does not fall within the rubric of essential factors required by caselaw to create a "special relationship."

The portion of Kearney's deposition relied upon by St. Paul indicates the following: (1) Kearney first spoke to Heath about the Contract in mid-October 1988; (2) Kearney requested additional loss information from Heath; (3) Playford told Kearney that the lineslip was "running very well, although some of the accounts still had a way to go" before executing the renewal slip; and (4) Kearney dealt primarily with Playford and MacKensie-Green at Heath, which was one of the top five brokers providing business to St. Paul. (See Pl.'s Objections July 1995 Report at 26-27 (citing Kearney Dep. at 13, 18-19, 1250, 1283-85 attached at Ex. B, at G and H to App. Exs. Pl.'s Objections July 1995 Report ("Kearney Dep.")).) This testimony shows nothing more than an arm's length business transaction. [FN7]

FN7. A portion of the Kearney deposition which St. Paul fails to cite supports the Court's conclusion. In his testimony, Kearney made clear that St. Paul and Heath occupied "opposing" sides, negotiating vigorously to achieve their own ends. See Kearney Dep. at 21-22 (describing negotiations as "we were at opposing [sides]--it's quite normal for a broker--we call it broking, to broke an underwriter, It's how business is done."). Kearney further testified that he independently judged Heath's presentation of the Contract, which he skeptically viewed as a "broker argument." See id. at 32 ("I agreed with [Playford] ... that the worst case scenario ... would be about $2-1/2 million.... Now, John's a broker.

This was part of his broker argument, but given what we were discussing, I agreed with his analysis").

It Is So Ordered.

976 F.Supp. 198

In its brief, St. Paul asserts that "MacKensie-Green and Kearney testified that they had a relationship of trust and reliance." (See Pl.'s Mem. Supp. Mot. Recons. at 14.) In fact, MacKensie-Green testified that he had a "good relationship" with Kearney. (See MacKensie-Green Dep. at 158.) The fact that the parties had a "good relationship" does not evidence that they enjoyed a special relationship more "intimate" than an ordinary business relationship.

END OF DOCUMENT

Accordingly, the court finds nothing in the record to support the existence of a special relationship between St. Paul and Heath. Thus, even if the Court were to grant reargument, Heath would again prevail on its motion.

II. St. Paul's Motion for Reclarification

St. Paul asks the Court to clarify the portion of the December 1995 Opinion that states: "[t]he Magistrate Judge found that Plaintiff failed to point to any duty owed to St. Paul by Heath." (See Pl.'s Mem. Supp. Mot. Recons. at 16 (citing St. Paul Fire and Marine Ins. Co., 1996 WL 19028, at *9.)) St. Paul claims that, without clarification, "Heath might argue that, in the context of St. Paul's fraud claim, this Court had determined that it would not have a duty to disclose omitted material facts to St. Paul...." (Id.) The Court's December 1995 Opinion, however, made clear that its prior dismissal of St. Paul's negligence claim precluded St. Paul from pleading additional negligence claims. St. Paul Fire and Marine Ins. Co., 1996 WL 19028, at *9. In no way does the December 1995 Opinion suggest that St. Paul's fraud claim is now dismissable. Thus, that portion of the December 1995 Opinion is self-explanatory and need not be clarified.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, St. Paul's motions for reargument and clarification of its December 1995 Opinion are denied.

Supreme Court, New York County.

STAN WINSTON CREATURES, INC. and Stan Winston, Plaintiffs,

v.

TOYS "R" US, INC., Warren Kornblum,
Andrew R. Gatto, Greg Staley, and John Eyler, Defendants.

No. 604183/02.

Sept. 1, 2004.

HERMAN CAHN, J.

*1 Defendants move to dismiss the amended complaint for failure to state a cause of action, CPLR 3211(a)(7), and for failure to plead fraud and negligent misrepresentation with the requisite detail, id., 3016(b). The complaint essentially claims that defendants made false representations in order to induce plaintiffs to enter into a licensing agreement.

The Facts as Alleged:

Plaintiff Stan Winston is an award winning creator of creature-figures for the film industry. Plaintiff Stan Winston Creatures, Inc., is a production company, wholly-owned by Winston. Defendant Toys "R" Us is a retailer of toys and children's products. The individual defendants were executives at Toys "R" Us.

In the fall of 2000, plaintiffs were designing monster figures for the production of a motion picture series called "Creature Features," to be aired on the Cinemax and Home Box Office ("HBO") cable networks. The figures created for these movies were to become the basis of a new line of high-quality collectible toys.

In February 2001, the figures were displayed at a toy industry fair. They evoked significant interest from retailers (Complaint ¶ 11). At that time, plaintiffs and Toys "R" Us discussed a possible license for Toys "R" Us to market, promote, and sell the figures. A licensing agreement was entered into on July 3, 2001 between Stan Winston Creatures, Inc., and Toys "R" Us (id., ¶ 21, Ex. A).

Plaintiffs allege that defendants made fraudulent representations to induce them to enter into the agreement (Complaint ¶¶ 13-18). They allege that on April 3, 2001, defendants Eyler, Kornblum, and Staley met with Winston to discuss entering into an agreement. Eyler brought a scale model of the new Toys "R" Us store located in Times Square, to the meeting, and stated that Toys "R" Us would create a permanent Stan Winston "store within a store" at that prominent retail location (id., ¶¶ 13-14). Eyler asserted that the Winston store would "grow as the business grew" and would be in place for the opening ceremony of the new Times Square store, which was to be a major public relations extravaganza (id., ¶ 15). Plaintiffs assert that they were told by Eyler that he planned to create a new image for Toys "R" Us, and change the store from a toy supermarket to a more upscale store that sold exclusive products (id., ¶ 16). Eyler, Kornblum, and Staley are further alleged to have represented that the Winston figures would be sold in all Toys "R" Us stores (id., ¶ 17).

Kornblum is alleged to have told Winston, on a June 1, 2001 conference call with Staley and defendant Gatto, that Toys "R" Us had 708 stores in the United States and stores in 26 other countries "and that the toys would be sold in all of these countries and stores throughout the world and that hundreds of thousands of collectors came into Toys 'R' Us to buy such toys" (Complaint ¶ 18). Gatto is alleged to have claimed that Toys "R" Us "had an established customer base for the toys and that Toys 'R' Us could bring down the cost of making the toys because Toys 'R' Us had leverage with factories" (id.).

*2 The Licensing Agreement is for an initial term of three years with an option to renew, and contains (1) a general merger clause; (2) indemnification clauses for both licensee and licensor; (3) a requirement for Toys "R" Us to make an advance payment of $1,000,000.00 to Stan Winston Creatures, Inc.; (4) a clause stating that the territory covered by the Agreement was "[w]orldwide, in all distribution channels currently existing or hereafter developed, including, without limitation, retail stores and the internet;" (5) a provision that the licensor would source the factories to manufacture the first two series; [FN1] (6) a provision that the parties would mutually select the factories for all series thereafter, with the licensor having final approval over the selection; (6) a requirement that the licensee purchase a minimum of 125,000 units for resale in each series during the term; and (7) a termination provision for the licensee, providing that the licensor has 30 days to cure; but that if the default went uncured, the licensor would receive all accrued royalties and the licensee would obtain a partial refund of the $1,000,000.00 original payment minus $1.00 for each item already produced (Complaint Ex. A).

FN1. "Series" is defined as a set of related action figures pertaining to the same motion picture; the first set was required to include five figures and later series were required to consist of no less than five (Agreement at 3).

The Agreement also included a specific "Promotions" clause stating, in part, that:

Licensee shall use its best efforts to market and promote the sale of Licensed Articles, including, without limitation, conducting a public relations campaign to announce the launch of each new series of Licensed Articles, the placement of Licensed Articles on end cap display fixtures in each store in which the Licensed Articles are sold and the placement for sale of Licensed Articles in Licensee's store in Times Square, New York City after such store is open.
(Agreement at 5.)

Plaintiffs allege that after executing the Agreement, they discovered that Toys "R" Us (1) did not own or control stores outside the United States and, therefore, could not require foreign stores to sell the figures; (2) did not have a ready market for high quality collectibles or hundreds of thousands of customers for the figures; (3) did not have leverage with factories, thereby resorting to the same manufacturer that plaintiffs had originally found; and (4) never intended to create a permanent "store within a store" for plaintiffs at its Times Square location. Plaintiffs assert that Toys "R" Us only designed their project to be temporary, and that it only briefly featured the Stan Winston figures as part of a retail exhibit (Complaint ¶ 19).

Plaintiffs further allege that Toys "R" Us refused to manufacture, market, and sell the figures, and to pay royalties and design costs (Complaint ¶ 45).

The amended complaint asserts five causes of action: (1) fraud against all defendants; (2) negligent misrepresentation against all defendants; (3) breach of contract against Toys "R" Us; (4) a demand for a declaration that the Agreement be deemed terminated due to breach by Toys "R" Us; and (5) a permanent injunction against Toys "R" Us, restraining it from any further use of plaintiffs' name in connection with the manufacturing, marketing, or sale of plaintiffs' products.

*3 Plaintiffs seek damages in excess of $25,000,000.00.

Discussion:

On a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, CPLR 3211(a)(7), "the court should accept as true the facts as alleged in the complaint, accord plaintiffs the benefit of every possible favorable inference, and determine only whether the facts as alleged fit within any cognizable legal theory" (Ark Bryant Park Corp. v. Bryant Park Restoration Corp., 285 A.D.2d 143, 150 [1st Dept 2001] [citations omitted]). "Moreover, the interpretation of an unambiguous contract is a question of law for the court, and the provisions of the contract delineating the rights of the parties prevail over the allegations set forth in the complaint" (id. [citations omitted]).

Fraud

*3 (Cite as: 2004 WL 1949071 (N.Y.Sup.), 2004 N.Y. Slip Op. 50969(U))

To plead a cause of action for fraud, plaintiffs must allege: (1) a representation of material fact; (2) the falsity of that representation; (3) knowledge by the party that made the representation that it was false when made; (4) justifiable reliance; and (5) injury (Kaufman v. Cohen, 307 A.D.2d 113, 119 [1st Dept 2003]). In addition, CPLR 3016(b) requires that a fraud claim be pleaded in sufficient detail to give adequate notice of the incidents complained of (Houbigant, Inc. v. Deloitte & Touche LLP, 303 A.D.2d 92, 97 [1st Dept 2003]; Fort Ann Cent. School Dist. v. Hogan, 206 A.D.2d 723, 724 [3d Dept 1994]).

Defendants respond that the alleged misrepresentations are not actionable in light of an express "Promotions" provision in the Agreement (at 5), making no mention of a permanent "store within a store." Rather, that provision obligates Toys "R" Us to implement the "placement" of the Winston figures on display fixtures, and "in Licensee's store in Times Square, New York City after such store is opened" (Complaint Ex. A at 5).

Defendants also argue that the merger clause in the Agreement (at 12) bars plaintiffs from asserting any reasonable reliance upon oral representations which may have preceded the Agreement.

Defendants' position is correct. The Agreement is permeated with details of the parties' working relationship under numerous chapter headings, including "Licensed Property," "Licensed Articles," "Territory," "Series," "Royalties," "Sourcing," "Promotions," and even a provision entitled "Stan Winston Website," which addresses the licensor's right to maintain an Internet website (Complaint Ex. A at 1-6). The Agreement also sets forth, in similar detail, matters such as "Representations," consisting of the parties' representations to each other in connection with their business relationship (id., at 6-8), "Indemnification," "Insurance," and "Miscellaneous" points of agreement (id., at 8-12). All the provisions are clear and unambiguous and are, therefore, enforceable no more or no less to the extent of the "plain meaning" of their terms (Greenfield v. Philles Records, Inc., 98 N.Y.2d 562, 569 [2002]). "Evidence outside the four corners of the document as to what was really intended but unstated or misstated is generally inadmissible to add or vary the writing" (W.W.W. Assocs., Inc. v. Giancontieri, 77 N.Y.2d 157, 162 [1990]).

*4 The Agreement contains both a no-oral-modification clause (at 11) and a merger clause (at 12). The merger clause provides:

This Agreement constitutes the entire agreement between the parties regarding the subject matter hereof and supersedes and replaces any and all prior agreements and understandings between them regarding such subject matter.

Plaintiffs' assertions of alleged pre-contractual representations, forming the foundation of the fraud claims, are not actionable because to recognize them would be to impermissibly add to the parties' written agreement, running afoul of the aforesaid principles. In addition, any possible reliance upon such representations would have been unjustified (Kaufman v. Cohen, supra) due to the fact that the Agreement clear and unambiguous as it is fully integrated, and permits of no other terms which are not expressed therein (Pine Equity NY, Inc. v. Manhattan Real Estate Equities Group LLC, 2 AD3d 248 [1st Dept 2003]). Indeed, this is especially so here, where the parties took pains to articulate their "Representations," which do not include the various alleged pre-contractual representations alleged herein (Complaint Ex. A at 6-8). Nor, as noted, do those representations appear in the specific provisions addressing the parties' "Business Terms and Conditions" (id., at 1-6).

Distinct of the foregoing, certain of the allegations fail to make out a viable claim under the pleading requirements peculiar to fraud. For example, it is alleged that defendants falsely represented that Toys "R" Us had an established customer base for the figures and an ability to keep manufacturing costs at a minimum due to its leverage with factories. Plaintiffs allege that Toys "R" Us representatives informed them, after they entered into the Agreement, "that sales could not be expected to be better because Toys 'R' Us' primary demographic was not the more mature collectors of such toys but was actually 'mothers buying for 6 and 7 year olds' " (Complaint ¶ 19[b]), and that Toys "R" Us would use the same manufacturer that Winston originally used to make the figures (id., ¶ 19[c]).

It is plaintiffs' burden to provide sufficient particularized allegations of all the essential elements of fraud, including a false statement (Lovett v. Allstate Ins. Co., 86 A.D.2d 545, 546 [1st Dept 1982] ["In proving an allegation of fraud, an essential element is that the representation must have been false when it was made"], affd 64 N.Y.2d 1124 [1985]). Plaintiffs fail to plead in sufficient detail how the above representations are false.

The information regarding Toys "R" Us' primary demographic does not contradict Toys "R" Us' alleged statement of having an established customer base for the figures. Even if it were true that Toys "R" Us customers primarily consisted of mothers buying toys for their 6 and 7 year olds, and that the figures did not appeal to these type of customers, this did not necessarily mean that there was no established customer base for the figures.

*5 In like fashion, the information regarding Toys "R" Us' intention to use the same manufacturer originally located by Stan Winston, does not necessarily run afoul of defendants' alleged representation of having leverage with factories to produce the figures more profitably. More importantly, the provision entitled "Sourcing" (Agreement at 4) provides that: (1) plaintiffs were responsible for sourcing the factories to manufacture the first two series; (2) the parties would mutually select the factories for all series thereafter; and (3) plaintiffs would retain final approval rights over the selection of factories. Plaintiffs' allegations, which are contradicted by the express terms of the Agreement, cannot be presumed to be true (e.g., Skillgames, LLC v. Brody, 1 AD3d 247 [1st Dept 2003]).

Accordingly, the motion to dismiss the causes of action for fraud is granted.

Negligent Misrepresentation

A claim for negligent misrepresentation exists where: (1) a special relationship of trust or confidence existed, thereby creating a strict duty for the defendant to impart correct information to the plaintiff; (2) the information given was false; and (3) there was reasonable reliance upon the information given (Hudson River Club v. Consolidated Edison Co., 275 A.D.2d 218, 220 [1st Dept 2000]). This claim cannot be predicated on a duty arising out of a contract; the duty must arise independent of contract (Rodin Props.-Shore Mall N.V. v. Ullman, 264 A.D.2d 367, 368 [1st Dept 1999]; Winter v. Beale, Lynch & Co., 198 A.D.2d 124, 125 [1st Dept 1993], lv denied 83 N.Y.2d 944 [1994]). CPLR 3016(b) also requires negligent misrepresentation claims to be pleaded in sufficient detail (Tarzia v. Brookhaven Natl. Lab., 247 A.D.2d 605 [2d Dept 1998]).

Plaintiffs argue that the negligent misrepresentation claim is properly pleaded, based on an asserted special relationship resulting from: (1) Toys "R" Us' superior knowledge; (2) the fact that the statements were made during face-to-face negotiations; and (3) defendants' intent to change Winston's position in reliance on those statements. In support, plaintiffs rely on R. Freedman & Son, Inc. v. A.I. Credit Corp. (226 A.D.2d 1002 [3d Dept 1996]) an action alleging nonpayment under an equipment lease. Plaintiff in that action did not claim negligent misrepresentation based on statements regarding the lease. Rather, it based the claim on defendants' statements made after the action was over, during the course of settlement negotiations. The court held that the statements made during the course of settlement negotiations established a special relationship between the parties (id., at 1003).

Here, by contrast, at the time the alleged representations were made, there was no special relationship between the parties. Plaintiffs fail to show anything more than arms' length dealing between separate business entities, which does not give rise to a special relationship to support a cause of action for negligent misrepresentation (Andres v. LeRoy Adventures, Inc., 201 A.D.2d 262 [1st Dept 1994]; Deven Lithographers, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 199 A.D.2d 9, 10 [1st Dept 1993]). Given the arms' length nature of the parties' relationship, the mere allegation that plaintiffs relied on advice received from Toys "R" Us about the production and marketing of toy figures, and that Toys "R" Us was aware of any such reliance, does not suffice to state a claim for negligent misrepresentation (Ravenna v. Christie's Inc., 289 A.D.2d 15, 16 [1st Dept 2001]).

*6 Moreover, as held above, any possible reliance upon the alleged negligent representations would have been unreasonable (Hudson River Club v. Consolidated Edison Co., supra) due to the fact that are inconsistent with clear, unambiguous, and fully integrated terms of the parties' written agreement (Pine Equity NY, Inc. v. Manhattan Real Estate Equities Group LLC, supra).

Accordingly, the motion to dismiss the causes of action for negligent misrepresentation is granted.

Breach of Contract

Defendants first move to dismiss the breach of contract claim to the extent that it is brought by Stan Winston in his individual capacity. This is based on the fact that the Agreement is executed by him, in his official capacity, on behalf of Stan Winston Creatures, Inc. (Complaint Ex. A at 12; see also, id., at 1 [defining only Stan Winston Creatures, Inc., as the "Licensor"]). Only the corporation has standing to sue for breach where it, as opposed to the individuals, is party to the contract (Laing Logging Inc. v. International Paper Co., 228 A.D.2d 843 [3d Dept 1996]; Del Castillo v. Bayley Seton Hosp., 172 A.D.2d 796 [2d Dept 1991]). Thus, the motion to dismiss the claims asserted by Stan Winston in his individual capacity is granted.

Defendants further move to dismiss the breach of contract claim to the extent that it seeks to recover damages in excess of those purportedly limited in the "Indemnification" section of the Agreement (at 8-9). Subdivision (iv) thereof provides:

Neither party hereto shall have any liability to the other parties pursuant to this Agreement for any indirect, incidental or consequential damages of any nature whatsoever, including without limitation loss of income, profits or savings, and this limitation of liability shall extend to the parties' indemnification obligations hereunder.

The court does not construe this portion of the Indemnification provision as applying to the breach of contract claim. "The gravamen of an action for indemnity is that both parties, indemnitor and indemnitee, are subject to a duty to a third person under such circumstances that one of them, as between themselves, should perform it rather than the other" (City of New York v. Lead Indus. Assoc., Inc., 222 A.D.2d 119, 125 [1st Dept 1996]). It is undisputed that defendants drafted the Agreement. Defendants fail to demonstrate how the above subdivision of the Indemnification provision waives plaintiffs' right to sue for damages sustained by defendants' own actions, as alleged, constituting breach of the contract.

Defendants further posit that certain of the allegations supporting the breach of contract claim are contradicted by the terms of the Agreement. Contrary to that position, the court finds that the first allegation that "Toys 'R' Us has failed and refused to market, promote and sell the Creatures throughout the world" is consistent with page 2 of the Agreement, which expressly defines the "Territory" covered by the Agreement as "Worldwide...." (Complaint Ex. A at 2.) By the same token, plaintiffs' second allegation that "Toys 'R' Us has failed and refused to proceed with the manufacture and production of additional series of Creatures" is consistent with the "Series" provision of the Agreement (at 3), which defines a variety of series of figures which are subject to the license granted by Winston to Toys "R" Us, and which, accordingly, Toys "R" Us bears a contractual duty to promote.

END OF DOCUMENT

*7 Accordingly, the motion to dismiss the breach of contract claim is denied. [FN2]

FN2. In view of the dismissal of the fraud and negligent misrepresentation claims, which were the only claims asserted against the individual defendants (Complaint at 7, 8), those defendants are severed from this action as parties (CPLR 1003).

Declaratory and Injunctive Relief

Defendants seek dismissal of the declaratory and injunctive claims to the extent that the underlying claim for breach of contract is dismissed. In light of the above disposition, this branch of the motion to dismiss is likewise denied.

Conclusion:

Accordingly, it is ORDERED that the motion to dismiss the causes of action for fraud is granted; and it is further

ORDERED that the motion to dismiss the causes of action for negligent misrepresentation is granted; and it is further

ORDERED that the motion to dismiss the causes of action asserted by Stan Winston, individually, is granted; and it is further

ORDERED that the motion to dismiss all causes of action as to the individual defendants is granted; and it is further

ORDERED that the motion to dismiss is, in all remaining respects, denied, and the action shall continue accordingly; and it is further ORDERED that the clerk shall enter judgment accordingly.

District Court of Appeal of Florida,
First District.

James M. STEPP, Jr., and Alison D. Stepp, Appellants,

v.

STATE FARM FIRE & CASUALTY COMPANY, Appellee.

No. 93-2023.

March 17, 1995.

Rehearing Denied July 18, 1995.

Homeowners' insurer sought declaratory judgment that policy did not cover insured's shooting of police officer. The Circuit Court, Duval County, Virginia Q. Beverly, J., ruled in favor of insurer. Police officer appealed. The District Court of Appeal held that shooting of insured's gun from back seat of police car was not "accident" and, therefore, was not "occurrence" within meaning of homeowners' policy.

Affirmed.

Benton, J., dissented and filed opinion.

(Formerly 217k435.36(6))

Insured's shooting of his gun from back seat of police car was not "accident" and, therefore, was not "occurrence" within meaning of homeowners' policy; although insured allegedly appeared peaceful and intoxicated, inference that he did not intend to fire gun directly at police officer would be based on speculation and conjecture, and officer's deposition was only evidence as to how shooting occurred.

*494 Michael R. Yokan of Kattman & Eshelman, P.A., Jacksonville, for appellants.

Jack W. Shaw, Jr., Harris Brown and Reginald Luster of Osborne, McNatt, Shaw, O'Hara, Brown & Obringer, P.A.,

Jacksonville, for appellee.

PER CURIAM.

This is an appeal of a final summary judgment in which the trial court determined that the undisputed facts showed the actions of the insured decedent, Billy Joe Herald ("Herald"), in shooting appellant James Stepp ("Stepp") were not an accident and thus did not constitute an occurrence under Herald's homeowner's insurance policy, and that the policy exclusion as to the actions of an insured which cause bodily injury which are either expected or intended or are the result of willful and malicious acts of the insured was applicable, thus there was no coverage. We affirm.

Herald shot Stepp while Stepp was serving as a reserve police officer in Jacksonville. According to Stepp's deposition, upon being informed that Herald appeared to be driving while intoxicated, he stopped Herald as Herald drove his automobile away from a convenience store. Several unmarked police cars followed behind Stepp. After Herald exited the car, Officer Stevens, who was dressed in plain clothes (and apparently had been driving *495 one of the unmarked cars) took over the investigation. Eventually, Stevens placed Herald in the back seat of Stepp's patrol car. Stepp did not frisk Herald because he thought Stevens had done so. Stepp did not handcuff Herald, who had been cooperative. Stepp then sat in the front seat of his patrol car waiting for a beat car to come and pick up Herald. Herald asked Stepp if he "was going to take him home or what." Stepp said no, that they were waiting for a beat car and that officer would decide what to do. About thirty seconds later Stepp heard a loud noise and felt pain in his head, and his front windshield shattered. Stepp exited the vehicle, drew his firearm, and took cover at the corner of the convenience store. Realizing that he was bleeding, he went inside the store and asked the clerk to call 911. Stepp did not return to the patrol vehicle. He was informed later that Herald had shot himself about an hour after he shot Stepp, and that Herald had died. Stepp later learned that Herald had a gun holster in his boot. There were no other witnesses to the shooting of Stepp.

Stepp sued Herald's estate on several theories, including negligence, alleging that while seated in the rear of the patrol car, Herald had carelessly handled the firearm, which discharged, permanently injuring Stepp. Subsequently, State Farm, which issued Herald's homeowner's insurance policy, sued for a declaratory judgment as to coverage and its duty to defend. Early in the proceedings, the two suits were consolidated for discovery only. Judge Nachman denied State Farm's motion for summary judgment in the suit for declaratory judgment, finding that State Farm had not shown that there were no genuine issues or that, as a matter of law, the shooting was intentional and not the result of negligence. The trial court also denied State Farm's motion for summary judgment, and granted Stepp's motion for partial summary judgment, on the question of State Farm's duty to defend. This court denied certiorari review of that issue. [FN1]

FN1. The order denying certiorari review stated simply that the court was "unable to conclude that the order which is the subject of the petition constitutes a clear departure from the essential requirements of law, resulting in a miscarriage of justice which could not be remedied by appeal after the entry of a final judgment."

Subsequently, the cases were consolidated for trial. State Farm again moved for summary judgment. In addition to the deposition testimony of Stepp, which had formed the basis of the first motion for summary judgment, State Farm submitted the results of Herald's autopsy, which showed a blood alcohol level of .37 at the time of his death; however, the two motions for summary judgment were virtually identical insofar as the determinative issues were concerned. Judge Beverly granted summary final judgment in favor of State Farm, finding as indicated above. On appeal the Stepps challenge the correctness of the trial court's ruling on the motion for summary judgment and the propriety of its ruling contrary to the predecessor judge.

The operative portion of the homeowner's policy provides:

Section II--Liability Coverage
Coverage L--Personal Liability

If a claim is made or suit is brought against an insured for damages because of bodily injury or property damage to which this coverage applies, caused by an occurrence, we will:

1. Pay up to our limit of liability for the damages for which the insured is legally liable; and
2. Provide a defense at our expense by counsel of our choice.

"Occurrence" is defined as used in Section II of the policy means "accident ... which results in ... bodily injury ... during a policy period."

Section II--Exclusions

1. Coverage L and Coverage M do not apply to:
 - (a) Bodily injury or property damage:
 - (1) which is either expected or intended by the insured;
 - or
 - *496 (2) to any person or property which is the result of the wilful and malicious acts of an insured. [FN2]

FN2. Appellants represented to this court that this excerpt from the policy is correct and is the only evidence of record of what the policy states.

Appellants contend that the record is silent as to what caused Herald's gun to discharge, and therefore the trial court erred in concluding that the undisputed material facts entitle State Farm to summary judgment. Further, appellants contend the trial court implicitly held that the discharge of the firearm was an intentional act not covered by the policy, and as such, the decision is contrary to the recent opinion in Prudential Property and Casualty Insurance Co. v. Swindal, 622 So.2d 467 (Fla.1993). Finally, appellants contend the trial court erred reversibly by overturning the ruling of a predecessor judge. We disagree with each of appellants' contentions.

"[T]he burden to prove the non-existence of genuine triable issues is on the moving party," Holl v. Talcott, 191 So.2d 40, 43 (Fla.1966). "If the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, admissions, affidavits and other evidence in the file raise the slightest doubt upon any issue of material fact than a summary judgment may not be entered." Connell v. Sledge, 306 So.2d 194, 196 (Fla. 1st DCA 1975), cert. dismissed, 336 So.2d 105 (Fla.1976). Appellants argue there is no evidence that the shooting was not an accident, and no evidence that Herald expected or intended to cause injury to Stepp, thus State Farm could not prevail on summary judgment.

Appellants admit that the record is silent as to what caused Herald's firearm to discharge when Stepp was shot in the head, and that Stepp's deposition testimony is the only evidence of record as to how the shooting occurred. It is also apparent in this case that, because there were no witnesses other than Stepp and Herald, and Stepp has presented his recollection of the event, no additional substantial evidence as to how the shooting occurred is available. Appellant argues the fact that Herald appeared peaceful and also extremely intoxicated would permit a jury inference that the shooting occurred by accident. [FN3] In response to questioning at oral argument, appellants mentioned the possibility of presenting evidence as to the trajectory of the bullet as a basis for inferring that Herald did not intend to fire the gun directly at Stepp; however, we agree with appellee that, in this case, such inferences would necessarily be based impermissibly on speculation and conjecture.

FN3. "The words 'accident' and 'accidental,' as used in insurance contracts, mean that which happens by chance or fortuitously, without intention or design, and which is unexpected, unusual, and unforeseen." 31 Fla. Jur.2d "Insurance" § 680.

We are cognizant of the rule that the plaintiff does not have to prove its case in response to a motion for summary judgment, Department of Transportation v. Spioch, 642 So.2d 788 (Fla. 1st DCA 1994) ("the movant must carry the burden of negating the existence of any basis of liability asserted against it; the plaintiff is not required to prove its case in response to a motion for summary judgment"). However, it is also the case that "to fulfill his burden, the movant must offer sufficient admissible evidence to support his claim of the nonexistence of a genuine issue.... If he succeeds, then the opposing party must demonstrate the existence of such an issue either by countervailing facts or justifiable inferences from the facts presented." DeMesme v. Stephenson, 498 So.2d 673, 675 (Fla. 1st DCA 1986) (emphasis supplied). The movant is not required "to exclude every possible inference from other evidence that may have been available." Id. We believe appellee, as the movant, met this requirement; under the unique circumstances of this case, it is not possible to reasonably infer from the facts available that the shooting was an accident. Thus there is no genuine triable issue as to whether an accident occurred within the policy coverage, and the trial court did not err in granting final summary judgment for State Farm. See generally Cassel v. Price, 396 So.2d 258 (Fla. 1st DCA 1981) (court concluded no view of the facts afforded reasonable conclusion of negligence by defendant; and summary judgment "is a proper and necessary means for accomplishing the purpose of terminating litigation short of a *497 jury trial, which satisfies the constitutional 'right of access' to the courts as a means of resolving civil disputes").

For a similar reason, we believe this case is distinguishable from Swindal. In Swindal, Castellano, the insured, who also did the shooting, was available to be a witness to the events surrounding the shooting, although the victim was unable to testify. A genuine issue remained in Swindal as to whether the gun discharged accidentally or intentionally, and there was evidence from which the trier of fact might conclude the gun was accidentally discharged, i.e., Castellano's testimony that he did not intend to shoot Swindal, but that the gun accidentally discharged during a struggle. [FN4] There is no such evidence in the present case, nor can any be presented, from which a jury might conclude the gun was accidentally discharged.

FN4. The central legal question in that case was whether an intentional injury exclusion in a homeowner's policy excluded "coverage for bodily injuries sustained where the insured committed an intentional act intending to cause fear, but bodily injuries may have been caused accidentally and were not expected or intended by the insured to result." The supreme court answered that question in the negative.

Appellants also argue that Judge Beverly could not grant summary judgment when Judge Nachman had refused to do so, based on Globe Aero Ltd, Inc. v. Air & General Finance Ltd., 537 So.2d 628 (Fla. 3d DCA 1988), in which the district court said that where the original trial judge entered a final default judgment, a successor judge could not review and reverse on the same facts the final order and decrees of his predecessor. In Whitlock v. Drazinic, 622 So.2d 142 (Fla. 5th DCA 1993), however, the court said a successor judge could grant final summary judgment on an amended motion for summary judgment where the previous judge had refused to grant summary judgment. The district court's theory was that if the original judge can reconsider and vary its own interlocutory orders up until the time final judgment is entered, i.e., could grant summary judgment after initially declining to do so, then a successor judge could also vacate or vary interlocutory orders. The instant case is more similar to Whitlock than to Globe, since it involves an initial interlocutory ruling denying summary judgment. We conclude the trial judge in the present case did not err in granting summary final judgment.

AFFIRMED.

JOANOS and WOLF, JJ., concur.

BENTON, J., dissents with opinion.

BENTON, Judge, dissenting.

A successor judge may revisit interlocutory orders entered in a case to which she succeeds before final judgment has been entered. Whitlock v. Drazinic, 622 So.2d 142 (Fla. 5th DCA 1993) (en banc) (affirming summary judgment entered by successor judge after predecessor judge had denied motion for summary judgment).

But entry of summary judgment is never appropriate in the absence of "sufficient admissible evidence to ... [demonstrate] the nonexistence of a genuine issue [of fact]." DeMesme v. Stephenson, 498 So.2d 673 (Fla. 1st DCA 1986).

A motion for summary judgment may only be granted if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories and admissions on file together with affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fla.R.Civ.P. 1.510(c). If the record reflects the existence of any genuine issue of material fact or the possibility of any issue, or if the record raises even the slightest doubt that an issue might exist, summary judgment is improper. Crandall v. Southwest Florida Blood Bank, Inc., 581 So.2d 593 (Fla. 2d DCA 1991); Gomes v. Stevens, 548 So.2d 1163 (Fla. 2d DCA 1989). Grissett v. Circle K Corp., 593 So.2d 291, 293 (Fla. 2d DCA 1992). The factual issue here is whether Mr. Herald intended or expected to do Officer Stepp bodily harm.

The fact "that the record is silent [i.e., inconclusive] as to what caused Herald's firearm to discharge," ante 496, is the very reason that the injured policeman is entitled *498 to have a jury decide whether, as he contends, it was accidental. Recently our supreme court held that summary judgment exonerating an insurance company under the same type of policy exclusion at issue here had to be reversed where the insured approached Swindal's car with his loaded handgun, safety off, finger on the trigger. He reached inside Swindal's car with both hands to grab what he thought was a gun.

Swindal then grabbed [the insured's] gun and, in the struggle, the gun fired... Prudential Property & Casualty Ins. Co. v. Swindal, 622 So.2d 467, 469 (Fla.1993). While the insured in Swindal "maintain[ed] that the gun accidentally discharged," at 469, and death has forever silenced Mr. Herald, the evidence surrounding the discharge of this gun is no less ambiguous.

An autopsy report revealed that Mr. Herald had a blood alcohol level of .37% at the time of his death. In contrast to the belligerent insured in Swindal, he was "very polite, very cooperative, very apologetic." Officer Stepp testified on deposition:

From what I could see in the front of my patrol car, he was trying to do everything the officers told him to do and was laughing about it and just, you know, no resistance, no argumentative points.

"[I]nsureds whose insane acts result in ... otherwise covered losses are not excluded from coverage by reason of an intentional acts exclusion." Brown v. The Travelers Insurance Co., 641 So.2d 916, 922 (Fla. 4th DCA 1994). The same rule should apply to those they injure.

For some time before the shot, Officer Stepp detected no movement, and assumed that Mr. Herald had passed out again. Except for the shot itself, nothing he detected in Mr. Herald's behavior evinced any intention to do Officer Stepp bodily harm. Officer Stepp's nonchalance as he sat within reach of Mr. Herald, although with his back to him, is eloquent evidence of this fact. Officer Stepp's deposition is the main source of record evidence about events that night. Nothing of record disproves the factual allegation that the gunshot was accidental.

The decision in Gulf Life Ins. Co. v. Nash, 97 So.2d 4 (Fla.1957) is instructive. There the insured attempted to frighten his friends by holding a gun to his own chest and pulling the trigger three times, believing all three chambers to be empty. The insured was killed when the gun discharged on the third trigger pull. The insured's "act" in pulling the trigger and attempting to frighten his friends clearly was intentional, but the insured's injury was deemed accidental within the meaning of the special accident insurance policy because the insured never intended to cause a fatal injury even though the shot flowed from an intentional act. Accordingly, the Court held the injury was covered by the policy in which the insurer had agreed to pay if the insured should meet his death by accidental means.

Swindal, at 470. Dissenting in Nash, Justice Thomas contended that the injury should be excluded from coverage on the ground that the injury was the foreseeable consequence of a "dangerous, foolhardy act, and although the result was not intended, the means were deliberate as distinguished from accidental." 97 So.2d at 7 (Thomas, J., dissenting in part).

Swindal, at 470. Under Nash, not even evidence of a dangerous, foolhardy and deliberate act on Mr. Herald's part would warrant summary judgment. On the authority of Swindal, Nash, Stuyvesant Ins. Co. v. Butler, 314 So.2d 567, 570 (Fla.1975) and Poole v. Travelers Ins. Co., 130 Fla. 806, 814, 179 So. 138, 141 (1937), I respectfully dissent from affirmance of a summary judgment predicated on much less.

Supreme Court, New York County, New York,
Special Term, Part I.

William STRUNA, Plaintiff,

v.

Erving WOLF, Daniel Wolf, Daniel Wolf, Inc., and The Metropolitan Museum of Art, Defendants.

By Original Summons and DANIEL WOLF, INC., Third-Party Plaintiff,

v.

Victor WEINER a/k/a Victor Wiener, Third-Party Defendant,

Brought in as a Party to Answer the Counterclaims Herein.

Jan. 15, 1985.

Action was brought against museum and buyers to recover a balance claimed to be owed upon a contract to purchase a sculpture as well as upon a promissory note and check executed in connection with the purchaser of the sculpture. Upon museum's motion for summary judgment, the Supreme Court, Special Term, New York County, David B. Saxe, J., held that: (1) no joint venture or principal-agent relationship existed as between museum and buyers with regard to purchaser of a sculpture and therefore museum, which was not a signatory to promissory note and dishonored check, could not be held liable to seller for a breach of contract and for payment of the promissory note and the check, and (2) museum could not be held liable on account of its curator's alleged negligence in appraising of a piece of artwork to an individual, who, unbeknownst to curator or museum, was not actual owner of the artwork, but rather consignee who later purchased the work for resale, purportedly in reliance upon curator's alleged negligent statements as to the artwork's authenticity and value.

Motion granted.

In order to state a claim for negligent misrepresentation or negligent appraisal it is essential that plaintiff demonstrate that defendant made his negligent statement with knowledge or notice that it will be acted upon.

*393 *1031 Robert J. Poulson, Jr., New York City, for plaintiff.

Lord, Day & Lord, New York City (Reigh F. Klann, Stephen J. Crimmins, New York City, of counsel), for defendant, Metropolitan Museum of Art.

DAVID B. SAXE, Justice.

The issue presented here is whether a museum (here, the Metropolitan Museum of Art) may be liable on account of its curator's allegedly negligent appraisal of a piece of artwork to an individual, who, unbeknownst to the curator or museum, was not the actual owner of the artwork, but rather the consignee who initially purchased the work for resale, purportedly in reliance upon the curator's alleged negligent statements as to the artwork's authenticity and value.

The plaintiff has sued to recover a balance claimed to be owed upon a contract to purchase a sculpture, as well as upon a promissory note and check executed in connection with this purchase by the defendants Erving Wolf, Daniel Wolf and Daniel Wolf, Inc. The defendant, Metropolitan Museum of Art ("Museum") although not a signatory to the note or check, is also named as a defendant on the contract related claims.

In January, 1982, Lewis Sharp, the curator of the American Wing for the Metropolitan Museum of Art was contacted by an *1032 art dealer, Mr. Victor Wiener, and was told that Mr. Wiener was showing a work created by the sculptor, Elie Nadelman entitled "La Femme Assise", on behalf of the plaintiff which he thought the museum might be interested in acquiring. On February 2, 1982, Sharp viewed the sculpture.

Sharp contends that after viewing the sculpture, he relayed to Mr. Wiener that the museum would not be able to purchase the artwork, in part because the procedure for acquisitions followed by the museum would take much longer than the time in which the plaintiff wanted to sell the sculpture, but that he would contact some private collectors who he thought might be interested in acquiring it. He contends that at no time did plaintiff ask him to render any appraisal, as to either the authenticity 394 or the value of the sculpture. He thereafter contacted the Wolfs, private collectors who viewed the sculpture and agreed to purchase it for $120,000. On February 11, 1982 the Wolfs paid plaintiff $15,000 and executed a promissory note for the balance of $105,000 payable February 16, 1982. These defendants also gave plaintiff a check for the same amount also dated February 16, 1982. The $105,000 has never been paid and the plaintiff has sued the defendants, including the museum asserting various causes of action for breach of contract and for payment of the promissory note and the check.

The plaintiff contends that the museum is liable as a party to the contract, although neither the promissory note nor the check was signed by it, because it was his understanding as communicated to him by Wiener, that the museum was the real party who was actually acquiring the sculpture with payment to be made by the museum's benefactors, collectively denominated the Wolfs. Thus, the plaintiff contends that neither Erving nor Daniel Wolf ever offered to purchase the sculpture individually, but rather throughout all negotiations and transactions, it was understood that the museum was purchasing the sculpture as a joint venture along with the Wolfs. Based on this theory of a "joint venture", the plaintiff contends that the Museum as well as the Wolfs are liable on the first three causes of action predicated on contract (Count I), on the promissory note (Count II) and on the dishonored check (Count III). He also seeks attorneys' fees in accordance with the terms of the contract (Count VI). As an alternative cause of action against the museum, the plaintiff states that the museum, at the request of the plaintiff, appraised the sculpture and advised the plaintiff that the sculpture was the genuine work of Elie Nadelman entitled "La Femme Assise"; that in reliance on said appraisal plaintiff purchased the sculpture believing it to be authentic; and that by *1033 reason of the foregoing, if the sculpture is not authentic, then the Metropolitan Museum of Art acted negligently in its appraisal causing plaintiff to sustain damages of at least $100,000.

The Museum has moved for summary judgment on each of these causes of action. Thus, any liability of the Wolfs to the plaintiff is not in issue on this motion.

[1] I conclude that the facts do not support any liability predicated on contract law as against the Museum. First, there is no writing indicating any such agreement to purchase the sculpture by the Museum as required by U.C.C. Sec. 2-201(1). Second, and most important, the facts as alleged do not support the conclusion that the Museum had promised to purchase the sculpture or that the plaintiff could, at any time, reasonably conclude that he could look to the Museum for payment. The plaintiff's theory of a collective agreement by the defendants based on a joint venture or principal and agent law as a vehicle for liability against the Museum is unsubstantiated and untenable. While the plaintiff accurately states the law with respect to the liability of joint venturers, the facts here support only the conclusion that the Museum's curator initially viewed the sculpture and introduced the Wolfs to the plaintiff. The fact that the parties may have intended for the sculpture to be on display at the Museum or that the Wolfs are regular benefactors of the Museum, having a gallery at the Museum named the Erving and Joyce Wolf Gallery in their honor, do not strengthen plaintiff's theory of contract liability against the Museum. Since I hold that no joint venture or principal-agent relationship existed as between the Museum and the Wolfs with regard to the purchase of the sculpture, summary judgment must be granted to the Museum dismissing not only the contract cause of action, but also the causes of action based on the promissory note and the dishonored check since the Museum was not a signatory to those instruments. Nor is the Museum liable to the plaintiff for legal fees under the agreement which it was not a party to and accordingly the Museum is granted summary judgment dismissing the cause of action seeking legal fees.

*395 [2] The assertion of a cause of action for negligent appraisal is particularly novel in this case because ordinarily it is asserted by the disappointed buyer of an item against the appraiser, rather than by the seller who, it is thought, would usually have no reason to request or rely upon an appraisal of the item which he already owns and seeks to sell. Upon closer scrutiny, the apparent reason for this deviation is that the plaintiff, at the inception of the negotiations, was not the actual owner of the 1034 sculpture, but rather a consignee who first purchased this piece for immediate resale to the Wolfs after the Museum's curator allegedly rendered an appraisal of the artwork.

The Museum alleges that these facts as to actual ownership of the sculpture were never disclosed to it and a review of the plaintiff's papers shows that he does not contend otherwise. The Museum further alleges that it believed that Struna was the actual owner of the sculpture.

Essentially, on this cause of action, plaintiff asserts the theory that he was a purchaser damaged by his reliance on the museum's appraisal of the artwork. Thus, whereas plaintiff stood in the shoes of a seller on the first three causes of action against the museum, the plaintiff, on the fourth cause of action now shifts his posture to that of a wronged buyer.

First, the Museum contends that it is entitled to summary judgment because it never in fact rendered an appraisal to the plaintiff. The plaintiff however vigorously disputes this fact and submits an affidavit from Victor Wiener which states that Wiener asked the Museum's curator to appraise and authenticate the sculpture for the plaintiff and that "after examining it [the curator] assured me that it was an authentic Nadelman and one of the best he'd ever seen." Based on the conflicting affidavits, a factual issue exists as to whether or not the museum appraised the sculpture. Thus, if this were the only ground urged by the Museum in support of their motion for summary judgment on this cause of action, I would be inclined to deny their motion.

The Museum, however, contends that even if it is found that there was an appraisal, dismissal of this cause of action is still warranted because: 1) there was no relationship between the Museum and Struna which would give rise to a duty of care by the Museum; and 2) the Museum had no knowledge or reason to know that Struna would act in reliance on any such appraisal.

A claim for negligent appraisal is in essence a claim for negligent representation. With respect to liability for negligent statements the law is:

Although it is a broad general rule that an action will not lie for negligent misrepresentations, there may be liability for damages resulting from the negligent utterance of words under certain circumstances. Thus, in some cases a negligent statement may be the basis for a recovery of damages. Liability in such cases arises only where there is a duty, if one speaks at all, to give the correct information. This involves many considerations. There must be knowledge, or its equivalent, *1035 that the information is desired for a serious purpose; that he to whom it is given intends to rely and act upon it; that, if false or erroneous, he will because of it be injured in person or property. Finally, the relationship of the parties, arising out of contract or otherwise, must be such that in morals and good conscience the one has the right to rely upon the other for information, and the person giving the information owes a duty to give it with care. Generally, therefore, negligent words are not actionable unless they are uttered directly, with knowledge or notice that they will be acted on, to one to whom the speaker is bound by some relation of duty, arising out of public calling, contract or otherwise, to act with care if he acts at all, or, as has been said, unless there is a duty, if one speaks at all, to give the correct information.

24 N.Y.Jur., Fraud and Deceit, Sec. 153; International Products Co. v. Erie Railroad 396 Co., 244 N.Y. 331, 155 N.E. 662 (1927), cert. denied 275 U.S. 527, 48 S.Ct. 20, 72 L.Ed. 408 (1927).

In support of its cause of action for negligent appraisal against the museum, the plaintiff cites a number of cases where an appraiser was held liable for the damages flowing from his negligent appraisal or words.

Thus, in Oestreicher v. Simpson, 243 N.Y. 635, 154 N.E. 636 (1924), the plaintiff hired the defendant to appraise certain jewelry which the plaintiff had informed the defendant that he desired to purchase. The defendant appraised the jewelry for more than its actual worth; the plaintiff relied on the appraisal and consequently overpaid for the jewelry. The plaintiff sued the defendant on a theory of negligence and prevailed.

Similarly, in Navarre Hotel & Importation Co. v. American Appraisal Company, 156 App.Div. 795, 142 N.Y.S. 89 (1st Dept.1913), the defendant-appraiser had been hired by and rendered a written report to the plaintiff's agent with respect to the value of certain items of property. Relying on defendant's appraisal the plaintiff took a chattel mortgage in the items of property in order to secure a debt owed to the plaintiff by the owner of the property. When the debtor defaulted in his obligations to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff liquidated the assets previously appraised, it was discovered that the defendant's appraisal had been grossly excessive. The plaintiff sued contending that due to the defendant's negligence and his reliance thereon, he had been damaged. The trial court dismissed the complaint because the plaintiff was an undisclosed principal. On appeal, the First Department reversed and ordered a new trial stating: "The jury, therefore, would have been justified in finding that the loss which the plaintiff sustained was due to the negligence of the defendant." Id. at 798, 142 N.Y.S. 89.

*1036 In Chemical Bank v. National Union Fire Insurance Co. of Pittsburgh, 74 A.D.2d 786, 425 N.Y.S.2d 818 (1st Dept.1980), app. withdrawn 53 N.Y.2d 864, 440 N.Y.S.2d 187, 422 N.E.2d 832 (1981) the court relying on White v. Guarente, 43 N.Y.2d 356, 401 N.Y.S.2d 474, 372 N.E.2d 315 (1977) stated:

"If it be shown that a real estate appraiser, retained by a property owner to make an appraisal that he knows the owner will use to obtain financing, makes it in a grossly negligent manner so as to inordinately overstate the value, we are not, unlike the dissent, prepared to hold the appraiser exempt from liability to the damaged financing party." Id., 74 A.D.2d at 787, 425 N.Y.S.2d 818.

I find that under the facts presented here, the requisite elements necessary for tort liability for negligent appraisal are lacking and the defendant therefore cannot be found liable as a matter of law.

As previously stated, neither the plaintiff (nor his agent) ever communicated to the defendant that the plaintiff was not the actual owner of the sculpture at the time the appraisal was allegedly requested and rendered. Specifically, nowhere does the plaintiff allege that the Museum or its curator knew or should have known that plaintiff only had the sculpture on consignment, that the plaintiff had not yet purchased it himself, or any other reason why the plaintiff might have relied on the curator's opinion as to the authenticity of the sculpture. So, the plaintiff fails to show how the Museum could have known that the plaintiff planned to act in reliance upon any statements of appraisal made by the curator.

[3] In order to state a claim for negligent misrepresentation (or negligent appraisal) it is essential that plaintiff demonstrate that the defendant made his negligent statement "with knowledge or notice that it will be acted upon." White v. Guarente, supra, 43 N.Y.2d at 363, 401 N.Y.S.2d 474, 372 N.E.2d 315; Courteen Seed Co. v. Hong Kong & Shanghai Banking Corp., 245 N.Y. 377, 157 N.E. 272 (1927). Plaintiff has failed to show that the defendant-museum believing plaintiff to be the owner of the sculpture, knew or could have known that plaintiff would act upon his statements. Further, there is no way that 397 the defendant could have known that the plaintiff would be injured if his appraisal was erroneous. International Products Co. v. Erie Railroad, supra.

Moreover, the cases routinely require the existence of a "special relationship" between the parties creating a duty of care owed to the plaintiff thus entitling the plaintiff to rely upon the defendant's representations. Whether or not a "special relationship" exists depends on many considerations, but more often than not, as demonstrated in the previously discussed cases, it arises out of a contract where the defendant was specifically *1037 employed for the purpose of rendering an appraisal to the plaintiff knowing that the plaintiff intended to rely on it. Here, on the other hand, by the plaintiff's own admission, it appeared that the plaintiff was acting at arm's length in attempting to achieve a sale of the sculpture to the museum. This relationship between the parties thus appears to be the very antithesis of the "special relationship" ordinarily required which would support holding the defendant to a higher duty of care than is otherwise required.

Therefore, I find that the Museum cannot be held liable to the plaintiff based on any claim that its curator rendered a negligent appraisal.

Motion granted.

THC HOLDINGS CORPORATION, Plaintiff,
v.
Geoffrey CHINN and Berwin Leighton,
Defendants.

No. 95 CIV. 4422(KMW).

Feb. 6, 1998.

OPINION and ORDER

WOOD, D.J.

*1 In this diversity action, the THC Holdings Corporation ("THC"), a corporation incorporated in Delaware, alleges that Geoffrey Chinn violated his fiduciary duties, and committed fraud and legal malpractice in his former capacities as director, secretary, and counsel for THC; THC also alleges that Berwin Leighton, the law firm in which Chinn is a partner, is also responsible for legal malpractice arising out of Chinn's activities as counsel for THC.

Defendants Chinn and Berwin Leighton move for judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(c). Because defendants have fashioned their motion as a motion for judgment on the pleadings prior to filing an answer to the complaint, their motion is premature. Rule 12(c) authorizes a motion for judgment on the pleadings "[a]fter the pleadings are closed." However, defendants' motion essentially serves the same function as a motion to dismiss pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). Accordingly, this Court follows the practice of treating a premature Rule 12(c) motion as a Rule 12(b) motion to dismiss. See, e.g., Seber v. Unger, 881 F.Supp. 323, 325 n. 2 (N.D.Ill.1995) (treating premature Rule 12(c) motion as Rule 12(b) motion); Geir by Geir v. Educational Serv. Unit No. 16, 144 F.R.D. 680, 686 (D.Neb.1992) (same); 2 Moore's Federal Practice 3d § 12.38 at 12-99 to 12-100 n. 4 (1997)(noting same).

Plaintiff moves to amend the complaint and consolidate this action with THC Holdings Corp. v. Tishman, et al., 93 Civ. 5393(KMW).

For the reasons stated below, I grant defendants' motion in part and deny it in part. Specifically, I dismiss plaintiff's claim that Chinn breached the fiduciary duties he owed to THC in his capacity as officer and director of THC; and I dismiss plaintiff's claim that Chinn breached the fiduciary duties he owed to THC in his capacity as counsel to THC in all respects except those that result from his alleged failure to investigate the financial insufficiency of TMLC Corp. In addition, I dismiss plaintiff's claim against Chinn for negligent representation in Chinn's capacities as officer and director of THC, but I do not dismiss this claim insofar as it relates to Chinn in his capacity as counsel to THC. I deny defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiff's claim against Chinn for fraud and plaintiff's claim against Chinn and Berwin Leighton for legal malpractice. I consolidate this action with THC Holdings Corp. v. Tishman, et al., 93 Civ. 5393(KMW), and I grant plaintiff's motion to amend the complaint. However, the claims dismissed in this Opinion and Order are also dismissed from the Revised Amended Complaint.

I. Background

Treating defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings as a motion to dismiss, I take facts stated in the complaint as true. Newman & Schwartz v. Asplundh Tree Expert Co., 102 F.3d 660, 662 (2d Cir.1996). The facts stated herein are the allegations that plaintiff makes in its complaint. [FN1]

FN1. In the midst of briefing this motion, plaintiff submitted to the Court a Revised Amended Complaint in which it proposes to consolidate this action with THC Holdings Corporation v. Alan V. Tishman, TMLC Corp., Tishman Overseas Partners Ltd., Tishman Midwest Management Corp., Pak Mac Associates, Richard A. Alexander, Jerry Lee Marcus, Jordan R. Metzger and Charles C. Quinn, 93 Civ. 5393(KMW). Because I find that the factual allegations and claims against Chinn and Berwin Leighton in the Revised Amended Complaint are substantially the same as those in the original Complaint, and the parties based their arguments for this motion on the allegations in the original complaint, I refer throughout this opinion to the numbered allegations in the original complaint. I rule on the consolidation of these action and the proposed amendment to the complaint below.

*2 THC was incorporated in the state of Delaware in June 4, 1987 under the name Tishman Property Corporation. (Compl.¶ 7.) THC was founded to offer an opportunity, primarily to foreign investors, to invest in urban office, retail and industrial real estate in the United States. (Id. ¶ 8.) Common stock was offered pursuant to a prospectus for $10.00 per share; the prospectus provided that if 5,000,000 shares of common stock were not fully subscribed, the offering would not close. (Id. ¶ 9.) The prospectus also provided that the entire $10.00 offering price was not payable in full upon the purchase of the shares; rather, the purchaser would initially pay $1.00 per share and would be obliged to pay the remaining $9.00 upon a capital "call" by the Board of Directors. (Id. ¶ 10.)

THC's Certificate of Incorporation authorized the Board of Directors to demand payment on the common stock within thirty days of notice to the holders of common stock. (Id. ¶ 11.) All subscribers were required to sign a subscription agreement in which the subscriber represented that it was either a corporation with assets in excess of $5 million or an "accredited investor" under Rule 501(a)(1)-(3) under the Securities Act of 1933 and that the total purchase price of the shares was less than 20 percent of the subscriber's net worth. (Id. ¶ 14.)

As of March, 1988, THC had three officers and directors: Alan Tishman functioned as Chairman of the Board, Jordan Metzger was the President, and Geoffrey Chinn was the secretary. (Id. ¶ 17.) Chinn was the managing partner of the New York office of Berwin Leighton, a British law firm. (Id. ¶¶ 3, 19.) Chinn was also counsel to THC from 1988 through at least April, 1991, (id. ¶¶ 22, 93).

Plaintiff's claims against Chinn arise primarily out of Chinn's alleged failure to disclose information about and adequately investigate a series of significant THC transactions. First, plaintiff alleges that Chinn knew or recklessly disregarded the falsity of representations in the Subscription Agreement of a subscriber, Retrico, Ltd., that Retrico had $5,000,000 in assets, and that Chinn concealed concerns that he had about Retrico's financial insufficiency from THC. (Id. ¶¶ 24-25.) Plaintiff further alleges that Chinn falsely reassured Retrico that THC would not make a capital call for at least six months after the initial closing. (Id. ¶ 26.) THC entered into a 1,000,000 share subscription agreement with Retrico. (Id. ¶¶ 28-29.)

Second, plaintiff alleges that Chinn failed to investigate the financial sufficiency of another subscriber, TMLC Corp. who purchased 200,000 shares of THC's common stock. (Id. ¶¶ 30, 36.) THC relied on Chinn to have prudently investigated and disclosed concerns about the financial insufficiency of potential subscribers. (Id. ¶ 37.)

Third, plaintiff alleges that Chinn failed to disclose material information, and adequately perform his duties as counsel to THC concerning the purchase of two properties in the Washington, D.C. area, Ballston Commons Office Building in Arlington, Virginia ("Ballston") and Woodmont Office Center in Rockville, Maryland ("Woodmont"). Plaintiff alleges that Chinn was aware that Jerry Marcus, who was elected a director of THC at its first Board meeting in January 1989, had an agreement with THC's property broker for these two property purchases such that Marcus would receive half of the real estate commissions, but that Chinn failed to disclose this information to the other directors of THC. (Id. ¶ 49) In particular, Chinn failed to disclose this agreement in the binders at the closings for these transactions, (id. ¶ 60), and Berwin Leighton received legal fees in excess of $200,000 for its role as counsel to the corporation in closing these transactions. (Id. ¶ 62.) Plaintiff also alleges that Chinn failed to disclose that THC would pay a penalty of $18,000 per day for each property if the acquisition of these properties was not finalized by January 17, 1989. THC paid the seller of these two properties $1,080,000 because of delays in the closings that Chinn knew or recklessly disregarded the fact would result. (Id. ¶¶ 53, 55.)

*3 Fourth, plaintiff alleges that in December 1988 THC's Board of Directors made a cash call of $3.00 per share to fund the Ballston and Woodmont property purchases. (Id. ¶¶ 65, 66.) Plaintiff alleges that Chinn failed to disclose to the THC Board that THC's president, Alan Tishman, had agreed to accommodate Retrico in meeting its obligations for the $3.00 per share cash call, and that this accommodation caused the property purchases to be delayed. (Id. ¶¶ 70, 71.) Plaintiff also alleges that Chinn failed to disclose to THC's Board that in January 1989, TMLC Corp. had transferred more than half of its stock to friends and associates of Alan Tishman. (Id. ¶ 74.) Chinn failed to register these transfers until August, 1989. (Id. ¶ 80.)

Fourth, plaintiff alleges that Chinn knew that Alan Tishman, on behalf of TMLC Corp., and others had planned to transfer their THC shares to other entities in order to limit their liability in anticipation of THC's capital call on April 23, 1991. (Id. ¶¶ 88-90.) In particular, plaintiff alleges that Chinn failed to make any disclosure of these transfers at the April 23, 1991 THC Board meeting. (Id. ¶ 93.) Neither those to whom TMLC Corp. had transferred their shares, nor Retrico were able to meet the April 23, 1991 cash call. (Id. ¶¶ 94-95.) These entities also failed to make THC's cash calls in August, 1991, May 1992, and August 1992.

On the basis of these allegations, plaintiff brings four different claims against Chinn. First, plaintiff alleges that Chinn breach his fiduciary duties to THC and its shareholders. Second, plaintiff alleges that Chinn is liable for negligent misrepresentation in his various capacities at THC. Third, plaintiff alleges that Chinn is liable to THC for fraud. Fourth, plaintiff alleges that Chinn and Berwin Leighton are liable to THC for legal malpractice.

II. Discussion

In considering a motion to dismiss, which is how I treat defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings, the court "must accept as true all the factual allegations in the complaint." Newman & Schwartz v. Asplundh Tree Expert Co., 102 F.3d 660, 662 (2d Cir.1996) (quoting Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Unit, 507 U.S. 163, 164, 113 S.Ct. 1160, 122 L.Ed.2d 517 (1993)). The court "must limit itself to facts stated in the complaint or in documents attached to the complaint or incorporated in the complaint by reference." Id. (quoting Kramer v. Time Warner, Inc., 937 F.2d 767, 773 (2d Cir.1991)). The complaint should not be dismissed "unless it appears beyond a doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim that would entitle him to relief." Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236-37, 94 S.Ct. 1683, 40 L.Ed.2d 90 (1974) (quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S.Ct. 99, 2 L.Ed.2d 80 (1957)).

Defendants present a multitude of arguments for dismissing all of or some of plaintiff's claims. Defendants' principal arguments are: (1) that all four of plaintiff's claims are time-barred; (2) that Chinn did not breach his duty of disclosure to THC and so plaintiff's claim for breach of fiduciary duty should be dismissed; (3) that a provision of THC's Certificate of Incorporation requires dismissal of fiduciary duty claims against Chinn; (4) that plaintiff fails adequately to allege fraudulent scienter; (5) that with regard to all four claims plaintiff has failed to plead any damages that are causally related to defendants' conduct.

*4 I treat each of these arguments for dismissal in turn.

A. Timeliness of Plaintiff's Claims

Defendants argue that the three-year statute of limitations provided by 7B N.Y. Civ. Prac. L. & R. § 214(4) (McKinney's 1996)

(hereinafter references to "CPLR" and section number) governs plaintiff's first and second claims, and that Delaware's three-year statute of limitations for fraud, Del.Code Ann. tit. 10, § 8106 (1996), and for legal malpractice, id., applies to plaintiff's third and fourth causes of action. Defendants contend that based on the application of these three year statutes of limitations, all plaintiff's claims are time-barred. In contrast, plaintiff claims that its first three claims are governed by the six-year statute of limitations provided by CPLR § 213(7), and that New York's six-year statute of limitations also applies to its legal malpractice claim. [FN2]

FN2. Plaintiff submits with its briefing a copy of an agreement to toll the statute of limitations from June 16, 1994 through June 16, 1995. There is no reference to this agreement in the Complaint; accordingly, I do not consider this agreement.

1. Plaintiff's Claims for Breach of Fiduciary Duty and Negligent Misrepresentation

I find that New York's CPLR § 213(7) applies to plaintiff's fiduciary duty, negligent misrepresentation, and fraud claims. CPLR § 213 provides, inter alia, that the following action must be commenced within six years:

7. an action by or on behalf of a corporation against a present or former director, officer of stockholder ... to procure a judgment on the ground of fraud, or to enforce a liability, penalty or forfeiture, or to recover damages for waste or for an injury to property or for an accounting in conjunction therewith.

CPLR § 213(7). In view of the specific references in this statute to claims on behalf of a corporation against a former director or officer, defendants' suggestion that the more general three-year statute of limitation in CPLR § 214(4) applies to plaintiff's first and second claims is unavailing. New York state courts apply CPLR § 213(7) to claims for the alleged breach of a fiduciary duty by a corporate director or board member. See, e.g., Tobias v. Tobias, 192 A.D.2d 438, 596 N.Y.S.2d 797, 798-99 (N.Y.App. Div. 1st Dep't 1993) (noting that CPLR § 213(7) applied to fraud and fiduciary breach claims against directors); see also Resolution Trust Corp. v.

Young, No. 93 Civ. 6531, 1995 WL 552622, at * 2 (S.D.N.Y. Sept.14, 1995) (noting that CPLR § 213(7) applied to negligence and breach of fiduciary duty claims against a thrift's directors). Accordingly, I conclude that plaintiff's first and second claims for breach of fiduciary duty and negligent misrepresentation are governed by the six-year statute of limitations in CPLR § 213(7).

Because plaintiff's breach of fiduciary duty and negligent misrepresentation claims against Chinn accrued within the six-year period preceding the filing of the complaint, I find that these claims are timely.

2. Plaintiff's Claim for Fraud

Plaintiff's claim for fraud also appears to fit squarely within the language of CPLR § 213(7). Defendants argue, however, that under New York's "borrowing statute," CPLR § 202, the Delaware statute of limitations for fraud applies to this claim. CPLR § 202 provides that when a court in New York is adjudicating claims "accruing" outside of New York, the court shall apply the foreign statute of limitations, if the foreign statute of limitations bars the action, "except where the cause of action accrued in favor of a resident of the state the time limited by the laws of the state shall apply." CPLR § 202.

*5 Contrary to defendants' suggestion, CPLR § 202 does not apply to any of plaintiff's claims, because plaintiff has alleged facts sufficient to show that THC was a New York resident until at least 1991. Plaintiff specifically alleges that THC had its principal place of business in New York until at least 1991. (See Compl. ¶ 86.) For the purposes of CPLR § 202, this allegation is sufficient to establish that THC was a "resident" of New York until at least 1991. See Shamrock Assocs. v. Sloane, 738 F.Supp. 109, 113 (S.D.N.Y.1990) ("The principal place of business determines residency under CPLR § 202."). Under CPLR § 202, residency is determined at the date that the action accrued. Besser v. E.R. Squibb & Sons, Inc., 146 A.D.2d 107, 539 N.Y.S.2d 734, 739 (N.Y.App. Div. 1st Dep't 1989), aff'd, 75

N.Y.2d 847, 552 N.Y.S.2d 923, 552 N.E.2d 171 (1990). Plaintiff's allegations include claims for wrongful conduct in 1991 (see Compl. ¶¶ 93, 101, 102), and so plaintiff's claims accrued during the time that THC was a resident of New York. See Dybowski v. Dybowska, 146 A.D.2d 604, 536 N.Y.S.2d 838, 839 (N.Y.App. Div.2d Dep't 1989) (fraud action accrues from commission of fraud or two years from when plaintiff discovered or should have discovered fraud, whichever is later). On this basis, I reject defendants' argument that, under CPLR § 202, this Court must apply Delaware's statute of limitations with respect to plaintiff's third claim. Rather, CPLR § 213 provides a six-year statute of limitation for plaintiff's claim for fraud.

Because plaintiff's claim for fraud accrued with the six-year period preceding the filing of the complaint, I find that plaintiff's fraud claim is timely. See Dybowski v. Dybowska, 536 N.Y.S.2d at 839.

3. Plaintiff's Claim for Legal Malpractice

Defendants argue that New York's borrowing statute, CPLR § 202, applies to plaintiff's legal malpractice claim on the same grounds that they argue the statute applies to plaintiff's third claim. The reasons for rejecting the application of this statute to import the Delaware statute of limitations for plaintiff's fraud claim also apply to plaintiff's legal malpractice claim. For the purposes of CPLR § 202, plaintiff was a resident of New York in 1991. Plaintiff's legal malpractice claim includes allegations of malpractice during 1991 (see Compl. ¶¶ 91-92), and therefore CPLR § 202 does not require imposing a foreign statute of limitations to the detriment of the New York resident. See CPLR § 202 ("except where the cause of action accrued in favor of a resident of the state the time limited by the laws of the state shall apply."); see also Glamm v. Allen, 57 N.Y.2d 87, 453 N.Y.S.2d 674, 677, 439 N.E.2d 390, 393 (1982) (action for legal malpractice accrues at the date of the complained of malpractice).

Plaintiff argues that under Santulli v. Englert, Reilly & McHugh, P.C., 78 N.Y.2d 700, 579 N.Y.S.2d 324, 328, 586 N.E.2d 1014, 1018-19 (1992), plaintiff's legal malpractice claim should be governed by New York's six-year statute of limitations for contract actions, see CPLR § 213, rather than the existing three-year statute of limitations for malpractice damage actions other than medical, dental or podiatric actions which was provided for by the then existing CPLR § 214(6). (Pl. Br. at 42.) In Santulli, as plaintiff contends, the New York Court of Appeals held that New York's six-year statute of limitations for contract actions governs legal malpractice claims "where the remedy sought is damages relating solely to the plaintiff's pecuniary or property loss and which arose out of the contractual relationship." Santulli, 586 N.E.2d at 1018, 579 N.Y.S.2d at 328-29.

*6 Subsequent to defendants' and plaintiff's submissions to this Court, however, the New York State Legislature amended CPLR § 214(6) to overturn the rule announced in Santulli. See Limitation of Malpractice Damages Actions, 1996 N.Y. Laws chap. 623 (S.7590) (1996) (amending CPLR § 214(6)); Russo v. Waller, 171 Misc.2d 707, 655 N.Y.S.2d 313 (Sup.Ct. Nassau Co.1997) ("[e]ffective September 4, 1996 the Legislature amended CPLR § 214(6) so as to repeal the judicial rule enunciated in Santulli "). The New York Legislature amended CPLR § 214(6) to provide a three-year statute of limitations for actions "to recover damages for malpractice, other than medical, dental or podiatric malpractice regardless of whether the underlying theory is based in contract or tort." CPLR § 214(6) (emphasis added). The effective date of the amendment is September 4, 1996, 1996 N.Y. Laws chap. 623; the legislature unambiguously stated that "[t]his act shall take effect immediately." Id.

In general, "statutes are applied prospectively, unless there is a clear legislative indication to the contrary." Rubin Management Co., Inc. v. Commissioner, Dep't of Consumer Affairs, 213 A.D.2d 185, 623 N.Y.S.2d 569, 569 (N.Y.App. Div. 1st Dep't 1995). Lower New York state courts are divided concerning whether CPLR § 214(6) applies only prospectively, or also applies retroactively. See, e.g., Russo v. Waller, 655 N.Y.S.2d at 314 (retroactive application); White of Lake George, Inc. v. Bell, 173 Misc.2d 423, 662 N.Y.S.2d 362, 365-66 (Sup.Ct. Albany Co.1997) (prospective application only); Ackerman v. Price Waterhouse, N.Y.L.J. May 13, 1997 (N.Y.App. Div. 1st Dep't May 13, 1997) (prospective application only); Garcia v. Jonathan Director and Frank Weinrib, et al., N.Y.L.J. Jan. 17, 1997 (N.Y.App. Div. 1st Dep't Jan. 17, 1997) (prospective application only); The New York Court of Appeals has not ruled on the issue. In these circumstances, the task of this Court is to attempt to discern how New York's highest state court would resolve this split in authority. See Herman Miller, Inc. v. Thom Rock Realty Co. L.P., 819 F.Supp. 307 (S.D.N.Y.1997).

Four decisions in this district have taken on this task; all of these decisions concluded that the amendment to CPLR § 214(6) applies only prospectively. See Keller v. Lee, No. 96 Civ. 4168, 1997 WL 218435 at *2 (S.D.N.Y. April 30, 1997); Estate of Joseph Re v. Kornstein Veisz & Wexler, 958 F.Supp. 907, 914-920 (S.D.N.Y.1997); Mason Tenders Dist. Council Pension Fund v. Messera, 958 F.Supp. 869, 886 (S.D.N.Y.1997); Durkin v. Shea, 957 F.Supp. 1360, 1372-75 (S.D.N.Y.1997). In three of these decisions, courts have taken the view either that the legislative intent to apply the 1996 amendment retroactively was not sufficiently clear, or that the New York state courts have not found the legislative intent to be sufficiently clear, to merit applying the statute retroactively. See Keller, at *3; Messera, 958 F.Supp. at 887; Durkin, 957 F.Supp. at 1374-75. In contrast, in Estate of Re, Judge Sotomayor found that the New York State Legislature had explicitly articulated its intent that the 1996 amendment to CPLR § 214(6) apply retroactively, but also held that the legislature's intent in enacting an amendment should not govern the interpretation of law pre-dating the amendment's passage. 958 F.Supp. at 918-20.

*7 Judge Sotomayor based this conclusion on

(1) fundamental separation of powers principles, and (2) the prohibition on retroactive application of a reduced statute of limitations period unless parties are given a reasonable time to commence actions under the new law, a prohibition which Judge Sotomayor found to be deeply rooted in New York law. Id. at 918-19. I believe that Judge Sotomayor's analysis is correct, and that the New York State Court of Appeals can be expected to reach this result. Accordingly, I find that CPLR § 214(6) does not apply retroactively, and that plaintiff's legal malpractice claim for damages arising out of plaintiff's contractual relationship with defendants is governed by New York's six-year statute of limitations. Plaintiff's legal malpractice claim accrued within the six-year period preceding the filing of the complaint. Therefore, I find that plaintiff's legal malpractice claim is timely. See Glamm, 493 N.E.2d at 393, 453 N.Y.S.2d at 677.

B. Breach of Fiduciary Duty

Plaintiff's claim that Chinn breached the fiduciary duties that he owed to THC as its officer (that is, its secretary), director, and counsel rely almost exclusively on allegations that Chinn failed to disclose material information to THC. (See Compl. ¶ 109.) I first discuss whether plaintiff's allegations that Chinn breached his disclosure duty support a claim for breach of fiduciary duty and then I turn to plaintiff's other allegation that might also support a claim for breach of fiduciary duty by Chinn in his capacity as officer, director, or counsel to THC.

1. The Duty to Disclose

In Delaware, the duty of disclosure is "an obligation that has been characterized as a derivative of the duties of care and loyalty." Cinerama, Inc., v. Technicolor, Inc., 663 A.2d 1156, 1166 (1995). However, a fiduciary obligation of disclosure is implicated only when shareholder action is sought. See Zirn v. VLI Corp., 681 A.2d 1050, 1056 (1996) (duty of disclosure "inheres any time a corporate board of directors seeks stockholder action"); Stroud v. Grace, 606 A.2d 75, 84 (1992) (directors have a "duty to disclose fully and fairly all material information within board's control when it seeks shareholder action"); Bragger v. Budacz, No. Civ. A 13376, 1994 WL 698609 * 5 (Del.Ch. Dec.7 1994) ("Since no shareholder action was sought by the Information Statement a fiduciary duty of full disclosure is not implicated.").

None of Chinn's alleged failures to disclose information to the THC Board of Directors involved action requested by the THC's Board by shareholders. Plaintiff does not allege that the initial subscription of investors (see Compl. ¶¶ 28, 36), the decision to purchase the Ballston and Woodmont properties (see id. ¶ 52), or the Board of Directors' decisions to make cash calls, involved a request for shareholder action. (See id. ¶ 10.) Accordingly, I dismiss plaintiff's claim for breach of fiduciary duty insofar as it relies on allegations that Chinn failed to disclose information to THC.

2. Other Fiduciary Duties

*8 Plaintiff also alleges that Chinn failed to adequately investigate the financial sufficiency of TMLC Corp. (Id. ¶ 36.) [FN3] Chinn's liability as a director of THC is governed by Article 9 of THC's Certificate of Incorporation, which tracks 8 Del.Code. Ann. tit. 8, § 102(b)(7) (1996). The Article provides that:

FN3. In addition, plaintiff alleges that Chinn participated in Alan Tishman's attempts to transfer TMLC Corp.'s stock to other entities (Compl. ¶ 109), but fails allege any specific facts regarding Chinn's participation in these transactions in the body of the Complaint other than that Chinn failed to disclose these transactions. (See id. ¶¶ 74-84.)

A director of the corporation shall not be personally liable to the corporation or its shareholders for monetary damages for breach of fiduciary duty as a director, except for liability (i) for any breach of the director's duty of loyalty to the corporation or its stockholders, (ii) for acts or omissions not in good faith or which involve intentional misconduct or a knowing violation of law, (iii) under Section 174 of the Delaware General Corporation Law, or (iv) for any transaction from which the director derived an improper personal benefit.

In his capacity as a director, Chinn's alleged failure to adequately investigate TMLC Corp.'s financial sufficiency could support only a breach of Chinn's duty of care, not a breach of his duty of loyalty. Harris v. Carter, 582 A.2d 222, 232 (Ct. Ch.1990) (treating allegations of failure to investigate as claimed breach of duty of care). But Chinn's liability in his capacity as a director based on the breach of the duty of care is clearly precluded by Article 9 of THC's Certificate of Incorporation. See Arnold v. Society for Sav. Bancorp, Inc., 650 A.2d 1270, 1287 (1994) (shielding director from liability based on plain reading of § 102(b)(7)). Further, because plaintiff's complaint fails to highlight any specific actions Chinn took as secretary (as distinct from his activities as a director) of THC, Article 9 of THC's Certificate of Incorporation also shields Chinn in his capacity as secretary to THC for his alleged failure to investigate TMLC Corp.'s financial sufficiency. See id. at 1288 (embracing view that "where a defendant is a director and officer, only those actions taken solely in the defendant's capacity as an officer are outside the purview of Section 102(b)(7)"). Accordingly, I also dismiss plaintiff's claims against Chinn for failure to adequately investigate TMLC Corp.'s financial sufficiency in his capacity as director and secretary of THC.

In sum, then, plaintiff's claim of breach of fiduciary duty is dismissed in all respects except with regard to Chinn's possible breach of fiduciary duties he owed to THC in his capacity as its counsel resulting from his alleged failure to investigate the financial sufficiency of TMLC Corp. Cf. Deutsch v. Cogan, 580 A.2d 100 (Ct. Ch.1990) (law firm acting as counsel to board of directors of corporation subject to fiduciary duties).

C. Negligent Misrepresentation

Plaintiff's claim for negligent misrepresentation relies upon his assertion that Chinn failed to act with reasonable care in undertaking his duties to THC in his capacities as a director, officer, and counsel to THC. (Compl. ¶¶ 114-118.)

*9 Chinn's liability for a breach of his duty to exercise reasonable care is also precluded by Article 9 of THC's Certificate of Incorporation. See Arnold v. Society for Sav. Bancorp, Inc., 650 A.2d 1270, 1287 (1994) (shielding director from liability based on plain reading of § 102(b)(7)). Plaintiff's complaint also fails to highlight any specific actions Chinn took as secretary (as distinct from his activities as a director). Accordingly, Article 9 of THC's Certificate of Incorporation also shields Chinn in his capacity as secretary to THC for his alleged failure to exercise reasonable care in carrying out his duties as secretary to THC. See id. I therefore dismiss plaintiff's second claim against Chinn in his capacities as a director and secretary of THC.

Defendants do not provide any specific argument for dismissing this claim against Chinn in his capacity as counsel for THC. Accordingly, plaintiff's claim against Chinn for negligent misrepresentation in his capacity as counsel to THC remains.

D. Fraud

Defendants argue that plaintiff's third claim against Chinn for fraud should be dismissed because plaintiff failed to adequately allege scienter. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b) provides that "the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity." The Second Circuit Court of Appeals "require[s] plaintiffs to allege facts that give rise to a strong inference of fraudulent intent." Shields v. Citytrust Bancorp, Inc., 25 F.3d 1124, 1128 (2d Cir.1994). Such a "strong inference" of fraud may be established either "(a) by alleging facts to show that defendants had both motive and opportunity to commit fraud, or (b) by alleging facts that constitute strong circumstantial evidence of conscious misbehavior or recklessness." Id.

Defendants argue persuasively that the plaintiff fails to allege facts sufficient to show that Chinn had a motive to commit fraud. To support a claim of motive, plaintiff's principal allegation is that Chinn's incentive to commit fraud was to "receive substantial legal fees and an annual retainer for future services." (See Compl. ¶¶ 22, 121.) A mere allegation that defendant was in a position to receive normal compensation for professional services rendered is not sufficient to support a showing of motive in the fraud scienter analysis. See Shields, 25 F.3d at 1130 (in circumstances of that case, to make a sufficient allegation of motive plaintiff must do more than charge that executives aim to prolong benefits of the positions they hold); Ferber v. Travelers Corp., 785 F.Supp. 1101, 1107 (D.Conn.1991) (incentive of receive salary insufficient to allege motive); Friedman v. Arizona World Nurseries Ltd. Partnership, 730 F.Supp. 521, 532 (S.D.N.Y.1990) (incentive of receiving fee for professional service insufficient to allege motive), aff'd, 927 F.2d 595 (1991). If the law were otherwise, then virtually every individual compensated for his or her professional services could be subject to claims of fraud. See Ferber, 785 F.Supp. at 1107.

*10 However, defendants fail to argue that plaintiff has not alleged that Chinn engaged in conscious misconduct or recklessness. Because the complaint contains allegations that might support a claim that Chinn engaged in conscious fraudulent behavior or recklessness (see, e.g., Compl. ¶¶ 49, 53, 81-82), I do not dismiss plaintiff's claim of fraud at this time.

E. Damages

Defendants argue that the complaint should be dismissed on the ground that plaintiff has not alleged any damages causally related to conduct of Chinn or Berwin Leighton. Because I accept as true all the factual allegations in the complaint, see Newman & Schwartz v. Asplundh Tree Expert Co., 102 F.3d 660, 662 (2d Cir.1996) (quoting Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Unit, 507 U.S. 163, 164, 113 S.Ct. 1160, 122

L.Ed.2d 517 (1993), I find that defendants' argument that plaintiff has failed to plead damages causally related to Chinn or Berwin Leighton's conduct is without merit. For instance, plaintiff alleges that Chinn knew or recklessly disregarded the falsity of Retrico's representation of its financial assets (Compl.¶ 24), and that THC was injured by Retrico's failure to meet its subsequent obligations to THC in a timely manner. (Compl.¶¶ 68-72.) In addition, plaintiff alleges that Chinn failed to disclose that TMLC Corp. had transferred more than half of its stock and that those to whom this stock was transferred were not able to meet THC's April 1991 cash call. (Compl.¶¶ 74, 94.) At this stage in the proceedings, allegations such as these are sufficient to plead damages causally related to Chinn and Berwin Leighton's alleged misconduct. Accordingly, I do not dismiss any claims against Chinn or against Berwin Leighton on the ground that plaintiff has failed to allege damages causally related to defendants' misconduct.

F. Consolidation and Amendment of the Complaint

Plaintiff moves to consolidate this action with THC Holdings Corporation v. Alan V. Tishman, TMLC Corp., Tishman Overseas Partners Ltd., Tishman Midwest Management Corp., Pak Mac Associates, Richard A. Alexander, Jerry Lee Marcus, Jordan R. Metzger and Charles C. Quinn, 93 Civ. 5393(KMW). Because I find that this action and THC Holdings Corporation v. Tishman, et al., 93 Civ. 5393(KMW) involve common questions of law and fact, I consolidate these actions pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 42(a).

Plaintiff also seeks leave to amend the complaint in these consolidated actions. All of the defendants, in both the Chinn and Tishman actions, object to plaintiff's motion to amend. The defendants in the Tishman action object because the Court had previously granted their motion to dismiss plaintiff's RICO claims (see Order May 30, 1996), which plaintiff's Revised Amended Complaint repleads. The Tishman defendants also contend that if plaintiff's Revised Amended Complaint is allowed, they must be permitted to bring a third-party action against Charterhouse Bank Ltd. and its United States affiliate. They claim that Charterhouse was responsible for investigating the financial sufficiency of potential investors. The Chinn defendants object to the Revised Amended Complaint because the allegations against the Chinn defendants are substantially similar to those in the original complaint, and they had moved for judgment on the pleadings on the original complaint.

*11 In the Second Circuit, when a motion to dismiss is granted, "the usual practice is to grant leave to amend the complaint." Oliver Schools, Inc. v. Foley, 930 F.3d 248, 253 (2d Cir.1991) (internal citation omitted). Where "the possibility exists that the defect can be cured and there is no prejudice to defendant, leave to amend at least once should normally be granted as a matter of course." Id. In this case the primary prejudice to defendants is extra litigation costs. However, such expenses, standing alone, do not suffice to warrant a denial of a motion to amend. See United States v. Continental Illinois Nat'l Bank and Trust Co. of Chicago, 889 F.2d 1248, 1255 (2d Cir.1989). Accordingly, the Court grants plaintiff's motion to amend. However, because I find the claims against Chinn and Berwin Leighton in the original complaint to be substantially the same as those in the Revised Amended Complaint, those claims dismissed in this Opinion and Order are also dismissed from the Revised Amended Complaint. The Court also grants the defendants in the Tishman action leave to interplead Charterhouse Bank Ltd. and its United States affiliate.

III. Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, I dismiss plaintiff's claim that Chinn breached the fiduciary duties he owed to THC in his capacity as officer and director of THC; I dismiss plaintiff's claim that Chinn breach the fiduciary duties he owed to THC in his capacity as counsel to THC in all respects except as resulting from his alleged failure to investigate the financial insufficiency of TMLC Corp.; I dismiss plaintiff's claim against Chinn for negligent representation in Chinn's capacities as officer and director of TMLC Corp., but do not dismiss this claim insofar as it relates to Chinn in his capacity as counsel to THC. I deny defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings with regard to plaintiff's claim against Chinn for fraud and plaintiff's claim against Chinn and Berwin Leighton for legal malpractice.

I also consolidate this action with THC Holdings Corporation v. Tishman, et al., 93 Civ. 5393(KMW). I grant plaintiff's motion to amend. However, those claims dismissed herein are also dismissed from plaintiff's Revised Amended Complaint. In addition, I grant the defendants in the Tishman action leave to interplead Charterhouse Bank Ltd. and its United States affiliate.

SO ORDERED.

TRADEWINDS FINANCIAL CORPORATION, etc., et al., Plaintiffs-

v.
REFCO SECURITIES, INC., etc., et al.,
Defendants-Respondents-Appellants.

March 16, 2004.

Background: Action was brought for breach of an oral agreement to extend financing for the purchase of securities, fraud, negligent misrepresentation, breach of fiduciary duty, negligent valuation of collateral, and unjust enrichment. The Supreme Court, New York County, Herman Cahn, J., granted defendants' motion for summary judgment, and appeal was taken.

Holdings: The Supreme Court, Appellate Division, held that: (1) Uniform Commercial Code (UCC) provision making statute of frauds inapplicable to contract for the sale or purchase of a security did not apply to alleged oral agreement; (2) agreement was barred by the statute of frauds; and (3) parties did not have fiduciary or confidential relationship, as required to support claims for breach of fiduciary duty or negligent misrepresentation.

Affirmed.

TOM, J.P., ANDRIAS, SAXE, SULLIVAN, JJ.

Order, Supreme Court, New York County (Herman Cahn, J.), entered September 18, 2003, which granted defendants' motion for summary judgment insofar as to dismiss the causes of action for breach of an oral agreement, fraud, negligent misrepresentation, breach of fiduciary duty, negligent valuation of collateral, and unjust enrichment, and denied plaintiffs' cross motion for summary judgment on their causes of action for breach of written agreements, breach of fiduciary duty and negligent valuation, unanimously affirmed, with costs.

[1] While the issue, whether revised Uniform Commercial Code § 8-113 rendered the statute of frauds inapplicable to the alleged oral agreement to extend financing for the purchase of securities for a particular period, was not raised before the motion court, it presents a question of law that may be raised for the first time at this juncture (see Chateau D'If Corp. v. City of New York, 219 A.D.2d 205, 209-210, 641 N.Y.S.2d 252). We conclude that the statutory revision, which was intended to bring the law into step with the prevailing mechanics of discrete securities transfers, was not intended to apply to the claimed financing agreement at issue here (see Uniform Laws Annotated, Vol. 2C, Uniform Commercial Code Revised Article 8, Notes on Scope, 2003 Pocket Part, at 80-81).

[2] The alleged oral agreement was barred by the statute of frauds (General Obligations Law § 5-701). There was absolutely no possibility that it could be performed within a year (see Cron v. Hargro Fabrics, Inc., 91 N.Y.2d 362, 366, 670 N.Y.S.2d 973, 694 N.E.2d 56); plaintiffs' assertion that there was an option to cancel in exchange for payment of a penalty is, inter alia, unsupported by the record. The documents relied upon by plaintiffs could not be cobbled together as a writing sufficient to satisfy the statute, since material terms were missing (see Kobre v. Instrument Sys., Corp., 54 A.D.2d 625, 626, 387 N.Y.S.2d 617, affd. 43 N.Y.2d 862, 403 N.Y.S.2d 220, 374 N.E.2d 131; see also Adiel v. Lincoln Plaza Assocs., 254 A.D.2d 5, 677 N.Y.S.2d 790). Nor could the *397 agreement be salvaged by the claimed part performance (see Stephen Pevner, Inc. v. Ensler, 309 A.D.2d 722, 766 N.Y.S.2d 183), which, in any event, was not unequivocally referable to the claimed agreement (see Anostario v. Vicinanza, 59 N.Y.2d 662, 664, 463 N.Y.S.2d 409, 450 N.E.2d 215). In view of the foregoing, it is unnecessary to address the other arguments regarding the enforceability of the alleged oral agreement.

[3] The tort claims were properly dismissed as duplicative of the contract claims (see Richbell Info. Servs., Inc. v. 529 Jupiter Partners, L.P., 309 A.D.2d 288, 305, 765 N.Y.S.2d 575; River Glen Assocs., Ltd. v. Merrill Lynch Credit Corp., 295 A.D.2d 274, 275, 743 N.Y.S.2d 870; Shilkoff, Inc. v. 885 Third Ave. Corp., 299 A.D.2d 253, 750 N.Y.S.2d 53). In addition, the fiduciary breach and negligent misrepresentation causes of action were not viable in the absence of a fiduciary or confidential relationship between the parties (see Sidamonidze v. Kay, 304 A.D.2d 415, 757 N.Y.S.2d 560); the relationship here, involving non-discretionary securities accounts, was, as expressly provided in the governing documents, at arm's length (see Fesseha v. TD Waterhouse Inv. Servs., Inc., 305 A.D.2d 268, 761 N.Y.S.2d 22). In light of our determination that the tort claims were properly dismissed for these several reasons, we do not address defendants' other arguments.

The cause of action seeking to recover, on the theory of unjust enrichment, the profits that defendants made upon reselling plaintiffs' securities was barred by the limitation of damages provision in the Terms and Conditions for Confirmation, as well as by the existence of a valid contract (see Golub Assocs., Inc. v. Lincolnshire Mgt., Inc., 1 A.D.3d 237, 767 N.Y.S.2d 571), albeit one whose terms were in dispute.

Although defendants had the discretion to call in their margin loan to plaintiffs at any time reasonably necessary for their protection, this discretion was not unfettered since it remained subject to the implied duty of good faith (see Richbell Information Services, Inc., 309 A.D.2d at 302-303, 765 N.Y.S.2d 575). Our review of the record discloses that the motion court properly found issues of fact as to defendants' good faith and the reasonableness of their conduct. This is especially so with respect to defendants' margin call.

We have considered the parties' other contentions for affirmative relief and find them unavailing.

May 24, 2004.

Background: Insureds sued their automobile insurer and insurance agency, alleging breach of contract, fraud, negligence, and negligent misrepresentation, and seeking to recover difference between purchase price of car and its actual cash value. The Supreme Court, Westchester County, Colabella, J., granted insureds summary judgment on contract and fraud claims against insurer, and granted insureds summary judgment against agency on claims of negligence and negligent misrepresentation. Defendants appealed.

Holdings: The Supreme Court, Appellate Division, held that: (1) insurer properly limited its offer of settlement to the purchase price; (2) agency was negligent in failing to procure requested coverage; and (3) agency was not liable for negligent misrepresentation.

Affirmed as modified.

In an action, inter alia, to recover damages for breach of contract, (1) the defendant Allstate Insurance Company appeals, as limited by its brief, from so much of an order of the Supreme Court, Westchester County (Colabella, J.), entered June 11, 2003, as granted those branches of the plaintiffs' motion which were for summary judgment on the issue of liability on the *149 first and second causes of action and denied its cross motion for summary judgment dismissing the complaint insofar as asserted against it, and (2) the defendant Marinaccio & Azznara cross-appeals, as limited by its brief, from so much of the same order as granted those branches of the plaintiffs' motion which were for summary judgment on the issue of liability on the third and fourth causes of action and denied its cross motion for summary judgment dismissing the complaint and all cross claims insofar as asserted against it.

ORDERED that the order is modified, on the law, by (1) deleting the provision thereof granting those branches of the motion which were for summary judgment on the issue of liability against the defendant Allstate Insurance Company on the first and second causes of action and against the defendant Marinaccio & Azznara on the fourth cause of action, and substituting therefor a provision denying those branches of the motion, (2) deleting the provision thereof denying the cross motion of the defendant Allstate Insurance Company for summary judgment dismissing the complaint insofar as asserted against it and substituting therefor a provision granting that cross motion, and (3) deleting the provision thereof denying that branch of the cross motion of the defendant Marinaccio & Azznara which was for summary judgment dismissing the fourth cause of action and all cross claims predicated on the fourth cause of action and substituting therefor a provision granting that branch of the cross motion; as so modified, the order is affirmed insofar as appealed and cross-appealed from, with costs payable by the plaintiffs to the defendant Allstate Insurance Company.

After purchasing a 1997 Porsche 911 Turbo S Coupe for $82,000, the plaintiffs sought insurance through the defendant insurance agency Marinaccio & Azznara (hereinafter M & A). M & A arranged for the defendant Allstate Insurance Company (hereinafter Allstate) to issue an insurance policy. It insured the plaintiffs for the actual cash value of their car, allegedly $155,500. Within four months after its purchase, the car was damaged in an accident. Allstate deemed the car to be a total loss. Relying on a regulation issued by the Superintendent of Insurance (see 11 NYCRR 216.7[c][1][iv]) (hereinafter Regulation 64), Allstate tendered to the plaintiffs a check for the purchase price of the car. This regulation permits an insurer to limit an offer of settlement to the purchase price of a vehicle when a loss occurs within 180 days after the purchase. The plaintiffs commenced this action against, among others, Allstate and M & A, alleging breach of contract, fraud, negligence, and negligent misrepresentation, and seeking to recover the difference between the purchase price of the car and its actual cash value.

[1][2] The plaintiffs were not entitled to summary judgment on the issue of Allstate's liability under the first cause of action, alleging breach of contract, or the second cause of action, alleging fraud. Allstate's cross motion for summary judgment dismissing the complaint insofar as asserted against it should have been granted. Applicable provisions of the Insurance Law are "deemed to [be] part of [an] insurance contract as though written into it" (Salzman v. Prudential Ins. Co., 296 N.Y. 273, 277, 72 N.E.2d 891; see Adam v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co. of N.Y., 204 N.Y. 357, 360, 97 N.E. 740; Strauss v. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co., 170 N.Y. 349, 356, 63 N.E. 347). Regulation 64 had the same effect as a contractual provision affording Allstate the option it chose to settle the plaintiffs' insurance claim. Thus, Allstate made a prima facie showing that it did not breach its contract of insurance with the *150 plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs failed to raise a triable issue of fact in opposition. Since Regulation 64 effectively became part of the insurance policy, Allstate also established prima facie that it made no false representation in its policy. The plaintiffs failed to raise a triable issue of fact in opposition. Therefore, Allstate was entitled to summary judgment dismissing the fraud cause of action.

[3][4][5] In the third cause of action, the plaintiffs alleged that M & A negligently failed to procure the requested insurance coverage. The Supreme Court properly denied that branch of M & A's cross motion which was for summary judgment dismissing that cause of action as M & A failed to establish its prima facie entitlement to judgment as a matter of law. By contrast, the plaintiffs established their entitlement to summary judgment on the issue of M & A's liability under the third cause of action. It is uncontested, indeed admitted by M & A, that the plaintiffs requested actual cash value coverage that would be effective "from day one" and that M & A assured them that such coverage was effective immediately. Moreover, it is uncontested that M & A was ignorant of Regulation 64. These uncontroverted facts place the third cause of action within the rule that "insurance agents and brokers have a common-law duty to obtain requested coverage for their clients within a reasonable time, or to inform the client of their inability to do so. A broker may be held liable for neglect in failing to procure the requested insurance. An insured must show that the broker failed to discharge the duties imposed by the agreement to obtain insurance either by proof that the broker breached the agreement or that it failed to exercise due care in the transaction" (Reilly v. Progressive Ins. Co., 288 A.D.2d 365, 365-366, 733 N.Y.S.2d 220 [emphasis added]; see Santaniello v. Interboro Mut. Indem. Ins. Co., 267 A.D.2d 372, 700 N.Y.S.2d 230; Associates Commercial Corp. of Delaware v. White, 80 A.D.2d 570, 571, 435 N.Y.S.2d 796; cf. Murphy v. Kuhn, 90 N.Y.2d 266, 270, 660 N.Y.S.2d 371, 682 N.E.2d 972; Erwig v. Cook Agency, 173 A.D.2d 439, 570 N.Y.S.2d 64). Thus, the Supreme Court properly granted summary judgment to the plaintiffs on the third cause of action.

[6] Finally, the Supreme Court erred in granting that branch of the plaintiffs' motion which was for summary judgment on the issue of M & A's liability under the fourth cause of action alleging negligent misrepresentation. That branch of M & A's cross motion which was for summary judgment dismissing the fourth cause of action should have been granted. In opposition to M & A's prima facie showing of entitlement to judgment as a matter of law, the plaintiffs failed to raise a triable issue of fact as to the existence of a special relationship between them and M & A (see Murphy v. Kuhn, supra at 268, 660 N.Y.S.2d 371, 682 N.E.2d 972; Hesse v. Speece, 278 A.D.2d 368, 369, 717 N.Y.S.2d 649).

Smith Barney Inc., Defendants.

No. 02Civ.5328(KTS)(JCF).

Oct. 14, 2003.

Order Denying Reconsideration Nov. 12, 2003.

Sophisticated financial entities that participated in credit facilities brought cause of action against co-administrative agents and issuing bank for their alleged fraudulent concealment, fraudulent inducement, aiding and abetting borrower's fraud, negligent misrepresentation, civil conspiracy, and unjust enrichment. On motion to dismiss for failure to state claim or to plead fraud with sufficient particularity, the District Court, Swain, J., held that: (1) express disclaimer by co-administrative agents for credit facilities, as well as by issuing bank, of any duty to ascertain or inquire as to borrower's performance of any terms, covenants or conditions of any loan document, or to account therefor to sophisticated financial entities participating in loan investments, precluded such entities from establishing duty to disclose or reasonable reliance, of kind required under New York law to support fraudulent concealment, fraudulent inducement or negligent misrepresentation claim; (2) allegations in plaintiffs' complaint were sufficient to state claim under New York law for aiding and abetting fraud; (3) plaintiffs did not have claim for breach of implied covenant of good faith or unjust enrichment, to extent based on defendants' nondisclosures; and (4) allegations were sufficient to state civil conspiracy claim under New York law.

Granted in part and denied in part; reconsideration denied.

West Headnotes

[1] Fraud 3
184k3

Elements of claim for fraud or fraudulent inducement under New York law are: (1) that defendant made material false representation, (2) with intent to defraud plaintiff; (3) that plaintiff reasonably relied on that representation; and (4) that plaintiff suffered damage as result of that reliance.

[2] Fraud 16
184k16

To state fraudulent concealment claim under New York law, plaintiff, in addition to alleging each of elements of fraud, must also allege that defendant had duty to disclose material information.

[3] Fraud 17
184k17

Duty to disclose, of kind required under New York law to support fraudulent concealment claim, arises when: (1) one party has superior knowledge of information; (2) that information is not readily available to another party; and (3) first party knows that second party is acting on basis of mistaken knowledge.

[4] Fraud 13(3)
184k13(3)

Under New York law, negligent misrepresentation claims have the following elements: (1) that defendant had duty, as result of special relationship, to give correct information; (2) that defendant made false representation that he or she should have known was incorrect; (3) that information supplied by representation was known by defendant to be desired by plaintiff for serious purpose; (4) that plaintiff intended to rely and act upon it; and (5) that plaintiff reasonably relied on it to his or her detriment.

[5] Fraud 13(3)
184k13(3)

[5] Fraud 17
184k17

In transactions between sophisticated financial institutions, no extra-contractual duty of disclosure exists, of kind required under New York law to support negligent misrepresentation claim.

[6] Banks and Banking 100
52k100

[6] Brokers 34
65k34

Under New York law, express disclaimer by co-administrative agents for credit facilities, as well as by issuing bank, of any duty to ascertain or inquire as to borrower's performance of any terms, covenants, or conditions of any loan document, or to account therefor to sophisticated financial entities participating in loan investments, precluded such entities from establishing duty to disclose or reasonable reliance, of kind required under New York law to support fraudulent concealment, fraudulent inducement, or negligent misrepresentation claim.

[7] Contracts 1
95k1

Under New York law, sophisticated parties are held to terms of their contracts.

[8] Banks and Banking 100
52k100

[8] Brokers 34
65k34

Under New York law, "peculiar knowledge" doctrine could not be extended to permit a claim by sophisticated financial entities participating in loan investments, not against borrower itself, whose improper practices allegedly enabled it to conceal debt and to present false picture of financial soundness, but against third parties that allegedly knew of borrower's improper practices, and that acted as co-administrative agents or issuing bank on credit facilities in which these financial entities participated.

[9] Fraud 36
184k36

Under New York's "peculiar knowledge" doctrine, express waivers or disclaimers of reliance will not be given effect, so as to preclude fraud claim, when facts are peculiarly within knowledge of party invoking such a waiver or disclaimer.

[10] Fraud 36
184k36

Theoretical basis for "peculiar knowledge" doctrine, as applied by New York courts, is the premise that, when matters are peculiarly within defendant's knowledge, plaintiff may rely without prosecuting an investigation, since he has no independent means of ascertaining truth.

[11] Fraud 30
184k30

Under New York law, elements of claim for aiding and abetting fraud are: (1) existence of underlying fraud; (2) knowledge of that fraud on part of aider and abettor; and (3) substantial assistance by aider and abettor in achievement of that fraud.

[12] Fraud 30
184k30

"Substantial assistance" exists, of kind required under New York law to support claim for aiding and abetting fraud, when: (1) aider/abettor affirmatively assists, helps conceal, or by virtue of failing to act when required to do so enables fraud to proceed; and (2) actions of aider/abettor proximately cause harm on which primary liability is predicated.

[13] Banks and Banking 100
52k100

[13] Banks and Banking 226
52k226

[13] Brokers 34
65k34

Allegations in complaint filed by entities participating in loan investments, against third parties that acted as co-administrative agents or issuing bank on credit facilities, for their alleged knowing participation in prepaids and other transactions which were designed to hide borrower's true financial condition and to distort its public financial statements were sufficient to state claim under New York law for aiding and abetting fraud.

[14] Federal Civil Procedure 636
170Ak636

By identifying borrower's fraudulent statements, i.e., the revenue and debt-to-equity figures in its public financial statements, and by specifying way in which those figures misrepresented reality of its revenues and liabilities, investors seeking to recover on aiding and abetting theory from co-administrative agents on credit facilities pled borrower's fraud with sufficient particularity to satisfy federal pleading requirements. Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 9(b), 28 U.S.C.A.

[15] Banks and Banking 96
52k96

[15] Brokers 22
65k22

Under New York law, investors that were barred, by express contractual disclaimers, from establishing any duty to disclose or reasonable reliance, of kind required under New York law to recover on fraud theory from co-administrative agents on credit facilities, were likewise barred from asserting claim for breach of implied duty of good faith to extent that claim was premised on same alleged nondisclosures underlying fraud claim.

[16] Contracts 168
95k168

While New York law implies duty of good faith and fair dealing in every contract, no obligation can be implied that would be inconsistent with other terms of contractual relationship.

[17] Implied and Constructive Contracts 3
205Hk3

Elements of unjust enrichment claim under New York law are: (1) that defendant benefitted, (2) at plaintiff's expense; and (3) that equity and good conscience require restitution.

[18] Implied and Constructive Contracts 55
205Hk55

Under New York law, existence of a valid and enforceable written contract governing particular subject matter ordinarily precludes recovery in quasi contract, or unjust enrichment, for events arising out of same subject matter.

205Hk55

Under New York law, investors that were barred, by express contractual disclaimers, from establishing any duty to disclose or reasonable reliance, of kind required under New York law to recover on fraud theory from co-administrative agents on credit facilities, were likewise barred from recovering from agents, on unjust enrichment theory, for allegedly taking advantage of their "superior knowledge" of borrower's financial condition; credit facility agreements expressly provided that agents and their affiliates had no duty to account to investors for their dealings with borrowers, and had no duty to provide investors with any information in connection with payments under agreements.

[20] Conspiracy 1.1

Under New York law, elements of civil conspiracy are: (1) agreement between two or more persons; (2) overt act; (3) intentional participation in furtherance of plan or purpose; and (4) resulting damage.

[21] Conspiracy 1.1
91k1.1

New York law does not recognize substantive tort of civil conspiracy; such a claim is available only if there is evidence of underlying actionable tort.

Under New York law, conspiracy allegations are permitted only to connect actions of separate defendants with otherwise actionable tort.

Allegations in complaint filed by entities participating in loan investments, against third parties that acted as co-administrative agents or issuing bank on credit facilities, for their alleged knowing participation in prepaids and other transactions which were designed to hide borrower's true financial condition and to distort its public financial statements were sufficient to state civil conspiracy claim under New York law.

OPINION AND ORDER

SWAIN, District Judge.

This action concerns loans, made by Plaintiffs to or for the benefit of the Enron Corporation, that were administered by JP Morgan Chase Bank and Citibank. Plaintiffs contend that Defendants defrauded them in connection with the formation of certain syndicated credit facilities and payments under those facilities. The Court has jurisdiction of this matter pursuant to 28 U.S.C. section 1332. Defendants now move pursuant to Rules 12(b)(6) and 9(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure for an order dismissing the Second Amended Complaint. The Court has considered thoroughly all arguments and submissions in connection with the instant motions. For the following reasons, Defendants' motions are granted in part and denied in part.

489 BACKGROUND

The following factual recitation is drawn from the Second Amended Complaint (the "Complaint"), statements or documents incorporated in the Complaint by reference, public disclosure documents filed with the SEC, and/or documents that Plaintiffs either possessed or knew about and upon which they relied in bringing this action. See Rothman v. Gregor, 220 F.3d 81, 88-89 (2d Cir.2000) (and cases cited therein). All of Plaintiffs' allegations are taken as true for the purposes of this recitation.

Plaintiff UniCredito Italiano SpA ("UCI") is an Italian financial institution with headquarters in Milan, Italy. (Compl.¶ 36.) Plaintiff Bank Polska Kasa Opieki SA, also known as Bank Pekao SA ("Pekao") is a Polish financial institution with headquarters in Warsaw, Poland. (Id. ¶ 37.)

Defendant JP Morgan Chase & Co. ("JPMC & Co.") is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in New York. Its primary banking subsidiary is Defendant JP Morgan Chase Bank; its primary investment banking or securities subsidiary is Defendant J.P. Morgan Securities Inc. Defendant JP Morgan Chase Bank is a New York corporation, with its principal place of business in New York. Defendant J.P. Morgan Securities Inc. is a Delaware corporation with offices in New York. (Id. ¶¶ 38-40.)

Defendant Citigroup, Inc. ("Citigroup") is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in New York. Citigroup's primary banking subsidiary is Defendant Citibank, N.A. ("Citibank"); its primary investment banking or securities subsidiary is Defendant Salomon Smith Barney. Citibank is a national banking association with its principal place of business in New York. Defendant Salomon Smith Barney is a New York corporation with its principal place of business in New York. (Id. ¶¶ 41-43.)

Defendants' Involvement in Enron's Off-Balance-Sheet Partnerships

In 1999 Enron began to enter into business relationships with partnerships, known as the LJM partnerships, in which former Enron CFO Andrew Fastow was both the manager and an investor. (Id. ¶ 68.) These Special Purpose Entities ("SPEs") were designed to remove from Enron's balance sheet assets that had lost or were at risk of losing value, in order to give Enron the appearance of a healthier financial condition. (Id. ¶ 62.) Defendants were significant participants in transactions entered into by at least one of the LJM partnerships, an entity referred to in the Complaint as LJM2. (Id. ¶ 72.) Defendants Citigroup and JPMC & Co., directly or through their affiliates, each invested at least $10 million in transactions with LJM2. (Id.)

A feature of many of the SPE transactions was a "trigger point" at which Enron was to issue new shares to the SPEs to cover losses in the value of the assets that had been transferred to the SPEs. (Id. ¶ 74.) The SPEs were then to sell the Enron shares issued to them in order to cover partnership losses. (Id.) By participating in the SPEs and their sale of Enron shares, Defendants generated profits for themselves and contributed to Enron's collapsing share price. (Id.)

The existence of the LJM partnerships was disclosed in Enron's publicly filed financial reports. (Id. ¶ 84.) These disclosures did not indicate the nature or extent of Fastow's financial interest in the LJM partnerships. (Id.) Defendants knew that Enron's disclosures with respect to the LJM partnerships were materially misleading, inaccurate, and inadequate, and they withheld that knowledge from Plaintiffs. Defendants knew that Plaintiffs relied *490 upon Enron's disclosures in making their decisions to participate in the credit facilities at issue. (Id. ¶ 85.)

Defendants' Involvement in Enron Prepays

"Prepays" are transactions in the commodities trading business in which parties arrange for the prepayment of commodities to be delivered at a later date. (Id. ¶ 86.) Enron used prepay transactions designed by Defendants to disguise loans to Enron. (Id. ¶

87-88, 90.) Prepay transactions were arranged in which the Defendant banks or their affiliates would agree to purchase some commodity and simultaneously to sell it back to Enron. (Id. ¶ 90.)

JP Morgan Chase Bank and the Mahonia Prepays

Enron conducted a large number of prepay transactions with the participation of Defendant JP Morgan Chase Bank through an offshore SPE called Mahonia, Ltd. JP Morgan Chase Bank paid the Channel Islands law firm of Mourant de Feu & Jeune to set up Mahonia. (Id. ¶ 97.) JP Morgan Chase Bank was aware that Enron entered into prepays with Mahonia as a means of disguising Enron's debt and received substantial revenues from Mahonia's dealings with Enron. (Id. ¶ 98.) Plaintiff quotes George Serice, a Chase officer working on the Enron account, as having remarked in an email to Jeffrey Dellapina, a Managing Director at JP, Morgan Chase Bank, that " 'Enron loves these deals as they are able to hide funded debt from their equity analysts because they (at the very least) book it as deferred rev[enue] or (better yet) bury it in their trading liabilities.' " (Id. ¶ 100.) One or more of the JP Morgan Chase defendants created marketing material for the prepay transactions. (Id. ¶ 102.) One of those marketing presentations in July 1998 noted that prepays were " 'balance sheet "friendly." ' " (Id.)

In an action brought by JP Morgan Chase Bank against certain insurance companies to enforce surety bonds related to Mahonia, the defendants have asserted that they were improperly induced to provide security for what were in effect loans. In a June 2002 filing in that action, JP Morgan Chase Bank admitted that " 'the surety bonds were part of financing transactions in which the funds advanced by JP Morgan Chase to Mahonia were ultimately used by Enron for general corporate purposes, not to secure future sources of the oil and gas to be delivered.' " (Id. ¶ 105.)

Citigroup Defendants and the Delta and

Roosevelt Prepays

Defendants Citibank and Salomon Smith Barney, with the approval of Citigroup, set up a trust called Yosemite, which transferred funds to a Citigroup-controlled SPE named Delta. (Id. ¶ 108.) Delta used funds from Yosemite to engage in purported prepays with Enron in which no commodities actually changed hands and Citigroup and the Yosemite investors received the equivalent of interest payments from Enron. (Id.)

The Citigroup Defendants also assisted Enron in keeping $125 million in bank loans off its books in a purported prepay known as the Roosevelt transaction. (Id. ¶ 113.) In late 1998, Citigroup or its representative agreed to transfer $500 million to Enron for six months as part of an oil and gas prepay. (Id. ¶ 114.) In April 1999, Enron asked Citigroup to extend its time to repay a substantial portion of Citigroup's funds. (Id.) Citigroup agreed to extend the date for Enron to make oil deliveries worth $125 million and through a secret oral agreement gave Enron until September 20, 1999 to repay that amount. (Id.) As indicated in an internal email dated April 27, 1999 from senior Citigroup loan executive James F. Reilly, "the paperwork" *491 "could not reflect the extension" as that would require recategorizing the prepaid as simple debt." (Id. ¶ 115.)

The Credit Facilities

The bulk of Plaintiffs' damages claims in this action arise from losses sustained on investments in credit facilities for Enron for which the Defendant banks served as Administrative and/or Paying Agents or, in the case of JP Morgan Chase Bank with respect to a 2001 letter of credit facility, the Issuing Bank, and which were marketed by the Defendant securities subsidiaries. Defendants JP Morgan Chase Bank (through its predecessor in interest, The Chase Manhattan Bank) and Citibank were the Co-Administrative Agents for three Enron credit facilities in which Plaintiffs participated: 1) a $1.25 billion medium-term credit facility entered into on May 18, 2000 (the "2000 Credit Facility"), 2) a $1.75 billion short-term facility entered into on May 14, 2001 (the "2001 Credit Facility"), and 3) a $500 million letter of credit facility entered into on May 14, 2001 (the "2001 L/C Facility") (collectively, the "Syndicated Facilities"). (Id. ¶ 118.) Citibank was also the Paying Agent for the 2000 and 2001 Credit Facilities, and The Chase Manhattan Bank was the Paying Agent and Issuing Bank for the 2001 L/C Facility. See 2000 Credit Facility Agreement, Ex. A to Gertzman Decl.; 2001 Credit Facility Agreement, Ex. B to Gertzman Decl.; 2001 L/C Facility Agreement, Ex. C to Gertzman Decl.

The agreements establishing each of the Syndicated Facilities contained disclaimer, covenant, and acknowledgment provisions identical in all relevant respects to the following provisions of the 2000 Credit Facility:

Section 7.02 Paying Agent's Reliance, Etc.
[T]he Paying Agent shall not have, by reason of this Agreement or any other Loan Document a fiduciary relationship in respect of any Bank or the holder of any Note; and nothing in this Agreement or any other Loan Document, expressed or implied, is intended or shall be so construed as to impose upon the Paying Agent any obligations in respect of this Agreement or any other Loan Document except as expressly set forth herein. Without limitation of the generality of the foregoing, the Paying Agent ... (iii) makes no warranty or representation to any Bank for any statements, warranties or representations (whether written or oral) made in or in connection with any Loan Document or any other instrument or document furnished pursuant hereto or in connection herewith; (iv) shall not have any duty to ascertain or to inquire as to the performance or observance of any of the terms, covenants or conditions of any Loan Document or any other instrument or document furnished pursuant hereto or in connection herewith on the part of the Borrower or to inspect the property (including the books and records) of the Borrower;

Section 7.03 Paying Agent and Its Affiliates
With respect to its Commitment, the Advances made by it and the Note issued to it, each Bank which is also the Paying Agent shall have the same rights and powers under the Loan Documents as any other Bank and may exercise the same as though it were not the Paying Agent; the term "Bank" or "Banks" shall, unless otherwise expressly indicated, include any Bank serving as the Paying Agent in its individual capacity. Any Bank serving as the Paying Agent and its affiliates may accept deposits from, lend money to, act as trustee under indentures of, accept investment banking engagements from and generally *492 engage in any kind of business with, the Borrower, any of the Subsidiaries and any Person who may do business with or own securities of the Borrower or any Subsidiary, all as if such Bank were not the Paying Agent and without any duty to account therefor to the Banks.

Section 7.04 Bank Credit Decision

Each Bank acknowledges that it has, independently and without reliance upon the Paying Agent or any other Bank and based on the financial statements referred to in Section 4.01(d) and such other documents and information as it has deemed appropriate, made its own credit analysis and decision to enter into this Agreement. Each Bank also acknowledges that it will, independently and without reliance upon the Paying Agent or any other Bank and based on such documents and information as it shall deem appropriate at the time, continue to make its own credit decisions in taking or not taking action under this Agreement and the other Loan Documents. The Paying Agent shall not have any duty or responsibility, either initially or on a continuing basis, to provide any Bank or the holder of any Note with any credit or other information with respect thereto, whether coming into its possession before the making of the Advances or at any time or times thereafter.

2000 Credit Facility Agreement §§ 7.02-7.04, Ex. A to Gertzman Decl., at 31-32. Sections

8.02 to 8.04 of the 2000 Credit Facility Agreement are identical in all relevant respects to Sections 7.02 to 7.04 with the substitution of the term "Co-Administrative Agents" for the term "Paying Agent." See 2000 Credit Facility Agreement §§ 8.02-8.04, Ex. A to Gertzman Decl., at 34-35. For parallel provisions in the agreements for the other credit facilities, see 2001 Credit Facility Agreement §§ 7.02-7.04, 8.02-8.04, Ex. B to Gertzman Decl. at 31-32, 34-35; and 2001 L/C Facility Agreement §§ 7.02-7.04, 8.02-8.04, Ex. C to Gertzman Decl. at 30-31, 33-34.

As noted above, JP Morgan Chase Bank was also designated as the "Issuing Bank" under the 2001 L/C Facility Agreement, which provided that the "Issuing Bank," in selling to the participating banks their pro rata share of the obligation under any letter of credit issued pursuant to the agreement, "represents and warrants to [the participating bank] that the Issuing Bank is the legal and beneficial owner of such interest being sold by it, free and clear of any liens, but makes no other representation or warranty. The Issuing Bank shall have no responsibility or liability to any other [participating bank] with respect to any [letter of credit obligation] or any such participation [.]" (2001 L/C Facility Agreement § 2.03(c), Ex. C to Gertzman Decl. at 10.) Section 7.03 of the 2001 L/C Facility Agreement provided that the Issuing Bank and its affiliates had the right to engage in transactions with Enron "with no duty to account therefor" to the participating banks, and section 7.04 contains the acknowledgment of participating banks that they had not relied on the Issuing Bank in making the decision to enter into the agreement and that they would make their continuing decisions as to whether or not to take action under the agreement or letters of credit issued under the agreement "independently and without reliance upon ... the Issuing Bank[.]" (Id. §§ 7.03-7.04, Ex. C to Gertzman Decl. at 31.)

In each of the agreements for the Syndicated Facilities, Enron (which was referred to in the agreements as the "Borrower") entered into certain covenants concerning the participating banks' due diligence rights. These covenants were *493 identical in all relevant respects to the covenants in the 2000 Credit Facility Agreement, the pertinent provisions of which follow:

Section 5.01 Affirmative Covenants.

(a) Reporting Requirements [the Borrower will furnish to each Bank:]

(viii) such other information respecting the condition or operations, financial or otherwise, of the Borrower or any of its Subsidiaries as any Bank through the Paying Agent may from time to time reasonably request.

(f) Visitation Rights At any reasonable time and from time to time, after reasonable notice, [the Borrower will] permit the Paying Agent or any of the Banks or any agents or representatives thereof, to examine the records and books of account of, and visit the properties of, the Borrower and any of its Principal Subsidiaries, and to discuss the affairs, finances and accounts of the Borrower and any of its Principal Subsidiaries with any of their respective officers or directors.

2000 Credit Facility Agreement §§ 5.01(a)(viii), (f), Ex. A to Gertzman Decl. at 26-27. For parallel covenants in the agreements for the other credit facilities, see 2001 Credit Facility Agreement §§ 5.01(a)(viii), (f), Ex. B to Gertzman Decl. at 26-27; 2001 L/C Facility Agreement §§ 5.01(a)(viii), (f), Ex. C to Gertzman Decl. at 26-27.

Defendants Salomon Smith Barney and J.P. Morgan Securities (the "Securities Subsidiaries") were co-lead arrangers of the Syndicated Facilities. (Compl.¶ 119.) They distributed to participant banks offering memoranda and invitations to offer in connection with the Syndicated Facilities. Those documents contained and referred to publicly filed financial information about Enron. (Id.) The offering memoranda contained the following section entitled "Disclaimer":

The information contained in this Information Memorandum has been supplied by or on behalf of Enron Corp. (the "Company"). Neither Salomon Smith Barney Inc. and Chase Securities Inc. (as "Co-Lead Arrangers") nor any of their affiliates has independently verified such information and the same is being provided by the Co-Lead Arrangers for informational purposes only. The Co-Lead Arrangers do not make any representation or warranty as to the accuracy or completeness of such information and does not [sic] assume any undertaking to supplement such information as further information becomes available or in light of changing circumstances. The Co-Lead Arrangers shall not have any liability for any representations or warranties (express or implied) contained in, or any omissions from, the Information Memorandum or any other written or oral communication transmitted to the recipient in the course of its evaluation of the proposed financing or otherwise.

The information contained herein has been prepared to assist interested parties in making their own evaluation of the proposed financing for the Company and for no other purpose. The information does not purport to be all-inclusive or to contain all information that a prospective lender may desire. It is understood that each recipient of this Information Memorandum will perform its own independent investigation and analysis of the proposed financing and the creditworthiness of the Company, based on such information as it deems relevant and without reliance on Co-Lead Arrangers. The information contained herein is not a substitute for the recipient's independent investigation and analysis.

*494 See 2000 Credit Facility Information Memorandum, Ex. D to Gertzman Decl. (no pagination); 2001 Credit and L/C Facilities Invitation to Offer, Ex. E to Gertzman Decl., at viii.

Plaintiff UCI contributed $10,416,667.67 under the 2000 Credit Facility, $11,666,666.67 under the 2001 Credit Facility, and $3,333,333.33 under the 2001 L/C Facility. (Compl.¶ 120.) Plaintiff Pekao purchased a participating interest in the 2000 Credit Facility in the amount of $6.25 million. (Id.)

In determining whether to extend credit under the Facilities, Plaintiffs conducted credit assessments that included, inter alia, a review of Enron's financial statements, including its 10-K and 10-Q Forms filed with the SEC. (Id. ¶ 122.)

If Plaintiffs had known the true facts of Enron's financial condition, especially its actual amount of debt and its actual debt-to-capitalization ratio, and the extent of the improper transactions conducted by Enron with Defendants and others, Plaintiffs would not have participated in the Facilities. (Id. ¶ 124.)

Defendants withheld information from Plaintiffs concerning Enron's debt, its inflated revenues, and Defendants' role in improper transactions that allowed Enron to fraudulently manipulate its publicly reported financial condition. (Id. ¶ 127.)

Under the agreements for the Syndicated Credit Facilities, Enron represented that it was in compliance with applicable laws, that there had been no adverse change in its financial condition since the end of its prior fiscal year, and that it had and would maintain a ratio of total senior debt to total capitalization of no more than 65%. (Id. ¶ 128.) Defendants knew that Enron's debt-to-capitalization ratio was higher than reported. (Id. ¶ 129.) A 1999 internal Citibank document revealed that Citibank was aware that Enron had a debt-to-capitalization ratio of over 65%. (Id.) Defendants also knew that Enron was in violation of securities and commodities laws. (Id. ¶ 130.)

The Defendant banks and securities subsidiaries through, inter alia, the offering memoranda and invitations to offer, directed Plaintiffs to public information regarding Enron's financial information that they knew to be materially false. (Id. ¶ 133.)

The October 25, 2001 Borrowing Requests

Under the credit agreements governing the 2000 and 2001 Credit Facilities, Enron had to satisfy certain conditions before it could receive loan funds, including compliance with all laws and the maintenance of a 65% debt-to-capitalization ratio. (Id. ¶ 138.) On October 25, 2001, Plaintiff UCI received borrowing demands at 11:48 a.m. and 12 noon, conveyed through Citibank, for immediate payment of its shares of the 2000 and 2001 Credit Facilities, and Plaintiff Pekao received a demand at 12 noon, conveyed through Citibank, to fund immediately its share of the 2000 Credit Facility. (Id. ¶ 139.)

At 2:45 p.m., the Managing Director of JP Morgan Chase Securities, Claire O'Connor, notified UCI that Enron would explain its need for cash to redeem its commercial paper at a conference call at 3:00 p.m. (Id. ¶ 140.) The Defendant banks helped manage Enron's commercial paper program, but O'Connor did not mention their role. (Id. ¶¶ 140-41.) O'Connor falsely stated that Enron was drawing down the funds to reestablish market confidence. (Id. ¶ 141.) At the 3:00 p.m. conference call, Enron's CFO explained that Enron needed the full amounts of the 2000 and 2001 Credit Facilities so that Enron could redeem its commercial paper. (Id. ¶ 142.) The Defendant banks participated in the conference call, but said nothing *495 about Enron's defaults under the credit agreements, defaults of which they were aware. (Id. ¶ 143.)

At 4:06 p.m., UCI received a facsimile from Citibank conveying Enron's certification that its representations and warranties, including those in the credit agreements, continued to be correct, and that there was no default or event of default under the credit agreements. (Id. ¶ 144.) UCI and Pekao subsequently forwarded their respective contributions under the credit facilities to Citibank, to be conveyed to Enron. (Id. ¶ 145.)

Pursuant to section 6.01 of the credit agreements governing the 2000 and 2001 Credit Facilities, if a majority of the participating banks had determined that a default or event of default had occurred that relieved them of their obligations under the agreements, the banks could have instructed Citibank to declare the termination of each bank's obligation to make advances. (Id. ¶

148.) Defendants knew that Enron's debt-to-capitalization ratio put it in breach of the credit agreements, and their concealment of that breach prevented Plaintiffs from exercising their rights under section 6.01. (Id. ¶ 147.)

The Defendant banks, who were also participants in the 2000 and 2001 Credit Facilities, contributed their shares of the October 25, 2001 funding. (Id. ¶ 149.) The credit facilities enabled the banks to reduce their aggregate exposure and take a "smaller hit" with respect to Enron. (Id.)

On November 1, 2001, the Defendant banks announced that they were negotiating to extend $1 billion in secured loans to Enron. Citibank conditioned its participation in that secured loan on Enron's payment of an earlier $250 million unsecured Citibank loan. (Id. ¶ 152.)

UCI and the 2001 L/C Facility

After its October 25, 2001 payments, UCI sought from JP Morgan Chase Bank the identification of all letters of credit that had been issued under the 2001 L/C Facility and information as to the current status of those letters of credit. (Id. ¶ 154.) On November 26, 2001, JP Morgan Chase Bank identified eleven letters of credit that it said had been issued under the 2001 L/C Facility, two of which had expired. (Id. ¶ 155.) On Friday, November 30, 2001, UCI received a request to fund $1,050,000 under a letter of credit for Enron, and made the requested payment to JP Morgan Chase Bank. (Id. ¶ 156.)

Enron filed for bankruptcy protection on Sunday, December 2, 2001. (Id. ¶ 157.) On December 3, 2001, UCI received a different list from JP Morgan Chase of letters of credit purportedly issued under the 2001 L/C Facility. The second list included a $150 million letter of credit dated October 9, 2001 in favor of an entity called Mahonia. (Id. ¶ 158.) The Mahonia letter of credit was drawn down on December 11, 2001. (Id. ¶ 159.)

Under the agreement governing the 2001 L/

C Facility, Enron's breach of its covenants, representations, and warranties would have permitted a majority of the participating banks in that facility to demand security from Enron, including requiring Enron to deposit an amount equal to the undrawn letter of credit amounts into a cash collateral account. (Id. ¶ 163.)

Defendant JP Morgan Chase Bank has continued to demand payments from UCI under the 2001 L/C Facility, including a demand in May 2002. (Id. ¶ 165.) Plaintiff has refused to make any further payments under the 2001 L/C Facility. (Id.) On June 4, 2002, JP Morgan Chase Bank advised UCI and other participating banks that JP Morgan Chase Bank had erroneously applied letters of credit in an aggregate *496 amount exceeding the maximum authorized under that facility. (Id. ¶ 166.) UCI was advised that it would be paid its proportionate share of such excess. To date, no such payment has been made. (Id.)

UCI has made repeated requests of JP Morgan Chase Bank for information, to which UCI is entitled to as a participant in the 2001 L/C Facility and which JP Morgan Chase Bank has made available to other participating banks, about the letters of credit that have been issued under that Facility; those requests have been refused. (Id. ¶¶ 167, 260.) JP Morgan Chase Bank has failed to allow UCI to have access to a repository or central file of documents relating to the 2001 L/C Facility, including documents that UCI has specifically requested. (Id. ¶ 168.)

JP Morgan Chase Bank has submitted and continues to submit bills for legal expenses to UCI that JP Morgan Chase Bank claims are subject to indemnification under the 2001 L/C Facility. (Id. ¶ 169.)

The 2000 L/C Facility

In May 2000, the same month UCI approved its participation in the 2000 Credit Facility, it also, under a separate agreement with Enron, approved a $10 million letter of credit facility for Enron, which was increased to $30 million in August 2000 (the "2000 L/C Facility"). (Id.)

¶ 121.) UCI would not have taken part in the 2000 L/C Facility had it not been for Defendants' participation in falsifying Enron's financial statements, including its Form 10-K and 10-Q, specifically the disclosures concerning revenues, earning, liabilities, and debt. (Id. ¶ 170.) Defendants knew that UCI had established the 2000 L/C Facility, but they did not advise UCI of Enron's actual financial condition. (Id. ¶ 172.)

On August 31, 2000, at the direction of Enron, UCI issued a standby letter of credit in favor of CalPX Trading Services in the amount of $10 million. On December 12, 2000, that amount was increased to $25 million at the direction of Enron. (Id. ¶ 174.) The maturity date was extended several times at Enron's request, including by an agreement on October 24, 2001, to extend the maturity date to November 30, 2001. (Id. ¶ 175.) After the October extension, UCI and Enron began negotiations concerning Enron providing collateral for the letters of credit that UCI had issued. By the third week of November 2001, Enron had delivered to UCI a form of agreement under which Enron was to provide the collateral. (Id. ¶ 176.)

On or about November 26, 2001, UCI received a phone call from Claire O'Connor. O'Connor asked UCI if it would be interested in contributing its $25 million exposure on the 2000 L/C Facility to a new letter of credit facility for the benefit of Enron that JP Morgan Chase Bank was proposing to arrange. (Id. ¶ 177.) UCI declined to participate, and explained that it expected to enter an agreement under which it would receive cash collateral from Enron for its 2000 L/C Facility exposure. (Id.)

UCI and Enron never executed the proposed agreement for collateral. On November 30, 2001, the letter of credit was drawn down in the full amount of $25 million. (Id. ¶¶ 179-80.)

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

UCI commenced this action in the District of Delaware on February 7, 2002, and filed an Amended Complaint on or about March 19, 2002, adding Bank Pekaio as a plaintiff. On April 15, 2002, Defendants moved to dismiss the action pursuant to Rules 12(b)(6) and 9(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or, in the alternative, to transfer the action to this District. *497 On June 26, 2002, the Delaware court granted Defendants' motions to transfer. See Unicredito Italiano v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, No. 02-104, 2002 WL 1378226 (D.Del. June 26, 2002). On November 1, 2002, Plaintiffs filed the Second Amended Complaint.

DISCUSSION

In evaluating a motion to dismiss a complaint pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Court is obliged to take as true the facts as alleged in the complaint and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. Grandon v. Merrill Lynch & Co., 147 F.3d 184, 188 (2d Cir.1998). The action must not be dismissed unless " 'it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.' " Cohen v. Koenig, 25 F.3d 1168, 1172 (2d Cir.1994) (quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S.Ct. 99, 2 L.Ed.2d 80 (1957)); Ganino v. Citizens Utilities Company, 228 F.3d 154, 161 (2d Cir.2000). The Court may consider statements or documents incorporated in the Complaint by reference, public disclosure documents filed with the SEC, and documents "that the plaintiffs either possessed or knew about and upon which they relied in bringing the suit." Rothman v. Gregor, 220 F.3d 81, 88-89 (2d Cir.2000) (internal citations omitted).

Choice of Law

The credit agreements for the Syndicated Facilities provide that they are governed by New York law. See 2000 and 2001 Credit Facilities § 9.07; 2001 L/C Facility § 10.07. Furthermore, the parties have presumed in their arguments that New York law governs this action. See Tehran-Berkeley Civil Environmental Engineers v. Tippetts-Abbett-McCarthy-Stratton, 888 F.2d 239, 242 (2d Cir.1989) ("implied consent to use a forum's law is sufficient to establish choice of law"). Accordingly, the Court will apply New York law in rendering its decision.

Plaintiffs' Causes of Action

Plaintiffs UCI and Pekao assert common law claims against all Defendants for fraudulent concealment (Count I), fraudulent inducement (Count II), aiding and abetting fraud by Enron (Count III), negligent misrepresentation (Count IV), civil conspiracy (Count V), and unjust enrichment (Count VII). Plaintiffs assert a claim against JP Morgan Chase Bank and Citibank for breach of an implied duty of good faith in connection with the Syndicated Facilities (Count VI). Plaintiff UCI also seeks declaratory relief against Defendant JP Morgan Chase Bank with respect to the 2001 L/C Facility (Count VIII).

Plaintiffs' Fraud and Negligent Misrepresentation Claims

[1][2][3] The elements of a claim for fraud or fraudulent inducement under New York law are (1) that defendant made a material false representation, (2) with the intent to defraud the plaintiff, (3) the plaintiff reasonably relied upon the representation, and (4) the plaintiff suffered damage as a result of that reliance. Banque Arabe et Internationale D'Investissement v. Maryland Nat'l Bank, 57 F.3d 146, 153 (2d Cir.1995) ("Banque Arabe"). Fraudulent concealment claims have the additional element that the defendant had a duty to disclose the material information. Id. A duty to disclose arises where 1) one party has superior knowledge of certain information; 2) that information is not readily available to the other party; and 3) the first party knows that the second party is acting on the basis of mistaken knowledge. Banque Arabe, 57 F.3d at 155.

[4][5] Negligent misrepresentation claims under New York law have the following elements: (1) the defendant had a *498 duty, as a result of a special relationship, to give correct information; (2) the defendant made a false representation that he or she should have known was incorrect; (3) the information supplied in the representation was known by the defendant to be desired by the plaintiff for a serious purpose; (4) the plaintiff intended to rely and act upon it; and (5) the plaintiff reasonably relied on it to his or her detriment. Hydro Investors, Inc. v. Trafalgar Power, Inc., 227 F.3d 8, 20 (2d Cir.2000). In transactions between sophisticated financial institutions, "no extra-contractual duty of disclosure exists," Banque Arabe at 158, although determination of reasonable reliance also depends on whether the person making the representation held or appeared to hold unique or special expertise, and whether the speaker knew the use to which the representation would be applied and made the representation for that purpose. See Suez Equity Investors, L.P. v. Toronto-Dominion Bank, 250 F.3d 87, 103 (2d Cir.2001).

[6] Plaintiffs' fraud and misrepresentation claims must be dismissed because the contracts pursuant to which they made their Enron loan investments preclude them from establishing essential elements of those claims, namely, that the Defendant banks had a duty to disclose information regarding or gained from their business dealings with Enron, and that any reliance by Plaintiffs on misrepresentations by the Defendants was reasonable. See Banque Arabe, 57 F.3d at 155 (agreement with specific disclaimer "operate[d] as a waiver absolving [defendant] of responsibility to make affirmative disclosures concerning ... financial risks"); DynCorp v. GTE Corp., 215 F.Supp.2d 308, 319 (S.D.N.Y.2002) (plaintiff's particularized disclaimers "make it impossible for it to prove one of the elements of a claim of fraud: that it reasonably relied on the representations it alleges were made to induce it to enter into the [agreement]").

Sections 7.02 and 8.02 of the 2000 Credit Facility and parallel provisions of the other operative documents provided specifically that the Defendant banks, in their capacities as Paying or Co-Administrative Agents, would have no obligations other than those expressly specified in the relevant agreements and that they had no duty "to ascertain or to inquire as to the performance or observance of any of the terms, covenants or conditions of any Loan Document or any other [relevant] instrument or document ... on the part of Borrower." Sections 7.03 and 8.03 of that agreement and the parallel provisions of the other relevant operative documents permitted the Defendant banks, in their capacities as Paying or Co-Administrative Agent or, with respect to JP Morgan Chase Bank in connection with the 2001 L/C Facility, as Issuing Bank, and their affiliates to engage in banking and other business transactions with Enron and its affiliates, "without any duty to account therefor to the [lending] Banks." Under section 7.04 and 8.04, the lenders agreed that the bank Defendants, in their capacities as Paying or Co-Administrative Agent, would "not have any duty or responsibility, either initially or on a continuing basis, to provide any [lending] Bank or the holder of any Note with any credit or other information with respect thereto, whether coming into [their] possession before the making of the [loan] Advances or at any time or times thereafter." Section 2.03(c) of the 2001 L/C Facility Agreement further provided that, in connection with any purchase by a bank of a participation in a letter of credit issued under the facility, "the Issuing Bank represents and warrants ... that the Issuing Bank is the legal and beneficial owner of such interest being sold by it ... but makes no other representation or warranty. The Issuing *499 Bank shall have no responsibility or liability to any other [participating bank] with respect to any [letter of credit obligation]."

[7] Plaintiffs' fraudulent concealment and negligent misrepresentation claims as against Defendant banks thus must fail because, even if the bank Defendants had the knowledge the Complaint attributes to them, the banks had no duty to disclose it to Plaintiffs. Sophisticated parties such as Plaintiffs are held to the terms of their contracts. See, e.g., Harsco Corp. v. Segui, 91 F.3d 337, 346 (2d Cir.1996).

The operative documents also, on their face, preclude Plaintiffs from claiming that they relied reasonably on any alleged representations by the Defendants. In addition to the above-quoted provisions disclaiming any duties on the banks' part to monitor Enron's compliance with its obligations in connection with the loan facilities and permitting the banks and their affiliates to carry on business transactions with Enron and its affiliates without accounting to the other lenders for that activity, the lenders specifically agreed that they had, and would continue to, make their own credit decisions and would not rely on the Defendant banks, either in entering into the facilities or in making decisions in the course of the performance of the relevant agreements. See 2000 Credit Facility § 7.04 and parallel provisions of other operative documents. Having failed to bargain for the right to rely on the banks as monitors of Enron's compliance with its disclosure, financial condition and other covenants, or for the right to benefit from any knowledge gained by the Defendant banks or their affiliates in connection with their own business dealings with Enron and its affiliates, Plaintiffs cannot, as a matter of law, be held reasonably to have relied on any misrepresentations or omissions by the Defendants concerning those matters. Cf. Lazard Freres & Co. v. Protective Life Ins. Co., 108 F.3d 1531, 1541 (2d Cir.1997) ("It is well established that '[w]here sophisticated businessmen engaged in major transactions enjoy access to critical information but fail to take advantage of that access, New York courts are particularly disinclined to entertain claims of justifiable reliance.' "); DynCorp, 215 F.Supp.2d at 322 ("Sophisticated parties to major transactions cannot avoid their disclaimers by complaining that they received less than all information, for they could have negotiated for fuller information or more complete warranties.").

Counts I, II and IV of the Complaint will therefore be dismissed for failure to state a claim.

[8][9][10] Plaintiffs' invocation of the doctrine of "peculiar knowledge" does not compel a different result. Under this doctrine, express waivers or disclaimers of reliance will not be given effect "where the facts are peculiarly within the knowledge of the party invoking [them]." Banque Arabe, 57 F.3d at 155 (internal quotation marks omitted). The "peculiar knowledge" doctrine relates to the reasonableness of claims of reliance, finding its theoretical basis in the premise that "[w]hen matters are ... peculiarly within the defendant's knowledge, ... plaintiff may rely without prosecuting an investigation, as he has no independent means of ascertaining the truth." ... And the inquiry as to whether the defendant has peculiar knowledge of the facts at issue, of course, goes to the reasonableness of the plaintiff's relianceif the plaintiff has the means of learning the facts and disclaims reliance on the defendant's representations, there simply is no reason to relieve it of the consequences of both its failure to protect itself and its bargain to absolve the defendant of responsibility. On the other hand, if the plaintiff has conducted *500 the appropriate due diligence and reasonably believes that it has corroborated the defendant's representations, then a different result may be warranted.

Dimon Inc. v. Folium, Inc., 48 F.Supp.2d 359, 368 (S.D.N.Y.1999) (citations and footnotes omitted). Plaintiffs contend that the "peculiar knowledge" exception applies in the instant case because Defendants were involved in the off-balance sheet partnerships and prepay transactions that enabled Enron to disguise its actual financial condition. Plaintiffs rely heavily in this regard on Dimon, supra. The Dimon plaintiff, an "extremely sophisticated" party that had purchased the stock of a company from the defendant in that case, alleged that the purchase price had been inflated artificially through a complicated accounting scheme that had effected the concealment of certain expenses. Id. at 361-363. The purchase agreement disclaimed the plaintiff's reliance on any representations other than those expressly included therein; those representations apparently did not include ones as to the accuracy of the information at issue. Although the agreement provided plaintiff with extensive access to company information, the concealed information was only uncovered after the closing, through complicated reconstruction of the general ledger. Id. at 369-370. The court in that case refused to grant a motion to dismiss the plaintiff's fraud claims on the basis of the contractual disclaimer, recognizing that the "peculiar knowledge" doctrine, as developed in New York, applies not only where the facts allegedly misrepresented literally were within the exclusive knowledge of the defendant, but also where the truth theoretically might have been discovered, although only with extraordinary effort or great difficulty, and holding that dismissal pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) was inappropriate because the plaintiff's allegations, "if proved, might permit a trier of fact to conclude that the fraud was so well concealed that the truth must be regarded as having been within the exclusive knowledge of defendants notwithstanding [plaintiff's] sophistication and access to the [company's] books." Relevant in this regard was the reported failure of the purchased company's auditors to detect the scheme. Id. at 368, 372.

Like Dimon, all of the other peculiar knowledge cases cited by Plaintiffs involved alleged concealment or misrepresentation of material information by counterparties in the transactions at issue. See Brass v. American Film Technologies, Inc., 987 F.2d 142 (2d Cir.1993) (nondisclosure by seller of stock warrants); Buy This, Inc. v. MCI Worldcom Communications, Inc., 209 F.Supp.2d 334 (S.D.N.Y.2002) (nondisclosure by purchaser of long-distance telephone minutes); OnBank & Trust Co. v. FDIC, 967 F.Supp. 81 (S.D.N.Y.1997) (failure to disclose by seller of mortgage pass-through certificates and servicing rights); Doehla v. Wathne Limited, Inc., No. 98 Civ. 6087, 1999 WL 566311 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 3, 1999) (misrepresentation and concealment by defendant owners of employer corporations in employment negotiations with plaintiff); Aniero Concrete Company, Inc. v. New York City Construction Authority, Nos. 94 Civ. 9111, 95 Civ. 3506, 1997 WL 3268 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 3, 1997) (misrepresentations by defendant assignor and its agent relating to agreement assigning rights under construction contract to plaintiff assignee); Stambovsky v. Ackley, 169 A.D.2d 254, 572 N.Y.S.2d 672 (1st Dept.1991)

(nondisclosure by seller of house).

Information as to the true nature of Enron's financial condition plainly was not the exclusive province of the Defendant banks. Enron, for one, certainly possessed such information, and covenanted in the relevant agreements to provide access *501 to its books and records and to make representations concerning its financial condition. Plaintiffs argue, however, that Enron's alleged deliberate concealment of its true financial condition, including by means of the prepayment and off-balance sheet transactions described above, rendered the truth so difficult to ascertain that the "peculiar knowledge" doctrine could permit a finding of reasonable reliance by Plaintiffs on misrepresentations by the Defendants. Plaintiffs' effort is fatally flawed because they have proffered neither authority nor legal justification for the extension of the peculiar knowledge exception to third parties such as the banks or their affiliates. Plaintiffs' fundamental problem, and the alleged root of their losses, is the allegedly fraudulent conduct of the party on whose representations they agreed to rely, and to which they lent money. Defendants neither borrowed from Plaintiffs nor agreed to provide Plaintiffs, which were themselves sophisticated financial institutions, with any insight into the borrower's status. [FN1]

FN1. The structure of the transactions at issue is noteworthy in this regard. Under the 2000 and 2001 Credit Facilities, Plaintiffs' extensions of credit were made through syndicated credit facilities in which multiple banks agreed to extend credit directly to Enron or its designees. Such transactions are different from loan participations, in which one or more banks transfer to other banks portions of their pre-existing loan commitments. See Banco Espanol de Credito v. Security Pacific National Bank, 763 F.Supp. 36, 43 n. 5 (S.D.N.Y.1991) ("A [loan] participation, as distinguished from a multibank loan transactions (syndicated loan), is an arrangement in which a bank makes a loan to a borrower and then sells all or a portion of that loan to a purchasing bank." (quoting United States Comptroller of the Currency, Banking Circular 181 (1984))). Although the 2001 L/C Facility was apparently structured to include a sale by the Issuing Bank of the letters of credit issued under the facility to the participating banks, the Agreement limits the Issuing Bank's representations and warranties to title to the interest being sold and Enron is responsible under the agreement for all financial information and representations.

Extension of the peculiar knowledge exception to defeat contractual allocations of risks away from the Defendant banks in this case because the principal (Enron) was particularly adept at concealment of its fraud would require at a minimum some factual basis for finding reasonable Plaintiffs' reliance on parties on whom it agreed it would not rely in any respect in making the operative decisions. Plaintiffs have failed to posit any such factual scenario, and the Court declines to extend the peculiar knowledge doctrine, which has developed in the context of fraud by counterparties to transactions, to make third parties guarantors of the integrity of such counterparties. Parties are, of course, free to bargain for such guarantees, but the parties to the transactions at issue here did not do so. Indeed, Plaintiffs here agreed that the Defendant banks and their affiliates could engage in commercial transactions with Enron (and thus have access to special knowledge of Enron's affairs) without any responsibility to account to Plaintiffs for those transactions. See 2000 Credit Facility §§ 7.03 and 8.03 and parallel provisions of other operative agreements.

UCI also fails to state a claim for fraud or misrepresentation with respect to the 2000 L/C Facility. The Complaint alleges that UCI "agreed separately" to extend Enron credit under the 2000 L/C Facility, which is described in Plaintiff's opposition memorandum as "a bilateral letter of credit facility that UCI issued directly and not as a part of any syndicate." (Compl. ¶ 170; Pl.'s Mem. at 18.) There is no allegation in the Complaint or anywhere else that any of the Defendants was a signatory to the agreement governing the 2000 L/C Facility or had any involvement *502 or connection with UCI's decisions regarding that agreement. UCI nonetheless asserts that it is entitled to recover from Defendants for fraud or misrepresentation because Defendants knew that UCI "had put in place" the 2000 L/C Facility but failed to disclose information within their possession about Enron's true financial condition and instead "intentionally misled" UCI about Enron's finances. As the Court has explained above, even under the credit agreements to which the Defendant banks were parties the banks had no duty to disclose information about Enron's financial condition, and the disclaimer provisions in those agreements preclude any inference of reasonable reliance by UCI on Defendants with respect to credit decisions relating to those agreements. Consequently, UCI cannot establish that Defendants had a duty to disclose Enron's financial condition or that UCI reasonably relied on Defendants in connection with the 2000 L/C Facility, in which none of the Defendants even participated. Accordingly, the Complaint fails to state a fraud or misrepresentation claim with respect to the 2000 L/C facility, and Counts I, II, and IV are dismissed.

Plaintiffs' Aiding and Abetting Fraud Claim

[11][12] The elements of a claim for aiding and abetting fraud are: "(1) the existence of an underlying fraud; (2) knowledge of this fraud on the part of the aider and abettor; and (3) substantial assistance by the aider and abettor in achievement of the fraud." Gabriel Capital, L.P. v. NatWest Finance, Inc., 94 F.Supp.2d 491, 511 (S.D.N.Y.2000). "Substantial assistance" exists where "(1) a defendant affirmatively assists, helps conceal, or by virtue of failing to act when required to do so enables the fraud to proceed, and (2) the actions of the aider/abettor proximately caused the harm on which the primary liability is predicated." McDaniel v. Bear Stearns & Co., Inc., 196 F.Supp.2d 343, 352 (S.D.N.Y.2002).

[13][14] Plaintiffs have stated a claim for aiding and abetting fraud. Plaintiffs allege that Defendants knowingly participated in and helped structure the transactions-the prepays and the LJM2 transactions-that enabled Enron to distort its public financial statements, specifically with respect to Enron's revenues and its ratio of balance sheet debt to balance sheet capital. Furthermore, Plaintiffs allege that Defendant's participation in those transactions contributed to Enron's collapse, and thus its inability to meet its obligations under the credit agreements. In addition, by identifying Enron's fraudulent statements, that is, the revenue and debt-to-equity figures in Enron's public financial statements, and specifying the way in which those figures misrepresented the reality of Enron's revenues and liabilities, Plaintiffs have plead Enron's fraud with sufficient particularity to satisfy the requirements of Rule 9(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Accordingly, Defendants' motions are denied to the extent they seek dismissal of Count III.

Plaintiffs' Claim for Breach of the Implied Duty of Good Faith and UCI's Claim for Declaratory Relief

[15][16] The express disclaimers in the credit agreements preclude Plaintiffs' claim for breach of the implied duty of good faith in those agreements to the extent that claim is premised on the allegedly fraudulent conduct addressed above. Plaintiffs allege that the failure of Defendant banks to disclose Enron's true financial condition in connection with the credit transactions prevented Plaintiffs from taking advantage of their various rights under the credit agreements. Although New York law implies a duty of good faith and *503 fair dealing in every contract, "no obligation can be implied that would be inconsistent with other terms of the contractual relationship." Dalton v. Educational Testing Service, 87 N.Y.2d 384, 639 N.Y.S.2d 977, 979-980, 663 N.E.2d 289 (1995) (internal quotation marks omitted). Here, as explained above, the operative contracts specifically absolve the Defendant banks from any duty to disclose financial information regarding Enron and contain Plaintiffs' undertakings to rely on their own credit analyses in making the relevant decisions. Implication of a duty, notwithstanding these provisions, of the banks to make disclosures regarding Enron's financial conditions would clearly be inconsistent with the governing contracts. Cf. Banco Espanol de Credito, 763 F.Supp. at 44-45 ("courts do not impose an obligation which would be inconsistent with other terms of the contractual relationship and for which the parties did not bargain.... The express disclaimer provisions of the [participation agreement] preclude the common law claims [of breach of an alleged implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, tortious misrepresentations, and claims of breach of an alleged duty to disclose based on superior knowledge] asserted by the various plaintiffs."). Count VI of the Complaint therefore fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted to the extent it is premised on the Defendant banks' alleged failure to disclose Enron's true financial condition.

UCI also asserts a separate claim for breach of the implied duty of good faith in the 2001 L/C Facility against Defendant JP Morgan Chase Bank, as well as a claim for declaratory relief based on the same underlying factual allegations. [FN2] UCI alleges that JP Morgan Chase Bank intentionally and in bad faith submitted and continues to submit for payment letters of credit "that were not validly issued under the 2001 L/C Facility," and claims for its legal expenses that are not subject to indemnification under the 2001 L/C Facility. UCI also alleges that JP Morgan Chase Bank has deprived and continues to deprive UCI of information it has requested regarding the 2001 L/C Facility. To the extent these causes of action are premised on the allegedly fraudulent conduct by JP Morgan Chase Bank under the 2001 L/C Facility discussed above, they fail to state a claim for which relief can be granted for the reasons explained above.

FN2. UCI seeks a judgment that 1) it has no further obligations under the 2001 L/C Facility, 2) JP Morgan Chase Bank has an obligation to return all funds paid by UCI under the facility, and 3) JP Morgan Chase Bank must grant full access to UCI to any documents or other information made available to any other bank participating in the facility. (Compl. ¶ 263.)

Nevertheless, it is not clear that UCI could prove no set of facts consistent with the allegations in the Complaint that would entitle it to relief on other grounds with respect to the alleged improper issuance of letters of credit, improper expense claims and failure to provide information. To the extent, for instance, UCI seeks to assert a breach of contract claim or other claim for noncompliance with the terms of the 2001 L/C Facility Agreement, no provision in the agreement appears to preclude such a claim as a matter of law. Furthermore, an indemnification provision in the 2001 L/C Facility Agreement under which the participating banks agreed to indemnify the Co-Administrative and Paying Agents and the Issuing Bank from any and all claims or expenses incurred in connection with letters of credit explicitly excludes indemnification for claims or expenses attributable to the gross negligence or the willful misconduct of those parties. See id. §§ 7.07, 8.07, 9.01, Ex. C to Gertzman *504 Decl. at 32, 35, 36. Accordingly, Counts VI and VIII will be dismissed for failure to state a claim only to the extent they are premised on allegedly fraudulent conduct by JP Morgan Chase Bank. UCI will, however, be required to amend its Complaint to clarify the nature of any non-fraud based claims intended to be asserted in these Counts.

Plaintiffs' Unjust Enrichment Claim

[17][18][19] The elements of an unjust enrichment claim under New York law are that "(1) that the defendant benefitted; (2) at the plaintiff's expense; and (3) that equity and good conscience require restitution." Kaye v. Grossman, 202 F.3d 611, 616 (2d Cir.2000). Under New York law, "the existence of a valid and enforceable written contract governing a particular subject matter ordinarily precludes recovery in quasi contract [i.e., unjust enrichment] for events arising out of the same subject matter." MacDraw, Inc. v. CIT Group Equipment Financing, Inc., 157 F.3d 956, 964 (2d Cir.1998). Plaintiffs assert that Defendants "unjustly used the funds Plaintiffs paid under the agreements to reduce the debt Enron owed them.... Taking advantage of their superior knowledge concerning Enron's actual, dire financial condition, they seized the opportunity to flood Enron [with Plaintiff's cash] in order to have their debt paid off." (Pls.' Mem. at 45.) As Plaintiffs acknowledge, the payments in question were made pursuant to the credit agreements. As to the allegation that Defendants took advantage of their "superior knowledge" of Enron's financial condition, the Court has already detailed how the credit agreements expressly provided that Defendant banks and their affiliates had no duty to account to Plaintiffs for their dealings with Enron, and the banks had no duty to provide Plaintiffs with any information in connection with payments under the agreements. Because the credit agreements govern the subject matter of Plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claim, Count VII fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Accordingly, Count VII is dismissed.

Plaintiffs' Civil Conspiracy Claim

[20][21][22][23] The elements of a civil conspiracy are (1) an agreement between two or more persons, (2) an overt act, (3) an intentional participation in the furtherance of a plan or purpose and (4) resulting damage. Official Committee of Unsecured Creditors v. Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette Sec. Corp., No. 00 Civ. 8688, 2002 WL 362794, at *13 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 6, 2002). New York law does not recognize the substantive tort of civil conspiracy; the claim is available "only if there is evidence of an underlying actionable tort." Missigman v. USI Northeast, Inc., 131 F.Supp.2d 495, 517 (S.D.N.Y.2001). Conspiracy allegations "are permitted only to connect the actions of separate defendants with an otherwise actionable tort." Alexander & Alexander, 68 N.Y.2d 968, 510 N.Y.S.2d 546, 547, 503 N.E.2d 102 (1986). As the Court explained in its discussion of Plaintiffs' aiding and abetting claim, Plaintiff has adequately plead fraud by Enron, and has alleged that Defendants knowingly participated in Enron's fraudulent accounting scheme. Accordingly, Plaintiffs' allegations of conspiracy serve to connect Defendants' conduct "with an otherwise actionable tort." and Count V states a claim for which relief can be granted.

CONCLUSION

Plaintiffs have already plead their claims three times. They filed the Second Amended Complaint after briefing Defendants' motions to dismiss the Amended Complaint. In light of the foregoing analysis and Plaintiffs' multiple prior opportunities to address the legal insufficiencies of *505 the claims asserted in this action, granting further leave to replead certain of Plaintiffs' claims would be futile. Accordingly, Defendants' motions are granted to the following extent, and denied in all other respects: Counts I, II, IV, and VII of the Second Amended Complaint are dismissed with prejudice pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Counts VI and VIII are also dismissed with prejudice pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) to the extent they are premised on misrepresentations or omissions by Defendants concerning Enron's financial condition. Plaintiffs' surviving causes of action are Counts III and V, and VI and VIII to the extent not hereby dismissed. Because the Court has resolved Defendants' motions under Rule 12(b)(6), it is unnecessary for the Court to address Defendants' Rule 9(b) arguments.

Plaintiffs' objection to a July 18, 2003 Order of the MDL Panel conditionally transferring this action to the United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas is now pending. If the MDL Panel does not rescind its transfer order, Plaintiffs shall, within 21 days of the MDL Panel's decision with respect to the objection, serve and file a Third Amended Complaint reflecting the foregoing determinations. That complaint shall include allegations sufficient to make clear the nature of any non-fraud based claims intended to be asserted in Counts VI and VIII.

This case is hereby placed on the Court's suspense docket pending the MDL Panel's decision on Plaintiffs' objection.

SO ORDERED.

ORDER

Plaintiffs seek reconsideration of the portion of the Court's October 10, 2003, Opinion and Order dismissing certain of Plaintiffs' claims with prejudice or, in the alternative, entry of final judgment pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54(b) as to those claims. For the following reasons, Plaintiffs' motion is denied.

Plaintiffs, although purporting to set forth controlling legal precedents and factual considerations overlooked by the Court, merely reiterate arguments raised in the briefing of Defendants' motions or at oral argument. The Court considered thoroughly those arguments and related submissions in reaching its decision. P.T. Bank Central Asia v. ABN AMRO Bank N.V., 301 A.D.2d 373, 754 N.Y.S.2d 245 (1st Dep't 2003), which Plaintiffs contend the Court failed to acknowledge, involved alleged fraud in the sale of a commodity by one party to another, as did the cases analyzed by the Court at pages 24-25 of the October 10, 2003, decision. Specifically, P.T. Bank involved the sale by a bank of a loan participation to another bank that was not a party to the original credit agreement. The court's recognition of the potential applicability of the "Special Facts" doctrine in that case, thus, arose not in connection with potential liability of a bank in its role as administrative agent with respect to a loan facility but, rather, in connection with misrepresentations allegedly made in a secondary transaction in which the defendant bank sold the plaintiff a participation in the credit it had previously extended to the defaulting borrower. Cf. Opinion at 26 n. 1 (discussing difference in structure between syndicated credit facilities and loan participations). Plaintiffs also quibble with the "counterparty"/ "third party" nomenclature used by the Court to explain the distinction between the peculiar knowledge cases cited by Plaintiffs and the facts presented here, arguing that the Court overlooked facts because the defendants banks were parties to agreements at issue in this case. As the Court's Opinion makes abundantly clear, the Court was well aware that the defendant *506 banks were parties to the credit facility agreements. The term

"third party" was used in reference to the absence of a borrower/lender role on the part of those entities with respect to the credit relationship at issue here, i.e., Plaintiffs' agreement to extend credit to Enron and/or its affiliates.

Plaintiffs further assert that the Court overlooked the various indemnification provisions of the relevant agreements, which exclude protection for gross negligence or intentional wrongdoing by the defendant banks. This argument begs the very question at issue with respect to the dismissed claims: did the defendant banks have a duty to disclose information about Enron's financial condition to the participant banks such that a failure to do so would constitute wrongdoing? Plaintiffs' invocation of the indemnification provisions amounts simply to disagreeing with the Court's decision. Plaintiffs' remaining arguments are similarly meritless.

Plaintiffs have failed to present binding precedent or other matters overlooked by the Court in reaching its October 10th decision; accordingly, Plaintiffs' request for reconsideration is denied. Moreover, even if the Court were to reconsider its decision with respect to the dismissed claims, it would nonetheless adhere to its decision to dismiss those claims with prejudice, for the reasons set forth in the October 10, 2003, Opinion and Order.

[24] Plaintiffs also seek, pursuant to Rule 54(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, entry of final judgment with respect to the dismissed claims. Rule 54(b) provides in pertinent part that, "[w]hen more than one claim for relief is presented in an action ... the court may direct the entry of a final judgment as to one or more but fewer than all of the claims or parties only upon an express determination that there is no just reason for delay[.]" The circumstances of this case do not warrant Rule 54(b) certification. The dismissed and remaining claims here arise from essentially the same factual allegations; judicial economy will best be served if multiple appellate panels do not have to familiarize themselves with this case in piecemeal appeals. Cullen v. Margiotta, 618 F.2d 226, 228 (2d Cir.1980). Furthermore, Plaintiffs have not shown any "danger of hardship or injustice through delay which would be alleviated by immediate appeal." Citizens Accord, Inc. v. Town of Rochester, 235 F.3d 126, 128 (2d Cir.2000) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). Accordingly, Plaintiffs' request for Rule 54(b) certification is denied.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Plaintiffs' motion for reconsideration and Rule 54(b) certification is denied.

SO ORDERED.

v.
SALOMON SMITH BARNEY, et al.,
Defendants-Respondents.

Nov. 15, 2001.

Purchasers of preferred stock in company that went bankrupt brought action against company's investment bankers to recover for alleged misrepresentations. The Supreme Court, New York County, Charles Ramos, J., dismissed complaint, and appeal was taken. The Supreme Court, Appellate Division, held that purchasers were sophisticated investors who could not justifiably have relied on bankers' representations.

Sophisticated investor cannot establish that it entered into arm's length transaction in justifiable reliance on alleged misrepresentations if that investor failed to make use of means of verification that were available to it, such as reviewing files of other parties.

[2] Securities Regulation 297

Sophisticated investors who purchased preferred stock could not have justifiably relied on investment bankers' alleged misrepresentations regarding company's satisfaction of regulatory requirements; although bankers' offering memorandum asserted regulatory compliance, it also advised investors to do their own due diligence, bankers' access to relevant information was not superior to that of investors, and there was no evidence that bankers otherwise knew or recklessly disregarded likelihood that company was concealing material information from investors.

87 Judgment, Supreme Court, New York County (Charles Ramos, J.), entered August 10, 2000, which, upon a prior order, same court and Justice, entered on or about August 3, 2000, granting defendants' motion pursuant to CPLR 3211(a)(1) and (7) and 3016(b), dismissed the complaint, unanimously affirmed, with costs.

Plaintiffs are sophisticated investors that purchased preferred stock of AbTox, Inc. (AbTox) in a private placement that closed in March 1997. Plaintiffs allege that, prior to the closing, they conducted their own due diligence examination of AbTox, *386 in which they received information and documents directly from AbTox, not from defendants, the investment banking firms AbTox had engaged to act as its placement agents and advisors in connection with the offering. After the closing, plaintiffs allegedly learned for the first time that AbTox's sole 88 product, a medical sterilizer, had not been cleared for marketing by the Food & Drug Administration (FDA) in the form in which AbTox had distributed it, and the company subsequently became bankrupt.

Plaintiffs allege that, notwithstanding extensive disclaimers set forth in the offering memorandum prepared by defendants based on information provided by AbTox, plaintiffs purchased their securities in reliance on inaccurate statements in the offering memorandum and other informational materials provided to them by defendants that AbTox's product had been cleared for marketing by the FDA. Plaintiffs further allege that they did not discover the lack of clearance during their due diligence because the existence of "deficiency letters" sent by the FDA to AbTox in May and September of 1996 had been concealed from them. Based on these allegations, plaintiffs sue defendant investment banking firms for fraud and negligent misrepresentation, as here relevant.

[1][2] We affirm the grant of defendants' motion to dismiss the complaint. As a matter of law, a sophisticated plaintiff cannot establish that it entered into an arm's length transaction in justifiable reliance on alleged misrepresentations if that plaintiff failed to make use of the means of verification that were available to it, such as reviewing the files of the other parties (see, e.g., Stuart Silver Assocs. v. Baco Dev. Corp., 245 A.D.2d 96, 98-99, 665 N.Y.S.2d 415; Abrahami v. UPC Constr. Corp., 224 A.D.2d 231, 234, 638 N.Y.S.2d 11; Stuart Lipsky, P.C. v. Price, 215 A.D.2d 102, 103, 625 N.Y.S.2d 563; Curran, Cooney, Penney, Inc. v. Young & Koomans, Inc., 183 A.D.2d 742, 743-744, 583 N.Y.S.2d 478, lv. denied 80 N.Y.2d 757, 589 N.Y.S.2d 308, 602 N.E.2d 1124). In this case, the offering memorandum advised plaintiffs that defendant investment bankers could not guarantee the accuracy or completeness of the information set forth therein, and specifically directed plaintiffs to "rely upon their own examination" of AbTox and to request from AbTox whatever additional information or documents they deemed necessary to make an informed investment decision. Accordingly, as alleged by plaintiffs, the president of one of the institutional plaintiffs, in the course of the due diligence he personally conducted to verify the clearance status of AbTox's product, was provided with a chronology that made reference to, but did not include, the very documents that ultimately alerted him to the clearance problem when he received copies of them nearly a year after the closing. If plaintiffs had requested and carefully reviewed these documents during their due diligence, they would have been apprised of the clearance issue before making their investment decision. Accordingly, plaintiffs cannot claim to have justifiably *89 relied on the statements regarding clearance in the offering memorandum and other informational documents (see, e.g., Schlaifer Nance & Co. v. Estate of Warhol, 2d Cir., 119 F.3d 91, 101; Grumman Allied Indus. v. Rohr Indus., 2d Cir., 748 F.2d 729, 738).

We further note that the matter of the clearance of AbTox's product was not peculiarly within the knowledge of defendants, who were engaged by AbTox to act as placement agents and financial advisers, and plaintiffs have not alleged any facts from which it could logically be inferred that defendants' access to the relevant information was superior to the access afforded 387 to plaintiffs during their due diligence, or that defendants otherwise knew, or recklessly disregarded the likelihood, that AbTox was concealing material information from plaintiffs (see, CPLR 3016[b]; Congress Fin. Corp. v. John Morrell & Co., 790 F.Supp. 459, 470-472).

Plaintiffs,
v.
SANDS BROS. & CO., LTD., Defendant.

No. 98 Civ. 2527 BDP.

Jan. 4, 2001.

Investors brought securities fraud class action against investment banking firm, alleging that firm on behalf of its client manipulated stock price of corporation in which investors held interest, as part of scheme for client to take over corporation. The District Court, 43 F.Supp.2d 438, Barrington D. Parker Jr., J., dismissed action without prejudice, and investors amended complaint. On renewed motion to dismiss, the Court held that: (1) investors failed to state fraud claim with sufficient particularity; (2) firm's alleged motives to increase its transaction fees and maintain close relationship to client failed to raise inference of fraudulent motive; (3) corporation's and client's alleged fraudulent intentions did not establish firm's fraudulent intent; and (4) optimistic statements did not support inference of scienter.

Motion granted.

349Bk60.18

To properly state market manipulation claim under Rule 10b-5, plaintiff must plead: (1) damage; (2) caused by reliance on defendant's misrepresentations or omissions of material facts, or on scheme by defendant to defraud; (3) scienter; (4) in connection with purchase or sale of securities; (5) furthered by defendant's use of mails or any facility of national securities exchange. Securities Exchange Act of 1934, § 10(b), as amended, 15 U.S.C.A. § 78j(b); 17 C.F.R. § 240.10b-5.

349Bk60.53

To satisfy Private Securities Litigation Reform Act's (PSLRA) and civil procedure rules' particularity requirements for fraud pleading, complaint must: (1) specify statements that plaintiff contends were fraudulent; (2) identify speaker; (3) state where and when statements were made; and (4) explain why statements were fraudulent. Securities Exchange Act of 1934, §§ 10(b), 21D(b), as amended, 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 78j(b), 78u-4(b); 17 C.F.R. § 240.10b-5; Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 9(b), 28 U.S.C.A.

MEMORANDUM DECISION AND ORDER

BARRINGTON D. PARKER, Jr., District Judge.

By Memorandum Decision and Order dated March 30, 1999, this Court dismissed the original complaint (the "Complaint") filed by lead plaintiff David Schnell on behalf of a purported class of public investors in NAL Financial Group, Inc. ("NALF"). See Schnell v. Conseco, 43 F.Supp.2d 438 (S.D.N.Y.1999). The Complaint alleged violations of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. § 1961, et seq., against Conseco, Inc. ("Conseco"), and violations of § 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (the "Exchange Act"), 15 U.S.C. § 78j(b), and Rule 10b-5 promulgated thereunder by the Securities Exchange Commission (the "SEC"), 17 C.F.R. § 240.10b-5, against Sands Brothers & Co., Ltd. ("Sands").

The RICO claim against Conseco was dismissed with prejudice because plaintiff failed to adequately allege a scheme to defraud, a pattern of racketeering activity or causation. The § 10(b) and Rule 10b-5 claims were dismissed against Sands without prejudice because the Complaint failed to satisfy the heightened pleading standards set forth under the Private Securities Litigation Reform Act (the "PSLRA"), 15 U.S.C. § 78u-4(b) for alleging misrepresentations and omissions, and because it failed to adequately allege scienter. This Court granted leave to amend the Complaint against Sands.

On April 29, 1999, lead plaintiffs Robert Vogel, Sam Vogel, Dr. John McCracken, John Mazarra and Alan B. Werner, [FN1] on *733 behalf of the same purported class of investors of NALF, filed an amended complaint (the "Amended Complaint") against Sands. The Amended Complaint again alleges violations of § 10(b) of the Exchange Act and Rule 10b-5. [FN2] Before this Court is defendant's motion to dismiss under Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) and 9(b). For the reasons stated below, defendant's motion is granted.

FN1. On June 28, 1998, following motions made, Robert Vogel, Same Vogel, Dr. John McCracken, John Mazzara and Alan B. Werner were added as plaintiffs by Order of this Court. They adopted the original pleading.

FN2. On December 9, 1999, this Court denied plaintiffs' motion for leave to file a Second Amended Complaint to assert securities fraud claims against both Conseco and Sands, and the motion of Richard Scherrill to intervene as a plaintiff in a newly proposed class action. See Vogel v. Conseco, No. 98 Civ. 2527, slip op. at 3-6 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 9, 1999).

BACKGROUND

Many of the facts relevant to this dispute are set forth in this Court's prior decision, with which familiarity is assumed. See Schnell, 43 F.Supp.2d at 438. For purposes of deciding this motion, the Court is obligated to construe the pleadings in favor of the plaintiffs, and must accept as true all factual allegations made in the Amended Complaint. See Cooper v. Parsky, 140 F.3d 433, 440 (2d Cir.1998); Serrano v. 900 5th Avenue Corp., 4 F.Supp.2d 315, 316 (S.D.N.Y.1998). All reasonable inferences must be made in plaintiffs' favor. In re Blech Securities Litigation, 961 F.Supp. 569, 579 (S.D.N.Y.1997) (citing Hernandez v. Coughlin, 18 F.3d 133, 136 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 836, 115 S.Ct. 117, 130 L.Ed.2d 63 (1994)). The following facts are construed accordingly.

Conseco is an Indiana based financial services holding company, engaged in the development, marketing and administration of annuity, supplemental health and individual life insurance products. Sands is an investment banking firm, a broker and dealer in securities registered with the SEC, a member firm of the New York Stock Exchange and of the National Association of Securities Dealers ("NASD"). Conseco is alleged to be Sands' most valued client, and certain executive officers of Conseco are claimed to share a long-lasting relationship with Sands' co-founders, Martin and Steven Sands, spanning over fourteen years.

NALF is a Delaware corporation founded in 1991. It is engaged in the purchase and servicing of automobile loan and lease contracts. One year after becoming a public company on November 30, 1994, NALF began securitizing its loan portfolios whereby it would periodically sell an asset pool of various loan contracts to a trust. In turn, the trust would pay NALF with proceeds raised by issuing securities to investors in the form of notes and certificates backed by the assets of the trust. NALF collected payments due on the loan contracts, receiving an annual servicing fee equal to 3% of the principal of the outstanding loans.

The collections of interest and principal on the loan contracts were used to pay interest and principal due on the securities issued by the trust. Any payments in excess of those needed to service the securities and to pay other fees and expenses of the trust were deposited into a reserve account to the extent necessary to maintain a prescribed operating level. Any remaining cash was paid directly to NALF. The gains on the sale of the loan contracts under this securitization program enabled NALF to record significantly increased revenues in each of the quarters during which a securitization was completed.

NALF's stock price remained steady throughout most of 1996, peaking at over $16 per share. From late 1996, however, NALF's stock started to decline, particularly after a February 1997 announcement of reserve deficiencies deemed to be attributable to weak underwriting guidelines in the loan contracts from December 1995 through March 1996. On March 23, 1998, *734 NALF filed for protection pursuant to Chapter 11 of the bankruptcy laws. No claims are asserted in this action against NALF.

The gravamen of the Amended Complaint revolves around plaintiffs' theory that Conseco devised and successfully implemented a scheme to take control over NALF at the expense of its public investors. Specifically, plaintiffs allege that Conseco intended to, and did, make a nominal investment in below-market convertible debt securities of NALF. Plaintiffs allege that the purpose of these investments was to obtain effective control over NALF through "arrangements" made with its corporate insiders and controlling shareholders, to permit those insiders and controlling shareholders to cash out their investments at a profit by artificially inflating the value of NALF's stock, and to cause NALF to conduct quarterly securitizations until its financial statements were in a position to support a public offering. Plaintiffs further allege that Conseco improperly schemed to use the proceeds of the public offering to continue the securitization program until the conversion date of the debt securities, to artificially depress the stock price of NALF after the offering to permit Conseco to convert the debt securities at a market discount, and finally to force NALF into a pre-packaged bankruptcy reorganization. See Amended Complaint at ¶ 4.

According to plaintiffs, Sands helped further Conseco's scheme by making material misrepresentations and omissions about NALF's business, and by using its market-making ability to manipulate NALF's stock prices in ways favorable to Conseco's purported scheme.

Plaintiffs support their theory with the following factual allegations made in the Amended Complaint. Sometime in 1995, one of the major shareholders of NALF, Howard Appel ("Appel"), allegedly began to seek outside financing for NALF through his relationships with brokerage and investment banking firms. Appel, a former stockbroker who had been permanently barred by the NASD in 1991 from becoming affiliated with any member of the NASD, allegedly offered NALF warrants as a "reward" for introducing the company to brokerage and banking institutions.

Sands began making a market in the stock of NALF in December 1995, allegedly around the time Appel began implementing his "reward" plan. On January 29, 1996, Sands entered into an investment banking agreement with NALF (the "Investment Banking Agreement") pursuant to which Sands introduced Conseco--its most valued and long-standing client--to NALF.

On April 23, 1996, Conseco, through two of its subsidiaries, acquired $10M in convertible debentures of NALF with a life span of eighteen months, expiring in October 1997 (the "Convertible Bonds"). At Conseco's option, the debentures were convertible into NALF common stock at the lesser of $12.00 per share or 80% of the market price of the stock on the date of conversion. In addition, Conseco received warrants to purchase 515,000 shares of NALF (the "Conseco Warrants") at an exercise price which was reduceable in the event a subsequent public offering of NALF priced shares lower than the originally agreed-upon exercise price of the Conseco Warrants. Plaintiffs allege that the market conversion feature of the Convertible Bonds and the price protection mechanism of the Conseco Warrants provided Conseco an incentive to artificially depress the stock price of NALF.

The Investment Banking Agreement was amended in April 1996 to provide for compensation to Sands for acting as NALF's investment banker in connection with the Convertible Bonds. Under the amendment, Sands received $550,000 in cash, as well as warrants to purchase 160,000 shares of NALF (the "Sands Warrants")--which also included a price protection mechanism--as its placement fee. *735 Sands allegedly distributed the warrants to its individual brokers soon thereafter. According to the Amended Complaint, the cash portion of Sands' fee was "unusually high," while the warrant portion of the compensation was an "unusual form" of compensation. Amended Complaint at ¶ 35. Moreover, Sands' purported distribution of warrants to individual brokers was labeled an "unusual compensation arrangement" by plaintiffs. Id.

In addition, plaintiffs allege three other general problems associated with the issuance of the Convertible Bonds. First, plaintiffs contend that under NASD rules, NALF was required to--but did not--obtain shareholder approval for the issuance of the Convertible Bonds. According to plaintiffs, NASD rules provide that shareholder approval is required for the placement of below-market conversion rate securities if such securities are convertible into 20% or more of the issuer's outstanding shares of common stock before their issuance. Since the combination of the Convertible Bonds and the Conseco Warrants allegedly conferred beneficial ownership of 20.1% of the outstanding shares of NALF before their issuance, NALF's failure to obtain approval was, according to plaintiffs, a violation of NASD rules. [FN3]

FN3. NALF's stock was delisted by the NASD in December 1997 for the alleged failure to obtain the necessary shareholder approval in violation of NASD rules.

Second, because NALF relied upon the private placement exemption, § 4(2) of the Securities Act of 1933, to exempt the placement of the Convertible Bonds from the Act's registration requirements, plaintiffs contend that NALF should have filed, but failed to file, a Form D with the SEC.

Third, Robert Bartolini, Chairman of the Board and Chief Executive Officer of NALF, allegedly failed to receive the proper authorization from NALF's board of directors to sign the purchase agreement governing the sale of the Convertible Bonds from NALF to Conseco. Plaintiffs contend that these failures by NALF in connection with the issuance of the Convertible Bonds support the existence of Conseco's illicit plan to control NALF, as well as Sands' knowledge and involvement in that plan.

After Conseco's purchase of the Convertible Bonds, the Amended Complaint alleges that Sands engaged in artificially inflating the price of NALF stock through an illegal "pump and dump" scheme to enable insiders to make increased profits on sales of NALF stock. In furtherance of this scheme, plaintiffs contend that Sands made phone calls to investors, disseminated false opinions on the valuation of NALF stock, and failed to inform public investors of Conseco's plan to exercise the 80% market conversion feature of the Convertible Bonds and acquire NALF stock at severely depressed prices. Moreover, plaintiffs allege that Sands' principal market-making activity in NALF stock, coupled with its misrepresentations and omissions concerning its valuation, enabled NALF's stock price to reach an unsustainable peak in 1996 during which time corporate insiders were able to profit at the expense of public investors.

In November 1996, the Investment Banking Agreement was amended a second time to provide for a facilitation fee to Sands in connection with its efforts on a public offering of 2.5 million shares of NALF to be issued at the end of December 1996 (the "Public Offering"). Sands received $300,000 as its facilitation fee, less any actual underwriting fees and commissions it received from the Public Offering, up to $150,000. Moreover, the exercise price of the Sands Warrants, as well as the Conseco Warrants, were reduced to the Public Offering price of $7.50 pursuant to the price protection provisions provided in the warrants. NALF raised over $21 million from the Public Offering, which was used to repay short term notes and to fund additional securitizations before the expiration date of the Convertible Bonds.

736 At the end of February 1997, NALF disclosed reserve deficiencies attributable to weak underwriting guidelines in place regarding its loan contracts from December 1995 through March 1996. Shortly thereafter, Sands purportedly reduced its earnings estimates for NALF, blaming the nonperforming loans and general industry conditions. Further, plaintiffs contend that after the disclosure, Sands engaged in conduct designed to lower the price of NALF's stock, including ceasing all market-making activities in NALF stock, removing NALF stock from its recommended list and stopping its aggressive efforts to market NALF shares. As a consequence, NALF's stock price--already trending downward--began an accelerated descent.

Despite its financial difficulties, NALF was able to complete two more securitizations prior to the expiration of the Convertible Bonds. On July 3, 1997, Conseco loaned an additional $5 million to NALF and received additional warrants from NALF to purchase over 250,000 shares of common stock at an exercise price of $.15 per share. The exercise price of the Conseco warrants was also reduced to $.15 per share. On August 21, 1997, Conseco acquired 5 million shares of Series A Preferred Stock of NALF in exchange for an additional $5 million of short term financing. Moreover, Conseco acquired all of NALF's outstanding convertible debentures held by third parties.

On October 1, 1997, Conseco converted the acquired debentures into over 1.5 million shares of NALF common stock at conversion prices ranging from $.30 to $.32 per share, and converted the Convertible Bonds into over 35 million shares of NALF common stock at a conversion price of $.32 per share, pursuant to the 80% market conversion feature. In connection with the conversion, plaintiffs allege that Conseco caused NALF to disseminate a false and misleading information statement on Schedule 14C on November 21, 1997 (the "Information Statement"). There, plaintiffs contend that rather than solicit the necessary shareholder approval for the conversion, the Information Statement falsely represented that NALF had complied with its legal requirements and that § 203 of the Delaware General Corporation Law, requiring shareholder approval for certain business combinations with an interested shareholder, had been waived by the company. This misrepresentation, according to plaintiffs, was designed to mislead public shareholders into believing NALF had complied with Delaware law, when, in fact, it had not.

Facing a purported liquidity crisis which resulted in a slowing in the origination of receivables and a suspension of the lucrative securitization program, NALF filed a Chapter 11 petition for bankruptcy on March 23, 1998. Pursuant to a court-approved plan of reorganization, NALF's existing stock was extinguished with Conseco owning all of a new Class A shares of NALF and 80% of a new Class B shares. Other creditors received approximately 80% of the amounts owing to them.

Plaintiffs argue that the factual allegations asserted in the Amended Complaint are sufficient to allege that Sands engaged in securities fraud in violation of § 10(b) of the Exchange Act and Rule 10b-5. Sands has moved to dismiss the Amended Complaint on grounds that it fails to state a claim upon which relief could be granted and that it fails to plead fraud with particularity. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) & 9(b). In particular, Sands argues, inter alia, that the Amended Complaint fails to plead allegations of fraud with particularity as required under the PSLRA, that it fails to adequately allege scienter, and that it fails to adequately allege loss causation. [FN4]

FN4. Defendant further argues that the Amended Complaint should be dismissed because leave to amend the original Complaint was granted only to plaintiff David Schnell and not to the new lead plaintiffs. Accordingly, Sands characterizes the Amended Complaint as an entirely new one, and that many of the claims asserted therein are time-barred.

737 DISCUSSION

Section 10(b) of the Exchange Act provides in relevant part:

It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly ...--

(b) To use or employ, in connection with the purchase or sale of any security registered on a national securities exchange or any security not so registered, any manipulative or deceptive device or contrivance in contravention of such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

15 U.S.C. 78j(b). Similarly, Rule 10b-5 makes it unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, by the use of any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or of the mails or of any facility of any national securities exchange, (a) to employ any device, scheme, or artifice to defraud, (b) to make any untrue statement of a material fact necessary in order to make the statements made, in light of the circumstances under which they were made, not misleading, or (c) to engage in any act, practice or course of business which operates or would operate as a fraud or deceit upon any person, in connection with the purchase or sale of any security.

17 C.F.R. § 240.10b-5.

Therefore, in order to state a claim for securities fraud under § 10(b) and Rule 10b-5, "a plaintiff must plead that the defendant made a false statement or omitted a material fact, with scienter, and that plaintiff's reliance on defendant's action caused plaintiff's injury." San Leandro Emergency Medical Group Profit Sharing Plan, 75 F.3d 801, 807 (2d Cir.1996).

[1] Here, plaintiffs also allege that defendant engaged in manipulative practices and schemes to defraud in connection with NALF shares. See T.H.C., Inc. v. Fortune Petroleum Corp., No. 96 Civ. 2690, 1999 WL 182593 at *2 (S.D.N.Y. March 31, 1999). To properly state a market manipulation claim under Rule 10b-5, plaintiffs must plead "(1) damage, (2) caused by reliance on defendants' misrepresentations or omissions of material facts, or on a scheme by the defendants to defraud, (3) scienter, (4) in connection with the purchase or sale of securities, (5) furthered by the defendants' use of the mails or any facility of a national securities exchange." Schnell, 43 F.Supp.2d at 448 (citing Dietrich v. Bauer, 76 F.Supp.2d 312, 338 (S.D.N.Y.1999); Cowen & Co. v. Merriam, 745 F.Supp. 925, 929 (S.D.N.Y.1990)).

I. Pleading Fraud with Particularity

[2] Under the PSLRA, each allegation of misrepresentation or omission under Rule 10b-5 must be made with particularity--i.e., the Amended Complaint must "specify each statement alleged to have been misleading, the reason or reasons why the statement is misleading, and, if an allegation regarding the statement or omission is made on information and belief, the complaint shall state with particularity all facts on which that belief is formed." 15 U.S.C. § 78u-4(b). Moreover, Rule 9(b) requires that in all allegations of fraud, the circumstances constituting the fraud must be "stated with particularity." Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(b); see also In re Livent, Inc. Securities Litigation, 78 F.Supp.2d 194, 213 (S.D.N.Y.1999). In order to satisfy these heightened standards of pleading, our Court of Appeals has required that a complaint "(1) specify the statements that the plaintiff contends were fraudulent, (2) identify the speaker, (3) state where and when the statements were made, and (4) explain why the statements were fraudulent." Acito v. IMCERA, Inc., 47 F.3d 47, 51 (2d Cir.1995) (quoting Mills v. Polar Molecular Corp., 12 F.3d 1170, 1175 (2d Cir.1993)).

[3] While the Amended Complaint does describe some of the alleged misrepresentations and omissions in greater detail than in the original Complaint, problems *738 endemic to the original have still not been resolved. Specifically, plaintiff alleges that Sands engaged in the following activities to improperly inflate the price of NALF stock: (1) Sands made statements in its cold calling sales pitches throughout 1996 and in January 1997 regarding the general benefits of the Consecor relationship, including Sands' expectation that Consecor would ultimately buy out shares of NALF at a premium and its belief that NALF's book value was higher than its market value (Amended Complaint ¶ 57), (2) on eight occasions throughout 1996 and January 1997, Sands rated NALF a "buy" or "speculative buy" in its coverage through Bloomberg News, reporting price targets of $20 - $24 for NALF (Amended Complaint ¶¶ 40-42), (3) on April 25, 1996, Sands disseminated a Research Review stating, inter alia, that it saw "potential for NALF's stock trading at $22 - $24 per share one year forward" (Amended Complaint ¶ 58), (4) NALF disseminated a press release on April 23, 1996 disclosing Conseco's investment and quoting Conseco's chairman as stating that NALF was "well positioned to capitalize" on "significant profit opportunities" (Amended Complaint ¶ 59), (5) NALF disseminated a proxy statement on May 2, 1996 in connection with an upcoming shareholders' vote-for issues unrelated to the Convertible Bonds-stating that Conseco's beneficial ownership of NALF would be 16.75% after the issuance of the Convertible Bonds, rather than 20.1% before the issuance of the bonds (Amended Complaint ¶ 60), (6) on December 26, 1996, NALF filed a prospectus with the SEC in connection with the Public Offering where it represented that it "plan[ned] to continue to employ its securitization program as an integral component of its funding strategy and anticipates that it will generally complete securitization transactions on a quarterly basis" (Amended Complaint ¶ 66-67), and (7) Sands distributed another Research Review on December 31, 1996 opining that NALF would experience 55% earnings growth in 1997 and that "the money raised from the [Public Offering] should fulfill NALF's capital needs through 1997" (Amended Complaint ¶ 68). In each of the statements, plaintiffs allege that material misrepresentations were made, and moreover, that Sands omitted mention of the market conversion features of the Convertible Bonds and Conseco's plan to take control of NALF at depressed prices.

identify the speaker in connection with the cold calls allegedly made by Sands throughout 1996 and early 1997, and, other than by year, fails to allege specific dates of when such calls were made. In addition, certain of the alleged misrepresentations were not made by--nor were they attributed to--Sands, including NALF's April 23, 1996 press release quoting Conseco's chairman, as well as statements made in the May 2, 1996 Proxy statement and the December 26, 1996 prospectus, which were made by NALF.

Mostly importantly, however, the Amended Complaint fails to set forth sufficient reasons "explain[ing] why the statements were fraudulent." Acito, 47 F.3d at 51; see also 15 U.S.C. § 78u-4(b) (Amended Complaint must "specify ... reasons why the statement is misleading," and since the allegations are made on information and belief, "the complaint shall state with particularity all facts on which that belief is formed"). The Amended Complaint does not state the reasons why any of the statements were false; rather, it couples each statement with a conclusory allegation that it was false. In addition, plaintiffs attempt to bootstrap these conclusions by relying upon the very theory they are trying to assert--namely, that because Sands must have known of Conseco's alleged plot to take control of NALF at a low market price, any statement made by Sands stating that NALF had a positive future must have been false. These *739 kinds of circular, speculative and conclusory allegations are inadequate to satisfy the PLSRA's and Rule 9(b)'s requirement of particularized pleading. See generally In re Health Management Systems, Inc. Securities Litigation, No. 97 Civ. 1865, 1998 WL 283286 at *4 (S.D.N.Y. June 1, 1998) ("the conclusory allegation that the opposite of a statement ... is true, without further elaboration, is insufficient").

II. Scierter

Even if the Amended Complaint satisfied the heightened pleading requirements discussed above, it must be dismissed as it fails to adequately allege scierter. Generally, securities fraud allegations under § 10(b) and Rule 10b-5 are subject to Rule 9(b)'s scienter requirements. See Chill v. General Elec. Co., 101 F.3d 263, 266 (2d Cir.1996); Acito, 47 F.3d at 52; Shields v. Citytrust Bancorp, Inc., 25 F.3d 1124, 1127-28 (2d Cir.1994). In addition, the PSLRA mandates that a complaint "shall, with respect to each act or omission alleged to violate this title, state with particularity facts giving rise to a strong inference that the defendant acted with the required state of mind." 15 U.S.C. § 78u-4(b)(2).

[4][5] The scienter required in relation to securities fraud is intent " 'to deceive, manipulate or defraud,' or knowing misconduct." Press v. Chemical Investment Services Corp., 166 F.3d 529, 538 (2d Cir.1999) (quoting Securities and Exchange Com'n v. First Jersey Securities, Inc., 101 F.3d 1450, 1467 (2d Cir.1996)). By enacting § 78u-4(b)(2) of the PSLRA, Congress "did not change the basic pleading standard for scienter in this circuit (except by the addition of the words 'with particularity')." Novak v. Kasaks, 216 F.3d 300, 311 (2d Cir.2000). Our Court of Appeals has required that as a pleading requirement under the PSLRA for scienter, a plaintiff may "either (a) allege facts to show that 'defendants had both motive and opportunity to commit fraud' or (b) allege facts that 'constitute strong circumstantial evidence of conscious misbehavior or recklessness.'" Press, 166 F.3d at 538 (quoting Shields, 25 F.3d at 1128); see also Rothman v. Gregor, 220 F.3d 81, 90 (2d Cir.2000) (approving of the two-part test for scienter described in Shields).

A. Motive and Opportunity

In reviewing the Amended Complaint's pleading of motive and opportunity, this Court is mindful that our Court of Appeals has admonished not to "create a nearly impossible pleading standard when the 'intent' of a corporation is at issue." Press, 166 F.3d at 538. Moreover, as explained by Novak, "what is required ... is not a bare invocation of 'magic words such as motive and opportunity' but an allegation of facts showing the type of particular circumstances that our case law has recognized will render motive and opportunity probative a strong inference of scienter." Rothman, 220 F.3d at 90 (quoting Novak, 216 F.3d at 311).

[6] As was the case with the original Complaint, however, the Amended Complaint fails to adequately plead Sands' motive to commit the alleged securities fraud with regard to NALF's stock and its alleged takeover. For reasons discussed in this Court's previous opinion, Sands' alleged desire to realize greater transaction fees and its close relationship with Conseco are insufficient to show an improper motive. Schnell, 43 F.Supp.2d at 449; see also Acito, 47 F.3d at 54; Ellison v. American Image Motor Co., Inc., 36 F.Supp.2d 628, 639 (S.D.N.Y.1999); Fisher v. Offerman & Co., Inc., No. 95 Civ. 2566, 1996 WL 563141, *6 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 2, 1996). Indeed, plaintiffs do not dispute that the Amended Complaint does not base its allegations on the motive and opportunity prong of the scienter requirements. See Plaintiffs' Memorandum of Law in Opposition to Sands' Motion to Dismiss, at 18.

B. Conscious Misbehavior or Recklessness

[7] In the absence of motive, a plaintiff may plead scienter by identifying circumstances *740 indicating conscious fraudulent behavior or recklessness. Rothman, 220 F.3d at 90; Shields, 25 F.3d at 1129; Beck v. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., 820 F.2d 46, 50 (2d Cir.1987), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1005, 108 S.Ct. 698, 98 L.Ed.2d 650 (1988), overruled on other grounds, United States v. Indelicato, 865 F.2d 1370 (2d Cir.1989) (en banc). In such a case, the strength of the circumstantial allegations must be correspondingly greater. Beck, 820 F.2d at 50. Accordingly, "[i]n order to satisfy this pleading requirement, a plaintiff must now plead specific facts that create a strong inference of either knowing misrepresentation or conscious recklessness" by the defendant. In re Health Management Systems, 1998 WL 283286, at * 6 (emphasis added); see also Wexner v. First Manhattan Co., 902 F.2d 169, 172 (2d Cir.1990); In re Glenayre Technologies, Inc. Securities Litigation, 982 F.Supp. 294, 297

(S.D.N.Y.1997); In re Blech Securities Litigation, 961 F.Supp. at 579.

[8] Plaintiffs contend that the Amended Complaint alleges facts that constitute strong circumstantial evidence of Sands' actual knowledge of fraud. Plaintiffs' allegations of circumstantial evidence fall generally into four categories: (1) circumstances surrounding the Convertible Bonds, including NALF's purported disregard of the NASD rules, Delaware law and SEC filing requirements, as well as nature of the bonds' market conversion feature, (2) the timing of Sands' market-making activities and its alleged misrepresentations and receipt of fees, (3) the close relationship between Conseco and Sands, including Sands' dual roles as NALF's investment banker and placement agent for the Convertible Bonds, and (4) Appel's alleged role in his dealings with Sands. None of these assertions, taken individually or in the aggregate, provide the strong inference necessary to adequately allege scienter in a securities fraud action.

First, plaintiffs contend that circumstances surrounding the issuance of the Convertible Bonds lead to a strong inference that Sands was aware of fraudulent activity. In particular, plaintiffs refer to NALF's alleged violation of the NASD's shareholder approval requirements, the alleged failure of NALF's Chief Executive Officer to receive the proper authorization from NALF's board to sign the securities purchase agreement, NALF's alleged failure to file Form D with the SEC in connection with the placement of the Convertible Bonds, and NALF's alleged failure to obtain shareholder approval of Conseco's conversion of the Convertible Bonds in violation of Delaware law. Although plaintiffs do not state exactly how these allegations amount to fraudulent or reckless intent on the part of Sands, it is reasonable to assume that plaintiffs mean to use these instances to support the existence of Conseco's "secret" scheme to take control of NALF by characterizing them as attempts to hide the existence of the Convertible Bonds, particularly its market conversion feature, from the public shareholders. See Amended Complaint § 93.

Any notion that Delaware law, NASD rules and SEC filing rules were purposefully violated in order to hide the existence of the Convertible Bonds is belied by the detailed description of those securities in NALF's publicly disclosed filings with the SEC. [FN5] In NALF's Quarterly Report on Form 10-Q filed May 14, 1996 ("NALF 10-Q")--less than one month after the issuance of the Convertible Bonds--the company specifically disclosed that it had raised $10 million in convertible debt with an exercise price of the lower of $12.00 or 80% of the market stock price. See NALF 10-Q, Notes to Consolidated Financial *741 Statements, note 5. Further, the NALF 10-Q described the Convertible Bonds in detail under the section entitled "Private Placement of Convertible Subordinated Debentures," highlighting the market conversion feature and warning that the Convertible Bonds were not redeemable by NALF at any time.

FN5. For purposes of this opinion, the Court may consider public disclosure documents filed with the SEC, as well as documents which plaintiffs rely upon in their Amended Complaint. See Cortec Industries, Inc. v. Sum Holding L.P., 949 F.2d 42, 47-48 (2d Cir.1991), cert. denied, 503 U.S. 960, 112 S.Ct. 1561, 118 L.Ed.2d 208 (1992); I. Meyer Pincus & Assocs., P.C. v. Oppenheimer & Co., 936 F.2d 759, 762 (2d Cir.1991).

Similarly, the Convertible Bonds were fully disclosed in NALF's December 23, 1996 Prospectus--issued nearly a full year prior to Conseco's actual conversion of the bonds. There, under "Risk Factors," NALF clearly warned the public of the possibility of "substantial dilution from convertible securities," specifically referring to $38.8 million outstanding in convertible debentures and cautioning that "holders of [these convertible debentures] may exercise their rights of conversion ... at prices below the trading price of the Company's Common Stock at the time of conversion." Prospectus at 13. Moreover, under the section entitled "Management's Discussion and Analysis of Financial Condition and Results of Operation," the prospectus painfully detailed the relevant aspects of the Convertible Bonds, including the 80% market conversion feature, and the material details of NALF's outstanding warrants. See Prospectus at 29-30.

Plaintiffs' accusation that NALF knowingly dodged state, federal and exchange rules in order to keep the nature of the Convertible Bonds a secret from shareholders does not make sense in light of the full, detailed disclosure of those securities in public filings prior to the realization of Consecos alleged scheme.

Moreover, the alleged violations of Delaware, NASD and SEC rules by NALF fail to show the requisite intent on the part of Sands. To the extent they show an intent to deceive, at best they are indications of NALF's intent, not Sands'. Other than by conclusory and speculative allegations stating that Sands must have known of the violations due to its role as NALF's and Consecos investment banker, the Amended Complaint does not connect Sands with NALF's purported violations. [FN6] Such conclusory allegations are insufficient to allege scienter in the absence of facts giving strong inference of fraudulent intent. See In re Blech, 961 F.Supp. at 580.

FN6. Defendant attaches to its motion a number of documents--such as a legal opinion from NALF's counsel, a copy of the resolutions of NALF's board of directors, and the representations and warranties section of the securities purchase agreement--which tend to show that NALF made affirmative representations that all the required approvals and pre-conditions, including SEC filings, requisite board approvals, and shareholder approvals, had been properly received prior to the issuance of the Convertible Bonds. Plaintiffs, however, argue that this Court may not consider such documents in this stage of the proceedings. That debate need not be decided here, since--for reasons discussed above--the Court does not rely upon these documents for its conclusions on this issue.

Plaintiffs also suggest that the mere existence of the 80% market conversion feature with regard to the Convertible Bonds leads to an inference of fraudulent intent on the part of Sands. According to plaintiffs, the holder of a security with a market conversion feature benefits from a lower stock price because the cost of conversion to equity is cheaper. This reverse market incentive, according to plaintiffs, supports the existence of Sand's knowledge of a fraudulent scheme. See Amended Complaint ¶¶ 46-48.

However, in order to exercise the conversion feature of the Convertible Bonds, Consecos would be required to forgo repayment of its $10 million loan to NALF in exchange for the right to purchase a non-performing stock--a risky proposition at best. This reality discounts plaintiffs' notion that Consecos would expect to receive an undeserved windfall through conversion of the Convertible Bonds. Also, in addition to fully disclosing the existence of the conversion features to the public, NALF had issued, by late 1996, millions of debentures with conversion features similar to those of the Convertible Bonds to investors other than Consecos, including Merrill Lynch, Westminister Capital and Michael Karp--none of whom were alleged to be involved with Sands in any way. Merely labeling such debentures as "toxic," "death spiral" or "resembl[ing] ... a transaction with a loan shark" (Amended Complaint ¶ 48) is insufficient to allege scienter on the part of Sands.

Second, plaintiffs contend that the timing of Sands' market-making activities in NALF stock, its purported misrepresentations concerning NALF's valuation and future prospects, and its receipt of banking-related fees provide allegations of circumstantial evidence of fraudulent intent on the part of Sands.

In connection with Sands' market-making activities, the Court's review of NALF's monthly trading report provided by the NASD reveals no inference of fraudulent or reckless intent on account of such activities. [FN7] Sands was one of over thirty different sophisticated market-makers of NALF stock in between 1995 and early 1997, including

Oppenheimer, First Boston, Prudential and Smith Barney, and, in any given month, Sands' trading volume averaged around 200,000 shares, topping out at less than 400,000 shares in its most active month. In comparison, NALF's total monthly trading volume for market-making activity ranged from anywhere between over 1 million shares to more than 4 million shares, with a total of approximately 6 million to 10 million shares outstanding in NALF during the time Sands participated in market-making. Indeed, during the time that plaintiffs contend Sands was purportedly "pumping" the stock to artificially inflate it, NALF's price went from around $15 - $16 per share in December 1995 (the first month of Sands's market-making) to approximately $8 - $9 per share towards the end of December 1996, around the time of the Public Offering--a nearly 50% reduction. [FN8]

FN7. The information on the monthly trading report provided by NASD was relied upon by plaintiff in making their allegations in the Amended Complaint. Moreover, as plaintiffs themselves attached the same report to their opposition papers in connection with the dismissal of the original Complaint, it has been clearly in plaintiffs' possession for some time. Accordingly, this Court may consider the trading report in deciding this opinion. See Cortec, 949 F.2d at 48 (permitting a court to consider "documents that plaintiff had either in its possession" or documents which plaintiff "had knowledge of and upon which they relied in bringing suit.").

FN8. The implications of the trading report on defendant's claim that the Amended Complaint fails to allege loss causation need not be addressed here.

With regard to alleged misrepresentations on the part of Sands, as discussed earlier (supra Section I), none of those alleged statements in the Amended Complaint properly articulated reasons as to why they were false at the time they were allegedly made. See San Leandro, 75 F.3d at 813 ("Plaintiffs have made no showing that defendants' descriptions of [the company's] performance were not based on the facts available to the company at the time the statements were made."); In re Health Management Systems, 1998 WL 283286, at *5 ("the complaint wholly fails to specify how the statements ... were false at the time they were made."). As such, the Amended Complaint "obviously fails to allege facts constituting circumstantial evidence of reckless or conscious misbehavior on the part of defendants in making the statements" for purposes of scienter. San Leandro, 75 F.3d at 813.

[9] Further, conceding that most of alleged misrepresentations were various optimistic statements and news releases by Sands, such statements, without more, are insufficient to support a claim for securities fraud. See Shields, 25 F.3d at 1129 ("misguided optimism is not a cause of action, and does not support an inference of fraud. We have rejected the legitimacy of 'alleging fraud by hindsight.'") (quoting Denny v. Barber, 576 F.2d 465, 470 (2d Cir.1978)); see also Decker v. Massey-Ferguson, Ltd., 681 F.2d 111, 117 (2d Cir. *743 1982) ("economic prognostication, though faulty, does not, without more, amount to fraud.") (internal quotation omitted). While plaintiffs contend that defendant had access to facts that contradict these generally optimistic reports, other than by reference to plaintiffs' theory of Consecoco's scheme, plaintiffs fail to "specifically identify the reports or statements containing this information." Novak, 216 F.3d at 309.

In connection with the two amendments to the Investment Banking Agreement used to provide Sands with fees for the placement of the Convertible Bonds and for the Public Offering, as stated previously, there is nothing inherently fraudulent about an underwriter's motive to earn fees. See, e.g., Acito, 47 F.3d at 54; Ellison, 36 F.Supp.2d at 639; Fisher, 1996 WL 563141, at * 6. Sands earned these fees in connection with actual and documented transactions--e.g., the placement of the bonds and facilitation and underwriting activities for the Public Offering. Allegations that plaintiffs believe the fee amounts and arrangements to be "unusual," without more, is insufficient to plead scienter.

Third, plaintiffs contend that the relationship between Conseco and Sands supports allegations of scienter. However, as discussed in the Court's previous opinion, allegations of a close relationship fail to establish the kind of circumstantial evidence necessary to support a claim of fraudulent or reckless intent. See Schnell, 43 F.Supp.2d at 449. In addition, a desire by Sands to maintain that relationship is not unlike its desire to earn underwriting fees, discussed supra, and, similarly, is not sufficient to satisfy the pleading requirements for scienter. Id.

126 F.Supp.2d 730, Fed. Sec. L. Rep. P

END OF DOCUMENT

Finally, plaintiffs' argue that Appel's supposed role in dealing with Sands provides circumstantial support for Sands' fraudulent intent. It is not clear to this Court how an allegation that one of NALF's major shareholders had been disciplined by the NASD helps to establish the requisite level of scienter required by the PSLRA. Even if Sands knew of Appel's problem with the NASD, this Court is not persuaded that the nature of its purported contacts with Appel, as set forth in the Amended Complaint, provides an inference that Sands may have behaved with the level of scienter required by the PSLRA.

In sum, plaintiffs' allegations in the Amended Complaint, considered either in the aggregate or individually, fail to set forth facts that "give rise to a strong inference of fraudulent intent," In re Time Warner, 9 F.3d 259, 268 (2d Cir.1993) (internal quotations omitted), and, consequently, are insufficient to satisfy the scienter requirements for securities fraud under 10(b) or Rule 10b-5. See Novak, 216 F.3d at 311; 15 U.S.C. § 78u-4(b)(2).

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Amended Complaint is dismissed. As plaintiffs have been provided opportunities to correct the deficiencies of the original Complaint, but have failed to do so, the dismissal is with prejudice. The Clerk of the Court is directed to dismiss the Amended Complaint with prejudice.

Realty Associates, L.P. II, Defendants.

No. 00 Civ. 9005(WK).

Nov. 4, 2002.

Limited partner of real estate limited partnership sued other partners, alleging fraud, breach of fiduciary duty, conspiracy to breach fiduciary duty and unjust enrichment. Defendants moved to dismiss or alternatively for summary judgment. The District Court, Knapp, Senior Judge, held that: (1) limited partner did not satisfy reasonable reliance requirement for fraud claim, and (2) general release signed in connection with earlier litigation barred claim.

MEMORANDUM & ORDER

KNAPP, Senior J.

*1 In this diversity action, Alan Waksman ("Plaintiff"), alleges, inter alia, that Defendants Jerome Cohen ("Cohen"), Bentley Blum ("Blum"), Marshal Bernstein ("Bernstein"), Richard Gershman ("Gershman") and Midway Realty Associates, L.P. II (collectively the "Defendants") fraudulently concealed information pertaining to the operations of a partnership and the sale of that partnership's real estate. The Defendants have moved to dismiss the action pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or, in the alternative, for summary judgment pursuant to Rule 56.

For the reasons set forth below, we GRANT the Defendants' motion for summary judgment.

BACKGROUND

The facts which follow are presented as alleged in the complaint and in the affidavits in opposition to the Defendants' motion (as well as the accompanying opposition brief). Since the complaint and the opposition papers refer to a prior action initiated by the Plaintiff in this Court, we also take into account the Memorandum and Order we issued in that case in October 1998. See Waksman v. Cohen (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 2, 1998), No. 97 Civ. 7349(WK), 1998 WL 690086. Familiarity with that decision is assumed.

I. Events Leading Up To The Prior Lawsuit

For many years prior to the events in question in the instant lawsuit, Defendant Cohen served as the Plaintiff's attorney, accountant and financial adviser. In September 1985, Cohen recommended an investment for the Plaintiff which would enhance the Plaintiff's estate plan. This investment proposal involved a syndicated real estate partnership, known as Midway Realty Associates ("Midway I"). The investment would supposedly have appreciated in value over time and would purportedly have supplied a guaranteed stream of income in the interim. Acting on the advice of Cohen, as well as upon a cursory reading of a confidential Private Placement Memorandum ("PPM") relating to Midway I, the Plaintiff decided to purchase an interest in the Midway I limited partnership at an aggregate price of $128,000. However, by the time the Plaintiff gave Cohen the go-ahead for the investment, all the interests in the Midway I partnership had already been purchased.

Thereafter, Cohen recommended that the Plaintiff invest in a similar limited partnership known as Midway Realty Associates L.P. II ("Midway II"). Cohen advised the Plaintiff that investing in the Midway II partnership would constitute exactly the same deal as investing in the Midway I partnership and that the Midway II investment related to real estate (which is hereinafter referred to as the "Midway II building" or the "Midway II property") on a parcel adjacent to the real estate involved in the Midway I deal. Based solely on Cohen's representations, and without reading the PPM for Midway II, the Plaintiff purchased an interest in the Midway II partnership for a total sum of $128,000. He signed a subscription agreement for the Midway II investment on December 25, 1985. Had he read the subscription agreement, the Plaintiff would have learned that he was representing: (1) that he was aware of the "high degree of risk" involved in a "speculative" investment;

(2) that "no representations or warranties" had been made to him other than those contained in the PPM, and that he was not relying on any other representations or warranties; and (3) that he had received the PPM for Midway II (which in fact he had not, and would not until 1997), and was relying only on that document in making his investment choice.

*2 In reality, the terms for the Plaintiff's investment in the Midway II partnership were quite different from those relating to Midway I. The property purchased by the Midway II partnership was encumbered by a mortgage financed on separate terms, which was to mature in 1987 (only two years after the Plaintiff had made his investment). This meant that the Midway II partners would have to refinance the mortgage immediately, which they proceeded to do on unfavorable terms. After buying the land under the Midway II building at an inflated price and laying out legal, mortgage placement and refinancing fees, the Midway II partnership accumulated a tremendous amount of debt.

The Plaintiff learned about none of this until 1997. After signing the subscription agreement in 1985, he proceeded under the assumption that the operations and finances of the Midway II partnership were identical to those of the Midway I partnership. He made no independent inquiry into the Midway II investment. Instead, he relied exclusively on Cohen's representations, placing blind trust in his fiduciary. It was not until 1997 that the Plaintiff, finally realizing that he had received no return on his investment to date, requested the PPM for Midway II. Upon receiving this PPM for Midway II (which described the Midway II deal in detail), the Plaintiff determined that he had been defrauded.

II. The 1997 Action

Upon discovering the purported fraud which had been perpetrated upon him, the Plaintiff instituted an action in this Court, Alan Waksman v. Jerome Cohen, et al. (S.D.N.Y.) No. 97 Civ. 7349(WK), on October 2, 1997 (hereinafter the "1997 Action"). In that proceeding, the Plaintiff asserted a variety of different claims against Defendants Cohen, Blum, [FN1] Bernstein, and Gershman, [FN2] as well as against Midway I and II. Hence, the proceeding included causes of action for fraud, the breach of a fiduciary relationship, the breach of an employment agreement, unjust enrichment, conspiracy to breach fiduciary duties, aiding and abetting the breach of fiduciary duties, and wrongful inducement to breach fiduciary duties.

FN1. Defendant Blum is allegedly the principal owner of Commodore Resources Corp. ("Commodore"), the company that owned the Midway II building until the Midway II partnership purchased the property on November 1, 1985. See Compl. ¶ 31. Defendant Blum is also an alleged business affiliate of Defendants Bernstein and Gershman. See id.

FN2. Defendants Bernstein and Gershman are allegedly general partners in MIIGP Associates L.P., which is itself the general partner in the Midway II partnership. See Compl. ¶ 31.

The Defendants moved to dismiss the Plaintiff's action or, in the alternative, for summary judgment. On October 2, 1998, this Court granted their motion and dismissed the Plaintiff's action in its entirety.

III. Events Leading Up To The Present Action

After we dismissed the Plaintiff's 1997 Action, he filed a Notice of Appeal on November 2, 1998. Shortly thereafter, Lisa Greenberg, Staff Counsel for the Second Circuit, held a conference attended by the parties' attorneys in an attempt to help them reach a settlement. Over the course of these settlement negotiations, the Plaintiff's attorney, at his client's specific request, asked the Defendants' attorneys about the operation and status of the Midway II partnership and the disposition of the Midway II building. In response to this inquiry, the various defense attorneys (not the Defendants themselves) indicated that they knew nothing about the status of the property. The Plaintiff "contented" himself with this answer, see Waksman Aff. ¶ 5, and the parties ultimately agreed to settle this matter. To effectuate the settlement, they signed a Stipulation of Settlement dated December 7, 1998. Pursuant to the Stipulation of Settlement, the Defendants agreed to pay the Plaintiff the sum of $100,000. In return, the Plaintiff agreed to discontinue his appeal and to assign all of his right, title and interest in the Midway II partnership to the Defendants. The Plaintiff also agreed to exchange releases "limited to the claims in" the 1997 "action or the underlying transaction, whether known or unknown which were or could have been raised in" the 1997 "action against the parties, their agents, partners, servants or employees." February 1, 2001 Sirota Aff., Ex. C. On December 8, 1998, the Plaintiff executed the agreed upon release of claims.

*3 The Plaintiff received the agreed upon payment from the Defendants sometime after December 21, 1998. Thereafter, he also received a K-1 statement from the Defendants which detailed the tax consequences stemming from his former interest in the Midway II partnership. Although the Plaintiff anticipated that he would sustain a $28,000 capital loss on the sale of his interests in the Midway II partnership (which he could write-off for tax purposes), the K-1 statement instead revealed that he had received a capital gain in excess of $500,000. Since he had never received any return on his investment in the Midway II partnership, the Plaintiff sought to examine Midway II's records. His request was denied. The Plaintiff then instituted proceedings in the Supreme Court, New York County, to obtain copies of Midway II's financial records from the period of 1985 to 1998. On December 17, 1999, Justice Elliot Wilk issued a decision wherein he directed the Defendants to disclose the relevant records.

These financial records provided information relating to the operations of the Midway II partnership. Such information had never previously been disclosed to any of the limited partners, including the Plaintiff. Certain information revealed in the records was of particular interest to the Plaintiff. First, the records disclosed that Midway II's general partners had allegedly cancelled a previously executed rent guarantee made by Commodore, a company of which Defendant Blum was the principal owner, for no apparent reason. The rent guarantee, for which Blum's company had received a $200,000 fee, provided that the company would guarantee a fair market rent for the Midway II building from 1993 to 1997. The cancellation of that guarantee purportedly resulted in a substantial loss of cash flow and significantly reduced the value of the Midway II property. In addition, the records revealed that the Midway II building had been sold on or about May 29, 1998, while the 1997 Action was still pending before this Court, for $7,350,000. The general partners then purportedly used substantially all of the proceeds from this sale to repay various mortgages on the Midway II building and to repay advances that they made to the partnership even though they were allegedly entitled to such repayment only from the sale of additional interests in the Midway II partnership. Thereafter, the general partners allegedly awarded themselves a 10% commission on the sale of the Midway II building.

IV. The Present Action

The Plaintiff initiated the present action on November 27, 2000. At the outset of his new complaint (in what his attorney later refers to as "Count I" in his opposition papers to the motion at bar), the Plaintiff charges the Defendants with fraudulent concealment of the sale of the Midway II building as well as the conduct related to the sale of that property. The Plaintiff claims that the fraudulent concealment of these facts induced him to agree to the Stipulation of Settlement and release of claims and that he would not have agreed to settle the 1997 Action for $100,000 had he been aware of such facts. The new complaint also includes additional causes of action. In Count II of the new complaint, the Plaintiff alleges that the Defendants breached fiduciary duties when they: (a) failed to disclose the sale of the Midway II building and the various details concerning the sale of the property while the litigation was pending before this Court as well as during settlement negotiations and (b) failed to furnish the Midway II partnership's records to the Plaintiff. In Count III, he contends that the Defendants, as a direct result of the foregoing fraudulent conduct and breach, were unjustly enriched during the course of their ownership of the Midway II property. In Count IV, the Plaintiff asserts that the Defendants conspired to breach fiduciary duties.

*4 The Defendants have moved to dismiss this new action in its entirety pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) or, in the alternative, for summary judgment under Rule 56. They argue, among other things, that the Plaintiff's claims were released under the Settlement Agreement, fail to state a claim, and are barred by the doctrine of res judicata as well as by the relevant statutes of limitation.

DISCUSSION

Although we are troubled by the conduct in which the Defendants are accused of engaging, the Plaintiff here is "not an unsophisticated person who has led a sheltered life." Waksman, 1998 WL 690086, at *1. In this instance, the Plaintiff failed to use the means available to him to arm himself with the truth about the Defendants' conduct while engaging in arm's length negotiations with them arising out of contentious litigation (itself premised on accusations of fraud). As such, his own corresponding conduct demonstrates that he cannot sustain a claim for fraudulent concealment. Moreover, the express and unambiguous language set forth in the Stipulation of Settlement and release of claims now precludes the Plaintiff from proceeding on Counts II, III, and IV.

Before we address the motion at bar, we set out the applicable standard in accordance with which the motion must be considered. The Defendants have moved to dismiss the current action in its entirety pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) or, in the alternative, for summary judgment under Rule 56. As all the parties have introduced evidence outside the four corners of the original complaint in briefing or responding to the Defendants' motion and thereby treated it, in effect, as a motion for summary judgment, we similarly treat the motion as one for summary judgment. See Walker v. United States Drug Enforcement Administration (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 14, 2002) No. 01 Civ. 3668(SHS), 2002 WL 1870131, at *2 ("Because both parties have submitted materials outside the pleadings ..., the Court will treat the motion [to dismiss the complaint] as one for summary judgment pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 56"); German v. Pena (S.D.N.Y.2000) 88 F.Supp.2d 216, 219 ("As the parties have presented ample materials outside the pleadings, the Court is required to treat this motion to dismiss as a motion for summary judgment pursuant to Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.") See also In re G. & A. Book, Inc. (2d Cir.1985) 770 F.2d 288, 295, cert. denied, M.J.M. Exhibitors, Inc. v. Stern (1986) 475 U.S. 1015, 106 S.Ct. 1195, 89 L.Ed.2d 310. [FN3]

FN3. Under Local Civil Rule 56.1, a party moving for summary judgment must submit a short and concise statement of material facts as to which it contends there is no genuine issue of fact to be tried. In accordance with that same rule, a party opposing such a motion must similarly submit a statement of the material facts as to which it contends there is a genuine issue of fact to be tried. While Local Civil Rule 56.1 provides that a failure to submit such a statement may constitute grounds for the denial of a motion for summary judgment, we will not deny the Defendants' motion on the basis of this technical defect as the relevant facts are apparent from both parties' briefs and affidavits and the Plaintiff has not demonstrated (nor has he even sought to demonstrate) that he was prejudiced by the Defendants' failure to submit such a statement. See United States v. One Hundred and Thirty-Four Thousand, Seven Hundred and Fifty-Two Dollars United States Currency, more or less (S.D.N.Y.1989) 706 F.Supp. 1075, 1082 n. 13.

"Summary judgment is appropriate where the Court is satisfied 'that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.'" Celotex Corp. v. Catrett (1986) 477 U.S. 317, 330, 106 S.Ct. 2548, 91 L.Ed.2d 265 (quoting Fed. R.Civ.P. 56(c)). "The function of the district court in considering the motion for summary judgment is not to resolve disputed issues of fact but only to determine whether there is a genuine issue to be tried." Eastman Machine Co., Inc. v. United States (2d Cir.1988) 841 F.2d 469, 473. In making this determination, we must "resolve all ambiguities and draw all reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion." Cifarelli v. Village of Babylon (2d Cir.1996) 93 F.3d 47, 51.

*5 With this standard in mind, we turn to the merits of the motion before us.

I. The Plaintiff's Claim For Fraudulent Concealment

[1] Among other arguments, the Defendants contend that the Plaintiff has failed to state a claim for fraudulent concealment. "To sustain a cause of action for fraudulent concealment under New York law, a Plaintiff must demonstrate that: (1) defendant made an omission of material fact; (2) defendant intended to defraud the plaintiff thereby; (3) defendant had a duty to disclose to plaintiff; (4) plaintiff reasonably relied upon the omission; and (5) the plaintiff suffered damages as a result of such reliance." Bermuda Container Line Ltd. v. Int'l Longshoremen's Ass'n (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 8, 1999) No. 97 Civ. 1257(JFK), 1999 WL 64305, at *5, aff'd (2d Cir.1999) 192 F.3d 250. See also Abernathy-Thomas Engineering Co. v. Pall Corp. (E.D.N.Y.2000) 103 F.Supp.2d 582, 596. Even if we were to assume, for the sake of argument, that the Plaintiff has demonstrated that the Defendants omitted material facts where they had a duty to disclose them and did so with the intent to defraud the Plaintiff, we find that the Plaintiff cannot sustain a claim for fraudulent concealment as he cannot, as a matter of law, establish the requisite reliance.

At the outset, the Plaintiff, citing Affiliated Ute Citizens of Utah v. United States (1972) 426 U.S. 128, 96 S.Ct. 2062, 48 L.Ed.2d 523, DuPont v. Brady (2d Cir.1987) 828 F.2d 75, and Titan Group v. Faggen (2d Cir.1975) 513 F.2d 234, cert. denied (1975) 423 U.S. 840, 96

S.Ct. 70, 46 L.Ed.2d 59, contends that reliance should be presumed from the fact the non-disclosed information was material. However, these cases are distinguishable from the circumstances at bar. The three aforementioned cases involved claims brought under the federal Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and Rule 10b-5 promulgated thereunder. See Affiliated Ute Citizens of Utah, 406 U.S. at 132; DuPont, 828 F.2d at 75-76; Titan Group, 513 F.2d at 236. Under that federal statute and regulation, where a plaintiff alleges fraudulent securities violations based on the non-disclosure of material information, "positive proof of reliance is not a prerequisite to recovery. All that is necessary is that the facts withheld be material in the sense that a reasonable investor might have considered them important in the making of his decision." Affiliated Ute Citizens of Utah, 406 U.S. at 153-154.

In sharp contrast, New York courts have chosen not to abandon the requirement of reliance in common law fraud cases. [FN4] See Strauss v. Long Island Sports, Inc. (N.Y.App.Div.1978) 60 A.D.2d 501, 401 N.Y.S.2d 233, 237 ("Other 10b-5 cases ... do dispense with a showing of reliance provided the misrepresentation is material. But it appears from these decisions that 10b-5 cases are very much distinguishable from common-law fraud cases."); Stellema v. Vantage Press, Inc. (N.Y.Sup.Ct.1983) 121 Misc.2d 1058, 470 N.Y.S.2d 507, 510 ("While reliance need not be proved in [10b-5 cases] ... the requirement of a showing of reliance has not been removed in common-law fraud cases"). See also Securities Investor Protection Corp. v. BDO Seidman, LLP (2d Cir.2000) 222 F.3d 63, 73 ("common law fraud claims require a different analysis than those brought under the federal securities regulation scheme"). "Because common law fraud claims must be supported by a showing of direct reliance on the misrepresentation or omission, they are distinct from actions brought under the federal securities laws, which 'permit a rebuttable presumption of reliance where a plaintiff purchases his shares on the market.'" Banque Arabe Et Internationale D'Investissement v. Maryland Nat'l Bank (S.D.N.Y.1994) 850

F.Supp. 1199, 1221, aff'd (2d Cir.1995) 57 F.3d 146 (citation omitted). See also Turtur v. Rothschild Registry Int'l, Inc. (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 27, 1993) No. 92 Civ. 8710(RPP), 1993 WL 338205, at *7. As a result, in order to maintain a claim for fraudulent concealment, the Plaintiff must establish that he "actually relied on the disclosure or lack thereof." Banque Arabe Et Internationale D'Investissement v. Maryland Nat'l Bank (2d Cir.1995) 57 F.3d 146, 156 (hereinafter "Banque Arabe"). Moreover, he must also show that "such reliance was reasonable or justifiable." Id. See also Bermuda Container Line Ltd. v. Int'l Longshoremen's Ass'n (2d Cir.1999) 192 F.3d 250, 258 (to state a claim for fraudulent concealment, the plaintiff's "reliance must be reasonable or justifiable").

FN4. Fraudulent concealment is a species of common law fraud. See Banque Arabe Et Internationale D'Investissement v. Maryland Nat'l Bank (2d Cir.1995) 57 F.3d 146, 160.

*6 Even if the Defendants failed to tell the Plaintiff about the sale of the Midway II property (and the conduct related thereto) when they had a duty to speak and did so with the intent to defraud him, the Plaintiff could not have justifiably relied on these omissions when he decided to stipulate to the settlement and to execute the release of claims. Under New York law, "[w]here a party has the means to discover the true nature of the transaction by the exercise of ordinary intelligence and fails to make use of those means, he cannot claim justifiable reliance on defendant's misrepresentations." Stuart Silver Associates, Inc. v. Baco Development Corp. (N.Y.App.Div.1997) 245 A.D.2d 96, 665 N.Y.S.2d 415, 417. See also Pinney v. Beckwith (N.Y.App.Div.1994) 202 A.D.2d 767, 608 N.Y.S.2d 738, 739 (quoting Schumaker v. Mather (N.Y.1892) 133 N.Y. 590, 596, 30 N.E. 755) ("It is well settled that ... if the facts represented are not matters peculiarly within the party's knowledge, and the other party has the means available to him of knowing, by the exercise of ordinary intelligence, the truth of the real quality of the subject of the representation, he must make use of those means, or he will not be heard to complain that he was induced to enter into the transaction by misrepresentations"). Cf. Banque Arabe, 57 F.3d at 156 (applying this standard in the context of a claim for fraudulent concealment under New York law); Congress Financial Corp. v. John Morrell & Co. (S.D.N.Y.1992) 790 F.Supp. 459, 473-474 (same).

In accordance with this principle, New York courts have repeatedly found that reasonable reliance was absent where a party failed to review available records or secure available documentation which would have otherwise armed it with the truth. For example, in Pinney, the Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court found that "the element of reasonable reliance" was "absent as a matter of law" where a simple inquiry into town records (i.e. "the barest of precautions"), would have disclosed the falsity of a defendant's representations regarding the approval of a subdivision. See Pinney, 608 N.Y.S.2d at 739. Similarly, reliance was absent in Marine Midland Bank v. Palm Beach Moorings, Inc. where the party had access to a corporation's records and the opportunity to examine those records but failed to take advantage of that opportunity. See Marine Midland Bank v. Palm Beach Moorings, Inc. (N.Y.App.Div.1978) 61 A.D.2d 927, 403 N.Y.S.2d 15, 17, appeal denied (N.Y.1978) 44 N.Y.2d 644, 405 N.Y.S.2d 1028, 377 N.E.2d 488. See also Banque Arabe, 57 F.3d at 157-158 (affirming the dismissal of a fraudulent concealment claim where the plaintiff had access to sources which would have alerted it to all of the information it needed to know yet it failed to request such information); Belin v. Weissler (S.D.N.Y. July 14, 1998) No. 97 Civ. 8787 (RWS), 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10492, at *14-*18 (plaintiff's reliance was neither reasonable nor justified where he had the ability to secure and review relevant documentation but failed to do so); Most v. Monti (N.Y.App.Div.1982) 91 A.D.2d 606, 456 N.Y.S.2d 427, 428 (affirming the dismissal of plaintiffs' fraud claim where the information relating to the subject matter of the fraud was "readily available to plaintiffs upon their making reasonable inquiry" yet they unreasonably failed to investigate the truth of the matter).

*7 The Appellate Division has even affirmed the dismissal of a complaint which had sought the rescission of agreements procured through fraud where the plaintiffs made some effort to review a corporation's records but ultimately failed to obtain the documents. See Rodas v. Manitaras (N.Y.App.Div.1990) 159 A.D.2d 341, 552 N.Y.S.2d 618, 620. In Rodas, the plaintiffs sought the rescission of sale and purchase agreements on the ground that they had been fraudulently induced to enter into those agreements. Id. at 619. The plaintiffs had been aware that the income of the business in question in Rodas was a material fact about which they had received no documentation. Id. at 620. Although the plaintiffs had asked to examine the business' records and had that effort rebuffed, the Appellate Division nonetheless held that the "[p]laintiffs could easily have protected themselves by insisting on an examination of the books as a condition of closing." Id. (emphasis added). The court therefore held that the plaintiffs could not be heard to complain that they had been defrauded as they had chosen to proceed with a transaction without, among other things, securing the available documentation. Id.

Here, as in the foregoing cases, the Plaintiff had the means to discover the omitted information through a review of the available documentation yet he failed to seek such a review before he executed the Stipulation of Settlement and the release of claims. First, when the Plaintiff realized in 1997 that he had received no return on his investment in the Midway II partnership, he requested and received the PPM for Midway II. See Waksman, 1998 WL 690086, at *2. See also Compl. ¶ 14 ("In November 1997, Plaintiff, for the first time, learned of the false and fraudulent nature of the representations made to him by Defendant Cohen, when he obtained a copy of a Private Placement Memorandum for Midway II the existence of which, up to that date, was unknown to the Plaintiff"). That PPM specifically explained that the general partners in the Midway II venture had the exclusive right to sell the Midway II property and discussed the substantial adverse tax consequences which could result from such a sale. See Sirota Aff., Ex. 1 at 40, 42, 57-58, and 1073n-7. The PPM also provided notice of the means by which the Plaintiff could arm himself with the truth about the status of the Midway II property for it explained that all partners in the Midway II venture had the right to inspect and examine the partnership's books at reasonable business times and upon reasonable prior written notice to the general partners. See Sirota Aff., Ex. 1 at 1073n-10.

Indeed, the disposition of the property through a sale (and the consequences thereof) was a topic of concern to the Plaintiff. Over the course of the settlement negotiations which followed our dismissal of his 1997 Action, he specifically directed his counsel to ask the Defendants' attorneys about the status of the Midway II property in an apparent effort to determine whether he could expect a capital loss from the sale of his interests in the partnership. See Waksman Aff. ¶ 5. See also Waksman Aff. ¶ 7 ("When my attorney informed me at the [settlement] conference before staff counsel at the Circuit Court that there was an offer to acquire my two units for $100,000, I asked my attorney to inquire of the lawyers representing the various Defendants whether there was any change in the status of the property"); Pl.'s Opp'n Brief at 2 ("During the negotiations before staff counsel, inquiry was made of the three attorneys representing the respective Defendants about the operation and status of the partnership and the disposition of the real estate"). The defense attorneys provided no information in response to this inquiry as they indicated that they knew nothing about the status of the property. See Waksman Aff. ¶ 7. See also Waksman Aff. ¶ 5; Dweck Aff. ¶ 28; Pl.'s Opp'n Brief at 16. Nothing in the record suggests that the Plaintiff sought to review the partnership's records to arm himself with that very information before his attorney made the aforementioned inquiry; nor does the record suggest that the Plaintiff asked to review the partnership's records to arm himself with that same information after his attorney failed to receive any informative response to that inquiry but before the Stipulation of Settlement and release of claims were executed.

*8 In other words, the PPM describing the Midway II partnership put the Plaintiff on notice that the Midway II property could be sold at any time by the general partners and that he might not receive a disbursement from the sale (and could even incur substantial tax liabilities therefrom). In fact, the Plaintiff was sufficiently concerned about the disposition of that property that he directed his attorney to inquire about the status of the property during settlement negotiations. Although he ultimately received no information about the status of the property from the Defendants' attorneys, he nonetheless agreed to the Stipulation of Settlement and the release of claims without attempting to use the means specifically afforded to him by the PPM (or, for that matter, by New York Partnership Law §§ 42 and 99), [FN5] to arm himself with the truth about the partnership's operations and the status of the partnership's property through a review of the partnership's records. [FN6] In essence, although he had the means to discover the relevant information, he chose not to use such means and instead agreed to the settlement on nothing more than the unsubstantiated assumption that he might be able to take a capital loss on the sale of his interests in the Midway II partnership. Accordingly, as in the foregoing cases, he cannot now establish the requisite reasonable or justifiable reliance to sustain his fraudulent concealment claim.

FN5. New York Partnership Law § 42 provides as follows: "Partners shall render on demand true and full information of all things affecting the partnership to any partner or the legal representative of any deceased partner or partner under legal disability." N.Y. PARTNERSHIP LAW § 42 (emphasis added). Section 99, in pertinent part, further provides that: "A limited partner shall have the same rights as a partner to ... (b) Have on demand true and full information on all things affecting the partnership, and a formal account of partnership affairs whenever circumstances render it just and reasonable...." N.Y. PARTNERSHIP LAW § 99(1)(b) (emphasis added). See also Millard v. Newmark & Co. (N.Y.App.Div.1966) 24

A.D.2d 333, 266 N.Y.S.2d 254, 258 ("[A] limited partner is not in the hopeless position where he must only suffer in silence when an alleged wrong occurs. He has a right of full and free access to information contained in the partnership books, and of all things affecting the partnership, as well as a right to a formal accounting .")

FN6. In sharp contrast, after the parties had already agreed upon a settlement and the Plaintiff had executed a release of claims and transferred his interest in the Midway II partnership to the Defendants, the Plaintiff vigorously sought access, pursuant to New York Partnership Law § 99, to the relevant records which had been available to him as a limited partner in the Midway II venture. See Dweck Aff., Ex. 5.

The absence of reasonable or justifiable reliance in this case is underscored by the context in which the Plaintiff failed to use the means available to him to learn about the partnership's operations and the status of the Midway II property. Where parties have engaged in arm's length negotiations and, as here, the party claiming reliance had the opportunity to discover the purported fraud, courts are wary of finding reasonable reliance, particularly where the party claiming reliance failed to use the means available to him to arm himself with accurate information while he was represented by counsel during settlement negotiations conducted in the wake of contentious litigation. Manley v. AmBase Corp. (S.D.N.Y.2001) 126 F.Supp.2d 743, 758-759. In Manley, the defendant similarly asserted a fraudulent concealment claim premised on the concealment of information which supposedly induced it to enter into a settlement agreement. See id. at 755. There, the court determined that the defendant could not demonstrate reasonable or justifiable reliance as the parties had engaged in settlement negotiations through counsel after a history of contentious litigation and the defendant had failed to use the means available to it to arm itself with the truth. See id. at 758-759. As in Manley, the Plaintiff here entered into the settlement negotiations after a history of contentious litigation against these Defendants. In fact, the litigation leading up to those negotiations was itself premised on the Plaintiff's acrimonious accusations of fraud. The Plaintiff, who we previously indicated "is [himself] not an unsophisticated person who has led a sheltered life," Waksman, 2002 WL 690086, at *1 (alteration added), was represented by an attorney over the course of those settlement negotiations with defense counsel and the Defendants. Having engaged in arm's length negotiations with the Defendants after a history of contentious litigation which called into question the veracity of the Defendants' conduct and having failed to use the means available to him to discover accurate information about what he contends were material facts, the Plaintiff cannot now demonstrate the reasonable or justifiable reliance necessary to sustain a claim for fraudulent concealment. [FN7]

FN7. We also note that the Plaintiff appears to indicate that he had suspicions about the Defendants' conduct even before he received the K-1 statement, although he apparently felt that he had no basis to demand the partnership's records until after his receipt of that statement (which further aroused his suspicions and supplied the Plaintiff with what he felt was the basis to compel the production of the records). See Pl.'s Opp'n Brief at 29. The Second Circuit has explained that "[a] heightened degree of diligence is required where the victim of fraud had hints of its falsity." Banque Franco-Hellnique De Commerce Int'l et Maritime, S.A. v. Christophides (2d Cir.1997) 106 F.3d 22, 27. Here, despite his apparent suspicions about the Defendants' purported conduct, the Plaintiff still failed to make use of the means available to him diligently to arm himself with the truth and this further undermines the reasonableness of his reliance. See Schlaifer Nance & Co., Inc. v. Estate of Andy Warhol (S.D.N.Y.1996) 927 F.Supp. 650, 660, aff'd (2d Cir.1997) 119 F.3d 91 ("A party's reliance on false statements or omissions is not reasonable or justifiable if the party has reason to believe that the representations may be false but fails to inquire into their accuracy.")

*9 Although the Plaintiff places a particular premium on the defense attorneys' disavowal of knowledge about the status of the Midway II property, he cannot establish reasonable or justifiable reliance on the basis of this disavowal alone. Here, as we previously indicated, the Plaintiff's counsel, at his client's specific direction, asked the Defendants' attorneys "about the operation and status of the partnership and the disposition of the [partnership's] real estate." Pl.'s Opp'n Brief at 2. See also Pl.'s Opp'n Brief at 7-8, 16; Waksman Aff. ¶¶ 5, 7; Dweck Aff. ¶ 28. In response to this inquiry, the various defense attorneys (not the Defendants themselves) indicated that they knew nothing about the status of the property. See Waksman Aff. ¶ 7 ("When my attorney informed me at the conference before staff counsel at the Circuit Court that there was an offer to acquire my two units for $100,000, I asked my attorney to inquire of the lawyers representing the various Defendants whether there was any change in the status of the property. He, thereafter, reported to me that he did make such an inquiry and that the attorneys all responded that they knew nothing about disposition of the properties.") See also Waksman Aff. ¶ 5; Dweck Aff. ¶ 28; Pl.'s Opp'n Brief at 16. Despite the fact that this answer provided no information whatsoever about the actual status of the Midway II property, the Plaintiff "contented" himself with this statement and did not pursue the matter further. See Waksman Aff. ¶ 5.

The Plaintiff cannot look to this wholly uninformative answer by the Defendants' attorneys, made during the course of settlement negotiations to the Plaintiff's counsel, to demonstrate reasonable or justifiable reliance. First, in such an arm's length negotiation where both parties are represented by attorneys, it is not reasonable for one side to rely on such a statement where it was made by the adverse party's counsel. Healey v. Rich Products Corp. (W.D.N.Y. Mar.2, 1992) 1992 WL 50924, at *9, vacated on other grounds (2d Cir.1992) 981 F.2d 68. See also Verschell v. Pike (N.Y.App.Div.1981) 85 A.D.2d 690, 445 N.Y.S.2d 489, 491. Moreover, reliance on such an uninformative statement cannot be considered reasonable and cannot support a fraudulent concealment claim. See Healey, 1992 WL 50924, at *9. Cf. In re Danesi (S.D.N.Y.1980) 6 B.R. 738, 740.

In sum, the Plaintiff has failed to demonstrate that he reasonably or justifiably relied on the omitted information in question. As such, we grant summary judgment on the fraudulent concealment claim in favor of the Defendants.

II. The Effect Of The Settlement On Counts II, III, and IV

[2] Over the course of settlement negotiations before the Staff Counsel for the Second Circuit, the Plaintiff here agreed to settle the 1997 Action. Hence, his attorney executed a Stipulation of Settlement. See Sirota Aff., Ex. C. The Stipulation provided that the Plaintiff would discontinue his appeal and convey all of his interest in the Midway II partnership to the Defendants in exchange for $100,000. According to the express terms of the Stipulation, that payment was to be made "after exchange of general and complete releases between the Plaintiff and the respective Defendants limited to the claims in this action [(i.e. the 1997 Action)] or the underlying transaction, whether known or unknown which were or could have been raised in this action against the parties, their agents, partners, servants or employees." Sirota Aff. , Ex. C (alteration added). Thereafter, the Plaintiff actually executed a release of claims which specifically applied "to the claims in the action brought by the Releasor against the Releasees in the United States District Court, Southern District of New York bearing Docket No. 97 Civ. 7349 or in the underlying transaction giving rise to said litigation whether known or unknown which were or could have been raised in said action against the Releasees, their agents, partners, servants, or employees." Sirota Aff., Ex. F.

*10 The Defendants contend that the Stipulation of Settlement and release of claims bar the Plaintiff from pursuing the instant lawsuit. " 'Settlement agreements are strongly favored in New York and may not be lightly cast aside. Afterthought or change of mind are not sufficient to justify rejecting a settlement.' " Hughes v. Lillian Goldman Family, LLC (S.D.N.Y.2001) 153 F.Supp.2d

435, 445 (citation omitted). See also Hallock v. State of New York (N.Y.1984) 64 N.Y.2d 224, 230, 485 N.Y.S.2d 510, 474 N.E.2d 1178 ("Stipulations of settlement are favored by the courts and not lightly cast aside.")

Nonetheless, a court may relieve a party of a settlement agreement where there is sufficient cause to invalidate a contract, "such as fraud, collusion, mistake or accident." Willgerodt ex rel. Majority Peoples' Fund for the 21st Century, Inc. v. Hohri (S.D.N.Y.1997) 953 F.Supp. 557, 560, aff'd (2d Cir.1998) 159 F.3d 1347 (citation omitted) (hereinafter "Willgerodt"). See also Rivera v. State of New York (N.Y.App.Div.1985) 115 A.D.2d 431, 496 N.Y.S.2d 230, 231. Cf. Morse/Diesel, Inc. v. Fidelity and Deposit Co. of Maryland (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 30, 1992) No. 86 Civ. 1494(PKL), 1992 WL 75123, at * 4 ("[t]he equitable remedy of rescission may be exercised where a party has committed a fraudulent act,' including fraudulent concealment") (citation omitted). Hence, a party may ask the court to set aside a settlement agreement where the agreement has been procured through fraudulent concealment. See, e.g., Nasik Breeding & Research Farm Ltd. v. Merck & Co., Inc. (S.D.N.Y.2001) 165 F.Supp.2d 514, 520, 526, 528-529, 533-536; A.J. Tenwood Associates, Inc. v. United States Fire Ins. Co. (N.Y.Sup.Ct.1980) 104 Misc.2d 467, 428 N.Y.S.2d 606, 608. Similarly, "[f]raudulent concealment will vitiate a release under New York law." Skylon Corp. v. Guilford Mills, Inc. (S.D.N.Y.1994) 864 F.Supp. 353, 358. See also Nasik Breeding & Research Farm Ltd., 165 F.Supp.2d at 526, 528-533.

However, nowhere in his complaint has the Plaintiff asked this Court to rescind the Stipulation of Settlement or release of claims. Although he has asserted a claim for fraudulent concealment, the Plaintiff seeks relief in the form of damages and not rescission. See Compl. ¶ 39; see also Compl., Ad Damnum Clause at ¶¶ 1-3. Moreover, even had the Plaintiff specifically sought to avoid the effect of the Stipulation and release by asking this Court to set them aside on the ground of fraudulent concealment, we would not do so where, as here, the Plaintiff failed to maintain a claim for fraudulent concealment. See, e.g. Banque Arabe, 57 F.3d at 153-158; Skylon Corp., 864 F.Supp. at 358-360.

Instead of seeking to rescind the Stipulation and release on the basis of fraud, the Plaintiff argues that they should not bar this action because he was not aware of the conduct underlying the instant lawsuit until after he had agreed to settle the 1997 Action. However, as part of the Stipulation of Settlement, the Plaintiff agreed to execute a release that would apply to all "the claims in the" 1997 Action "or the underlying transaction, whether known or unknown which were or could have been raised in this action against the parties, their agents, partners, servants or employees." Sirota Aff., Ex. C (emphasis added). He thereafter actually executed a release which applied to "the claims in the [1997 Action] ... or in the underlying transaction giving rise" to the 1997 Action "whether known or unknown which were or could have been raised" in the 1997 Action. Sirota Aff., Ex. F (emphasis added).

*11 A party which has expressly and unambiguously agreed to settle unknown claims may be precluded from asserting them at a later date even though they were not known to him at the time of the settlement. See Leonzo v. First Unum Life Ins. Co. (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 23, 1995) No. 93 Civ. 0535(KTD), 1995 WL 505551, at *3 (dismissing a plaintiff's claims where he "willingly, knowingly, and under the guidance of counsel, chose to discharge all claims, whether known or unknown, arising out of his injury," despite the plaintiff's assertion that he was unaware of the possibility of such a claim when he signed the release) (emphasis added); Fay v. Petersen Publishing Co. (S.D.N.Y. May, 17, 1990) No. 88 Civ. 6499 MBM, 1990 WL 67397, at *3 ("Although at the time of the signing [of the release] plaintiff may have had no inkling that he would bring an age discrimination claim in the future, he should have understood from the language of the agreement that he was giving up 'any known or unknown' claims against the company related to his termination"); Jabara v. Songs of Manhattan Island Music Co., a Division of Whitehaven Music Publishing Corp. (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 24, 1989) No. 86 Civ. 3412(KMW), 1989 WL 16614, at *7 ("Plaintiff attempts to escape from ... [the release] by stating that he was unaware at the time of the termination agreement that such a deduction had been made by Whitehaven for payment to Rick's Music. The general release language in paragraph 2, however, covers claims "known or unknown to me."... Thus, it is clear that any claim Jabara may have had against Whitehaven for an unauthorized payment to Rick's Music was waived by paragraph 2 of the 1981 Termination Agreement") (internal citations omitted); Omaha Indemnity Co. v. Johnson & Towers, Inc. (E.D.N.Y.1984) 599 F.Supp. 215, 220 ("Lack of awareness of ... the existence of a cause of action is not a mutual mistake of fact sufficient to set aside the General Release. The Release in this case bars all claims against Johnson & Towers, both known and unknown. This is dictated both by the law and the language of the Release. The result may seem harsh, but it is the result Mr. Singer bargained for.") Since he expressly and unambiguously agreed to release those claims in the 1997 Action or in the underlying transaction which could have been raised in the 1997 Action, even if they were "unknown" to him at the time of the settlement, the Plaintiff cannot now avoid the effect of the Stipulation of Settlement and release of claims by arguing that the Stipulation and release do not apply to claims which were then unknown to him.

The issue before us then is whether the Plaintiff's present causes of action were claims in the 1997 Action or stemmed from the underlying transaction giving rise to that litigation. The Plaintiff reads the Stipulation and release as if they were limited to those claims which were included in his 1997 complaint. Pl.'s Opp'n Brief at 26. However, this interpretation does not follow from the plain language of the Stipulation or release, which applies to claims that could have been raised in the 1997 "action," not merely to claims which were raised in the original complaint. The term "action" refers to a civil proceeding generally and not to a particular pleading. See BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 28-29 (7th ed.1999) (defining "action" as "[a] civil or criminal judicial proceeding"); WEBSTER'S NEW WORLD DICTIONARY OF AMERICAN ENGLISH 13 (3d College ed.1994) (defining "action" as "a legal proceeding by which one seeks to have a wrong put right; lawsuit"); WEBSTER'S THIRD NEW INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY 21 (1993) (defining "action" as (1) "a legal proceeding by which one demands or enforces one's right in a court of justice" and (2) "a judicial proceeding for the enforcement or protection of a right, the redress or prevention of a wrong, or the punishment of a public offense"); THE AMERICAN HERITAGE DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE 17 (3d ed.1992) (defining "action" as "[a] judicial proceeding whose purpose is to obtain relief at the hands of a court"). If the Plaintiff had intended to limit the Stipulation and release solely to those specific claims which were raised in the original complaint rather than to those which could have been raised over the course of the entire proceeding, he could have drafted the agreement accordingly. Cf. Sibersky v. Borah, Goldstein, Altschuler & Schwartz, P.C. (S.D.N.Y. July 22, 2002) No. 99 Civ. 3227 JGK, 2002 WL 1610923, at *5 ("If the release were intended to exclude any particular kinds of claims or disputes arising of this relationship or events, it could have easily done so, but it did not.")

*12 In the instant case, Counts II, III, and IV are grounded in the transaction underlying the 1997 litigation. According to the Plaintiff himself, the "underlying transaction" refers to the Plaintiff's investment in the Midway II partnership in 1985. See Pl.'s Opp'n Brief at 26. That investment ultimately gave rise to his initial 1997 claims when the Plaintiff failed to receive any return on his investment in that partnership and thereafter discovered that the venture did not resemble the Midway I partnership as he had purportedly been led to believe. Absent his investment in that partnership (which made him a limited partner in the Midway II venture), Count II (which alleges the breach of a fiduciary duty) and Count IV (which alleges that the Defendants conspired to breach fiduciary duties) would be meritless; that transaction supposedly created the very fiduciary obligations which the Defendants either purportedly breached or conspired to breach. Similarly, absent his investment into the Midway II partnership, the Plaintiff would be unable to maintain his cause of action in Count II, which alleges unjust enrichment, as the Defendants supposedly enriched themselves at the expense of his investment in the Midway II partnership. [FN8]

FN8. Moreover, the Plaintiff specifically alleges that his claim for unjust enrichment has arisen "[a]s a direct result of the [Defendants'] breaches of their respective obligations as fiduciaries...." Compl. ¶ 44. As we indicated, those purported fiduciary obligations themselves supposedly arose when the Plaintiff engaged in the "underlying transaction" by investing in the Midway II partnership.

These three claims, which ultimately stem from the transaction underlying the 1997 litigation, "could have been raised" in the 1997 "action" as they could have been brought in the legal proceeding which the Plaintiff initiated in 1997. The conduct which supposedly breached the alleged fiduciary duties that arose out of the Plaintiff's investment in the Midway II partnership (and therefore serves as the basis for Counts II and IV), as well as the conduct which purportedly resulted in the Defendants' unjust enrichment at the expense of that investment (and which therefore serves as the basis for Count III), occurred while the 1997 Action was still pending before this Court. Thus, the Plaintiff could have supplemented his original 1997 complaint pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15(d) to include these claims and allegations before the 1997 Action was dismissed in October 1998. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 15(d) (allowing a party to submit a supplemental pleading "setting forth transactions and occurrences or events that have happened since the date of the pleading sought to be supplemented"). See also 3 James Wm. Moore et al., Moore's Federal Practice ¶ 15.30 (3d ed. 1999) ("[A] Plaintiff need not commence a new action when after-occurring events demonstrate that it had a right to relief even if the original complaint was insufficient.") Even after we dismissed the 1997 Action, the Plaintiff, had he persuaded the Second Circuit to reverse our dismissal (as he hoped to do) and to remand the case to this Court, could then have supplemented his initial complaint to include Counts II, III, and IV through the procedure enumerated in Rule 15(d). See Gomez v. Wilson (D.C.Cir.1973) 477 F.2d 411, 417 ("[O]nce appellant is again in the District Court, he will be free to appropriately supplement his complaint. That may include allegations of recent incidents, joinder of additional parties and, of course, presentation of such legal contentions as may be indicated"); Miller v. Air Line Pilots Ass'n Int'l (D.D.C. Mar. 30, 2000) No. Civ.A.91-3161 NHJ, 2000 WL 362042, at *1 ("Upon remand, the appellant is free to supplement his complaint, including allegations of new incidents and joinder of additional parties"); Bromley v. Michigan Educ. Ass'n-NEA (E.D.Mich.1998) 178 F.R.D. 148, 153 (quoting Texarkana v. Arkansas Gas Co. (1939) 306 U.S. 188, 203, 59 S.Ct. 448, 83 L.Ed. 598) ("The supplementation procedure is equally applicable after remand for further proceedings.") Since the claims fall within the scope of the express language set forth in the Stipulation of Settlement and release of claims, we grant summary judgment in favor of the Defendants on Counts II, III, and IV because these causes of action are precluded by the Stipulation and release. [FN9]

FN9. Because we have already determined that the Plaintiff cannot sustain a cause of action for fraudulent concealment on other grounds, we do not address the Defendants' contention that the Stipulation and release equally bar that claim.

CONCLUSION

*13 For the foregoing reasons, we hereby grant the Defendants' motion for summary judgment with respect to the Plaintiff's claim for fraudulent concealment. We also grant the Defendants' motion for summary judgment as to Counts II, III, and IV. [FN10]

FN10. Since we grant summary judgment on the grounds that (a) the Plaintiff has failed to establish the reasonable or justifiable reliance necessary to sustain a claim for fraudulent concealment and (b) the express language in the Stipulation and release precludes him from pursuing Counts II, III, and IV, we do not address the Defendants' remaining arguments in favor of summary judgment.

No. 01 CIV.11484(GEL).

Sept. 26, 2002.

Aircraft lessor sued lessee, seeking unpaid rent. Lessee counterclaimed and brought third party action against lessor's representative, which negotiated lease. Lessor moved for partial summary judgment on its claims, and, joined by representative, for dismissal of counterclaims. The District Court, Lynch, J., held that: (1) lessor was entitled to rent, despite claim that representative materially misrepresented maintenance costs of leased aircraft; (2) rental obligation was not modified by subsequent letter agreement changing rent payment schedule; (3) lessee stated intentional misrepresentation claim with sufficient particularity; (4) lessee stated existence of special relationship between lessee and lessor, as required for negligent misrepresentation claim; but (5) lessee could not rely on any representation regarding maintenance costs, precluding misrepresentation and Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) claims, due to disclaimers in lease agreement; and (6) New York consumer protection statute did not apply.

Motion granted.

In determining whether to grant summary judgment in absence of discovery, court considers: (1) whether lack of discovery was in any way due to fault or delay on part of nonmovant; (2) whether nonmovant filed sufficient affidavit explaining: (i) what facts are sought and how they are to be obtained, (ii) how those facts are reasonably expected to create genuine issue of material fact, (iii) what effort affiant has made to obtain them, and (iv) why affiant was unsuccessful in those efforts; and (3) whether nonmovant provided any basis for its belief that further discovery would alter outcome of summary judgment motion. [7] Bailment 20
50k20

Under New York law, aircraft lease agreement was not modified by letter agreement, so as to obviate obligation of lessee to pay rent, by letter agreement creating new payment schedule with rent deferrals, and containing promise of lessor to "consider" proposals for terminating leases.

170Ak636

Aircraft lessee stated claim of intentional misrepresentation on part of lessor, under New York law, with sufficient particularity, by alleging that identified representative of lessor told identified representative of lessee, prior to execution of lease, that maintenance costs of aircraft were specified amount, knowing that lessee would encounter higher costs since lessor had maintenance performed in India. Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 9(b), 28 U.S.C.A.

[9] Fraud 13(3)
184k13(3)

Misrepresentation.

To state claim for negligent misrepresentation under New York law, plaintiff must establish that (1) defendant had duty, as result of special relationship, to give correct information; (2) defendant made false representation that he or she should have known was incorrect; (3) information supplied in the representation was known by defendant to be desired by plaintiff for serious purpose; (4) plaintiff intended to rely and act upon it; and (5) plaintiff reasonably relied on it to his or her detriment.

[10] Fraud 13(3)
184k13(3)

Aircraft lessee satisfied need to establish special relationship between parties, to state claim of negligent misrepresentation under New York law, by alleging that representative of lessor had special expertise in converting aircraft from passenger to cargo use desired by lessee, and that lessee relied on that special expertise in executing lease, particularly relying upon representative's misleading statements regarding maintenance costs.

[11] Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations 62
319Hk62

Where mail or wire fraud is predicate act for claim under Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), plaintiff must show justifiable reliance to establish causation. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1962.

[12] Fraud 36
184k36

Aircraft lessee could not reasonably rely on statements of lessor's representative, regarding maintenance costs of aircraft, as required for intentional and negligent misrepresentation actions under New York law and for Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) action; leases contained clause disclaiming any representations regarding "condition," "durability," and "operation or fitness for use," and also contained clauses providing that aircraft was being leased "as is, where is," that rent would be paid regardless of existence of counterclaims, and that lease was entire agreement regarding lease of aircraft in question.

[13] Evidence 397(1)
157k397(1)

Under New York, party to contract cannot rely on oral representations where contract specifically disavows the incorporation of non-written representations.

[14] Fraud 36
184k36

Under New York law, if party to contract specifically disclaims reliance upon representation in contract, that party cannot later assert that it was fraudulently induced into signing contract by the very representation it has disclaimed.

[15] Bailment 9
50k9

Under New York law, exact words "maintenance costs" did not need to appear in disclaimer of representations and warranties in aircraft lease, in order for representations about maintenance to have been disclaimed; maintenance costs were logically an aspect of "condition," "durability," and "operation or fitness for use" listed by disclaimer.

[16] Consumer Protection 33

Aircraft lessee did not state counterclaim against lessor, under New York consumer protection law, by alleging that lessor misrepresented maintenance costs of aircraft; suit involved specific transactions between business entities, rather than any general consumer deception. OPINION AND ORDER

LYNCH, District Judge.

This dispute involves five aircraft leased to TACA International Airlines ("TACA"), a Salvadoran airline company, by Wells Fargo Bank Northwest ("Wells Fargo"), a United States bank acting solely as owner-trustee under the lease agreements ("Leases"). Third-Party Defendant C-S Aviation Services ("C-S Aviation"), a "lease management provider" of commercial aircraft, established the trusts with Wells Fargo to lease the aircraft, negotiated and managed the Leases, and was the ultimate beneficiary of the trusts. Defendant JHM Cargo Express ("JHM Cargo"), an air cargo business and TACA subsidiary, was the original signatory on three of the Leases, and later assigned those Leases to its parent company, TACA, while expressly agreeing to remain fully liable for its obligations under the Leases.

Wells Fargo brings this lawsuit for payment of rent allegedly due under the Leases. TACA resists by asserting that it was fraudulently induced to enter the Leases, and counterclaims for (and brings a third-party action against C-S Aviation) for damages from the alleged fraud. Wells Fargo moves for partial summary judgment on its claims, and (joined by C-S Aviation) for dismissal of TACA's claims against it and C-S Aviation. The motions will be granted.

BACKGROUND [FN1]

FN1. All facts set forth below are either undisputed or taken as alleged in TACA's pleadings.

TACA does not dispute that it is party to five Leases--three that it assumed from defendant JHM Cargo for the use of three Airbus A300B4-200F aircraft and two that TACA itself executed for two additional Airbus A300B4-200F aircraft. [FN2] Each Lease contains a clause, commonly known as a "hell or high water clause." [FN3] that states:

FN2. TACA assumed the former three Leases from JHM Cargo by assignment agreements dated November 25, 1998, and January 27, 1999. (Seery Aff. Exs. 4-6.) Under the assignment agreements JHM Cargo agreed to "continue to be fully liable" to the lessor for "full and prompt payment" of its obligations under the Leases. (Seery Aff. Exs. 4-6 at ¶ 6.) The latter two Leases were executed on October 15, 1999, and February 15, 2000, between Wells Fargo and TACA. (Seery Aff. Ex. 10, 11.) All five of the Leases are essentially identical with the exception of the specific aircraft rented and the operative dates of each individual Lease.

FN3. A "hell or high water" lease is a lease where, by its terms, payment is due under any circumstance. See, e.g., Rhythm & Hues v. Terminal Marketing Co., 2002 WL 1343759 at *5 (S.D.N.Y. June 19, 2002).

The Lessee's obligation to pay all rent and all other amounts due hereunder and to perform all the terms hereof shall be absolute and unconditional and shall not be affected or reduced by any circumstances, including (1) any set-off, counterclaim, recoupment, defense or other right which the lessee may have against the lessor

[FN4]

FN4. This section of the agreement, and the disclaimer of warranties quoted in the next paragraph, are among the approximately half-dozen provisions of the 87-page lease agreements and over 200 pages of attached schedules and exhibits that are printed entirely in capital letters. To facilitate reading, we do not reproduce this orthography.

The Leases also contain an express disclaimer of representations and warranties, which states in relevant part:

The aircraft is to be leased hereunder "as is, where is." Except as expressly provided in this agreement, the lessor ... specifically disclaims any representation or warranty, express or implied, as to the airworthiness, load carrying capability, value, durability, compliance with specifications, condition, design, operation, merchantability, freedom from claims of infringement or the like, or fitness for use for a particular purpose of the aircraft or as to the quality of the material or workmanship of the aircraft, the absence therefrom of latent or other defects, whether or not discoverable, or as to any other representation or warranty whatsoever, express or implied ... with respect to the aircraft

(Seery Aff., Ex. 1-3, 10, 11 at § 14.)

Finally, each Lease Agreements also contains an integration clause which reads:

This Lease is intended to be a complete and exclusive statement of the terms of the agreement of the parties hereto and this Lease supersedes any prior or contemporaneous agreements, whether oral or in writing in relation to the leasing of the Aircraft to the Lessee. Neither this Lease nor any term of this Lease may be modified or waived except in writing signed by the parties.

(Seery Aff., Ex. 1-3, 10, 11 at § 29.7.)

Defendants claim that at some point after assuming the Leases, [FN5] they realized that the true operating costs of the aircraft exceeded $2000 per block hour [FN6] while the maintenance estimates represented by C-S Aviation were between $1160 and $1355 per block hour (Countercl. at ¶¶ 10, 13, 36), Defendants allege that at a meeting on December 11, 2000, C-S Aviation revealed for the first time that its maintenance cost figures were based on engine overhauls done by Air India in India. (Bloch Aff. at ¶¶ 29, 31.) Shortly after this meeting, TACA informed C-S Aviation that it wanted to terminate all five of the Leases, but instead of doing so, it agreed to C-S Aviation's proposal that they "work together" to terminate the Leases by finding other airlines to take over the aircraft. (Bloch Aff. at ¶¶ 31-34; Exs. H, L.) These discussions eventually resulted in the signing of a letter agreement ("Letter Agreement"), which modified TACA's rent payment obligations.

FN5. It is unclear from the counterclaim precisely when this realization occurred, but the implication is that TACA discovered this fact sometime between assuming the first of the leases in November 1998 and discussing the problem with C-S Aviation in December 2000.

FN6. A "block hour" refers to the period of time measured in hours from the moment a jet bridge is removed from an aircraft at departure to the moment the jet bridge is placed back on the aircraft at arrival, or, if there is no jet bridge, from the moment an aircraft initiates push back until the brakes are finally applied at the destination. (Nagin Decl. at ¶ 14.) The airline industry apparently measures the expense of maintaining aircraft, a significant operational expense, in terms of maintenance costs per block hour.

The Letter Agreement, signed on June 21, 2001, by TACA and C-S Aviation as Wells

Fargo's "appointed aircraft manager," amends the payment plan under the *357 Leases reducing the Defendants' near-term obligations for four of the five aircraft. (Seery Aff. ¶¶ 19-20, Ex. 15, Ex 15; Answer ¶ 21.) The Letter Agreement sets a revised monthly rent for each aircraft, requires that TACA will make up for the shortfall between the revised 2001 payment schedule and the original payment schedule by increased monthly rental payments to begin in January 2002, provides that "each of the lease agreements in respect of the Aircraft ... remain in full force and effect without modification or amendment," and states that all reasonable documented legal fees resulting from the default of timely payment of outstanding rents shall be paid by TACA. (Seery Aff. Ex. 15 at ¶ 1(c), ¶ 6.) The Letter Agreement also contains a clause "reserv[ing] the right to continue working towards a solution which would allow TACA to terminate the leases ... in a manner and pursuant to conditions acceptable to C-S Aviation Services and its lenders." (Id.)

After attempts to find a substitute lessee failed, TACA ceased operating the aircraft in October 2001, and stopped paying the monthly rent on four of the aircraft as of October 2001 and on the fifth aircraft as of November 2001. (Compl.¶ 31, Answer, ¶ 31.) TACA returned four of the five planes in January 2002, and made the fifth aircraft, which was not authorized to fly due to a structural flaw, available to the Lessors in El Salvador. (Bloch Aff. at ¶¶ 62-63.) [FN7]

FN7. The instant litigation gained transnational complexity when, on November 19, 2001, Defendants TACA and JHM Cargo filed an action relating to the issues in this case in the Civil Court for the District of Zacatecoluca in El Salvador. On June 24, 2002, this Court denied a motion by Wells Fargo to enjoin Defendants from proceeding with the El Salvador action and also denied Defendants' motion to stay Plaintiff's complaint before this Court until the Salvadoran action was resolved.

DISCUSSION

I. The Parties' Contentions

Wells Fargo alleges that Defendants breached their obligations under the Leases by failing to pay the rent due, and moves for partial summary judgment on its breach of contract claims, for presently ascertainable damages of $2,996,972.29 on the Leases and $76,211.49 in attorney's fees plus applicable interest, [FN8] as of the date of filing this action. Wells Fargo claims that the express terms of the Leases make TACA's obligation to pay unconditional, and the defenses and counterclaims raised by Defendants neither justify nonpayment nor raise genuine issues of material fact. (Pl.'s Mem. for Partial Summ. J. at 2.)

FN8. Wells Fargo also requests that the Court grant it leave to seek additional damages for the time postdating the filing of this action.

[1] TACA and JHM Cargo respond with four counterclaims, which they maintain also operate as defenses to and set-offs against their alleged obligations to pay rent. Specifically, they claim the Leases should be rescinded under theories of (1) fraudulent inducement (2) fraudulent misrepresentation (3) negligent misrepresentation and (4) violation of New York's consumer protection law, New York General Business Law § 349. [FN9] (Nagin Aff. Ex. 2 *358 ¶¶ 65-96.) Defendants allege the same claims against C-S Aviation, in their Third-Party Complaint, except that the fraudulent inducement claim is replaced by a civil RICO claim.

FN9. The Leases contain a choice of law clause specifying that issues arising under the Leases are governed by the law of New York. (Exs. 1, 2, 3, 10, 11 at ¶ 29.9.) As neither party raises any issue as to the validity or scope of this provision, and as both parties exclusively cite New York law in discussing the counterclaims, the parties have clearly consented to the application of New York law to these particular claims. See, e.g., Golden Pacific Bancorp v. FDIC, 273 F.3d 509, 514 n. 4 (2d Cir.2001).

The gravamen of the first three defenses/counterclaims is that C-S Aviation, acting as an agent for Wells Fargo, [FN10] misrepresented the historical maintenance costs for the aircraft to be significantly lower than they actually were--a matter that Defendants claim is critical to the profitability of operating the aircraft and, further, was known by C-S to be critical to Defendants' decision to enter the Leases--thus luring TACA, which relied on these representations, into the Leases. They also claim that whether or not the Leases contain hell or high water provisions is immaterial, as the Leases were modified by the Letter Agreement, which obliged Lessors to "work with Lessees and consider in good faith proposals for terminating the leases." (Defs.' Mem. Opp. Partial Summ. J. at 13.) In the alternative, Defendants argue that "the 'hell or high water' provisions and general disclaimers are rife with ambiguities" and, as such, summary judgment should not be granted. (Id. at 23-24.) [FN11] Hence, Defendants claim, not only can the Leases not be enforced against them, notwithstanding the disclaimer provision or the hell and high water clause, but they, in fact, are entitled to damages of $65,000,000 from Wells Fargo and/or C-S Aviation, because of the costs resulting from the misrepresentations made to them by C-S Aviation.

FN10. Defendants maintain that "at all times, C-S was acting on behalf of Lessors" as an "authorized agent" of Wells Fargo, since C-S Aviation set up the various trusts, designated Wells Fargo to act as owner trustee for the aircraft Leases, acted as the sole negotiator and exclusive managing company for the Leases, represented Wells Fargo in negotiations for resolving the termination of the Leases, and signed the Letter Agreement on behalf of Wells Fargo. (Defs. Mem. at 12; Seery Aff. Ex. 15 at 3; Countercl. ¶¶ 11, 60) Wells Fargo does not dispute that C-S Aviation is its agent for the Leases in question. Indeed, Wells Fargo seeks rent under the Letter Agreement, which was signed only by TACA and C-S Aviation. As Wells-Fargo considered C-S Aviation capable of modifying the Leases by the Letter Agreement and now seeks rent under that Agreement, Wells-Fargo has ratified the modified contracts and there is no reason to doubt C-S Aviation's role as an agent for Wells Fargo. A third party generally has no action against an agent in a disclosed principal situation because the contract is with the principal. Citibank v. Nyland

Ltd., 878 F.2d 620, 624 (2d Cir.1989) (citations omitted). However, a principal is liable for an agent's fraud although the agent acts solely to benefit himself if the agent acts with apparent authority. Id. (citation omitted). Thus, as the Leases in question are held by Wells Fargo and an agency relationship exists, Wells Fargo will be held to answer for any fraud or misrepresentation relating to the Leases on the part of C-S Aviation. In effect, C-S Aviation and Wells Fargo stand in each other's shoes for purposes of these claims.

FN11. Although Defendants make this claim about both the hell or high water and disclaimer clauses, they fail to present any argument that the hell or high water clause is unclear. Their only express analysis of potential ambiguities concerns whether the disclaimer clause encompasses representations concerning the maintenance costs of the aircraft. Thus the ambiguity argument will be considered only as to the disclaimer clause.

Wells Fargo and C-S Aviation move to dismiss these claims, maintaining that the Leases were specifically designed to defeat exactly these kinds of allegations, in at least two respects. First, the hell or high water clause in the Leases requires Defendants to pay rent regardless of any defenses or set-offs. Under this clause, even if Defendants were ultimately able to establish at trial that they are entitled *359 to some recovery against Wells Fargo and/or C-S Aviation, that would not defeat Defendants' obligation to pay rent pending any such adjudication. Second, the Leases specifically disclaim any and all representations, promises and warranties of the sort that Defendants now say they relied on, and thus, as a matter of law, reasonable reliance (an essential element of Defendants' fraudulent inducement, misrepresentation, and civil RICO claims) is precluded. [FN12] In addition, Wells Fargo and C-S Aviation argue that Defendants' fraud claims fail to satisfy the requirement of Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(b) that fraud be plead with particularity, and that Defendants' claim for violation of Section 349 of the New York General Business Law fails to state a claim.

FN12. Wells Fargo and C-S Aviation also argue that the Defendants fail to allege actual misrepresentations, since they do not allege that the historical maintenance costs were other than what C-S Aviation represented, or that Wells Fargo promised that Defendants would or could experience the same maintenance costs during the term of the Leases. (Pl.'s Mem. at 11; Third-Party Def.'s Mem. at 9.) Wells Fargo and C-S Aviation concede that Defendants may have alleged a misrepresentation of the "good mechanical condition" of the aircraft (Compl.¶ 13) but claim that, as to that representation, Defendants could not justifiably rely on representations of the planes' condition given the terms of the disclaimer. (Pl.'s Mem. for Motion to Dismiss at 11.)

For the reasons that follow, Wells Fargo's motion for partial summary judgment, its motion to dismiss Defendants' counterclaims, and C-S Aviation's motion to dismiss the Third-Party Complaint will be granted.

II. Motion for Partial Summary Judgment

A. Summary Judgment Standard

When adjudicating a motion for summary judgment, a court must resolve all ambiguities in favor of the nonmoving party, although "the nonmoving party may not rely on conclusory allegations or unsubstantiated speculation." Scotto v. Almenas, 143 F.3d 105, 114 (2d Cir.1998). The court "is not to weigh the evidence but is instead required to view the evidence in the light most favorable to the party opposing summary judgment, to draw all reasonable inferences in favor of that party, and to eschew credibility assessments." Weyant v. Okst, 101 F.3d 845, 854 (2d Cir.1996). Summary judgment is then appropriate if "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits ... show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(c).

To establish a genuine issue of material fact, the opposing party " 'must produce specific facts indicating' that a genuine factual issue exists." Scotto, 143 F.3d at 114 (quoting Wright v. Coughlin, 132 F.3d 133, 137 (2d Cir.1998)); see also Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 106 S.Ct. 2548, 91 L.Ed.2d 265 (1986). "If the evidence [produced by the nonmoving party] is merely colorable, or is not significantly probative, summary judgment may be granted." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 249-50, 106 S.Ct. 2505, 91 L.Ed.2d 202 (1986) (internal citations omitted). "The mere existence of a scintilla of evidence in support of the [non-movant's] position will be insufficient; there must be evidence on which the jury could reasonably find for the [non-movant]." Pocchia v. NYNEX Corp., 81 F.3d 275, 277 (2d Cir.1996) (quoting Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. at 252, 106 S.Ct. 2505).

While Rule 56 permits a party to move for summary judgment "at any time," Fed.R.Civ.P. *360 56(b), pre-discovery summary judgment is the exception rather than the rule and will be granted "only in the clearest of cases." Kleinman v. Vincent, 1991 WL 2804 *1 (S.D.N.Y. Jan.8, 1991); see Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 106 S.Ct. 2548, 91 L.Ed.2d 265 (1986) (summary judgment typically granted only after adequate time for discovery); Moore's Federal Practice, ¶ 56.15[5] at 56-308 n. 28 (1993 & Supp.1994). Under Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(f), summary judgment "may be inappropriate where the party opposing it shows ... that he cannot at the time present facts essential to justify his opposition." See Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. at 250 n. 5, 106 S.Ct. 2505. What time will be adequate may vary, however, and where it is clear that the defendant cannot defeat the motion by showing facts sufficient to require a trial for resolution, summary judgment may be granted notwithstanding the absence of discovery. See Gottlieb v. County of Orange, 84 F.3d 511, 519 (2d Cir.1996).

[2] The Court must consider several factors in determining whether to grant summary judgment in the absence of discovery: (1) whether the lack of discovery was in any way due to fault or delay on the part of the nonmovant; (2) whether the nonmovant filed a sufficient Rule 56(f) affidavit explaining: (i) what facts are sought and how they are to be obtained, (ii) how those facts are reasonably expected to create a genuine issue of material fact, (iii) what effort the affiant has made to obtain them, and (iv) why the affiant was unsuccessful in those efforts; and (3) whether the nonmovant provided any basis for its belief that further discovery would alter the outcome of the summary judgment motion. See Berger v. United States, 87 F.3d 60, 65 (2d Cir.1996); Meloff v. New York Life Ins. Co., 51 F.3d 372, 375 (2d Cir.1995).

[3][4] Here, the absence of discovery does not present an obstacle to the granting of partial summary judgment on liability. None of the above factors apply here as the relevant terms of the Leases are not in controversy. What is in dispute, rather, are the legal inferences to be drawn from undisputed terms to determine the validity, meaning and scope of the two agreements: the Leases and the Letter Agreement. In addition, given the explicit integration clause in the Leases (Seery Aff., Ex. 1-3, 10, 11 at § 29.7), no parol evidence, which could require fact discovery, should be considered in interpreting the Leases. [FN13] At any rate, Defendants have not filed a Rule 56(f) affidavit or otherwise claimed that they lack adequate information to oppose the motion, and thus have waived any claim that adjudication of Plaintiff's motion should await further discovery.

FN13. The parol evidence rule generally prohibits the introduction of extrinsic evidence to interpret an otherwise unambiguous contract. Only recently the Second Circuit has held that it is "well established that a court may not admit extrinsic evidence in order to determine the meaning of an unambiguous contract." Omni Quartz v. CVS, 287 F.3d 61, 64 (2d Cir.2002) (citing Seiden Assocs. v. ANC Holdings, 959 F.2d 425, 428 (2d Cir.1992)).

B. Hell or High Water Clause

As noted above, the Leases in question each include a provision that states:

The Lessee's obligation to pay all rent and all other amounts due hereunder and to perform all the terms hereof shall be absolute and unconditional and shall not be affected or reduced by any circumstances, including (I) any set-off, counterclaim, recoupment, defense or other right which the lessee may have against the lessor

*361 (Seery Aff., Exs. 1-3, 10, 11 at § 7.5.)
[FN14]

FN14. As also noted above, the parties apparently attached particular importance to this clause, as it among the handful of provisions in the lengthy contract printed entirely in upper-case type. See note 4 above.

New York law holds as a basic tenet the "eminently sensible proposition" that when parties set down their agreement in a clear, complete document, their writing should as a rule be enforced according to its terms. Refinemet Int'l Co. v. Eastbourne N.V., 25 F.3d 105, 108 (2d Cir.1994) (citing W.W.W. Assocs., Inc. v. Giancontieri, 77 N.Y.2d 157, 162, 565 N.Y.S.2d 440, 566 N.E.2d 639 (1990)). For the purposes of a summary judgment motion, the Court must decide whether significant contractual ambiguity exists. Echelon Int'l Corp. v. America West Airlines, 85 F.Supp.2d 313, 317 (S.D.N.Y.2000) (citing Giles v. City of New York, 41 F.Supp.2d 308, 318 (S.D.N.Y.1999)). If the language of the contract is "unambiguous and conveys a definite meaning," then the interpretation of the contract is a question of law for the court. Bourne v. Walt Disney Co., 68 F.3d 621, 629 (2d Cir.1995) (citations omitted). If the terms are not clear, the interpretation of the contract becomes a question of fact for the jury and extrinsic evidence of the parties' intent is admissible. Id. Further, a court may not draw any inference or give any construction to the terms of a written contract that may conflict with the clearly expressed language of the written agreement. See, e.g., General Elec. v. Compagnie Euralair, 945 F.Supp. 527, 529 (S.D.N.Y.1996) (citation omitted).

[5] As a general rule, leases containing hell or high water clauses are enforceable even in the face of defaults by the party seeking to enforce them. See, e.g., Window Headquarters v. MAI Basic Four, 1994 WL 673519 at * 12 (S.D.N.Y. Dec.1, 1994) (finding hell or high water clauses customary and routinely enforced in computer rental industry); Netrix

Leasing v. K.S. Telecom, 2001 WL 228362 at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Mar.7, 2001) (upholding hell or high water clause in third-party finance lease for telephone network equipment); Siemens Credit Corp. v. American Transit Ins., 2001 WL 40775 at *1-2 (S.D.N.Y. Jan.17, 2001) (upholding hell or high water clause in finance lease and directing summary judgment for plaintiff); Rhythm & Hues v. Terminal Marketing Co., 2002 WL 1343759 at *5 (S.D.N.Y. June 19, 2002) (stating hell or high water leases are generally enforceable). See also R. Contino, Legal and Financial Aspects of Equipment Leasing Transactions 29, 87-88 (1979) (finance leases containing hell or high water clauses are strictly enforced).

[6] The terms of the instant provision could not be clearer. The obligation to pay rent is "absolute and unconditional and shall not be affected or reduced by any circumstances, including ... any set-off, counterclaim, recoupment, defense or other right." The provision is supported by a specific disclaimer provision, discussed below, as well as an explicit merger clause, and there are no terms within the Leases that appear to conflict with this unambiguous obligation to pay rent. Therefore, under the clear terms of the Leases, the Court finds that the undisputed material facts establish that Defendants have not fulfilled their obligation to pay the rent due.

Defendants' failure to comply with the unambiguous terms of the contract accordingly requires partial summary judgment for Plaintiff unless the original contractual provisions have been materially modified by the Letter Agreement.

*362 C. The Letter Agreement

[7] Defendants maintain that even if the clauses in the original Leases are found to require Defendants to pay rent, these terms no longer apply, because the Leases were modified by the June 21, 2001, Letter Agreement in such a way as to preclude summary judgment for the rent due under the Leases. [FN15]

FN15. Wells Fargo concedes that the Letter

Agreement is a valid modification of the original Leases, indeed basing its own calculation of TACA's unpaid rent obligations on the June 21, 2001, modifications. (Pl.'s Mem. for Partial Summ. J. at 16).

As stated above, the Letter Agreement allows for reduced rent payments in the near-term and provides a modified partially-deferred rent-payment schedule. (Letter Agreement, Schedule 1.) The Letter Agreement also provides:

We acknowledge and understand the concerns expressed in paragraphs 4 of your letters of June 15, 2001 and June 18, 2001 concerning eventual arrangements in respect of the Aircraft and the MSN 142 Aircraft. We reserve the right to continue working towards a solution which would allow TACA to terminate the leases ... in a manner and pursuant to conditions acceptable to C-S Aviation Services and its lenders and we respectfully request that you consider in good faith any proposal made for such purposes.

(Seery Aff. Ex. 15 at 2)

TACA and JHM Cargo claim that evidence submitted by Federico Bloch, TACA's Chief Executive Officer, demonstrates "that C-S, and Lessors breached the June 21, 2001 Letter Agreement on June 28, 2001, by categorically refusing to consider in good faith any proposal from Lessee that involved terminating Lessees' status as lessee under the Aircraft Leases." (Defs.' Mem. Opp. Partial SJ at 12, citing Bloch Aff. at ¶ 32-34, 41 and 45.) As a consequence, they claim, they are relieved of their obligation to pay rent.

This argument is unavailing. The Letter Agreement is clear that "except as expressly modified ... each of the lease agreements ... remain[s] in full force and effect without modification or amendment." (Bloch Aff. Ex. V, ¶ 6.) Nothing in the Letter Agreement suggests a waiver of rights or rescission of the original Leases except as to those issues specifically covered in the Letter Agreement. Although the Letter Agreement defers certain specific rent payments that would otherwise have been due from Defendants, nothing in it remotely indicates a modification of the hell or high water provisions of the original contracts, or cancels Wells Fargo's absolute right to collect the rescheduled rent payments. The fact that Wells Fargo agreed to accommodate Defendants by deferring certain payments, subject to the payment of interest and compliance with a modified payment schedule, does not abrogate any other provision of the Leases.

Nor does Wells Fargo's agreement to consider the feasibility of substituting a new lessee for the financially-strapped TACA mean that if no suitable replacement was found, Wells Fargo has forfeited its rights under the Leases. The Letter Agreement obliges Wells Fargo only "to consider in good faith any proposal" for terminating the Leases. This language places no obligation on C-S Aviation or Wells Fargo to find an alternate lessee or accept any lessee proposed by Defendants, or indeed to do anything other than consider options presented to it by Lessees. [FN16] *363 Defendants attempt to circumvent this plain language of the Letter Agreement by arguing that Wells Fargo's denial of an obligation to assist TACA in terminating the Leases was, in itself, a breach of the Agreement. (Defs.' Mem. Opp. Partial Summ. J. at 13; Bloch Aff. at ¶ 55.) But there is simply no language in the Letter Agreement requiring the Lessor to assist the Lessees in terminating the Leases.

FN16. This clear interpretation is further supported by a June 28, 2001, email sent from Jim Walsh to Federico Bloch, which explicitly states "the basis for the June 21 agreement ... was that TACA would continue to pay currently, according to the schedule outlined in the agreement ... until the leases were terminated 'in a manner and pursuant to conditions acceptable to C-S Aviation Services and its lenders.' " (Bloch Aff. Ex.W.)

Nor is there any evidence in the current record to suggest that TACA proposed any substitute lessees, or made any proposal to terminate the leases, much less that any such proposal was not considered in good faith by Lessors. Defendants' proffered evidence tends to show that C-S Aviation represented to TACA that it was attempting to assist them in finding others to take over the Leases at issue either by sale, sublease, or direct lease (Bloch Aff. Exs. G, H, M, P) and that Wells Fargo accepted less than full payment (Seery Aff. Ex. 15 at 1). However, neither Wells Fargo's waiver of its right to full payment and agreement to accommodate Defendants by accepting less than the rent due, nor its agreement to help find a substitute lessee, entails that if those effort fail, Plaintiff has then lost the rights it would have had under the Leases. To draw such a conclusion would be inconsistent with the language of the Letter Agreement, and would attribute illogical motivations to Wells Fargo. To impose such an interpretation as a legal norm would give parties to contracts a perverse incentive not to accommodate debtors on any matter, lest they lose all that they had originally bargained for.

Accordingly, as the material terms of the Letter Agreement were not breached by Wells Fargo or C-S Aviation, and were indisputably breached by Defendants, the Leases continue to require payment of rent by Defendants. Plaintiff's motion for partial summary judgment is therefore granted.

III. Motion to Dismiss Defendants' Counterclaims and Third-Party Claims

A. Motion to Dismiss Standard

A motion to dismiss counterclaims is governed by Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The Court must liberally construe the claim, accepting as true the facts alleged, and dismiss the counterclaims only if it is "beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Lerman v. Bd. of Elections of New York, 232 F.3d 135, 140 (2d Cir.2000). The court is not, however, required to accept as true "conclusions of law or unwarranted deductions." First Nationwide Bank v. Gelt Funding Corp., 27 F.3d 763, 771 (2d Cir.1994) (citations omitted). Moreover, in deciding a motion to dismiss, a court may consult the text of documents incorporated by reference or otherwise relied on in the complaint. Int'l Audiotext Network, Inc. v. AT&T, 62 F.3d 69, 72 (2d Cir.1995); Brass v. Am. Film Techs., Inc., 987 F.2d 142, 150 (2d Cir.1993).

B. Fraud and Misrepresentation Claims

Defendants assert several closely-related fraud claims as counterclaims against Wells Fargo or as third-party claims against C-S Aviation. Though the particular elements of these various claims differ in certain respects, and Defendants' claims survive several arguments made by Wells Fargo and C-S Aviation, all of the claims alike ultimately fail for the same reason. Each of Defendants' fraud theories requires *364 reasonable reliance on the asserted representations or omissions. Defendants, having expressly disclaimed in the text of the Leases any reliance on precisely the kinds of misstatements they now claim were made to them, cannot as a matter of law establish that they reasonably relied. Accordingly, their claims for fraudulent inducement, fraudulent misrepresentation, negligent misrepresentation, and civil RICO violations must all be dismissed.

(1) Fraudulent Inducement and Fraudulent Misrepresentation

[8] To state a claim for fraud a plaintiff must demonstrate (1) representation of a material fact (2) falsity (3) scienter (4) reasonable reliance and (5) injury. Manning v. Utilities Mut. Ins. Co., Inc., 254 F.3d 387, 400 (2d Cir.2001). Thus, to plead either fraudulent misrepresentation or fraudulent inducement, Defendants must allege that they reasonably relied on false representations made by Wells Fargo or C-S Aviation. See, e.g., Fax Telecomunicaciones Inc. v. AT & T, 138 F.3d 479, 490 (2d Cir.1998) (New York law requires same elements for fraudulent misrepresentation and fraudulent inducement) (citing Turtur v. Rothschild Registry Int'l, 26 F.3d 304, 310 (2d Cir.1994) (enumerating elements of common law fraud under New York law); Village of Chatham v. Board of Fire Comm'rs, 90 A.D.2d 860, 456 N.Y.S.2d 494, 495 (3d Dep't 1982) (same for fraudulent misrepresentation); Stone v. Schulz, 231 A.D.2d 707, 647 N.Y.S.2d 822, 823 (2d Dep't 1996) (same for fraudulent inducement); Pinney v. Beckwith, 202 A.D.2d 767, 608 N.Y.S.2d 738, 739 (3d Dep't 1994) (same)).

(a) As an initial matter, the Court rejects Wells Fargo's and C-S Aviation's argument that Defendants have failed to plead fraud with sufficient specificity to satisfy Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). Under Rule 9(b), a plaintiff alleging fraud must state "the circumstances constituting fraud ... with particularity." This exception to the generally liberal standard of pleading helps to ensure that defendants receive fair notice of allegations of fraud and to protect them from the harm to reputation or goodwill that can result from such allegations. Since "[i]t is a serious matter to charge a person with fraud," a plaintiff is not permitted to do so "unless he is in a position and is willing to put himself on record as to what the alleged fraud consists of specifically." Segal v. Gordon, 467 F.2d 602, 607 (2d Cir.1972). See DiVittorio v. Equidyne Extractive Industries, 822 F.2d 1242, 1247 (2d Cir.1987). Accordingly, except as to "matters peculiarly within the opposing party's knowledge" for which the allegations of fraud must be accompanied by "a statement of the facts upon which the belief is founded"--"[allegations of fraud cannot ordinarily be based 'upon information and belief.'" Luce v. Edelstein, 802 F.2d 49, 54 & n. 1 (2d Cir.1986) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

Instead, the complaint must specify the "particulars" of the alleged fraud--including, for example, the time, place, particular individuals involved, and specific conduct at issue. Id. at 54. And while Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(b) provides that "malice, intent, knowledge, or other condition of mind ... may be averred generally," this standard for allegations concerning state of mind does not give "license to base claims of fraud on speculation and conclusory allegations." Shields v. Citytrust Bancorp, 25 F.3d 1124, 1128 (2d Cir.1994) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). The plaintiff still must allege facts giving rise to a "strong inference of fraudulent intent," which may be satisfied "either (a) by alleging facts to show that defendants had both motive and opportunity to commit fraud, or (b) by alleging facts that constitute strong circumstantial evidence *365 of conscious misbehavior or recklessness." Id. However, a generalized profit motive that could be imputed to any for-profit company, is insufficient for purposes of inferring scienter. Chill v. General Electric Co., 101 F.3d 263, 268 (2d Cir.1996).

Although the question is close, Defendants adequately allege fraud under Rule 9(b). The third-party complaint provides notice to C-S Aviation of the nature of the alleged fraud, which satisfies the core purpose of the Rule 9(b). Cosmas v. Hassett, 886 F.2d 8, 11 (2d Cir.1989). Defendants state, in their Third-Party Complaint, that a specific individual at C-S Aviation, one Andrew Toutt, Vice President of Technical Services, misled another named individual, Roberto Escalante, of JHM Cargo, when, beginning in January 1998, Toutt represented to Escalante maintenance costs for the aircraft of between $1160 and $1355 per block hour, but did not reveal that these costs were based on maintenance done in India, although Toutt knew that the costs of maintaining the aircraft elsewhere were higher; that TACA and JHM Cargo relied on these representations; and that C-S Aviation knew that maintenance costs were a significant matter to Defendants. (Third-Party Compl. at ¶¶ 9-11, 13-16, 24, 36, 39, 40, 44, 50, 53-57, 63, 94.)

(b) The argument that Defendants did not adequately plead fraud because they did not allege knowing misrepresentation of a material fact is equally unavailing. (Pl.'s Mem. for Mot. to Dismiss at 11.) In its counterclaims, TACA specifically alleges that C-S Aviation, acting as an agent for Wells Fargo, provided false or misleading information about the maintenance costs, a subject that they claim C-S Aviation both knew was crucial to their decision to lease the aircraft in order to induce TACA and JHM Cargo to sign the Leases. (Countercl.¶¶ 10, 11, 15, 16, 26, 30-34, 37-39, 50, 52, 73, 75.) TACA further claims that C-S Aviation knew that "JHM lacked expertise ... [and] would have to look to C-S for truthful, accurate, and complete information" in making their decision. (Countercl.¶ 14.)

It is not clear whether Defendants mean to allege that the historical maintenance costs reported by C-S Aviation were literally false. (Compare Defs.' Mem. Opp. Mot. to Dismiss at 6-7 with Pl.'s Mem. for Mot. to Dismiss at 11-12; Tr. at 10-15.) While Defendants do state that the "initial representations" and "continuing representations," both of which include references to the historical maintenance costs for the aircraft reported by C-S Aviation, were "false," they appear to be arguing not that the representations were literally false statements of what the maintenance costs had been, but rather that they were misleading because C-S Aviation knew or should have known that the historical costs were only relevant insofar as they could be used to project future maintenance costs. Defendants claim that the represented historical costs were low only because engine overhaul work had been performed in India, where costs are unusually low, and that C-S Aviation knew or should have known that TACA would not be able to service the planes there due to lax maintenance standards, which would not meet regulatory obligations in the Western hemisphere. (Countercl. ¶ 45-48; Compl.¶¶ 11, 44.) [FN17] These allegations suffice to *366 meet the requirement of pleading knowing misrepresentation of a material fact for the fraud claims.

FN17. Defendants' briefs could be read to suggest a claim that the representations as to maintenance were also misleading in that C-S Aviation used historical costs for maintaining the planes for passenger transportation rather than for freight operation. (Defs.' Mem. Opp. Mot. to Dismiss at 6.) Such a claim is not clearly alleged in the counterclaim or third-party complaint, and it appears that both parties to the negotiation were aware that the aircraft in fact had only been used in the past for passenger operation, and were to be converted by TACA to cargo use.

As reasonable reliance is a required element of all of Defendants' fraud and misrepresentation claims, it will be discussed below.

(2) Negligent Misrepresentation

[9] To state a claim for negligent misrepresentation under New York law, a plaintiff must establish that (1) the defendant had a duty, as a result of a special relationship, to give correct information; (2) the defendant made a false representation that he or she should have known was incorrect; (3) the information supplied in the representation was known by the defendant to be desired by the plaintiff for a serious purpose; (4) the plaintiff intended to rely and act upon it; and (5) the plaintiff reasonably relied on it to his or her detriment. Hydro Investors v. Trafalgar Power Inc., 227 F.3d 8, 20 (2d Cir.2000). The alleged misrepresentation must also be factual in nature and not promissory or relating to future events that might never come to fruition. Id. (citing Murray v. Xerox Corp., 811 F.2d 118, 123 (2d Cir.1987)).

[10] Plaintiff argues that Defendants' negligent misrepresentation claims must fail because Defendants have not adequately pleaded a special relationship between the parties to the Leases. The special relationship component of a negligent misrepresentation claim was discussed in Kimmell v. Schaefer, 89 N.Y.2d 257, 652 N.Y.S.2d 715, 675 N.E.2d 450 (N.Y.1996). In Kimmell, the Court of Appeals held that whether a special relationship exists between two parties is an issue of fact, to be governed by weighing three factors: whether the person making the representation held or appeared to hold unique or special expertise; whether a special relationship of trust or confidence existed between the parties; and whether the speaker was aware of the use to which the information would be put and supplied it for that purpose. 89 N.Y.2d at 257, 652 N.Y.S.2d 715, 675 N.E.2d 450; Suez Equity Investors, L.P. v. Toronto-Dominion Bank, 250 F.3d 87, 103 (2d Cir.2001) (citing Kimmell).

The relationship between unaffiliated business entities negotiating a commercial aircraft lease would seem an unlikely candidate for being considered such a special relationship. While C-S Aviation could be found to have special expertise in aviation matters, its counterparties here are themselves specialized aviation companies. Nor do Defendants plead that the parties had any prior dealings that would have created any relationship of particular trust and confidence between them. Nevertheless, Defendants' counterclaim can be read to allege a relationship between the parties that extended beyond the typical arm's-length business transaction. TACA claims that C-S Aviation, acting as Wells Fargo's agent, made expert representations about maintenance costs and that C-S Aviation was aware that TACA would rely on those representations. Moreover, TACA asserts that C-S Aviation had unique expertise in the intended conversion of Airbus 300 aircraft from passenger to cargo use. TACA also maintains that C-S Aviation made representations to JHM Cargo's President Roberto Escalante regarding the historical maintenance costs of the aircraft knowing that JHM Cargo would rely on C-S Aviation's asserted expertise to make their decisions *367 on Leases. (Countercl.¶¶ 10, 13, 15.) It is also alleged that Andy Toult, who became C-S Aviation's Vice President of Technical Services, as well as "other agents of C-S" misrepresented the historical maintenance costs and the good mechanical condition of the planes to JHM Cargo as well as to TACA (although those who received this information within JHM Cargo or TACA are not named). (Countercl.¶ 13.) Since the determination of whether a special relationship exists is essentially a factual inquiry, we will assume for present purposes that these somewhat sparse allegations suffice, at least at the pleading stage, to survive a motion to dismiss.

Once again, however, the reasonable reliance element, discussed below, is fatal to Defendants' claim.

(3) RICO

In their Third-Party Complaint, Defendants claim that C-S Aviation's alleged misrepresentations violated the RICO statute, 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c). In support of their civil RICO claim, Defendants allege:

Beginning at least in January 1998, C-S committed multiple acts of mail and wire fraud by using facsimile machines, email accounts and the United States Postal Service facilities to deliver documents to TACA and JHM that were false and misleading including, but not limited to: (1) comparative performance models for the A300 Aircraft and DC8 Aircraft; (2) profitability analyses for Aircraft operations that include maintenance costs provided by C-S; (3) documents containing representations of maintenance costs for the Aircraft; (4) "Fact Sheets" with vital information concerning the Aircraft including maintenance programs and conversion status reports; and (5) charts that included information on maintenance reserves. In addition, agents, employees, and representatives of C-S including, but not limited to, Andy Toutt repeatedly used telephone services in the United States to communicate the above-referenced and additional false, misleading, and fraudulent information to TACA and JHM.

(Third-Party Compl. ¶ 94.) The false and misleading statements alleged effectively hinge on the same alleged misrepresentations discussed above concerning the maintenance costs associated with the aircraft.

The RICO statute makes it "unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity," 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c), and authorizes civil suits by any person injured in his person or property by such a violation, 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c). To establish a claim for a civil violation of § 1962(c), "a plaintiff must show that he was injured by defendants' (1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity." Azzielli v. Cohen Law Offices, 21 F.3d 512, 520 (2d Cir.1994) (internal quotations omitted). "Racketeering activity" under RICO is defined to include a host of criminal offenses, which are in turn defined by federal and state law. See 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1).

[11] Where mail or wire fraud is the RICO predicate act, as Defendants here allege, a plaintiff must show justifiable reliance to establish causation. See Metromedia Co. v. Fugazy, 983 F.2d 350, 368 (2d Cir.1992). Thus, Defendants' fraud claims against C-S Aviation under RICO must meet the same standards of justifiable reliance as the various common-law claims discussed above. To that issue we now turn.

368 (4) Reasonable Reliance

[12] The critical issue for all of the above fraud, RICO and negligent misrepresentation claims is whether, in light of the explicit and broad disclaimers in the Leases between TACA and/or JHM Cargo and Wells Fargo, Defendants can plead the required element of reasonable reliance. Defendants claim that they relied on C-S Aviation's oral misrepresentation of maintenance costs in signing the Leases and that the disclaimer is insufficient as it does not explicitly disclaim representations as to maintenance costs. (Defs.' Mem. Opp. Mot. to Dismiss at 7-11.)

[13][14] It is well-established, however, that a party to a contract cannot rely on oral representations where a contract specifically disavows the incorporation of non-written representations. Danann Realty Corp. v. Harris, 5 N.Y.2d 317, 323, 184 N.Y.S.2d 599, 157 N.E.2d 597 (1959). Under New York law if "a party to a contract specifically disclaims reliance upon a representation in a contract, that party cannot ... [later] assert that it was fraudulently induced into signing the contract by the very representation it has disclaimed." Grumman Allied Indus. v. Rohr Indus., 748 F.2d 729, 734 (2d Cir.1984), citing Danann. In Citibank v. Plapinger, 66 N.Y.2d 90, 495 N.Y.S.2d 309, 485 N.E.2d 974 (1985), New York extended the Danann rule, finding that fraud in the inducement was blocked as a defense, and affirming summary judgment for the plaintiff although the disclaimer in question did not explicitly mention the contested issue, but merely stated that the guarantee at issue was "absolute and unconditional" irrespective of defenses. Id. at 94-95, 495 N.Y.S.2d 309, 485 N.E.2d 974. See also Harsco Corp. v. Segui, 91 F.3d 337, 346 (2d Cir.1996) (dismissing fraudulent inducement claim although disclaimer did not specifically disclaim statements about Russian business); Lucas v. Oxigene, Inc., 1995 WL 520752 at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Aug.31, 1995) (parol evidence excluded where plaintiff signed disclaimer containing clause which directly contradicted the alleged oral representations). [FN18] Further, New York courts have recognized that "no particular words are needed to transform a general disclaimer into a specific one, and have excluded parol evidence even when the contract did not contain an express disavowal of reliance on oral representations." Lucas, 1995 WL 520752 at *4. Finally, when applying the Danann rule, we are advised that courts should consider the text of the agreement compared to the representations claimed to be fraudulent or negligent, while also considering the arm's-length nature of the negotiation and the sophistication of the parties, in order to determine whether reliance was reasonable. Harsco, 91 F.3d at 345.

FN18. Defendants' reliance on Centronics Fin. v. El Conquistador Hotel, 573 F.2d 779, 782 (2d Cir.1978), is misplaced. Centronics holds that under New York law, a general merger clause alone will not preclude proof by extrinsic evidence of fraud in the inducement. In that case, however, there was no disclaimer of warranties such as the one in this case. Centronics itself takes note of the Danann rule, which the Second Circuit has since applied in Harsco, 91 F.3d at 345-46, holding that where a seller disclaimed representations other than those embodied in the agreement, the disclaimer put the buyer on sufficient notice that oral representations not in the agreement could not be reasonably relied upon.

[15] Applying the Danann rule, as interpreted by Plapinger, it is clear that the exact words "maintenance costs" need not appear in the disclaimer in order for representations about maintenance to have been disclaimed. Defendants are correct that an overly broad disclaimer is insufficient.

Barash v. Pennsylvania Term. Real Estate Corp., 26 N.Y.2d 77, 86, 308 N.Y.S.2d 649, 256 N.E.2d 707 (1970). It *369 does not follow, however, that where a written contract specifically identifies areas that are not the subject of representations, a party can avoid its specifically-negotiated contract obligations by claiming a representation that is a slight variant of the particular language disclaimed in the contract.

Here, the disclaimer provision is simultaneously very broad and very particular. In general terms it disavows all representations not expressly made in the contract, but it is not merely a blanket denial. Rather, it specifically lists a variety of significant promises that are explicitly not made, including representations regarding airworthiness, value, durability, compliance with specifications, condition, operation, fitness for use for a particular purpose, quality of material or workmanship, and absence from defects. Although Defendants argue that the definitions of the terms disclaimed are for a jury to decide, the Court finds that maintenance costs are logically an aspect of "condition," "durability," and "operation or fitness for use." If a plane frequently breaks down or is in poor condition, its maintenance costs will obviously go up. It is thus a logical contradiction to expressly disavow any promises about how often a plane will break down, while at the same time promising that the maintenance costs will be a fixed dollar amount each month.

This conclusion is further supported by the plethora of other provisions in the Leases, including that the clause leasing the aircraft "as is, where is," the hell or high-water clause for payment of rent, and the integration clause. See Mizuna, Ltd. v. Crossland Fed. Sav. Bank, 90 F.3d 650, 659 (2d Cir.1996) (citation omitted) (oral representations cannot be squared with merger provision which recites that the written contract is the complete expression of the parties' agreement and explicitly disavows oral agreements).

Further, if maintenance costs were as critical to Defendants as they now claim, they were free to negotiate for an express warranty as to that issue in the Leases. In fact, the Leases do include numerous warranties on the part of Wells Fargo for the benefit of Lessees, including, among others things, that they have the authority on behalf of the beneficiary to enter into the Lease, that they have good title to the aircraft, and that the Lease will not violate any provision of U.S. banking laws. (Seery Aff. Exs. 1-3, Ex. 11, Ex. 12 at ¶ 3.2.) Sophisticated business entities, when put on notice of the existence of material facts which have not been documented, assume the business risk that the facts may not be as represented because "a party will not be heard to complain that he has been defrauded when it is his own evident lack of due care which is responsible for his predicament." Lazard Freres & Co. v. Protective Life Ins., 108 F.3d 1531, 1543 (2d Cir.1997). Here, TACA claims that the maintenance costs were critical to its decision to enter the Leases; had the true facts about the maintenance costs been revealed to them, they claim, they would not have leased the aircraft. As aviation companies with extensive experience operating airplanes, Defendants were well aware of the factors that could affect maintenance costs. Nevertheless, they apparently made no effort to investigate the conditions under which the represented historical maintenance costs had been achieved, or to demand any contractual warranties or promises as to either past or future maintenance costs. By not negotiating for a warranty for the maintenance costs, while at the same time broadly disclaiming having received or relied on closely related representations, TACA assumed the business risk that future maintenance costs may not be comparable to the historical costs orally represented to it.

Finally, these agreements, like those in Plapinger, are contracts executed by *370 knowledgeable parties who negotiated at arm's length. 66 N.Y.2d at 95, 495 N.Y.S.2d 309, 485 N.E.2d 974. Although the information provided in TACA's affidavit suggests that TACA may have been relatively less sophisticated in its knowledge of aircraft leasing and maintenance and may have relied upon C-S Aviation's representations in making its decision to enter into the Leases, it is manifestly unreasonable for an airline company to avoid contractual duties by arguing that it is uninformed about the details of its own business. [FN19]

FN19. Defendants' reliance on GTE Automatic Elec. v. Martin's Inc., 127 A.D.2d 545, 512 N.Y.S.2d 107 (1st Dep't 1987), is inapposite, as the promissory notes at issue in that case did not contain a specific disclaimer or other language to bar parol evidence of fraudulent misrepresentation, and the court distinguished Danann and Plapinger on that basis. Here, given the sufficiently specific disclaimer in the Leases, the Danann-Plapinger rule applies.

Defendants maintain, however, that even if the disclaimers in the Leases preclude their fraud claims against Wells Fargo, the terms of the Leases cannot benefit C-S Aviation, which was not a signatory on the Leases. (Defs.' Mem. Opp. Mot. to Dismiss at 7-8.) This argument is unpersuasive. Defendants cannot plead that they reasonably relied on representations from C-S Aviation, Wells Fargo's agent and trust beneficiary, in entering the Leases with Wells Fargo that specifically disclaim having received or relied on precisely such representations. It is irrelevant that C-S Aviation was not a signatory to the contract in which Defendants disclaimed the reliance it now says it placed.

General Motors v. Villa Marin Chevrolet, 2000 WL 271965 at *31-32 (E.D.N.Y. Mar.7, 2000), is instructive. In General Motors, a sublessor sued a sublessee for unpaid rent. The sublessee, in turn, sued the principal of the entity that owned the leased property, alleging that the principal had induced it to enter the lease agreement through several misrepresentations, although the principal himself was not a party to the lease agreement. Relying on Harsco, 91 F.3d at 345, the court concluded that it is unreasonable, as a matter of law, for a party to claim that it was fraudulently induced to enter into a contract by a prior representation of a third party where reliance was specifically disclaimed in the agreement.

The disclaimer of reliance in the instant case is analogous to General Motors. First, Defendants here, like plaintiffs in General Motors, claim that the party it charges with fraud may not rely on the disclaimer in the Leases because it was not a signatory to the Leases. Next, the sublease in General Motors did not reserve any right to rely on representations made by the principal, just as neither the Leases nor the Letter Agreement contain language preserving any reliance on representations by C-S Aviation. Finally, the close association between Wells Fargo and C-S Aviation makes this an even stronger case than General Motors for permitting C-S Aviation to benefit from the disclaimer. Defendants seek to hold Wells Fargo responsible for C-S Aviation's actions under a principal-agent theory; they may not invoke the principal-agent relationship when it suits them and ignore it when it does not. Thus, C-S Aviation, as an agent/beneficiary of Wells Fargo, can equally invoke the terms of the disclaimer in the Leases.

As TACA and JHM Cargo's claim of reasonable reliance is contradicted by the undisputed and unambiguous terms of the contracts they signed, they are foreclosed from raising fraud and misrepresentation as a defense. Accordingly, Wells Fargo's *371 and C-S Aviation's motion to dismiss TACA and JHM Cargo's claims of fraudulent inducement, fraudulent misrepresentation, negligent misrepresentation, and civil RICO violations is granted.

C. New York General Business Law § 349

[16] Defendants' final counterclaim maintains that Wells Fargo and C-S Aviation violated New York's consumer protection law, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349(a), which prohibits "deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any business, trade or commerce or in the furnishing of any service in this state," and which does not require reasonable reliance. Stutman v. Chem. Bank, 95 N.Y.2d 24, 29, 709 N.Y.S.2d 892, 731 N.E.2d 608 (2000). Wells Fargo and C-S Aviation argue that TACA and JHM Cargo have not sufficiently alleged a deceptive practice within the meaning of this law and that the dispute at issue is a "quintessential private business dispute," which does not implicate the public interest. (Pl.'s Mem. for Mot. to Dismiss at 23.)

To establish a claim under N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349(a), a plaintiff must, at a minimum, plead and prove that the conduct at issue is consumer-oriented. Oswego Laborers' Local 214 v. Marine Midland Bank, 85 N.Y.2d 20, 25, 623 N.Y.S.2d 529, 647 N.E.2d 741 (1995). While the outer perimeter of § 349 permits claims for deceptions perpetrated by one business against another business that may affect the public, see, e.g., Assocs. Capital Servs. Corp. of New Jersey v. Fairway Private Cars, 590 F.Supp. 10, 14-15 (E.D.N.Y.1982), federal courts have held that the statute requires the sort of offense to the public interest that would trigger FTC intervention under 15 U.S.C. § 45. Genesco Entm't v. Koch, 593 F.Supp. 743, 752 (S.D.N.Y.1984). In other words, the typical violation contemplated by the statute involves an individual consumer who is misled by a seller of consumer goods, usually by way of false and misleading advertising. Id. at 751. The statute's concern with individual consumers is further evidenced by the remedies the statute provides, [FN20] the derivation of the statute, [FN21] and the case law, which demonstrates that successful plaintiffs are uniformly those that bring claims involving recurring transactions where the amount in controversy is small, id. at 752, and holds that business competitors have standing to rely on the statute only if they can prove that there has been harm to the public at large. Securitron Magnalock v. Schnabolk, 65 F.3d 256, 264 (2d Cir.1995).

FN20. Section 349(h) provides parties with the opportunity to receive the greater of actual damages or $50.

FN21. Section 349(h) is modeled primarily on the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Defendants' claims cannot meet this standard. The transaction described in the instant claims is between two businesses, for a limited number of specifically-negotiated transactions for substantial amounts of money. The alleged fraudulent statements attributed to C-S Aviation were not directed at the general public, and indeed concerned matters unique to the maintenance records of the specific aircraft involved in the Leases, and not matters on which the general public could in any way rely. Defendants have alleged only upon "information and belief" that C-S Aviation has made similar deceptive representations regarding maintenance costs to "at least one other potential lessee." (Countercl.¶ 93.) Nor do Defendants allege harm to the consuming public; they merely claim (somewhat dubiously) that C-S's conduct has a "potentially significant negative impact upon public safety" (emphasis added). (Countercl.¶ 94.) These few transactions between two businesses *372 entities, which have not affected the public at large does not suffice to state a claim under New York's consumer protection law.

Accordingly, the motion to dismiss this claim is also granted.

CONCLUSION

Wells Fargo's motion for partial summary judgment for rent due under the Leases as modified by the June 21, 2001, Letter Agreement is granted. Wells Fargo motion to dismiss Defendants' counterclaims and C-S Aviation's motion to dismiss Defendants' Third-Party Complaint are both granted in full. The Clerk of the Court is respectfully directed to enter judgment accordingly.

Supreme Court, Appellate Division, Second
Department, New York.

WIT HOLDING CORP., Respondent,
v.
Kenneth KLEIN, et al., Appellants, et al.,
Defendants.

April 9, 2001.

Investor brought suit against representative of corporation into which it had invested $500,000, corporation, and others alleging fraud, breach of fiduciary duty and other claims. The Supreme Court, Suffolk County, Gerard, J., denied motion to dismiss certain claims, and defendants appealed. The Supreme Court, Appellate Division, held that: (1) allegations that representative of corporation made false statements to induce investor to purchase stock stated fraud claim; (2) representative did not owe fiduciary duty with respect to arms-length transaction; and (3) absent some special relationship, negligent misrepresentation claim would not lie.

Affirmed as modified.

West Headnotes

[1] Fraud 32
184k32

A cause of action alleging fraud does not lie where the only fraud claim relates to a breach of contract.

[2] Fraud 12
184k12

A present intent to deceive must be alleged and a mere misrepresentation of an intention to perform under the contract is insufficient to allege fraud.

[3] Fraud 32
184k32

Misrepresentation of material fact, which is collateral to the contract and serves as an inducement for the contract, is sufficient to sustain a cause of action alleging fraud.

[4] Fraud 24

184k24

Investor stated claim sounding in fraud by alleging that representative induced it to invest in corporation by making false representations that corporation was in full compliance with regulatory requirements and that representative was principal shareholder in corporation when he fact he still owed money to third person for purchase of that shareholder interest.

[5] Fraud 7
184k7

A fiduciary relationship may exist where one party reposes confidence in another and reasonably relies on the other's superior expertise or knowledge.

[6] Fraud 7
184k7

Arms-length business relationship does not give rise to a fiduciary obligation.

[7] Fraud 7
184k7

Representative of corporation which induced investor to purchase stock interest in corporation did not owe fiduciary duty to investor, based on past business associations with investor's principals, as parties were involved in arms-length business transaction and all were sophisticated business people.

[8] Fraud 13(3)
184k13(3)

A claim alleging negligent misrepresentation must be based on some special relationship which implies a close degree of trust between the plaintiff and the defendant.

*527 In an action, inter alia, to recover damages for fraud, the defendants Kenneth Klein, Paul Wasserman, First Providence Financial *528 Group, Inc., First Providence Financial Group, LLC, and Madison Avenue Associates, LLC, appeal from so much of an order of the Supreme Court, Suffolk County (Gerard, J.), dated January 24, 2000, as denied those branches of their motion which were to dismiss the first, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh causes of action in the complaint insofar as asserted against them.

ORDERED that the order is modified, on the law, by deleting the provisions thereof denying the branches of the motion which were to dismiss the third, fourth, and fifth causes of action insofar as asserted against the appellants and substituting therefor a provision granting those branches of the motion; as so modified, the order is affirmed insofar as appealed from, without costs or disbursements.

This action arises out of an agreement by the plaintiff to purchase a stock interest in First Providence Financial Group, Inc. (hereinafter FPPG). The plaintiff allegedly paid $500,000 to FPPG and no stock was ever transferred to it. The plaintiff alleges, inter alia, that the defendant Kenneth Klein, in order to benefit himself and the defendants FPPG, Paul Wasserman, and Madison Avenue Associates, LLC, fraudulently induced it to enter into the agreement.

[1][2][3] A cause of action alleging fraud does not lie where the only fraud claim relates to a breach of contract (see, Non- 68 Linear Trading Co. v. Braddis Assocs., 243 A.D.2d 107, 675 N.Y.S.2d 5; Gordon v. De Laurentiis Corp., 141 A.D.2d 435, 529 N.Y.S.2d 777). A present intent to deceive must be alleged and a mere misrepresentation of an intention to perform under the contract is insufficient to allege fraud (see, Non-Linear Trading Co. v. Braddis Assocs., supra, at 118, 675 N.Y.S.2d 5). Conversely, a misrepresentation of material fact, which is collateral to the contract and serves as an inducement for the contract, is sufficient to sustain a cause of action alleging fraud (see, Deerfield Communications Corp. v. Chesebrough-Ponds, Inc., 68 N.Y.2d 954, 510 N.Y.S.2d 88, 502 N.E.2d 1003; First Bank of Ams. v. Motor Car Funding, 257 A.D.2d 287, 690 N.Y.S.2d 17).

[4] The plaintiff alleges that, during discussions with the plaintiff's president, Michael Weiner, and its treasurer, Kevin Held, Klein made misrepresentations of fact to induce it to enter into an agreement with FPPG. According to the plaintiff, Klein told these representatives that he was a principal shareholder in FPPG when he still owed money to a third person for the purchase of that shareholder interest. Klein also allegedly stated that FPPG was in full compliance with regulatory requirements, when in fact, it needed an infusion of cash to meet them. Accordingly, the Supreme Court properly denied *529 that branch of the motion which was to dismiss the plaintiff's cause of action sounding in fraud (see, First Bank of Ams. v. Motor Car Funding, supra; RKB Enters. v. Ernst & Young, 182 A.D.2d 971, 582 N.Y.S.2d 814).

[5][6][7] However, the Supreme Court erred in failing to dismiss the cause of action against Klein to recover damages for breach of fiduciary duty. A fiduciary relationship may exist where one party reposes confidence in another and reasonably relies on the other's superior expertise or knowledge (see, Wiener v. Lazard Freres & Co., 241 A.D.2d 114, 672 N.Y.S.2d 8; Penato v. George, 52 A.D.2d 939, 383 N.Y.S.2d 900), but an arms-length business relationship does not give rise to a fiduciary obligation (see, Wiener v. Lazard Freres & Co., supra). In support of its claim that Klein breached a fiduciary duty to it, the plaintiff alleges that Klein, Weiner, and Held had socialized together on several occasions. They were also business acquaintances, and Weiner and Klein had worked together on a joint project while they both were part owners of and working for different brokerage firms. Under these circumstances, where the parties were involved in an arms-length business transaction involving the transfer of stocks, and where all were sophisticated business people, the plaintiff's cause of action to recover damages for breach of fiduciary duty should have been dismissed (see, Wiener v. Lazard Freres Co., supra; L. Magarian & Co. v. Timberland Co., 245 A.D.2d 69, 70, 665 N.Y.S.2d 413). As there is no cause of action to recover damages for breach of fiduciary duty, the plaintiff's cause of action against Wasserman for aiding and abetting a breach of a fiduciary duty should also have been dismissed.

[8] A claim alleging negligent misrepresentation must also be based on some special relationship which implies a close degree of trust between the plaintiff and the defendant (see, Pappas v. Harrow Stores, 140 A.D.2d 501, 528 N.Y.S.2d 404). Accordingly, the Supreme Court erred in failing to dismiss this cause of action as well.

The appellants' remaining contentions are without merit.

(c) Final Judgment. Final judgments after default may be entered by the court at any time, but no judgment may be entered against an infant or incompetent person unless represented in the action by a general guardian, committee, conservator, or other representative who has appeared in it or unless the court has made an order under rule 1.210(b) providing that no representative is necessary for the infant or incompetent. If it is necessary to take an account or to determine the amount of damages or to establish the truth of any averment by evidence or to make an investigation of any other matter to enable the court to enter judgment or to effectuate it, the court may receive affidavits, make references, or conduct hearings as it deems necessary and shall accord a right of trial by jury to the parties when required by the Constitution or any statute.

Court Commentary

1984 Amendment. Subdivision (c) is amended to change the method by which the clerk handles papers filed after a default is entered. Instead of returning the papers to the party in default, the clerk will now be required to file them and merely notify the party that a default has been entered. The party can then take whatever action the party believes is appropriate.

This is to enable the court to judge the effect, if any, of the filing of any paper upon the default and the propriety of entering final judgment without notice to the party against whom the default was entered.

RULE 1.510. SUMMARY JUDGMENT

(a) For Claimant. A party seeking to recover upon a claim, counterclaim, crossclaim, or third-party claim or to obtain a declaratory judgment may move for a summary judgment in that party's favor upon all or any part thereof with or without supporting affidavits at any time after the expiration of 20 days from the commencement of the action or after service of a motion for summary judgment by the adverse party.

(b) For Defending Party. A party against whom a claim, counterclaim, crossclaim, or third-party claim is asserted or a declaratory judgment is sought may move for a summary judgment in that party's favor as to all or any part thereof at any time with or without supporting affidavits.

(c) Motion and Proceedings Thereon. The motion shall state with particularity the grounds upon which it is based and the substantial matters of law to be argued and shall be served at least 20 days before the time fixed for the hearing. The adverse party may serve opposing affidavits by mailing the affidavits at least 5 days prior to the day of the hearing, or by delivering the affidavits to the movant's attorney no later than 5:00 p.m. two business days prior to the day of hearing. The judgment sought shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. A summary judgment, interlocutory in character, may be rendered on the issue of liability alone although there is a genuine issue as to the amount of damages.

(d) Case Not Fully Adjudicated on Motion. On motion under this rule if judgment is not rendered upon the whole case or for all the relief asked and a trial or the taking of testimony and a final hearing is necessary, the court at the hearing of the motion, by examining the pleadings and the evidence before it and by interrogating counsel, shall ascertain, if practicable, what material facts exist without substantial controversy and what material facts are actually and in good faith controverted. It shall thereupon make an order specifying the facts that appear without substantial controversy, including the extent to which the amount of damages or other relief is not in controversy, and directing such further proceedings in the action as are just. On the trial or final hearing of the action the facts so specified shall be deemed established, and the trial or final hearing shall be conducted accordingly.

(e) Form of Affidavits; Further Testimony. Supporting and opposing affidavits shall be made on personal knowledge, shall set forth such facts as would be admissible in evidence, and shall show affirmatively that the affiant is competent to testify to the matters stated therein. Sworn or certified copies of all papers or parts thereof referred to in an affidavit shall be attached thereto or served therewith. The court may permit affidavits to be supplemented or opposed by depositions, answers to interrogatories, or by further affidavits.

(f) When Affidavits Are Unavailable. If it appears from the affidavits of a party opposing the motion that the party cannot for reasons stated present by affidavit facts essential to justify opposition, the court may refuse the application for judgment or may order a continuance to permit affidavits to be obtained or depositions to be taken or discovery to be had or may make such other order as is just.

(g) Affidavits Made in Bad Faith. If it appears to the satisfaction of the court at any time that any of the affidavits presented pursuant to this rule are presented in bad faith or solely for the purpose of delay, the court shall forthwith order the party employing them to pay to the other party the amount of the reasonable expenses which the filing of the affidavits caused the other party to incur, including reasonable attorneys' fees, and any offending party or attorney may be adjudged guilty of contempt.

Committee Notes

1976 Amendment. Subdivision (c) has been amended to require a movant to state with particularity the grounds and legal authority which the movant will rely upon in seeking summary judgment. This amendment will eliminate surprise and bring the summary judgment rule into conformity with the identical provision in rule 1.140(b) with respect to motions to dismiss.

1992 Amendment. The amendment to subdivision (c) will require timely service of opposing affidavits, whether by mail or by delivery, prior to the day of the hearing on a motion for summary judgment.

RULE 1.520. VIEW

Upon motion of either party the jury may be taken to view the premises or place in question or any property, matter, or thing relating to the controversy between the parties when it appears that view is necessary to a just decision; but the party making the motion shall advance a sum sufficient to defray the expenses of the jury and the officer who attends them in taking the view, which expense shall be taxed as costs if the party who advanced it prevails.

RULE 1.525. MOTIONS FOR COSTS AND ATTORNEYS' FEES

Any party seeking a judgment taxing costs, attorneys' fees, or both shall serve a motion within 30 days after filing of the judgment, including a judgment of dismissal, or the service of a notice of voluntary dismissal.

Committee Notes

2000 Adoption. This rule is intended to establish a time requirement to serve motions for costs and attorneys' fees.

Court Commentary

2000 Adoption. This rule only establishes time requirements for filing motions for costs, attorneys' fees, or both, and in no way affects or overrules the pleading requirements outlined by this Court in Stockman v. Downs, 573 So. 2d 835 (Fla. 1991).

RULE 1.530. MOTIONS FOR NEW TRIAL AND REHEARING; AMENDMENTS OF JUDGMENTS

(a) Jury and Non-Jury Actions. A new trial may be granted to all or any of the parties and on all or a part of the issues. On a motion for a rehearing of matters heard without a jury, including summary judgments, the court may open the judgment if one has been entered, take additional testimony, and enter a new judgment.

(b) Time for Motion. A motion for new trial or for rehearing shall be served not later than 10 days after the return of the verdict in a jury action or the date of filing of the judgment in a non-jury action. A timely motion may be amended to state new grounds in the discretion of the court at any time before the motion is determined.

(c) Time for Serving Affidavits. When a motion for a new trial is based on affidavits, the affidavits shall be served with the motion. The opposing party has 10 days after such service within which to serve opposing affidavits, which period may be extended for an additional period not exceeding 20 days either by the court for good cause shown or by the parties by written stipulation. The court may permit reply affidavits.

(d) On Initiative of Court. Not later than 10 days after entry of judgment or within the time of ruling on a timely motion for a rehearing or a new trial made by a party, the court of its own initiative may order a rehearing or a new trial for any reason for which it might have granted a rehearing or a new trial on motion of a party.

DIRECT EXAMINATION

BY MR. MARMER:

Q. Would you please introduce yourself to the ladies and gentlemen of the jury, tell them your full name and where you reside?

A. The full name is Blaine Francis Nye, that's Frances with an I. I reside at Menlo Park, California.

Q. What is your occupation?

A. I'm a financial economist.

Q. What does that mean?

A. That's a tough one. Financial economics is, in a word, intertemporal economics. It's a demand in pricing for money over time. Basically, it's a science of investment. How much do I invest now to optimize my life time utility kind of things.

Q. Dr. Nye, please explain to the jury what you were asked to do in this litigation.

A. I was asked to estimate the damages suffered by CPH, Coleman (Parent) Holdings when they received 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock in partial exchange for their 44 plus million shares of -- or 82 percent interest The Coleman Company.

Q. Now, before we discuss the work that you did in this litigation, let's review briefly your background starting with college. What college did you attend?

A. I attended Stanford University as an undergraduate.

Q. What was your major?

A. Majored in physics.

Q. When did you receive your undergraduate degree from Stanford?

A. 1968.

Q. After you graduated from Stanford in 1968 what did you do?

A. For the first nine years I played professional football with the Dallas Cowboys.

Q. What position?

A. Right guard.

Q. And did you play in any Superbowls?

A. Three. Only won one of them, but we played in three of them.

Q. What was your last game?

A. The last game I played in was the January Pro Bowl in Seattle.

Q. Why did you leave professional football?

A. My kids got tired of moving. I was getting a little older and I hadn't been really hurt bad, except my feelings every once in a while. So it just seemed like it was time to move on.

Q. While you were playing football with the Cowboys, were you doing anything else from a professional point of view?

A. The first two off seasons it was basically in those days it was a July-to-January job. It wasn't all year round like it is now.

The first two off seasons I went to graduate school in physics. I was in the Ph.D program at the University of Washington and planned to be a physics Professor. So that was the first two years, but by 1970 the job market for physics faculty was just about zero. So I had a wife and a couple of kids, I decided I better go back to business school.

So for the next four years I went back to Stanford Graduate School of Business and received an MBA in 1974. Then the last two off seasons I worked as a corporate banking officer for Wells Fargo Bank. And during the season in Dallas I taught in the MBA program at the University of Dallas. And that kind of piqued my interest. And I thought maybe I'd go back -- business schools were still hiring -- maybe I'd go back, get a Ph.D, and that coincided with my retirement.

Q. Where did you go for your Ph.D?

A. Back at Stanford.

Q. What is a Ph.D?

A. It's literally a doctor of philosophy. I think basically it's studying the so-called frontiers of the discipline. It's a big word, but, anyway, learning what there is to know about the discipline and making, in the form of your dissertation, a novel or original contribution to the literature in that field.

Q. Now, did you teach while you were getting your degree?

A. Yes.

Q. And can you just briefly describe for the ladies and gentlemen of the jury the teaching experiences you had other than what you described previously?

A. Well, I taught at the University of Santa Clara while I was writing my dissertation. I was doing course work. And I taught there. I taught MBA in undergraduate in the core financial course. And then later on, I taught faculty at the University of San Francisco in the late '80s. And after a couple of years of that they made me a full professor.

And I was that for a couple of years, but then finally the consulting and the teaching was too much and I resigned. And there again, I taught the core MBA financial course, advanced corporate finance and managerial economics.

Q. Now, after you left teaching, what did you do then on a -- for your professional occupation?

A. Well, it sort of coincided with it, but basically served as a consultant for a company called the Mack Group. I joined them right as I went into the teaching work with the Ph.D.

And, again, by that time I had four kids and I was too old to be an assistant professor, so I went into consulting. The teaching was parallel with these parallel tracks. So I worked for five years with a company called the Mack Group. And they had a practice area called expert testimony and economic research. And with my credentials that's kind of where I fit into. I did that until '86. And then made active Stanford Consulting Group, my own company. And I've been there ever since.

Q. Are you the owner of Stanford Consulting Group?

A. My wife owns half of it, but, yes.

Q. How many employees does Stanford Consulting have?

A. Five full-time and payroll of 18 or 20.

Q. What are the qualifications of the people that you employ?

A. Entry people are called analysts. And they have undergraduate degrees in finance, economics, computer science, something along those lines.

Then a full-time employee -- those people tend to work for a couple of years, go to college, get a masters degree and come back, but full associate has at least a masters degree.

Q. What types of topics did you consult on?

A. Well, our product mix, I guess, if you call it that, over the last 15, 20 years has been, a big chunk of it has been securities litigation work, basically expert analysis and testimony of things like materiality, causation, market efficiency and damages in securities class actions.

Another broad area is intellectual property. Basically valuations and any damages related thereto of patent infringement, copyright infringement, trademark infringement, trade secrets, that type of thing.

Another area is insurance economics. Done a lot of competitive rate work, appropriate premium rates for different lines of insurance. I've done diagnostic studies of markets, level of competition in a market, effective taxation, optimal regulation, those kind of things. Had a number of studies in that area and a number of rate cases.

Then the fourth thing would probably be a catchall, everything else, business valuation, antitrust, those kinds of things.

Q. Have you done any work on behalf of governmental agencies?

A. Yes.

Q. What have you done just briefly?

A. We worked for the IRS quite a bit, the Internal Revenue Service. And that usually -- a lot of the work hinged around the fact that American companies tend to have offshore insurance subsidiaries. And they pay them premiums to insure their risk. And the IRS sometimes wonders if the premiums are appropriate and it isn't just an offshore funnel for profit. So I've done some work there estimating appropriate premiums and risk transfer and those kinds of things.

We worked for the state, quite a bit for the state of New Jersey in their ongoing auto insurance debacle in rate hearings, things like that. Done some work for the state of California, again, rate hearings regulation. Worked for both the California and American Life and Property Casualty trade associations.

We did have one interesting assignment. We were hired by actually the Pennsylvania Medical Association, the Pennsylvania Hospital Association and the Pennsylvania Trial Bar to do a diagnostic study of the Pennsylvania medical malpractice insurance market. And those three got together, because the Senate president in Pennsylvania ordered them to before he would act on any of their requests. So that was quite odd bed fellows. Those kinds of things.

Q. How long had you worked, consulted and taught in the field of finance and financial economics?

MR. HANSEN: Object, compound question.

THE COURT: Overruled.

You can answer it.

THE WITNESS: It's been mid '70s to now, about 30 years.

BY MR. MARMER:

Q. I'd like to turn now to your work in this matter. Have you analyzed the damages suffered by CPH in this case?

A. Yes.

Q. When were you retained to begin working on your analysis?

A. I believe it was spring of 2004.

Q. And are you being compensated for your work?

A. Yes.

Q. On what basis?

A. Hourly fees and out-of-pocket expenses.

Q. Now, before agreeing to serve as an expert witness in this case, did you have any relationship with CPH, Mr. Perelman or any company related to

Mr. Perelman?

A. No, I don't believe so.

Q. And are you anticipating after you conclude your testimony in this case having any relationship with CPH, Mr. Perelman or any company affiliated with

Mr. Perelman?

A. No plans as I sit here, no.

Q. Is there compen -- is your compensation in any way whatsoever dependent upon the outcome of this case?

A. No.

Q. Dr. Nye, have you formed an opinion within a reasonable degree of certainty within your field of expertise concerning the amount of damages that CPH has suffered?

A. Yes.

Q. And what is that opinion, sir?

A. That they have been damaged in the amount of 680 million dollars.

Q. I'd like to go through your analysis and have you explain it to the jury.

And if you would, sir, please begin by telling us what the first step is that you did in calculating your damage analysis.

A. Well, CPH received 14.1 million Sunbeam shares. The first step is to estimate the value of those shares.

Q. And so you have -- I'm sorry, 14 you said you're going to have to --

Can you see this, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Yes.

BY MR. MARMER:

Q. You're going to have to come up with the value for those shares. How did you go about figuring out what the expected value of those shares would be?

A. Well, the shares that CPH received was a share in the Sunbeam/Coleman combination, that company, Sunbeam with Coleman in it. And, basically, beginning March 2nd, when the announcement of the acquisition was made, and the days thereafter announcements that any necessary funding would be in place to make sure that the acquisition occurred, the market began to price Sunbeam as the combination of Sunbeam and Coleman.

MR. HANSEN: Could we have a date as the valuation taking place? From this witness?

THE COURT: Which?

MR. HANSEN: Estimated valuation date.

THE COURT: Well, I don't think we've gotten there yet. So I would overrule it.

MR. MARMER: We haven't gotten there yet.

BY MR. MARMER:

Q. Please continue.

A. Where was I?

The market basically valued the Sunbeam/Coleman combination. And they valued them, you know, millions of investors day by day valued this stock. And so I looked at the values from March 2nd to the date of the original acquisition announcements through March 30th, the day the deal closed, used that period, took an average value over that period as an estimate of the market value that millions of investors arrived at and used that as the estimate that investors such as Coleman and Sunbeam would have arrived at in their negotiation as to the value of the company at that point in time.

Q. You mentioned that you're looking at market values, are market values subjective or objective?

A. Market values are extremely objective, that's what you get when you sell.

Q. And why is that, why is that an objective value?

A. I mean, that's actually the value. When you say what is the value, that's what you can get for it. When you go to the marketplace, there it is, very objective, they give you the quote, you sell, you get it.

Q. You mentioned, sir, that you looked at market prices. I want to show you what is already in evidence as CPH Trial Exhibit 1296 A.

MR. HANSEN: May we approach briefly, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Sure.

(A bench conference occurred as follows:)

THE COURT: Yes, sir.

MR. HANSEN: My concern, Your Honor, is he has to provide a valuation date. Otherwise, it's not competent evidence until he says what date he provided a valuation as of. We have a serious issue about that. So unless he says he's doing it as of March 2nd, as of February 27th, as of March 30th, we can't properly object.

I object to all this testimony coming until we have the predicate. If he were to say it's March 30th, that would be a new opinion. If he were to say February 27th, which he said in his deposition, that would be a date ruled out by the Court. So we need to steer this toward the particular day so we can lodge our appropriate objection.

THE COURT: As I understand it, your objection is that eventually he has to give us a date as to which the top number is computed.

MR. HANSEN: That's right, the expected value on date X. He can't say there's a bunch of market prices and that's what people expected to get. Until we have that predicate, we can't know whether his testimony is admissible. I object to him giving the testimony until he establishes the predicate. Once he establishes, I want an opportunity to approach.

MR. MARMER: The answer is: I'd like a chance to put my examination in in my order. There's no requirement that we tell it in the sequence that Mr. Hansen requests.

THE COURT: I think that's right. You can object to any question that you think is not relevant, but I think we've got to listen to the evidence. And I think what you're saying is at the end you're still going to have a motion to strike it or a motion for directed verdict.

MR. HANSEN: Also, because I have to object on a timely basis, because he's making a subjective calculation as to what people expected they would get, which is not competent Precision Reporting of South Florida, Inc. evidence under Florida law. I believe as a predicate for the admissibility of his testimony, he has to establish, under Totale any other related cases, that on March 30th or some other competent date there was an expected value set by the marketplace not by someone's subjective hope.

THE COURT: The objection based on the average is really a motion for rehearing, which I would deny. We already spoke about that issue.

(The bench conference ended.)

BY MR. MARMER:

Q. Dr. Nye, I have handed you CPH Trial Exhibit 1296 A. And if you could describe for the ladies and gentlemen of the jury what that is?

A. 1296 A is a list of Sunbeam stock prices day by day beginning January 1st, 1996 and going through February 5th, 2001.

Q. Now, when you were calculating and figuring out a value of 14.1 million shares, what date or date ranges did you use for that purpose?

A. I used -- I took an average value of March 2nd to March 30th.

Q. Do we have a graph that demonstrates that?

A. Yes.

Q. If you would please just describe for the ladies and gentlemen of the jury what it is that we're seeing?

Can you guys see this? Is it blocking this? We can move this over.

A. It's a bar graph of Sunbeam stock prices from March 2nd through March 30th, 1998.

Q. And can you explain to the ladies and gentlemen of the jury how it is that you decided to start your analysis over here on March 2nd?

A. Well, March 2nd is the first trading day, that's the day of the announcement that the market would have valued -- begun to value Sunbeam on a combined basis. In other words, it wasn't just Sunbeam anymore, it was Sunbeam with the Coleman Company included with it. Any day before that is a different company, that's Sunbeam all by itself.

So from the 2nd on it starts the price of the combination. The first couple of days it's absorbing it, you know, the market. The acquisition is not a sure thing, maybe the funding is not in place. I'm talking about March, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, in there it's becoming used to -- the acquisition is becoming fairly certain. Then from those days thereon until March 18th it trades as, you know, as the combination. And at March 19th that's an announcement, as I recall, that Sunbeam might not make its first quarter revenues.

But they would be -- the first quarter the previous year and that long term they were okay and I think there were no announced problems with earnings. Just they might not make their first quarter revenue target. That's the first chink in the armor since this thing was announced that maybe Sunbeam fully turned around with Coleman added isn't quite as any nifty as we thought. So the market takes it down about 10 percent and pretty much stays there through the close.

Q. When you say "the close," what is the March 30 date?

A. That's the date the acquisition closes as I understand.

Q. And why didn't you use a date prior to this date?

A. Oh, that's -- the market price for Sunbeam prior to that date simply isn't what Coleman got, that's the price of Sunbeam without Coleman. It's not the price of Sunbeam combined with Coleman.

Q. Now, you mentioned the price movement in this period here. What is it that the price movement is telling you about the market's reaction to this transaction?

A. Well, the whole period tells you that the market very much approves of the transaction. I believe prior to March 2nd Sunbeam was trading 40, 41, maybe 42. And then, bang, it pops up to over 50 upon the announcement. So the market very much approved of the acquisition and what Sunbeam paid for it.

Q. Now, why is it, sir, that you decided to use an average for all of these dates?

A. According to financial principles or theory, stock prices move with the market, with the market line.

In other words, as the market goes up and down, they go up and down. And then -- and the market is fairly volatile, so that can be fairly volatile. Those price changes, those are called systematic risk.

Got a frown.

Basically, that's the marker risk, the risk you can't avoid. In addition to, the market moves every day, on each and every day the stock prices fairly and each day something new comes out about the company itself. And, obviously, if it's priced fairly, then this can be good or bad, up or down. The next day, again, it's priced fairly, more news comes out and that could be up or down.

So basically these company-specific -- this company-specific addition to the information set in the market makes the stock move up or down normally a couple percent, could be as much as 10, though.

So one of the reasons I took the -- and by the way, those company-specific deviations have an expectation of zero over the long haul. They're equally up, equally down.

The reason I took the average -- is that what this question was?

Q. Yes.

A. What I did, why I took the average was I didn't want to accidentally pick a couple of days when it was up with temporary company good news or a couple of days when it was down with company bad news. I simply averaged those all, on average they're zero. You take an average, you get the core value of the company. And that value, without any new information about the company, you know, is it well-suited through the month.

Q. And is there a chart that shows how you calculated this average?

A. I believe so.

Q. Okay. And can you just describe what this chart represents?

A. That's simply a tabular of the other chart, it's day-by-day the closing price for Sunbeam.

Q. How did you go about calculating the average? What is the actual mathematical process used?

A. I added them up and divided by 21. That's how many days there are.

Q. What does that produce?

A. I believe the average value over that period is $48.26.

Q. Dr. Nye, again, what is this 48.26? What is it that you're trying to figure out when you're using the 48.26? It's the average, but what is the point of that?

A. I'm trying to find the value, the estimated value that Coleman and Sunbeam put on those shares when they negotiated the deal. The value they put on a value of the share of the combined company. And I'm using the market's actual valuation of the combined company, millions of investors day by day bidding on this stock and putting their two cents in and valuing it objectively.

And I'm using that estimate as the best estimates of what two other rational and reasonable investors would come to, and that would be Sunbeam and Coleman in valuing those shares as part of the acquisition.

Q. Dr. Nye, what do you then do? Once you've got the 14.1 million shares and the 48.26 average price of the shares, what is the next step in the calculation?

A. The next step is simply to multiply those two numbers together.

Q. And what is the approximate total there?

A. 14 -- I'm sorry, I was going to repeat.

680 million dollars.

Q. So you were about to say you just take --

A. 14.1 million shares, $48.26 a piece. That's a value of 680 million dollars. 680 plus.

Q. Now, let's go back to your damage analysis again. And tell us, you were just describing how you got to the first step. So the first step was we just came up with what, 680, right?

A. Expected value of 680 million, yes.

Q. And what's the next step in your analysis, what do you do next?

A. Well, the next step is to determine the value of what CPH actually received.

Q. And how did you go about doing that?

A. My understanding is that it will be proved here in these proceedings that CPH was never able to realize any value whatsoever from any of the shares and, therefore, what they effectively got was zero.

MR. HANSEN: Objection.

May we approach, Your Honor?

(A bench conference occurred as follows:)

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, there's been no predicate established in connection with your motion in limine ruling in terms of what Dr. Nye just said. He's assuming Your Honor said you can't use a valuation date for the value other than the closing date until there's been a factual predicate proved. Thus far there has been no such proof. So he's jumping to the conclusion of your motion in limine.

THE COURT: Is the legal objection hearsay or what?

MR. HANSEN: Incompetent expert testimony. Your Honor previously ruled that both expected and actual value have to be assessed as of the same date. Motion in limine 16, Your Honor.

THE COURT: This is whose motion in limine 16?

MR. HANSEN: Coleman.

16, Your Honor, said that unless he's purporting to do an actual value different from the date of the closing --

MR. MARMER: Just a moment.

MR. HANSEN: The point, Your Honor, is that he can't just assume and then go forward to a subsequent date.

THE COURT: Sort of jumping ahead. Isn't -- maybe I've got to go back and look at my notes. I think all he's saying is that there's going to be other evidence that what they received was zero.

MR. HANSEN: What he's going to say is he's going to go forward in time at 2001 at the time of the bankruptcy to value the shares at zero.

THE COURT: Are we going there with this witness?

MR. MARMER: Yes, but he's going to do it on an assumed basis through facts through other people. That's what experts do all the time. They take certain facts that will be proved elsewhere in the trial and they apply their skill and training. We've already done a proffer. Your Honor requested proffers from both sides. We submitted a proffer on both sides what the evidence will show on that.

THE COURT: Are you going to be offering that information into evidence?

MR. MARMER: Yes, it is already there. And some of it is going to come from Mr. Gittis, but in terms of what is already there, we already know in terms of Your Honor's orders that there was no way to do any sales prior. We have that already established. As far as I know, there is absolutely no factual dispute about the reality that we got zero dollars for our stock. This not a hotly contested issue.

MR. GORSUCH: This is a hotly contested issue as to whether they can sell it, Your Honor, and that has been fully briefed in response to the Court's orders.

THE COURT: Okay. I would overrule the objection without prejudice to your moving to strike the testimony if there isn't a factual basis laid or to move for a directed verdict.

MR. HANSEN: But, Your Honor said that he had to first establish a factual predicate. It isn't established.

THE COURT: I understand you disagree.

These are yours back, or you want me to keep them?

(The bench conference ended.)

BY MR. MARMER:

Q. Dr. Nye, we had just been talking about the CPH damages analysis and we had started with the 680 million dollar expected value. We were now at the point at looking at what CPH actually received.

Would you just again explain what it is that you did or what you assumed in order to come up with the zero?

A. Basically, my assumption was that it would be proved here that CPH was never able to receive anything of value, never realize any value from these shares. And, therefore, the value of that is zero. That's what they got. And the difference then would be the damages.

Q. So the damages, because this is a zero, the damages are basically the same?

A. Right.

Q. Now, did you look at an alternate way of calculating CPH's damages, a second way of looking at this?

A. Yes.

Q. Let's look at that. And if you would, please describe what the first step was that you used in calculating the alternate CPH damages?

A. The first step, you know, is what they expected to get, what the expected value was.

Q. And how did you do that?

A. The expected value is identical. They did indeed receive 14.1 million shares and those shares did indeed have an average value of 48.26 during the month of March. And the product of those two is what they expected to get or 680 million.

Q. So this number is the same in both of your damage?

A. Same number.

Q. What's the next step?

A. Under the next step is estimating what they received. And under this scenario I assumed -- estimate what they got. And under this scenario I assumed that Sunbeam would have been able to register the Coleman/Sunbeam shares in as timely a fashion as they registered the Coleman shares that they traded share for with the public and that registration was effective December 6th, 1999. And they actually had the shares July 6th in 2000.

Q. I'm sorry, did you say July 6th?

A. I did, didn't I? I'm sorry, January 6th, 2000. So the assumption is had the Coleman shares been registered in that timely of a way, they could have been sold uniformly over the first quarter of 2000, or at least 75 percent of them could.

Q. Why 75 percent?

A. There was a subsequent agreement in August of '98 that basically freed all the shares for sale, in other words, eliminated the lockout on 7 percent of them. But on the other hand, the remaining 25 percent were to be locked out until August of 2001, three years later.

So in this first quarter of 2000, only 75 percent would have been able to be sold.

Q. So what is approximately 75 percent of 14.1 million shares?

A. It's 10.5 to 10.6 million.

Q. And how did you go about calculating the value of the 75 percent of the 14.1 million shares which you're assuming could have been sold in the first quarter of 2000?

A. Right. I assumed they could have been sold at the average value, average share price during the first quarter, which by definition then basically just take the average share price times the number of shares.

Q. And do we have a graph showing the average share price during the first quarter of 2000?

A. Yes.

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, may we approach? Objection.

(A bench conference occurred as follows:)

THE COURT: Yes, sir.

MR. HANSEN: Again, in compliance with your order and we believe compliant with the law, if he's going to use that date, he's not allowed to project into the future. We move to strike any testimony about sales into the future, and believe that the only testimony he could offer would be testimony about what the sale was on that date.

THE COURT: What do you want to respond?

MR. MARMER: He's allowed to make professional judgments about how those stock could be sold. And that's what he's doing. He'll explain that and I think we have discussed these issues several times.

THE COURT: Overruled.

(The bench conference ended.)

BY MR. MARMER:

Q. I think the last thing I asked you was: Is there a graph that shows the stock prices in the first quarter of 2000?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you just describe for the ladies and gentlemen of the jury what it is that this chart is showing?

A. That's just a bar chart of Sunbeam stock prices during the first quarter of 2000, the year 2000.

Q. And then how did you go about calculating the average?

A. Well, I added them up and divided by the number of trading days in the quarter.

Q. Same mathematical type of calculation you described before?

A. Simple averaging procedure.

Q. And, Dr. Nye, when you use that calculation, when you do that math, what does it turn out to be?

A. Average price is $4.35.

Q. $4.35.

And then what did you do with the other 25 percent?

A. The other 25 percent still was under restriction and would be until I believe August 2001, after the bankruptcy. So there would have been no realizable value from those, so zero.

Q. Now, when you're trying to do this alternate damage calculation, how do these numbers fit together?

A. Basically it's a 680 million, the value of the 14.1 million shares that they expected to get and did get less what the value they realized, were able to realize from those shares.

Q. And what is that value, what is the -- what number do we need to use to solve for that?

A. The value would be $4.35 per share times the 10.5 to 10.6 million shares they could have sold. That number is 46 million dollars.

Q. And do the math for us, what do we come up with?

A. 680 minus 46 is 634, 634 million.

Q. Now, we've been looking at a lot of stock market data. And I wanted to ask you a question about the market, sir. Are you familiar with the term the efficient capital markets hypotheses or the efficient market hypotheses?

A. Sure.

Q. Could you describe for us what that means?

A. Well, in a nutshell, it means that market prices fully reflect all publicly available information.

Q. And how does that efficient market hypotheses concept apply, if at all, to the analysis that you've undertaken?

A. Well, basically because the market is efficient, I can be confident that the stock market estimates fully reflects all publicly available information and, therefore, is an objective, accurate price of the stock.

Q. Now, Dr. Nye, if you would, sir, I just want you to explain to the jury the differences between the two damage calculations you made. In other words, just so it's clear, what is it that you're doing the alternate damage calculation? And how is that different from what you did in the first damage calculation?

MR. HANSEN: Objection, asked and answered.

THE COURT: Overruled.

THE WITNESS: The alternative basically takes the damage under an assumption that something that didn't happen, might have happened. Basically, that they could have got the shares registered in time to sell them. I assumed they'd have to uniformly sell them over the first quarter, because, you know, a block sale at that point with a firm that dropped 50 to 31, you know, a fairly poor signal to market that maybe the captain was handing over the ship as he gets in the life boat.

Assuming they can sell them over the full quarter, at least ones they could sell and that would give them 46 million dollars and use that as an estimate.

BY MR. MARMER:

Q. That produced your alternate damage figure of what?

A. 634 million.

Q. And going back to your original damage figure, what is again the difference here from what you've just described, how does that compare to what you just --

A. This damage is the full 680 million and it basically is what happened. In March they basically had some shares that were worth 680 million dollars and they never realized a dime from them. So they basically suffered damages of 680 million dollars.

MR. MARMER: May I have a moment, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Uh-huh.

MR. MARMER: Thank you very much, Mr. Nye, no further questions.

THE COURT: Mr. Hansen, do you have questions?

MR. HANSEN: Might we take a break, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Sure, if you need to get set.

We will see you in 10 minutes. We won't talk to you, don't talk about the case. You want to bring in a snack, soda, coffee or tea, feel free.

(Jury exits courtroom.)

THE COURT: Did you want Dr. Nye to step out or not?

MR. HANSEN: Probably, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Thank you, sir.

(Witness leaves courtroom.)

MR. SCAROLA: May we begin with some time estimate regarding cross examination so that we can begin to schedule our next witness? If it's possible, now that direct has been heard, to give us any kind of estimate?

THE COURT: I thought the next witness was either Fogg depo or Mr. Gittis, I thought that's all we have left.

MR. SCAROLA: Correct.

MR. HANSEN: An hour or two, Your Honor, is my best estimate now. But I'd like to make a timely motion to strike Dr. Nye's testimony.

THE COURT: What did you want to say in support of it, sir?

MR. GORSUCH: Your Honor, I'd like to renew our motions in limine 16 and 17 as well as our renewed motion to exclude. I'll summarize it briefly orally. Happy to submit an additional writing if the Court thinks one will be helpful.

Legal deficiencies with the expected value analysis did not use, Totale, March 30th as required by law, did not use the date of the deal at all. Admitted that on the stand. Said he was using an average. And he says, frankly, in his deposition as well he wasn't trying to estimate the value of the loss as of March 30th. Admits that. And offers no authority for using his average. No authority whatsoever, Your Honor.

So it's based on a misconception of law. It's based on an attempt to get at a subjective value, Your Honor. Capturing all of those average dates, what did they figure they'd get? That's his testimony. Can't use subjective value, Your Honor, that's misconception and should be stricken.

And, Your Honor, as to, you know, he explained the March 19th drop as a reason why he used the average. And, in fact, in his deposition he explains that was a partial revelation of the fraud. But, Your Honor, they still closed the deal on March 30th, they chose to close the deal.

He testified about market efficiency, how it captures all publicly available information, March 30th reflected all publicly available information on the date of the closing.

THE COURT: Including a little bit of the fraud.

MR. GORSUCH: Your Honor, they chose to go forward with the deal after the little bit of the fraud was disclosed. They affirmed the deal, they didn't back out of it.

THE COURT: Are you saying that that somehow gives them a right for damages based on a little bit of fraud?

MR. GORSUCH: Your Honor, they could have backed out of the deal.

THE COURT: That's what you're saying: If you get a little bit of the fraud and you choose to stand on your contract, somehow you've waived your right to damages based on a little bit of the fraud?

MR. GORSUCH: Your Honor, it's not waived anything, it's the expected value of the deal and the expected deal as required by Totale is 494.

You can look back and figure subjectively what these people originally thought they were going to get. That's the problem, once you say you can't count March 19th, can't hold that against them, you're in the line of subjective intentions about what they originally thought they were going to get, not the deal they accepted on March 30th.

THE COURT: You think if they choose to stand on your contract, they cannot recover damages because of the little bit of fraud that was revealed in that March 19th press release.

MR. GORSUCH: Your Honor, that is the law.

THE COURT: That's what you're arguing.

MR. GORSUCH: That is our position, they could have backed out of it. Totale couldn't be clearer. You have to use the date of the deal. Every securities case this gentleman has testified in he used the date of the deal. We reviewed his reports. This is a novel approach and it's done, as he admits in his deposition, over and over. I can cite you half a dozen quotes where he says the reason why he did this, the reason why he averaged is he wanted to get at what the Plaintiffs subjectively thought they were going to get when they signed the deal. They expected the run up. And that's what he was trying to capture and uses the average because after March 19th he didn't think it reflected what they subjectively thought they were going to get. And I'd be happy to hand up quotes from his deposition.

THE COURT: What else did you want to argue?

MR. GORSUCH: Your Honor, I'd like to argue as well if subjective intention on expectation values were relevant, he ignored reams of record evidence to the contrary, that it wasn't 48.26 a share. We've talked in this courtroom about them being happy with $30 a share. There's evidence as well that he ignored the 10-Q that was filed reflecting that the expected value was 524 for the deal.

On the actual value analysis, Your Honor, he again failed to use the date of the deal as required by Totale, instead he wants to hold us responsible for consequential losses, Your Honor, that is the whole market ride down, not the losses that we proximally caused by a result of the fraud. He didn't do the events study we talked about.

Your Honor, it's true in out-of-pocket cases you can get consequential losses, benefit of the bargain, which Plaintiff has elected under the restatement, you cannot get consequential losses you can only get proximal losses, attributable to the fraud itself. And that is in section 549. It's in Totale and even in the one case they cite, they cite Silverberg, it's in the gentleman's report, that's the case they purported to rely. It does allow consequential losses of the sort here, the whole market ride down. But guess what, that's an out-of-pocket case and it specifically says in footnote 12, benefit of the bargain is measured on the date of the deal and only the date of the deal and you don't get consequential losses.

If any further confirmation were necessary, the Court last week in Dura Pharmaceuticals ruled on this.

Finally, he violated your motion in limine 16. There is no competent evidence in the record at this stage that they couldn't have sold before either December 6th or January 2001, there's no evidence at all. None.

And Your Honor, we don't believe there's going to be any competent evidence as a matter of law under section 41 -- not 144 -- 41 of the Securities Act the private sale to a competent institutional investor was possible here. And there's no dispute about that that we think that's credible as a matter of law and no fact otherwise.

Finally, they impermissibly ignored record evidence again. He ignored the fact that Plaintiff still valued its shares at 450 million dollars. He said in his deposition he was going to ignore that evidence.

THE COURT: I don't know that that point is well taken.

Any other?

MR. GORSUCH: That's it.

MR. MARMER: These are all topics we have addressed many times with the Court.

The Court has already heard this Totale argument many, many times. We've had motions to reconsider that have been denied. This is at least the third time we're now arguing the same point. We stand on our prior arguments.

Your Honor specifically directed the parties to do proffers on these subjects. We did a supplemental disclosure on that. There was no challenge to our supplemental disclosure as inadequate. I submit they waived, but it was a well-taken proffer.

MR. GORSUCH: Your Honor, Mr. Marmer misrepresents the record. The record is very clear we submitted a proffer explaining why their analysis was flawed under section 41 of the Securities Act.

Your Honor, you've now had an opportunity to see just how fragile and really unlawful this testimony is. It's novel. It's never been tested, this methodology. It's never been used in Florida. There's no record cite of any case in Florida adopting this kind of methodology in benefit of the bargain analysis. They wanted to come in and elect out-of-pocket and seek consequential losses. In that kind of scenario they could have done that. We argued for that. They chose not to and they have absolutely no authority in law that they've ever cited to this Court that you can sustain this testimony. It's reversible error, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay, I would deny the motion to strike.

Do we want to take a couple of minutes and we'll be back?

(A recess was taken.)

THE COURT: Are we ready for the jurors? Who is doing the cross examination?

MR. HANSEN: I am, Your Honor.

THE COURT: That's fine. You want to get the jurors.

You don't have any papers on the podium, do you, Mr. Marmer?

MR. MARMER: No.

(Jury enters courtroom.)

THE COURT: Thank you.

Mr. Hansen, do you have some questions?

MR. HANSEN: Yes, Your Honor.

CROSS EXAMINATION

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Morning, Dr. Nye.

A. Morning, sir.

Q. My name is Mark Hansen. I represent Morgan Stanley. And I'd like to ask you some questions, sir.

Dr. Nye, as you've measured damages in this case you start with an expected value of Sunbeam shares, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And then you subtract an actual value to reach a net figure of damages, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. So if we could just, keeping track of this, call this in our expected column, you said expected value of the Sunbeam shares was 680 million dollars. And the actual value years later was zero dollars, correct?

A. Just actually what I said was that the realizable value to Coleman was zero.

Q. Did you make a calculation of what the actual value of the 14.1 million Sunbeam shares was at any point in time?

A. No.

Q. That's a no?

A. That's what I said.

Q. So you never made any effort to determine what the actual value of the shares CPH, the Plaintiff in this case, received in the transaction, correct?

A. The actual value they received when they received them was 680 million dollars.

Q. That was the actual value?

A. The actual market expected, yes.

Q. But you said that was the expected value based on all information being factored into the stock price of over some period?

A. They expected to get 14.1 million shares in Sunbeam/Coleman and the value of each of those shares as explained by the market through the month of March the average value is 48.26 cents.

Q. What was the actual value of those shares if there weren't a fraud going on at Sunbeam?

A. I'm sorry. The actual value when? They're priced daily, on any given day it's the market price times the number of shares.

Q. You believe that stock markets are efficient, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And that means that on any given day the market, the stock market incorporates all publicly available information in setting the price for the stock, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. And it does that virtually instantaneously?

A. Receives the information, it's incorporated in the price, the latest research shows virtually instantaneously, correct.

Q. In other words, today, this morning company A were to issue an announcement about something having to do with its prospects, almost instantaneously the stock market would factor that into the pricing of company A?

A. That's right.

Q. In fact, you even call yourself something of a market officianado, is that a term you used?

A. Let's not get crazy. That's certainly the pillar of financial theory that has withstood the tests of 30 or 40 years.

Q. You believe that Sunbeam, the Sunbeam common stock traded in an efficient market, correct?

A. I do indeed.

Q. And that means that on any given day the stock market priced the Sunbeam stock based on all the available public information?

A. Correct.

Q. So that, for example, if we go to March 30 of the year 1998. On March 30 --

JUROR #8: Would you move that podium, please?

THE COURT: I'm sorry.

MR. HANSEN: Can everybody see okay?

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. On March 30, Dr. Nye, that was the date of the closing of the Sunbeam/Coleman transaction, correct?

A. Sure.

Q. And all of the publicly available information about that transaction had been incorporated into the price of the Sunbeam stock, correct?

A. On that day all publicly available information about Sunbeam/Coleman was in that price, that's correct.

Q. And on that day the market said that the value of Sunbeam stock was $43.94, correct?

A. That's something like that, yes.

Q. Would you like to look at your snapshot before? Look at 85, please?

THE COURT: Can you come up one second?

(A bench conference occurred as follows:)

THE COURT: I was just handed this by the bailiff. And I don't know why he waited until after the break.

Do you want to do anything now? Do you want to address it at the break. You all tell me.

I just didn't want to have it and not brought to your attention, because I don't know if they'll be here later.

MR. HANSEN: That's appropriate, Your Honor.

MR. MARMER: I am wondering whether we ought to -- let me just have a minute.

THE COURT: Any objection to him walking it back?

MR. HANSEN: I prefer not to take a lot of time with cross examination.

THE COURT: If we're going to have to break,

I'd rather do it now than when you really get going, that's all.

MR. HANSEN: That's fine.

MR. MARMER: As long as there's no waiver, we're prepared to go now.

THE COURT: And come back and address it at the next break?

(The bench conference ended.)

THE COURT: I apologize for the interruption.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Mr. Nye, on March 30th, if we go to the snapshot 85, please, just so we're clear, this is your demonstrative?

A. That's correct.

Q. And the market priced Sunbeam stock at 34.94 a share?

A. That's the one price I can't see, but I can see it here and see it there. And I agree with you.

Q. You can see that screen.

A. It's all over the place, yes.

Q. So that was the price reflecting all publicly available information on March 30, the day the transaction closed?

A. That's correct.

Q. And on March 2nd, that was the day the transaction was announced, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. On March 2nd the market priced Sunbeam stock reflecting all available public information at $45.63, correct?

A. It reflected all publicly available information on that date.

Q. And that included the announcement that there was going to be this merger, correct?

A. It included the announcements that there was going to be a merger, but probably not 100 percent probability there would be a merger.

Q. And you've said that the market instantaneously absorbs all information and puts it in the stock price, correct?

A. But it can only absorb it as fast as it gets it. If the probability of the merger closing wasn't 100 percent, it wouldn't reflect 100 percent of the combination. It would reflect some probabilistic combination of the merger and that's why it went up that way.

Q. The announcement on March 2nd said that the parties had signed an agreement of merger, correct?

A. I think it said that, correct.

Q. So they signed a contract, correct?

A. I don't know about signing a contract. They said they announced they intended a merger. And my answer is just what I told you. The market wasn't convinced completely, necessarily, that the merger would go through. So there's some probabilistic mix of the two on the first day?

Let me ask you as a matter of fact, Dr. Nye, in forming your opinion, did you know one way or the another whether Coleman and Sunbeam had signed a merger agreement before March 2nd?

A. I think in those terms signing a merger agreement I'm sure they did, yeah.

Q. So you knew about --

THE COURT: Can you all come up one more second?

THE COURT: Go ahead and takes your seats. Thank you again for being so incredibly patient with us, and I hope you had a wonderful lunch. Are we missing somebody?

JUROR #6: Byron. We forgot Byron.

JUROR #9: Oops.

JUROR #3: He got left out.

THE COURT: That's okay. You're just keeping us on our toes, and we appreciate it.

(Juror #5 entered the courtroom.)

THE COURT: Okay. We are ready to continue. Dr. Nye, you're still under oath.

Mr. Hansen.

MR. HANSEN: May I proceed, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. HANSEN: Thank you.

RESUMED CROSS-EXAMINATION

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Dr. Nye, good afternoon?

A. Good afternoon.

Q. Before the break you were asked some questions about your expected value analysis. Do you recall that?

A. Yes, I do.

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, if I might approach...

THE COURT: Yes, sir.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. I'm going to put before you, Dr. Nye, a copy of a document.

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, we offer 196.

THE COURT: Any objection?

MR. MARMER: One moment, please.

THE COURT: Sure.

MR. MARMER: No objection.

THE COURT: MS 196 will be in evidence.

(Defendant's Exhibit No. 196 in evidence.)

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Dr. Nye, MS 196 is the public announcement of the merger, correct?

A. Appears to be, yes.

Q. It says definitive agreement has been reached March 2nd, correct?

A. Would you point that out to me?

Q. Would you look at the first paragraph, please?

A. Yes, have entered into definitive agreements with Sunbeam Corporation for 100 percent acquisition, yes.

Q. Is that a document you reviewed in the course of your work, Dr. Nye?

A. I probably did, yeah.

Q. So you were aware when you wrote your report that as of the 2nd of March the parties announced to the market that they had a definitive agreement to merge, correct?

A. That's true.

Q. Now, Dr. Nye, going back to some dates here, and see if I can understand your theory a little better, on March 27 of 1998, Sunbeam and Coleman signed their merger agreement, correct?

THE COURT: I'm sorry.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. I'm sorry. February 27, 1998 Coleman and Sunbeam signed their merger agreement, correct?

A. If that's what it says here. That sounds about right.

Q. Were you aware of what -- the date here?

A. Well, I'll take your word for it, yeah.

Q. Well, do you know?

A. My understanding is it was somewhere around there, yeah.

Q. But you didn't know at your deposition, did you?

A. Pardon me?

Q. You did not know the date of the merger agreement at your deposition, did you?

A. If I didn't, I didn't.

Q. On the 27th of February, the market priced Sunbeam shares at $41.75 a share, correct?

A. That's -- I think that is correct, yes.

Q. That's with all the information publicly known about Sunbeam, correct?

A. That would be a re -- reflect fully information about Sunbeam, yes.

Q. I've given you a calculator if you want to check my math. But if you took 14.1 million shares times the 41.75, $41.75 price, that would get you about $588 million in value, market value?

A. I'll just check you the first time and I'll take your word for it later.

Q. Please be my guest.

A. 588.67, yes.

Q. Now on the 2nd of March, the day that the transaction was announced, the market priced Sunbeam shares at $45.46, correct?

A. I got 63, 45.63.

Q. You got 45.63?

A. I think you did earlier, too.

Q. Let's use your number, 45.63. That's reflecting all information in the public on March 2nd, the day of the announcement of the merger, the market value of Sunbeam shares at $45.63?

A. The market value, I think you just quoted $45.63, yes.

Q. For March 2nd?

A. For March 2nd.

Q. Taking 14.1 million shares times that market value gives you about $643 million?

A. 643.88, yep.

Q. So the market on the day of the announcement valued Sunbeam reflecting all information or valued those 14.1 million shares at about $643 million, right?

A. I thought I just answered that, yes.

Q. Let's move to the 30th. That was the date on which the transaction closed, correct?

A. Yes, indeed.

Q. That's when the shares traded hands?

A. It's my understanding.

Q. Mr. Perelman got his 14.1 Sunbeam shares?

A. Again, you said the shares -- yes, right.

Q. Do you know whether there was a -- the transaction closed to the extent of people trading consideration on the 30th?

A. You put it three different ways, and I agree with each one of them. I'll agree with the third one, yes. The shares exchanged shares, however you want to say it.

Q. The plaintiff received money?

A. Money or the 14.1 million shares.

Q. And Sunbeam got 44 million plus Coleman shares?

A. Correct.

Q. That all happened on the 30th of March?

A. I believe so, yes.

Q. On the 30th of March the market reflecting all available information valued Sunbeam shares at $43.94, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. And that means that the market valued the 14.1 million Sunbeam shares that were traded that day at approximately $619 million?

A. That's correct.

Q. Now you in your testimony have said that you've used a price different from any of the prices on the date of the merger agreement, the merger agreement announcement, and the closing date, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. You've used a price much higher than any of those three days, right?

A. Yes, it's higher than.

Q. $48.26, right?

A. Right.

Q. When you take that times 14.1, that gets you to $680, correct?

A. That's what that equals.

Q. That's for your calculation of the expected value of the shares, right?

A. Exactly.

Q. And that's because you didn't do your calculation based on the market pricing of the Sunbeam shares on any particular date, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. You instead went through a calculation to try and figure out what CPH expected to get, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And in figuring out what CPH expected to get, you used an average of prices over the March 2nd and March 30th period, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. You did not use any single date as the date on which the expected value was assessed, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. And that was because you were trying to figure out what subjectively the people at Coleman figured they'd get out of the deal, correct?

MR. MARMER: Objection.

THE COURT: What's the legal objection?

MR. MARMER: Assumes facts contrary to the record.

THE COURT: Overruled.

THE WITNESS: The question?

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Sorry, Dr. Nye?

A. I asked you what the question was again.

Q. Of course.

MR. HANSEN: Could we have it re-read, please?

(The record was read as requested.)

THE WITNESS: I was trying to provide an estimate of what do investors of Coleman and Sunbeam, what they would value a share of stock in the Sunbeam Coleman combination is what I did.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. You were trying to estimate what Coleman anticipated its shares would be worth when they signed the deal, correct?

A. Sure.

Q. And now you know that the parties signed the deal on February 27th of 1998, correct?

A. I know that, yes.

Q. So you were trying to estimate what Coleman was expecting in the future its shares were going to be worth; isn't that right?

A. Well, when they merged the company and they got together, its future from February 27th, yes.

Q. So your model or the damages model you're working from works from February 27th to ask the question what were the people at Coleman expecting the shares were going to be worth at some future point rather than what was the market value of the shares at this particular point, correct?

A. Well, the market value of the shares at that point is not what Coleman was going to get. That's a share value of Sunbeam.

Q. So you were projecting forward from the 27th saying, what did the people at Coleman think they're going to get for their share price at some future date, right?

A. Well, I hope you don't mean projecting forward in the prices. I'm simply saying on that date Coleman and Sunbeam both put a value on those shares as part of the transaction. And what would that value be, it would be the value of a share price of Sunbeam/Coleman stock, and the market valued that, that exact combination each and every day beginning 3-2 to 3-30 so I used those estimates so see what they expected to get.

Q. So you're telling us on the 27th Coleman expected the shares that were then trading at $41.75 to be worth $48.26, correct?

A. No, I'm saying that the shares that were valued at 41.75 aren't the ones they were getting.

Q. But there was no public market on the 27th that valued the Sunbeam shares at any price other than $41.75, correct?

A. Are you trying to say Sunbeam was the only thing traded that day and Sunbeam was what valued? We agree completely. That's my point.

Q. But you're trying to tell us that -- let me withdraw the question. You're telling us that the Coleman people in their own minds believed on the 27th that the shares they were getting in Sunbeam were worth $48.26 as opposed to the market price that day of $41.75, correct?

A. Which, again, that isn't the market price of a share they were getting. That is the market price of Sunbeam. They were getting a share of Sunbeam/Coleman combination. And millions of investors in the marketplace came to exactly on average that $48.26. So I've assumed that Coleman and Sunbeam as reasonable investors, would, that would be the best estimate of what they would have arrived at, yeah.

Q. There was no Sunbeam Coleman combination for a period of years after the 27th, correct, because the merger wasn't completed until then?

A. For a period of years?

Q. Do you know sitting here today when the Sunbeam Coleman merger formally was concluded?

A. Is this -- Sunbeam/Coleman they acquired on 3-30.

Q. No, that was when the shares were traded over, right? That's when Coleman got Sunbeam shares and Sunbeam got Coleman shares, right?

A. Okay.

Q. When did the companies merge their operations, do you know?

A. Oh, in terms of their operation, no, I don't know, how effectively they did it or when they did it.

Q. So you don't know, right?.

A. I just said that.

Q. On the 27th, your model of damages is based on your estimate of what the Coleman people thought the shares were going to be worth at a future time with a different kind of company, correct?

MR. MARMER: Objection. Asked and answered.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. On the 27th there hadn't even been an announcement yet about the merger, right?

A. That's why I don't use that price, right.

Q. On the 27th, the market price is about more than $6 difference from your estimated price, right?

A. There is about a six and a half dollar difference between those two, yes.

Q. And your testimony is based on the subjective perception of Coleman people as to the value of what they thought they were going to get, right?

MR. MARMER: Objection; argumentative.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Who at Coleman's expectations were you trying to gauge, Dr. Nye?

A. I suspect it's Mr. Perelman or whoever is in charge of, you know, handling the transaction. He is -- the owners of those Coleman shares, I guess, is CPH, you know, were giving up those shares, and they were going to get value in exchange, and, of course, they tried to do a good job of it.

Q. On the 27th, did you know whether Mr. Perelman had a position of any official sort at Coleman?

A. Like CFO or something?

Q. Like any position.

A. Well, CFO or something is any position, right?

Q. Um-hum.

A. I'm not aware of what position he had at CPH if that's what you're asking.

Q. But it's your view that the expectation you were trying to measure in your damages model was Mr. Ronald O. Perelman's, correct?

MR. MARMER: Objection; argumentative.

THE COURT: Overruled.

THE WITNESS: If indeed he's the decision maker, yes.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Did you know who the decision maker was?

A. Ultimately I believe he owns CPH, so, you know, ultimately he would be the -- he or his staff or whoever he had analyze the problem.

Q. Well, what I'm interested in, sir, is what was your understanding of who the decision maker was whose expectations were being measured?

A. I didn't personalize it.

Q. You didn't attempt to find out whether there was a decision maker and assess what that person's expectations were?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. Did you ever speak to Mr. Perelman about his expectations?

A. No.

Q. Did you speak to anybody at CPH about what they expected at February 27 the market price of the Sunbeam shares would be in the transaction?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever ask to see any documents?

MR. MARMER: May we approach?

THE COURT: Sure.

SIDE BAR CONFERENCE:

THE COURT: Yes, sir.

MR. MARMER: Your Honor, my objection is now we've very clearly established several times that he is not trying to estimate what a subjective valuation was. So he has said several times now what a reasonable estimate of what a reasonable investor would be. We're now trying to sort of proffer cross-examination, trying to find out what is or is not, subjective versus objective test. It is not proper trying to note what this witness -- It is legally improper to try and develop what this expert did by using what is not available under law, and that is a subjective measure. That's where we're headed now.

MR. HANSEN: This is cross-examination, Your Honor. This witness has now testified clearly, clearly what Your Honor was waiting to hear, which is how he measured it the 27th. It was the expectation of what Coleman would get. He identified the person as Mr. Perelman. I believe he established the full predicate for exclusion of his testimony. At the very least we should be allowed to explore the limits of his own opinion where he has given it.

He has not attempted to do anything objective. He said, contrary to Florida law he said he looked at the date of the merger deal, the 27th, not at the market price that day but what it might be at some point in the future on a different set of circumstances. An expectation. He then identified the expectation as personalized to Mr. Perelman.

THE COURT: I just didn't want them to hear. I think we can argue at a later time sort of the legal effect of what he's testified to. But I think it's fair to the extent that one of the defendant's positions is he used an improper first number, I think it's fair for him to give us more information so we know if he did or not.

MR. MARMER: Okay.

END OF SIDE BAR CONFERENCE:

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. I was asking about documents, Dr. Nye. Coleman (Parent) Holdings lawyers provided you with the documents that you reviewed as part of your work in this case, correct?

A. They provided me with the documents, yes.

Q. You didn't even read all of the documents they provided you with, correct?

A. I certainly didn't personally, no.

Q. And you didn't see anything in the documents they provided you with that said on the 27th of February Coleman expected the Sunbeam shares to be worth $680 million, correct?

A. I don't believe I did, no.

Q. Did you see as part of your work any other documents from Coleman or Coleman's parent or related companies where they did attempt to value the expected value of the Sunbeam shares around the time of the deal?

A. Not that I recall, no.

MR. HANSEN: May I approach, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Um-hum.

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, I'm handing up 998 and 1000 for identification. I'm going to give a copy to Mr. Nye and wait a moment.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Dr. Nye, my question to you is --

MR. MARMER: Hold on one second.

THE COURT: Hold on one second.

MR. MARMER: May we approach, please?

THE COURT: Um-hum.

SIDE BAR CONFERENCE:

MR. MARMER: We object to any use of Exhibits 9698 and 1000 on multiple grounds. With regard to 998, our notes indicate it was first disclosed on April 12th. The same is true of Exhibit 1000. In addition, we have a series of other objections that we have.

MR. BRODY: It's unfairly prejudicial. As far as I know, it's an Andersen document. It's not been authenticated. And it's not a document that is admissible under any ground. They've tried to offer it with other witnesses. No foundation has been laid.

THE COURT: This is the post transaction?

MR. HANSEN: Post transaction, internal documents both from Andersen and sent to Coleman and from Coleman internally, from CPH files.

THE COURT: Just make sure you keep your voice down.

MR. HANSEN: The lawyers selected what they showed this expert. I think it's fair regardless whether these documents come into evidence, but I think they should come into evidence because we can make a very good showing they're business records.

THE COURT: Right now are you asking him if he considered these? Are you offering them into evidence?

MR. HANSEN: I will ultimately. I'm asking him if he was showed these documents.

THE COURT: Are you going to offer them into evidence with this witness?

MR. HANSEN: No.

THE COURT: We agree he won't be asked questions that elicit the contents of the document in front of the jury?

MR. HANSEN: Right, but I reserve the right to offer them subsequently. He showed a valuation of 523 or 524 million at the time of the transaction, 160 million off.

THE COURT: We're not putting any of that in front of the jury. You're going to identify them by number so later you can match them up?

MR. HANSEN: Right.

THE COURT: That's fine.

END OF SIDE BAR CONFERENCE.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Dr. Nye, have you had a chance to look at 998 and 1000 for identification?

A. I've glanced through them.

Q. Were either of those two documents ever shown to you by counsel for Coleman (Parent) Holdings in the course of your work in this case?

A. I assume you mean by Coleman (Parent) Holdings through their counsel.

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Nobody at Coleman (Parent) Holdings handed me these documents. But, yeah, I've seen this one.

THE COURT: Can you tell us by which number?

THE WITNESS: I sure will. It says MS 1000 on it.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. You have seen that document?

A. I believe I have, yeah.

Q. Have you relied on it in forming your opinion?

A. No.

Q. Did you disregard this document that you were shown?

A. It says calculation of --

MR. MARMER: Excuse me.

THE COURT: We're not going to have you disclose the document, sir. It's yes or no questions.

THE WITNESS: I'm sorry. Yes.

THE COURT: You want to repose the question?

MR. HANSEN: Yes.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Did you consider that document in forming your opinion? Did you think about it?

A. I think I said no already to that.

Q. Did you read it before giving your opinion?

A. I had looked at it before I gave my opinion here, yeah.

Q. And you disregarded the document completely?

A. Basically, yeah.

Q. And why did you disregard the document completely?

A. There's really nothing here to consider.

MR. MARMER: Objection.

THE COURT: I'm sorry. What's the legal objection?

MR. MARMER: The question calls for an answer that would impart contents of the document.

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, we offer the document.

THE COURT: Sustained. And for the same reasons we discussed previously, I would not admit it into evidence at this juncture.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Dr. Nye, you've just looked at this document from your own client's files and simply decided not to even think about it?

MR. MARMER: Objection; asked and answered.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Why didn't you consider the document shown to you from your client's files?

A. I did consider it. I told you I looked at it.

Q. So you did consider this document in forming your opinion?

MR. MARMER: Objection; argumentative. Also -- that's enough.

THE COURT: Sustained.

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, may we approach?

THE COURT: Okay.

SIDE BAR CONFERENCE:

MR. HANSEN: Two things. First of all, he said it's something different from before. First he said he didn't consider it. Now a minute ago he said he considered it.

THE COURT: No, he said he looked at it.

MR. HANSEN: He said he considered it. He used the word "consider." And he also if he had the document and deliberately chose to disregard it, that certainly goes to his credibility as an expert. We should be allowed to impeach him based on that.

THE COURT: What's the response to the latter that your client has admitted having seen MS 1000 before rendering his opinion, and they get to ask him why he chose not to depend on the information?

MR. MARMER: I think the answer to that -- well, there are two pieces here. The first is that the problem with going into that is that it's going to still run afoul of the publication issue. And that means we're going to end up backdooring in all subjective evidence. That means everything he looked at that had subjective values and he disregarded it, then all the subjective stuff is going to come flying in when we know that the purpose supposedly is to show what he did or didn't consider. What he did or didn't consider legally we're not supposed to worry about subjective evidence. This is an attempt to confuse the jury.

I would also ask that counsel stop saying it came from our client's files. There's no evidentiary predicate for that.

MR. HANSEN: CPH --

THE COURT: Keep your voice down -- that just means --

MR. HANSEN: That's their files.

THE COURT: No, because we've not accepted that for any of the evidentiary offers.

MR. MARMER: You're not supposed to be talking about Bates numbers.

MR. HANSEN: This is a search for fairness and truth here. This witness having seen this document which shows something contrary to what he's trying to testify to, he can't just ipse dixit.

THE COURT: I thought you said ipse dixit. Nevermind.

MR. HANSEN: I-p-s-e, d-i-x-i-t.

THE COURT: Couple things. First of all, I think we've been fairly consistent we're not tracing the original source of the documents by Bates stamps numbers because there's all sorts of information conveyed by them that is simply inaccurate. That said, while I do understand plaintiff's position about the inapplicability of subjective measures of value, in all honesty, some of this is going to have to be addressed in jury instructions because I think he's given sort of what can probably best be described as fuzzy testimony on that point.

I think it's fair that he be cross-examined at this juncture on MS 1000, but what I'll -- I'll admit it into evidence subject to the same instruction we've given it previously, not to show that it's true but simply to show what it says. Okay?

END OF SIDE BAR CONFERENCE.

THE COURT: Okay. I'm accepting MS 1000 into evidence, but it's the same thing I've told you on some other documents. It's not being accepted to show that the numbers are correct but simply to show what they were. Understand the distinction? Great. Thank you. Go ahead, sir.

(Defendant's Exhibit No. 1000 in evidence.)

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Dr. Nye, do you have Morgan Stanley 1000 before you?

A. I do.

MR. HANSEN: Can we put it up on the screen, please?

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. You see the top part of page? Are you with me?

A. I do indeed.

Q. And this is the document you reviewed as part of your work in this case?

A. Sure.

Q. CLN Holdings, Inc. is the company that owns CPH in this case, correct?

A. I believe so.

Q. And there were calculations of acquisition costs March 30, 1998, correct?

A. That's what it appears to say.

Q. One day after the closing of the transaction?

A. Right.

Q. Purchase price, purchase price of CLN Holdings, see that?

A. I do indeed.

Q. Below that it has A, shares to Parent Coleman (Parent) Holdings. That's the plaintiff in this case, correct?

A. Correct

Q. And it lists 14,099,749 shares per contract, correct?

A. You just read it perfectly.

Q. It then says, average price per share at 2-27-98, correct?

A. It seems to.

Q. And it goes down day prior and day of announcement, correct?

A. So that is the average, 2-27, 3-2.

Q. Is that how you read it?

A. Day prior and day of announcement. It sounds like it, yeah.

Q. That's the way you have -- you average so you're not picking a single day, that's the way you've done it?

A. It's the way to pick two days and average them, yeah.

Q. It comes to purchase price of shares $43.68, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. It then has a discount for restrictions at 15 percent, see that?

A. That's correct.

Q. And that's because these shares were restricted and that they could not be sold right away, correct?

A. They were restricted.

Q. They had a lockup that applied to them, correct?

A. 25 percent were locked up for three months, another 25 percent for six months, and the rest for nine months.

Q. But all of those lockups expired the end of 1998, correct?

A. By the end of the year, yes.

Q. But in addition to the lockup restriction, there was also a restriction in the sense these shares were unregistered, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. So there was a limitation on how they could be sold based on their lack of registration rights?

A. That's true.

Q. So there was a discount at 15 percent for the lack of registration, correct, or the liquidity issue?

A. Well, Sunbeam, there was an acquisition cost by Sunbeam entered of 15 percent discount for restriction.

Q. And that comes to a share price of about $37 premerger share, correct?

A. If you take 15 percent off 43, I would imagine the mathematics is correct.

Q. And this is as of March 31, 1998, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. It comes to a value of stock consideration of $523,591,359, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. It's your testimony to this jury that you simply ignored this evidence of valuation in forming your opinion?

A. As I started to say before the brouhaha, I considered it, placed zero value on it and moved on.

Q. And this was an actual value placed on it by parties to the transaction before there was any litigation, correct?

MR. MARMER: Objection. Misstates the record.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Did you inquire into the circumstances under which this was created?

A. I can see by the top it was calculated of acquisition cost by Sunbeam.

Q. Did you inquire into the circumstances by which this was created?

A. I think it's best just to say I don't know what you mean, but I don't think so, no.

Q. Did you ask anybody about it?

A. No.

Q. Let's go to the fax line up at the top of the document, if we could, please, and highlight that. You see a fax line at the top of the document indicating that on 4-21-1998, it was faxed either to or from Coleman Finance?

A. That's what it seems to say.

Q. Do you know what Coleman Finance is?

A. Presumably it's Coleman Finance.

Q. And that's what? That bears what relationship to the plaintiff in this case, Coleman (Parent) Holdings, do you know?

A. I'm not sure.

Q. Did you ask anyone?

A. No.

Q. Did you ask anyone whether Coleman Finance had ever passed on the reasonableness of this valuation?

A. No.

Q. Never had any curiosity about that?

A. No.

Q. Didn't want to know?

A. There was no need to know. I knew what the market value of the stock, the objective value, and I'm not even -- Who did this? It says for Sunbeam. It has a discount. I saw Coleman documents that had no discount for Coleman's purposes for liquidity. So I don't know quite where this document came from. It disagrees completely with what I consider the exact way to do this --

Q. You didn't ask --

A. -- estimate, and so I didn't consider it, no.

Q. You didn't ask your own client anything about it, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. Dr. Nye, you have testified in a number of cases where you've been asked to value stock price in one way or another, correct?

A. In one way or another, certainly stock prices and movements of -- are a big part of what I've done, yeah.

Q. Isn't it true in the cases you've worked on you typically assess the value of a stock price at the date of the transaction?

A. Well, it depends on the purpose.

Q. How about if the case --

A. If the purpose -- would you like me to continue, or do you want to ask some more questions?

Q. Please go ahead. I didn't mean to cut you off. Go ahead.

A. If indeed the question at issue is a price movement on a particular day, then the price on that day and how it moves are at issue, so then you use the price on the day and how it changes.

Q. Do you remember testifying in something called the Oxford Health Plans case?

A. Sure.

Q. That's a case in which there was an issue about whether the plaintiffs had been sold stock that was -- had been an inflated price due to fraud.

A. As I recall, yes.

Q. And in that case, you assessed damages by figuring out the market price for the stock on the date the plaintiffs acquired it, correct?

A. The market price on the date the plaintiffs acquired it was pretty obvious. It was the market price on the date the plaintiffs acquired it so I didn't figure it out.

Q. You calculated damages by taking the same date and coming up with a true price or a fraud-free price of the same stock, correct?

A. Did calculate a true value price on that date, correct.

Q. On the same date, correct?

A. Right.

Q. What you did there was you calculated damages by saying plaintiffs bought their stock on, just to pick a date, March 2nd, at $10, but it was really worth 8 because there was $2 worth of fraud in the price, so their damages are two, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. And that's also the method you used in the Obtech (phonetic) case?

A. Well, the inflation is two.

Q. The inflation is two?

A. And when they sell it, the inflation is subtracted, the inflation on the date of sale is subtracted from that inflation, and then the net is the damages.

Q. Isn't that --

A. That's a 10(b)(5) case.

Q. Is that the same method you used in something called the Obtech (phonetic) case?

A. It could easily be.

Q. Where you took the price of the stock on the date of the transaction and subtracted the fraud-free price in order to figure out the amount of the price of the market price that was represented by fraud, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And you did those both on the same dates, the date of the acquisition of the stock, both the market price and the true value?

A. Well, they have to be on the same day. The whole point is how much was the share inflated, how much are you damaged, how much too much did you pay for the share when you bought the share, so you need to know what you paid for it less what it was worth, and that by definition is the amount you sort of overpaid.

Q. You didn't do anything to figure out what the fraud-free price of Sunbeam shares was on February 27, 1998, correct?

A. No.

Q. You didn't do anything to figure out what the fraud-free price of the Sunbeam shares was on March 2nd, 1998, correct?

A. No.

Q. Is that correct or -- you didn't do that, right?

A. You said -- I think you said you didn't do anything. I said -- oh, okay, I see.

I didn't do anything.

Q. On March 30th, you did not do anything to determine the fraud-free price of Sunbeam shares, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. Now, Doctor Nye, I believe you said on direct that one of the reasons why you decided to average prices across the period from March 2nd to March 30th was because of what occurred on March 19th, 1998, correct?

A. That wasn't a reason I averaged it. I went ahead and averaged it March 2nd to March 30th, even though in my opinion the better -- the value of the company as envisioned by Coleman and Sunbeam on the 27th of February when they decided to go forward was really the company from March 2nd to March 18th. In other words, the fully turned around Sunbeam matched with Coleman.

And then on March 19th there was an announcement that Sunbeam wasn't -- may not make its first quarter revenues, and that was the first kind of chink in the armor of the turnaround since the announcement of the deal. So I really think they, Coleman people envisioned the company as you see it from March 2nd to March 18th, not as you see it from March 19th on. But I went ahead and arranged the whole month. Actually I was trying to avoid an argument, but...

Q. On the 19th, the stock dropped close to $5, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. About a ten-percent drop?

A. Right.

Q. That meant for the value of Mr. Perelman's 14.1 million shares almost a $66 million loss on paper?

MR. MARMER: Objection; relevance.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Well, let me back up. Overall, the market capitalization, Mr. Perelman's shares represent about 14 percent of total shares outstanding of Sunbeam, correct?

A. 14.1 out of 107, 13, something less than 14.

Q. So the ten-percent drop on March 19th represented at least half a billion dollars in loss of market capitalization for Sunbeam, correct?

A. Five times 100 million shares, $535 billion, right.

Q. You concluded as part of your expert opinion, Dr. Nye, did you not, that on March 19th there was basically a situation where Sunbeam revealed part of the fraud?

A. I think without the fraud there would have been no announcement, yes.

Q. So on March 19, Sunbeam revealed to the world part of the fraud and told the world about the fraud?

MR. MARMER: Objection. May we approach?

THE COURT: Sure.

SIDE BAR CONFERENCE:

THE COURT: Yes, sir.

MR. MARMER: The objection is that counsel is now trying to dispute the undisputed findings. It's quite clear what the witness has said, that is, that he's accounting for the news coming out. The questioning now is designed to try and get behind the findings. We have a conclusive finding there was a false and misleading press release, there was no truthful disclosure. And these questions are designed to cast out the undisputed facts.

THE COURT: What's the response?

MR. HANSEN: No such dispute. Mr. Perelman testified that the press release was bullish and didn't place him on any notice of a problem at Sunbeam. His expert called by him in his report, in his testimony has stated and will state here and has just stated here that, in fact, the March 19th disclosure disclosed part of the fraud. That's relevant evidence. It goes to both damages and to reliance. It's their expert. It's cross-examination. It doesn't dispute any findings in Exhibit A.

Exhibit A says nothing about whether there was partial disclosure about fraud. It says the press release was misleading. It leaves room for the argument that the world was on notice of the problem.

If we're not allowed to dispute that, Judge, then there ought to be just a directed verdict on reliance and damages, because this is -- these are the real facts not conclusively established by any prior finding by the court. This has been testified to by this expert and by Mr. Perelman. If we can't draw these things to the attention of the jury, we can't possibly function.

MR. MARMER: The answer is he can certainly establish whether he thought, the expert thought it was a good news or bad news press release. That's fair game. To try to go into these artfully phrased questions whether it's revealing the fraud is trying to get behind the findings.

THE COURT: I think what you're trying to do is convert this witness from a damages expert to a reliance expert. I do believe it's fair to ask him the effect on the marketplace of the press release and what that indicates about how the investors considered it good news or bad news.

MR. HANSEN: That it was part of fraud. Your Honor, that's why the market price falls so much. You've had all this testimony in this courtroom --

THE COURT: Please understand, he's not here as a witness on reliance. You can certainly ask him how unusual is it to have a ten-percent price drop.

MR. GORSUCH: It's trying to get at why he chose to average all these prices. His testimony is and will be they chose such a long period of averaging, two days, like plaintiff because March 19th was a partial revelation of fraud. He already explained that.

THE COURT: It was the first indication, as I understand his testimony, of a drop in the market price ultimately traced to the fraud.

MR. HANSEN: No, Your Honor. His exact wording is this was a partial disclosure of the fraud.

THE COURT: I understand that. Please understand he's not an expert witness on that point. He's simply not. He's an economist.

MR. HANSEN: It goes to damages.

MR. GORSUCH: Methodology, why he chose this crazy methodology.

THE COURT: You can ask him how the market interpreted it. To suggest he's competent to testify whether this shows a fraud is just not what he testified about on direct at all.

MR. GORSUCH: He does event studies. What he does all the time is to identify market price drops, then attributes them to either the fraud or to other causal factors. And that's what he did here. He did a partial event study. He did. He stopped in the middle of his event study.

THE COURT: You can ask him about that. The part that I think is objectionable is the attempt to sort of make the leap from negative information about the company to having it called fraud.

MR. HANSEN: That's his word. That's the significant word to him because that is why the price makes the -- and Your Honor has picked up the part of the question, he believes the price was depressed after March 19th because there will be a partial disclosure of the fraud. That's why he feels like he has to use an average.

THE COURT: But then you're jumping in that to the reliance issue.

MR. HANSEN: It's both damages --

THE COURT: Yes, you are.

MR. HANSEN: It's both, Your Honor. It's his damages model. His damages model rests on it. It's a necessary condition. That's why he testified to it in his deposition. And, secondly, if that's his conclusion, his expert conclusion, I don't know why the jury can't hear it.

THE COURT: No. Because -- I'm trying to think of how to say this. I think he is perfectly competent to testify as to based on his investigation what information caused the stock price to fall. But to sort of jump and use fraud as more of a legal term of art, which is what you're attempting to do, I think is misleading to the jury on reliance. Again, you can get the same information without coaching it in terms of fraud.

MR. HANSEN: Why can't we draw an opposition between the client, Mr. Perelman, and his own expert. Mr. Perelman says, you remember the testimony, this was good news on the 19th.

THE COURT: And you can certainly elicit the market didn't see it the same way.

MR. HANSEN: The market saw it devastatingly bad.

MR. MARMER: I can tell you in advance that this witness is not going to tell you that this press release was good news. You'll get it. You just don't have to do it in this manner.

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, we're wasting time.

THE COURT: All I'm saying is I would agree under Exhibit A this was not disclosure of the fraud, and that's inconsistent, and so, simple answer is to the extent you're trying to say this was the disclosure of the fraud, it's not. It's certainly -- I think it's fair to say the market saw this as bad news. It did.

END OF SIDE BAR CONFERENCE.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Dr. Nye, on the 19th when the stock value of Sunbeam company plunged close to a half a billion dollars, this was terribly bad news to the shareholders of Sunbeam, wasn't it?

A. It was certainly bad news, ten-percent drop.

Q. It put them on notice there were real problems at Sunbeam, didn't it?

A. It put them on notice.

MR. MARMER: Objection. Objection.

THE COURT: You want to rephrase it?

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. It would tell the marketplace that there were serious issues at the Sunbeam company, wouldn't it?

A. Not necessarily, no.

Q. Well, you viewed it as a serious problem at Sunbeam based on your own characterization at your deposition, didn't you?

A. No, I viewed it as a revelation.

Q. Of what?

MR. MARMER: Objection.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. You viewed it as a revelation that there was false information that had been in the marketplace about Sunbeam, correct?

A. No. It would be best if you let me finish one sentence.

Q. Sure.

A. What I said was is that the company that CPH thought they were getting, the turned around Sunbeam in combination with Coleman is priced by the market beginning March 2nd through March 18th. But on March 19th I think it was Sunbeam announced they might not make their first quarter revenue targets. Long term they'd still be okay and earnings would still be okay. And that was not quite the shining turnaround. So it -- the point being that that wasn't the company Coleman thought they were getting. It was a company at somewhat lesser value, and, therefore, from then on it's a little bit of new information that wasn't in the pot when they negotiated the deal.

Q. This was not a turned around company, right, Dr. Nye?

A. Pardon me?

Q. According to what is now in the marketplace March 19th, the public markets knew this was not a turned around company, correct?

MR. MARMER: Objection.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. You previously in your report and your testimony characterized this in very negative terms, didn't you, this event?

A. Not very negative terms. It's a down. You're right, I think it's new information that wasn't part of what Coleman and Sunbeam were considering when they negotiated. It is down information, negative information.

Q. You characterized it as a partial disclosure, didn't you?

A. I think --

MR. MARMER: Objection, Your Honor. May we approach?

THE COURT: Okay.

SIDE BAR CONFERENCE:

MR. HANSEN: This witness is dodging cross-examination on the basis of this umbrella of Exhibit A where he's fencing with me. He said, he said --

THE COURT: They're going to hear.

MR. HANSEN: He said in his deposition, this is, quote, partial disclosure of the fraud.

THE COURT: Why don't you pull out the part you want to impeach, show it to Mr. Marmer, see if there's an objection.

MR. HANSEN: These are his own words.

THE COURT: You want to show it to them first?

MR. HANSEN: I can't believe we can have a trial where a witness can lie and we can't --

THE COURT: They're going to hear you. That's all.

MR. MARMER: Point me to the place where you want me to look.

MR. HANSEN: Right there.

MR. GORSUCH: It says it basically revealed part of the fraud.

THE COURT: Where are you reading from so I can read it? Hold on.

What is it that you think --

MR. HANSEN: He says it wasn't bad news. It was a little chink in the armor. His own testimony is what happened on the 19th was partial disclosure of a fraud. That goes to his damages model. It's why he uses the averages. When I asked him this, he won't fight me on it being bad news, et cetera. He then fought me on it being bad news. He said it wasn't so bad.

They were going to bounce right back up. He basically took refuge in the safe harbor of this Exhibit A ruling, and, therefore, he's being allowed to mislead the jury.

The truth is this witness in his deposition admitted that the March 19th press release was partial disclosure of the fraud. That's how bad it was. For him to get away with saying otherwise is to essentially hide him from cross-examination.

THE COURT: I would sustain the objection. In all honesty, I don't think he's testified inconsistent with that. And, again, I think the concern of having him testify to that is you get to mix the apples and the oranges, which is turning him into a reliance witness, which is not what he is. I understand you disagree.

END OF SIDE BAR CONFERENCE.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Dr. Nye, you testified, I believe, at your deposition that you had read part of the testimony of a Todd Slotkin; is that right?

A. Right, right, yes.

Q. He is the CFO of CPH?

A. Correct.

Q. Did you read the part of his deposition where he said I couldn't think of any reason why the expected value would be $680 million bucks?

A. Don't remember that part.

Q. Do you think it was in there?

A. I doubt it, but I certainly didn't read it.

Q. You only read parts of his testimony, though; is that right?

A. Part of his deposition.

Q. The parts the plaintiff's lawyer showed you?

A. I mean, I had the whole deposition. I read parts of it.

Q. Dr. Nye, these numbers we put on our demonstrative, 588, 643 and your number of 680 million, those are all pre any liquidity discount, correct?

A. I don't think you mentioned anything about putting one in there when you wrote them up there, so I would assume you'd know that. From the calculation, no, I don't think you put anything in there for that.

Q. Let's be real clear so we don't have any confusion. Your $680 million expected value has no provision for liquidity discount, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. And we just did the math on the March 30 number of 43.94 per share times 14.1 million to get the $619 million, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. Unlike the document we showed you, MS 1000, didn't make a 15-percent discount for liquidity here, did we?

A. You didn't, no.

Q. So in your damages analysis you assumed that the shares CPH received, those 14.1 million shares would be freely traded, correct?

A. No.

Q. Do you recall testifying at your deposition that you thought --

THE COURT: Let me stop you. If you can give us a page and line...

MR. HANSEN: Page 205, line 17 to 25.

MR. MARMER: Which transcript, please?

MR. HANSEN: First one.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Would you like a copy of your deposition, Dr. Nye?

A. I would like to read the part about where I said they could be fairly traded, if that's what you're quoting.

MR. HANSEN: Can I approach, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Sure.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. I'll hand you a copy of your deposition, Dr. Nye. If you would look with me at page 205, line 17 to 25...

MR. MARMER: Your Honor, I'm going to -- I think we have to approach.

THE COURT: Why don't you guys come on up.

SIDE BAR CONFERENCE:

THE COURT: May I see it?

MR. MARMER: Sure. Okay.

MR. HANSEN: He's valuing the shares measuring shares that were freely traded.

THE COURT: I think that's what he told us.

MR. HANSEN: No, I don't think so, Your Honor.

THE COURT: He did not assume they were --

MR. HANSEN: The shares were restricted, yet he valued them as if they were freely tradable. I want to establish that he basically --

THE COURT: Just make sure you keep your voice down.

MR. HANSEN: Pardon me, Your Honor. What I want to establish is that, in fact, these shares were not freely tradable, and he's previously testified as if the valuation was to the contrary, the 17 to 25.

THE COURT: That's just -- I think that's consistent with what he's told us today. I think what you're trying to elicit is whether they needed to discount because they were unregistered. But he's already told us that the values are based on the trading values, and they are restricted shares.

MR. HANSEN: I'll phrase it in a different way. I'll ask the question in a different way.

END OF SIDE BAR CONFERENCE.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Dr. Nye, you valued the Coleman/Sunbeam shares for purposes of your analysis as if they were freely traded shares, correct?

A. I took no liquidity discount.

Q. So you have basically assumed that the shares could be freely traded for purposes of valuing them, correct?

A. No, I took no liquidity discount. I'm well-aware of the lockout. And there was no -- I didn't take any liquidity discount, no.

Q. You just simply --

A. There was no basis for liquidity discount.

Q. You simply used the values of the publicly freely tradable shares in setting your value, correct?

A. Exactly, right.

Q. And those shares were fully tradable with no restriction, correct?

A. The shares that were valued each and every day that month that I used as an average were pretty credible, which is, by the way, what I said at my deposition, not that the Coleman shares were freely tradable.

Q. They had no restrictions on them in the example you used, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. Yet the shares you were valuing had two different kinds of restriction, didn't they? They had a lockup, right?

A. They were locked up for --

Q. And they were unregistered, correct?

A. And they were unregistered.

Q. And you made no provision whatsoever for those limitations on their sale in trying to value the shares, correct?

A. There were no indicated provisions to be made.

Q. And, in fact, you wouldn't be the right person to make such a valuation, would you, because you've never before valued restricted securities, have you?

A. I don't know about never, but it's sort of rare, right. I don't do it regularly, let's put it that way.

Q. Have you ever been asked to value unregistered securities in your consulting work?

A. Well, nothing pops into my head.

Q. You couldn't recall any such instance in your deposition, could you?

A. I couldn't here either, could I?

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, would now be a good time for a break?

THE COURT: I was hoping we could go a little bit more. Do you all need a break? They didn't come in until almost 2:00 so if we can go another 15 minutes or so, that would be great. Thanks.

MR. HANSEN: Of course, Your Honor.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. The parties to this transaction did apply a liquidity discount to the 14.1 million restricted shares, didn't they?

MR. MARMER: Objection. Lack of foundation.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Let's put up Morgan Stanley 282 in evidence, please. And go to page six, please, footnote two. Would you like a paper copy?

A. Oh, here, it popped up.

Q. I'm directing your attention to the bottom of page six to the highlighted note two. Did you consider the SEC filings of Sunbeam as part of your work in this case?

A. Am I trying to read this, or is that a separate question? Yes, okay, yes, I did.

Q. Did you see as part of your work reviewing these SEC filings that in November 1998 Sunbeam made a filing with the Securities & Exchange Commission in which Sunbeam valued the restricted shares?

A. Sunbeam on their books valued the restricted shares, is that what you're saying?

Q. Were you aware of that?

A. Pardon me?

Q. Were you aware of that?

A. I think so.

Q. And Sunbeam at this time was being run by Mr. Levin; is that right?

A. I think so.

Q. Do you know who Mr. Levin is?

A. I believe he used to be with, work with Mr. Perelman.

Q. He's one of Mr. Perelman's long-time trusted operating executives, correct?

A. That's my understanding.

Q. And the other top executives at Sunbeam at this time were -- substantially constituted of former members of the Coleman management working previously under Mr. Levin, correct?

A. Those are your words "substantially constituted." I know some people were working at Sunbeam, yes.

Q. In other words, Mr. Perelman had moved a number of the Coleman managers to work for Sunbeam by November of 1998?

A. I don't know whether Mr. Perelman moved them or simply, that, yes, there was people at Coleman did move into management at Sunbeam.

Q. Now you see here in the -- and this was an SEC filing, correct?

A. If that's what the title says, yes, okay.

Q. Why don't I just give you 282 so you can satisfy yourself if you'd like.

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, may I approach?

THE COURT: Yes.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. I'm going to hand you a copy of Morgan Stanley 282 in evidence, Dr. Nye. If you'd like to take a look to satisfy yourself that that is a 10-Q A filed by the Sunbeam corporation in November 1998...

A. That's what it says at the top, yes.

Q. Now there are penalties for the filing of false SEC filings like 10-Q A's, correct?

A. I would imagine so.

Q. Corporations are required to put truthful information in them, correct?

A. I think the SEC prefers that, yes.

Q. And so here you have an SEC filing taking a valuation of the 14,099,749 shares that CPH received on March 30, 1998, correct? Is that correct, Dr. Nye?

A. Let me read what's going on here, get my bearings.

Q. Of course.

A. Yes, okay.

Q. This filing to the Securities & Exchange Commission under Mr. Levin's management, the value of the common stock issued at the date of the transaction was $524, million, correct?

A. That's what it says there.

Q. This was done at the time before there was any litigation between the parties, correct?

A. November '98. I believe so, yeah.

Q. And the way they got to the $524 million expected value for the Sunbeam shares was derived by using the average ending stock price as reported by the New York Stock Exchange composite tape. You know what that is?

A. Yes.

Q. What is it?

A. It's the composite tape. I mean, it's the New York Stock Exchange prices.

Q. That's what tells you what the stock prices were that particular day?

A. Right.

Q. Authoritative source?

A. I would think so.

Q. Do you know?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. For the day before and the day of the public announcement of the acquisition, so that's February 27th and March 2nd or March 3rd, wouldn't this be?

A. The day before and the day of would be February 27th and March 2nd.

Q. Discounted by 15 percent due to the restrictive nature of the securities, correct?

A. That's what it says.

Q. Now if you were to take -- you have that calculator up with you, right? If you were to take the $619 million for the market value of the Sunbeam shares on the 30th, the day of the closing and take 15 percent off for restriction discount, what would that leave us with? Can you take 15 percent off with the calculator you've got?

A. Take 90 off. Be about 530. Maybe it's 524 if it's the same. No, it's not the average.

Q. Pretty close to what Sunbeam reported though, correct?

A. The number is in the vicinity of what's on that SEC filing, right.

Q. And did you consider this valuation as part of your work as an expert in this case?

A. Again, I considered it. I did consider it. Basically gave it no weight because this is -- in other words, it's the March 30th value, $619 million. We already went over why I didn't use the March 30th value over and over. I don't see that there's any 15 percent -- pardon me.

Q. I didn't mean to interrupt.

MR. MARMER: Excuse a minute. That is what happened.

THE COURT: You need to let him finish this question, and then you can ask another question.

Go ahead, sir.

THE WITNESS: Did I consider it was the question? Did I consider it? I said I considered it. I looked at it. It's the March 30th, 1998 share price times the number of shares. Get that out of the Wall Street Journal or in your case off the tape, right? Totaled $619 million. Then the only thing in addition is the 15-percent discount. In evaluating a need for any discount for restrictions, there were no identifiable cause which the SEC requires before you take that discount so I didn't use a discount. And other than that, that is simply the $619 million value of Sunbeam on March -- or the Coleman shares on March 30th.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Pardon me, sir, but is this the March 30th price or the average ending stock price for day before and the day of the public announcement?

MR. MARMER: Objection.

THE WITNESS: Average.

THE COURT: Hold on. What's the objection?

MR. MARMER: The objection is he moved between two numbers now. I think this is a confusing question.

THE COURT: Hold on one second.

THE WITNESS: Okay.

MR. MARMER: My notes show we started with 619 and now we're pointing.

THE COURT: Why don't you pose the question again.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Dr. Nye, a moment ago you said this SEC filing related to a March 30th stock price with a discount. I'm asking you, sir, if that's correct. Isn't it, in fact, the case that this particular valuation is done based on the stock price on the day before and the day of the public announcement, which was March 2nd, 1998?

MR. MARMER: Objection.

THE COURT: Sustained. You know what, this probably is a good time for our break. We won't talk to you. Don't let anybody talk to you. We will see you in ten minutes. If you want to bring in snacks, soda, coffee or tea, please feel free.

(The jury left the courtroom.)

THE COURT: And, Dr. Nye, you want to meet us after the break as well?

THE WITNESS: Okay. Thank you, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay. My understanding of the objection is looking at the footnote, it looks like it's an attempt to value the stock as of the date of the acquisition, which would be that March 30th date but related to a value back on the date of the merger agreement discounted. Precision Reporting of South Florida, Inc. And I think that there was confusion about the question that you were posing.

MR. HANSEN: I tried to make it very clear with that question. Basically he had volunteered it was a March 30th stock price based on another exercise we had done. But this particular exercise is stated differently.

THE COURT: Put the footnote back up. I was trying to read it quickly. I think it's an attempt to value it on the date of acquisition, correct. And then it may have, but it's not the 619.

MR. HANSEN: That's what I was trying to point out.

THE COURT: He's using an earlier date. I think there was some confusion. Maybe I misunderstood it, but I understand there was confusion about the date of the stock price and the date of the valuation. And I wanted to make sure we were real clear on what was being asked. But I didn't want to clear it up in front of the jurors.

MR. MARMER: My only concern is that we tender the question clearly. It was reasonably apparently there were some ships passing in the night and it started to take an argumentative fashion.

THE COURT: I was concerned about how it was going back and forth.

MR. HANSEN: Okay. I was simply trying to ask him what it said. He volunteered it was the stock price on March 30th when, in fact, what we were talking about wasn't the stock price on March 30th.

THE COURT: You were talking about the price they used to do the calculation.

MR. HANSEN: Right. He said it was the 619 which was the price on the 30th. That simply wasn't right. He was getting him to acknowledge he had jumped to an assumption that wasn't true. Because even though it says what it says, it's based --

THE COURT: Right, but then I'm looking at it. It says the value of the common stock issued at the date of acquisition. I think that's where we're getting to the confusion. But then they used the price computed as of the date of the agreement. And I think that's where we were getting the cross focuses.

MR. HANSEN: Because that's totality. I can make that very clear. I can make that very clear, Your Honor.

THE COURT: I just wanted to make sure we were clear on that.

MR. HANSEN: A couple things. We need to know whether the deposition is going to take place. We're being told they're going to go off and take a deposition of this gentleman. As far as we're concerned, the matter is -- we think we have an unobjected motion for mistrial. It's pending. We would like to know when you're going to rule on that, because obviously much depends on your ruling. We also don't think they should be rushing off to take sworn testimony from this fellow. We think it should be referred to other authorities for investigation.

MR. IANNO: I'm the one who is going to take the deposition, so I want to know whether I'm leaving or staying for the remainder of the trial.

THE COURT: I'm not ordering a deposition. So at best a sworn statement, as I understand what you guys are telling me --

MR. IANNO: That is --

MR. SCAROLA: We have informed the court that it is our intention to take a sworn statement from Mr. Comyns. We have invited the defendant to be present if the defendant chooses to ask questions. If the defendant chooses not to be present and ask questions, that's fine.

THE COURT: Just so -- as far as I'm concerned, that's a private matter between the parties.

MR. HANSEN: I guess, Your Honor, the other point, do we have some sense of when the court is going to rule on the unobjected motion for mistrial?

THE COURT: No. But I may not rule in the next day or two or three or four or five or six or seven. I don't know. I don't know.

MR. SOLOVY: Your Honor, could I bring up a separate point? The next witness would be mine. Your Honor sustains an objection when Mr. Hansen is questioning. He persists in that line of questioning. We come up. You sustain it again. I'm going to have a big problem if he does that with my witness, Your Honor.

MR. HANSEN: I think we're anticipating problems.

MR. SOLOVY: Wait a minute, Mr. Hansen. Let me finish. Let me finish, Mr. Hansen.

THE COURT: Hold on a second. I'll give you a chance to respond. I promise.

MR. SOLOVY: Your Honor, if I'm asking a question and Your Honor sustains it, if the objection is made and Your Honor sustains the objection, I don't go back again and try to avoid that ruling by asking questions right around it. That's happened persistently in Dr. Nye's testimony, repeatedly. I'm just saying, Your Honor, if that happens with Mr. Gittis, we're going to have a lot of problems.

THE COURT: That I put in the category of chatting. You don't need to respond to it. I'll be back in a few minutes. Do you have any idea how much longer your cross is going to be?

MR. HANSEN: Another 45 minutes.

THE COURT: Are we doing Fogg?

MR. SOLOVY: Yes, Your Honor.

THE COURT: We think it's about 20 minutes?

MR. MARMER: It's about 15, we think.

THE COURT: Okay. Okay.

(A recess was taken from 3:10 p.m. to 3:20 p.m.)

THE COURT: I have some free time tomorrow at 8:00 o'clock.

MR. SCAROLA: You have a long list from Mr. Hansen things he wants to spend time discussing. If Your Honor is feeling lonely at 8:00 a.m., we're happy to be here.

THE COURT: Do we want to start doing trial Exhibit binders and depo designations at 8:00? That gives us a half hour at least.

MR. HANSEN: Sure, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay. That's fine.

MR. SCAROLA: We may not need to have a hearing on trial Exhibits and binders if they can provide us with a copy to review. I mean, the concept is one that we don't oppose. We'd just like to take a look and see what it is they're planning on doing and how they wish to present it, with the understanding, obviously, that we'll have the reciprocal opportunity if we choose to avail ourselves of it.

MR. HANSEN: We plan on sending over a list tonight, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay. We ready to get the jurors?

MR. HANSEN: I'm sorry, Your Honor. Yes, I believe we're ready to get the jurors.

MR. MARMER: Yes.

THE COURT: Okay.

MR. SCAROLA: Since Mr. Perelman can not come in tomorrow until 10:00, does Your Honor want to bring the jury in a little later, or do you want to start something else?

THE COURT: I'd probably rather start, but remind me to talk about it. We can talk about it.

MR. SCAROLA: My thought was we might want to bring them in a little later and do that --

THE COURT: Does defendant have a feeling one way or the other?

MR. HANSEN: I do. I thought Mr. Perelman was going to be the witness first thing tomorrow.

THE COURT: They had represented he wasn't able to be here until about 10:00. We can talk about it again.

(The jury entered the courtroom.)

THE COURT: Okay. We're ready to continue. Mr. Hansen.

MR. HANSEN: May I proceed, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Yes, sir.

MR. HANSEN: Thank you.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Dr. Nye, I now want to turn to your bottom number, your zero figure for actual value, okay?

A. I think that was what I called realizable, the value, they could never realize anything from them so they got back zero, yes.

Q. Now it's your belief, is it not, Dr. Nye, that if all the true facts about Sunbeam had been known by the marketplace, for example, on March 2nd, 1998, the share price would have been lower than $45.63, correct?

A. I would presume so, yes.

Q. If on March 30th, 1998, all of the true facts about Sunbeam had been known, the share price would have been lower than $43.94, correct?

A. I would presume so, yes.

Q. But you made no effort to calculate what the price would have been on the 30th of March if the true facts had been known, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. You made no effort to determine the actual value of the Sunbeam shares on March 30th, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. You made no effort to determine the actual value of the Sunbeam shares on March 2nd, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. You, rather, made an assumption that said the stock became valueless at some point in the future, so, therefore, the realizable value of the shares was zero; is that right?

A. Not completely. I think I said earlier what I had done is, my understanding was I was asked to assume it would be proved in these proceedings that Coleman could never realize any value from their shares, and, therefore, what they got back was zero.

Q. In other words, you were asked to assume that after 3-30-98, between then and the time of bankruptcy on, was it February 5, 2001 --

A. February 5th.

Q. -- 2-5-01 there was never any opportunity for the plaintiff to realize any value from the shares, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. So you just assumed that as the facts, correct?

A. I assumed, I think I said that originally. I said it again. Yes, I assumed they would not be able to realize, were never able to realize any value from their shares, so what they got back was nothing, right.

Q. You never did any study to verify that as fact, did you?

A. I think that goes with the word "assume."

Q. You never calculated anything under the securities laws to see whether CPH had the right to sell shares in private transactions, correct?

MR. MARMER: Objection, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. You never did any analysis of the right of CPH to conduct any sales during this period, did you?

MR. MARMER: Same objection, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. You never did any evaluation of the contractual provisions in the parties' agreements to see when and under what conditions they were allowed to sell shares, correct?

MR. MARMER: Same objection.

THE COURT: Sustained.

MR. HANSEN: May we approach?

THE COURT: Okay. It's his objection. What did you want to say in support?

MR. MARMER: The objection is he's inquiring about legal matters of the witness. This is not a legal witness, nor would he be competent. We have addressed virtually all of these things with the court and have rulings on them.

MR. HANSEN: I can't understand how when a witness comes into court to give an opinion of zero value he can't be cross-examined about the limitations of what he's done.

THE COURT: As I understand his opinion on this, he assumed it was zero. He was told to assume zero.

MR. HANSEN: But there are legitimate questions before you get to zero, Your Honor. I don't think we have to assume it was zero. I don't know why it is we can't ask him, you didn't check this --

THE COURT: Later you're going to argue they have insufficient evidence of damages because they assumed zero and there's no evidence of zero.

MR. HANSEN: I also want to exclude this witness as not a competent expert as far as his analysis. I don't believe this can be assuming away half the problem. He has to do two things. He has to come to an expected value and an actual value. Yet, he has just told us he didn't do anything on an actual value. He did something completely different.

THE COURT: There may be an appropriate time to argue that. He said he assumed it.

MR. HANSEN: The point on cross -- I do understand Your Honor's comment and ruling, but the point, Your Honor, I think that I wish to make is this: This jury should know it isn't a matter of assumption. There were legitimate issues that could have been raised, and it would bear on his credibility that he did not look at the contract for restrictions. He did not consider the appropriateness of sale at any given point in time.

THE COURT: Again, I think you're asking about legal conclusions. There's probably other ways to get the same information, but I think you are asking about legal conclusions.

MR. HANSEN: Dr. Emery, Mr. Perelman, there's been a lot of witnesses who gave their understanding of legal matters.

THE COURT: His understanding of legal matters has no -- there's no evidentiary import. It's not like Mr. --

MR. HANSEN: Okay, Your Honor. Just so I know my ground rules for proceeding, can't I ask him you did not undertake any analysis to follow through whether it was, in fact, the case that between September -- between March 30th and the bankruptcy day one truly could or could not realize any value?

THE COURT: Any objection to that?

MR. MARMER: I think that's repetitious and argumentative. He already established about three times he assumed. So all we're trying to do now is to suggest that there was something wrong about what Dr. Nye did through the intimation and the document --

THE COURT: I think that's a matter of law. I think, frankly, it's clear to the jury already there's no other date he used to calculate the second number.

MR. HANSEN: He didn't calculate the second number. It's nothing but an assumption. There's no opinion whatsoever. You were told to assume zero.

MR. MARMER: We're jumping ahead to closing arguments.

THE COURT: Okay.

END OF SIDE BAR CONFERENCE.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Just so we're clear, Dr. Nye, there's no method for an expert opinion behind your testimony in this court today that the actual value was zero other than your being told by the lawyers for plaintiff that you should assume that the thing was zero because they could never sell it, correct?

A. I again was asked to assume.

MR. MARMER: Excuse me.

THE COURT: What's the objection?

MR. MARMER: Subject matter covered in the bench conference.

THE COURT: Why don't you rephrase it?

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Just so we're clear on what you've done and not done, Dr. Nye, there's no opinion or methodology you've applied to a determination of the actual value for Sunbeam shares received by plaintiff in this case other than simply taking as true the assumption the lawyers for plaintiff have asked you to make, that is, that the shares could never be realized for any value, correct?

A. I think -- that's true because that's exactly what I said when we started this.

Q. Dr. Nye, the period of time we're talking about, though, from the 30th of March to the 5th of February of '01, that's an almost three-year period, isn't it?

A. Sure looks like it, yeah.

Q. And over that almost three-year period much can happen to the value of securities, correct?

A. That's true.

Q. Isn't it true that many different factors influenced the pricing of securities?

A. Many different things, yes, indeed.

Q. And you didn't take any effort to try and exclude out the influence of other factors on the value of Sunbeam shares after the 30th of March, 1998, correct?

A. That's true.

Q. You didn't consider, for example, whether new management at Sunbeam lead by Mr. Perelman's hand-picked team made mistakes in running the company?

A. That's true.

Q. You didn't consider whether the stock market crash of the year 2000 affected the Sunbeam share price, correct?

A. I didn't, what was the word, the verb?

Q. You didn't consider whether the stock market crash of 2000 affected the Sunbeam share price?

A. I didn't do an analysis of how much if that's what you're asking, no.

Q. Did you do any analysis of it?

A. No.

Q. You didn't consider, for example, whether the price of Sunbeam shares was affected by very large write-offs Sunbeam had to make on some of the assets that were received from Coleman in the year 2000?

MR. MARMER: Objection, Your Honor, no factual predicate.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Did you ever review the bankruptcy disclosure the Sunbeam company filed in October of 2002?

A. I may have, but not that I recall.

MR. HANSEN: Could I have Morgan Stanley 920, please?

May I approach, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Um-hum.

BY MR. HANSEN:

.Q. Dr. Nye, I'm going to place before you Morgan Stanley 920 for identification. Do you recognize that as one of the documents you reviewed in your work in this case?

A. Yeah, as I sit here, I don't recognize it. Could I have?

Q. Doesn't look familiar to you?

A. Well, it looks very familiar. All legal documents look just like this, little fine print, but, no, I don't recognize this specifically.

Q. Is what you just told us, all legal documents look the same to you?

A. They look like that, yes.

MR. HANSEN: We offer 920, Your Honor.

MR. MARMER: Objection, Your Honor.

THE COURT: You all want to come on up?

SIDE BAR CONFERENCE:

THE COURT: What's the legal objection?

MR. MARMER: The objection is this is a late disclosed document. It wasn't disclosed until April 4th and it contains hearsay.

THE COURT: What's the response?

MR. HANSEN: It's timely disclosed, we believe, under the circumstances. And in terms of hearsay, this is a public record that's being offered, Your Honor, to show, frankly, that they're trying to attribute all of these damages to us when, in fact, Sunbeam had a myriad causes for failure. The fact this expert didn't consider any of them is, in fact, probative as to his credibility, but it's also probative substantively that they're trying to pin on Morgan Stanley damages that are not properly pinned on Morgan Stanley.

THE COURT: What's the response?

MR. MARMER: The witness said he didn't consider it. We already got that information.

THE COURT: I would sustain the objection.

MR. HANSEN: Actually, he didn't say he didn't consider it. He said he couldn't recall it. He might have.

THE COURT: I would sustain the objection.

END OF SIDE BAR CONFERENCE.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Did you think it important, Dr. Nye, to look into the causes of Sunbeam's bankruptcy before attributing a total loss of Sunbeam shares to the defendant Morgan Stanley in this case?

A. I told you I assumed they were never in a position to realize any value of the shares, and I was asked to assume that, therefore, they got zero.

Q. But for one to do a fair calculation of damages, wouldn't one need to ask the question what caused Sunbeam to go bankrupt and thus make shares worthless?

MR. MARMER: Objection.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Is it fair in your mind, Dr. Nye, to attribute to Morgan Stanley damages that were caused by factors other than Morgan Stanley's conduct?

MR. MARMER: Objection.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Dr. Nye, did you try to assess any of the evidence pertaining to what happened to the Sunbeam company at any time from 3-30-98 to 2-5-01?

MR. MARMER: Objection.

THE COURT: Overruled. You can ask that.

THE WITNESS: And the question was did I?

MR. HANSEN: Could we re-read it, please?

(The record was read as requested.)

THE WITNESS: Did I assess any evidence?

What does the word "assess" mean to you?

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Did you look at any of the evidence?

A. Well, sure, I'm aware that March 19 they made the announcement they might not make their first quarter results. After that there was a term, you know, worse first quarter. Then it got worse in May. Then in June Dunlap and Kersh were fired. Arthur Andersen pulled its books. There was the beginning of an SEC investigation. There were announced restatements. They actually did restate. And the SEC investigation never ended, and all during this period the shares weren't registered and couldn't be sold.

Q. Did you assess what the causes were for Sunbeam's bankruptcy?

A. No.

Q. Did you assess whether Sunbeam had been affected by taking on acquisitions at the same time?

A. Assessed?

MR. MARMER: Objection. No foundation.

THE COURT: I'm sorry. No?

MR. MARMER: Foundation.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Did you consider whether Sunbeam had taken on a number of different acquisitions at the same time and that created problems?

MR. MARMER: Same objection.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Did you know whether Sunbeam had taken multiple acquisitions at the same time?

MR. MARMER: Same objection.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Did you know whether Sunbeam had any other acquisitions?

A. I knew they acquired Coleman and some other small companies, yeah.

Q. All at the same time, right?

A. Pretty much, yeah.

Q. Did you consider whether that acquisition of several companies at the same time created any unusual business problems that lead to problems, further problems for Sunbeam?

MR. MARMER: Objection; lack of foundation in the evidence.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. What problems did those acquisitions cause for Sunbeam in your analysis?

MR. MARMER: Objection; lack of foundation; assumes problems.

THE COURT: Assumes?

MR. MARMER: Problems.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Were there any problems created by Sunbeam's acquisition of multiple companies at the same time in your analysis?

A. I didn't analyze, do an analysis of whether multiple companies would cause problems. It's not necessarily true multiple acquisitions cause problems.

Q. You didn't analyze the problem?

A. I didn't need to analyze it. No, I didn't analyze.

Q. Did you look at what write-offs Sunbeam had from March 30th, '98 to 2-5-01?

MR. MARMER: Objection.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Do you know whether there was write-offs during that period?

MR. MARMER: Objection.

THE COURT: Sustained.

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, may we approach?

THE COURT: Why don't you rephrase it.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. What, if any, analysis did you do with respect to the issue of write-offs?

A. What write-off?

Q. Write-off of assets on the books of Sunbeam.

A. You mean accounting write-offs of assets on the books of Sunbeam?

Q. Do you -- did you do any --

A. I don't believe I did an analysis of write-offs, accounting write-offs of the books of Sunbeam.

Q. Did you look into any issues surrounding goodwill at Sunbeam?

A. Surrounding the accounting goodwill of Sunbeam, no.

Q. Did you do any evaluation of whether Sunbeam's expenses went up substantially over the period of time Mr. Perelman's associates were running the company?

MR. MARMER: Objection; lack of foundation in the evidence.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Did you do any valuation or analysis of the question of expenses of Sunbeam over the almost three years from the time of the closing of the acquisition to the time that bankruptcy was filed?

A. No.

Q. Did you consider any -- Did you do any valuation about the issue of administrative costs of Sunbeam over that same close to three-year period?

A. No.

Q. Do you know who Dr. Emery is?

A. I believe I've heard the name recently.

Q. Have you ever looked at his source textbook Corporate Financial Management?

A. I don't recall.

Q. Do you know whether Dr. Emery in his textbook talks about how managerial inexperience and incompetence are the leading causes of business failure?

MR. MARMER: Objection.

THE COURT: Sustained. Let me remind you that questions are not evidence.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Do you know of your own experience, Dr. Nye, or your own expertise that one of the leading causes of bankruptcy is managerial inexperience and incompetence?

MR. MARMER: Objection. There's no foundation.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Do you have an opinion about managerial inexperience and incompetence as a cause of bankruptcy?

A. It sure doesn't sound good and it sure sounds like it could.

Q. How about let me look at Exhibit 892 in evidence, please. Were you aware of part of your post-March 30, 1998 work that one of the analysts writing about Sunbeam had written, "Furthermore, we find it ironic that SOC or Sunbeam's second largest shareholder, Ron Perelman, could end up financially better off if Sunbeam were to enter Chapter 11 than if he had been successful selling Coleman to Sunbeam SOC as a significantly lower all-cash price as he originally attempted late last year. Were SOC to enter bankruptcy today, Mr. Perelman could recognize his presently large but unrecognizable paper, (noncash) loss in Sunbeam. Then he could potentially use this loss to offset his earnings and gains in his other profitable enterprises."

Did you review this? Did you do any analysis of this issue as part of your post March 30th, 1998 work, Dr. Nye?

MR. MARMER: Excuse me. May we approach?

THE COURT: Yes.

SIDE BAR CONFERENCE:

MR. MARMER: The objection is this is plainly not an attempt simply to find out whether he took account of this but to publish if this was true a theory and statement to the jury when there is no fact in evidence to that effect. This line of questioning is obviously having the intended effect of conveying information, and it's going to be insufficient for an instruction that says questions aren't in evidence. I think counsel ought to be given a firmer instruction about fashioning questions that avoid this problem.

MR. HANSEN: Very simple --

THE COURT: First of all, which document is this?

MR. HANSEN: A report from Prudential in the summer of 1998.

THE COURT: Was it taken for the truth of the matter?

MR. HANSEN: It was entered in evidence.

THE COURT: Lots of things have been but weren't taken for the truth of the matter asserted.

MR. HANSEN: This is a document in evidence. He lists this as a document he considered.

THE COURT: First I need to you answer the question. Was it one of the things taken for the truth of the matter in it or just to show what was said?

MR. HANSEN: I don't recall.

THE COURT: Do you know?

MR. HANSEN: We can check. This man just volunteered, Your Honor, in response to my questions, he did an analysis after the period. This is a document he claims to have relied on. I want to ask him did he do an evaluation of this, did he check on this claim, did he make any determination, because it would go to the question of realizable value. If he didn't, I think the jury is entitled to know that. If he did, I'd like to find out what it was.

THE COURT: In all honesty, he's been very clear that he didn't do any analysis at all on that.

MR. HANSEN: That's not true.

THE COURT: Why do you say that?

MR. HANSEN: He went on a litany of all the things he considered after March 30th. He considered the Dunlap firing. He considered the SEC investigation. He considered the pulling of the financials.

THE COURT: I think he said he was aware of all those things.

MR. HANSEN: He said those were all issues for the analysis he did. That was in response to my question --

THE COURT: I think you were -- you asked him were you aware of what happened in the company, and he was listing the things he was aware of.

MR. HANSEN: It's all part of his analysis.

THE COURT: I think -- we can take a break and have the court reporter read it back and see if my memory is correct. I think he's been pretty clear. He didn't do that half of the analysis.

MR. HANSEN: He purported to have knowledge relating to that period that went to his opinion.

THE COURT: No. I mean, again, I would have to go back. I think he said that he was aware of their existence but it wasn't --

MR. HANSEN: I asked him in terms of, in order to give an opinion, he has to have some basis. If he's given a zero opinion... this document is a document he considered in the report. It's listed as one of the documents he's relied on in his report. It's in evidence. I don't recall that coming in under an objection.

THE COURT: I don't know. Do we know if this was one that was limited or not?

MR. BRODY: We're pulling the transcript, Your Honor.

MR. HANSEN: I recall it coming in without an objection.

MR. MARMER: I understand Your Honor answered that question. My point is a document in evidence doesn't mean you get to do anything either by question or argument. There's no doubt what's going on here.

MR. HANSEN: The witness relies on this. If he puts it in his report as a document he relied on and it's in evidence, I'm not aware of any principle that suggests that --

THE COURT: I mean, no, I think quite honestly, I think it's fair, and we can go back and look at, but what he testified to was he did no analysis for this second half. I don't think you can then use that as a springboard to talk about everything you think he should have considered and did not.

MR. HANSEN: I don't know why not, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Because it's almost like he didn't testify on that point at all.

MR. HANSEN: He did, though. That's misleading to the jury. He offered a zero value.

THE COURT: Because he was told to assume that.

MR. HANSEN: I can say -- I'm trying to show he did --

THE COURT: I think these are appropriate things to argue maybe later to me.

MR. HANSEN: It came in under no objection.

THE COURT: That's fine. I still think we need to take a break because I need to see the portion of the evidence where he testified to the litany of things post closing that he knew about.

MR. HANSEN: Really I'm not sure I want to take your time or the jury's time, Your Honor. The only point I wish to make on this is for damages one would think he should look at some of these things.

THE COURT: I think this is argument made to me to offer an expert on damages.

MR. GORSUCH: Your Honor has not ruled as a matter of law on this so until or unless it happens --

THE COURT: That's argument made to me at a later point.

MR. GORSUCH: Until or unless it's been ruled upon, the possibility of a sale has to be left open. If a possibility of the sale has to be left open, there are alternative causal factors.

THE COURT: I understand that. But this gentleman did not opine on any of these things.

MR. GORSUCH: We're assuming a set of facts that had not yet been proven.

THE COURT: And you're going to move to strike his testimony to say there's insufficient evidence.

MR. HANSEN: The other thing I want to point out is he can say that. Isn't the proper purpose of cross-examination here to show to the jury that an expert, there was something for the expert to look at and he chose not to?- Instead of looking at the real world, he chose to take what the lawyers told him when there's a wealth of other evidence that would have been something to be looked at. If he wanted to close his eyes to it --

THE COURT: I think that doesn't have any legal relevancy. I think that's sort of a so-what. If you ask if that is a document you listed and relied on, you can ask that, but then we move on. My understanding of his testimony is he didn't do this second half of the analysis.

MR. HANSEN: Yes, Your Honor.

END OF SIDE BAR CONFERENCE.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Dr. Nye, isn't it true, sir, that this is one of the documents you claimed in your report to have relied on for purposes of your analysis?

A. Could you show me the heading, what this document is?

THE COURT: Do you have a copy?

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Why don't I give you a copy of 282? Do you have a copy of your report?

A. No.

Q. Why don't I give you both. I'll hand you a copy of Morgan Stanley 924, which is your report, and a copy of Morgan Stanley in evidence 282, and maybe in the interest of time, Dr. Nye I'll direct you to --

THE COURT: You can take it back later. I do have that. I have too many papers already. Thanks.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. I'll direct you to Exhibit 3, page 4 of 4 at your report to see whether this, in fact, was one of documents you list as something you considered.

A. Exhibit 3 --

Q. Page 4 of 4?

A. Page 4 of 4.

MR. MARMER: Objection to the question.

MR. HANSEN: Please take that off the screen.

MR. MARMER: I have an objection.

THE COURT: You want to come up?

MR. MARMER: Yes.

SIDE BAR CONFERENCE:

MR. MARMER: What's happened is we're now confusing parts of the report. There's a section of the report with Exhibits identified as things he looked at for purposes of determining the market was efficient. If the question is should you have looked at this part to show that it was efficient or not, that's fine. But to try and ask this general question have you looked at anything at all for any purpose --

THE COURT: How do we know it's listed only to determine whether the market was efficient?

MR. HANSEN: I don't think it is.

THE COURT: I'm asking.

MR. BRODY: On page three, paragraph four of the report --

THE COURT: Let me read it. Let me read it first. How would we know that from reading that?

MR. BRODY: He says what's on the Exhibit we're looking at, just the Exhibit considered. The things he relied on are referenced in the report itself. I'm not aware of any reference to this document in the report itself.

MR. MARMER: What --

The court reporter just told me she couldn't hear anything I just said. In essence, I said there's no appropriate way to move from the market, segue to something else.

THE COURT: It's you can't just refer him to Exhibit 3. You have to refer him to the paragraph of his report and he can explain.

MR. HANSEN: He says his opinion --

THE COURT: He can explain to us what that paragraph means rather than jump into the Exhibit 3.

END OF SIDE BAR.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Dr. Nye, can you turn to page three of your report, paragraph four?

A. Okay.

Q. Do you state there the documents you considered for purposes of your analysis were listed in Exhibit 3?

A. States it right there.

MR. MARMER: May I ask the rest of the contemporaneous paragraph be read?

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, would you like the rest read?

THE COURT: Sure, if you don't have an objection.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Why don't you go ahead and read it aloud, the whole paragraph.

A. Paragraph four, "My opinions are based upon my professional knowledge and experience, as well as on a review of documents and information relevant to this matter and analysis of data. Documents considered are listed in Exhibit 3. Documents and other materials upon which I have relied as a basis for my opinions are cited in this report and its Exhibits. All documents and materials are the type typically relied on by experts in preparing this type of report. Analyses that are bases for my opinions are described in this report in its Exhibits, and result of those analyses are contained in this report and its Exhibits."

Q. And one of the documents that you identified in Exhibit 3 is this report that we had, this 282, correct?

A. Did you find it in here somewhere?

Q. You'll see page 4 of 4, Exhibit 3?

A. Page 4 of 4.

Q. Page 4 of 4 Exhibit 3?

A. Where?

Q. Do you recognize this as a -- this is from Prudential Securities, correct?

A. Have I got something wrong here?

Q. Can you see it?

A. This is 10-Q A.

Q. Do you see 282, which is the 892? Let's give you a copy with Bates numbers so you can verify it. I'm handing you a copy of Morgan Stanley 892, which is what we just displayed on the screen. Do you see the Bates numbers from that document as one of the documents you list here on your Exhibit 3 at page 4?

A. Exhibit 3, page 4 of 4 in my report, is that what you're talking about?

Q. Yes.

A. I do not see MS 892 anywhere.

Q. You do it by Bates ranges, right?

A. Oh, okay. Bates.

Q. 1392178?

A. 139, okay.

Q. Prudential Securities report dated August 7, '98, do you see that as one of the documents you incorporate as one of the Exhibits you relied on in your report?

A. I do.

Q. What effort did you make to check out any of the information contained in that report?

MR. MARMER: Objection; insufficient predicate for the question.

THE COURT: Overruled.

THE WITNESS: This is MS 892. What did I do to, what, check out information?

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. To investigate the assertions about the benefits of bankruptcy for Mr. Perelman.

MR. MARMER: Objection; no foundation.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. What efforts did you make -- what efforts did you make to check anything about the contents of that document that you relied on?

MR. MARMER: Objection; assumes a fact not in evidence.

THE COURT: Sir, did you rely on that document in issuing your report?

THE WITNESS: I certainly -- it's in here and I considered it. I mean, I'm trying to review it to see if I relied on it.

THE COURT: Okay.

THE WITNESS: And the question is did I rely on this?

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Actually, my question was --

A. In my opinions?

Q. My question was did you do anything to verify any of the information contained in that report as part of your report?

MR. MARMER: And I have an objection to that question.

THE COURT: What's the legal objection?

MR. MARMER: Lack of foundation.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. What did you do with this document when you considered it?

A. Considered it. I reviewed it.

Q. Did you ask any questions about it?

A. I don't think so, no.

Q. Did you ask anybody for the plaintiff what this business about bankruptcy was all about?

A. No.

Q. Did you do an investigation or any analysis of the issue about whether Sunbeam took on excessive debt as a consequence of these various accusations in 1998?

MR. MARMER: Objection; lack of foundation; repetitious.

THE COURT: Sustained. I think we discussed this at the bench.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Dr. Nye, did you investigate the lockups, how they played in at various points in time?

A. You mean the 90-day -- yes, certainly I considered those as part of the reason I didn't use the liquidity discount.

Q. And in December of 1998, you know, sir, that all of the original lockups that had been agreed to as part of the contract in February 1998 had expired, correct?

A. All the lockups would have expired, yes.

Q. So there's no contractual reason why Mr. Perelman wasn't free to sell the shares at that point based on the lockups, correct?

MR. MARMER: Objection.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. The lockups were no longer an issue with respect to sales by December of '98, right?

A. The lockups themselves and the original agreements were no longer at issue. Later agreement in August of '98 extended the lockup 25 percent until August of 2001 and the shares never had been registered.

Q. And the new lockup agreement that was agreed to between Sunbeam and the plaintiff was in August of 1998?

A. I think so, yeah.

Q. That had nothing to do with anything charged against Morgan Stanley in this case, correct?

MR. MARMER: Objection; misstates the record.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Did you do anything to determine whether Morgan Stanley should be charged with the consequences of a further lockup that plaintiff agreed to in August of 1998?

MR. MARMER: Objection; contrary to facts.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. What, if anything, did you do to investigate the circumstances of the second lockup agreement entered into by plaintiff in August of 1998?

A. What did I do? I recognized that in my second damage analysis they wouldn't be able to sell those during the first quarter of 2000.

Q. Did you do any investigation as to why that lockup agreement was entered into?

A. No.

Q. Did you know anything about the circumstances under which it arose?

A. It arose under some negotiations, I'm sure.

Q. But you didn't know what the negotiations were?

A. The negotiations in August? Presumably at least part of it was about eliminating lockout on 75 percent of the shares and extending the lockout on 25 percent of the shares until August of 2001.

Q. You're saying presumably. Are you guessing there or do you know?

A. I think I just explained to you that was the time it happened. And that's what happened. And then you asked me what happened. I said, well, I know that happened.

Q. Do you know what the plaintiff got in return for agreeing to further lockup in August 1998?

MR. MARMER: Objection, Your Honor. We have a ruling on this.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Did you ask the plaintiff's side to give you all the facts and circumstances surrounding that lockup before incorporating it into your analysis?

MR. MARMER: Objection, Your Honor. We're going into the same area.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. With all respect, Dr. Nye, did you think as an expert you needed to get the facts and circumstances about this second lockup before incorporating that lockup into your analysis in this case?

A. I knew what the lockout prescribed, and that's how it affected my analysis, and I considered it.

Q. But you didn't feel it incumbent on you to learn all the facts and circumstances about the lockup to know whether it was appropriate to build that into your analysis?

A. I knew it was appropriate to build it into my analysis. I knew they couldn't sell them under the lockout until August of 2001.

Q. But you didn't know why they entered into the lockout?

MR. MARMER: Objection.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Dr. Nye, by December of 1998 under the original lockup, there was no longer a contractual restriction on the Sunbeam shares held by Mr. Perelman, right?

A. Under the original agreement there would have been no restrictions by the end of December '98, right.

Q. Did you attempt to value the Sunbeam shares held by Mr. Perelman, the 14.1 million shares at year-end 1998?

MR. MARMER: Objection. May we approach, please?

THE COURT: Sure.

SIDE BAR CONFERENCE:

MR. MARMER: Your Honor, there has been no showing by Morgan Stanley of either of the conditions Your Honor has required before they're able to elicit testimony about needs for values. They have not established a legal right to sell the shares or that a liquidity discount could be laid, so they're trying to do it with our expert where they can't do it with theirs.

MR. GORSUCH: It's actually just the opposite. Plaintiff hasn't met its burden, motion limine 16, of establishing a date used. What we're seeking to explore is whether he looked at other dates. And, in fact, we have submitted a disclosure to Your Honor explaining just exactly how they could have sold privately as of December 31st, 1998. We have as much in the record on this if not more than they do.

MR. HANSEN: We also have evidence on that date year-end 1998 they did an internal valuation of the shares, which is what I expect to now ask him about, did he consider their own internal valuation and to show he ignored -- internal valuation of the plaintiff in this case.

MR. MARMER: When we get to that part, I'll object, too, or we can discuss it now. At the moment we're discussing whether he can ask him about valuations at points in time prior to under Your Honor's ruling where you ruled there has to be a predicate.

THE COURT: I agree there's not a predicate. Do we want to talk about the 450? It's the same issue, isn't it?

MR. MARMER: Yes. This is an attempt to turn a damage expert into a reliance expert.

MR. HANSEN: No, it is not. It is highly relevant and probative evidence as to plaintiff, Mr. Perelman, who conducts valuation under penalties of, criminal penalties of the Federal Government and he submits it to the government or submits the number to the government, and this expert comes in and talks about how he just has a zero number. I think it's absolutely appropriate and necessary to ask him if he considered this information from his own client in assessing valuation of the back end number as opposed to assuming zero. We have not only the predicate, we have uncontested evidence on this point. I expect him to be able to be asked did he consider it? Why not? Did they give it to him? They didn't. I think that goes to everything that's afoot in terms of expert testimony.

In terms of the predicate, the lockup expired. There is no showing. There is not any ability of a private sale. They're the ones that have to establish a predicate for a subsequent valuation date, not us, under, Your Honor, motion in limine. Unless we have to bring him back in our case, which I would hate to do, we want to establish he ignored the number on the 450 million value placed on year-end both 1998 and 1999.

THE COURT: What's the response?

MR. MARMER: We've argued this many times already. There is no showing of the predicate required by them. We've discussed this on three occasions. Mr. Hansen had a shot the other day. We did it when we were talking about the demonstratives, and here we are again.

THE COURT: You know, back to, I think eventually the 450 will come in. I'm not sure the relevance for this witness, other than -- as I understand -- are you presenting, are you going to argue at all he has given any expert opinion about the second half of the equation?

MR. GORSUCH: Sure.

MR. MARMER: Sure, but not in any of the areas they're questioning.

MR. GORSUCH: That's a misrepresentation. He said the bottom number should be zero or 46 million. He's rendered an opinion on those two things. Your Honor, he's done it February 5th and December 1999 without any showing or any conclusion by a court at all that they couldn't have sold before that. He picked them out of the air.

MR. HANSEN: He didn't come in and give a number valuation and give it to others to say they can't ever sell. He came in as an expert and gave two numbers. I agree there's nothing to the second number, but that's the problem with an expert getting up and giving testimony. He has to have expertise. That's what I'm trying to expose through the cross-examination. If he had offered no testimony about the bottom number, maybe we'd have a different argument. But with him saying the bottom number is zero or $46 million, that's presented with the rubric of expertise.

MR. MARMER: Because this is expert opinion, the expert opinion is not on the topic of whether it could be sold as to which he's assumed. The economic expertise is his view that if there is no realizable value, there is a zero value associated with it. So I think we were going to hear a bunch of cross-examination questions about all the ways you can have value if you can't sell it, and this expert is prepared to say no. That's his area of expertise.

THE COURT: I think the 450 is fair to ask him about.

END OF SIDE BAR CONFERENCE.

THE COURT: You want to keep going for a bit? All right. You're going to tell us when you need a break, right?

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. I'm directing you to December of 1998. After the first lockup expires did you receive from your client, Coleman (Parent) Holdings, evidence of its own internal valuation on the Sunbeam shares as of that date?

A. As of December 1998, their own internal valuation? Not that I recall.

MR. HANSEN: Could we put up, please, number Morgan Stanley 857 in evidence?

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. And I'll give you a copy, Dr. Nye. I'm handing a copy of Morgan Stanley 857 in evidence. And isn't it true, sir, you were provided with a copy of this just a few weeks ago but after your report was submitted in the case?

A. Oh, sure, yes, I've seen this.

Q. And this was an internal valuation dated as of year-end 1998 of a variety of assets, including the Sunbeam shares, correct?

A. It says estimated fair value calculation at the top.

Q. Now you weren't given that --

A. That was your question, right? That's what it says.

Q. And you were not given that document by the plaintiff for part of your original work in the case before you did your report, correct?

A. I don't believe so, no.

Q. You weren't given that document until a couple of weeks ago, correct?

A. I think it was longer than that ago, but I've been here for two weeks.

Q. How long ago?

A. A monthish. Sometime recently in the last --

Q. After your report, correct?

A. After my report.

Q. After your first deposition was taken, correct?

A. I believe so.

Q. And when your deposition was taken, you said you were going to ignore this document, didn't you?

A. Did I use those exact words?

THE COURT: You can't reverse the roles. Okay?

THE WITNESS: Sorry.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Do you remember?

A. No, I just didn't think I would have used those exact words, but it's possible.

Q. You said you were going to ignore it in your report, correct?

A. Could you show me where I said that?

Q. Sure. Why don't you look at your March 11 deposition, page 68, lines 1 to 18, see if that refreshes your recollection.

A. What was the page number?

Q. Page 68, lines 1 to 18.

A. Is that the little one?

Q. Yeah, the March 11 deposition.

A. Page 60, did you say eight?

Q. 68, lines 1 to 18?

A. 58.

Q. 68.

A. Okay. It says -- you ask me if I'm going to ignore it, and I say, correct, right.

Q. So you said you were going to ignore it?

A. Right.

Q. You weren't going to consider it once you were provided with it?

A. I considered it. I just -- that's looking at it. Am I going to use it or be influenced by it? That's what I mean by ignore. No, it does not change my opinion or add to its bases.

Q. You agreed that you said you were going to ignore the document, right?

A. That's what the deposition says.

Q. And you also were asked whether you were going to consider that document now that you had seen it, correct?

Lines 14 through 16, please.

A. 14 through 16 on the same page?

Q. Page 68, yes.

A. Okay. I'm trying to get the terms straight, but, no, consider it, no. I place no value on it.

Q. You said you weren't even going to consider this document, correct?

A. That's what that says, yes.

Q. Well, that's what you said, yes?

A. Yes, indeed.

Q. And this document shows that as of year-end 1998 the value placed by Mr. Perelman on the Sunbeam common, you just follow across the line, was $450 million, correct?

MR. MARMER: Objection; misstates the record.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. What is the figure in the column for Sunbeam common, Dr. Nye?

A. It says -- Move to the left. Move your pointer to the left. It says Sunbeam common, 14.1 million shares, value six, market value 85 million.

Q. What is that for the adjusted 12-31-98 total?

A. I'm pointing to value. You said the actual value. The actual value is the left three columns.

Q. What's the adjusted value total?

A. Adjusted value 12-31-98 there's a 450 million there.

Q. And are you aware this $450 million number was used by Mr. Perelman to come up with a fair value estimate for his holdings of $5 billion that was then submitted to the Federal Government?

MR. MARMER: Objection. Misstates the record.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Did you know how that $450 million valuation for Sunbeam was used, Dr. Nye?

A. I think it's illustrated right behind you. This is all I know because this is the only place this number appears in the vast reams of documents except a year later's version. It says 450 million. Down at the bottom right corner it says, it adds it up, and that 450 is part of the 5.7 billion. Then there's a number presumably from Mr. Perelman says, "Okay to use 5 billion" for a purpose that I -- it was -- I don't believe it was reporting to the government as you implied. It was an unaudited statement in his audited financials.

Q. Do you know one way or the other, Dr. Nye, whether this $5.0 billion figure for 1998 was used by Mr. Perelman in a financial statement that was then provided to agencies of the United States Federal Government?

MR. MARMER: Objection; relevance.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. What was the basis for your statement a minute ago, Dr. Nye, that you don't believe this number was submitted to any agencies of the Federal Government?

A. Because I was aware that it was an unaudited page, the famous F-3A, in their audited financial statements which included a number about this $5 billion. I'm sorry. I just couldn't foresee the government being interested in an unaudited statement.

Q. Do you know one way or the other whether or not that page was provided to the Federal Government?

A. I don't know whether when they handed that in it was provided.

Q. So you don't know?

A. It certainly wasn't part of what was required.

Q. Well, do you know what was required?

A. Sure, an audited financial statement. And F-3A, page F-3A was unaudited.

Q. Do you know what the Pension Benefit Guarantee Corporation required that lead him to submit a paper to the Federal Government?

A. No.

Q. Do you know what the Office of the Thrift Supervision may have required?

A. I don't know what they might have required, no.

Q. Have you reviewed Mr. Perelman's testimony?

A. No.

Q. Let's go -- you said this document, this figure, this $450 million figure appeared nowhere but in this document and then some subsequent document, correct?

A. A year later, I believe it's a year later, 12-31-99, there's -- the same number is in place.

Q. Let's go to 822, please, in evidence. Is this the document you're referring to, Dr. Nye, fair value calculation dated 12-31 -- 19 -- I think it's the second page.

A. Looks like the same document. There we go.

Q. Second page of 822, 12-31-1999. Is that the document you were referring to a minute ago in your testimony, estimated fair value calculation, the $450 million valuation?

A. There we go. That's the later version.

Q. Is that the one you were thinking of?

A. Yes.

Q. This is a year later?

A. A year later.

Q. At this point in time based on your alternative damages model you've projected that plaintiff could sell some shares, correct?

A. In April, yeah, during the first quarter 2000, correct.

Q. You've said that the date you used was December 6, 1999 for projecting plaintiff's ability to sell, correct?

A. Basically it could have been able to sell in the first quarter is what I said, and that's based on resolution of the registration in the same timely way. it was with the public shareholders.

Q. Which resolution was December 6, 1999, correct?

A. And they got the shares January of 2000.

Q. This relates to part of the period you've covered in your alternative damages calculation, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. And, again, in a document prepared by Mr. Perelman or his employees, the Sunbeam common has an adjusted valuation of $450 million, correct?

A. If you look to the left -- oh, you asked that question. It does. It says under a column adjusted 12-31-99 value. Under total it says 450.0, right.

Q. And, in fact, the sum total of these adjusted values comes to $4,736.700,000, correct, Dr. Nye?

A. It appears to.

Q. Do you know whether or not this formed the basis of a submission based on this year to governmental authorities for an aggregate fair value of $5 billion by Mr. Perelman?

A. Yeah, I don't know that, no.

Q. These are, neither of these documents are documents that you chose to consider in doing your work, correct?

A. Well, like I said, I considered them. The value added was, there was none.

Q. You already told us at least as to the 12-31-98 document you weren't going to consider it, that was your deposition testimony, correct?

Question, are you going to consider it?

A. I think I've explained three or four times when I say now in this context I'm using the word "consider" to mean I looked at it. I saw it. If I don't choose to put any value on it, it goes no further. That applies to both of these documents.

Q. You were asked at your deposition are you going to consider it now that you've seen it, and your answer was no, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. So if you use Mr. Perelman's valuation and the federally filed Sunbeam 10-Q A to do a damages calculation, you'd come up with $74 million, wouldn't you, Dr. Nye?

MR. MARMER: Objection, Your Honor; misstates the record; misstates the analysis; lacks foundation in the evidence.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. You chose not to use either of these numbers in your work, right, Dr. Nye?

A. That's definitely correct.

Q. Dr. Nye I want to just talk to you briefly about what you did in your work on the case, and then we'll be pretty much done. You filed a report dated December 7 of 2004?

A. Sounds right.

Q. You didn't write it, though, did you?

A. You know, I -- in terms of actually typing the words, no.

Q. Your assistant, Miss Nettatimes (phonetic) typed out the words?

A. She typed out the words.

Q. You made no material changes?

A. I don't recall any material changes.

Q. You relied on the attorneys for Coleman to provide you with materials to form your opinion, correct?

A. We certainly received documents from Coleman (Parent) Holdings, and we've got some documents ourselves.

Q. You didn't even bother to review all the documents you were provided with?

A. I didn't review personally all the documents, no.

Q. You didn't bother to review Mr. Perelman's deposition before you did your report, correct?

A. I didn't personally, no.

Q. You didn't bother to talk to Mr. Perelman about his views prior to issuing your report, correct?

A. No, I did not talk to Mr. Perelman.

Q. You never met with Mr. Perelman prior to issuing your report, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. You didn't bother to talk to Mr. Slotkin, the chief financial officer, before issuing your opinion, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. You didn't bother to talk to Mr. Winoker, the treasurer, before you issue your report?

A. That's correct.

Q. Didn't bother to read his deposition?

A. Mr. Winoker, I don't believe so.

Q. You were retained in late 2003 or early 2004; is that right?

A. Early 2004.

Q. And you signed your report December 7, 2004?

A. That's correct.

Q. And between the time you were retained and the very end of November just before you submitted your report you had spent a total of 31 and a half hours in this case?

A. Sounds about right.

MR. HANSEN: Can -- we have one matter, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Sure.

SIDE BAR CONFERENCE:

MR. HANSEN: I was going to try to impeach Dr. Nye with cases that he previously testified in where his testimony was excluded.

MR. MARMER: We object to that. We think the law is quite clear that the rulings in other cases about why an expert should or should not come in are not properly matters to be brought in before a jury.

THE COURT: No. I appreciate you coming up.

END OF SIDE BAR CONFERENCE.

MR. HANSEN: Dr. Nye, I have no further questions.

THE COURT: Thank you. Mr. Marmer, do you have other questions?

MR. MARMER: I do.

REDIRECT EXAMINATION

BY MR. MARMER:

Q. Dr. Nye, Morgan Stanley's counsel asked you some questions about your report. Would you tell the ladies and gentleman of the jury how you go about having the report, how you had this report prepared and what, if any, role it played.

A. The standard procedure, we have a staff and we get an assignment. We had an assignment. We meet, discuss what's to be done, what analysis need to be performed, basically get rolling on those kinds of things. Then as they come through, the report starts to take shape. We discuss it, you know, as a group in meetings. And Miss Nettatimes (phonetic), she's done all but half her dissertation at the London School of Economics, and she's been with me 15 years. She in this case put pen to paper and wrote up the report. It is reviewed by the group, discussed, and then ultimately everything is subject to my approval and done under my direction.

Q. Was there anything about the preparation of this report that you did for this case that was different in kind or matter from how you typically go about handling these matters?

A. No.

Q. Dr. Nye, you were asked some questions about Morgan Stanley Exhibit -- let's start with 157. Do you have 857?

A. I had them memorized but then --

Q. Let me just see if you have 857 in front of you here.

MR. HANSEN: Do you want it displayed? I'll put it up.

MR. MARMER: That's okay. I think we'll be able to do this quickly.

BY MR. MARMER:

Q. Morgan Stanley's counsel asked you questions about the column under adjusted value, and that shows the $450 million. What weight, if any, did you give to that number?

A. Well, basically none. I mean --

Q. Why?

A. The recognition of the actual value on 12-31-98 is in the two columns to the left at $6 a share, so the total is 85 million. This adjusted value there's no basis for the number, no analysis, no anything. It's just a number placed here under adjusted value. And in the column to the right apparently these are the bases for the adjusted value. It simply says, capital restructuring -- capital restructuring and EBIT improvements. In other words, it's, you know, if we improve it, it will improve. It's kind of a wish list thing. It would be nice if it was worth 450, and maybe they thought if they worked real hard they could get it up to 450, but there's no basis whatsoever for at this point saying it's worth 450, 450 million.

And more to the point, it was obviously dead wrong because the company went bankrupt and never approached 450 million.

Q. Counsel also asked you questions about MS 822, the second page of MS 822. Let me see if I can help find that for you. If you could find the front page... That's 857. Do we have 822 up here or no? Here, you can borrow mine.

A. Okay.

Q. I'd like you to look at the second page of that Exhibit, which is, I believe, the page that counsel was directing your attention to, and that's the page that has the 12-31-1999 values on it.

A. Correct.

Q. And, again, Dr. Nye, this $450 million figure appears there. And let me ask you why did you or did you not give that any weight?

A. Didn't give it any weight. Exactly the same number, 450 million out of the blue. No analysis. Same comment to the right, capital restructuring and EBIT improvements. And it's sitting next to an actual price, and it's now dropped to $4.18, so the total value of the actual value of Sunbeam or the stock at this point, the Sunbeam stock is $59 million.

Q. Now when counsel pointed out to you that this is roughly the same time period you looked at for your alternative damages calculation, do you recall that?

A. Yes.

Q. Just, again, very briefly, what was it you were trying to do in the alternative damages calculation? Let's see if we can get that back up here. What was it you were trying to do with this calculation?

A. Basically just under the assumption that the shares could have been registered and salable in the first quarter of 2000, that 75 percent of them could have been sold during that quarter at an average price of $4.35.

Q. And you used an average price of $4.35 in that calculation, right?

A. Right.

Q. What was the per share price that appears as the actual per share price on Exhibit that counsel showed you?

A. $4 basically 19 cents rounded two decimal points.

Q. And what, if any, impact would it have been on your analysis had you used the 4.1875 number instead of the $4.35?

A. It wouldn't have been somewhat lower, slightly lower in the damages, slightly larger.

Q. So the damages would have been what?

A. A little bit larger.

Q. Did you in any way attempt to skew your analysis by using the 4.32 instead of the 4.1875?

A. Oh, no.

Q. Now when you were looking at this analysis here and you were trying to calculate out the values, and, again, let's look back at your original damage, you said, sir, that you assumed that there was no way that CPH could sell any of its stock and actually did not sell any of its stock until it became worthless; is that right?

A. That's correct.

Q. Okay. Did you as a matter of your own judgment and analysis consider whether there was value associated with the ownership of the 14.1 million shares that CPH had if CPH could not sell or dispose of its stock?

MR. HANSEN: Objection.

THE COURT: You all want to come up?

SIDE BAR CONFERENCE:

MR. HANSEN: I thought Mr. Marmer went to great lengths to say Dr. Nye wasn't offering opinions about this period. I explored whether he missed evidence he should have considered. But he's going into now a new opinion not previously disclosed.

THE COURT: What we're asking is whether the stock had value to plaintiff even if it could not be sold?

MR. MARMER: Correct.

THE COURT: And do we think that's an opinion that was disclosed?

MR. MARMER: Yes.

THE COURT: Can you show me?

MR. MARMER: I don't know if it's in the report, but it certainly was in the deposition.

MR. HANSEN: It's not in his report. It's not disclosed.

THE COURT: Why don't we give them a five-minute stretch break because Mr. Cruz and Mr. Williams are looking sleepy.

END OF SIDE BAR CONFERENCE.

THE COURT: We're going to give you a five-minute stretch break. Don't talk to anybody. Don't talk about the case. The kitchen is closed, but if you want to bring in a soda, feel free.

(The jury left the courtroom.)

THE COURT: Dr. Nye, I'm going to ask you to wait outside as well.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

MR. SCAROLA: If you'd like to, you can use the back room there. Your choice.

THE COURT: As long as you don't wander, you can go out that way.

Okay. Where do you think an opinion on this subject was disclosed?

MR. MARMER: We're looking for that. Let me see if we can find that. Maybe we can come back at the end of the break.

THE COURT: Scheduling, in all honesty, I think we better ask the jurors to come back at 9:30 tomorrow. I need to leave before 4:00, and I don't want to cut into the trial day any more than we have to.

MR. SOLOVY: Your Honor, I'd like to make a point while it's still fresh. Morgan Stanley filed motion, at least we got it late last night for a mistrial based on the contention that Mr. Perelman disclosed settlement information that was improper and contrary to the statute.

THE COURT: Are you talking about with Sunbeam?

MR. SOLOVY: Pardon me?

THE COURT: With Sunbeam?

MR. SOLOVY: Yes. Now with Dr. Nye on the stand -- and that happened, it didn't -- if it happened, that was as a result of questions Mr. Hansen asked Mr. Perelman. And right this afternoon with Dr. Nye sitting on the stand Mr. Hansen repeatedly asked questions about the detail of that Sunbeam settlement agreement. They can't have it both ways, Your Honor.

THE COURT: I'm not sure what the motion is. I would have to go back and look at my notes from Mr. Perelman. My recollection is the offer of that -- he offered that information without prompting.

MR. HANSEN: He did.

THE COURT: You can pull that out. We don't need to do this right now.

MR. HANSEN: We don't need to do it right now.

MR. SOLOVY: My point is he makes a motion for mistrial based upon disclosure of settlement agreement, then he's asking Dr. Nye to do the same thing.

THE COURT: We're not arguing the motion for mistrial now. You have more things for me?

MS. BEYNON: Yes.

THE COURT: Okay. Great. And we'll be back in just a couple minutes, then.

(A recess was taken from 4:31 p.m. to 4:38 p.m.)

THE COURT: Did we find what we were looking for?

MR. MARMER: We haven't been able to find what we were looking for, so I will simply abandon that question.

THE COURT: Are we ready to find Dr. Nye?

MR. MARMER: Yes. Let me see if he's back there.

THE COURT: I don't think he is. I think he went out front. So we need Dr. Nye and the jurors.

The court reporter reminded me defense counsel were not here when I asked Mr. Marmer if he had located the source of the opinion. He said he was going to abandon that. I just assumed you were in the courtroom. I apologize.

MR. HANSEN: Apologize, Your Honor.

THE COURT: No, I apologize I asked a question not realizing you all were not present.

MR. HANSEN: Do we have a sense whether we'll get through Dr. Nye in terms of juror questions?

THE COURT: Juror questions I need to think of. Probably not if they've been as prolific in the past as they have been, but I guess we'll see.

Are we ready for the jurors, then?

MR. MARMER: Yes.

MR. SCAROLA: That's what we'll be able to do between 9:30 and 10:00 o'clock.

THE COURT: Or between 8:00 and 8:30.

MR. SCAROLA: No, I mean in front of the jury.

THE COURT: Sure. Do you know how much longer you expect your redirect to be?

MR. MARMER: I'm guessing, I'm going to certainly try to do it by 5:00. Whether I get there or not, just we'll see.

(The jury entered the courtroom.)

THE COURT: Okay. We're back. Mr. Marmer.

BY MR. MARMER:

Q. Dr. Nye, Morgan Stanley's counsel showed you an internal accounting document, I believe, MS 1000. Do you have that still up there?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And the question is did the numbers on MS 1000 make a difference to you?

A. No.

Q. Why?

A. Well, it's a calculation of acquisition costs by Sunbeam, not by Coleman. The prices used were an average of February 27th, which is different company than the one Coleman got, and the day of the announcement, which is only one day during the period when the price would have been at the combination. And the price includes, you know, a discount for the restrictions, and my review of any discount for restrictions was that none would be appropriate.

Q. And let me just ask you --

A. Other than that, this is the number of shares times various market values. There's no information there.

Q. Dr. Nye, in terms of accounting matters, could you just describe to the ladies of the gentlemen of the jury how, if at all, accounting rules and accounting numbers do or do not impact the economic analysis that someone in your field does?

MR. HANSEN: Objection to new opinion, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Overruled.

THE WITNESS: Accounting numbers are basically a history of the ins, the money in and out of the company over the past. You keep track of your money, and it keeps balances of what the picture is looking from the past. Value is a present value of the future earnings. So there's sort of like one is the financial historian; one is a financial projection. When you buy a share of stock, you don't get the stuff that happened; you get the future earnings.

Indeed, one of the reasons you go into business in the first place is that the market value of what you start is bigger than what it costs you to start it. That's why you do it. Otherwise, you wouldn't go into business.

So with that start, obviously there are things -- things can get out of whack. If you acquire a company, it has a book value of assets, which is the market value of assets. Usually it's less. So when you have to record what you paid for it, you record -- their book value moves over, but you paid more than that so for -- so you call that goodwill so you can show the full amount you paid for the company. The amortization of that goodwill, you know, can, you know, not -- first of all, it's a tax write-off. It changes your expenses for tax purposes. Is this what you had in mind?

BY MR. MARMER:

Q. Just briefly.

A. Briefly. Basically, like I said, accounting is an attempt to try to provide a picture of the financial history, and it just, it can't always get at the real value of the enterprise and for the most part doesn't. And then throw in tax considerations, and then you've got a whole bunch of other things.

In other words, like for Sunbeam's purposes 15-percent discount is a good deal because they can write that off. You know, be less, or it would be less amortization of goodwill to write off and their earnings will look better in the future.

Q. And, Dr. Nye, you were asked some questions by Morgan Stanley's counsel about other cases in which you've given opinions. Do you recall that?

A. Yes.

Q. Now is it true, sir, that in some of those cases you valued the stock both for purposes of the actual, the value what someone paid for it that day as well as what the value was on the same day?

A. It's not technically the value of the stock. You're trying to value the inflation of the stock. What it sold for on that day, what it should have sold for, the difference is the inflation.

Q. Did you do that here?

A. No.

Q. Why not?

A. The goal here was to, my understanding was to estimate the benefit of the bargain, what did Coleman and Sunbeam, what value did they place on those 14.1 million Sunbeam shares (Coleman) that they got. Once the announcement is made, the market price is set for us. We don't have to estimate it. We don't have to add things up or look in margins.

Millions of investors worldwide bid in that marketplace, and that's the value. So we have an objective hard value of what this combination is worth. Coleman received 14.1 million shares of those shares that had an objective hard value.

Then in terms of using it, you know, an average over a period, that is to avoid, as I tried to explain earlier, it's the stocks basically each and every day have some company specific news that is revealed. It's obviously good or bad so it can plus or minus. Can't be anything else. The next day it's fair valued. Again, new stuff comes out that's either plus or minus. Those ups or downs, you know, can make a stock a little bit higher on one day, for our purposes here make it a little bit higher than it should be. The next day it will be lower because this is all information that came out since the negotiation.

So basically the idea about the average is to average out those ups and downs so that you get a good, you know, good estimate of the core value. How far did I go afield there?

Q. Let me just ask you some questions about liquidity discounts, if I may. Morgan Stanley's counsel showed you some instances where Sunbeam took a liquidity discount. Did you do so?

A. No, I didn't. I mean, neither did Coleman in reporting.

Q. When you say neither did Coleman, what do you mean?

A. Coleman (Parent) Holdings did not book the value of the Sunbeam shares they owned at a discount.

Q. Now why did you not take a liquidity discount?

A. A liquidity discount is a discount that would be necessary to cover any costs you would incur associated with these restrictions. So according to utility theory, basically the costs you would incur would be if you -- if the restrictions prevented you from optimizing your portfolio.

Q. Okay. You mentioned --

A. I'm not quite through yet.

Q. I'm sorry.

A. I was just pausing because that sounds like mud. From optimizing your portfolio. Mr. Perelman already had a very large well diversified portfolio. He was in eight different industries. He didn't have to sell any shares to optimize his portfolio. So he wasn't diversifying any risk, so there wasn't any cost associated with that. There was never any indication in the discussions I read that the restrictions, the lockout restrictions, the three months, six months and nine-month restrictions that CPH planned on doing, that they planned on doing anything with those shares in which those restrictions would cause the value to decline, in other words, they were going to invest in it, hold it. I don't think there was never an indication they were worried about having to sell or anything. So there is no cost there. Sunbeam was required to register the shares at its own expense when they came off lockout, so there's no cost there.

This is a large New York Stock Exchange company with lots of information out about it. Most of these discounts for restricted shares are with tightly held companies, owner, operator entrepreneur type of companies where you need to offer shares at a discount to get in outsiders who will monitor and signal other outsiders what's going on with the company, so you can, you know... so there's no monitoring or signaling costs here either.

So basically when you -- I mean, the SEC, the IRS, GAAP, everybody says when you look at a discount, you can't do it cookie cutter. You have to do it case by case, add up the costs and discount, and in this case there simply weren't any identifiable costs.

Q. Let me turn to another area, Dr. Nye. Morgan Stanley counsel asked you some questions about various dates that could have been selected in the damage figures.

MR. MARMER: Tim, can you put up the chart with the averages?

BY MR. MARMER:

Q. Of course, the average you used was the 48.26. I believe Morgan Stanley's attorneys asked you what would happen to the damage calculation if you had used March 2nd, 45.63. Do you remember that?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. I think he also asked you what would have happened if you used March 30 as a date, right?

A. That's correct.

Q. Let's look at some of these other dates, and I want to ask you about what would happen to your damage calculations if you used them.

MR. MARMER: Can you guys see or can you see on your screens?

BY MR. MARMER:

Q. This is your average of 48.26. We looked at March 2nd. What would happen if you had used it March 3rd as your date? Would your damages -- what would happen to your damage calculation compared to the number you actually used?

MR. HANSEN: Objection; new opinion.

THE COURT: Overruled.

THE WITNESS: Looks like it would be about a dollar and a half per share, dollar 60 per share higher, 20, 20 plus million dollars more.

BY MR. MARMER:

Q. So instead of $680 million, what would approximately be your damage number?

A. 700 million.

Q. If you had used instead of March 3rd, March 4th, what would happen to your damage figure?

A. That would be 52, so, my goodness, that would be $733 million.

Q. And if you had used, then, we see coming back down a little bit again, March, I think we're now down to March 5, aren't we?

A. Yes. 728 million.

Q. Rather than have you do each of these, is it fair to say, Doctor, that what -- look up to the period through March 19th. Are all of those when you look at all those numbers, other than March 2, are any of those numbers lower or higher than the 48.26? Where do they land?

A. Outside of March 2nd, they're all higher.

Q. Now you had previously said that you used the entire averaging period from March 2nd to March 30. Let me just ask you this. If you instead opted to use the period March 2 instead of March 18 and used that average, would the number you had come up with been lower than the 28.26?

A. It would obviously have been higher.

Q. Why didn't you use March 2 instead of March 18?

A. I think basically just to be conservative.

Q. When you say you're trying to be conservative, in what way is that conservative?

A. Not to be cherry picking, to include the lower prices as well as the higher prices.

Q. From March 17 to March 30, what is it -- sorry -- March 19 through March 30, what is it about those dates that causes you to believe it was just conservative to add them in?

A. Well, I think in those dates the announcement that they weren't going to make, might not make their first quarter revenues sort of was the, sort of the first negative news since the announcement of the deal, and it took a little bit of a shine off the shoes of the combination of Sunbeam and Coleman and really made it, you know, a slightly different company than what was purchased, which would be reflected in the prices from March 2nd to March 18th. This second company is a little bit different. That's information that came out since the negotiation.

Q. So, Dr. Nye, let me ask you, sir, when you chose to use March 2nd through March 30th, what is it you were trying to accomplish?

A. Basically try to average out the everyday ups and downs associated with the stock. Every day new information comes out which wouldn't be information known at the negotiation. Fortunately, it's equally likely to be good or bad, and it has an expectation of zero. So rather than catching a few days where it was high or low, basically just took an average to average it out. And the more numbers in the average, the tighter the fit.

MR. MARMER: May I have a moment, please?

THE COURT: Sure.

MR. MARMER: Thank you very much.

THE COURT: Okay. Do we have anything to shuffle?

JUROR #8: Just one.

THE COURT: It's hard to shuffle.

?? report that we would like to use in the course of this examination. Perhaps we can move for the admission of them as they come up.

THE COURT: Absolutely.

BY MS. BEYNON:

Q. Could you take a look at Exhibit A to your report, Mr. Ross?

A. Yes. I don't believe it's labeled here as Exhibit A, but it's the resume' that follows page 15 of the text..

Q. Very well. Does that accurately state your background?

A. Yes, it does.

Q. Could you please describe your educational background for the Court?

A. Just looking at the copy here, it looks like it was copied on every other page.

THE COURT: It does.

MR. SCAROLA: Covers half his credentials.

MR. MARMER: Can I give him a complete copy?

THE COURT: I have the complete copy you guys submitted. And I've already read it.

MS. BEYNON: My apologies.

THE COURT: Sure. I'll keep the copy you sent ahead.

BY MS. BEYNON:

Q. If you could describe your background for the Court, Mr. Ross?

MR. SCAROLA: Since the Court has already read it, and to save time, we would agree that if Mr. Ross were asked appropriate questions regarding his background, training, and experience that his answers would be as reflected on that document.

THE COURT: We're agreeing if he adopts it I can mark it for identification, and that way I'll remember everything he said?

MR. SCAROLA: Correct.

MS. BEYNON: Very well.

MR. HANSEN: I'd also ask for our ability to offer the whole report just as a summary of the testimony. We understand the hearsay objection, but this is an informal proceeding. We think it would be helpful for the Court to have in one place, what we believe is a concise and clear summary, and subject to cross examination. we won't belabor it, but if the Court could have it before you proceeding forward, including the exhibits, it would save time.

THE COURT: I assume there's no objection to my marking the report as an exhibit for identification with the understanding we have it.

We will mark the whole thing, including the exhibits, for identification. And I understand he has adopted his resume' as a fair statement of his credentials. Correct, sir?

THE WITNESS: Yes.

BY MS. BEYNON:

Q. What were your areas of specialization as a graduate student, Mr. Ross?

A. As a graduate student I specialized in three areas -- financial economics, economics, and labor economics.

Q. How did you complete the specialization requirements?

A. When I was a graduate student, there were two ways to complete the specialization requirements; one was to take a certain number of courses in a particular area; the second was to pass a Ph.D. level general examination.

MR. SCAROLA: Excuse me --

THE WITNESS: With respect to economics and financial economics, I met the requirement in both ways with respect to --

MR. SCAROLA: Excuse me. May I interrupt for one moment.

In light of the court allowing an exception for the defense expert witness, may we have the Court's permission to have Dr. Nye present during Mr. Ross's testimony?

THE COURT: Any objection?

MS. BEYNON: No, Your Honor.

MR. SCAROLA: He's not here right now, but we're bringing him over.

THE COURT: Okay.

BY MS. BEYNON:

Q. Would you please describe what the area of finance is?

A. Yes. Finance is the area of economics that concerns investments, valuation, financial institutions, financial markets, corporate finance.

Q. And did you study the valuations of options and warrants while you were a student at the University of Chicago?

A. Yes, I took a course that focused entirely on options and warrants and similar financial instruments. And I also covered options and warrants in other courses that I took in finance area.

Q. I'd like to ask you about some of your professional activities. Have you ever reviewed articles that were submitted for publication in professional journals?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Have you published any articles in the area of finance?

A. Yes, I've published several articles.

Q. Now, is there any relationship between your articles and the subject matter of your testimony in this case?

A. In a general sense. A number of my articles discuss principles of valuation; however, my articles do not focus specifically on the valuation of options and warrants.

Q. Have you lectured in any professional seminars?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Have you ever served as a money manager?

A. Yes, in the following sense: I'm on the finance committee of the board of a major charitable institution in Chicago, and the committee as a whole is responsible for overseeing and directing the investments of the funds endowment.

Q. I'd like to ask you about some of your prior testimony and consulting experience. Have you ever been retained as an expert by the U.S. Government?

A. Yes, many times.

Q. Have you ever worked for any of the securities exchanges?

A. Yes, I've worked on two major projects for the National Association of Securities Dealers.

Q. Have you ever testified as an expert previously?

A. Yes, if you count all forms of testimony -- depositions, affidavits and trials -- approximately 70 times. If you want to count only trials or criminal proceedings, it's approximately 20 times.

Q. Have you ever testified as an expert on behalf of the U.S. Government?

A. Yes, I think on nine different occasions I've testified on behalf of the United States Government or its agencies.

Q. Have you ever testified previously regarding valuation issues?

A. Yes, on many different occasions.

Q. Have you ever testified previously regarding the valuation of options?

A. Yes, in two of the cases that went to trial, I testified about complex financial arrangements that included various types of options. And I also testified at deposition in a case involving employee stock options.

Q. Are you being compensated for your work on this case?

A. Yes. Lexecon is billing for professional services at hourly rates. We also charge for use of our computer and databases and our out-of-pocket expenses.

Q. Mr. Ross, could you please describe what you were asked to do in this case?

A. Yes. I was asked to estimate the fair market value of the warrants that Plaintiff obtained from Sunbeam as a result of its settlement of its claims against Sunbeam in this litigation. I was also asked to review some other valuation documents. And after my report was issued, I was asked to review Dr. Nye's rebuttal report.

Q. Did you reach any conclusions with regard to this assignment?

A. Yes, with respect to my initial assignment, I concluded that the fair market value of the warrants on the date of the settlement agreement was approximately 136 million dollars and that the fair market value of the warrants on the date the warrants were issued, August 24, 1998, was slightly higher, approximately 140 million dollars.

Q. Before we go into the details of those conclusions, could you please briefly describe what you did to reach those conclusions?

A. Yes. In order to estimate the fair market value of the warrants, I used standard methods in financial economics, methods that are widely used, well-recognized. I used that to develop a particular valuation method. I then used actual market data to calibrate the valuation model, to implement the valuation model, and to check to make sure that the results of the valuation model were consistent with actual market data, including market data on call options -- very similar securities -- call options for Sunbeam that were actually traded in the market at the time the warrants were issued.

Q. First I'd like to start by asking a few questions about the concept of fair market value. What's your understanding of that term, "fair market value"?

A. My understanding is that the fair market value of an asset is the price that would be paid in a hypothetical arm's length transaction between a willing and able buyer and a willing and able seller.

Q. Are actual transactions involving a particular asset on a particular date relevant to the assessment of fair market value of that asset on that date?

A. Yes, very much so. In the case of an asset that is actually traded between willing buyers and willing sellers on a particular day, provided the transactions satisfy that standard, the willing buyer/willing seller standard, the transactions are the best evidence of the fair market value of the asset.

Q. So take an example to illustrate that point. Suppose that willing buyers and willing sellers were trading IBM stock for $100 this morning in arm's length transactions. Under those circumstances, how would you assess the fair market value of IBM stock this morning?

A. Under those circumstances the fair market value of a share of IBM stock would be $100 because that's the price that willing buyers are actually paying willing sellers in arm's length transactions.

Q. Suppose that on August 24th, 1998 willing buyers and willing sellers were trading Sunbeam stock for 8.81 in arm's length transactions. Under those circumstances, how would you assess the value of Sunbeam stock on August 24th, 1998?

A. It's really the exact same principle. The fair market value would be $8.81 because that's the price that willing buyers are paying willing sellers in arm's length transactions on that date.

Q. Are events that occur after a particular date relevant to the assessments of a particular asset on that date?

A. Events that occur after a particular date are not relevant to assessing the fair market value of the asset on the particular date.

Q. Does the fact that Sunbeam filed for bankruptcy in February 2001 change your assessment of the fair market value for Sunbeam stock on August 24th, 1998?

A. No. It's just an application of the same basic principle. Events that occur after a particular date are not relevant to assessing the fair market value of the asset on a particular date because market participants, willing buyers and willing sellers, do not know that those events will occur on the date in question.

So on August 24th, 1998, while market participants recognized that there was a possibility that Sunbeam might go bankrupt, there were other possibilities as well. And market participants did not and could not have known with certainty that Sunbeam would, in fact, enter bankruptcy much later, February 2001. For that reason, the fact that it occurred does not enter into the calculation of the fair market value of Sunbeam stock on August 24th, 1998.

Q. Suppose that Sunbeam stock had increased to $107 per share in February of 2001. Would that affect the assessment of fair market value of Sunbeam stock on August 24th, 1998?

A. No, for exactly the same reason. Willing buyers and willing sellers on August 24th, 1998 could not have known with certainty that Sunbeam stock would have traded for $107 per share in February 2001. That event was not known at the time of the transactions, and, therefore, does not enter into the assessment of the fair market value, the price that the willing buyers will pay willing sellers for the asset on August th, 1998.

Q. Does the concept of fair market value apply to assets that cannot presently be sold?

A. Yes, of course.

Q. Would you please explain that?

A. The calculation of fair market value is to estimate the price that would be paid in a hypothetical transaction, hypothetical arm's length transaction between a willing buyer and willing seller. One can perform that calculation whether the asset can, in fact, be sold on a particular day. One can still estimate what the fair market value is.

Q. What impact, if any, do restrictions on the sale of a particular asset have on the fair market value of that asset?

A. Depends a little bit on the facts and circumstances. But often it's the case that buyers prefer assets that they are able to sell to assets that are not able to sell.

And so in the typical case, assets whose subsequent resale will be restricted trade at somewhat lower prices, a discount to the same asset that the otherwise same asset that is freely tradable.

Q. Do corporations issue securities with restrictions on sale?

A. Yes, they do. That happens quite frequently. Corporations privately place stock and other kinds of securities under the relevant regulations, Regulation D and Regulation S of the Securities Laws.

The private placements of unregistered securities are restricted because under the relevant law the stock or other securities cannot be resold in the public markets for a period of two years. And even after two years the subsequent resale of the assets is governed by Rule 144.

Q. Does the fact that these securities have restrictions on their sale mean that they have no value?

A. No.

Q. Are corporate issues of securities with restrictions on sale relevant to the assessment of discounts for marketability?

A. Yes. That's some of the best evidence there is on the effect of restrictions on marketability on the value of securities. There have been a number of published economic studies that have compared the prices that willing buyers actually pay in private placements of restricted securities with the prices that buyers actually pay in private placements of unrestricted securities in order to estimate exactly how much less that buyers will pay for the restricted securities.

So those transactions are very good evidence of the value of liquidity discounts or discounts for the lack of marketability.

Q. Can you give some other examples of assets that are valuable even though they have restrictions on their sale?

A. Yes, a large number of assets in the economy that have restrictions on sale. Many limited partnership interest cannot be resold. Real estate limited partnership interest, oil and gas limited partnership interest. Those are two examples.

Certificates of deposits, term certificates of deposits often have restrictions on resale.

Airline tickets sometimes have transfer restrictions.

Annuities usually cannot be transferred. Those are just a handful of examples. One other good example is nontransferable leases, the right to use particular space at a particular price for a particular period of time often is nontransferable.

Q. Does the possibility that a security may become worthless in the future mean that it has no present value?

A. No. The value of any asset is the discounted present value of the expected future cash flows where the expectations are conditioned on all available information. And in circumstances where there is uncertainty, there's a possibility the asset will go down in value and be worth nothing and also a possibility that it will remain in its current value or perhaps increase in value. The present value of the asset will reflect all of those possibilities weighted appropriately by the probability that each will occur.

Simple example might be a bet at a roulette table. And let's make it a fair roulette table, to ignore the house's edge. If you put a dollar on red at a roulette table, there's a 50 percent chance that you're going to win and get $2 back. The value of that outcome is $1, 50 percent of $2. There's also a 50 percent chance that you'll lose. The present value of that prospect, therefore, is $1 -- 50 percent chance of $2 and 50 percent chance of nothing. So that's a simple circumstance where there's a chance that in the future you'll get nothing. But nevertheless, the opportunity today has value.

Q. Couple more background questions before we turn to your valuation of the warrants here. Do you have an understanding as to why the Court is interested in the valuation of the warrants?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. What is that understanding?

A. My understanding is that under the applicable law, when a jury award is made against a nonsettling defendant, the jury award must be reduced by the value of amounts that the Plaintiff received in previous settlements against other defendants. And in ' this case, the warrants were received in settlement of the claims the Plaintiff had against Sunbeam.

Q. As a matter of economics, do you think the settlement date and the issuance date are appropriate valuation dates for this purpose?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. I would like to ask you some questions about the bases for your opinion regarding the valuation of warrants. First, what are warrants?

A. Warrants are a special type of call option.

Q. And what is a call option?

A. A call option generally is the right to purchase an asset, in this case stock, at a particular price, which is known as the exercise price or the strike price, on or before a particular date, which is known as the expiration date.

Q. What, if anything, distinguishes a warrant from an ordinary call option?

A. The principal distinction is that warrants are issued by companies. So when the holder of the warrant exercises its option and pays the exercise price, the company issues new shares of stock to the holder in satisfaction of the obligation it has by virtue of having issued the warrant.

In the case of ordinary call options, which are written by third parties and sometimes traded on exchanges, as was the case for Sunbeam call options, in that case, when the option is exercised, the writer of the option purchases shares in the open market and then delivers those shares to the holder of the option in satisfaction of the claims that are created by virtue of the exercise of the option.

So that is the principal distinction.

The other distinction that is sometimes mentioned is that warrants tend to have longer terms than options that are usually traded.

Q. Are there general factors that determine the value of warrants?

A. The general factors or the principal factors that determine the value of call options and warrants are, one, the price of the underlying stock; two, the exercise price; three, the volatility of the underlying stock or the underlying equity; and four, the term until expiration of the option of the warrant.

Those are the principal determinants of the value of the security.

Q. What is the relationship, if any, between the price of the underlying stock and the value after call option?

A. The greater the price of the underlying stock, the greater the value of the call option. That should be fairly obvious. When you exercise the option, you get the underlying stock. So if the thing that you get upon exercise is worth more, the right to get it is worth more.

Q. What is the relationship, if any, between the exercise price of the call option and the value of the call option?

A. That's an inverse relationship. The lower the exercise price, the greater the value of the option. And, again, I think that is fairly obvious. The exercise price is what you have to pay to get the underlying stock, and holding everything else constant, the less you have to pay, the more valuable the right is.

Q. You mentioned volatility was one of the factors that determines the value of a warrant. What is volatility?

A. I think the easiest way to understand value volatility is to think about it as the spread of the distribution of future potential prices. So if a stock has a value of, let's say, $10 today, then there is a distribution of possible values of the stock, let's say, one year from now. And the expected value, the center of that distribution might be $11 per share. Then you can image and bell curve around the expected value of $11 a share. And the spread of the bell curve tells you the volatility of the stock. The greater the spread, the higher the potential upside. The lower the potential downside, the greater the volatility. And the more narrow the distribution, the lessor the volatility.

Q. What is the relationship, if any, between the volatility of an underlying stock and the value of a call option for that stock?

A. The greater the volatility, the greater the value of the call option. And that is a function of the exact same spread.

Consider an option to buy a stock at $10 a share that has the distribution I just described. If the distribution of future value is very tight so that -- let's say we know for certain the stock price is going to be $10 next year or 10.50, and you know that the option is going to be worth 50 cents; you get that for sure. But if the distribution is very spread out, there's a chance that the option will be worth much more, a chance that the stock might be 20 or 30 or 40. And in those circumstances you'll make a lot more money. As that distribution spreads out, the volatility increases the value of the option increases.

Q. What is the relationship, if any, between the expiration date of a call option and the value of a call option?

A. The longer the term to expiration, the greater the value of the call option. And that also is a function of volatility.

In the example I just gave, we were talking about the distribution of stock prices one year from now. We said it had an expected value of 11 in a particular spread. If you asked about the distribution of prices two years from now, it would have a higher expected value and a still greater spread because the risk is a function of time. So the total risk given the amount of risk per unit time is greater, and the spread is greater. So the longer time to expiration also increases the value of the option.

Q. Are you familiar with the terms "in the money" and "out of the money" as they apply to call options?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. What does it mean for an option to be in the money?

A. An option is said to be currently in the money if the price of the underlying stock exceeds the exercise price. So if the price of the underlying stock was 10 and the exercise price was, let's say, 9, that option would be considered to be currently in the money option.

Q. What does it mean for an option to be out of the money?

A. An option is considered to be currently out of the money if the reverse is true, if the stock price is below the exercise price. So to use the same example, if the exercise price was 9 and the stock price was currently 8, then that would be an option that is currently out of the money.

Q. Does the fact that an option is out of the money mean that it has no value?

A. No, it does not.

Q. Why is that?

A. Because ultimately the value of the option depends on the relationship between the stock price and the exercise price at maturity. And even an option that is currently out of the money has the possibility -- as long as we're talking about a time before maturity -- for the stock price to increase and for the option to end up in the money.

So, again, just to go back to my previous example. If the current stock price is 8 and the option has an exercise price of 9, but the option does not expire for two years, then in that distribution of future values, there will be a number of values that exceed the exercise price of 9 two years from now. And those possibilities weighted by the probability they will occur give the option substantial value today.

Q. I'd like to hand you what's been marked as MS 1088 and MS 1089.

What are these documents?

A. These are documents that we prepared at Lexecon showing the quotations for -- with respect to MS 1088 -- quotations for long-term call options on Sunbeam stock which actually traded on August 13, 1998.

MS 1089 is a similar document showing quotations on August 24, 1998. Just taking a look at MS 1088, just to explain how to read the document, the document -- first in the first column -- reports the strike or exercise price for a particular option. So 7.50 is an option that gives you the right to buy Sunbeam stock for $7.50.

The second column is the expiration date. And here we have listed just the long-term options that were trading in Sunbeam stock on this date. These are all options that expired in January of 2001.

Then we list the quotations that were available during the day for these options. The bid is the price that market makers would pay to buy the options. And the offer is the price that market makers would require if someone wanted to -- if the market network is going to sell the options.

Then finally report the volume of trading that actually occurred on that day. Thirty refers to contracts. Thirty contracts on Sunbeam stock with an expiration price of $7.50 and an expiration date January 2001 traded on August 13, 1998.

The other rows I think are self-explanatory. They're just for different strike prices.

Q. Taking a look at MS 1088, is this document relevant to your testimony regarding in the money and out of the money options?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Would you please explain that?

A. Yes. The closing price of Sunbeam stock on August 13, 1998 was approximately 8.56. So two of these options, the options with the strike price of $10 and the options with the strike price of $12.50, were out of the money. The exercise price exceeded the stock price on August 1998.

Nevertheless, these options have substantial value. Buyers and sellers were trading the $10 options at prices ranging from 2 and seven-eighths to 3 and a quarter. And buyers and sellers were trading the options with an exercise price of 12.50 at prices ranging from 2 and three-eighths to 2 and three-quarters.

The options with an exercise price of $7.50 were in the money, but not that much. The difference between the stock price of $8.56 and the strike price of $7.50 is about $1.06. Even though that difference is only $1.06, someone who exercised the option on that day would only make 1.06 if they were foolish enough to do so. You could trade that option. You could buy and sell it at prices ranging from 4 to 4 and an eighth, reflecting the possibility that the stock price could increase a lot in the future.

Q. Take a look at MS 1089. Is this document relevant to your testimony regarding in the money and out of the money options?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you please explain that?

A. August 24, 1998 Sunbeam stock was trading at about 8.81 per share. So, again, two of the options on this page, the options with the strike price of $10 and the options with the strike price of $12.50, were out of the money. Nevertheless, they were traded, at least with respect to the options with the strike price of $12.50, and the prices range from 2.50 to 2 and seven-eighths.

The other two options are in the money, but the trading price -- the trading prices greatly exceed the stock price and exercise price on August 24, 1998.

Q. Where did the information that goes into MS and MS 1089 come from?

A. There's a company called Option Metrics that makes high quality options data available to market participants. And we just obtained the data on Sunbeam call options from them. I used this data both in these exhibits and some other exhibits that we'll talk about later.

Q. Is it standard and customary to use this type of data if pricing call options?

A. Yes.

MS. BEYNON: Your Honor, I move to admit MS 1088 and 1089 into evidence.

MR. MARMER: No objection.

THE COURT: Okay.

(Defendant's Exhibits 1088 & 1089 were marked in evidence.)

BY MS. BEYNON:

Q. I'd like to turn now to the methodology for valuing call options, is there a standard method?

A. Yes, it's called the Black-Sholes Formula.

Q. Could you please explain that a bit?

A. Yes. In the mid 1970s or early 1970s Professor Myron Sholes of the University of Chicago and Professor Fisher Black, who at the time I believe was at MIT, named a formula which is named after them, the Black-Sholes Formula, and was and is considered a break-through in finance.

It is a formula which tells you the price of a call option as a function of five variables: The stock price, the exercise price, the expiration date, the volatility of the underlying stock and the current interest rate.

So it's relatively unique in finance. It's a formula that tells you what a security is worth based on things you can go and look at, you can go and measure. And textbooks now in finance recognize this development as one of the seven greatest ideas in finance.

And Myron Sholes in 1977 received a Nobel Prize in economics for his role in developing the Black-Sholes Formula. And after its development the formula has been used not only to value ordinary call options on the exchanges, but also to value warrants, to value entire corporations, to value convertible securities. And the general principles behind the development of the formula have been used to develop other formulas to value other kinds of derivative securities and financial instruments. And that's what has allowed the overall market for derivatives and financial instruments to develop and explode since the early 1970s.

Q. You mentioned that the Black-Sholes methodology is used for valuing warrants. Could you please explain that a bit?

A. Yes. The Black-Sholes Formula is used in two different variations -- variations of Black-Sholes model that are used to value warrants. The first option-like warrant valuation. And in option-like warrant valuation one simply applies the Black-Sholes Formula as is to the warrants in order to obtain a value for the warrants. The second approach is what's known as the dilution adjusted Black-Sholes model. And in the dilution adjusted Black-Sholes model one makes certain adjustments to the Black-Sholes Formula, which I'll describe after we talk about the Black-Sholes Formula, in order to come up with a slightly different formula for valuing warrants.

Q. What are the inputs to the dilution adjusted Black-Sholes Formula?

A. As I mentioned in my previous answer, the inputs into the regular Black-Sholes Formula are the stock price, the exercise price, the expiration date, the volatility of the underlying stock and the risk free rate of interest. To go from the regular Black-Sholes Formula to the dilution adjusted Black-Sholes Formula three adjustments are made.

First, instead of using the stock price in the formula, one uses the equity value of the company per share of stock. The equity value of the company per share of stock is a number that is somewhat higher than the stock price.

So just stopping there for one second, making that change alone without making the other changes I'm going to talk about would result in estimated warrant values that are higher than the values you would get from the ordinary Black-Sholes Formula because you're using, in effect, a higher stock price in the formula. That's the first adjustment.

The second adjustment is that the dilution adjusted Black-Sholes Formula uses the volatility of the firm's equity instead of the volatility of the firm's stock in the formula. And, again, the effect of that adjustment is to increase the estimated values, because the volatility of the firm's equity is somewhat higher than the volatility of the firm's stock. And then finally there is a third adjustment in the dilution adjusted Black-Sholes Formula, you multiply the result by a factor that accounts for the number of additional shares that will result when the option is exercised.

So if there are N shares outstanding currently, let's say 100, and there will be M shares issued when the warrant is exercised, let's say 20, then the dilution factor is 100 divided by 120, N divided by N plus M. And that third factor counteracts the effect of the other two factors so that the results that one gets in most cases using the dilution adjusted Black-Sholes Formula are almost exactly the same as the results one gets by just doing what's called option-like warrant valuation. But both approaches are used in finance.

Q. Of these two methodologies, the option-like warrant methodology and the dilution adjusted Black-Sholes methodology, is one preferable to the other?

A. Neither is preferable provided they are both implemented correctly. However, it is much easier to implement the option-like warrant valuation methodology, because an option-like warrant valuation methodology one only needs to know the volatility of the underlying stock, whereas in the dilution adjusted Black-Sholes Formula, one has to know the volatility of the equity of the firm.

The former, the volatility of the underlying stock, is relatively easy to calculate using data on traded options that is available or using historical stock prices if traded options do not exist. The latter, the volatility of the equity cannot be calculated correctly unless the value of the warrants themselves trade. For that reason published articles in finance have recommended that in most cases, including cases that would be applicable here, the simplest thing to do is an option-like warrant valuation.

THE COURT: I want to make sure I'm understanding your testimony. When you say option-like warrant valuation, are you saying you simply apply the Black-Sholes Formula?

THE WITNESS: Yes.

THE COURT: So we're saying we're doing Black-Sholes, we understand these are warrants, there's going to be some dilution, but we think in the long run this is going to be a fair estimate?

THE WITNESS: Yes, because the effects cut in both directions. What academic research has shown is that, properly implemented, both formulas will give you the same value.

THE COURT: Are you telling me that sort of from a theoretical point of view, the dilution adjusted calculation would be better because it takes account of the dilution, but it's just hard to apply in practice because it's hard to get a volatility component for equity?

THE WITNESS: It's not any better, it's the same and it's hard to apply.

THE COURT: Well, are you saying it's the same or simply that empirically it turns out they end up being similar most often?

THE WITNESS: Well, whether it's better or not depends on what assumption one makes about the distribution of underlying stock prices and equity values. If one assumes that the distribution of underlying equity values, it's what's called log normal, then the dilution adjusted model is better, but in most cases it makes no difference.

THE COURT: You're just saying in those cases it makes no difference because we have imperfect information anyways.

THE WITNESS: Correct, if alternatively one assumes that stock prices are distributed, then the option-like valuation is better and the dilution adjusted model will give you the same answer in most cases.

BY MS. BEYNON:

Q. In your opinion, Mr. Ross, are these two valuation methodologies you've discussed applicable to the warrants here?

A. Yes, with a couple of caveats to take into account, special circumstances with respect to these warrants. There are two special circumstances that I believe have to be taken into account. First, these warrants gave the holder the right to buy a lot of stock, 23 million shares of Sunbeam stock. If these warrants had been exercised, the holder would have ended up with a large percentage block of Sunbeam stock, approximately 19 percent of the shares outstanding. That block would have been the largest single block held by any investor in Sunbeam.

There is a literature in finance which shows that on average when willing buyers and willing sellers trade large percentage blocks, the prices that get paid are substantially in excess on average of the exchange price for ordinary shares of the company's stock. In other words, blocks are worth more per share. They have a higher fair market value per share than exchange traded shares. And that is one factor that has to be taken into account in valuing the warrants.

The second special circumstance is that there were certain restrictions on the resale of these warrants. And for the reasons we discussed earlier about the effect of restrictions on the value of financial assets, I think those restrictions also have to be taken into account in valuing these warrants.

Q. I'd like to ask you a couple of questions about each of these two considerations. First, on the large block issue, how does the value of large percentage blocks compare with the value of Exchange traded shares of company stock?

A. On average, willing buyers pay willing sellers more for large percentage blocks of stock on a per share basis than what willing buyers pay willing sellers for Exchange traded shares.

And there is a particular article that I cite in my report by Professor Michael Barclay and Professor Clifford Holderness that analyzes the actual data for large block trades involving the largest percentage blocks of the firms that are traded. And they find that- on average the block premium is 20 percent. In other words, the price per share of the large percentage block is 20 percent higher than the Exchange price.

Q. In your opinion is it appropriate to apply a premium in valuing the shares of Sunbeam stock that CPH had the right to acquire upon the exercise of the warrants?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. And can you explain that a bit?

A. Yes, because of this finding in the academic literature in the Barclay and Holderness article that blocks trade at 20 percent premiums on average, I think it is appropriate to apply a premium of at least 20 percent to the value of the underlying shares when implementing the warrant valuation formulas.

THE COURT: Can I -- when you say 20 percent of the underlying shares, are you saying you used the control premium to value the warrants or to value the stock assuming the warrants were exercised?

THE WITNESS: To value the stock that the warrant holder has the right to exercise. So just to use round numbers, if the exchange traded shares were trading at $8 a share, but the warrant holder had the right to buy a large percentage block, then the shares that the warrant holder has the right to buy are worth more than $8 per share, worth $9.60 per share if you use the 20 percent premium. So you should value the warrant as the right to buy shares worth $9.60, not the right to buy shares that are worth $8.

THE COURT: Okay, you're saying for applying Black-Sholes to value the warrants?

THE WITNESS: Correct.

THE COURT: What would be the response to the contention that if you value it that way you are assuming they're going to be exercised as a block?

THE WITNESS: I think you are assuming they will be exercised as a block, but it's in the warrant holder's interest to do that. In other words, typically large percentage blocks aren't broken up. When they trade, they trade as blocks, because if you break up a large percentage block, you dissipate the value, you create a loss that you can avoid. Same thing is true for the warrants. It's in the interest of the holder of the warrant to exercise the entire block at once.

Moreover, the way call options normally work, particularly dilution adjusted call options on a stock like Sunbeam that's not paying dividends is that the optimal strategy is to wait until maturity and then exercise all the options at once.

It's hard to come up with a scenario where putting to one side the block premium one would want to exercise part, but not all of the warrants.

THE COURT: Other than, I assume, all things being equal, the warrant holder wants to maximize his choices.

THE WITNESS: He wants to maximize the value of what he gets.

THE COURT: Right. And so you're just going to have to educate me. It would strike me that you would do some slightly lower premium than the 20 percent block premium to compensate the warrant holder for having given up, in essence, the ability to exercise fewer than all the warrants at once.

THE WITNESS: I think warrant holders always have the ability to exercise fewer than all the warrants at once, but that ability is not valuable. Because the optimal exercise strategy is always to either wait until maturity, if you want to hold the warrants, or to sell the warrants. There is no value to exercising the warrants prematurely.

THE COURT: But you're assuming, as I understand it, for all purposes the warrant holder will want to exercise all the warrants at once for purposes of valuation, that's your assumption.

THE WITNESS: And will not want to exercise early. Just like the example in the money stock options, the 7.50 stock options that were worth $4 on the date the stock was trading at 8.56. You could exercise those options on that day, but if you did that you would cost yourself money because you could sell the options for 4, but you'd only make $1.06 if you exercised them. That's the same choice that the warrant holder faces.

There is no value to the ability to exercise early as long as it is a dilution adjusted warrant and the company is not paying dividends. And the reason I'm making those exceptions --

THE COURT: Explain to me, just so I understand, why is it always in the warrant holders best interest to hold the option until the end of the term?

THE WITNESS: As they say in textbooks: Options are always better alive than dead. Because when they are alive you delay the payment of the exercise price until the end of the term. And there's a chance the stock price will go up further and the option will increase in value. When you exercise, you give up, you have to pay the exercise price now so it cost you more in a present value sense. If it's $10 a share, you'd rather pay it five years from now than pay it today.

THE COURT: Is this to assume you're going to continue to hold the stock?

THE WITNESS: Your choices are either to sell the warrant or the option or to hold --

THE COURT: You're not talking about holding the warrant, you're saying you might have sold it before the end of its term.

THE WITNESS: Yes.

THE COURT: Okay, I'm sorry.

BY MS. BEYNON:

Q. Mr. Ross, have you reviewed the rebuttal report that Dr. Nye submitted in this litigation?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Is this the report that you reviewed?

A. Yes.

Q. On page 8, paragraph 12 Dr. Nye states that he is not aware of studies of companies in a difficult or declining state where controlling shareholders are able to sell their stake at a premium?

THE COURT: I'm sorry, page 12?

MS. BEYNON: 8, paragraph 12.

THE WITNESS: It's a little confusing, because paragraph 12 starts on page 7 and there are a series of bullet points that carry over to page 8.

BY MS. BEYNON:

Q. We're looking at the bullet point where Dr. Nye writes that he is not aware of companies in a difficult or declining state where shareholders are able to sell at a premium. What's your reaction to this criticism?

A. It's what one of my professors referred to as proof by absence of counter example. It is not only a conceptually invalid method of establishing something, but you can't find a counter example, therefore, it doesn't exist, but it also turns out that it is an incorrect state, a description of the world, because I am aware of a published academic study that finds exactly this, that acquisitions occur of companies in financial distress, premiums are paid for companies that are in financial distress and in fact the premiums that are paid when companies in financial distress are acquired are approximately the same as the premiums that are paid for other companies.

Q. You referenced an article that supported your conclusion, do you recall who the authors of that article?

A. Clark and Ofek.

Q. I'd like to hand you what's been marked as MS 1087.

Is this the copy of the article that you referred to?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Can you explain how this is relevant to your opinion?

A. Yes. Let me point out at least a few of the relevant sections. As you can see, the article is entitled Mergers as a Means of Restructuring Distressed Firms and Empirical Investigation.

And in the abstract it begins by stating that the authors examined 38 takeovers of distressed firms. There's a description of how they identify those distressed firms in the section beginning page towards the bottom of the page called sample description. And they explain that they start with a sample of all acquisitions reported in a particular source during the period from 1981 to 1998. They then impose an initial screen where they look for companies that had substantial stock price declines market adjusted either in the prior year or the prior three years. That's all described on page 543.

MR. MARMER: Your Honor, I have a hearsay objection to the witness reading this treatise in as if it's his own testimony. It's hearsay.

THE COURT: What's the response to hearsay?

MS. BEYNON: The witness is responding to how this article is relevant to his testimony. And expert witnesses are entitled to rely on hearsay in forming their opinions.

THE COURT: But can't be used as a conduit to get the hearsay. I would sustain the hearsay objection.

Why don't we take a break, we'll be back 5 minutes.

(A recess was taken.)

THE COURT: Okay. Go ahead.

MR. MARMER: Your Honor, we move to strike the testimony that began with the recitation from the treatise as hearsay and improper bolstering of an expert the testimony that began with the description from the materials on.

THE COURT: I would agree at this juncture it's hearsay and it should be stricken.

BY MS. BEYNON:

Q. Turning back to the point that we left when we broke for a few minutes we were addressing Dr. Nye's statement that he's not aware of studies of companies in a difficult or declining state where controlling shareholders were able to sell their stake at a premium. Are you aware of examples of companies in difficult circumstances that were able to sell their shares at a premium?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you think of some examples for the Court?

A. Yes, the article I mentioned previously studies 38 of them and lists some specific examples in appendix.

In addition, at Lexecon we collected a number of examples of companies that were acquired at premiums that were, at least using Dr. Nye's characterization, in difficult or declining circumstances.

Q. I'd like now to turn to the second special consideration you mentioned, restrictions on sales.

What is your understanding of the restrictions on sales of the warrants that CPH took in settlement with Sunbeam?

A. My understanding is that CPH agreed not to sell half the warrants for a period of three years from the date of the settlement agreement. And in addition, the warrants, none of the warrants were registered at the time they were at issue, although CPH received registration rights. As part of the settlement agreement they had the right to demand Sunbeam register the securities.

Q. And what date did they have the right to demand that Sunbeam register the securities?

A. I think at any time subject to the usual conditions about Sunbeam's ability to do so, certain exceptions if Sunbeam was engaged in unusual corporate transaction at the time, things of that nature.

Q. How does the value of restricted securities compare with the value of unrestricted securities?

A. In general, on average the value of restricted securities is somewhat lower than the value of unrestricted securities. There have been a number of academic studies including very recent academic studies in the last year or two that have studied this exact question. And in each of the studies they use the methodology that I described earlier, they compare the prices paid in private placements of restricted securities with the prices paid in otherwise identical private placements of unrestricted securities. And those studies report that the effect, the additional discount for restrictions ranges from approximately 7 percent to approximately 18 percent of the purchase price.

Q. Is the term liquidity discount sometimes used to describe what you just testified about?

A. Yes, sometimes the term liquidity discount is used, sometimes it's referred to as a discount for lack of marketability.

Q. In your opinion what is the liquidity discount applicable to the warrants here?

A. In this case I applied a liquidity discount of 15 percent in my calculations, which is at the high end of the range that I mentioned previously of 7 to 18 percent, but I applied the discount to all the warrants in effect not just the 50 percent of the warrants that could not be sold for three years. I think the choice of the number within that range is, by the nature of the evidence, somewhat arbitrary, but I thought it was reasonable to pick a number at the high end of the range and, if anything, be favorable to the Plaintiff in these calculations.

Q. Now, Dr. Nye also states in his report in paragraph 6 that the Black-Sholes model does not account for the possibility of bankruptcy. What is your reaction to that criticism?

A. I think that that criticism could be technically right in the sense that the Black-Sholes model is derived based on an assumption about stock prices in which the stock price never literally gets to zero, but completely irrelevant for several reasons.

First, the distribution assumption for stock prices allow stock prices to get arbitrarily low, so while stock prices cannot get to zero in the assumed distribution they can get to .0000000001. For purposes of the valuation, the Black-Sholes Formula assigns zero value to states of the world where the stock price ends up below the exercise price. So it doesn't matter whether the formula treats the possibility of bankruptcy incorrectly as the possibility of a stock price going to .000001 instead of zero. It's going to value that state of the world as zero in any event.

That's the first point.

The second point is that in -- it's a textbook finding with respect to the Black-Sholes Formula that even though this distributional assumption is not perfect, the Black-Sholes Formula does an excellent job in pricing traded options in the real world. And traded options trade on actual companies, each of them has the possibility of going bankrupt. If the possibility of bankruptcy made the Black-Sholes model inaccurate, then you would not have this empirical finding that the Black-Sholes model does such an excellent job of pricing real world options.

Third, the way that the Black-Sholes model is implemented and the way I implemented the model, it is self-correcting for any bias, because what I did is determine the implied volatility, that is, the volatility that when used in the Black-Sholes model results in the actual prices at which market participants actually bought and sold call options on Sunbeam stock in the real world. So even if in some technical sense the Black-Sholes model, if applied using the, quote, true, end quote, volatility of Sunbeam stock would result in a miscalculation of the value of the options, by using the implied volatility, the volatility that when actually plugged into the formula results in the actual prices market participants pay, you would correct any bias.

So I believe that Dr. Nye's criticism is completely irrelevant. It has nothing to do with determining the fair market value of the warrants.

THE COURT: Can I just -- I want to make sure I understand. Explain to me the difference between two and three.

THE WITNESS: Two is that in studies that have compared Black-Sholes model valuations with the actual prices at which options trade, those studies have found that the predicted values and the actual values are very close. There's no trading strategy that you could use to take advantage of any bias in the Black-Sholes value.

And that occurs even though obviously in the real world many companies can go bankrupt, many companies do go bankrupt.

THE COURT: Are you saying empirically it seems to work so it can't be that bad of a problem?

THE WITNESS: Correct.

THE COURT: Number one you're saying, I recognize it's a problem, it's infinitesimally small, because we can get it close to zero as would make sense, so it's no big deal.

THE WITNESS: That's exactly right.

THE COURT: So for three are you just saying as applied empirically here you found the model valid?

THE WITNESS: I'm saying as long as the model is applied using what are called implied volatilities, volatilities that are calculated using actual transactions and actual options, any bias will be corrected because there will be an offsetting adjustment to the offsetting volatility. The whole purpose of the calculation of implied volatility is to find the volatility that when used in the model in the formula results in values that match actual prices.

THE COURT: Okay. So you're saying when you did that exercise here it worked, is that all you're telling me?

THE WITNESS: I'm saying here, and we haven't gotten to it yet, but the volatilities I used in the calculation are implied volatilities. So the criticism does not apply to my calculation. The criticism might apply to a calculation that uses some other measure of volatility, but not to a calculation that uses implied volatilities.

BY MS. BEYNON:

Q. I'd like to refer you to your report MS 1112. I'll hand you a complete copy, I think opposing counsel and the Court already have a copy of this.

Could you please turn to Exhibit F of that report, Mr. Ross?

A. Yes.

Q. What is this exhibit?

A. Exhibit F sets forth my calculations, my estimates of the fair market value of the warrants on the valuation date shown August 12, 1998. That's the date of the settlement agreement.

Q. You previously mentioned there were several inputs to the Black-Sholes Formula, the price of the underlying stock, the exercise price of the warrants, the expiration date of the warrants, the volatility of the underlying stock and the risk free rate of interest; is that correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. Let's start with the price of the underlying stock.

In order to value the warrants on August th, 1998, what price did you use?

A. Oddly enough, I used the price on August th, 1998, the day after August 12th, 1998 for reasons that I'm sure we'll get to.

Q. Could you explain those reasons, Mr. Ross?

A. Yes. The settlement agreement was dated August 12th, 1998, but the settlement agreement was announced publicly and disclosed to market participants after the close of trading on August 12th, 1998.

Market participants therefore could not reflect the information about the settlement agreement itself in the prices at which they were willing to trade Sunbeam stock until the next day, August 13th, 1998 when trading resumed. On that day Sunbeam stock price increased sharply by more than 20 percent. And market participants attributed the increase completely to the information which had been disclosed about what had occurred on August 12th, 1998.

Therefore, I believe that the price on August 13th, 1998 is a better estimate of the value of Sunbeam stock on August 12th, 1998, given all the available information, not only about what market participants knew when they were trading Sunbeam stock on August 12th, 1998, but also what they didn't know, the settlement agreement which wasn't disclosed until after the close of trading. So for that reason I think it is appropriate to use the August 13th, 1998 price to estimate the value of the warrants on August 12th, 1998 given all of the available information.

Q. Would you please turn to Exhibit C of your report.

What is this exhibit?

A. Exhibit C is a Dow Jones news service article on August 13th, 1998, commenting on the increase in Sunbeam stock price on news of the settlement agreement with MacAndrews & Forbes.

Q. Is Exhibit C relevant to your testimony concerning the effect of the settlement agreement of Sunbeam stock on August 13th, 1998?

A. Yes.

Q. Could you please explain that?

A. Yes, because the exhibit describes what I stated in my previous answer that the settlement agreement was disclosed to market participants after the close of trading on August 12th, that in response to the settlement agreement the price of Sunbeam stock increased dramatically when trading resumed. I'm not aware of any other reason for the increase in Sunbeam stock price, no event that occurred on August 13th as opposed to an event that occurred on August 12th that was not disclosed to market participants until after trading on August 12th that can explain the increase in the price of Sunbeam stock on August 13th.

Q. Let's return to Exhibit F of your report, Mr. Ross, which demonstrated the valuation of the warrants on August 12th, 1998.

I notice your exhibit reports estimated values for a range of volatilities. Could you please remind us of what the term "volatility" means?

A. Yes, with respect to the option-like warrant valuation which is shown in the bottom four rows of the table, the relevant volatility is the standard deviation of the stock return. So if you look in the column labeled, for example, 65 percent, if you're looking at option-like warrant valuations, you are looking at valuations assuming a standard deviation of stock returns of 65 percent per year.

With respect to the dilution adjusted Black-Sholes method calculations, that's the middle five rows, in those calculations a relevant volatility is the volatility of the equity per share of stock. And if you were to block at values in that particular column, you would be thinking about 65 percent equity volatilities, which would be consistent with lower stock volatilities.

So if you want to compare dilution adjusted Black-Sholes calculations with option-like warrant valuations you have to use a higher volatility in the dilution adjusted Black-Sholes calculations. You can't compare down the column.

Q. Is there a reason to prefer a particular figure for volatility in the warrants that CPH took in the settlement?

A. Yes. At least with respect to the option-like warrant valuation, I think the data show that 65 percent is the best estimate for the relevant volatility, the volatility of the common stock returns as of both the date of the settlement agreement, August th, 1998 and the date the warrants were issued August th, 1998.

Q. And how did you arrive at the conclusion that 65 percent is the right number if you use the option-like warrant valuation methodology?

A. I looked at the implied volatilities as calculating reported by Option Metrics for long term call options on both dates.

Q. What is implied volatility?

A. Implied volatility is what we discussed a few minutes ago. It's the volatility that when plugged into the Black-Sholes Formula gives values from the Black-Sholes Formula that are consistent with observed market prices.

So if you know a particular option was trading at let's say $4, you know what the stock price is, you know what the exercise price is, you know what the expiration date is and you know what the interest rate is, you can say, what volatility -- what does the volatility have to be so that the Black-Sholes Formula will give me a value of $4 for this option? That volatility is known as the implied volatility.

Q. Would you please turn to Exhibit E of your report?

A. Yes.

Q. What is this exhibit?

A. Exhibit E reports the implied volatility of Sunbeam stock returns for various dates based on the Option Metrics data. The volatility shown are for long term 730 day or two-year call options that have what's known as a delta of 0.8. And as of August 12th, 1998 the implied volatility was 65.12; on August 13th, 1998 it was 66.72; on August 24th, 1998 it was 69.14; in December of '98, 78.07; in December of 99, 79.12.

So all of those numbers are equal or greater than 65 percent. The number that I had indicated previously was what I thought would be the best estimate to use.

THE COURT: I want to follow as we go along.

Is Black-Sholes, is the basic concept behind that that an investor is rational and he's going to buy an option at a price where given sort of volatility expected value is somewhat better than the -- explain to me the theory behind it.

THE WITNESS: The formula is derived based on an arbitrage proof that if the price didn't equal what the formula implies that it would be possible to trade either options or a combination of options and stock and bonds and make money for sure with zero risk. There would be a money machine.

THE COURT: Right.

THE WITNESS: And what the empirical studies show is that the formula works, it accurately values call options. Basically, the formula has to be right because if it wasn't right, there would be a costless opportunity to make money, you could invest zero and make money for sure.

THE COURT: When we're talking about implied volatility we're saying this is the price at which people purchase the options. We know the implied volatility rate they're applying to figure out that this is a transaction they should make.

THE WITNESS: Right. Maybe I could give an example. Suppose that you knew that the temperature outside the courtroom was always 10 degrees higher than the temperature inside the courtroom. If you measured the temperature inside the courtroom and it was 70 degrees, that would imply that the temperature outside the courtroom was 80 degrees. You're solving a formula that says outside temperature equals inside temperature plus 10.

THE COURT: But are we looking at the investor? Do we have to go back and check and see what the volatility was?

THE WITNESS: You can do that, there are studies that do that. Study by Kuras and Manster did exactly that and found that investors estimates of future volatility are pretty good. Better than the estimates you would get in using historical data and trying to project the historical data. But obviously in the real world things change, just like stock prices change, volatilities change. So while investors' estimates of future volatility are good on average, they're not right with certainty. But they are the estimates that investors actually use in deciding what prices to pay for options on a particular date.

THE COURT: Thanks.

BY MS. BEYNON:

Q. If we could take one last look at Exhibit E to your report. How is that relevant to your testimony regarding implied volatilities?

A. This I think supports my testimony that the relevant volatility used in the calculations is at least 65 percent.

Q. Turning back to Exhibit F to your report. At a volatility of 65 percent, what value did you obtain for the warrants?

A. Using the option-like warrant valuation and before application of liquidity discount, the value of the warrants is $6.95 per share rounding. The total value of the warrants again before the liquidity discount is approximately 160 million dollars. And with the 15 percent liquidity discount that I discussed previously, the total value of the warrants is approximately 136 million dollars. And that's the number that I testified about previously. That's my best estimate of the fair market value of the warrants on August 12, 1998.

Q. You previously said that in calculating the value of the warrants using the dilution adjusted Black-Sholes model the volatility input should be higher, why is that?

A. Because in the dilution adjusted Black-Sholes model, the relevant volatility in the formula is the volatility of the equity on a per share basis not the volatility of the stock. And the firm's equity includes both its stock and its warrants, because the warrants are more volatile than the underlying stock, the equity is more volatile than the underlying stock.

And, again, this is a textbook point. And a point that is made in the literature on valuing warrants that the volatility of the equity is greater than the volatility of the stock. And that's the appropriate thing that goes into the dilution of adjusted Black-Sholes Formula.

Q. Would you please turn to Exhibit G to your report.

A. Yes.

Q. What is this exhibit?

A. Exhibit G is a calculation of the value of the warrants on August 12, 1998 assuming that no large block premium is applicable.

Q. Could you please explain the conclusions you reached that are expressed in Exhibit G?

A. Exhibit G otherwise is just like Exhibit F except that it assumes that no large block premium is applicable. And the reason I prepared Exhibit G is that you can use Exhibit G to compare the estimated value of the warrants assuming no large block premium is applicable with the actual prices at which call options on Sunbeam stock actually traded.

So it allows you to check the results of the model by comparing the estimated values with the prices of actual options.

Q. And the prices of actual options were set forth in an exhibit we looked at earlier, is that not correct, MS 1088?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you please explain for the Court the comparison between MS 1088 and Exhibit G to your report, what your opinion is in that regard?

A. Yes. The most comparable traded option as of August 13th, 1998 is the option that has a strike price of $7.50 and an exercise price of January 2001. That option was trading for between 4 and 4 and an eighth per share on August 13, 1998.

Now, the warrants necessarily are more valuable than this option for two reasons. First, the warrants had a lower strike price. The strike price of the warrants is $7 per share, the strike price of these options is $7.50 per share. And as I explained previously, the lower the strike price, the greater the value.

The more important difference is the expiration date. The warrants do not expire until August of 2003, but these options expire in January 2001. When you lengthen the expiration date, you greatly increase the value of the option. So you would expect the warrants to be more valuable than these options. And that's what the calculation in Exhibit G shows. Using the volatility of 65 percent, the warrant value per share is 5.46, an amount which somewhat exceeds the value of these options at 4 and an eighth.

I also performed a calculation like Exhibit G for warrants that expire in January 2001 with an exercise price of $7.50. And the value I obtained was slightly in excess of $4 per share, exactly consistent with the prices of the call options.

So I believe that Exhibit G, this other calculation and MS 1088 in conjunction show that the market data confirm the reasonability of the calculations that I did.

Q. In Exhibit G, which calculates the value of the warrants assuming no large block premium, what value did you ascertain there was for a volatility of percent?

A. I'm sorry. I'm not sure I understand your question.

Q. Sure. Looking at Exhibit G, which as I understand your testimony calculates the value of the warrants assuming no large block premium; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. What is the value of the warrants that you obtained assuming a 65 percent volatility?

A. On a per share basis, $5.46 approximately before liquidity discount, that's in the third row from the bottom in the 65 percent column, a total warrant value of approximately 126 million dollars before a liquidity discount. And a total value of 107 million approximately after liquidity discount.

Q. Thank you. Would you please turn to Exhibit H of your report?

A. Yes.

Q. What is this?

A. Exhibit H is like Exhibit F except the valuation date has changed. This is a valuation of the warrants as of August 24, 1998, the date on which the warrants were actually issued.

Q. Assuming a volatility of 65 percent, what value did you obtain for the warrants on August 24th, 1998?

A. The per share value before liquidity adjustment is $7.18. The total value again before liquidity adjustment is approximately 165 million dollars. And the total value after the 15 percent liquidity discount is approximately 140 million. And, again, that's what I testified to that is my best estimate of the value of the warrants on August 24, 1998.

Q. Would you please turn to Exhibit I of your report. What is this exhibit?

A. Exhibit I is analogous to Exhibit G except that again the valuation date has changed. This is a valuation of the warrants on August 24, 1998, the date the warrants were issued assuming no large block premium is applicable.

Q. Why did you perform this calculation?

A. To do the same kind of check.

Q. And did you compare the actual values of call options to those that you calculated in Exhibit I?

A. Yes. I think earlier you handed out MS 1089, which is quotations for actual call options that were traded on August 24, 1998. There are two options that you can compare the warrants to, the $7.50 exercise price options that expire in January 2001, you'd expect those to be worth somewhat less than the warrants and they are. The price of those ranged from 4 to 4 and three-eighths per share. The estimated warrant value is 5.65. I think you also could compare the warrants to the options with the $5 strike price. There are two differences there. The options with the $5 strike price have a lower strike price, so that makes those options somewhat more valuable than the warrants all else equal, but they also have a much earlier expiration date January '01 versus August '03, and that makes them less valuable. There the prices range from 2.52 to 5 and five-eighths.

Again, while it's not shown here, we did calculations like Exhibit I where we changed the expiration price to $7.50 and the expiration date to January 2001. And the values were derived in the 65 percent volatility column using the option-like warrant valuation were within the range of actual prices for the relevant call options.

Q. So just to summarize, what's your conclusion as a result of this comparison between Exhibit I and MS 1089?

A. That actual market data on the price that willing buyers were willing to pay willing sellers for options on Sunbeam stock confirm the reasonableness of my method for valuing the warrants.

Q. I'd like to show you what has been marked as MS 513.

Your Honor, I believe you already have a copy of this. This is the document that the Deloitte and Touche witness referred to.

THE COURT: Yes.

BY MS. BEYNON:

Q. Have you previously reviewed this exhibit?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Would you please turn to the page that is Bates labeled CPH 0647028?

A. Okay.

Q. You will see that it states that the Blackstone report estimated a value of the warrants to range from 30 million to 107 million with a mid point of 70 million. Do you see that statement?

A. Yes, I do.

THE COURT: I'm sorry, where is that?

THE WITNESS: Last full paragraph.

MS. BEYNON: Entitled Valuation of the Warrants.

BY MS. BEYNON:

Q. Do you agree with that assessment of the valuation of the warrants?

A. No, I don't.

Q. Why is that?

A. I think you need to turn to the next page, where it describes in greater detail the inputs that were used in the calculation and the reason that that result was obtained.

Blackstone, like me, used the Black-Sholes Formula. And I think it's unclear from the document whether it's the dilution adjusted Black-Sholes Formula or the option-like warrant valuation method, but I'm not sure that matters one way or the other.

But to get the 70 million dollar figure, Blackstone made particular assumptions about volatility, you can see the boxed range in the center of the page, and the preferred estimates according to Blackstone are for volatilities of 45 percent or 55 percent. And for reasons I described earlier, I believe that is too low. The correct volatility to use if it is the option-like warrant valuation is 65 percent. And if it is the dilution adjusted Black-Sholes model, something even higher.

The other thing that Blackstone did is look at a range of equity values for I believe the entire firm ranging in the boxed area from 500 million to a billion dollars.

Now, on August 13, 1998, the value of Sunbeam's shares outstanding at market value was approximately 850 million dollars. So a number between million and a billion dollars, but with a control premium of 20 percent, the number to put into the Black-Sholes Formula would be 20 percent more than that, so a number slightly in excess of the billion dollar number.

It's possible to look at other numbers in this table and derive what I believe is a better estimate of the value of the warrants. Looking, for example, at the 65 percent volatility column and the entry for an equity value of a billion dollars Blackstone derived a value for the warrants of 160 million dollars. And looking at an equity value of 1.25 billion dollars, a warrant value of 155 billion dollars, my estimate for this date of 136 million dollars is between those two numbers.

So I think their calculations confirm my calculations. And the reason their conclusion is different from mine is they used an equity value that was too low and a volatility that was too low.

Q. Could you please now turn to the second memo that is part of MS 513, CPH 0647031. It's a memo dated March 15th, 1999. Have you reviewed this memo?

A. Yes.

Q. There are two valuation analyses attached to this memo, CPH 00647034 and CPH 0647035. Have you reviewed these?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Can you please explain these to the court?

A. Yes. They're a little bit hard to read, but I think I can.

First, with respect to CPH 0647034, this is a dilution adjusted Black-Sholes Formula method of estimating the value of the warrants. And before talking about it in greater detail, let me just explain that the second page, CPH 0647035, is an option-like valuation of the warrants.

I guess I'll start with that one. At the top of the page it lists various input variables that are used in the calculation. In the first input variable is the stock price. And the stock price shown is 6.875, 6 and seven-eighths. That's the closing price of Sunbeam stock on August 12, 1998.

For reasons I described previously I think that is the incorrect price to use for valuing the warrants on the date of the settlement agreement because the settlement agreement itself was disclosed after the close of trading on August 12th, 1998. And the stock price increased markedly in response to that disclosure on the next trading day. That's one difference between my analysis and Deloitte's.

On the same page in the fifth row there is a row entitled Annualized Volatility. And Deloitte looked at a range of annualized volatilities from 30 percent to 100 percent. As far as I can tell nothing in this document indicates what number to use in that range, but that range does include the number that I believe is appropriate, 65 percent.

There are two other differences between this calculation and mine. First, Deloitte seems to never have considered whether or not a control premium should be applied. I believe one should be applied for the reasons we discussed previously. And, second, Deloitte does not appear to discuss whether or not a liquidity discount should be applied and does not apply a liquidity discount. And I believe one should be applied for the reasons we discussed previously. Otherwise, these calculations are identical to my own. They use the exact same methodology and, again, we checked by just varying the inputs in our calculations to match these inputs and we derived exactly the same numbers.

With respect to the previous page, CPH 0647034, exactly the same comments would apply.. The only difference is this is a dilution adjusted Black-Sholes Formula calculation.

MS. BEYNON: Thank you.

Your Honor, before Mr. Ross wraps up his testimony, I would like to move for the admission of his report as an exhibit here into evidence. It is a fair summary of what he's testified to and we believe that it would be appropriate to move it into evidence as simply a summary of what he has testified here to today.

THE COURT: Is there an objection?

MR. MARMER: Yes, same objection.

THE COURT: I think it's still hearsay. But it's marked for ID.

MS. BEYNON: Move into evidence the exhibits that Mr. Ross referred to, Exhibits F, G, H, I and I to his report which set forth his valuation of the warrants on those different dates.

THE COURT: Any objection to those items?

MR. MARMER: Assuming there will be some reciprocity here, we would let his exhibits come in. Do you have any objection if we put our exhibit calculations in?

MS. BEYNON: No.

THE COURT: So F, G, H and I will be marked in evidence.

MS. BEYNON: E F G H and I.

THE COURT: Well, E is not his calculation, correct?

MS. BEYNON: E is the applied volatility.

THE COURT: Which ones are you offering into evidence?

MS. BEYNON: F, G, H and I. If counsel would agree to the admission of E as well.

MR. MARMER: How about if we do D through?

MS. BEYNON: D, E, F, G, H and I.

THE COURT: Are the ones in evidence.

(Defendant's Exhibits D, E, F, G, H & I were marked in evidence.)

THE COURT: How long do you think cross is going to be?

MR. MARMER: Maybe an hour.

THE COURT: Do you want to start now or do it all after lunch, you tell me.

MR. MARMER: Why don't we do a little bit, get started, and then we can go from there.

THE COURT: For planning purposes, do you have any other witnesses on this point?

MS. BEYNON: Just deposition testimony. And we don't have other expert witnesses.

THE COURT: How much deposition testimony is there?

MS. BEYNON: We were planning to hand that up to the court for Your Honor to read. And there are two -- three deposition transcripts, the designations that we made are brief ones and shouldn't take too long to read.

THE COURT: A few minutes, not a couple of hours?

MS. BEYNON: It's not a couple of hours. Probably if read out loud 20 to 30 minutes.

MR. WEBSTER: It's three transcripts of two witnesses.

THE COURT: For planning purposes, who are Plaintiff's witnesses? You said Dr. Nye. Who else?

MR. MARMER: Dr. Nye, Mr. Gittis and

Mr. Slotkin. And we have a deposition excerpt from Mr. Maher that's tiny.

THE COURT: How long do you think your witnesses will be?

MR. MARMER: We assume Dr. Nye will be about an hour on direct. Mr. Gittis would be --

MR. SOLOVY: 10 minutes, 15 minutes.

MR. MARMER: And Mr. Slotkin is short.

THE COURT: Go ahead.

CROSS EXAMINATION

BY MR. MARMER:

Q. Mr. Ross, we've met before, correct?

A. We have.

Q. You were first contacted, were you not, about working on the valuation of the warrants on May 19 or 20 of this year?

A. That's correct.

Q. But that was not your first work involving Sunbeam, was it?

A. No.

Q. In fact, your firm was retained by Al Dunlap and Russell Kersh to assist them in various litigation matters pending against them, isn't that right?

A. Counsel for Dunlap and Russell Kersh, correct.

Q. Your firm was retained in this case, the dispute between CPH and Morgan Stanley shortly before the start of the trial, correct?

A. As consulting experts, that's correct.

Q. And prior to this trial, you previously have worked for Morgan Stanley, isn't that right?

A. That's correct.

Q. And prior to this trial you have worked with counsel from the Kellogg Huber firm, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. In fact, you or your firm have worked with counsel from the Kellogg Huber firm on many occasions, isn't that fair to say?

A. Yes, that's fair to say.

Q. It's true, is it not, sir, that Lexecon has hired as its counsel the Kellogg Huber firm on several matters?

A. I'm not sure about several matters, I know of at least one matter, that's correct.

Q. Well, they represented Lexecon, did they not, in a dispute involving Milberg Weiss?

A. Yes, but Lexecon was a Plaintiff.

Q. And they represented Lexecon, did they not, in connection with the Haft, H-A-F-T, litigation?

A. Not that I'm aware of.

Q. You're not aware of whether or not Lexecon was retained to help prosecute the fee -- I'm sorry, whether Kellogg Huber was retained to prosecute the fees?

A. It may be the case, I'm not aware one way or the other.

Q. At the beginning of your testimony this morning I believe you indicated to us that you were going to define fair market value. And let me just see if I have my notes correct on this. But I believe -- I believe what you said on that, sir, was you were looking at the moment that a willing and able buyer would pay in an arm's length transaction from a willing and able seller. Is that fair?

A. I had the order of the words a little differently, but close enough.

Q. I want to be sure whether I've got exactly the words right or not.

THE COURT: Let me -- I can tell you what I wrote down. You tell me if this is accurate or not. I'm not saying it is: Fair market value is a price that would be paid in a hypothetical transaction between a willing and able buyer and willing and able seller.

THE WITNESS: I had arm's length.

THE COURT: Okay. With that, is that the concept?

THE WITNESS: Yes.

BY MR. MARMER:

Q. Now, when you say hypothetical, you mean by that that you're not actually concerning yourself with whether or not THE seller really was able to sell; is that right?

A. I'm saying that any valuation is hypothetical. It's trying to estimate the price that would be paid in a transaction that did not occur.

Q. That wasn't my question, to you, Mr. Ross. My question is: Isn't it fair to say, sir, when you're measuring this hypothetical seller, you yourself don't care one way or the other whether the seller, when you say able, actually was able to sell?

A. No, that's not correct. If it's the case that there are restrictions on the sale of the securities, that will affect the fair market value.

Q. And so if it turned out, for instance, that the seller actually couldn't sell at all, then that would be something you'd want to take into account in figuring out fair market value, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And, similarly, when you look at a buyer, have you yourself actually concerned yourself with whether or not -- whether there's an actual buyer out there prepared to buy the warrants?

A. No, again, that's not necessary. You're trying to estimate the price that would be paid in a hypothetical transaction between a willing and able buyer and willing and able seller. It is not necessary or required that one identify actual buyers.

Q. And I wasn't asking whether it was necessary or required. I want to be sure we're focused on the answer to the question I asked you.

The question I asked you was: You yourself didn't make any inquiry whatsoever to determine whether there was a buyer who could actually purchase these warrants, did you?

A. No special inquiry, but --

Q. Was there a general inquiry?

A. Well, securities markets are deep and wide trillions and trillions of dollars of transactions occur every day. So I'm confident there were many buyers that were able to engage in the transaction, this hypothetical transaction. But, again, I didn't have to make any special inquiry. It's not necessary for purposes of estimating.

Q. Well, again, we ended that with the necessary. But let's stay with the point. The point is, you didn't find a single entity that you identified as a potential purchaser and can point to as someone who actually would show up on any of the dates you looked at and say, I'm here ready, willing and able to buy these warrants at this price?

A. Correct, I made no attempt to identify any such entity.

Q. And you, in fact, thought it was irrelevant whether or not CPH actually could have sold the warrants on any of the dates that you've identified, isn't that right?

A. No, that's not right.

Q. You gave a deposition in this case, did you not, Mr. Ross?

A. Yes.

Q. And let me just ask you.

Directing your attention to page 68, lines 10 through 22. Were you asked this question, did you give this answer:

“Does your report describe in any way in which CPH could have sold the warrants on August 24th in whole or in part?”

“Answer: It doesn't speak to the mechanics of the transaction, but again, what the report calculates, just to be clear, is what a willing buyer would pay a willing seller for the warrants in an arm's length transaction on August 24th, 1998. I think whether or not CPH actually could have sold the warrants is irrelevant for purposes of answering the question about what a willing buyer would pay a willing seller for the warrants on that date or on August 13th, 1998.”

Did you give -- were you asked that question, did you give that answer to your deposition?

A. Yes, among other questions and answers.

MS. BEYNON: Objection, Your Honor, improper impeachment.

THE COURT: Overruled.

BY MR. MARMER:

Q. Now, let's spend just a couple minutes maybe looking at this August 12th date. And as I understand it, just so we have the sort of ground rules down for this. August 12th everyone agrees is the date on which the settlement agreement was reached, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And you're using as more or less the proxy for what the value should have been on August 12th the trading price at the close of business on August 13th, correct?

A. I'm using the trading price of the stock on close of business on August 13th as an estimate of the value of the stock on August 12th, 1998 given the disclosure -- the information that was disclosed about the settlement agreement and related events on August th, after the close of trading.

Q. Just so we're clear, let me see if I've got this right or not, your basic point is that you need to look at what happened in the trading on August 13th in order to figure out what the value was on August 12th because the market didn't get the news about the settlement until after it closed on August 12th. So when you need to come up with your stock price you need to use August 13th; is that a fair summary?

A. Yes, because in this case the settlement agreement itself, which obviously the parties to the transaction knew about, was material information that affected the stock price.

Q. Now, when you looked at the August 13 stock price, did you look or attempt to isolate any of the factors that might have gone into what caused the stock to increase in price from August 12th to August 13th?

A. Yes, I looked to see whether the stock price increase was in fact attributed to the disclosure which occurred after the close of trading on August 12th. And I found that it was.

Q. Mr. Ross, I have put before you a document which we have marked as CPH trial Exhibit 1405, which was also our deposition Exhibit 1405.

Mr. Ross, is CPH trial Exhibit 1405 a true and correct copy of an event study that you performed in connection with your work for Mr. Dunlap and Mr. Kersh?

A. It was performed at Lexecon.

Q. It was performed at Lexecon --

A. And I don't believe it was done for the purpose that you stated. I'm not sure whether this document was initially prepared in connection with the retention by counsel for Dunlap and Kersh or whether that was prepared in connection with the retention as a consulting expert prior to trial in this matter.

Q. In either event, though, this is an event study that Lexecon performed, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. I'd like you to turn, if you would, to the entries that appear on August 12th, which appear at Morgan Stanley 0122067.

There you identify -- let's do the format quickly. The date of the event that you're looking at is in the left most column, right?

A. Yes.

Q. And then that's the -- is that the closing price of the stock on that date?

A. Yes.

Q. And then the volume of the stock on that date, right?

A. Reported volume, correct.

Q. What is actual return intended to signify?

A. That's the percentage change in price on a daily basis. So, for example, on August 13th the stock price increased by 24.55 percent as compared to the previous day's close.

Q. And then there's a predicted return, what is the predicted return intended to calculate?

A. The predicted return is the percentage change in price one would expect given the actual performance of the market as whole on a particular day and the historical relationship between the stock and the market.

Q. And then you're going to calculate in the next column is going to be the difference between the actual and the predicted returns, correct?

A. Correct, that's a corrected for market or excess return.

Q. And then the T stack column is designed perhaps somewhat colloquially, but just to suggest the question whether or not on a statistical basis it would be 10 percent likely that that excess return was attributed to a random feature?

A. Not quite. T statistics is a standardized measure of the size of the excess return. And a T statistics exceeds a particular value. You can use it to make statements like the one you made about statistical significance, here the probability that the price increase on August 13th, 1999 is infinitesimal.

Q. Then we see this excerpt from the Dow Jones news service from 6:25 p.m. that's the after market disclosure you referred to before, right?

A. At least a description of the after market disclosure.

Q. It's just a description, it doesn't report to be the actual text, right?

A. Yeah, I would have to look at it and look at the actual text.

Q. But just looking at the summary that Lexecon prepared, that includes a disclosure that there was a settlement that was reached, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And then it also explains that as part of the settlement MacAndrews and Forbes will receive five year warrants to purchase 23 million shares of Sunbeam at an exercise price of $7 a share with customary anti-dilution provisions, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. Then it goes on to say that MacAndrews will release Sunbeam from any legal claims, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And then it says that MacAndrews has agreed to let Sunbeam keep the services of MacAndrews and Forbes executives who have been managing Sunbeam since June, including Levin, who was brought in to replace former Sunbeam chief executive Albert Dunlap, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. All of that was information the market received right after the close of trading on the 12th?

A. Correct, and all of it was potential information that wasn't reflected in the closing price on August 12th, but nevertheless affected the value of Sunbeam stock.

Q. Then on August 13th there's more news stories, people saying he might be upset because of dilution but others saying it might be a good thing, correct?

A. I'll accept your representation.

Q. It says at the beginning quoting an analyst Mr. Levy at Standard and Poor's who is saying if I was a shareholder, I'd definitely be upset. So that sounds like a disgruntled shareholder, does not it?

A. Sounds like an analyst who personally views the news as unfavorable.

Q. Then there's a quotation from Mr. Levy that says -- this is on the top of page 0122068. Quote: This may protect Sunbeam from a lawsuit by MacAndrews and Forbes, but it may open them up to lawsuits from others, right?

A. Yes, it says that.

Q. So he's saying there may be people who will fuss about this, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, if you drop down to the next disclosure that begins Sunbeam up 21 percent on settlement, do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. There's an analyst from Merrill Lynch by the name of John Gibbons who is saying this is a positive because it's at least eliminating one part of the concerning Sunbeam, right?

A. I think that's a fair characterization, yes.

Q. And then there's a quotation that continues from him that says, on the one hand it may be dilutive, on the other hand there's a silver lining for shareholders in that Jerry Levin and his top management have signed three-year employment contracts, they provide some credibility to the turnaround story, correct?

A. It says that, yes.

Q. And then going down a little further in that same entry there's a sentence that reports to the press as you're summarizing it here MacAndrews said the deal with MacAndrews and Forbes eliminating the possibility that Sunbeam creditors would force the company into Chapter 11 bankruptcy proceedings, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. All of this mix of information in your view contributed to the bump in the price on August 13th compared to the price on August 12th, correct?

A. I think the market participants' reaction to the information that was disclosed on August 12th was reflected in the price on August 13th.

Q. But you yourself in that event study made no effort whatsoever, did you, to disaggregate the impact on the stock price from on the one hand the news of the compromise of MacAndrews and Forbes' claims from the other information that's disclosed concerning the provision of long term management contracts, the signaling effect of Mr. Perelman staying in the stock. The news that this may put bankruptcy more at bay. You haven't tried to separate out those two facts?

A. No.

Q. It's your view that this is all one ball of wax and ought to be fed into the stock price, right?

A. Not quite, no.

Q. But in any event, we don't have any actual event study or any kind of economic analysis presented in any of your reports that purports to break up the bump in the price to reflect how much is attributed to one feature and how much might be attributed to a different feature?

A. No, that's not quite right either. Because the one thing that the event study does do is separate out the price movement due to changes in the market as a whole from the price movement due to information specific to Sunbeam. And with respect to the information due to the market as a whole you would have predicted a slight price decrease.

Q. That's fair, your study accounts for what would be a predicted adjustment based on the market or the anticipated distribution for this stock, correct?

A. I don't understand the latter half of your question.

Q. Let me just focus back on this one issue so that we don't have a fuzzy record here.

Leaving aside the adjustments you do for the analysis of the excess returns, you haven't done any information specific to Sunbeam analysis that purports to disaggregate what amount of the stock increase was due to the announcement that the claim was compromised from the announcement of other positive news?

A. I haven't tried to disaggregate the effects of different pieces of information that were disclosed after the close of trading on August 12th, but I have looked to see whether there is any information that any event that occurred on August 13th as opposed to occurred on August 12th that can explain what happened to the stock price. And I was unable to find any.

In fact, the stock opened way up, traded way up and closed way up. And that plus what the financial press said is consistent with my conclusion that the price increase on the 13th was caused by the information that was disclosed after the close of trading on the 12th.

Q. Now, there was an indication in these press reports that some shareholders might be disgruntled about that. Do you know whether in fact any shareholders ever sued over this transaction?

A. I don't recall.

Q. You didn't investigate one way or the other whether there was a shareholder suit or any litigation concerning this, is that right?

A. Wasn't necessary to do so.

Q. I wasn't really asking whether it was necessary. I was asking whether you did. Did you conduct such a study?

A. We did do this event study. So there may be information in the event study about some activities, but it wasn't necessary to look at them or analyze them in greater depth to value the warrants on August 12, '98 or August 24, 1998.

Q. When you were looking at it did you analyze to see what happened when the claims, if any, of the disgruntled shareholders, what the market did there, do you recall looking at that?

A. Not specifically, again, for purposes of valuing the warrants on the 12th or the 24th, subsequent events are irrelevant?

Q. But you didn't look at it to see what the impact of news of a settlement of a claim through the resolution in the form of warrants, how that would be received separate and apart from this other mix of news, did you?

A. Correct.

Q. In terms of August 13th versus August 24th closing date, it's fair to say, sir, that you have no economic preference one way or the other for either of those dates; is that correct?

A. Could you just read back your question.

Q. I'll restate it.

You have no economic preference, do you, sir, for choosing either August 12 or August 24 as a date for valuation?

A. As a valuation date for purposes of reducing the jury award, that's correct. Between those two I don't have a strong preference.

MR. MARMER: I'm about to move to volatility. There's no magic. We can break now.

THE COURT: Why don't we break now and we'll be back at 1:30.

(A lunch recess was taken.)

I signed it that we scared him off or something, so I wanted to make sure he was coming.

I'm gathering Plaintiff lost its name tags and created new ones.

MR. MARMER: Whether we lost them, we at least didn't retrieve them.

MR. IANNO: We figured you already knew who we were.

THE COURT: I know you guys.

Mr. Marmer, do you have other questions?

MR. MARMER: Thank you.

RESUMED CROSS-EXAMINATION

BY MR. MARMER:

Q. Mr. Ross, let's talk for just a little bit about volatility. One of the necessary inputs on the variables for the Black-Scholes formula is, of course, to determine the volatility of the returns for the underlying stock, correct?

A. For the option like warrant valuation, that's correct.

Q. Now, and one of the two standard approaches to estimating the volatility of the stock returns is to calculate the historic volatility of the actual returns for the underlying stock, correct?

A. When implied volatilities are not available, correct.

Q. Well, you said when they're not available. It's actually a standard process whether they're available or not; isn't that the case?

A. Certainly it can be calculated, but it's less reliable than implied volatilities. Implied volatilities are better at forecasting future volatilities.

Q. But in, for example, in your report itself you go to some lengths to point out that there are, in fact, two different approaches, and while you have a preference, on these facts, for one, the historic volatility of actual returns is a very well-recognized technique, correct?

A. Correct, because sometimes you can't calculate implied volatilities and you have to do something else.

Q. Is it your testimony, sir, that the only time that people would use historic volatility of actual returns is in the absence of the ability to calculate an implied volatility; is that your testimony?

A. No, that's not my testimony.

Q. Now in calculating historic volatilities of actual returns, one of the issues that's involved is to decide how long of a period prior to the valuation date to use; isn't that right?

A. Yes, you'd have to decide how long a period to look at. You'd have to decide a observation interval, and that's one of the problems with historic volatilities that those choices can be fairly arbitrary.

THE COURT: I'm sorry. How long is an observation interval? What's the difference between the two?

THE WITNESS: If you're looking at a historic period, you could look at, let's say, a one-year period, but within that one-year period you could use daily stock price data to estimate the volatility or weekly stock price data or monthly stock price data and that's the observation interval.

BY MR. MARMER:

Q. And sometimes the period over which the volatility is measured is set equal to the time period over which it is applied; is that not correct?

A. Yes, according to the whole tax, at least one of two things is commonly done. Either a short period prior to the period at issue is looked at, like 90 days or 180 days or sometimes a longer period equal to the term of the option is used. That's just a rule of thumb. But obviously those rules of thumb have to be understood in light of the relevant facts and circumstances.

Q. And you actually had in your report at Exhibit D some historical stock returns that you calculated, correct?

A. That we obtained from Bloomberg. Bloomberg calculated them.

Q. These are actually Bloomberg calculations, and they're just assembled here on your Exhibit D, correct?

A. Yes. Let me make sure I'm looking at the same thing you are here.

Q. Okay.

A. That's correct.

Q. Okay. Now the five-year historic volatility returns that are shown on this Exhibit D on August 12th would be where? What column would we look at, the 60 months?

A. Far right, 60 months, correct.

Q. And the 60-month historic stock volatility returns is approximately 54 percent, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And the same is true on August 13th?

A. Correct.

Q. And the same is true on August 14th and August 24th, correct?

A. Right.

Q. And then it bumps up to about 55 when you go to December 31, 1998, correct?

A. Right.

Q. But you're not using any valuation dates for purposes of the analysis here based upon December 31, 1998, are you?

A. The only valuations I discussed were as of August 12th, '98 and August 24th, 1998, correct.

Q. Now the numbers that we see here of the 54 percent, those are obviously much lower volatility numbers than the 65 percent that you believed is the correct economic judgment to apply in using Black-Scholes on the applied volatility calculation?

A. Yes. Market purchase. And it's expected in the future the volatility of Sunbeam stock would be higher than it had been in that five-year period.

Q. Now, in fact, it's true, is it not, sir, that over time --

Well, let me back up. Stock return volatility itself can be volatile, right?

A. If you look at historic periods, estimates of volatility can change from period to period, that's correct.

Q. So, in other words, if we looked at one period on the stock's history, it might be different than the volatility for a different period, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And depending upon what's happening in the life of the company, the volatilities may spike, that is to say, they may be unusually high or they may be unusually low, correct?

A. They may go up. Whether it's unusual on a spike or whether it's a change in circumstances that results in a permanently higher level of volatility, that depends on why it is the increase occurred.

Q. Okay. Well, Hull (phonetic) himself believes, does he not, that stock return volatility should revert to its historic norms?

A. No, not should. Tend to on average --

Q. Okay. I'm sorry.

A. -- depending on the facts and circumstances.

Q. Okay. But the phenomena that we're describing is the same, is it not, and that is, that over time one would expect to see that the stock return volatility will revert to its norm?

A. No, that's incorrect. That over time a lot of stocks on average volatilities tend to mean revert. But whether volatilities are mean reverted depends completely on why it is they increased in the first place. So you would not expect that to happen in every case. It would depend on the reason for the increase in the volatility. And market participants are aware of this phenomenon, take it into account when they implicitly determine volatilities for the purpose of pricing options.

Q. When you say market participants are aware of that, that's just based on your theoretical modeling. You haven't actually gone out and asked the people who traded in the Sunbeam call options whether they were aware the volatilities tend to be mean reverting, did you?

A. -With respect to your first question, the answer is, no, it's not just based on theoretical considerations. It's based on actual empirical data about how well option prices correspond to option value and how well implicit volatilities forecast future volatilities.

With respect to your second question about whether I've surveyed market participants, the answer is, no, I've not.

Q. That same empirical data shows that stock return volatility tends to revert to the mean, does it not?

A. No, it's data that looks at implied volatilities as opposed to a forecast and a forecast of the kind you described that volatilities revert to the mean and finds that the implied volatilities do a better job of forecasting future volatilities than a naive model of the kind that you describe.

Q. And the naive model that you're describing, that's naive because it uses historic rather than implied; is that correct?

A. It's naive because it uses only historic data. It does not use the information available to market participants that they use in deriving their forecast of future volatilities.

Q. And do you know whether that, the data you're describing, does that have anything to do with any look at the length of the implied volatility -- I'm sorry -- the length of the option that's being analyzed in connection with the assumptions of implied volatility?

A. Yes, it does.

Q. Okay. And let's just be clear for a moment about reverting to a mean. That does suggest, does it not, that if a stock has experienced a significant increase or a significant decrease that over the longer haul that should iron itself out, that's what reverting to the mean actually means; is that not correct?

A. No, it doesn't mean it should. It means it --

Q. It tends to.

A. No, it doesn't mean it tends to. Whether it tends to or not depends on the facts and circumstances. If things happen the way you describe, volatilities go down, and then they go up, and then they go back down. That phenomena would be referred to as reversion to the prior level. But there is no principle in economics that that should happen or will happen in all cases. It depends completely on why it is that the volatility increased in the first place.

Q. Now let's look at what you did.

THE COURT: Again, I just want to make sure I'm clear. What you're saying is statistically in many cases the volatility will revert to the mean, but that doesn't say anything for the individual case. Is that what you're telling me?

THE WITNESS: I think here's what's going on statistically. The way to think about it is sometimes volatility increases for random reasons, and sometimes it increases for specific reasons. When it increases for random reasons, those random reasons tend to disappear, and it tends to go back down, so in those cases you see reverse.

When an increase is for a specific reason, it doesn't go back down, there's no reason for it to go back down. Instead, there's an invasion, and it ends up at a higher level. If you looked at a lot of stocks, 100 stocks and found -- and looked across them on some of them, the volatilities would be increasing for the random reasons and some of them would be increasing for the specific reasons. So for the 100 stocks on average you would see a lot of reversions to the mean. But for the specific stocks where the volatility increased for some other reason, you would see no reversion.

THE COURT: Is it fair to say, then, in general when you have volatility, if you're looking at it in the aggregate you have more volatility for random reasons than specific reasons, and that's why if you look at the data over time it looks like in general they revert to the mean?

THE WITNESS: It's -- I think the fair thing to say is you can have increases in volatility for both reasons because both things can occur, but one of them will revert, the average price of all stocks will revert.

THE COURT: Okay.

BY MR. MARMER:

Q. You yourself did not calculate the historic stock return volatility or consult -- I'm sorry -- report the historic stock return volatility for Sunbeam for periods prior to but not including the revelation of the fraud at Sunbeam; isn't that correct?

A. That's not correct.

Q. Okay. Would you point us in Exhibit D to an analysis in there that shows us where you have calculated the historic stock returns for volatility of Sunbeam for periods prior to but not including the revelation of the fraud?

A. Your prior question was compound. You asked whether I calculated or reported. I have calculated it. It's not in the report.

Q. You haven't disclosed any analysis concerning that historic stock price return, correct?

A. That's not correct either.

Q. Okay. Where is it disclosed?

A. I believe in the backup papers that were provided to you it was disclosed, and your colleague also asked me about it at my deposition, and I answered his questions.

Q. Okay. Now let me ask you another question about what you did or didn't calculate. Did you calculate historic stock return volatility for Sunbeam for periods prior to the announcement that Mr. Dunlap was going to be hired?

A. Exclusively that period, no.

Q. And when you were looking at -- I'm sorry. Earlier today, I believe, you were asked some questions about the Deloitte & Touche analysis, MS 513.

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have that in front of you still?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And I believe, if I have your answers correct, you indicated that you felt that one of the problems you had in looking at Deloitte & Touche's analysis was that while they used this 48 percent volatility, they didn't give an explanation for why; is that correct?

A. No.

Q. Okay. Correct me, then. What was your critique of their 48-percent volatility?

A. I'm not sure what 48-percent volatility you're referring to.

Q. Okay. Well, let me go at it a little differently. Would you agree with me, sir, that what Deloitte & Touche did was try to ascertain what volatility, historic stock return volatilities would be if you did not look at historic periods that included the fraud at Sunbeam or at least portions of the fraud at Sunbeam?

A. I'm not really sure what you're referring to.

Q. Okay. Well, then turn, if you would, to page CPH 0647030. And if we look at the last paragraph -- I'm sorry -- the next to last paragraph, it begins: "Given the considerable uncertainties that affected the value of the company's common stock during the restatement process, we believe that the best indicator of company stock price volatility is that factor that would be derived based on trading of the company's stock subsequent to the issuance of the restated financial statements. It is that period of trading time that the market has full and accurate financial information on which to base a reasonable decision on the value of the company's stock. Accordingly, we computed the volatility factor for Sunbeam's common stock for the period subsequent to the issuance of the restated financial statements. See attached.” The computation yields a volatility factor of 48 percent, and they say that supports the $70 million valuation. See that?

A. Yes.

Q. It's fair to say, then, at least if one were going to look at historic stock return volatilities one of the things you might want to do is try and take the company that you're now looking at and see if it's really comparable to the company that's being measured over its historic stock price, return volatility calculations. In other words, the Sunbeam that you're looking at at whatever valuation date, whether that's August 12th or August 24 or December of 1999, you're asking is this really the same Sunbeam company that we're measuring when we look at whatever our reference period is for historic stock volatility?

A. I'm sorry. Could you rephrase your question?

Q. Sure. Do you think that one of the things that you'd need to do in looking at historic volatility of stock returns in order to determine whether they're a fair gauge of volatility for the company is to determine whether you're comparing the company's present facts and circumstances to those that existed previously?

A. I would say if one did not have implied volatilities and one was forced to rely on historic volatilities, that is one of the number of things you might want to do to try and figure out which observation interval to look at, which estimation period to look at, whether they gave some observations more weight than others there. There are a series of different ways that volatility can be calculated using historic data. It's always best to use implied volatilities when they're available. But that's one of the things you can do.

Q. Looking at the August 12 or, well, actually August 13th data that you consulted at the time of the August 13th trades that were occurring in the CPH -- I'm sorry -- in the Sunbeam call options, the people trading there didn't have the benefit yet of the restated financials for Sunbeam, did they?

A. Correct, anyone who was buying or selling securities on that day, including in a fair market valuation, any willing buyer or willing seller who would be thinking about trading the warrants wouldn't have benefit of that information. Therefore, it's irrelevant for purposes of determining the value of the warrants on that day.

Q. I understand that little add-on about relevance. I just want to be sure we're quite clear, and that is, that the actual trading in the call options at any time in August of 1998, that participants in that trading would not have yet had the benefit of the restated financial information from Sunbeam, correct?

A. Correct, because it had not yet been released.

Q. Now when we talk about stock return volatilities, sometimes those volatilities are described as a smile, right, the volatilities? Have you heard that expression before?

A. Yes, that -- what you said is not quite right, but I have heard that expression before.

Q. Okay. And when -- the reference to a volatility smile is a reference, is it not, to the graphic portrayal of volatility in the form of a curve where the tail end of the curve tends to tilt; it can be a frown instead of a smile, but that's the smiling part that's referred to in the phrase, isn't it?

A. No, it depends very much on what you are graphing. If you're graphing the relationship between implied volatilities and exercising, exercise prices, that gets typically one kind of graphical representation. If you're graphing the relationship between implied volatilities and the term to maturity, that is a very different graphical expression. So with respect to which volatilities you're looking at, it matters a lot.

Q. The smile part of the curve, that has to do with after the fact that after you see a change it tends to come back a bit; isn't that what the smile tends to pick up?

A. No.

Q. This concept of over time a reversion?

A. No, no, no. With respect to the volatility surface as a function of expiration date, the curve looks -- I can draw it if you like, but it starts out steeply sloping and quickly flattens out and gets essentially flat once you get to reasonable lengths of maturity and comes back up. That's exactly what happened with the Sunbeam implied volatilities.

Q. Let's move to implied volatilities for just a moment here. To -- Let me just be sure I understand the process. To compute an implied volatility, you basically take the Black-Scholes formula that you use in the ordinary course, but instead of solving for the value of the option, you take an observed price of the option; and you put that number in, and then you solve for the volatility variable. Is that essentially what we're talking about?

A. Yes. But because there are a large number of options traded at any point in time, there's recognized methods of aggregating the information from all of those options and interpolating and creating what's known as a volatility surface which gives you the general relationship between either exercise price and delta and term to maturity and the implied volatility. But for any one option you can do what you said.

Q. But that's the basic concept. For one option you do it that way. Then the question becomes sort of a judgment issue about if you're going to do more than one option, you're going to have to figure out what's the appropriate sample base and what further economic analysis need to be made to come up with the calculation that you think is correct?

A. I wouldn't call it a judgment issue. The issue is that the implied volatilities are overidentified. You get a lot of information about implied volatilities because there are so many options trading at any point in time. And there are well-established well-recognized methods which are used by Option Metrics to aggregate all of that information to use every option so you don't give undue weight to any one option, to get much more reliable estimates of implied volatility.

Q. Well, let's look at MS 1088 for a moment. That's the Option Metrics chart derived from Option Metrics data with quotations for long-term call options Sunbeam traded on August 13, 1998, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. You talked about the vast amount of data points. I just want to be sure I'm reading this correctly. Under the column for volume and on the row strike price 7 and a half dollars with an expiration date of January 20, 2001, the volume is 30. And that -- am I right that means 30 contracts of 100 underlying shares each?

A. Correct, 30 contracts of this particular option traded on that day.

Q. All right. And then so that means that in total there would be roughly 3,000 shares at risk in this trade transaction, correct?

A. I'm not quite sure I understand your terminology.

Q. Okay.

A. Each contract you are right, is the rights of buyers on 100 shares.

Q. So that's 3,000 shares. Instead of expressing the volume in terms of contracts, if we express the volume in terms of shares, it would be 3,000.

A. Yes.

Q. And then the same is true when you look at the ten, the row that begins with the strike price of ten, the volume there would be 1,100 shares, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And the last one at 12 and a half strike price, it would be 8,300, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. If we look at MS 1089, that's the Sunbeam Corporation quotations for long-term call options traded on August 24, 1998, and, again, this is an Option Metrics source, right?

A. Correct.

Q. And if we look at the volume there, one of the sources you were consulting the strike price on, the row for $5 the volume was zero, correct?

A. Correct, there were quotations by market makers but no transactions.

Q. So we don't actually having anybody agreeing to a trade on that date, that's what this is reporting?

A. For that particular option, correct. But, however, market makers were willing to sell at five and five eighths and willing to buy at five and a quarter. Those are binding quotations.

Q. But the volume of actual trading is zero at this point?

A. Correct.

Q. When we look down at seven and a half, the volume is 27 contracts, that's 2,700 underlying shares?

A. Correct.

Q. And beneath that at ten it's, again, another zero?

A. Correct.

Q. And then underneath that 12 and a half it's a sixth, that would be $600?

A. Correct.

Q. Now on implied volatilities you observed prices of traded 730 day call options; is that right?

A. Among other things, yes.

Q. Well, when we look at Exhibit E -- Let's go to Exhibit E on your report. When you were calculating the implied volatility of the Sunbeam stock returns, am I reading this correctly that your Option Metrics source was coming up with 700 -- with the implied volatilities based upon the 730-day call options?

A. No. Option Metrics was calculating the implied volatility of a standardized option with 730 days to maturity based on all of the data for all of the options for the January 2001 call options, like you asked me about, and all the other call and put options that were traded in Sunbeam stock on a particular day.

Q. And those implied volatilities are reported here on August 12th at 65 percent approximately; August 13, 67 percent approximately; August 24, 70 percent approximately, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. Okay. Now there were actually no traded call options that could be directly observed with a five-year term from Sunbeam; isn't that right?

A. Correct, the longest traded option, I believe, is the January -- in August of '98 is the January '01 maturities.

Q. January '01. You determined that, however, that you can look at those, those options and infer from that that there wouldn't be a marked departure if you were to have had the opportunity actually to inspect a five-year option; isn't that right?

A. Not quite, no. I looked at the volatility surface report by Option Metrics. I looked at the implied volatilities of one year, standardized options, one-and-a-half-year standardized options, two-year standardized options and realized that that was the part of the volatility surface that had essentially flattened out. There was very little difference between the implied volatilities of one-year, one-and-a-half-year and two-year options, and, therefore, I concluded that the implied volatility reported by Option Metrics for two-year options was a good proxy for longer term, implied volatilities.

Q. It's approximately, though. There was no direct observation here, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And so when you say that we're talking what actual market traders were deciding that the market itself is setting the implied volatilities, we're not talking about anyone who's actually trading in a five-year option. We're talking about people who are trading in options of a different duration at different prices, and from that you're extrapolating what you believe to be a likely implied volatility for the warrant that's applied here, correct?

A. No, not quite correct, because, again, this feature of options is well-known, and market participants know about the shape of the volatility surface and know that the volatility surface is a function of time, that the slope flattens out, so I think it is based on actual market data. Even though Sunbeam didn't have options trading for that period of time, the volatility surface had already flattened out by that point in time, so if Sunbeam had such options, that's what you would expect.

Q. So does that mean then if we were to look at the implied volatility of Sunbeam options before Mr. Dunlap were hired and we had seen fairly long ones that we would then correctly predict that the variability -- that the implied volatility after Mr. Dunlap was hired would be the same?

A. No, it's nothing to do with that.

Q. In other words, what really happens here is that the market could have to reassess its views on volatility based upon new facts and circumstances, a point we talked about just a few moments ago?

A. Yes, every day.

Q. And so when you're observing what's happening on August 12, what you're saying is they're looking at the same body of data so they shouldn't care very much whether it's for two years or three years or five years?

A. No, I'm looking at the actual data and discovering that market participants did not expect volatility to change much after one year. The volatility surface had flattened out. And, therefore, it's reasonable to say that the volatility expectation at that point in time for the next five years was for it to be flat. In fact, the volatility ended up going up quite a bit in that period. Market participants' forecast turned out to be too low, but at the time that is the best forecast.

Q. We're talking about options here. These are all call options, correct, that you're basing your implied volatility off? They're not warrants, are they?

A. Correct.

Q. And there were no, as in zero traded Sunbeam warrants, correct?

A. As far as I know, that's correct.

Q. Okay. So you couldn't, therefore, directly observe what the market was saying about a warrant. You'd have to make some sort of inference about what would happen with a warrant if it behaved like an option, correct?

A. No. The warrants and the options are identical securities once the warrants are issued. Both the holder of the warrant and the holder of the option have the right to acquire the underlying stock at a particular price at a particular point in time. The issuance of the warrants itself will be taken into account by market participants on a forward-looking basis and pricing both the warrants and the options. But once they're outstanding from the holder's perspective, the difference between warrants and options is irrelevant. They're identical securities.

Q. Well, I thought we talked just a little while ago in your testimony, and perhaps it was during your direct that there are two different Black-Scholes formulas, are there not, one that is sort of the standard one, and one that is dilution adjusted Black-Scholes, correct?

A. Not quite. There are two different ways to use the Black-Scholes formula to value warrants. One is what's called option like warrant valuation, which just applies the Black-Scholes formula as is to the value of warrants; and one is the dilution adjusted Black-Scholes model, which makes a series of adjustments regarding the exact same warrants. And both result in the same value for warrants like the warrants at issue here.

Q. And now when solving for the implied volatility using the Black-Scholes formula, did you use the option like model or did you use the dilution adjusted like model?

A. I didn't solve for the implied volatility. I got the data from Option Metrics.

Q. Do you know whether Option Metrics used the option like Black-Scholes model or the dilution adjusted Black-Scholes model?

A. I don't think it's necessary for them to make that choice.

Q. I didn't ask you whether it was necessary, Mr. Ross. I guess I'd like an answer to the question I put, which is, do you know, sir, whether Option Metrics used the dilution adjusted Black-Scholes formula or the option like Black-Scholes formula when they chose the formula they were going to use to do the computation of implied volatility?

A. The question doesn't make any sense. They're deriving implied volatilities from call options.

Q. And so you're saying it would make sense only to use the option like one if you're pricing call options, correct?

A. If you're pricing call options and you want to derive an implied volatility for a particular option, you would use the Black-Scholes formula. But then, as I said, you have to aggregate all the information you get from all the options in order to estimate the volatility surface. That's what they do.

Q. Now does dilution always increase volatility, sir?

A. I'm not sure I understand your question.

Q. Well, let me back up just a bit. I believe earlier in your explanations on direct examination you were talking about one of the impacts of the dilution adjusted Black-Scholes formula. And I thought I understood you to say that as you increased the dilution that that would tend to increase volatility?

A. No, I didn't say that.

Q. Okay. Correct -- Okay. What is the relationship, if any, between the increase in dilution and whether volatility increases or decreases?

A. I think the only thing I said is that the volatility of the equity of a firm that has warrants and stock outstanding would be granted in the volatility of the stock of the same firm.

Q. Okay. And that's a distinction between plugging in the stock price versus the equity price in the formula?

A. No, that's a different adjustment.

Q. Let's stick with this one and then I won't confuse them. In a highly leveraged company, would the exercise of-warrants increase the amount of equity available?

A. The exercise itself?

Q. Yes. Well, the exercise with the payment of the exercise price.

A. Not necessarily, no.

Q. Okay. And that would be why? Why would wouldn't it?

A. Well, the warrants were outstanding before the exercise. They were part of the equity. And the payment of the exercise price the company gets the exercise price, but the warrants are no longer outstanding and the warrant holders get shares. So the total equity may or may not increase.

Q. All right. So you're not sure whether that would be offsetting or not?

A. I'm not sure what you mean by "offsetting."

Q. The equity --

A. It depends on the relationship between the value of the warrants before the exercise and the exercise. So let's take a situation where the warrants are worth $10 per share and the exercise price is 5, and the warrant holder makes an irrational decision to exercise the warrants anyway, in effect giving the other shareholders a gift. Under those circumstances, the company will get the $5. The other shareholders will benefit because the warrant holder made a bad decision.

Q. But that would be an irrational circumstance, correct?

A. I could think of unusual facts and circumstances where it might not be, but typically, yeah.

Q. But let me just be sure I understand whether we agree or disagree on this point. If the equity in a company increases, does that tend to increase or decrease the volatility of its anticipated stock returns?

A. Yeah, I'm not sure. I think it could in principle go either way. All I talk about is the relationship between the volatility of the equity of a firm that has warrants outstanding and the volatility of its stock. That relationship is unambiguous. The volatility of the equity is higher than volatility of the stock.

Q. But in a highly leveraged company, for example, as the amount of the equity were to increase, wouldn't you expect the volatility of the stock returns would decrease as the leverage was brought back into something closer to a norm?

A. Not necessarily. I can think of extreme examples where that's not the case. But if you're saying, if you're -- I think your question is if you decrease the leverage by increasing the equity here, you're thinking about selling new shares or -- I may be able to answer that question.

Q. Well, I think I've gotten an answer to my question. Let me move to a slightly different area.

I want to discuss with you just briefly the area of employee stock options. You have done work previously, have you not, in valuing employee stock options?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. In fact, you have testified as an expert witness for the husband in a divorce case half versus half, correct?

A. It was a big divorce case, yes.

Q. Okay. Now for employee stock options, would you agree, sir, that at least in some circumstances the Black-Scholes formula would produce the upper bound of value for the options and the intrinsic value would produce the lower bound for the options?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And when we say "intrinsic value," let's just walk that back for a moment. Intrinsic value is what?

A. For options that -- the term "intrinsic value" refers to the greater of the difference between the stock price and the exercise price and zero. If you have an option that is in the money, it's the extent to which it's in the money. If you have an option that's in the money, the intrinsic value is zero.

Q. So the point here would be that the lower bound would always be the intrinsic value which could be zero. There wouldn't be a negative value associated with it, correct?

A. I'm not sure. When you said the point here --

Q. I'm sorry. Let me omit that portion. Is it true, sir, that the lower bound for employee stock options would be the intrinsic value?

A. Depends on the facts and circumstances.

Q. Is it true, sir, that Black-Scholes can overestimate the value of employee stock options because of the stochastic life feature of the stock options?

A. Yes. I'd be happy to explain that if you want.

Q. Let me ask a question or two. When we talk about a stochastic life feature, we're talking about the fact that there is a random event that could shorten the life of the option; is that true?

A. With employee stock options, it's that the person can die before the maturity of the options, and the option agreement may specify that at that point you have to either exercise them or terminate them; or the person can be fired in which case the options disappear; or the person gets a very short period of time to exercise the options; or the person can quit the firm in which case the options may specify that he has to exercise the options in a short period of time or lose the options. All those things can shorten the effect of the life of the option.

So you could have a five-year option, but if you die in one year, it's a one-year option. If you're terminated in one year, it's a one-year option. If you leave in one year, it's a one-year option.

Q. But they're stochastic in the sense that while you can identify the specify events that could shorten the life of the option, no one is able to model what that shortening will be, and, therefore, you can't just reprice it. You can't say employee stock option that otherwise might be out there for five years now has to be treated as two years. These are events that are not capable of being modeled. They're, therefore, deemed to decrease the pricing on them; is that fair?

A. I don't think I would agree with that. I think there's been a lot of progress made in the last few years about modeling the stochastic properties of employee stock options. This is a big controversy now because corporations are required to expense employee stock options, and now under applicable rules they expense them with the Black-Scholes value. But there's some dispute about whether or not the actual value of the options is the Black-Scholes value or a different value based on the stochastic life.

Q. Well, it's the stochastic features of the employee stock options that we're focusing in on for the purposes of determining whether Black-Scholes has a tendency to overestimate; do you agree with that?

A. With respect to what I testified to, under those facts and circumstances I testified that the stochastic life of those options could result in a situation where the fair market value of those options was less than the Black-Scholes value, that's right.

Q. And that's because of the specific kinds of events you've described that could cause the option to have a somewhat random event that would shorten its life, correct?

A. Because of the particular events I described and the specific characteristics of the particular options that were reached in that case.

Q. All of which were events with the example I just offered to you, which were those were all events that could have caused those employee stock options to terminate on a nonmodeled random basis thereby resulting in an overstatement under Black-Scholes?

A. I wouldn't characterize them that way. I think there's specific kinds of events associated with employees. I don't think I can generalize it as much as you've asked me a question.

THE COURT: So I'm clear, so there is something unique about options to employees.

THE WITNESS: Very much so, Your Honor.

THE COURT: What is it as opposed to what we're talking about here which is just whether a random event that can't be modeled can affect the validity of Black-Scholes.

THE WITNESS: With employees, the rights to continue to own or exercise the option is itself tied to employment. Typically, with employee stock options, if you're fired, you lose the option entirely. If you quit, instead, the term of the option gets shortened; you no longer have the right to wait three years to exercise. You have to exercise it now or you're out of luck. So it's the specific time of the terms of the option.

THE COURT: What does that have to do with the valuation of the option?

THE WITNESS: Because when you change the terms of the option because of your employment status, that affects the value of the option.

THE COURT: Sure. And I understand that. But I don't think we're talking about why the term changes; simply that it does.

THE WITNESS: Simply that it can.

THE COURT: We're agreeing it has nothing to do with the fact you're an employee other than the terms of your employment may change so the terms of your option may change.

THE WITNESS: No, no. It's tied in, it's a specific term of the option itself.

THE COURT: Right. No, I understand that.

THE WITNESS: Let me just give a simple example just to hopefully make it clear. Suppose that an employee holds a three-year option, which if the term wasn't tied to his employment, it would be worth $10.

THE COURT: Right.

THE WITNESS: And suppose there's a 50-percent chance the employee is going to leave in one year and the one-year option is worth, if it was just otherwise an ordinary option, is worth $5 in my example. So in that example there's a 50-percent chance the employee in effect owns a three-year option worth 10. So that expected value is now five. There's a 50-percent chance the employee owns what is in effect a one-year option worth five. So the expected value there is 2.50. So his option, it's really neither a one or three-year option. It's an option worth 7.50 because of the uncertainty about whether it will be a one-year option or a three-year option.

THE COURT: Right. Okay.

BY MR. MARMER:

Q. Mr. Ross, would you agree, sir, that the accounting treatment for options is not relevant to their economic value?

A. Well, I think depends what the accounting treatment is. But I think I would agree that it's certainly possible to have a situation where the accounting rules require one number and the fair market value of an asset a different number.

Q. So, in other words, you won't be guided by an accounting treatment in determining what the economic value was?

A. I think it would depend what the relevant accounting rules were. But I'm certainly not surprised to see situations where economic values and fair market values differ from book values for accounting purposes.

Q. You said book values. Are book values the only occasion in which you would think there would be a discrepancy between what economic value would be and accounting values would be reported at?

A. I believe book values are synonymous with economic values for the purposes of answering your question. If you're referring to something else, I'm not quite sure what you're referring to.

Q. Let me ask you this. Would you agree that it would be fundamental economic error not to consider the effect of special characteristics of an option and to blindly apply the Black-Scholes model?

A. With respect to employee stock options, certainly. Also with respect to the warrants here, which have this feature of acquiring a large percentage block of stock and a restriction, of course. If there are special characteristics, you want to take those into account.

Q. So it's relatively clear, I take it that at least from your point of view while Black-Scholes is one of the tools that will be used, adjustments have to be made to take into account the special facts and circumstances of the actual security you're valuing, correct?

A. If there are relevant special facts and circumstances, of course.

Q. And in this case you've identified what you consider to be two of those and you've made those adjustments, right?

A. Correct.

Q. And those are the only two that you've made adjustments for, the block control premium and the liquidity discount, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. Let's look at the block premium for a minute, if we could. I believe you rely upon a 1989 article by Barclay (phonetic) in your paper; is that right? Paragraph 11, page five of your report, if that will help. I don't mean to slight Professor Holderness. The Barclay Holderness article is what you're citing to?

A. Correct.

Q. When you're referring to the study in your direct examination, this is the report that you're talking about, right?

A. This is the article, correct.

Q. Okay. Now in -- and that's the article that came up with the average of the 20-percent premium for blocks that forms one of the underpinnings for your opinion that a 20-percent premium should be applied to the value of the stock here, correct?

A. For a particular kind of block. The largest outstanding block, yes.

Q. And let's just look first at the study itself. I believe your report acknowledges itself that the Barclay study is based on data from trades that occurred between 1978 and 1982, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And that means that as of today that data is somewhere between 23 and 27-years-old, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And the Barclay data consists of over that period from 1978 to 1982 of 63 block trades that met the criteria of the offers imposed, right?

A. Correct.

Q. And so the Barclay data of 63 trades over roughly five years indicates you're picking up essentially if they were to be evenly distributed about one trade a month, right?

A. I'm sorry. Someone was coughing when you were asking your question. I just missed part of it.

Q. The 63 block trades over five years, that's about one trade a month?

A. If you divide 63 by 60 months, that would be an average of one trade a month. Whether there was more than one trade a particular month, I don't know.

Q. Do you know how many blocks were existing in the market from 1978 to 1982 that would fit the selection criteria being the largest block, fit the criteria of not being a takeover, but didn't actually trade?

A. No, I don't.

Q. Do you know, did Barclay and Holderness attempt in any way to measure the number of blocks that were out there in the marketplace during those five years that otherwise would fit their criteria but did not present themselves in the form of an actual trade?

A. I don't recall. I would have to check the article.

Q. Now the Barclay data showed, did it not, that two-thirds of the corporate block purchasers were in the same business as the firm whose shares they acquired or closely related one?

A. I remember the articles showing that 80 percent of the transactions involved corporate purchasers and 20 percent involved individual purchasers, but, again, I know that the article presented other data on the characteristics of purchasers, but without checking, I'm not sure.

Q. Let me see if I can refresh your recollection just with one of their examples. You remember the discussion about Mego International, a toy manufacturer buying nine percent block in Tonka Toys?

A. Not specifically.

Q. Doesn't ring a bell?

A. If you could hand me the article...

Q. That's okay. I think we'll just move along.

A. Okay.

Q. Now you don't analyze whether there were any potential purchasers for the Sunbeam warrants by any company in the same business as Sunbeam, do you?

A. I didn't do any specific analysis of that question. I mean, there were other companies in the same business that certainly had the ability to acquire Sunbeam. Whether they were willing to do so or not, I haven't analyzed that.

Q. Did you look at any of the factual materials concerning the efforts Morgan Stanley made to sell Sunbeam prior to the transaction that took place between CPH and Morgan Stanley -- and Sunbeam concerning Coleman?

A. I think I have seen some of those materials at one point. Haven't looked at them recently.

Q. Are you aware, sir, that Morgan Stanley made intense efforts for a period of time to find a buyer for Sunbeam and never could find one?

A. I don't want to characterize their efforts. I don't know what they tried to do and what they were able to do.

Q. Is it a matter of not characterizing or you're simply not aware of what they did?

A. I think I saw some of the materials you're referring to, but your question is a little bit vague. If you show me some materials, I can tell you whether it was something I saw. Honestly, I wasn't there at the time. I wasn't at Morgan Stanley. I can't really characterize what they tried to do or what they were able to do.

Q. Now the Barclay study observed no block trading parties that were institutions, such as banks, mutual funds or pension funds except for an employee stock ownership; is that correct?

A. I don't recall. I'd have to check. If you'd hand me the article, I could tell you.

Q. I just want to see what of these things -- I take it you didn't concern yourself in reaching your conclusions about a block premium here as to whether an institution might be available to purchase the warrants; is that correct.

A. I don't think that is correct. I looked at the relationship between premiums paid and the characteristics of the issuer of the block in the Barclay study and I took that into account.

Q. But the Barclay study, you can't remember one way or another whether the Barclay study observed any phenomena relating to an institution emerges as a block purchaser paying 20 percent?

A. Well, the article is 24 pages long single-spaced. I remember it did a lot of other kinds of -- provided a lot of information about blocks. The information that I focused on was the information about block premiums and about the relationship between block premiums and the characteristics of the block. But there's other interesting information in the article about characteristics of blocks.

Q. All right. But if we were --

THE COURT: I'm sorry. I really need to you listen to the question and answer the question that's asked. Okay?

THE WITNESS: I'm sorry, Your Honor.

THE COURT: That's okay Go ahead.

BY MR. MARMER:

Q. If we were going to take the Barclay study, let's start out would you agree with me that the Barclay study purports simply to describe the phenomena occurring within the block trades it's analyzing and does not purport anywhere in that study to predict a 20-percent block premium will be paid in the future for any company that presents itself?

A. Yes, I think that's fair.

Q. And if we were to try and take the criteria within the Barclay study and start applying them to the facts and circumstances of this case, at least one of those leaps would involve a contamination of a description to a predictor, correct?

A. I don't understand your question.

Q. Well, it would be a matter of, it would be an improper use of the Barclay article, would it not, to suggest that the authors are implying that you can predict from their study what will happen in the future with regard to blocks that are trading?

A. No, I don't think that is a proper use of the study. They specifically estimate the relationship between premiums paid and characteristics of blocks using a standard regression analysis, and it's well understood that such regression analyses can be used once they're estimated for prediction.

Q. But even there, sir, is it not true that they're analyzing what happened in the actual blocks that trade; they're not analyzing how that data then would be applied if you took all of the blocks available at that time. That would skew the result rather dramatically, wouldn't it?

A. I don't understand your question.

Q. Well, in other words, you've got data here that self selects. It presents itself in a rather atypical fashion, does it not? You have a subset of all of the trades that are out there, and those are the ones that actually trade. I'm sorry. All of the blocks out there are the ones that trade. You take the universe of other blocks out there that don't trade. And now if Barclay were correct, shouldn't there be a second market that exists just for block trading where anyone who has a block would know they ought to go and the bidding ought to be 20 percent?

A. Your question, respectfully, doesn't make any sense. I think you asked three or four in that line of speech.

Q. I apologize.

A. But I would say that it's not a, what was the word you used, biased selection. It's an actual sample of what willing buyers pay willing sellers in arms' length transactions and, therefore, is the best evidence about what the value of large blocks is.

Q. And it doesn't say a word about what happened to all of the other blocks and whether they would or wouldn't have traded at 20 percent; isn't that right?

A. I think it implies what would have happened if there was both a willing buyer and willing seller for the other blocks. There weren't. That's why the other blocks didn't trade.

Q. Within the Barclay study itself there's a pretty broad range of pricing among those premiums and discounts, aren't there?

A. Yes.

Q. It ranges from 60 percent discounting to over a hundred percent on the premium side; isn't that right?

A. I would have to look specifically, but that sounds right.

Q. And approximately 20 percent of the Barclay study sample involved trades that actually traded at discounts; isn't that correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. And what you're doing here is applying the average, in essence, the 20 percent as well as the --

A. The average of all the transactions including the discounts. The average premium, 80 percent of the transactions where there is a premium would be much larger than 20 percent.

Q. The Barclay study found firms in severe financial distress at the time of the block trade traded at more substantial discounts?

A. No. They provide a couple examples of firms in what I would call extreme financial distress. I believe in one case the block was in probate. In another case the firm was in bankruptcy. But more generally they provide a statistical analysis that looks into the relationship between premiums and the characteristics of a block that takes into account the financial circumstances of the issuer, and that analysis does not imply that firms that are in less extreme financial distress will trade at discounts.

Q. Now in March of 2001, Barclay and Holderness together with Shian (phonetic), published another study called the block pricing puzzle, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And you've had a chance to look that over, correct?

A. Not quite correct. It's not published. It's an unpublished working paper.

It is circular.

Q. It's available on the website. It's something that anyone interested in the -- in this field could easily retrieve from social science research network, correct?

A. I know it's possible to retrieve it online. I'm not sure whether it's available on that particular source.

Q. Okay. It's not something you overlooked in analyzing this, is it?

A. No. I took it into account.

Q. Now, but you didn't refer to the 2001 working paper in your report, did you?

A. I don't -- I don't recall looking at it in connection with the report. I don't think it's listed on the materials reviewed in connection with the report. But I have seen it before. Your colleague asked me about it in deposition, and I have looked at it since.

Q. Now the data in the 2001 study is between 23 and 28-years-old, correct?

A. I'm sorry?

Q. It's from 1978 to 2005?

A. I don't know. I'd have to look at it.

THE COURT: 1978 until when?

MR. MARMER: It's 1978 until the -- I'm sorry. Let me restate that.

BY MR. MARMER:

Q. The Barclay study is published in 2001 -- not published but is available in 2001. And they looked at a period beginning at approximately the same time as the other study did, 1978, although they had certain samples where they had to go to 1979, correct?

A. I don't know.

Q. You just don't recall?

A. Don't recall.

Q. Okay. Now there were 204 block trades analyzed in the 2001 study, correct?

A. I'd have to look at it.

Q. Well, let's try and step out maybe more generally to see if the central conclusions of the study stick in your mind. It's true, is it not, sir, that the point where the essential argument of the 2001 study was that they were attempting to find out who actually will pay a premium and why some blocks trade at premiums and some blocks trade at discounts?

A. I don't think I'd characterize it quite that way, no.

Q. Okay. Do you think that's an unfair characterization?

A. I think parts of the subject matter relates to that.

Q. It's true, sir, is it not, that one of the conclusions of the 2001 Barclay study was that in identifying purchasers who would pay a premium, those are what the authors describe as active block holders, persons who intend to take a hands-on active role in management?

A. No. They distinguish between two types of transactions, block transactions that are a little bit like the blocks in the Barclay and Holderness article, but in the 2001 article which was by Barclay, Holderness and Shian they don't require that it's the largest block. It could be any large block. And private placements, which are different from block transactions, in that within the set of private placements they distinguish between two types of investors, active investors and passive investors.

Q. The robust portion of their findings is that it's persons who were interested in obtaining hands-on roles in management that are willing to pay a premium. That's the gist of the finding, is it not?

A. I'm not sure that's a fair characterization. I don't know why it's robust. The article has not been published, so I'm a little uncomfortable calling an unpublished finding robust when the authors haven't seen fit to publish their article.

Q. Okay. So your queasiness has to do with the fact it hasn't been published as opposed to the statistical information contained within it; is that correct?

A. First of all, I don't know if you've characterized it correctly. You haven't shown it to me. I'd like to look at it. But I don't attach the same veracity to an unpublished study as I do to a published study because you have to vet a study before you get it published.

THE COURT: As I understand the question that's being asked is you're disagreeing with Mr. Marmer's characterization of what he thinks is an essential conclusion of this article. And he's asking you why. Is it because it's unpublished or is it for some other reason?

THE WITNESS: I thought he asked me whether it was a robust conclusion. And I don't remember whether the characterization made in the conclusion is even accurate. But even --

THE COURT: How would you describe the conclusion in the article?

THE WITNESS: I'd want to look at it again.

THE COURT: Can you describe it off the top of your head or not?

THE WITNESS: I think the article was trying to solve the following puzzle, that in the block trading literature people observed that when blocks trade publicly, the trades occur at premiums on average. However, in the private placement literature, even when the private placements are unrestricted, the blocks trade at discounts on the average. And to the authors, that seems like a puzzle because in both cases it's a large block of unrestricted stock. The only difference is that one is in public transaction using the public markets, and the other is a private transaction where the issuer trades directly with the purchaser.

And the article discusses a number of potential explanations for the -- that puzzle rejects some, accepts or accepts in part others. That's what the article is about in general. But with respect to the specific conclusions, I would just want to look at it, but that's the general substance of the article.

THE COURT: Thank you.

BY MR. MARMER:

Q. Let's look at another article. You discussed briefly some research by Kent Clark and Eli Ofek concerning what happens with distressed firms in their trading. Do you recall that?

A. Yes.

Q. Now it's true, is it not, that Clark and Ofek were dealing with takeovers, not just block trades?

A. Yes, that's true.

Q. And, in fact, the research you've relied upon by Professors Barclay and Holderness, they expressly excluded takeovers from their study; isn't that right?

A. That's right.

Q. So these wouldn't be really an apples to apples comparison; fair enough?

A. They're both control transactions, but different kinds of control transactions.

Q. One of them -- when you say "control transactions," you're saying -- let me be sure I understand you -- that a large block implies the ability to control?

A. I think large percentage blocks are frequently referred to as control blocks. It's often the case that large block holders have a role in managing a company. Whether or not it confers the explicit ability to control depends on a lot of facts and circumstances.

Q. And in a takeover situation once they've acquired it, they've gotten it by definition?

A. Correct.

Q. In the Eli -- I'm sorry -- the Clark and Ofek article, they also observe the phenomena, did they not, that takeovers were more likely to involve firms in the same industry?

A. Could you refer me to the specific reference?

Q. Sure. If you just look take a look at the abstract and look at the first sentence, maybe that will refresh your recollection on it.

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Now we were talking just a moment ago about -- actually, before we go back let me just ask you this. I think this came out on direct and I think in response to questions from the Court, but I want to make sure I got it all clearly.

When you took the 20-percent premium, you applied that to the underlying stock price, correct?

A. Correct. I treated the option as the right to buy a control block that's worth 20 percent more than ordinary exchange trading shares.

Q. And so if we were just, for instance, just to take your charts and look at the values, the concluding values for the stock based upon with a premium -- I'm sorry. The warrants. Let me start over. I've confused that to the point of beyond recognition.

If we were to compare your two charts, charts where you're looking at the value of the warrants with a control premium and the value of the warrants without a control premium, when you look at the actual difference in valuation between those two charts where you have the control versus not, the differences are actually much larger than 20 percent, correct?

A. Smaller in dollars, greater in percentages because warrants are on percentage terms more sensitive to changes in value of a security but in dollar terms less sensitive. So it's a smaller dollar premium.

Q. But put differently, it's fair to say, is it not, that when you choose to apply the 20-percent premium at the stock price input, the effect of the calculations is to magnify that, so that the valuation turns out to be larger than 20-percent difference between the two?

A. No, it reduces it because the 20 -- if you own the stock, let's say the stock was, the exchange traded stock was $8. Then the control block with a 20-percent premium would be worth 9.60, $1.60 more per share. The warrants are worth more per share but less than $1.60 more per share.

Q. So if I understand you correctly, if we were to take, for example, Exhibit F to your report which assumes a 20-percent large block premium on the trading day of August 12 and, therefore, uses a stock price that is the 813 stock price with 20-percent premium of 10.275 and if we just look over at your 65-percent volatility number and come down to the total value of the warrant, it's about $160 million on that chart, right?

A. Without the liquidity discount?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. And then with the -- and then if we did the same analysis with the no large block premium, that's your Exhibit, what is that, Exhibit G, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And there the comparable number would be approximately 125.7 or 126 million, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. Now when you apply the liquidity discount, you didn't apply the liquidity discount to the underlying shares, did you?

A. No.

Q. You applied that to the total value number that you came up with, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. I want to go back and just look for a moment at some of these concepts of block premium and what the purchaser is getting. I believe you said that large blocks are sometimes referred to as control blocks and that that's at least some of the thinking behind why a premium is paid.

A. Yes, they're sometimes referred to as control blocks.

Q. And in assigning a premium to the underlying shares of the warrants here, you assumed, did you not, sir, that a purchaser would pay a premium for warrants that would entitle the purchaser to acquire on a diluted basis 19 percent of the company, correct?

A. Not quite. I calculated the fair market value of the warrant in those circumstances where the warrant is the right to buy shares that are worth more on a per share basis than exchange traded shares. And I determined that in an arm's length transaction between a willing buyer and a willing seller, those warrants would be expected to trade at a higher price than warrants were not at a control block.

Q. I'm just trying to look at this from a practical point of view and see if I understand what you're saying. Are you saying that someone who's going to be a potential purchaser of the Sunbeam warrants that CPH owned would pay a premium on August 12th to buy that warrant because then they would have the right at some point in the future when it would become economically sensible to exercise the warrant, and at that point in the future they would then have 19 percent of the common stock and that would be a bigger opportunity for control?

A. I'm saying that a willing buyer would pay more for a warrant to buy a control block of shares on a per share basis from a willing seller in an arm's length transaction on August 12, 1998 than in an otherwise comparable transaction involving warrants to buy a block that was not a large percentage block.

Q. You have no study that ever shows that that phenomena has occurred, do you?

A. With respect to warrant transactions?

Q. Correct.

A. No, I looked at the studies of stock transactions.

Q. And I believe you told us during your direct examination that generally speaking it would be economically foolhardy for the owner of a warrant to exercise it, that typically it's worth more alive than dead.

A. As long as the warrant has dilution adjustments and it's not a dividend paying stock, absent very unusual-facts and circumstances typically options are worth more alive than dead, that's correct.

Q. And the parameters you've just set describe the Sunbeam warrant here, correct?

A. The Sunbeam warrant had dilution adjustments and Sunbeam was not paying dividends, correct.

Q. Let's just explore for a moment -- Leave aside the warrant. Let's just talk about a block of stock first. Is it your view, sir, that someone would pay a 20-percent premium to acquire a 19-percent block of the common stock of Sunbeam in a circumstance where another owner would have -- let's take the owners. Michael Price would have at that point 14 percent of the company and CPH would have about 11 and a half percent?

A. I think, if anything, the best estimate is likely to be higher. That's exactly the kinds of circumstances that Barclay and Holderness studied.

Q. Well, let's just look at this. We're talking -- Let's be sure we have the numbers straight first. CPH owned 14 percent of the common stock before you assume the exercise of the warrant, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. If you assume the exercise of the warrant goes from 100 million to 123 million, that's more or less 11 and a half percent?

A. Combined with the warrants it's over 30 percent.

Q. For a moment we're going to leave out the warrant if we can.

A. Okay.

Q. So it's about 11 and a half percent; is that right?

A. Okay.

Q. All right. And Michael Price had before, out of 100 million shares he had 17 and a half percent, correct?

A. It's -- I'd have to double-check the proxy. I know it was less than 23 million shares substantially. It sounds right. I'll accept your representation.

Q. And if you assume the exercise of warrants so that you had 123 million shares in the base, that would come out to about 14 percent, correct?

A. I'll accept your math.

Q. Okay. That's always dangerous, but if you think of a reason not to, feel free to speak up.

A. Okay.

Q. It's true, is it not, that CPH and Michael Price had at least through the history of this matter once the warrant had been exercised -- are you aware of any circumstances in which the two of them disagreed or were at odds with one another?

A. I don't really have an opinion about that one way or the other.

Q. Didn't look at it at all, did you?

A. I know a little bit about some of the -- I know there's a filed trial transcript, but I haven't investigated the facts and circumstances. I certainly don't have an opinion about the relationship.

Q. Do you know how many board seats Michael Price had?

A. I don't recall.

Q. Do you know how many board seats CPH had?

A. Don't recall.

Q. It's true, is it not, sir, that Michael Price and CPH together, even assuming the exercise of the warrants, would own 31.6 percent of the common?

A. No. CPH would own more than 30 percent. Michael Price would own what he owns.

Q. You're absolutely correct. I misstated. Let me assume for a moment that CPH has sold the warrant and someone else owns the warrants.

A. Right.

Q. In that event, and let's assume further the warrants had been exercised. You with me?

A. I'm not quite sure what you're saying. You're saying CPH exercises the warrants and then sells the shares?

Q. No, CPH sold the warrant before exercising and the purchaser exercises it.

A. Okay.

Q. So we're looking at a universe there in which the purchaser of the warrant who's exercised it has 19 percent of the common, right?

A. Right.

Q. And then CPH and Michael Price together have 31.6 percent of the common, right?

A. Well, they're separate owners. If you add the two numbers together, that might be right, but the 19 percent block is the largest block.

Q. So it's the single largest block as long as you treat Michael Price and CPH as not coordinating their efforts, right?

A. As is appropriate. Whatever is reported in the proxy statement. It's not the coordination. It's the beneficial ownership.

Q. Well, yes, we're talking about beneficial ownership.

You mentioned the proxy statement. I guess in my hypothetical, Mr. Ross, we've assumed a lot of things that weren't present in the proxy, right? We wouldn't really contend the proxy was somehow false and misleading because it responds to a hypothetical sale of the warrants where the hypothetical purchaser has exercised the warrants. Michael Price and CPH decide to align themselves together. That's a little too farfetched to serve as a false misleading in the proxy, wouldn't you agree?

A. There's a lot about your hypothetical that's farfetched, but it's your hypothetical.

Q. Well, I guess the issue I have is whether you -- Let me just go at it a different way. I think we have the math out.

If someone wanted to exercise control over Sunbeam, do you think that they would want to purchase just the warrants from CPH, or do you think they'd want to purchase the warrant and the stock?

A. I'm sorry. Could you repeat the question?

Q. If someone wanted to control Sunbeam, do you think they would purchase just the warrant that CPH owned, or do you think they would want both the warrant and the stock?

A. I think it's easier to talk about what CPH would want and --

Q. But that's not what I asked you. This is one of those occasions where even if it's easier to talk about something else, let's take the more difficult one and answer the question that I asked.

MS. BEYNON: Your Honor, I object to this as an improper hypothetical.

THE COURT: Overruled.

THE WITNESS: I don't have an opinion in the abstract about -- there could be people who want to buy the warrants. There could be people who want to buy the warrants and the stock. There could be people who want to buy the stock. There could be people who don't want to buy any of those things.

BY MR. MARMER:

Q. In 1998, I take it no sensible person would purchase the warrant and the stock given the then existing trading prices, right?

A. You're talking about on August 12th or 13th?

Q. Pick any date in August 1998.

A. Absent very unusual circumstances, I think it would not make sense to exercise the warrants on those dates, correct.

Q. So if I understand you correctly, then, the hypothetical purchaser of the warrant in 1998 that's going to pay a 20-percent premium is going to do so based upon the assumption that they're going to buy the warrant which will give them the right five years later before the warrant goes dead to acquire a 19-percent block; is that right?

A. No, the warrants are what are called American type options. They have the right to exercise them at any time.

Q. And the difference between American and European options is American options you get to exercise during the entire life; European options you can only do on the end date?

A. On the expiration date, that's right.

Q. We were discussing, I thought, a moment before -- and let me know if I misunderstood you -- was that because rationally economic actors would wait until the very end before they would exercise a warrant even if it were in the money. A rational economic actor in August of 1998 would not purchase the warrant in August of 1998 with an expectation of exercising it prior to its expiration five years out?

A. I think it just depends on the facts and circumstances.

MR. MARMER: May I have a moment, please?

THE COURT: Um-hum.

MR. MARMER: Nothing further.

THE COURT: Do you have other questions?

MS. BEYNON: Yes, Your Honor.

REDIRECT EXAMINATION

BY MS. BEYNON:

Q. Mr. Ross, you testified on cross-examination that you had previously testified for Morgan Stanley; is that correct?

A. Correct.

Q. Have you ever testified adversely to Morgan Stanley?

A. Yes.

Q. And when was that?

A. Recently there was two-sided mock trial proceeding where we're currently serving as experts adverse to Morgan Stanley in approximately 40 securities fraud cases, and I testified in that proceeding.

Q. You also testified that you had in prior cases been an expert on behalf of clients represented by Kellogg Huber; is that correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. In prior cases have you testified on behalf of clients represented by Jenner & Block?

A. I haven't testified on behalf of Jenner & Block, but I've worked on cases on behalf of Jenner & Block.

Q. Have others at Lexecon testified on behalf of clients represented by Jenner & Block?

A. Yes.

Q. On cross-examination, Mr. Marmer asked you some questions about mean reverting the volatility and the mean reverting. Can you explain that a bit?

A. Yes. In general, mean reversion without reference to volatility refers to a phenomenon with certain statistical data where when there are perturbations in the data, the statistical, series whatever it is, tends to revert back to the previous level. Sometimes interest rates are described as mean reverting for that reason.

With respect to options or implied volatilities, there are two kinds of reasons that volatilities can change. One is sort of random reasons. The market gets more volatile. There's unusual trading activity in the security, something like that. And in those circumstances the volatility will revert towards the mean because nothing has changed fundamentally at the company. And what ultimately determines the volatility of the stock is the volatility of the underlying assets and the financial structure of the company. But sometimes the volatility of a stock changes because there is a fundamental change in the company. Either its assets change, say, a company that was in one type of business decides to go into a different type of business and gets riskier assets or, more than likely, the financial structure changes because the company takes on a lot more debt, like Sunbeam did here in March of '98 not only when it acquired Coleman but also when it acquired Signature and First Alert, not only that the value of its assets subsequently declined or were revealed to be much lower than what had been received previously. So the company became much more lever -- had a lot more debt and a lot less equity. So with that fundamental change in the capital structure, there would be no reason to believe that the volatilities would revert all the way to prior historic levels. You would expect the volatility to instead remain at somewhat a higher level.

Now there is some mean reversion in the Sunbeam data. If you look at the historic volatilities for 90 or 180-day periods prior to August 1998, the historic volatilities are much higher than the 65 percent volatility that I used. And they're shown in Exhibit D of my report. Whatever the Exhibit shows is that on August 12th, 1998, the 90-day historic volatility was 94.95 percent; 180-day historic volatility was 84.11 percent.

So when market participants are trading actual call options at prices that imply a volatility of 65 percent, what that's saying is market participants expect the volatility of Sunbeam stock to revert somewhat, to decrease somewhat. They do not expect the high levels which persisted in the 90 days prior to August 12, 1998 to persist. But what the 65-percent volatility, implied volatility is also telling you is that market participants do not expect the volatility to revert to the five-year historic average of 54 percent. And that's not surprising. That's at least directionally what you would expect given the enormous increase in debt and the enormous decrease in the stock price that occurred between March '98 and August '98.

Q. Thank you. Mr. Marmer asked you some questions about what he called a smile curve and asked about the applicability of the smile curve to the facts here. Could you please explain your answer a bit there?

A. Yes. There's more than one kind of what's called a smile. One can think about the relation between implied volatilities and the exercise choice of an option. One can also think about the relationship between implied volatilities and the maturity of an option. The volatility smile, the shape that looks like a smile refers to the shape of an implied volatility curve calculated relative to the strike price of an option.

If I remember correctly, for at the money options where the stock price is currently equal to the exercise price, the implied volatilities tend to be at a minimal number. And then as you deviate from the current stock price in either direction in calculating implied volatilities, you tend to get higher numbers with lower exercise prices and higher numbers with higher exercise prices. And it looks a little bit like a person smiling.

But there's another volatility surface which relates to the relationship, to the relationship between implied volatilities and the term in maturity. So for a particular exercise price you can ask the question what is the implied volatility that's implied by a one-month option, and you'll get a number that's a fairly high number. For a two-month option, you'll get a somewhat lower number. For a three-month option, you get a somewhat lower number. And those implied volatilities drop off very quickly and then the slope of that volatility surface flattens out.

THE COURT: Okay. That's what you're relying on when you opine that the implied volatility for a five-year option here is the same as it was for one in one and a half and two years.

THE WITNESS: Correct.

BY MS. BEYNON:

Q. We don't have the data for the five-year options because we're assuming more on the flat part of the graph?

A. I checked the data from one to two.

Q. So we're assuming it's going to stay flat out five years even though we don't have that graph?

A. Correct. If you think about what market participants are doing, you get farther and farther into the future, you have obviously less and less information, so market participants don't have better information about Sunbeam than three years, four years, five years by doing two years. There's really no reason to expect they do.

Q. Mr. Marmer asked you about the valuation of stock options and some of the special considerations applicable to that valuation. Is it your opinion that any of these special considerations regarding valuation of employee stock options are relevant to your opinion here?

A. My opinion is they are not relevant here.

Q. And why is that?

A. These aren't employee stock options.

There's no provision of these options that makes it terminative if someone leaves the employ of Sunbeam, if someone is fired from Sunbeam, if someone dies. The option is just a contract that gives the holder certain rights with respect to Sunbeam. There's restrictions on the transfer of the option. But no matter who dies or who leaves Sunbeam or who quits or who is fired, that contract remains outstanding.

Q. One further question. Mr. Marmer asked you a question about your testimony that you've given in your deposition. Do you still have a copy of your testimony there?

A. I do.

Q. He directed your attention to page 68, lines 10 through 22 where you answered the question, "Does your report describe any way in which CPH could have sold the warrants on August 24th in whole or in part?"

And you testified, "I think whether or not CPH actually could have sold the warrants is irrelevant for the purposes of answering the question about what a willing buyer will pay a willing seller for the warrants on that date, or on August 13th, 1998."

Could you please explain that answer a bit more?

A. Yes. That one can determine --

MR. MARMER: Objection, Your Honor. I don't think it's proper to ask the question to explain an answer he gave at a deposition.

THE COURT: Do you want to simply rephrase it?

BY MS. BEYNON:

Q. Sure. Let's just ask the question that's asked in the deposition. Does your report describe any way in which CPH could have sold the warrants on August 24th in whole or in part? And what's your answer to that?

A. My report describes the characteristics of the warrants, a portion of which is restricted from sale, a portion of which is not.

Q. Is it relevant whether or not CPH could have sold the asset, the warrants on August 24th to your opinion?

A. No -- It affects the calculation of the fair market value, but it does not prevent me from calculating a fair market value. One can calculate a fair market value of an asset that can not be presently sold. One has to take into account the fact that it can not be presently sold in determining and estimating what a willing buyer would pay a willing seller in a hypothetical arm's length transaction. The fact that no such transaction can, in fact, occur, however, does not prevent one from performing that estimate, deriving that estimate.

Q. Mr. Marmer also asked you some questions about the event study that Lexecon performed, and I believe he directed your attention to 0122067. This is in CPH 1405. He asked you about a number of events that took place on a certain day and asked you why you didn't disaggregate the effects of those events on the valuation that you did. Can you please explain why you didn't -- you mentioned that you didn't do that. Could you please explain why you did not?

A. In order to value the rights to buy Sunbeam stock on August 12th, 1998, I wanted to have the best available estimate of the value of Sunbeam stock on August 12th, 1998 in light of all of the events that had occurred on or before August 12th, 1998. A number of events related to the settlement occurred on August 12th, 1998 but were not disclosed to market participants until after August 12th, 1998, after the close of trading on August 12th, 1998.

For that reason, I concluded that the closing stock price on August 12th, 1998 did not reflect unbiased estimate of the value of Sunbeam stock given everything that had occurred as of August 12th, 1998. Instead, I noted that there was a big increase in Sunbeam stock price on August 13th immediately upon the opening of trading, that market participants attributed that entirely to the events that occurred on the 12th and had disclosed after the close of trading on the 12th and, therefore, I decided that the closing stock price on August 13th, which did reflect the information, the events that had occurred on August 12th was a better estimate of the value of unbeam stock on August 12th.

MS. BEYNON: No further questions, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay. You can step down. Thank you.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

THE COURT: You all tell me. Do you want to publish the depo excerpts and then take a break or do you want to take a break? Break. Okay. We'll be back. Thanks.

(A recess was taken from 3:03 p.m. to 3:16 p.m.)

THE COURT: Okay. Where are we going on the depositions?

MR. WEBSTER: Your Honor, the plaintiffs would like to get Dr. Nye on and off the stand today.

THE COURT: Do you have any objection?

MR. WEBSTER: No. We would propose to hand you copies of the depositions so you can read them at your leisure overnight or in the morning so we don't have to stare at you and watch you ??

THE COURT: Well next time you can and you can suck on it all you want.

Okay, who will be Plaintiff's first witness?

MR. SCAROLA: Your Honor, CPH would call as its first witness Dr. Douglas Emery.

BAILIFF: Right this way.

THE COURT: Raise your right hand. Do you swear to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth?

THE WITNESS: Yes.

THE COURT: Is there water in that pitcher?

BAILIFF: Yes.

THE COURT: And cups?

Have a seat. Take a seat.

THEREUPON,

DOUGLAS EMERY

having been first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

MR. SCAROLA: May I precede, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Yes, sir.

DIRECT EXAMINATION

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Dr. Emery, would you please begin by introducing yourself to the ladies and gentlemen of the jury, tell us your full name and where you live?

A. My name is Douglas R. Emery. I live in Miami, Florida.

Q. And where do you work, Dr. Emery?

A. I work at the University of Missouri -- the University of Miami. Sorry.

Q. If you would take --

A. I did once.

Q. Dr. Emery, that microphone in front of you is very directional. Unless it is pointed at your mouth, it doesn't need to be directly on your mouth, but it needs to be pointed in the direction of your mouth, otherwise it won't pick up your voice, okay?

First time you've ever testified Dr. Emery?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Little nervous?

A. Yes.

Q. Think we can get the school where you teach right now?

A. I hope so. The university of --

Q. Let's start again, please. Tell us, if you would, where you work.

A. I work at the University of Miami.

Q. And what is your job at the University of Miami?

A. I am on the faculty in the finance department. I'm Professor of finance and chairman of the department of finance in the school of business.

Q. And how long have you held that position, sir?

A. I have been in that position for almost seven years. This summer it will be seven years.

Q. How long in total have you been teaching at the University of Miami?

A. Seven years.

Q. And tell us, if you would, please, what kind of teaching positions, if any, you held before joining the faculty at the University of Miami?

A. My career started at the University of Calgary in Alberta, Canada.

THE COURT: Remember, if you face the jury, it's fine, but then we need the microphone tipped. I want to make sure I can and they can hear you.

THE WITNESS: I started my career at the University of Calgary. I left the University of Calgary to go to Purdue University. I went from Purdue University to the University of Missouri. I spent quite a bit of time at the University of Missouri. While I was there I had short visiting appointments at Washington University in St. Louis and at Nangqen University in Nangqen, China.

In 1989 I was hired away from the University of Missouri to the State University of New York in Binghamton and I was there until 1998-when the University of Miami hired me away from them.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Solely out of curiosity, how is it that you came to be teaching in China?

A. The University of Missouri business school put together a joint program, joint MBA program with the school of business at Nangqen University in China. And the pattern was for faculty to go over and do the teaching over there. It was a very fascinating experience.

Q. Has teaching been your profession throughout your adult life?

A. It has.

Q. Could you tell us, please, the kinds of things that you have been teaching in the more recent past?

A. I've taught a wide variety of courses over my career. I teach primarily corporate finance and I've taught that at all levels, from undergraduate introductory, what we refer to as core classes, sort of a survey class, introductory finance to advanced classes.

I've taught those same sorts of classes at the graduate the level, masters program. I've also taught specialized case classes at both levels. And then finally I've taught doctoral seminars at the Ph.D level..

Q. Dr. Emery, for your comfort, there are some cups that are just over your right shoulder there and there should be water in that pitcher. And you're certainly welcome to pour yourself a drink.

And while you are doing that, tell us about your own education leading up to your teaching career. And begin if you would with your undergraduate degree.

A. My undergraduate degree was from Baker University in Baldwin City, Kansas. I majored in physics and math. I went from there to graduate school at the University of Kansas. I earned an MBA and then subsequently --

Q. That being a masters in business administration?

A. That's correct.

Q. What changed your mind to leave the math and sciences and go into your MBA program?

A. Well, I had actually always thought that I would do computers in business, some sort of quantitative things in business. And so I actually had majored in physics with the idea of learning more about math and quantitative analysis to be able to do something in business.

The real change was in being in the MBA program and deciding that I really wanted to do the Ph.D program.

Q. And when did you get your masters in business administration?

A. In 1973.

Q. And where did you then begin to pursue your doctoral degree?

A. I stayed at University of Kansas to do my Ph.D in business.

Q. Was there a particular focus within business of your Ph.D training? Any subspecialty or particular interest that you had while you were doing that work?

A. That would -- decision sciences would be the focus. We were a nondepartmentalized business school, which meant we didn't have departments in areas. And so I took classes in a variety of things, finance was one of them. But I focused in the broader area of decision sciences when I -- in my doctoral work.

Q. I have no idea what decision sciences is, could you explain that to us?

A. Essentially it focuses on making the best decisions. It focuses on methods of decision making. Frequently it has a strong quantitative aspect to it. How do you make better decisions? So we study decision making techniques.

Q. Other than coin tossing, I assume?

A. Correct.

Q. All right, sir?

A. Although, to study them we did a lot of coin tossing.

Q. All right. Dr. Emery, can you tell us, please, sir, whether you have written any books or articles about the specific subject matter of corporate finance?

A. I have. I've written a wide variety of articles over the years. And I've written, coauthored five books in corporate finance.

Q. Those volumes at the corner of our table over here look familiar to you?

A. Yes, they are, those are all books that I've coauthored.

Q. All right, sir, what are the subjects that you have dealt with in your writings?

A. Pretty much everything that would be under the rubric of corporate finance and more broadly finance.

Finance is a little bit of a surprise to people. Sometimes people think of it being related to other disciplines such as economics and accounting, and it certainly is, but finance is focused on valuation, what something is worth, and decision making, what do we do next?

So that is, in terms of the breadth, anything that would fall under that in a corporate finance sense, for example, mergers and acquisitions or investment banking, security issuance, working capital management, capital budgeting. These are all topics that would be covered.

Q. To the extent that your expertise focuses on issues of valuation, are you studying and looking at those factors that affect value within the business world?

A. Of course, absolutely.

Q. Are any of your books used as texts at either the undergraduate or graduate level?

A. Yes.

Q. You mentioned accounting and distinguished it from finance. Have you yourself ever been a certified public accountant?

A. I have not..

Q. And how is it that accounting differs from finance? If we're distinguishing those two areas of expertise, help us to understand the distinction between them.

A. What I tell my students is if you ride on the metro and get on the metro and you see that there are seats, and unlike a bus, on the metro there are seats that face forward and seats that face backwards. The seats that face forward are finance seats and the seats that face backward are accounting seats.

And what that is to say is that accountants account for what happened historically, what has happened in the past. And their main focus of the discipline is what went on in the past.

And finance is very much the opposite. We're very concerned with what's the current situation? What's the current market value? How did things stand and what do we do next? Where are we going?

So we're squarely facing into the future whereas, as a discipline, accounting focuses on accounting sort of keeping track of what has happened. So it's primarily historical. And our discipline finance is primarily forward looking.

Q. In order to understand where we are and where we're going, to what extent must finance concern itself with where we've come from?

A. Well, as with anything, if you're going to gather information, where you come from has important relevance. And you know, to project forward, we frequently look at what's happened in the past, what's happened in the more recent past and what the situation is currently. And so it requires frequently interaction with accounting.

Q. Have you edited any professional journals, Dr. Emery?

A. I have. I served as the editor of financial management, which is the signature journal of the Financial Management Association International. And I did that for six and a half years with a colleague of mine John Finnerty.

Q. What are the responsibilities of the editor of a professional journal?

A. The editing process in a professional journal revolves around what's called peer review. And authors do pieces of research, original research. They submit it to the journal. And as editor, and I would look at the paper, read it, have an idea about what it was about, its relevance to our journal. And then I would choose what are called referees or reviewers, and take the paper and send it out to those people without them having the author's name.

And then they would review it and they would say, it's this, it's that, it needs this change, whatever. They would send it back to me. Then we would sit down and I would look at it and say, do I agree with this? Is this okay? And make a decision as to whether the paper would be published as is or, as in most cases, even if it's favorable, we would ask the author to revise the paper. Or in the large majority of cases we would say, thank you very much, but, no, we're not going to publish your paper.

Q. How does one get to be the editor of a professional journal?

A. It is a -- largely a competitive process. It's kind of a combination of competition and opinion. People recommend that you be part of the process, they recommend you serve in various capacities. And there was a search committee. And the search committee encouraged John and me to put in our names and say, we'd be willing to do it, we'd like to do it. And then the search committee, after a national search, chose us to do this.

Q. Is selection for a position as the editor of a prestigious professional journal considered to be a recognition of expertise by your peers within that area?

A. Absolutely.

Q. You consider it an honor?

A. Yeah, I consider it probably the pinnacle of my career.

Q. Thank you.

Have you held memberships in any professional associations?

A. I am. I am active in quite a number of organizations, including the Decision Sciences Institute. But I am a member of the Financial Management Association, which I mentioned earlier, I'm quite active in that. I'm a member of the American Finance Association, the Eastern Finance Association, the Southern Finance Association, the Western Finance Association.

Interestingly enough, the Western Finance Association, despite its title, is actually a national organization, it's not regional.

The Eastern Finance Association I have served as president of that association. The Southern Finance Association, I've served as president of that association. I'm currently chairman of the board of trustees of the Eastern Finance Association.

I have served as a director on some of the other associations as well. And recently I was elected to be the vice-president for the 2006 annual program for the Financial Management Association, which is a successor -- it's an initial succession line to be president of that association.

Q. Do you regularly participate in association activities and conferences?

A. Yes, I do. I attend probably an average of four to five conferences per year.

Q. In addition to having the opportunity perhaps to do some travel, what is the professional value of that kind of participation?

A. I have in the department at University of Miami in the department of finance, I have 14 full-time colleagues and another 12 to 15 part-timers who work in the department. While that may seem like a sizeable number, there are thousands of people around the country who are involved in the discipline. By attending conferences, I am able to find out ideas and other things that are going on, including research ideas, including curriculum ideas. So it keeps me in tremendous touch with a large number of people around the country and at this point around the world.

Q. The ladies and gentlemen of this jury have already been told that this is a case that involves fraudulent claims of a turnaround at Sunbeam.

Has your past study and training focused upon an examination of claims of corporate turnaround, both real and fraudulent?

A. Yes, it has.

Q. Could you tell us, please, the extent to which you have involved yourself in the study of such subjects and the teaching of such subjects?

A. Well, there's a variety of things, but often in an advance classes, especially in a case class, and even in more basic classes, ideas of information. And that is one of the most important things that we study in finance is the flow of information, because we're focused on making decisions, those kinds of situations we are concerned with what is the value of the corporation. And so when we study a turnaround or a downturn, an upturn, a downturn, a change in the situation, what we're studying is how is the value changes in that particular case.

I have, before I was ever engaged in this case, I was well aware of the Sunbeam case as well as many other cases, of course. And I discussed that and other cases in class, pointing out different aspects of them, conversations with colleagues, variety of ways.

Q. When did you first become involved as an expert in this particular matter, Dr. Emery?

A. It was in early November, a week or so into November I was contacted by counsel and asked if I would be willing to be involved, what my background was. And we had some discussions and I was engaged.

Q. Did you then undertake any special effort to familiarize yourself in greater detail with the circumstances of the Sunbeam/Coleman transaction and the subsequent failure of Sunbeam?

A. Absolutely. I read through large amounts of documents. I mean, show you the box of documents, it's pretty -- it's daunting actually when you think about it. We read through financial reports, we read through financial analyst reports. I read through any number of stock price movement. We gathered information about the stock price movement day by day over that -- over the relevant time period. We looked at press releases.

Q. To what extent was it necessary for you, from your perspective, to comprehend the events that took place in late 1997 and 1998 in the context of the business world as it existed at that time? That is, was the timing of these events a matter of significance in your study?

MR. HANSEN: Objection, Your Honor. May we approach?

THE COURT: Sure.

(A bench conference occurred as follows:)

THE COURT: Yes, sir.

MR. HANSEN: This is inconsistent with the proffer that was made before we started. I had understood that we were going to be going into his background and certain terms. Now we're getting into the Sunbeam fraud which Your Honor has conclusively dealt with. And now he's going to go back into it. He's going to talk about it in the context of the world at the time.

The man has no expertise to come here having read newspaper articles. It puts me in a bad position to object in front of the jury. He represented he was going to glossary terms. I object if we're going to go down this road. And I think we ought to voir dire him and find out what he's going to testify to that's in his report.

THE COURT: As I understand it, are we now going into testimony about the corporate world being different than this is now?

MR. SCAROLA: The only thing I'm asking is whether the time in which these events took place made a difference right now.

MR. HANSEN: But it's a hanging question.

MR. SCAROLA: I clearly am going to go back to that, I'm going to ask him how it made a difference.

THE COURT: Is that in the report?

MR. SCAROLA: Yes, it is. It's also in Your Honor's order.

MR. HANSEN: I don't believe -- I believe Your Honor has indicated that corporate scandals and so on.

THE COURT: That's not consistent with the -- here's the report, perhaps you can show me the part you're relying on. That's the transcript, but I need the report.

MR. HANSEN: The deposition is irrelevant, Your Honor.

THE COURT: That is the report?

MR. SCAROLA: Yes.

MR. HANSEN: It's what's in the report.

THE COURT: You want to read the part of the transcript they were showing me, it's in there.

MR. SCAROLA: May I suggest that I would be happy to move on to the next question in order to not delay the jury.

THE COURT: Sure.

MR. HANSEN: But, Your Honor --

THE COURT: We can argue later.

(The bench conference ended.)

MR. SCAROLA: May I proceed, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Yes, sir.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Dr. Emery, we're going to go back to that question a little bit later. But right now let me ask you this before we get into the substance of your testimony.

Are you being compensated for the time that you have devoted to your analysis of these matters and the testimony that you are going to be presenting today?

A. Yes.

Q. And explain to the jury, if you would, please, how you are being compensated?

A. I'm paid for the hours that I spend involved in the case.

Q. Before agreeing to serve as an expert witness in this case, did you have any relationship at all with any Perelman related entity?

A. No, I do not.

Q. Are you anticipating having any relationship at all with any Perelman related entity except to complete your responsibilities in this case?

A. No, I do not. I'm a professor.

Q. Is your compensation in any way whatsoever dependent upon the outcome of this case?

A. No, it is not.

Q. Do you consider yourself in any respect at all to be an advocate in this case?

A. No, I do not.

Q. Dr. Emery, just shortly before your taking the witness stand Judge Maass read to the jury certain findings of fact that have been conclusively established for purposes of this case. And in those findings there were a number of words, phrases and business concepts that may not be familiar to all of us in the courtroom. And the focus of the initial part of my examination is going to be on helping us to understand those various words, phrases and business concepts.

First, can you tell us what kind of entity is Morgan Stanley?

A. Morgan Stanley is a publicly traded corporation or public corporation.

Q. And what kind of entity was Sunbeam?

A. It also was a public corporation.

Q. Are there other kinds of corporations besides publicly traded corporations?

A. Yes, there are private corporations.

Q. And distinguish for us, if you would, please, between a public corporation and a private corporation.

A. A public -- well, both corporations are subject to certain rules and legal conditions. But a public corporation has quite a few more responsibilities and requirements, regulations that they must adhere to. Not the least of which is --

MR. HANSEN: Objection, Your Honor.

THE COURT: I'm sorry, the legal?

MR. HANSEN: Objection, the legal requirements from this witness. He's not a lawyer.

MR. SCAROLA: Let me clarify that question if I could.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Dr. Emery, I didn't ask you this question, but are you a lawyer, sir?

A. No, I am not.

Q. Are you here to tell us about the law?

A. No, I am not.

Q. From the perspective of business and finance, how does a public corporation differ from a private corporation in terms of the business world responsibilities that it has?

A. Primary difference is that it must provide information, certain information regularly to the public. It does so through the Securities and Exchange Commission, commonly referred to as the SEC.

There are other requirements as well. Financial securities must be registered with the SEC. There's a whole variety of things that distinguish the public corporation, requirements that they have that are legal requirements that they must follow.

Q. Is there a distinction in ownership between a public corporation and a private corporation?

A. From a conceptual point of view, not really.

Q. Who are the owners of corporations?

A. Virtually anybody can be an owner. A very common situation with a public corporation is that many of us here have stock, which is a partial ownership, it's a proportional ownership in a company. So if you own a share of General Motors or if you have a pension plan that has in it some assets that are stock, then you would be a part owner of that corporation.

Q. All right. Let's get pretty basic then. I gather from what you have told us that the owners of a corporation are the shareholders or stockholders of the corporation; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Is there a difference between talking about a stockholder and a shareholder?

A. No. They're synonymous terms.

Q. And what then is stock or shares in a corporation?

A. Stock represents a proportional ownership claim. If you think of the corporation as the assets that the corporation has, its ability to provide products and services, those assets have claims against them. And the claims that the stockholders have are what we call residual claims. They are the -- ultimately it falls back on them. So if they pay them -- as long as they meet their liabilities, then they have what's left over in the corporation. And that's apportioned out into each share of stock.

Q. Are there different kinds of stock?

A. There are. Most of the time when we talk about stock, we're referring to what is called common stock. And there are some variations, but in general what I've been talking about is common stock.

There are some other financial securities such as preferred stock, which are what we call hybrids or combinations of different concepts. So they have an element of ownership to them, but they're not primarily ownership. Whereas, common stock is essentially nothing but ownership.

Q. What is a bond and how does that differ from a stock?

A. A bond is like borrowed money. A bond is an obligation the corporation has to repay that money at some point in the future plus interest.

Q. Do bondholders have an ownership interest in the company the way shareholders or stockholders do?

A. No, they do not. We make the distinction between debt, a bond for example, one form of debt, and equity, stock. And the bondholders do not have a claim of ownership. They have a claim of liability. So they're promised a certain amount and they get that amount as long as things -- as long as the company is solvent, then the company must meet its liabilities. But if the company does not do so well or very well, the bondholders still get the same amount. Whereas, the equity holders, they get what's left over. And they're taking more risk.

Q. Do stockholders, by virtue of their ownership interest in the company, have a participation in the management of the company?

A. They can. In some cases, they do. Most, a majority of public corporations such as if you've heard the term Fortune 500, large public companies, essentially the employees running the company may own some shares, but there are large numbers of shares that are owned by people like you and me.

Q. Who does run large publicly traded companies?

A. Well, the officers are the ones who run the company. And there's a chief executive officer who is essentially the person that is the final say in corporate decisions. That person is overseen by a board of directors. Board of directors are elected by the shareholders. The board of directors do not typically involve themselves in the day-to-day operation. They may hire or fire a chief executive, a CEO, but they don't -- they don't run things day to day. The CEO and the other officers are the ones who operate the company day to day.

Q. So if we are looking at the hierarchy of authority within a corporate structure, at the top of that hierarchy we have, collectively, all of the shareholders who are the owners of the company, correct?

A. Right.

Q. And they then -- in fact, would you do this for us --

Your Honor, may I ask Dr. Emery to step down and use the flip chart here?

THE COURT: Sure.

MR. SCAROLA: Thank you very much. Let's move this a little bit closer if we could..

THE COURT: We just need to position it so Mr. Hansen can see it.

MR. SCAROLA: May I simply request that Mr. Hansen move because it's going to be a little difficult keeping it this far away and being able to read it.

THE COURT: I think if we stick it right here Mr. Hansen can see it.

MR. SCAROLA: Wherever you'd like it.

THE COURT: I assume he's going to write big enough where they can see.

Can you see it, Mr. Hansen or not?

MR. HANSEN: I can't, I'm sorry.

THE COURT: Put it parallel to this.

Can you see it? And can you see it. Okay, we're happy.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Okay. Let's start at the top of the corporate hierarchy, if we could, please, tell us, please. Who is at the top of that ladder?

A. That would be the stockholders. And they're a collective group that are not -- they don't act together. As I said, they're people like you and me. They sometimes communicate in some way, but for the most part they're just an amorphous group. They're asked to vote periodically on a set of directors. And the directors are a much more regular group. The directors meet periodically such as two, three, four times a year, sometimes more. And they review the operations of the corporation periodically.

Q. Before you go on, from a business world perspective, what responsibilities do the directors have to the shareholders who have elected them?

A. They have a fiduciary responsibility.

Q. What does that mean?

MR. HANSEN: Objection, legal testimony.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Speaking from a business perspective, what are their obligations to the shareholders?

MR. HANSEN: Same objection.

THE COURT: Overruled.

You can answer it, sir.

THE WITNESS: I'm sorry. Those words are in my books. You know. I use that term all the time. What it means is it's an obligation that is subject to certain laws. But they have to act in the best interest of the stockholders is what they're charged with doing.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. All right, sir. And how does the corporate hierarchy extend down then from the board of directors?

A. Then typically, the CEO would be the key person who would keep the board of directors informed of things, but would run things day to day. From that point, from the CEO on, you could have any number of structures. You could have multiple people reporting to a CEO, you could have a single executive VP, vice-president, who would report to the CEO. You could even have a CEO and a president and then an executive vice-president. So you could have several layers.

You could have what's called a flatter organization. You could have other vice-presidents of things who report. You could have different vice-presidents who report to the CEO or report to a president. So from there, it's all bets are off. I mean, there's any number of...

Q. I've got the top over here, I'm sorry. Right on the end of the table here.

Do bondholders fit anywhere in that corporate hierarchy that we have described?

A. No, they don't. They are outside of this. If you think about -- one of the things that I would say is -- we'll probably talk briefly about a balance sheet at some point. And a balance sheet you have assets and then you have liabilities plus owner's equity. And the bondholders are the liability side. They are legally owed money. And they have to be paid before the shareholders get anything. But the obligation to run the company is through the shareholders. It's for the shareholder's benefit, because they're the ones that are taking the risk.

Q. I think I can have you take your seat again, Dr. Emery, if you would.

THE COURT: Sure, why don't we put that back, though.

THE WITNESS: Sure.

THE COURT: Thank you.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Thank you. I'm sure furniture moving wasn't in your job description, but we appreciate the help.

A. You'd be surprised.

Q. When -- in business terms we talk about an equity market, what is that?

A. When we talk about an equity market the more frequent term is the stock market. When we speak about the stock market we're actually not generally talking about one particular market. So you may have heard of the NASDAQ, you may have heard of the New York Stock Exchange. But there are quite a number of other exchanges in the country and in the world. Philadelphia Exchange, Chicago, San Francisco. And there are other securities that are traded on other exchanges.

When we talk about the equity market, we're talking about a broad number of places where stock is bought and sold, what we call traded. Because each exchange involves a purchase and a sale, right? One person -- two-sided transactions. You have one person buying, one person who is selling. So we call that a trade to get out of the problem of having to specify whether it's a sale or a purchase.

Q. So are the terms "equity market" or "stock market" or "stock exchange" synonymous terms, they basically mean the same thing?

A. Those are basically the same terms. Sometimes if you mean a particular exchange, you might identify that exchange.

Q. And that then is the forum in which ownership interest in corporations in the form of stocks are bought and sold, if I correctly understood what you've told us so far?

A. That is the most common form in which public corporation ownership changes hands. It's not the only.

Q. Now, how do those markets, the equity market or stock exchange differ from the debt market?

A. In the financial securities that they have, debt market would involve bonds and other securities, which are debt rather than equity. Equity market would involve equity securities, stock.

Q. So the equity market involves stock and the debt market then would involve bonds?

A. Right. We have experts in either market. Although, you know, there's a certain amount of overlap in terms of people dealing in the markets, but generally when you get to the individual level, you would have somebody who was focused on one versus the other.

Q. Where does the money go when someone buys a share of stock in ABC Corporation on the New York Stock Exchange?

A. The money goes to the person who sold the stock'.

Q. Does the corporation get any of that money?

A. No, that's what we call a secondary transaction. Secondary transaction: Two entities, two people or corporations, or whatever, sell shares from one to another. The corporation is not -- there's no affect on the corporation. It just has a new owner for that share of stock.

Q. What about in the debt market when a bond is sold in the debt market, does the corporation get any of that money?

A. No, it's the same thing, in the secondary markets that we've been talking about, the corporation does not have any particular -- there's no affect on the corporation to speak of.

Q. You referred to those as secondary markets. I assume then there's got to be a primary market?

A. There is. And the primary market is when they are first sold.

Q. They meaning what?

A. Financial securities. Any security when it is first created, corporation arranges to create the existence of the security. And then the corporation goes out for a first time.

And first time it's sold it's called the primary market. After that, they're all secondary transactions. And, of course, you can guess that the stuff you hear on the news every day, or whatever, when you hear about the Dow or other things, those are all secondary transactions.

Q. Some of us may have heard of something called an IPO or initial public offering, how does that relate to what you've been talking about?

A. An initial public offering is the first time that company offers stock to the public. And that is a primary market transaction.

Q. How do corporations raise money to operate using vehicles like stocks and bonds?

A. The money that's raised is generally called capital. And the capital is obtained typically through the issuance of securities, the creation of these securities. Corporations use what are called investment bankers. In almost every case, they will use an investment banker to help them issue those securities, to get those securities out to the public.

Q. I'm going to stop you again for just a moment, if I could.

How does the word "security" relate to the words "stock" and "bond"?

A. Security is a broader term that includes stocks and bonds. As well as other -- there are some others that are...

Q. I interrupted you. You were talking about how corporations raise capital. That is, raise money through the sales of securities, stocks and bonds. Continue, if you would.

A. The investment bankers, what they do in that case is they help out or facilitate, help arrange the sale of the securities, the newly created securities to investors, to the investment community. In so doing, they can do it primarily in two different ways. The most common is they will do what they call underwrite the issue, the offering, underwrite the offering.

And when they underwrite it, they actually purchase the securities, stocks or bonds, from the corporation that's issuing them, that's creating them. Then they turn around and in a very short time period, they sell them to the public.

The alternative to that would be for the investment bankers to help the company to sell the securities directly to the public. The problem with that is that there's sometimes uncertainty as to how they will sell. And companies, for planning purposes, often find it better to underwrite, to have their securities underwrite and pay the investment bankers to do that.

Q. How does an investment banker get paid under that circumstance where the investment banker is actually underwriting the security offering?

A. The primary way in which they're paid is on, typically, some sort of percentage basis. So they receive a, maybe two percent of the issue fee. So if it's 100 million dollar issue, they might get 2 million dollars. Or 1 million dollar or 3 million dollars, so it would be a percentage of that.

There's a secondary way, which is probably a little bit beyond what we want to get into. It's something called under prices. And the under pricing helps the investment banker with their customers, with their clients, so there's a benefit there.

Q. We sort of jumped right into talking about investment bankers. What is an investment bank?

A. Well, as I said earlier, investment bankers facilitate certain kind of transactions for corporations. I've mentioned issuing securities, but there are a number of other things that involve transfer of ownership. One of them would be the transfer of ownership would be an acquisition of the company. Investment bankers are active in helping companies with that process. So that if one company buys another or sells itself to another, whenever there's a transfer of ownership like that, investment bankers are frequently involved.

Q. I want to examine a little more closely this concept of an investment bank underwriting a stock offering first.

The investment bank, as I understand from your earlier testimony, actually buys that stock from the company and then resells it?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, how is it decided first how many shares a company is going to issue?

A. That's actually a very complex process.

Q. See what you can do to make it easy enough for me to understand.

A. Let's see. It, of course, starts with the company talking to the investment bankers about what they want to accomplish. From there, they will talk about what sorts of values they might be able to get. And the investment bankers would typically, they would typically make a first estimate and do the sorts of things that we talked about, value, make a valuation estimate.

Then they go out and they talk to many other people and they talk about the security. And they do what we refer to as build a book. And they try things out, sort of hypothetically talk to investors and say: You know, if we sold this stock, do you think you'd like to buy that stock? And depending on the response they get, sometimes it will be very enthusiastic and you would have what's called a hot IPO. And in those cases they might go back and instead of a $10 stock price, they might be looking at a 12, 14, 16, 18 dollar stock price. Because there's tremendous amount of enthusiasm and tremendous expectations over the value of that stock.

That's the general process. And then ultimately, over some number of months, they reach a point where they actually make a final decision and actually sell the stock and send it out to the public.

Q. So if Mr. Solovy and Mr. Marmer and I owned ABC Corporation, one-third ownership to Mr. Solovy, who has just elected himself president, one-third ownership to Mr. Marmer, one-third ownership to me. And we decide we want to really take off with ABC Corporation and we've got all of these plans about expanding into a worldwide market. And we want to raise a lot of money to be able to do these things that we want to do. Could we go to you as the investment bank and say, we want to raise money by selling part of our ownership interest in this company in an initial public offering?

A. Absolutely.

Q. And the investment bank then does what in order to decide how much money we can raise for the piece of the company we're willing to sell?

A. They'll make extensive projections, forecasts. It might involve going out to do what's called marketing research to find out how they think the products would sell. They would do cost estimates. It would involve cost estimates of how much they think it's going to cost to produce the products or service.

So if you look at what you can sell it for, you look at what it costs you, that then gives you an idea of how much profit you can make.

Based on that, then that would come back to how much money you need to invest and how much people would want to invest.

Q. Okay. Now, let's assume that Mr. Solovy, Mr. Marmer and I don't want to give up any ownership in this company. We think that this is really going to be a very valuable company and we want to hold on to 100 percent of the ownership ourselves. Is there another way that we can go to the public to raise the money that we need in order to expand this company?

A. Typically then you would go to the debt market. And you would borrow money rather than selling ownership. So instead of taking on a partner in ownership, you would retain ownership, you would borrow money and promise to pay some amount of interest and principal in the future, repay the loan in the future.

Q. And that would be through the sale of --

A. That could be a private or public, if it was public, it would be some -- probably some sort of bond.

Q. Okay.. We have heard a concept referred to in the findings of fact that have already been made called a debenture. What is a debenture?

A. A debenture is simply a form of bond in the same way that a stock, and a bond is a security, a debenture is a type of bond.

In particular, a debenture is -- does not have collateral. A debenture is, its value is derived from the value of the corporation operating. So it is sometimes referred to as it's backed by the full faith and credit of the corporation.

Q. Tell us what collateral means.

A. Collateral. The easiest one is to think about someone who owns a home. And when you own a home, you buy the house, many people take out a mortgage. And the mortgage would be the debt and the house would be the collateral. Because if you don't pay the mortgage, the bank will foreclose, come and take the house and say you can't live there anymore.

Q. Do some kinds of bonds have collateral?

A. Yes, they do. There are mortgage bonds.

Q. And I gather then from what you are telling us in general that debentures are a kind of bond that is not backed up by specific collateral, you get paid back if the company makes enough money through operation to pay you back?

A. Generally speaking, yes.

Q. Before we get away from this concept of securities, what is a registered as opposed to an unregistered security?

A. I mentioned the SEC earlier, the Securities and Exchange Commission. And to be able to have a security sold in the public markets, NASDAQ, New York Stock Exchange, New York Bond Exchange, for securities to be sold there, they are required to be registered. And that means they provide certain information in a formal process with the SEC to allow them to be sold.

If they're not registered, they're not allowed to be sold in that public market.

Q. You may have already covered this in your earlier response, but I'm not certain of that.

You talked about when an investment bank underwrites an initial public offering of stock they are actually buying the stock?

A. Yes.

Q. And then reselling the stock to the public. Do investment banks also underwrite the sale of bonds by purchasing the debt initially themselves?

A. Yes. Absolutely. Bonds -- any type of security can be underwritten. In fact, even processes can be underwritten that wouldn't actually -- it wouldn't be securities, per se.

Q. Now, it would seem to me that if an investment bank is going out and buying a large chunk of stock, or taking on a large chunk of debt, that there's got to be some risk involved in that, because they own it first and they don't get their money until they resell it, right?

A. Absolutely.

Q. So what does an investment company do in order to protect itself from the possibility that, in the case of initial public offering, I bought all this stock from the company, I've given them the money for it, and then there's nobody there to buy it? How do they make sure that doesn't happen?

A. Well, in terms of, I mentioned the idea of making book, they would do a similar type of thing with a bond issue, with any issue. They would talk to people ahead of time to get an idea of, that there would be people to buy them.

Q. Okay. So obviously they've got to do some homework in advance?

A. Absolutely. There would also be the risk that something bad would happen in the time which they owned it. And so they would be wanting to do their homework, beyond who was going to buy it, they would want to do their homework with who was selling the issue, who was creating the issue.

Q. Does it occur that investment banks actually lineup the purchases for the resale before they actually make the purchase themselves?

A. There's some -- you have to be very careful. about how much lining up can be done. There's certainly, if you're going to have a smooth market, and that's in everybody's interest to have a smooth market, you have to be able to communicate.

Q. What does smooth market mean?

A. That means that there's not a shock to the market. You don't have something that happens suddenly that is a big surprise.

THE COURT: You need to look for an appropriate lunch break.

Dr. Emery. Do we know where he is? Oh, right there.

Come on up, sir, and you are still under oath.

THE WITNESS: I certainly understand the misstatement. I'm from Missouri.

THE COURT: Nebraska or whatever it is. Go ahead.

RESUMED DIRECT EXAMINATION

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Dr. Emery, is there anything unusual, sir, about a corporation like either Sunbeam or Coleman seeking to or agreeing to sell itself?

A. No, there's not.

Q. If a corporation, a publicly-held corporation does get sold, what happens to the shareholders in the transaction?

A. Well, there are a variety of possibilities, but obviously they need to be compensated. They had shares that were worth something, so they get compensated. The nature of that compensation varies from case to case. It could be that it's all cash, simply a sale of shares. It could be that the shareholders in the company that's being acquired received in place of that shares in the company that is doing the acquiring. So if you have company A acquiring company B, company B's shareholders could just become shareholders in company A. And A and B go together. And you move on from there.

Not uncommon, a fairly common compensation is a combination, so you would have some cash and some shares in the company A.

Q. Whose job is it from a business perspective to see to it that the owners of the corporation, the shareholders are appropriately compensated when the corporation does get sold?

A. This goes back to what we were saying this morning that the directors are charged with the responsibility to look out for the shareholders, and the chief executive officer would then be the person who would actually operationalize that. So there would be -- they would be responsible for looking out for the welfare of the shareholders.

Q. Now from the other side of the transaction, whose job is it from a business perspective to make sure that the company that's making the purchase isn't overpaying for what it's buying?

A. Once again, it would be the comparable people in -- I think we said company A was acquiring company B, so in company A it would be a similar sort of thing that the officers, CEO and other officers being overseen by the directors are responsible to make the best decisions they can, and that would be to not pay too much for a company.

Q. How does a board of directors on either side of the transaction typically go about fulfilling that responsibility?

A. Well, there are any number of different things that might be done in terms of looking over existing past performance, financial statements. You would look at projections for future financial statements, future operating projections for the companies individually as well as what you think it would look like if they went together, what kinds of synergies is the common word for that might take place and how that would play out. So there would be a number of things they would look at. And the primary responsibility would fall to the CEO and the other officers to provide the information to the directors.

Q. Is it unusual for investment bankers on either side of that buy/sell transaction to play a role in providing advice to the board of directors so that they can do their job of protecting the shareholders?

A. No. If you think about what I said this morning, we talked about the investment banker's role to be -- to facilitate transactions. So that would be precisely the sort of thing that would help the transaction would be to get the parties together to keep the information flowing back and forth so that they would talk to each other so that the deal could go forward so that it could be successfully completed.

Q. Are you familiar with something called a fairness opinion?

A. Yes.

Q. And in the context that we're discussing right now, what is a fairness opinion?

A. Well, that would be a formal letter describing the situation and attesting that there was fairness in the deal.

Q. So where does that letter typically come from? Who sends the letter to whom?

A. Well, it could come from a lot of different places, but a lot of times the auditors, the outside accounting auditors would provide that opinion.

Q. Are there occasions also on which the investment bankers play the role of providing a fairness opinion to the board of directors to assist them in assessing whether the transaction is fair to the shareholders of either the purchasing or the selling corporation?

A. Absolutely.

Q. All right, sir. Now presumably if what the board of directors needs to look at is whether the transaction is fair, one of the principal factors that needs to be examined is what is the value of what is being bought and sold, correct?

A. Absolutely.

Q. All right. I want to talk to you for just a moment about that. What are the components that go into assessing the value of a corporation?

A. There are -- there are a few different ways to look at the value of a corporation. One way would be what could you sell the assets for. That would be a liquidation kind of idea. A more common way would be what cash flows, what money would come out of operating the company.

Q. I'm going to stop you for just a moment. Before we get past the liquidation concept, you said that one thing you might look at is what value you could get out of selling the assets, but you told us earlier that corporations not only have assets but routinely have liabilities as well, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. So where do the liabilities come in if what you're looking at is the liquidation value of the corporation?

A. Well, if you liquidated the assets, you would then take the -- part of the money from the liquidation and pay off the liabilities. So you would -- it would be very much like a home mortgage, if you sell your house and you sell the house for $100,000 and you have a $60,000 mortgage, then the $60,000 is a liability. You'd pay that off, and you would net $40,000. That would be the equity position.

Q. All right. I had interrupted you. You said that one way to look at the value of a corporation would be to assess its liquidation value.

A. Right.

Q. Take all the assets, sell them, pay off all the debts. The money you've got left over, that's the liquidation value. What are other ways to look at the value of a corporation?

A. The more common way to look at it is you're going to actually run the corporation. So you're going to acquire, company A is going to acquire company B, and company B is going to continue to operate as a corporation. They're going to create products and services, sell those products and services. And the money that you get from selling the products and services less the expenses you have in generating those products and services creates a stream of income, and that income, if you take that income, that becomes the basis for value. So if we have, for example, an income of $100 million a year every year for perpetuity, for forever into the future. It's $100 million per year forever in the future. We would calculate what is referred to as the present value, that's today's value of worth, would be the value of the company.

Q. What significance does it have in making that kind of value assessment to have accurate information concerning not only what the earning history has been but what the anticipated future earnings of the company may be?

A. Well, obviously making those estimates is critical. If you think there will be $100 million a year and they turn out to be $50 million a year, that's a very different valuation. If you -- if you think there will be $100 million a year and they turn out to be more again, it's a different valuation. Business people work very hard at trial to get estimates, and that's one of the bases for buying and selling things is how good you are at estimating that. If you're really good at estimating that, you can make a lot of money. If you estimate it better, you know when selling something for more than what it's worth gets you extra value and you know when buying something for less than what it's worth gets you a lot of value.

So trying to make those estimates and, you know, sort of agreeing on what those estimates might be, it's essentially the linchpin for what we're talking about here, what something is worth.

How do you make those estimates? You might go out and you might make -- again, I think I said this morning about marketing research and how much sales might take place. These are the sorts of things that you would do to project the future revenues from the sales and then also what expenses you'd have to produce those sales.

Q. Are the terms "income" and "revenue" synonymous terms?

A. No, they're not. Revenue is the idea that you sell something. If a company makes a product and they sell the product for $100, you know it costs them money to make that product, right. So if it costs them money to make that product, it might have cost them $75. So you can say, wow, they took in $100, that's revenue. But they're looking at it and saying, yeah, but it cost $75 to bring in that hundred, so we really only made $25. The $25 is what we refer to as earnings or sometimes net income is the formal name. A lot of times people will loosely call it profit. So these are, these are sort of synonymous terms. Have to be a little careful so that they're defined carefully. General use is that they interchange -- they're interchangeable terms.

Q. We have heard in findings of fact made in advance of this trial references to something called earnings per share. What is that concept and what role does it play in the business world?

A. Well, we just mentioned the idea that there would be $100 million in income, in net income, say. If there were 200 million shares outstanding, if the company had 200 million shares, then the earnings per share would simply be the earnings, 100 million divided by the number of shares, 200 million, so that would be 50 cents per share. So earnings per share, or sometimes called EPS, is simply that, it's just the earnings in a period divided by the number of shares.

Q. What significance is attached to the earnings per share number by the investing community?

A. Well, if you think about $100 million in earnings, you need a way to compare that. If you take the $100 million, the question can be asked is that a good income or a bad income. As we sit here, we can say, gee, $100 million seems like a really good income. If General Motors made $100 million this year, that would be a very bad income. So in order to try to measure that, have various ways of scaling it, of sort of saying, well, how much is it per share, so that becomes a very important number because that's a way we can compare Joe's Garage with General Motors, because Joe's Garage might earn, $2.20 a share; General Motors might earn $1.50 per share. Everybody says General Motors is much bigger. That's true. But, relatively speaking, you might say Joe's did better than GM.

Q. Right now that may very well be true.

A. It is a timing.

Q. Another question I want to ask you about assets and liabilities before we get too far -- well, we ought to finish this one line of questioning.

We were talking about different ways to value companies. And we talked about liquidation value. We talked about the evaluating the company on the basis of an income stream. Are there other ways to look at the value of corporations?

A. I mentioned the idea of liquidation. That would be taking the assets apart. You could also sell the entire firm. You could sell a company as an ongoing concern. In other words, you could sell it to somebody else who says they think they can run it better and make more money than you think you can do. So that would be a third way.

Q. Do companies have different values to different purchasers?

A. Certainly.

Q. Why and how?

A. Well, if you think about it, when you think about a stock value or a house value, you sort of see it in a context of what's it worth. And for a broad market of houses or stocks, that's fine. But when you get into the corporate finance side and you're actually going to run the company, then you start to get some very specific ideas.

So, for example, if I have at that distribution network -- What I mean by a distribution network is I have products that are sent out to my stores. So if you think about Wal-Mart, Wal-Mart has a way to get products that they purchase to the stores so you and I can buy them. If you think about that and that system is in place, so if Wal-Mart were to purchase a corporation that made certain products that could be sold in Wal-Mart stores, that company already has, in addition, a distribution network. They have a way to get things out to stores. If Wal-Mart buys that, they can take away that distribution, they can stop that distribution network, use their own distribution network and save quite a bit of money.

Now that means that to Wal-Mart the value will be -- can be very specific because it can depend on things like the distribution network, how products fit together. If Wal-Mart were selling insurance, maybe that wouldn't fit so well with the things that they sell. But if Wal-Mart were selling plastic containers like Tupperware, well, maybe that would fit with what they sell. So the fit depends a lot on what the products are and the physical assets, the actual products. So the value can depend on that.

If you compare that to, say, a company such as, I don't know, Ryder Corporation, if you compare it to a company like Ryder, say, well, why would Ryder want to buy Tupperware? They don't have a distribution network for that. They don't have a way to sell it. So for Ryder to sell Tupperware, they would be only buying it to operate on its own. They wouldn't be buying it to integrate in, and there wouldn't be any synergies. So that would mean that there would be even substantially different opinions about what it's worth to those two entities.

Q. Can a company that is experiencing a current operating loss in a particular quarter or even a particular year in spite of the fact that it was losing money during that period of time still have some value?

A. Well, certainly. Companies go through periods where they may not be making a positive income. Companies have variations in earnings, and that doesn't mean their assets are worthless. If the projections into the future look so bleak that the company is not going to operate anymore, liquidation may look good, but that means that the stock may still have substantial value because of liquidation.

More common would be there was an upturn or a downturn in the economy. So if we talk about a car company, car companies -- actually, I think a better example is an airline company since they're in the news a lot. Airline companies always lose money? No, but they've been hit pretty hard as a group. And if you go back a number of years, some airline companies made a lot of money. So there are variations in them. In any given time, if they're not making money, that doesn't mean they're worthless.

Q. Does it really tell you anything of significance if you look in isolation at only what the profit or loss picture was of a company during a particular year without taking into consideration the assets of the corporation, the liabilities of the corporation and the long-term prospects of that corporation?

A. No, absolutely not. I mean, you can't -- you can't boil down to one number. We talked about EPS. EPS is but one measure of how well a company did.

Q. Earnings per share?

A. I'm sorry. Earnings per share.

Q. That's all right.

A. There could be -- you know, there are other ways to look at how the company is doing. The company could be looking good on one measure and not so well on another. And if you want to get a complete picture for what that company is worth or how that company is doing, you're not going to get it from a single number. As I go on to tell my students, if it were that easy, you wouldn't be able to make much money at it because everybody would do it, and there would be no money to be made.

Q. Dr. Emery, I'm going to ask you another question about looking at a single factor. And I want you to assume that in 1996 a particular company had debt of 500 plus million dollars, in fact, maybe even close to $600 million. Does the fact that a company in a particular year has some significant amount of debt tell you anything of significance about the value of that company without knowing a lot more?

A. No. You'd need to know a lot more to have a context for what that was worth.

Q. Why? Explain that to us.

A. Well, it's kind of like the house I was talking about a minute ago. You have a house that you can sell for $100,000 and you owe $60,000. Somebody else might have a house that they owe $200,000 on, but they can sell it for $500,000. So you have to look at the assets, the left-hand side. When I said assets and liabilities and owner's equity, we call the assets the left-hand side. You look at the assets. You have to compare it to the liabilities to find out how the company is really doing, what the equity is.

Q. Does a pattern of increasing debt, if, in fact, there were to be a pattern of increasing debt, does that mean that the company is worth less when the debt was lower than when the debt is higher?

A. No, because it would depend on the pattern of value of the assets. If the value of the assets goes up faster than the value of a debt, then, you know -- people use debt to accomplish things all the time. We use it in our -- in our personal finance lives. People use it to make investments. And the absolute number of the amount of debt is not the relevance. It's what it compares to.

Q. Before lunch we talked about how the value of stock gets set in an initial public offering, and you told us basically that that's a pretty complicated process. How does the value of stock get set in the secondary market?

A. Well, it's interesting, from two points of view. One hand, it's a lot more complex. On the other hand, it's a lot easier for some of us. It becomes more complex, but there are a lot of people trying to estimate it. And when we look over and we see a stock price that's actually in the market, so when you look and we see that a particular stock, like General Motors closed at $56 a share, that $56 a share for the rest of us is -- becomes an immediate measure of value, which we get from all the work that those people are doing to figure it out. So it's sort of for the investing public, it becomes wrapped up in that single stock price number, what is that stock price. Well, what are people paying for it? And because there are many people interested in that in buying and selling that stock continuously, virtually continuously, then that becomes an easy measure of value which we can see.

If you think about it from how they come up with that value, that's really just as complex and maybe more complex than the IPO in the start.

Q. Can there be a difference in the value that you get by taking the total number of outstanding shares of a corporation and multiplying it by the market price of those shares and what the total value of the corporation is? And to make this easier so that we can talk about this in more concrete terms, assume that we're dealing with ABC Corporation and that ABC Corporation is a publicly traded corporation, but for ease of working with these numbers there are 100 outstanding shares of ABC Corporation and they are trading at $10 a share on the New York Stock Exchange. If we just take those 100 shares and value them at $10 a share, what would the total value of all the outstanding shares be?

A. It would be $1,000.

Q. I had you do the math instead of me.

A. I'm handicapped, calculator handicapped.

Q. Okay. Does the fact that there are 100 outstanding shares selling at $10 a share necessarily equate to what the value of the total corporation is?

A. As a general rule, there will be a relationship between those two things. If you're trading shares where you have no control, they're the shares that we were talking about this morning where you have shares of IBM or General Motors, and I have some shares of Pfizer or some other company, Ryder, I don't run those companies, I don't have any control over the companies. Okay. The managers are running those companies. My only control comes through the directors. Okay. If I think about that, then that value of $1,000 would be an approximation, good approximation of the value of not controlling the company.

If the company -- if you were to buy enough of the shares so that you controlled the company, those shares would generally be worth some percentage more, significantly more money if you were actually controlling the company, too, so that you might, a common thing would be that these shares would have, say, a 25-percent premium on them, and the company in total when you're controlling it would be worth instead of 1,000 might be worth $1,250.

Q. Are there times when the market price of a company on a per share basis does not accurately reflect the true value of the company?

A. That's a very current question in my discipline. That's something that's being hotly debated is the conditions under which market share prices may not fully reflect value or accurately reflect value. It is my opinion, and I think I would be consistent with a number, a good portion of my peers around the country that in general that's much more likely to happen in overvaluation than undervaluation.

And I think you can relate it to what happened in the late '90s where many of us acknowledged that there was what you'd call a bubble. There was a lot of overvaluation, a lot of chasing stock prices. And the prices got more expensive, and the result was that we had overpriced stock. Conceptually, it's a little harder to get underpriced stock.

Q. If XYZ, Incorporated decided that it wanted to buy ABC, Incorporated because it believed that there could be substantial synergies that might arise out of the combination of the two companies, there would be economic advantages to putting the two companies together, would it be unusual in the real world for XYZ, Incorporated to pay more for all of ABC, Inc. than the product of the number of shares times the market price?

MR. HANSEN: Objection. May we approach, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Sure.

SIDE BAR CONFERENCE:

THE COURT: I think Mr. Marmer wants to hear, too. That's okay.

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, this isn't glossing a term in Exhibit A. This is an effort to adduce new expert opinion, I think, on the subject of whether Coleman was appropriately valued at the market price when it was $600 million in early February or some kind of estimate beyond that. He didn't hire him to do this. This isn't in his report.

THE COURT: Who's going to respond to this?

MR. SCAROLA: I will, Your Honor. The only question I'm asking -- and I'm not relating it to the specific transaction -- is there anything unusual about paying more than the per share price times the total outstanding number of shares going directly, obviously, to the reliance question involved.

MR. HANSEN: I don't follow that, Your Honor. Again, that's a fairly involved expert opinion. It's nowhere found in his report.

THE COURT: I would overrule it. He can answer.

END OF SIDE BAR

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Dr. Emery, to be sure you have the question in mind, is there anything unusual about one corporation buying another corporation for purposes of integrating and operating it and paying more than the per share times number of outstanding shares total?

A. It would be virtually impossible for them to buy it for that price. If you think about it, it has to be more than that because the shareholders won't sell their shares. If the shares are selling for $10 a share, how do you get shareholders to sell their shares? I mean, they're not going to sell them for $9 a share. They have to pay more. So it's a virtually impossible situation that they could pay less.

And, in fact, in work that I, in fact, just published 2004, last year, in a paper I published in financial management, I -- joint work with a colleague, we looked at this. And the range of premiums, the average premium is about 25 to 30 percent. Actually, measured this way it's closer to 50 percent. But the range, you'll have them up two, 300 percent or more. So the premiums can range very large in these cases like this.

What happens is you have one company who says, gee, this is a really good deal. I think I can do something with it. Another company comes in and says, boy, I think I can do something with that. And there gets to be a bidding war. And that bidding war can run the premiums up very high.

Q. I'd like for you to list for us -- and I'm going to ask you to step down again in just a moment, and you'll get to move furniture one more time -- those factors that we have identified thus far in your testimony that have an impact on the value of a corporation.

MR. SCAROLA: May Dr. Emery step down, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Sure.

MR. SCAROLA: Thank you.

THE COURT: I'm going to ask you are you going to have him do it there, or are we going to move it back to where it was?

MR. SCAROLA: No, I'm going to have him move it right back to the spot it was in before.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. If you'd just put a heading on that for us, and the heading will be factors influencing value. And let's see if we can go through the list of those things that you have already identified for us. I think you told us that one factor was assets. Is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay.

A. We talked about sales. We talked about expenses. Under sales you could have sales prices, sales -- different products. And under expenses you could have all kinds of different expenses that you might incur. So there would be a long list of things that would be involved with that. These would translate into earnings, and earnings have a tax component. The tax component is not always consistent. There is, you know, some expenses are tax deductible, some expenses aren't. There's a lot of things that go into that.

You have part of your expenses might be involved with what kind of liabilities you have, your obligations to meet those liabilities.

Q. All right. Now does the history of those factors influence value?

A. To the extent that there's information from the past, which gives you a better sense or gives you information about what to expect in the future, then that's very important.

Q. All right. So --

A. There are sometimes discontinuities that things change so much that what went on in the past is really not that relevant because the world has changed so much. I think it is -- there's a lot of talk about 9-11 being an event like that where there was so much change that what we were doing, it was sort of a discontinuity.

Q. So one of things you would want to look at is history, but you would also want to know about the surrounding circumstances of that history; is that accurate?

A. Right.

Q. Why don't you write history down for us, and we'll remember that that really applies to each of the factors that you've described above it. And do I understand that the reason why you were looking at history and prior circumstances is in order to glean from that to the extent you can information about what is likely to happen in the future?

A. Right.

Q. Okay. So why don't we put down so that we remember that understanding that what we are looking at here is future projections. All right. Thank you. And I think that you can take your seat again, and I'll move that back. And actually there's at least one other factor we talked about when we were talking about valuing the company as a whole rather than valuing individual shares of the company, and that I think you described generally as synergies. Is that accurate?

A. Yes. Synergies in cases where when you put the two together, there's a savings or a benefit. So the way people talk about that is two plus two becomes five. You add the value of one and the value of the other, but then there's some combination in that that either releases an expense or adds a profit of benefit.

Q. All right. And you contributed value also to the ability to control the entire corporation rather than just to be a single shareholder?

A. Right. There's one we call a control premium.

Q. All right. Now regarding the factors above the line, do those factors have a bearing on the individual share price as well as the value of the company as a whole?

A. Well, if you think about what we said about earnings per share, you can make the same thing about value per share. So if you see the share value, it's tied to the overall value, because there's some proportion there. That was why we had the $10 per share times 100 is $1,000 in total value. When we look at the value of the whole firm, then, of course, that's important to the value per share.

Q. You told us earlier, Dr. Emery, that there are specific reporting requirements for public corporations imposed by the Securities & Exchange Commission, correct?

A. Right.

Q. Do the things that public companies are required to report include information about the kinds of factors that we have identified here that can have an impact on someone's assessment of the value of individual shares?

MR. HANSEN: Objection, Your Honor. Counsel is testifying.

THE COURT: Sustained. I'll ask you to rephrase it.

MR. SCAROLA: Certainly.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. What kind of information is a public company required to publicly report?

A. For example, they are required to report their balance sheet on a quarterly basis and on an annual basis.

Q. Now what kind of information as it relates to what's on the board does the balance sheet include?

A. The balance sheet is that assets, liabilities and owner's equity. That's what we think of as a snapshot of the company. It's sort of a what is the company at a particular point in time.

Another statement is the income statement. That's another piece that has to be filed, has to be put out in what are called 10-Q for a quarterly and a 10-K for an annual statement. So that's another statement that has to be put out.

The income statement is how the corporation in many ways, you think of it as how they get from one balance sheet to another. And it represents the money that they've earned. So they will have the revenues, how much they took in in money and then the different expenses that they had, and then there would be some subheadings of operating income and other parts and extraordinary items, and then there would be taxes. And then down towards the bottom it will say net income, and they'll take that net income, and they'll perhaps pay a dividend, and they'll also divide the net income by the number of shares to get the earnings per share, EPS. So those are two perhaps of the more important things. There are other statements.

Q. Are there safeguards that exist in the business world relating to public corporations that are intended to assure the accuracy of the reporting that relates to these kinds of factors that can have an influence on a company's value?

A. Yes, there are.

Q. Describe those to us, if you would, please.

A. Accountants have a number of different tasks, but one of the things that they're best known for is called auditing. And an auditor is an accountant who is outside the firm who comes into the firm and looks over the preparation of those statements I was talking about and that information that look it over and be sure that it has been done properly, prepared properly, that it's accurate and reflects the actual company as it should. So the purpose there is that what we're trying to do with those securities laws is to encourage, to allow a fair playing field, level playing field for investors.

If you think about our economy, our economy works pretty well compared to the rest of the world, and one of the reasons is because of our system of allowing that level playing field.

Q. Do public companies employ both in-house and outside accountants?

A. Yes, they do.

Q. Do in-house accountants share the same kind of responsibility for accurate reporting of the kinds of information that impacts upon the value of a company in the equities market?

A. Well, the in-house accountants are employees of the company. They're paid by the company and work there regularly. They keep the numbers for the firm. They keep the accounting statements up to date and so forth. And then the outside accountants look over that.

So, yeah, in terms of good business practices, honesty and integrity in those positions is very important.

Q. All right, sir. You told us earlier that there is nothing unusual about one company buying another. Is there anything unusual about a company using its own stock as part of the purchase price when it buys another company?

A. No. As I mentioned, that's a very common occurrence.

Q. We spoke about revenues, and I think that you gave us at least some understanding of what revenues are. How are they calculated? How do you calculate revenues?

A. Well, its simplest forms, revenues are the money that comes into the corporation during a particular time period, during this quarter of the year or this year. It turns out that because accounting is done on what's called an accrual basis, they make adjustments for, well, this is kind of like it came in or, well, certain rules and regulations will then cause a revenue to be what's called recognized, placed in that time period or not placed in that time period. And when the actual money changes hands can be different than when they write down that it actually occurred. And those -- so those rules are quite specific.

Q. All right. So there are, then, specific rules and guidelines about how a publicly traded corporation is required to calculate, recognize and report revenue?

A. Yes.

Q. Does the same apply with regard to expenses? Are there specific rules and regulations that apply to how a company is to calculate, recognize and report expenses and which period in which those expenses are supposed to be delegated?

A. Yes.

Q. Why? Why do rules exist like that about when you've got to report your income and when you've got to recognize your liabilities and your debits?

A. Well, once again, the system is designed and the purpose of the system is to try to get uniformity of measurement so that when one company reports something and another company reports something, there's a comparability, you can compare them, and it's also designed to try to get judgment out of the process. It's not completely out, but trying to minimize the amount of judgment because they don't want people to have -- introduce biases where they say, sure, we can count that when, in fact, a reasonable person wouldn't. So those guidelines are designed to protect investors.

Q. It has already been established in advance of trial in this case, Dr. Emery, that after Sunbeam announced plans to acquire Coleman, Morgan Stanley agreed to underwrite a $750 million debenture and that Sunbeam needed the proceeds of that $750 million debenture offering to complete the acquisition for Sunbeam. Why would Sunbeam announce plans to acquire another company?

A. When you think about the value of the stock, what I tell my students and the way I like to say it is stock prices, stock values are made on expectations. And what that means is that the value you see is based on the expectations you have about the future. To form those expectations, you need information. And if a company has information that they think is positive information that is going to add value to their company, they're going to want to get that information out to the investing public. And so they would announce that with the idea that, well, we're going to do this, and that would then be put into those expectations which would be more favorable but would also, in an ideal world, better reflect the value of the stock.

Q. Do companies also have an obligation to make announcements about bad news?

A. There are some obligations that they have. And, in fact, companies frequently make announcements that are bad news because they understand that it's going to come out, and when it comes out, it may turn out to be very much more disruptive and very much more negative than it is if they announced it ahead of time. The idea is sort of to soften the blow to tell people, well, we know it's bad, but we've been honest, we've told you that it's going to be bad so we want to tell you upfront. Whereas, if you find out without us telling you, then you may doubt our credibility and integrity.

So, yes, companies do make negative announcements.

Q. Why would a company be concerned about the investing public doubting its credibility or integrity?

A. Well, because that would go into the expectations. Public investing, public might look at it and say, well, we don't trust these people to run the company. And that could over time develop into a fight over who should run the company. And you could through the directors, the shareholders could be saying, hey, we don't think this CEO is the right person, we don't think this team is the right team. The shareholders could even -- could even go out and encourage another company to buy the company to run it better. And there's -- we refer to that as the market for corporate control. And that has an impact on value, too, because who can run it the best and extract the most economic value out of it is good for the investment and, we believe, in a capitalist system ultimately good for society. Because if things run more efficiently, then we as individual members of that society pay less for those goods and services, so things show up in the store for lower prices and the services we get we pay less. So the efficiency part is that's just one aspect of it.

Q. The specific factual finding that we are referencing is about an announcement regarding the acquisition of one corporation by another corporation and the merger of those companies together. Is that the kind of information that can have an impact on the value of a company stock, both the selling company and the purchasing company?

A. Absolutely. Those sorts of announcements are made frequently, and stock prices react in differential ways.

Q. Let's talk about that, if we could. If the investing public perceives that the purchaser is getting a very good deal in this acquisition and merger transaction, all other factors being equal, what's going to happen to the stock price?

A. Stock price could go up certainly some or very substantially depending on what the opinion is, what the collective opinion is.

Q. The same factual finding that we are talking about makes reference to Morgan Stanley agreeing to underwrite a $750 million debenture offering for Sunbeam. You described to us what a debenture is. What is an offering of a debenture?

A. That's simply the collective set of debentures, of bonds. So each of those bonds may have a face value of $1,000. So there would be $750,000 of these bonds. Collectively we call that an offering or an issue.

Q. And we know from the statement that Morgan Stanley agreed to underwrite this debenture. And you told us that what that meant was that Morgan Stanley was buying the debt first and then reselling the debt.

A. Very quickly.

Q. In the open marketplace. Very quickly.

A. (Nodding head).

Q. What is the significance of a particular company being a sole underwriter?

A. If you've ever seen in the newspaper -- I don't know whether you might have seen in some of the financial newspapers there will be what is commonly referred to as a tombstone. And that will be a listing about a securities offering, like debenture offering or an IPO we talked about, an initial public offering. And what you'll see is that there are what are called lead underwriters is a common thing, and there might be one, two, three or more lead underwriters. And then there will be other investment bankers involved, and there might be 15, 20, 30, 40 or more associated investment bankers so that there can be, without too much trouble, 30, 40 or more investment bankers involved with an offering.

So to have one investment bank underwrite the whole offering is not really that common. I'd have to look up statistics to tell you how uncommon it is. When you take stocks and bonds together, it's quite uncommon.

Q. What does it communicate, if anything, to the investing public that a particular investment bank is willing to take on the sole underwriting responsibility of a $750 million debenture offering?

A. I would interpret that as very very confident. I would interpret that as being -- communicating a confidence that would be more than usual.

Q. What does it mean in the business world when you talk about a company having a successful turn-around?

A. Well, if you think about a company that might not be doing well, and so if we -- a while ago we mentioned the airline industry since they're in the news a lot have been struggling. If you took a company, some of them have filed for bankruptcy, but if you took a company, an airline company that was not in bankruptcy yet but was struggling, it would be easy to think about that company as being a candidate for being turned around because they would be going down. Their profits are negative; they're losing money; and they need to turn that around, because, while as I mentioned earlier, you can lose money for a while, after a while it not only becomes tiresome, but you run out of money. I mean, you go out of business after a while. Your assets are dissipating.

So to turn it around would be to take a company that was falling and then turn it around and have it rising, and the rising would be certainly in revenues but even more importantly in earnings.

Q. How would a company engaged in the manufacture and marketing of consumer products go about actually accomplishing a legitimate turn-around if indeed it's possible to do so?

A. Well, certainly such things have happened, can happen. If you think about the products and services, you think about the sorts of innovations that happen, you're used to thinking of innovations in technology, so we think of computers and cell phones and the like. And that's because we see the changes, the innovations come so quickly.

But even in more standard products, more generic products, more things like appliances, there are improvements that come. The installation of computers, little computer chips into very standard products.

Think about automobiles. I mean, is an automobile dramatically different than it was 20 years ago? You step into the automobile and drive it away. It's the same. Well, no it's not the same.

There are technological improvements there. And if you can come up with improved products, products that are better, then you can improve your market share; you can be the one who's selling that product more than somebody else; you can make more money on that product. And those are all things that a company that might be doing very traditional things, they might attempt to do and in some cases be successful at.

Q. So one way you can turn a company around is by competing better on the quality of your product?

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, I would object to the leading, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Sustained. And we need to look for a place for a break so we get them to the kitchen before it closes.

MR. SCAROLA: Would you like to do that immediately, or would you like to do that in five minutes?

THE COURT: I don't care as long as it's in the next few minutes.

MR. SCAROLA: Okay. Thank you.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. We'll just finish up this area, Doctor, and before quarter of 4:00 we'll take our break.

Dr. Emery, does improving the quality of the products you are selling help a company to turn itself around?

A. I believe that's what I just said.

Q. Okay. And can you tell us, please, whether there are other ways to turn the company around besides competing better on quality?

A. One could compete better on cost. One could lower the cost. So you could make the same product, sell it for the same price but make it less expensively, and then you would make more money. You could have fewer people doing the same job. So instead of having ten employees, if you have eight employees, that would provide a savings. There are a whole host of financial considerations as well where you might pick up some economic value from making better financing transactions, having -- doing things more efficiently as it were.

Q. What about improving overhead expenses generally like reducing your work force and closing or consolidating plants or administrative offices, what kind of impact, if any, could that have on turning a company around?

MR. HANSEN: Objection; leading.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Is there any impact at all on a company's turn-around by improving the efficiency of one's operations?

MR. HANSEN: Same objection, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. What else can improve a company's performance so that the company can be turned around besides competing better in terms of quality and competing better in terms of price?

MR. HANSEN: Same objection, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Overruled.

THE WITNESS: Well, I mentioned a minute ago having ten employees do something and instead having eight. Some of those employees could be the employees who are actually making the products or doing the service. But many of those employees may be employees doing other things in the company. They certainly could be what we call overhead, staff people helping to support, and you can do that more efficiently.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Last question before break. How, if at all, does the geographic spread of your market impact upon the ability to turn your company around?

A. Well, as a general rule, as I'm sure you can imagine, if you have a physically bigger area, it's more difficult. I mean, you know, there's just no question if you have a concentrated market physically, you can go and check on things. You can put things together. You're less likely to have multiple warehouses, multiple production facilities. So there's any number of ways in which if you shrink your geographic coverage, why, it would -- it could help you.

MR. SCAROLA: Good place to stop, Doctor. Thank you very much.

THE COURT: We're going to ask you to meet outside the courtroom at 4:00 o'clock. We still won't talk to you. Don't talk to anybody about the case. Cafeteria closes at 4:00. If you want to bring in snacks, soda, coffee, tea lollipops, feel free.

THE WITNESS: You like lollipops.

THE COURT: No, they brought in lollipops. (The jury left the courtroom.)

THE COURT: Mr. Hansen, we want to mark the outline we were working on. We can mark this for Defendant's ID. Whatever the next number is, that's correct.

THE CLERK: That will be 997. (Defendant's Exhibit No. 997 for i.d.)

THE COURT: Was Mr. Ianno here today?

MR. HANSEN: Mr. Ianno's wife, I believe, had a medical appointment this afternoon.

THE COURT: Okay. That was what I was worried about.

How much longer do you think you'll have, Mr. Scarola?

MR. SCAROLA: I'm learning that I'm estimating very poorly. I'm likely to go through the balance of the afternoon.

THE COURT: Okay. That's fine. Thanks.

MR. HANSEN: We're going to 5:00 o'clock, then, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Well, if he finishes before. If you finish after 4:30, we'll send the jury home and do our motions. If it's before 4:30, I'll probably ask you to do a bit.

MR. HANSEN: Yes, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay. Thanks.

(A recess was taken from 3:49 p.m. to 4:01 p.m.)

THE COURT: Mr. Solovy, is it your birthday or somebody else's birthday?

MR. SOLOVY: My birthday.

MR. SCAROLA: 75.

THE CLERK: Today?

MR. SOLOVY: No, Sunday.

THE COURT: And you're paying to fly them all up?

MR. SOLOVY: No, my nice client is doing that. Not all. We're just taking some.

THE COURT: That's a little rude.

MR. SOLOVY: Just some, Your Honor. My son said maybe I should cancel, but I have 90 people coming.

THE COURT: Congratulations.

MR. SOLOVY: Thank you, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Are there any birthdays we need to be aware of on your team?

MR. JONES: (Indicating).

THE COURT: When?

MR. JONES: 28th.

THE COURT: Of April. If we're still here. If not, I'll make a note, Mr. Jones's birthday.

MR. SOLOVY: Mr. Schwartz is April 16th, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Any other April birthdays we need to be aware of?

THE COURT: Mr. Schwartz, we're not going to be in court.

Where's the bailiff? Do we have all the jurors?

THE BAILIFF: No. We have smokers that need to do it.

THE COURT: That's good to know. It tells me we need a little bit longer breaks.

MR. JONES: Explains the lollipops.

THE COURT: You're absolutely right about that. I guess I should have realized that one.

MR. SOLOVY: I didn't want to say it in front of the jurors, but I thought you forfeited your lollipop when you made that second misprision.

THE COURT: I definitely forfeited my lollipops.

(Jury entered the courtroom.)

THE COURT: Thanks for coming back on time. I hope you enjoyed your break. And we are in the homestretch for the week.

Okay. Go ahead and take your seats. I'm glad we have lollipops again. Wonderful. Oh, several. Okay. Good.

And we're ready to continue, Mr. Scarola. And thank you. I don't even want to know who got it for me. I don't want to get prejudiced. Okay. Thank you.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Dr. Emery, focusing on the expense side, you told us just before the break that servicing a larger geographic market can be more expensive. Let's focus on the revenue side, and tell us whether there are any advantages to expanding your market if you were trying to turn a company around.

A. Well, of course if you look at it on the revenue side, having a larger market, if you sell more and can sell more successfully and overcome the expense of a larger side, larger geographic area, then that would add market, so you could increase sales, and the question really is whether sales increased more than expenses increased, which direction is a business decision.

Q. Okay. So if I understand, then, correctly what you said, you can turn a consumer product company around by improving the quality of your product, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. You can turn a company around by producing that product more efficiently and being able to sell it at a lower cost?

A. Yes.

Q. You can turn a consumer product company around by selling the same quality product at the same price to more people?

A. That's correct.

MR. HANSEN: Objection; leading.

THE COURT: Sustained. I'll ask you to disregard the last question and answer.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Dr. Emery, among the established facts in this case are the following: "Although Morgan Stanley and Sunbeam previously had advised CPH that Sunbeam sales were running ahead of analysts' expectations for the first quarter, Morgan Stanley decided not to correct those misrepresentations. Instead, in March 1998, Morgan Stanley assisted Sunbeam in concealing the problems with Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales."

What I want to first focus on in that finding is the reference to analysts' expectations. What are financial analysts?

A. Financial analysts are people who -- whose job or career is focused on valuation of public companies largely. It's not restricted to that. It's broader than that. But, generally speaking, these are people who, what we call, follow companies, so they will have a set of companies that they follow, maybe six, eight, maybe ten companies that they pay close attention to. And those -- the attention they pay is largely on the basis of financial considerations; what are they worth; are they doing well; are they doing poorly; are they improving; are they declining; what do we expect their earnings per share to be for the next period; what do we expect their dividends to be for the next period; what do we expect their revenues to be for the next period. So analysts would have projections, forecasts and expectations about the future of the company at any given point in time. And that's what they do is pay attention to those companies. And then they make that information available. They make that information public. They broadcast that information, what they think about that company.

Q. Who do analysts work for?

A. Well, there's a wide variety of people they could work for. We generally think of them as working for brokerage houses. That's a particular type of analyst, but that's generally, when we say financial analysts that's one we think of first is somebody who works for a stockbroker, firm, a brokerage firm.

Q. Why do securities firms employ analysts?

A. It promotes investments, and it promotes the investment community. And when they -- when brokers help with the sale of stock, a purchase -- a trade of stock, when brokers do that, they generally make a commission so that it promotes their business.

Q. And how specifically do analysts go about performing their jobs?

A. Well, in a general sense they gather information.

Q. In what sources?

A. It depends on the analyst, but it can be from almost any source, depending on how an analyst might go after it, there are many many possibilities. Certainly at a minimum they would look at the financial statements. They would be estimating market share. They would be estimating sales, future sales, trends in sales. They would be analyzing that type of data, including, of course, balance sheets and income statements and those sorts of things.

Q. In the 1997, early 1998 time frame in particular, to what extent did analysts place confidence in the honesty and integrity of public corporations' public financial filings, the documents the SEC requires public corporations to file?

MR. HANSEN: Objection; leading; compound.

THE COURT: Overruled.

THE WITNESS: The general environment has had a significant change since that time period. This is over the last eight or so years.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Well, focus specifically on what existed in the 1997, 1998 time frame in terms of the degree of confidence that analysts placed on public financial filings, the honesty and integrity of such filings during that period of time.

A. Well, post turn of the century there have been a state of very public very large --

MR. HANSEN: Objection; nonresponsive, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Sustained. Why don't you repose the question.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Sure. Rather than talking about the changes that have occurred, if any, since 1997 and 1998, I'd like you to tell us the degree of confidence that financial analysts placed in the honesty and integrity of those public financial reports back in 1997 and 1998, early 1998.

A. They were generally well thought of. They were accepted as being generally true. There were occasionally problems. If you go back several decades, there might have been one or two notable scandals per decade, but there was a general acceptance of them as being valid and representative. And there's been an evolution of increasing doubt.

Q. All right, sir. We talked about, then, generally the fact that financial analysts conduct investigations of particular companies and publicly report on those companies. Did you in the course of your work in connection with this case review the work of financial analysts as it specifically related to the Sunbeam Corporation in the 1997, 1998 time frame?

MR. HANSEN: I'm sorry, Your Honor, but I object to Mr. Scarola testifying or characterizing testimony.

THE COURT: Overruled.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. You may answer.

A. I did. I did an extensive investigation of analyst reports over starting in 1996 and through '97 and into '98, especially focusing on the last quarter of '97 and first quarter of '98.

Q. How did you go about doing that?

A. Well, largely this information, although it's not widely known how public it is, it is all publicly available information. And so you can go to public sources, SEC archives, filings. You can go to Bloomberg, Reuter's, Bridge. There are a number of different information services which have all of this material available.

Q. All right, sir. And the specific reference included in the statement that we began with when we were talking about, when we began talking about financial analysts was a reference to analysts' expectations. What is the understanding in the business world about what analysts' expectations are and the significance that they have?

A. Well, if you recall, I talked about prices being made on expectations. And those expectations are very broad. But analysts -- And analysts will certainly have those expectations broadened. But to communicate them to the public, they try to boil them down.

And so, as I mentioned a minute ago, they'll make a projection or expectation about earnings per share, dividends per share, revenues. They may make a recommendation boiled down to a, you should buy this stock; this is a good buy or you should sell this stock; this is something you should not own. Those kinds of things boil down into practical terms the overall expectations that are a little harder to gather. You know, you say, well, I think it's good. Well, how good? What does that mean?

And so they even go so far as to project stock price estimates. Those expectations, when somebody says expectation, typically you would be referring to some aspect of that, some specific forecast.

Q. All right, sir.

MR. SCAROLA: May I approach the witness, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Sure. Just make sure Mr. Hansen knows what it is you're showing him.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Dr. Emery, I'm going to hand you what has been marked for trial purposes CPH trial Exhibit Number 361, and I'll ask you, sir, whether you recognize that document.

A. I do.

Q. And what is that?

A. This is an analyst report on March 19, 1998. This report was done just after Sunbeam's announcement that they might come up short in terms of their sales for the quarter.

Q. So this is an analyst report that came out after the March 19, 1998 press release that's been referenced in the established facts in this case?

A. Immediately after, because the report starts out saying that it is after that.

Q. All right.

MR. SCAROLA: Your Honor, at this time we would move CPH trial Exhibit Number 361 into evidence.

MR. HANSEN: May we be heard, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Sure.

SIDE BAR CONFERENCE:

THE COURT: What's the legal objection?

MR. HANSEN: Hearsay. It's being offered for its truth. There's no connection to the decision making in this case. It's being offered on the issue of reliance.

THE COURT: Why don't you show that to Mr. Hansen first.

MR. SCAROLA: 361.

MR. HANSEN: The fact is this is rank hearsay, and it shouldn't come in.

MR. SCAROLA: This is the defendant's list of objections to plaintiff's Exhibits.

THE COURT: Is this the revised one?

MR. SCAROLA: That's the first one.

MR. HANSEN: We have a revised one.

THE COURT: Hold on. Let me get the revised one.

MR. SCAROLA: Here's the revised one.

MR. HANSEN: I need to see it.

MR. SCAROLA: You want to show it to Mr. Hansen first?

MR. HANSEN: Hearsay. We have a hearsay objection.

THE COURT: That's the new one.

MR. SCAROLA: That's the new one.

MR. HANSEN: It's clearly hearsay.

THE COURT: Okay. -- I'm sorry. Go ahead.

MR. SCAROLA: Our position is those objections are untimely. This was the timely filed list of objections. This document isn't being offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted but, rather, to prove the nature of the statements made at the time.

THE COURT: Then what's the relevance?

MR. SCAROLA: The relevance is that this was part of the body of information that was available to anyone, including Mr. Perelman and those persons who were advising him. And, in fact, the evidence will show that it was taken into consideration by Mr. Perelman and those that were advising him.

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor --

THE COURT: What --

MR. HANSEN: When Mr. Perelman testifies, if he's going to lay a proper foundation, that's a different story. The fact someone else had seen it is confusing and prejudicial to have the record include this kind of testimony. It's wholly immaterial.

THE COURT: Are you handing me something you need to supplement your argument or is it simply meritorious?

MR. HANSEN: This clearly shows our objections. Someone handed me a copy.

THE COURT: This is the new one?

MR. HANSEN: Yes.

THE COURT: Okay. I would -- I understand at this juncture I would overrule this objection. I think, quite honestly, the only one that's memorialized there that we need to talk about is the hearsay objection. And I think clearly something like that that could have been cured was waived.

MR. HANSEN: Is the ruling, Your Honor, that we failed to designate the objection timely?

THE COURT: Yes on this one. I'm not even getting to whether the objection is meritorious, because hearsay is the type of thing that could have been cured had they been timely notified of it. I understand we'll argue this more fully today when we're done. They could have gone to the author and figured it out.

MR. HANSEN: The author would have had to testify.

THE COURT: Right.

END OF SIDE BAR

THE COURT: It is accepted into evidence as what number, Mr. Scarola?

MR. SCAROLA: I believe 361, Your Honor. I believe I handed the court a copy.

THE COURT: I do. Do you have it?

THE CLERK: Yes.

(Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 361 in evidence.)

MR. SCAROLA: Exhibit 361. May I proceed?

THE COURT: Yes, sir.

MR. SCAROLA: Thank you. Tim, would you please put that up on the board?

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Dr. Emery, first, if you would, please, just tell us whether the general formatting of this report is typical of the kinds of publications that analysts do with respect to a company.

A. Yes, there's nothing unusual about this.

Q. All right. And where is it that we find the date of this particular report?

A. You see it up in the right-hand corner.

Q. All right. And it is identified as a report with regard to Sunbeam Corporation; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And just sort of take us through this report, if you would, and point out to us what is significant with regard to this report.

A. Well, you can think of this a little bit like an article in the newspaper. There's headlines and subheadlines. If you look where it says Sunbeam Corporation and right below that it says sort of the subheading, it summarizes what the opinion is. First quarter sales may fall short, in other words, that first quarter sales are going to be less than expected. They may be less than expected, but for reason we can live with long-term view unchanged.

Q. So L-T is?

A. Long-term.

Q. Common abbreviation for long-term?

THE COURT: Mr. Scarola, let me stop you there for a moment. Just for your peace of mind for your deliberations, you will have every item accepted into evidence with you. We just want you to be able to review it now.

Go ahead.

MR. SCAROLA: Thank you very much, Your Honor.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Continue on, if you would, Dr. Emery, and take us through this report. How do we know, for example, this was issued after the March 19 press release came out?

A. Well, if you go immediately to the text where it says investment conclusion, you go -- just start reading, "Prior to the opening of the market on March 19, Sunbeam announced that its first quarter sales growth might come up short of the mid team's street expectations."

Q. Stop right there. What are street expectations? We talked a little bit about analysts' expectations. What are street expectations?

A. Street refers to Wall Street. But more broadly what it really means is the investment community. It's sort of the well-informed investing public would be sort of the professionals in investing. So that would be other analysts as well as this analyst, Scott Graham.

Q. Now, again, what is the significance of information that first quarter sales might come up short of the mid team's street expectations?

A. Well, it gets back to what I said earlier about if you have news that is bad news, you may want to get that out to the public to be, to give the impression of honesty. And I think as we read now we'll see this analyst explicitly says just that. But what they're wanting to do is they're wanting to say, look, don't hold us to those expectations because it turns out we might not quite make that. So we might be a little short. Here are the reasons why. Then they try to explain why being short is not that big a deal. So it's designed to soften the blow.

Q. Okay. Now this particular report is coming from a man by the name of Scott Graham; is that correct?

A. I said that earlier.

Q. Now, did you review generally analysts' response to the information that was coming out about Sunbeam in connection with this March 19, 1998 press release?

A. I did.

Q. And were Mr. Graham's published reactions to that press release an atypical, unusual in terms of what you saw in the other analyst reports that you reviewed?

MR. HANSEN: Leading.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. How did Mr. Graham's reactions relate to the other reactions you reviewed?

A. It was within the range of those reactions. It was perhaps -- Let's see how to put this. It -- if you -- the average reaction was, yes, this isn't a big deal. There was, I believe, if I remember correctly, there may have been one and half a dozen or more that said, well, it's not that big a deal. And that would be about as negative as it got. And it sort of ranked from there, I think that was one that said it that way. This might, might not be that big a deal. So it had sort of a neutral -- and I think that, in fact, the recommendation was sort of a, the bottom line recommendation was wait and see. That was the most negative.

It ranged from that up to --

MR. HANSEN: Objection. This is all hearsay. I object to this hearsay.

THE COURT: You want to argue it or not?

MR. SCAROLA: I don't.

THE COURT: Sustained.

MR. SCAROLA: Thank you, Your Honor.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Dr. Emery, did you review analyst reports starting back in 1996 with regard to Sunbeam?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And how frequently are reports like this published by analysts concerning generally companies like Sunbeam? How often do they come out?

MR. HANSEN: Objection; leading.

THE COURT: Overruled.

THE WITNESS: It varies, but I'm -- I'd have to look back at my report to get an exact number. I don't remember, but maybe we had -- we tracked 30, 40. I don't precisely remember what the number was that we looked at. But...

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. 30 or 40 over what period of time?

A. Over the year and a half or year.

Q. Okay. I'm going to hand you a copy of your report.

MR. SCAROLA: May I approach the witness, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. SCAROLA: Thank you.

THE COURT: I assume, Mr. Hansen, you have one in front of you.

MR. HANSEN: (Nodding head).

THE COURT: Okay. Thanks.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. To the extent it's necessary for you to refresh your recollection from reviewing that report, please feel free to do so. But before we do that, just tell us what that document is, if you would.

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, I'd request that if the witness wants to refresh his recollection it be made clear as opposed to just testifying from the report.

THE COURT: I would agree first I think he would need to testify he couldn't recall. But right now I think we're just saying what is that.

MR. SCAROLA: That's what we're saying right now. He just said he couldn't recall the precise number, which is why I handed it to him. He said he needed to look at the report.

THE COURT: I think we need to do it question by question.

MR. SCAROLA: That's fine.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Tell us what that is that you have in front of you, Dr. Emery.

A. This is a report that I wrote for CPH for Coleman (Parent) Holding Company.

Q. Does it reflect the work that you did in connection with this specific case?

A. Yes, it does.

Q. Okay. You told us a moment ago that you couldn't exactly recall how many analyst reports you reviewed. Does the review of that report refresh your recollection with regard to the number of analyst reports that you reviewed?

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, objection to the leading and recapitulation of the testimony.

THE COURT: Overruled in this context because I think we got a little offtrack, but we're back.

THE WITNESS: Looks like it was closer to 55 or 60 rather than 40.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Over what period of time?

A. That was from November 13th, 1996 to late March '98, March 24th, '98.

Q. Is the review of analyst reports such as those that you reviewed in connection with this matter the kind of activity in which those within your profession would engage, and are these reports something that your peers would commonly rely upon in conducting evaluations of a company's performance during a particular period of time?

MR. HANSEN: Objection; compound and leading.

THE COURT: Sustained on both.

MR. SCAROLA: Both.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Tell us, please, if you would, please -- Tell us, please, Dr. Emery, what kinds of things those within your profession rely upon in making judgments about a company's economic performance during a given period of time?

A. There's sort of two levels, things that people like myself would look at. One, it would be the specifics in terms of a valuation of a company or some specific event connected, such as this. And these are things that one would pay attention to. These are important information about getting a sense of what the investment community was thinking at this time. It's a record. It's a historical record in some sense about getting a sense. Because they're not uniform. Each one doesn't say exactly the same thing. So there's sort of a point of view that one would interpret in this.

The second is in research, in financing, we routinely look at such things as in broad numbers of cases where instead of focusing on one company and one situation, you're looking across hundreds or even thousands of companies and situations. And so you would have a massive effort to undertake to look at these things.

Q. Did you in connection with the work that you did relating to this litigation form opinions and conclusions about the way in which the investing community, Wall Street, was viewing Sunbeam's performance during 1997?

A. I did.

Q. Did you as a consequence of the study that you performed and the work that you did in connection with this litigation form opinions with respect to the way in which the investing community was viewing Sunbeam's performance prior to the closing of the Sunbeam Coleman merger on March 30, 1998?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Are the opinions and conclusions that you formed opinions and conclusions that you hold to a reasonable degree of certainty within your area of expertise?

A. Yes, they are.

Q. Let's start, if we could, please, with the year 1997. And based upon the study that you did, including your review of some more than 50 financial analyst reports relating to Sunbeam, explain to the ladies and gentlemen of the jury how Wall Street perceived what was going on at Sunbeam during 1997?

MR. HANSEN: Objection; leading.

THE COURT: Overruled.

THE WITNESS: By 1997 Sunbeam and when the then CEO, Albert Dunlap, as the spokesperson had announced a plan to turn the company around, and that was started in the late '96 period when they started announcing what --

MR. HANSEN: I object as nonresponsive. This is something different.

THE COURT: Sustained. I'll ask you to disregard the last answer. Can you rephrase the question?

MR. SCAROLA: I certainly will.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. What we want to focus on rather than the underlying events at this point is Wall Street's perception of those events. How did Wall Street perceive Sunbeam in 1997?

A. As a company that had embarked on a turn-around.

Q. As 1997 progressed, how did Wall Street perceive the progress, if any, that Sunbeam was making in that turn-around process?

A. One of the things we look at is the stock price. And if you -- if we track the stock price, we go back and look at the stock price, you'll see that the stock price was climbing over the year 1997, which would be absolutely consistent with the idea that the investment community was viewing this very favorably.

Q. To what extent did your review of the analysts' reports corroborate what you interpreted from the rising stock price?

A. They were --

MR. HANSEN: Objection; leading.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. To what extent, if any, did the review of the analyst reports corroborate or contradict what you viewed based upon the rising stock price?

MR. HANSEN: Same objection. Same question.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Was there any relationship at all between the analyst reports that you reviewed and the conclusions that you drew from the rising stock price?

A. They were entirely consistent.

Q. As 1997 progressed into the fourth quarter, how did Wall Street perceive Sunbeam Corporation?

A. As we got into the fourth quarter of '97, there were some questions that were raised about whether the return, whether the turn-around was quite as good as it might have been initially perceived. And there was some, I don't want to say reversal, but there was some plateauing of stock value. There was, there was a general thought of, well, okay, we've revalued the company to incorporate this turn-around. Fine. We think it's revalued. Is this really truly going there? That was in the stock price.

The analyst reports were still quite favorable at that point. And so there was that, that level of agreement going on.

Q. We know from the findings of established fact that in February of 1998 an announcement was made concerning the merger of Sunbeam and the Coleman Company. I think it was February, perhaps early March.

A. It was February.

Q. February. Thank you. How did Wall Street view the news of that merger?

A. That was viewed favorably as witnessed in a stock price jump. In reaction to the announcement, the stock price jumped up within the next day.

Q. How did financial analysts view the news of that merger?

A. That was also viewed positively by financial analysts.

Q. What kinds of recommendations were financial analysts making with regard to the purchase of Sunbeam stock at that point in time?

MR. HANSEN: Objection.

THE COURT: Did you want to respond?

MR. SCAROLA: I'll just rephrase.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. You had told us there were strong buy/sell recommendations that were being made in March of 1998 with regard to Sunbeam. Were those strong buy recommendations by Mr. Graham unique based upon your review?

MR. HANSEN: Objection, Your Honor. Same problem, them just incorporating the testimony and repeating.

THE COURT: Did you want to argue?

MR. SCAROLA: I don't.

THE COURT: Let's move on, then.

MR. SCAROLA: Thank you very much.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. What do strong buy recommendations from financial analysts do in terms of influencing the price of a stock, if anything?

A. Well, there's a -- there's a positive relationship between it. It's certainly not perfect. So you see sometimes where analyst reports can be positive, but the stock does not continue to rise. But there's certainly going to be a positive relationship between those two. The analysts spend their entire working day focused on these questions. They come up with a recommendation. Some of the investment community is also spending their entire day, but most of the investment community is not spending their entire day on this question.

So they will be paying attention to what the analysts say, not necessarily accepting every piece of it. But we do look at things -- and one of the things that people in my position look at when we do research is we look at what we call consensus opinions from the analysts. So if you have all the analysts saying the same thing like buy this stock, that's a favorable consensus. You could have all of them saying sell this stock. That would be an unfavorable consensus. Sometimes you get a very mixed, and there's really not a consensus, it's kind of a mixed recommendation.

But we look at those things to -- and try to assess them. But when they're all positive, that generally, it's not too likely to see stock price movement without special new information, significant new information. It's not likely to see stock price movement that would be significantly at variance with the analysts' consensus.

Q. Did you form an opinion to a reasonable degree of certainty within your area of expertise as to whether there was a financial analyst consensus with regard to Sunbeam in that period of time leading up to March 30, 1998?

MR. HANSEN: Objection, Your Honor. That's going to call for hearsay.

THE COURT: Do you want to argue it?

MR. SCAROLA: Yes, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Why don't you guys come on up.

SIDE BAR CONFERENCE:

THE COURT: I assume the argument is just that to -- all he did is take a bunch of analyst reports and say they mostly pointed it out, and it's based on hearsay. What's the response?

MR. SCAROLA: The response is Dr. Emery told us one of the things that those within his area of expertise do is routinely examine materials to determine whether consensus exists and form opinions as to whether such a consensus exists. I think it's entirely appropriate for him to testify within his area of expertise as to whether he concluded to a reasonable degree of certainty within his area of expertise whether a consensus existed among analysts at that time.

THE COURT: I would sustain the objection. Obviously you can't give him the data he relied on and get around the hearsay rule.

END OF SIDE BAR

MR. SCAROLA: Your Honor, excuse me. I'm sorry. May I approach again?

THE COURT: If Mr. Hansen is coming up.

MR. SCAROLA: Sure.

SIDE BAR CONFERENCE:

MR. SCAROLA: I really overlooked the fact this information was not being introduced for the truth of the information but only with regard to what was being said at the time. It is the fact of the information, not the truthfulness of the information.

MR. HANSEN: I believe there's been a ruling, and, in fact, it's only relevant if truthful. If it's not truthful, it has no significance. Even if it's truthful, it can't come into evidence because Mr. Perelman didn't see it.

THE COURT: In all honesty, it's still hearsay. He doesn't have the stuff in front of him. He's saying what do these things say.

MR. SCAROLA: He's saying what his opinion was as to whether there was a consensus.

THE COURT: If you want to pull them out and say I'm not relying on hearsay; I'm just saying what they say, that's fine. He couldn't have read them all even if they're not being offered for the truth of the matter asserted and simply say this is what was said.

MR. SCAROLA: That's fine.

MR. HANSEN: Even if he did it that way, if he took a bunch of reports which are hearsay and said, okay, I've looked at them, they all say such and such, that's hearsay. These are somebody else's out-of-court statement.

MR. SCAROLA: I'll just introduce them.

MR. HANSEN: I don't believe he can.

THE COURT: Absent something that shows plaintiff relied on them, I don't know that it's relevant.

MR. HANSEN: It's also prejudicial.

MR. SCAROLA: I will represent to the court that there be testimony that the plaintiff relied upon the consensus of analyst reports as reported to him by Mr. Gittis and others within his organization.

THE COURT: Then I think Mr. Gittis and others in the organization need to specify what they looked at.

MR. SCAROLA: Okay. Thank you.

END OF SIDE BAR

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Dr. Emery, to whom are analyst opinions, expectations and recommendations communicated?

A. The general public.

Q. How?

A. I think I noted earlier they're sent out in a variety of ways. Sometimes they appear in places like the Wall Street Journal, but they're certainly available through financial information services such as Bloomberg, Reuter's, Bridge. You know, you can go to a brokerage firm and get -- I mean, if you go to a brokerage house or you have a broker, they'll make the information available to you, not a problem.

Q. Okay. You did tell us earlier that the manner in which you gathered these reports was by doing research with entities like Bloomberg, but to be clear, these reports can be obtained contemporaneously back in 1997 and 1998 by any member of the general public that wants to get them; is that correct?

A. Precisely.

MR. HANSEN: Objection; leading.

THE COURT: Sustained.

MR. SCAROLA: It was only by way of summarizing the testimony. Thank you.

THE COURT: I'm not entertaining a motion for rehearing, Mr. Scarola. Thank you.

MR. SCAROLA: Thank you.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. What is an institutional investor, Dr. Emery?

A. Institutional investors are people who manage other people's money. So, for example, we may have a retirement pension plan, and there may be people who are managing that money for us. Those people are institutional investors. They are institutions that manage that money. So they're not managing their own money; they're managing somebody else's money, but they're making decisions about which stocks to buy, which bonds to buy, which ones to sell.

Q. What role, if any, do the opinions of industry analysts, financial analysts have in influencing that decision-making process by institutional investors?

MR. HANSEN: Objection.

THE COURT: Can you give me a one-word one, or do we need to talk about it?

MR. HANSEN: Beyond the scope.

THE COURT: Do you want to come up if you feel you need to argue it? That's great.

SIDE BAR CONFERENCE:

THE COURT: I assume when you said beyond the scope, you meant the report.

MR. HANSEN: Absolutely. There's nothing in any opinion about this. We're levels away from anything he came close to talking about. Now he's going to talk about how this amorphous investment analyst community was influencing some amorphous group of institutional investors which has no relevance to this case, completely prejudicial.

THE COURT: Did he opine on the effect of analyst reports on institutional investors?

MR. SCAROLA: My first response is that this is exactly one of the questions provided to opposing counsel earlier when he was given an opportunity to object to any questions to which he chose to object to.

THE COURT: That's fine. I did not find that to be an exclusive list. What else?

MR. SCAROLA: That this opinion is apparently a part of the opinions expressed in that report.

THE COURT: Sustained.

MR. SCAROLA: Thank you.

END OF SIDE BAR

MR. SCAROLA: May I proceed, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Yes, sir.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Do financial analyst reports get distributed to and reviewed by institutional investors?

MR. HANSEN: Objection, Your Honor.

THE COURT: What's the legal objection? One word. Two words.

MR. HANSEN: Same objection as before.

THE COURT: That I would overrule. You can answer that one, sir. Do you remember it?

THE WITNESS: (Nodding head).

THE COURT: Okay. Thank you.

THE WITNESS: In research that I'm currently involved with with colleagues, we have looked at that question in relating to other work we're doing, and, in fact, one can trace, through large amounts of data one can trace the impact of financial analysts we're talking about.

MR. HANSEN: Objection, Your Honor. Nonresponsive answer.

THE COURT: Sustained. I'll ask you to disregard the last question. You were answering the question before, which I had sustained the objection to. You need to listen to the question that's asked and answer only the question that's asked. Okay?

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Let me refocus you, if I could, Dr. Emery?

A. You want to repeat the question?

Q. Yes, I will do that. Do institutional -- Excuse me.

Do financial analyst reports get distributed to institutional investors?

A. Yes.

Q. Thank you, sir. When we're talking about one company buying another company, what does the word "consideration" mean?

A. Essentially that's a broad word for the price paid. So what when I spoke earlier about cash and stock in a company, those would be consideration.

Q. There has been a finding that the defendant, Morgan Stanley, Incorporated, is a highly sophisticated investment banking firm that provides a wide range of financial and securities services. In the context of that statement, what is meant within the business community when an entity or a person for that matter is referred to as a highly sophisticated individual or corporation?

A. The SEC has specific rules that define the term "sophisticated." And those rules are designed --

MR. HANSEN: Objection, Your Honor, to legal testimony.

THE COURT: Sustained. I don't know, in all honesty, whether there was any attempt to put those undisputed facts in, an SEC concept of sophisticated investor.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. What is the general understanding in the business community of what it means to be a sophisticated investor?

A. Knowledge.

Q. Okay. Thank you, sir. That will work.

There has been a finding that Sunbeam filed a bankruptcy petition under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code in February 2001. From a business rather than a legal perspective, what is a bankruptcy petition under Chapter 11 of the bankruptcy code?

A. It is a petition filed with the court to allow the company to not pay its bills right away, to not meet its liabilities right away but continue to operate and then through the court establish exactly what bills will be paid and how the liabilities will be -- which liabilities and to which extent they will be paid.

Q. What relationship, if any, does the filing of a bankruptcy petition have on the value of a company's stock?

A. It's a very important event. Generally we think of it as being negative, but in many cases by the time it happens it actually turns out to be positive because expectations have grown so negative that the filing of the bankruptcy petition is viewed as a positive step in the company's life.

Q. Are there circumstances where the filing of a bankruptcy petition can wipe out shareholders' value in a company?

A. Absolutely.

Q. Is Arthur Andersen a company that you are familiar with, Doctor?

A. It is.

Q. Were you familiar with Andersen back in 1997 and early 1998?

A. I was.

Q. What kind of company was Andersen back in that time frame?

A. They were one of the major accounting firms, public accounting firms.

Q. And how was Andersen viewed in the business community during that time frame?

A. They were one of the most highly respected of the accounting firms.

Q. From a business perspective, how important is it for a public company to provide honest and accurate information to its auditors?

A. I believe it's critical.

Q. Why?

A. To go back to what I said about expectations, when you want to form accurate expectations about the future or as accurate as they can be, you have to have as accurate information as is possible to have.

Q. What significance does the investing community attach to the honesty and integrity of publicly filed statements, financial statements of public corporations, specifically in the 1997/1998 time frame?

A. They were very important.

Q. Did the investing community in the 1997 and 1998 time frame have a high degree of confidence in the honesty and accuracy of publicly filed financial information?

A. In my opinion, yes.

MR. SCAROLA: Your Honor, although I'm not quite finished, I'm about to enter a new area. And I'm looking at the clock. Is it appropriate for us to break here?

THE COURT: Sure, if you're telling me you're not going to finish in the next five minutes.

MR. SCAROLA: I won't finish in five minutes, but I don't have too much more to go.

THE COURT: Okay. You can step down. Thank you, sir. And this looks like a good place to send you home for the week.

Couple things. First of all, for planning

You want to raise your right hand again. Do you swear to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth?

THE WITNESS: I do.

THE COURT: Thank you. Have a seat.

And is there water? What are we missing? Oh, you guys, I have you so well trained.

Great. Have a seat, sir. Thank you. Does he have water, the witness?

Oh, you have your own water.

MR. SCAROLA: The jury has been very well conditioned, Your Honor.

THE COURT: They are.

THEREUPON,

DOUGLAS EMERY

having been first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

DIRECT EXAMINATION (Continued)

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Good morning, Dr. Emery.

A. Good morning.

Q. Dr. Emery, we are here to begin the second semester on our course in business and finance, and I am hoping that we will complete it in less than an hour, sir, as far as direct examination is concerned.

Before we get back into the point at which we left off, there are a few additional terms that I would like you to define for us that may become relevant during later stages of these proceedings.

Could you tell us first what the difference is between a holding company and an operating company?

A. The words are pretty much what they mean in terms of operating the company, the operating company actually does the day-to-day transactions and is in charge of the -- whatever the goods and services are that are being provided. Whereas, a holding company simply owns the operating company and does not involve itself, typically, in any ongoing daily conversations.

It's a little bit analogous to the board of directors versus the CEO.

Q. All right, sir.

You told us about the rights that shareholders have to elect members of the board of directors. And in the context of discussing shareholder rights to vote, what is a proxy?

A. A proxy is where someone who has the right to vote gives that voting authority to someone else.

Q. Are there different kinds of authority that can be given by way of a proxy?

A. Yes, it could be assigned to a variety of things.

Q. For example, may proxies be restricted for a particular purpose or purpose issues?

MR. HANSEN: Objection, leading.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. To what extent, if any, may limitations be imposed upon proxies?

A. Like any contract, you could write it in any way you so chose. So anything that the parties agreed to about timing or issues or anything else would be feasible to have.

Q. We know from the discussion that we have had already about the established facts in this case that one of the components of the consideration paid by Sunbeam for Coleman (Parent) Holdings' 82 percent interest in Coleman was the assumption of debt.

And I'm not sure that we specifically covered that phrase in our earlier discussions.

What is assumption of debt?

A. If you recall, debt is a legal contract to owe money. To assume that would be to take it over and take it on as your liability. So the liability to pay the money would pass from one company to the other. The one who is assuming it would actually take responsibility for it, pay off the debt.

Q. The factual findings that have been made in advance of trial include a finding that after a consistent pattern of declining earnings on the part of Sunbeam during 1995 and 1996, Sunbeam's board of directors hired Mr. Al Dunlap as Sunbeam's new CEO. The established facts, then, are that, quote, claiming to be engaged in a clean-up of Sunbeam's financial problems, Dunlap recorded artificially high reserves and booked expenses that should not have been recorded until later periods.

I want to ask you some questions about some of the words that are used in that particular finding.

What are reserves?

A. Reserves are monies that are set aside in anticipation of an expense or liability that will have to be paid later in the future.

Q. Are there rules and guidelines that apply to setting up reserves in proper amounts?

A. Yes, there would be quite a number of them.

Q. And are those rules and guidelines matters that fall into the area of expertise of the people who sit in the forward-looking seats or the people who sit in the backward-looking seats?

MR. HANSEN: Objection.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. That is, are they finance matters or accounting matters?

MR. HANSEN: Objection to continued leading.

THE COURT: Overruled as to that one. Go ahead.

THE WITNESS: They fall under the accounting rubric.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. All right, sir. Do both inhouse and outside accountants share the job of properly applying those rules and guidelines?

A. Yes, they do.

Q. Are there -- the details regarding the rules and guidelines, since they are the backward-looking seats people's job, is that something that you consider yourself to be an expert in?

A. No, I am not an accountant.

Q. So you know that such rules and guidelines exist, but the application of those rules and guidelines is somebody else's job?

A. I do not study the specifics of those.

Q. What does it mean for reserves to be artificially high? Is that a concept with which you are familiar?

A. Yes.

Q. And what does that mean?

A. It means that the people who were setting aside the reserves may have an idea of how much they are, but they deliberately set the amount aside to be larger than what they really think it's going to be. They want to have it be larger than what it turns out to be.

Q. What is the significance to the investing community when financial reserves are intentionally distorted in that fashion, set at artificially high levels?

A. Well, it gets back to the information that we've talked about previously, the information flow. If you believe that the amount set aside is appropriate, that's -- you have some information, but if you believe it was appropriate and, in fact, it's artificially high, then that hurts your ability to understand what's going on.

Q. Now, the second part of that statement that we began with makes reference to the fact that Mr. Dunlap recorded artificially high reserves and booked expenses that should not have been recorded until later periods. Let's focus on that second half.

What does it mean to book expenses?

A. It means to actually, what we call recognize the expense in the time period. So accounting is done on an accrual basis where there are rules and regulations for recognizing things. And it doesn't always follow on the exact exchange of cash or money. And so if they recognize -- claim an expense in one period that is ahead of another period, then that distorts the statements.

Q. So there are rules and guidelines, not only that apply to establishing reserves, but that also apply to when expenses are to be properly booked?

A. Yes.

Q. Do both inhouse and outside accountants share the job of properly applying those rules and guidelines that relate to booking expenses?

A. Yes, they do.

Q. What is the significance of improperly booking expenses?

A. Well, as I said, it distorts things. It will make the earlier period -- if you anticipate an expense, it makes the earlier period have a lower net income or earned profit, and then the subsequent period have a higher net income or profit. So the effect is to shift profit from one period forward.

Q. And by anticipating an expense, you mean paying expenses that really belong in a later period in an earlier period?

A. Right.

Q. How can overstated reserves be used to increase a company's income in a later time period? How does that work?

A. The concept is very similar. If you think you're going to have an expense and you put down that it's larger than it really is, and later on you can -- as you reverse that it will make it also look like you had more profit in the later period rather than the earlier period, less in the earlier.

Q. Is the term cookie jar reserves a term that you are familiar with?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Why are overstated reserves called cookie jar reserves?

A. This goes back to many years ago when there were people who saved money in a cookie jar. And they would put money aside in a cookie jar for things that they needed. It's a depression era, or perhaps even earlier, term.

Q. And what happens to the money once it goes into the cookie jar?

A. Then they have -- it's like a savings account. They have the ability to take it out when they think they really need it.

Q. How do bill and hold sales affect a company's future sales?

A. It's actually a similar sort of thing, except the profit direction kind of goes the other way. If you -- in a bill and hold, you are getting a customer to say they bought something when, in fact, you're not delivering it, they're not paying for it. I mean, they're sort of agreeing to buy it later. But they're agreeing now so that you can write down that it was sold.

If you write down that it was sold, then you get the revenues for that, and you get the profit for that. So you write that down ahead of time. And so that has the effect of moving revenues and profits ahead rather than delaying them. Rather than pushing them forward in time, it brings them back in time.

Q. Explain to us, if you would, please, Dr. Emery, the concept of channel stuffing; what is that?

A. The things we've been talking about when we talk about bill and hold sales, the broader term is channel stuffing. What that means is you have a distribution channel and you try to get things from your books into the channel. So they're sort of already set to go. And that accelerates revenues and profits.

Q. If the investing community doesn't know that a company's reported sales for a particular period of time are in actuality a result of improper bill and hold sales and improper channel stuffing, what significance does that lack of information have?

MR. HANSEN: Objection, Your Honor.

THE COURT: What's the legal objection?

MR. HANSEN: Leading, and also outside his report.

THE COURT: I would overrule it on the latter.

Can you rephrase it?

MR. SCAROLA: Yes, I can.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. What, if any, significance does it have if the investing community is unaware of the fact that reported sales during a particular period of time are as a consequence of improper accounting procedures such as improper bill and hold sales and improper channel stuffing?

A. Once again, it's information that would be incorrect, and that would cause a misvaluation.

In particular, the issue that we get into is there may be the appearance of growth in sales when, in fact, there is no growth in sales. Growth in sales and growth in profit affects the valuation very -- in a very important way, very important ways.

So the difference between having the same profit, the same revenue every year versus growing profit, growing revenue. So if, as an outsider, I think that revenues and sales have grown, then I can make a very significant misvaluation of the company.

Q. It has been established that, quote, Dunlap further enhanced Sunbeam's income in 1997 by causing Sunbeam to record a profit of 10 million dollars from a sham sale of its warranty and spare parts business.

In the context of that statement, explain to us, please, what a sham sale is.

A. Essentially, they got one of their distributors, one of their customers who would buy products and then resell them to customers for parts and warranty work, repair work, they got that entity to pretend to buy that business from Sunbeam when, in fact, they really were just going to continue to operate in the same way that they had been operating. And they were not going to actually own that business.

Q. Dr. Emery, how could using fraudulently inflated stock to pay for another company and then merging the two companies together work to conceal a turnaround fraud?

MR. HANSEN: Objection, leading, and also outside prior opinions.

THE COURT: Overruled on the latter. Can you rephrase it?

MR. SCAROLA: On the leading grounds, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Yes, sir.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. How, if at all, can using fraudulently inflated stock to purchase another company and then merging the two companies together assist in concealing a turnaround fraud?

A. When one company acquires another, especially when they are sizeable entities, there's a lot going on. And you have a lot going on in a lot of ways.

You have, as you can imagine, the physical problem of merging distribution channels, employees, and various processes.

You have the attitude problem called the culture, corporate culture.

But you also have the accounting problem of putting those things together to keep track of everything. You've got two separate books. You have to put them together.

In each of those instances when that happens, there's tremendous amount going on. And there also can be additional charges taken for what's called restructuring or, you know, the merger itself. There can be additional charges that are taken. In that process it becomes much easier to lose track of what's going on. It becomes very difficult to really track what is coming from one entity, what is coming from the other entity originally, after you've put them together.

So essentially, you're much more able to hide things. And so the fact that you might have been doing poorly, the acquiring firm might not have been doing as well as it had people believe, it would then -- could use the acquired firm to cover up, basically, that fact -- the fact that there had been fraud.

Q. Dr. Emery, I'm going to read you another sentence from the established facts.

MR. HANSEN: Can I object and approach, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Sure.

(A bench conference occurred as follows:)

MR. HANSEN: Very briefly, I'm moving for a mistrial. This witness has now given further prejudicial testimony where he embellishes on the findings, speculate as to causes and motive. None of this was disclosed in his report. It's improper embroidering on the facts the Court has determined to be applied in this trial. We can't cross-examine. We can't challenge the facts, which are not facts, as we all know. And we can't possibly get a fair trial.

This expert has not disclosed his opinions, is not competent to speculate as to a particular fraud. He's allowed to get up and bolster the Plaintiff's position, using loaded words like "cover-up," "hide," based on a report that indicated no such opinion. There is no way Morgan Stanley can get a fair trial in this courtroom, and I move for a mistrial.

THE COURT: What's the response?

MR. SCAROLA: I rely on all arguments previously made.

THE COURT: I would deny the mistrial. As I said, I think it's fair that the jurors understand the statements in Exhibit A, which I think is what he is explaining.

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, if I could comment.

THE COURT: No, because I've ruled.

MR. HANSEN: That's not what this witness is doing. He's speculating as to motive. The most recent testimony is what is the motivation people would use -- that's not defining terms. It's speculating a level beyond defining terms; therefore, the record should reflect.

THE COURT: The record has his testimony.

(The bench conference ended.)

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Dr. Emery, as I began, I'm going to read another sentence from the established facts, and that sentence uses the term restructuring charges. And I want you to tell us what restructuring charges means in the concept of these established facts.

Quote, Morgan Stanley's strategy would allow Dunlap to take massive restructuring charges purportedly related to the acquisitions and thus create more cookie jar reserves that could be tapped to bolster the future earnings of the combined companies.

What does restructuring charges mean in that context?

A. We talked about the reserves in anticipation of expenses to turn the company around. In this case it would be anticipating expenses to merge the companies, to restructure. And those -- if you took more than what you actually had, that would allow you to actually then have more cookie jar reserves.

Q. Could you give us some examples of what sort of restructuring charges would be anticipated legitimately in the merge of two companies engaged in the sales of consumer products?

A. I would go back to what I said just a minute ago. I mentioned three different types of expenses. One is physically merging things, and there would be charges -- moving charges, as simple as that. Two, there can be corporate culture issues and personnel issues. So there might be employees who are let go, and there would be severance packages and other things to help those employees find another job. And third, there would be much of the paperwork involved with merging things. All of those have legitimate costs associated with them.

Q. Among the established facts is that, quote, Morgan Stanley provided CPH with false 1996 and 1997 sales and revenue figures for Sunbeam as well as false projections that Sunbeam could not expect to achieve.

What are projections in the context of that factual statement?

A. We talked last Thursday about expectations and financial analysts and the market and so forth. In addition to that, companies actually announce and publicize what their expectations are in connection with their revenues, their earnings per share, profits, so forth. They publicize their expectations, and those are typically referred to as projections, forecasts.

Q. Is the publication of projections something that occurs as a matter of routine for public companies?

A. It's very common, yes.

Q. Why? Why do public companies put out to the public in general what their expectations are concerning their financial performance?

MR. HANSEN: Objection, leading, calls for speculation. Outside report. And may we approach?

MR. SCAROLA: I'll withdraw that question, and perhaps we can avoid another trip to the bench.

MR. HANSEN: Actually, if I might approach anyway, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Sure.

(A bench conference occurred as follows:)

MR. HANSEN: Very briefly, I neglected to mention when I was last here that Your Honor had previously issued a ruling on the motion in limine prohibiting this witness from describing motive. That testimony should be struck. I move to strike his testimony with respect to motive concealing improprieties through merger, because that was indeed testimony describing motive per Your Honor's prior ruling.

MR. SCAROLA: My only response is that Mr. Hansen mischaracterizes the testimony. Neither the question or the answer related to motive.

THE COURT: It's a motion for rehearing, which I would deny.

(The bench conference ended.)

THE COURT: You're going to pose a different question, Mr. Scarola?

MR. SCAROLA: I am.

I'm actually going to rephrase it in a way that I hope is not objectionable.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Do a company's financial projections impact on the value of the company?

A. Yes.

Q. How?

A. It's back to the flow of information that we've been talking about. The information -- a company wants to get out information. In an ideal world they want people to understand what they're doing, they're doing good things and what the value of those things are. And to do that, they want to make information available to the public, to the extent that it doesn't hurt them competitively, they would like to have the full value of what it is, you know, they're doing. So they'd like their stock price to reflect the future that they see.

Q. Do companies also sometimes project bad news?

A. Again --

MR. HANSEN: Objection, leading. May I have a standing objection to all testimony beyond the scope of the witness's report so I don't have to continuously object?

THE COURT: I think that objection was already globally lodged. I would sustain it on leading.

Do you want to rephrase it?

MR. SCAROLA: Yes.

MR. HANSEN: Does that mean I'm permitted to have a standing objection, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Yes, I think we covered that last week was my recollection. If not, that's fine.

MR. HANSEN: Thank you, Your Honor.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. What statements, if any, do companies make projecting unfavorable news in the future?

A. Again, it has to do with the flow of information. One of the things that is often viewed negatively for a firm is to have a shock that is negative to the markets, one of the reasons that bad news is frequently not given while the markets are operating. You'll hear that a company announced a much lower earnings after the market closed or that they announced that they anticipate lower earnings after the market closed. What they're trying to do is to have a more even flow of information and have the investment community have a level playing field so they have the information they need to make whatever investment decisions they choose to make.

Q. Dr. Emery, I want to ask you please to explain and define some of the terms used in the following statement from the facts established in advance of trial.

Quote, Morgan Stanley presented Sunbeam's board with Morgan Stanley's opinion on the value of Coleman. Using a discounted cash flow analysis, which Morgan Stanley represented was the best gauge of stand-alone economic value and the best method of capturing the unique value of Coleman, Morgan Stanley valued CPH's Coleman stock at a range of $31.06 to $53.24 per Coleman share. CPH's 44,067,520 Coleman shares were worth, therefore, between 1 billion 369 million dollars and 2 billion 346 million dollars.

That's the end of the statement

Let's break that apart. What is a discounted cash flow analysis that Morgan Stanley used to come to those values of CPH's interest in Coleman?

A. One of the ways I explain this in class is, if you think about a certificate of deposit, many people have heard of a certificate of deposit, it's a way of saving. And you take an example where the bank is saying, if you will give us some money today, we'll give you a thousand dollars three years from today. The question becomes, how much money do you have to give them today?

So let's suppose you give them 780 dollars, but then three years from now they give you a thousand dollars. So the 220 dollar difference is the interest you earn. If you take that interest and break it down into a yearly interest, discounted cash flow analysis uses the same process, only it thinks about it in an opposite way. Instead of I'm investing 780 and getting a thousand, we think of it as, I expect to get a thousand in the future. That would be the earnings that Coleman expects to make, and we want to know what are those worth today.

We know from the example I just gave you that a thousand dollars three years from today might be worth 780 dollars today. So that would be a discount on the cash flow. So that's why we call it discounted cash flow analysis.

We do that to all of the future cash flows to find out what they're worth today.

Q. The statement tells us that that discounted cash flow analysis was used to come to a stand-alone economic value of CPH's ownership interest in Coleman.

What is a stand-alone economic value of a corporation?

A. Well, if you recall, we talked last time about combining companies with synergies when there might be synergies. The stand-alone value is without those synergies. It's just by itself as it now stands.

Q. Why do investment banks report to the board of directors of a client about their evaluation of a merger partner on the opposite side of the negotiating table?

MR. HANSEN: Objection, no foundation, no basis. Calls for speculation.

THE COURT: Overruled.

THE WITNESS: As we mentioned last Thursday, investment bankers' role is typically to facilitate a transaction. And so they are helping with that process. They're giving financial advice, part of that advice involves what is this company -- what do we think this company is worth? The directors would want to know that because they would want to have an idea of whether they were paying the right price, whether they were getting a good deal for the company or a bad deal for the company.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Moving on to a different area referenced in the established facts. We did already talk about the concept of a debenture offering.

But what are convertible subordinated debentures?

A. The convertible and the subordinated are modifiers. They add an aspect to the security. The convertible -- let's start with the subordinated.

Q. Let me ask you to back up even a little bit farther. Just as a reminder tell us again what a debenture is, just before we start modifying that term.

A. The debenture is a bond which is borrowed money, and it's backed by the full faith and credit of the issuing company, as opposed to a mortgage bond. So it's a certificate of borrowed money.

The subordinated means that if there are problems, those securities have a lower priority than other debentures that are not subordinated. Now, as debt they still may have a higher priority than many other securities or things in the company, but the subordinated refers to their position with respect to other debentures. They are subordinated.

Q. So it's where they stand in line when they get paid their obligation?

A. If there's a bankruptcy type of thing, if there's financial distress, it would be their priority in that case.

Q. Where do debenture holders stand in relation to stockholders or shareholders?

A. They stand ahead of stockholders.

Q. Okay. So we've taken care now of the subordinated part of the modifier.

What does it mean that these debentures were convertible?

A. The conversion or convertible term means that the security owner, the person who owns that security, has that debenture, has the right to exchange it for shares of stock. In most cases, and in this one, it would be shares of stock in the same company. So that would mean if they chose to become -- if they chose to, they could stop being bondholders and become stockholders. And to do that then, the contract has to say, how many shares do they get?

So, for example, if you had a bond that was convertible into 50 shares, then that bond could be exchanged, and in its place you would get 50 shares of stock for that exchange.

Q. Moving again, Dr. Emery. We know that, quote, Morgan Stanley agreed to serve as the sole underwriter for the convertible subordinated debenture offering and that the debentures were marketed to investors at a series of road show meetings and conference calls arranged by Morgan Stanley.

In that context, what is a road show?

A. A road show is when people from the company and the investment bank, when they go out to talk with the investing public, they will go and talk to particular potential investors, especially institutional investors who manage large funds and might want to buy the securities. It's basically a sales technique to sell the securities.

Q. What does it mean to launch a debenture offering?

A. Just like launching a ship. It's when it starts out.

Q. The factual findings include a statement that Morgan Stanley initially planned to sell 500 million dollars worth of debentures, but the offering was so successful that the size of the offering was increased to 750 million dollars on March 19, 1998, the day of the last road show.

In the investing world, what is the significance of increasing the size of an offering after the marketing of that offering has already begun, after it's been launched?

A. I believe we talked about this last Thursday. If you think about them in their efforts to sell, if they find out that a lot of people want them, they can sell many more securities, and that would be a very positive sign that people were interested in buying those securities, and so they decided to borrow more money and sell more securities.

Q. Another factual finding is this: With Morgan Stanley's knowledge and assistance, Sunbeam prepared and issued a false press release on March 19, 1998 that affirmatively misstated and concealed Sunbeam's true condition. Morgan Stanley was fully aware that the March 19, 1998 press release was false, misleading and failed to disclose material information.

What role -- that completes the factual statement.

What role does false or misleading information in a press release play in the investing community's ability to accurately assess the value of a company?

MR. HANSEN: Objection. This is all calling for speculation.

THE COURT: Overruled.

THE WITNESS: Again, the issue is information. If they have accurate information that investors can make better estimates and the risk that they take is the risk of market risk, not the risk of fraud.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Going on. Quote, the March 19, 1998 press release failed to disclose Sunbeam's actual January and February 1998 sales or the true reasons for the poor results. Instead, the press release held out the false possibility that Sunbeam still could achieve sales of 285 million to 295 million dollars and suggested that if any shortfall occurred, that shortfall would be due to the fact that certain retailers had decided to defer first quarter purchases to the second quarter.

The press release also assured that Sunbeam at least would exceed first quarter 1997 net sales of 253.4 million dollars.

Now, what I would like you to tell us in relation to that statement, Dr. Emery, is the different financial comparisons that are referenced in that statement. Could you explain to us the significance of measuring current performance against different kinds of standards?

A. Well, there are three different measures or benchmarks, comparisons that are --

Q. Let me stop you there then, if I could. If we're going to talk about three different measures, would you be so kind as to step down and use the board for us again?

THE WITNESS: One of the benchmarks -- one of the measures that they talk about there is --

THE COURT: I just want to make sure Mr. Hansen can see, you're not blocking his view.

MR. HANSEN: Thank you, Your Honor.

THE WITNESS: One of the things they looked at was, how do the companies measure in a previous parallel period, so January, February of the previous year, that's one type of comparison.

The second comparison is the financial analysts expectations. We've talked about those. And the financial analysts' expectations are another type of benchmark or comparison.

And then the third is the corporation's own expectations, which we talked about just a minute ago.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. When we were speaking about projections?

A. Right, projections, expectations.

Q. All right. Now, what is the significance of measuring current performance against those three different benchmarks? What does that tell us?

A. Well, when we measure it against the past, usually what we're doing is we're looking for, what kinds of changes have taken place?

When we measure it against financial analysts' expectations, they know what the past was. They're really looking forward. What is it that we expect to happen sort of going on.

And then the corporate expectations or forecasts or projections, those are within -- from the corporation itself. And, again, the flow of information becomes very important.

Q. All right. Thank you, Doctor. You can resume your seat again.

MR. SCAROLA: And I'll move this back out of the way, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Thank you.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Dr. Emery, when we're looking at a corporation which claims to have experienced or accomplished a dramatic economic turnaround, how important is it to have accurate information to measure against those benchmarks?

A. As I noted a little earlier, it's extremely important, because if you think that revenues and profits are growing, that gives one impression of value. If you think they're pretty much staying the same, it gives a very, very different impression of value.

Q. It is an established fact that, quote, Morgan Stanley knew that a full and truthful disclosure of Sunbeam's first quarter sales would doom the debenture offering which was scheduled to close on March 25, 1998.

How are those two things connected? How does accurate information about a company's financial circumstances relate to the ability to sell out a debenture offering?

A. Well, as we noted just a little while ago, when they moved the offer from 500 to 750, that was based on a lot of interest in investing.

If the investing public found out that things were not as they thought they were, they very well may decide, we don't want to invest. We don't want to buy securities in this company. And that would have hurt the process.

Q. Another statement of established fact: As Morgan Stanley was fully aware, the written contract between CPH and Sunbeam gave CPH the express legal right to refuse to close the sale if there was a material adverse change in Sunbeam's business, results of operation, or financial condition.

Is the phrase "material adverse change" a commonly understood phrase in the business world?

A. I believe it is.

Q. What does it mean?

MR. HANSEN: Objection, calls for legal conclusion.

THE COURT: Overruled.

THE WITNESS: In the business world, if you talk about material, what you're really talking about is, does it matter? Significance. There are things that are different that don't matter. So it can't be something that doesn't matter.

Adverse, of course, means negative.

And, of course, therefore, what it means is a negative change that matters.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. In the context of discussions about corporations, what is an insider?

A. An insider is someone who is connected to the corporation in some significant way, so an employee would be an insider.

Q. When an insider buys or sells stock in his or her own company, in the company in which that person is considered to be an insider, what information is available to the investing public about such purchases and sales?

A. That information goes through the regulatory process. It has to be disclosed on a regular basis. And it is collected and made available to the public, because it is relevant to what -- to the value of the company.

In our books that we've written, we discuss principles of finance. And our first principle is the idea that people will act in a self-interested way. And that would be the relevant thing here, would be to watch what people do and not what they say, another principle called signaling.

Q. What happens to the ability of industry analysts, Wall Street in general and investors, to judge the true value of a company, if anything, when a company files fraudulent financial statements and secretly engages in practices such as establishing cookie jar reserves, using bill and hold sales, recording sham sales, practices channel stuffing, and books expenses in years in which they are not actually incurred?

A. It damages or completely destroys our ability to establish any sort of accurate value for the company.

Q. What happens to the ability to judge the true value of a company when an investment banker provides the last two years of information regarding sales and revenues for that company which is materially and substantially false?

MR. HANSEN: Objection, Your Honor. Leading, no foundation. Speculation, undue repetition of matters not in dispute. I can go on.

THE COURT: Overruled.

THE WITNESS: It's the same sort of thing. It damages our ability to reach any sort of accurate value. It's part of the information process.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. What happens to the ability to accurately judge the value of a company when that company's investment banker provides false economic projections that the company has no real expectation of achieving?

A. Again, as we talked, it's part of the valuation process, and that information would hurt -- inaccuracy would hurt your ability to come up with an accurate value.

Q. What happens to the ability to accurately judge the true value of a company when the company and its investment banker hide a 60 percent drop in net sales for the same period from one year to the next?

A. Same answer, it damages the ability to have an accurate sense of value.

Q. Among the established facts, Dr. Emery, is this: Morgan Stanley also knew that Sunbeam would promptly replace Morgan Stanley with another investment banking firm such as the Chase Securities team led by Mark Davis.

What would it mean for one investment banking firm to be replaced by another in the middle of a merger and acquisition and debenture sale offering?

MR. HANSEN: Objection.

May we approach?

THE COURT: Sure.

MR. SCAROLA: I'll withdraw the question completely, entirely, won't ask it at all.

THE COURT: We're still going to chat, so come on up, Mr. Scarola.

(A bench conference occurred as follows:)

MR. HANSEN: I believe there had been a ruling previously that this witness was going to explain terms, but not essentially narrate the complaint in a way that told the story that was embellishing and embroidering on the established facts. I believe this is all objectionable and beyond that order. I would move to strike the testimony, and ask for a standing objection at this point forward.

It's contrary to what the Court ordered. before. This is not a definition of terms. This is nothing more than yet the third salvo of prejudicial repetition of allegations, which is basically all we've done in the case so far, and he's arguing the issues in the case.

MR. IANNO: It was brought to my attention at the last bench conference that Mr. Scarola was shaking his head in disgust of Mr. Hansen approaching the bench. I wanted to let the Court know that.

THE COURT: I appreciate that. And if there is any nonverbal communication between any counsel and any of the jurors, it needs to stop now.

MR. IANNO: But he did it.

THE COURT: I haven't observed anything, but if there is anything, don't do it.

MR. SCAROLA: And I do not concede that any such communication occurred, because it did not.

With regard to the objection that has been raised, there is no pending question right now. So I don't know what the purpose of the objection is. I cannot agree to a standing objection in light of the nature of the objection itself. It needs to be posed with regard to specific questions so that it can be judged in its context. And as to the general statement that has been made, I rely upon prior responses.

THE COURT: Okay. As I said, I think it's fair that the jurors understand what the Exhibit A statement of facts means. I would assume we're pretty close to being done on direct. How much longer?

MR. SCAROLA: Fifteen minutes.

THE COURT: Okay.

MR. SCAROLA: Do you want to take a break now?

THE COURT: No, that's okay. We'll obviously take a break before cross.

MR. HANSEN: It's improper, embellishing, all beyond the scope of the Court's order.

MR. SCAROLA: What I will try to avoid, so we can avoid trips to the benches, Mr. Hansen needs to stand and say, same objection, and I'll say, same response. And unless Your Honor wants further argument, we can resolve it in that fashion.

MR. HANSEN: That's a design of Mr. Scarola trying to make me look bad in front of this jury. If I need to make objections, I'll stand up and --

MR. SCAROLA: Surely Your Honor will know my response will be the same, and I won't need to approach the bench.

(The bench conference ended.)

MR. SCAROLA: May we proceed, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Yes, sir.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. I'm going on to the next question.

Dr. Emery, the statement of facts include the following finding: Sunbeam's outside auditors already had made it perfectly clear to Morgan Stanley that Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales were a disaster. One of Sunbeam's senior outside auditors, Lawrence Bornstein, has testified under oath that on March 19, 1998 he told Morgan Stanley's John Tyree that the statement in Sunbeam's March 19, 1998 press release that Sunbeam would at least exceed first quarter 1999 sales of 253.4 million dollars was not credible.

The statement goes on to say that Mr. Bornstein told Mr. Tyree, I've been to every shipping dock domestically, I've been to Hattiesburg, I've been to Neosho, I've been to Mexico City, and I don't think these guys can physically ship this much stuff.

My question to you, Dr. Emery, is this: What purpose would it serve for an auditor to go to a company's shipping docks? Why would an auditor involve himself in an activity such as that?

MR. HANSEN: Objection, 403, speculation, violation of prior court order.

THE COURT: Overruled.

THE WITNESS: That would be a way of checking on what was going on. It's as simple as auditing to verify that things are as they seem to be.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Is that an unusual kind of activity for an auditor to be involved in, actually checking on the ability of a company to fill orders?

MR. HANSEN: Same objections, plus leading.

THE COURT: I'll sustain it on the last grounds only.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. To what extent, if any, is visiting a company's plant, looking at the capacity of their shipping docks to move product typical or atypical of what auditors do?

MR. HANSEN: Same objections, including leading.

THE COURT: Overruled.

You can answer it, sir.

THE WITNESS: It's not unusual at all.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. The following factual finding has been made: Morgan Stanley knew no later than March 25, 1998, if not much earlier, that Sunbeam's earnings for the first quarter of 1998 were going to miss Wall Street analysts' earnings expectations, which were in the range of 28 to 31 cents per share, excluding one time charges.

Now, you've already told us about analysts' earnings expectations. What are one-time charges? What does that mean?

A. If you think about sales and expenses to produce those sales, they happen this month and next month and this year and this quarter and so forth, and they keep happening in a regular way.

And we talk about one-time charge, those are things that happen once and then may not happen again for a long time or may never happen again. So those are not recurring regularly.

Q. I have a question about the following statement: Having directly participated in misleading CPH, Morgan Stanley had a duty to disclose the true facts before the closing of the debenture offering and the Coleman acquisition. Morgan Stanley also could have required Sunbeam to postpone the closings of those transactions until the necessary disclosures were made. Morgan Stanley did neither. Instead, Morgan Stanley marched forward and closed the 750 million dollar debenture offering on March 25, 1998, which was needed to close the Coleman transaction, and assisted Sunbeam in closing the acquisition of Coleman on March 30, 1998.

My question to you is: How is it that an investment banker has the ability to postpone a transaction like a debenture offering?

A. Well, if things aren't in order, they need more information, they have the ability to say, wait a minute, we need to postpone at a minimum, we need to look at things, gather more information. They had that ability.

Q. Continuing, another quote: On April 3, 1998, just four days after the Coleman transaction closed, Sunbeam announced that sales for the first quarter of 1998 would be approximately 5 percent below the 253.4 million dollars in sales that Sunbeam reported in the first quarter of 1997. In other words, Sunbeam was expecting sales in the range of 240 million dollars. That sales shortfall was shocking news, particularly in view of assurances provided by Sunbeam both in and after its March 19, 1998 press release that 285 million to 295 million of sales was still a real possibility.

What are we talking about there when we talk about a sales shortfall?

MR. HANSEN: Objection to "what we were talking about." Objection to the form of the question. Form. "What are we talking about?"

THE COURT: Overruled.

THE WITNESS: It relates to these three benchmarks that we talked about, the past revenues that are below that, financial analysts' expectations, they're below that. Even their own statements literally days before, less than two weeks before, they're below that.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. It has been found as a matter of fact that Sunbeam's news stunned the market. On April 3rd Sunbeam's stock price dropped 25 percent, from 45 and 9/16ths to 34 and 3/8ths.

What is the significance of a stock price drop of 25 percent in one day?

A. I would consider that significant negative news hit the market. It was not known. It was viewed in a substantially negative way, and it was a surprise to have that kind of a drop.

Q. Please consider the following statement: In June 1998, after a number of news articles critical of Sunbeam's practices, Sunbeam's board of directors launched an internal investigation. That investigation led quickly to the firing of Dunlap and Kersh, and, subsequently, to a restatement of Sunbeam's financial statements for 1996, 1997, and the first quarter of 1998.

Now, please explain to the jury what the significance is, if any, of a company's having to restate its audited financial statements?

A. It's a really big deal. This is not something that they wanted to have happen. And, you know, it's infrequent. Very significant.

Q. I have one last question for you, Dr. Emery. How many credit hours do we now get at the University of Miami?

A. Well, we can give audit hours.

Q. All right. Thank you very much, sir.

MR. SCAROLA: Your Honor, I have no further questions on direct exam.

THE COURT: This is probably a good place for a break. We won't talk to you. Don't talk about the case. If you want to bring in water, soda, tea, lollipops, feel free.

(Jury exits courtroom.)

THE COURT: Mr. Hansen, do you have any idea how long you think your cross is going to be?

MR. HANSEN: Certainly through lunch, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Yeah, I'm just trying to ballpark the rest of the day.

MR. HANSEN: Maybe an hour and a half.

May I renew my motion, Your Honor, briefly?

THE COURT: Sure.

MR. HANSEN: Before we take our break, I would like to renew my mistrial motion. The trial to date, which is supposedly about issues of reliance and damages, has involved, as far as I can tell, nothing more from the Plaintiff other than the endless high volume repetition of the so-called established facts, which are drilled and drilled and drilled, which are no longer allowed to be disputed, so there's no longer an issue in the case about them. There's been no effort to try and explain them. They're rather repeated and embellished and highlighted upon.

In my judgment, Morgan Stanley cannot get anything approaching fair trial on reliance and damages after this witness has been allowed to essentially do nothing more than serve as a mouthpiece for these allegations, which, again, are prejudicial, not probative, not the subject of expert testimony, and place us in the position of having to refute something we can't refute. Because Your Honor has completely restricted us from even offering any defense as to those facts. So I renew my mistrial motion. It's only become clear with time just how far from a trial on reliance and damages we've gotten.

THE COURT: Any response on behalf of Plaintiff?

MR. SCAROLA: None other than what we've repeatedly made.

THE COURT: My ruling is still the same. We don't need to reiterate my position that Morgan Stanley placed itself in the position it finds itself.

Two, I'll point out we're on the very first witness, so it's not been ad nauseam witness after witness talking about the same point to the extent it's cumulative.

Three, I said before, the jury needs to understand what the terms in Exhibit A mean, and to my understanding, that's what this witness is doing.

You can step down. Thanks, sir.

Have you revised -- because, obviously, Dr. Emery is taking longer than planned, have you come up with any revised schedule with how long you think your case in chief will take?

MR. SCAROLA: We are still targeting completion by the end of this week.

THE COURT: Close of business Thursday.

MR. SCAROLA: It could spill over into Monday, but we're still on schedule for completion by the end of Thursday.

THE COURT: Something in the back of our heads, whether we want to take a day trial break between Plaintiff's case and Defendant's case if we're going to need the time to rule on objections to depositions and other things. Just if we want to talk about it and think about it, we can talk about it later.

MR. HANSEN: Since we are here on Monday, there are other witnesses, may we know who the other witnesses --

MR. SOLOVY: I'll tell them again. I said it on Thursday. Next witness is Mr. Maher.

THE COURT: Wait, are we doing him live?

MR. SOLOVY: Live.

THE COURT: Is it Mr. Fogg's depo.

MR. SOLOVY: Mr. Fogg will be when it's convenient.

MR. SCAROLA: He's a filler.

THE COURT: That's fine.

MR. SOLOVY: Mr. Maher, Mr. Nesbitt, Mr. Perelman, Dr. Nye, Mr. Gittis.

And Mr. Perella is about a two-minute tape, Your Honor.

THE COURT: And so we have Perella and Fogg we're reading? Perella is a snippet. The other folks are all live. Dr. Nye we need, you think, about an hour ahead of time?

MR. HANSEN: Yes.

THE COURT: Is that all we're doing?

MR. SOLOVY: That's it, Your Honor.

THE COURT: That's easy. We'll be back in a few minutes.

MS. BEYNON: Your Honor, I have an opposition to the motion handed to you this morning from the Plaintiff.

MR. SCAROLA: What time does our break end, Your Honor?

THE COURT: In five minutes, 11:10.

(A recess was taken.)

THE COURT: Have a seat. Here are copies of the orders from this morning and I think a couple from last week. I'm not sure.

And are we ready to get the jurors?

MR. SCAROLA: Yes, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay.

(Jury enters courtroom.)

THE COURT: Thank you for coming back on time again. And we're ready to continue.

Mr. Hansen, did you have questions?

MR. HANSEN: May I proceed, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Yes, sir.

CROSS-EXAMINATION

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Dr. Emery, good morning. My name is Mark Hansen. And I'm one of the lawyers from Morgan Stanley here. And I have some questions for you.

Dr. Emery does the term "arm's length negotiation" have a meaning for you?

A. Yes, it does.

Q. How do you define that term?

A. I would consider an arm's length transaction one that was devoid of special considerations or some personal relationship.

Q. In what we would call a stock transaction, let's say you have two parties doing a merger transaction, assume this is a table. You've got company A over here and company B over here. They're negotiating merging company A and B. Would that be an example of an arm's length transaction?

A. I would think of it in those terms.

Q. If we could put up a graphic. You know in this case there was an arm's length negotiation between Sunbeam and the parties represented on the other side of the courtroom, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And in the context of a merger and acquisition, there are a lot of people involved, aren't there?

A. That would -- I did not study that aspect, but, yes, I would think so.

Q. Well, did you familiarize yourself generally with the circumstances of the transaction that led to Coleman and Sunbeam combining?

A. I familiar -- I looked at a lot of different things, including stock prices and analysts' reports and information about the transaction statements, financial statements and so forth, yeah.

Q. And you knew there were buyers and sellers on opposite sides of the table, correct?

A. Certainly.

Q. Arm's length from one another, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. You knew that they had lawyers, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And you knew, for example, that Skadden, a big New York law firm, was the lawyer for the Sunbeam side?

A. I don't actually recall that.

Q. You knew the Wachtell firm in New York was the lawyer for the MAFCO/Coleman/CPH side?

A. I did not look at the lawyers.

Q. Did you know they had lawyers?

A. I understand they had lawyers. I would expect that. That would certainly be normal.

Q. In a large transaction of this sort, it's almost unthinkable to do that transaction without sophisticated lawyers, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And the two sides had investment bankers working for them, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. You knew that Morgan Stanley, for example, was working for the Sunbeam side of the table?

A. Yes.

Q. And there was a banking firm called Credit Suisse First Boston and they were representing the MAFCO or CPH side of the table?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that yes?

A. Yes.

Q. And in addition, both sides had accountants, wouldn't that be typical in such a transaction?

A. Both sides, excuse me?

Q. Had accounting firms?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you know that?

A. Yes.

Q. And you knew that Arthur Andersen was the accounting firm advising the Sunbeam side?

A. Yes.

Q. And that's a Big 5 or Big 4 accounting firm at the time?

A. Certainly.

Q. And then on the other side of the table there was Ernst and Young, correct? That's also a very highly regarded accounting firm.

Now, typically, as you say, it's typical for companies to hire these kind of professionals in assisting them in a merger transaction, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Each side will typically have its own team of advisors on the deal?

A. Typically, yes.

Q. Do you know about the experience level for example of Wachtell? Is that well known as a fancy mergers and acquisition firm in New York?

A. Their name certainly comes up in transactions, yes.

Q. Highly regarded as one of the leading merger and acquisition firms?

A. Yes.

Q. Also Credit Suisse First Boston was regarded as one of the leading financial firms in this kind of setting?

A. Certainly.

Q. Similarly, the accounting firm on the other side of the table, on the MAFCO/CPH side, Ernst and Young, that was one of the leading accounting firms in America at the time?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. True?

A. Yes.

Q. And that was also true of the professionals on the Sunbeam side of the table, they were all experienced and well regarded as well, weren't they?

A. Yes.

Q. In this transaction Morgan Stanley does not -- was not MAFCO's or CPH's investment banker, correct?

A. Morgan Stanley was not hired by CPH, that's correct.

Q. They weren't advising CPH, were they?

A. No, they were not advising them. They were providing information.

Q. They were at the other side of the table for Sunbeam. And this side of the table provided certain information you said?

A. That's correct.

Q. But MAFCO or CPH wasn't looking for advice from Morgan Stanley, they had their own investment advisor, correct?

A. In terms of advice or information?

Q. Advice.

A. I would think that they were not looking for advice.

Q. You get advice from your own advisors, right?

A. Yes.

Q. You don't get advice from advisors to the other side of the table, do you?

A. That's normally the practice, yeah.

Q. You would not get advice from the other side of the table normally, correct?

A. I mean, I can't say a blanket statement, but I think in a matter of course that would be my expectation, yeah.

Q. Your expectation would be that the people on the Coleman or the CPH side of the table would not be looking for advice from the people on the Sunbeam side of the table, correct?

A. As a matter of course, that seems right.

Q. And you know of nothing in this particular transaction that would cause it to be different from the ordinary course, do you?

A. That's correct.

Q. Now, in a merger, that's a pretty complicated transaction, isn't it?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. These are big companies, weren't they?

A. Yes.

Q. I'm sorry?

A. Yes, they were sizeable companies.

Q. A lot of issues to be resolved?

A. We talked about those, yes.

Q. The process of getting those issues resolved was a complicated process?

A. I'm sorry, say again.

Q. The process of trying to resolve all the issues that are necessary to be resolved before a merger can take place is a complicated process, isn't it?

A. You mean what I would refer to as the contracting process before the merger, the agreement to merge?

Q. Uh-huh.

A. Yes, those are very complicated contracts.

Q. And you anticipated my next question. Because it's a very complicated transaction involving a lot of details, the parties typically reduce their agreement to a writing, isn't that right?

A. That they would have a written contract?

Q. Uh-huh.

A. Yes.

Q. That's the way it happens in big mergers, right, the parties negotiate back and forth across a bargaining table and they try and hammer out a written document that reflects their understanding?

A. Yes.

Q. And so, you would agree it's a smart idea to have such a contract that lays out each side's rights and responsibilities, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you talked about investment banks sometimes providing something called fairness letters in connection with a merger; is that right?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. And that wouldn't be -- well, let me withdraw the question.

To the extent that Sunbeam's board wanted to know whether this was a good transaction to go into, who would they be looking to for an opinion on fairness?

A. Morgan Stanley.

Q. In other words, they get a fairness opinion from Morgan Stanley to their own board, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And the MAFCO/CPH side, who would they be looking to for an opinion about whether a transaction was a fair transaction?

A. They would typically look to their -- the people that they employed.

Q. And who were those?

A. The Credit Suisse First Boston.

Q. Now, you talked about a premium that's often paid for stocks, do you remember that from your testimony last week?

A. I do. What I talked about was a control premium.

Q. And you talked about how a bidding war can take place when other companies are interested in a company?

A. I did talk about that.

Q. Now, if there's only one company interested in acquiring the other company, you can't have such a bidding war, correct?

A. You can't have a bidding war with one bidder. It would be unusual for a bidder to bid against himself.

Q. Exactly. So with one bid there's no run up or premium, correct?

A. No, I don't agree with that. One thing I need to clarify is when I spoke on Thursday I spoke about a control premium. I was not speaking about an acquisition premium.

Q. Well, are you aware that there were no other bidders for Coleman other than Sunbeam at the time of this transaction?

A. Yes, I'm aware of that.

Q. So it wasn't like there was a bidding war for Coleman at the time, was there?

A. That's correct. But that doesn't mean a premium wasn't paid.

Q. Are you aware that when presented with a Sunbeam offer, Coleman actually went out and contacted at least one other potential purchaser to see if that firm was interested?

A. No, I didn't know that.

Q. Are you aware that the company that was contacted expressed no interest in purchasing Coleman?

A. No, I didn't know that.

Q. Well, okay, back to our table for a minute. You would agree with me, wouldn't you, Dr. Emery, that one side of the table is not typically in these merger transactions relying on the other side of the table to do its work for it, correct?

A. That's a little more difficult. To do its work for it. Depends on what you mean by "do its work for it." I would agree with it, but it does rely on information, because it does rely on that information that's provided.

Q. Fair enough. So each side of the table will be providing information across the table, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. Now, in your experience or based on your studies, Dr. Emery, isn't it true that in these kinds of merger transactions the two sides of the table won't just accept at face value the information provided across the table, but rather will check the information that's important to them before proceeding?

A. Certainly in any transaction you would want to do the best you could to verify the information.

Q. Right. There's a process that's typically followed in these kinds of transactions, correct?

A. Yeah, but it's not always possible to verify them. I mean, sometimes it's not possible to verify information.

Q. I'm not asking whether it's possible. I'm just asking is there a process typically followed in large merger transactions where the two sides attempt to verify information that's been provided by the other side?

A. Yes, there is.

Q. What's that process called?

A. Due diligence.

Q. Due diligence. Okay. Define that for a minute. What is due diligence based on your experience, Dr. Emery?

A. Due diligence is just that process where you go through and make every reasonable attempt to look at the information that's provided. And if it's -- if you can figure out that it's false, then that's what you're trying to do. And if you're not able to, then you make every reasonable effort. That's the due diligence.

Q. It's typical in these transactions, these large merger transactions that each side will make every reasonable effort to try and verify that information that's important to them, correct?

A. Certainly in any transaction, any investment you want to satisfy yourself that you've done reasonable -- you've taken every reasonable precaution against fraud.

Q. Well, let's separate out two different kinds of information. Information provided across the table that one side doesn't care about, there would be no point in checking, correct?

A. I think that would depend a lot -- I mean, it depends on what you mean doesn't care about.

Q. Well, information they're not going to use as a basis for making a decision. There would be no need to do due diligence on information you were not going to use or rely upon?

A. If what you mean is what Stan Musial's batting average was, I'd agree. But if it relates to the transaction, it's pretty hard for me to think that if it relates to the companies one wouldn't like to have more information rather than less. I can't imagine information about the other company you wouldn't want to have.

Q. So, in other words, anything provided across the table would be put through this due diligence process, according to your testimony, it all would be checked?

A. You would check everything you could check.

Q. Everything. You wouldn't separate out that which you cared about from that which you didn't care about and focus on what you cared about?

A. You certainly -- the amount of time and effort you put into things there would be -- you know, there could be a priority. I mean, in other words, how much does it matter? How material is it?

Q. So things that aren't material, no one is going to waste a lot of time on, right?

A. It depends on if they're really immaterial or not, then they're probably not going to get as much scrutiny.

Q. These people who are here as advisors on the two sides of the deal, they're not cheap, are they?

A. No.

Q. They're very expensive these top flight firms, these accountants, bankers, lawyers, aren't they?

A. Yes.

Q. So to that extent, you're going to want them to focus on things that mattered to you, right?

A. I think that's reasonable.

Q. And your view, Dr. Emery is that anything pushed across this table from this side of the table to the MAFCO/CPH side, in your view, if it's anything having to do with the nature of company, that's going to typically be put through this due diligence process, correct?

A. I would think that it would get some notice, yeah, that they would want the information. And it would be verified to the extent that it was relevant, to the extent that you could verify it.

Q. Nobody on the Sunbeam side of the table, for example, is going to rely on the MAFCO side of the table to look out for Sunbeam's interest in this transaction, correct?

A. If by that you mean what we said before about advice, that's absolutely right. On the other hand, when you have a transaction like this, there has to be some level of trust across the table. And in that kind of a case, there are many deals that are walked away from because one side doesn't trust the other. But because information is provided, one has to establish some trust. So in terms of relying upon information, yeah, I would think there would have to be.

Q. Let's take it one step at a time. You taught about something called self-interested behavior, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. The Sunbeam side has its own particular incentives in any kind of deal like this, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And that would also be true on the MAFCO side? They would have their own desires to get something out of this transaction, correct?

A. That's true.

Q. And these guys are across the table and they negotiate to see where they can reach some common ground, that's self-interested behavior, right?

A. In our writings about self-interested behavior, we explicitly exclude the idea of lying and cheating.

Q. Well, I'm just asking, you, Dr. Emery, whether the people sitting on this side of the table are looking out for their interest and the people on the MAFCO side are functionally looking after their interest, too?

A. Certainly that is what I would expect.

Q. We're not asking about people lying to one another. I'm asking about who is doing what at the table and what their incentives are.

Let's go back to our information. You said that information pushed across the table from MAFCO over to the Sunbeam side typically is going to be scrutinized in a due diligence process, correct, to the extent it can be?

A. Both directions, yes.

Q. And that's because even -- although people may have the best of intentions, no one wants to go into a very complicated, expensive transaction without assuring itself that it's doing so on the right information?

A. Yeah.

Q. Because there's this thing called asymmetry of information, that's something you've written about?

A. I have written on that quite a bit.

Q. In terms of the relevance here, asymmetry means Sunbeam's side of the table knows a lot more about Sunbeam than the MAFCO/CPH side knows about Sunbeam?

A. That's correct.

Q. And MAFCO, on the CPH side of this transaction, they know a heck of a lot more about MAFCO and CPH than Sunbeam and its advisors, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. This process of due diligence is an effort to rectify or remedy this asymmetry and bring the two sides into a better understanding of each side's information?

A. The entire negotiation, including due diligence, but the whole broad contractual process would be a large effort to try to overcome asymmetric information. Try to be sure that they are sharing the information so they all understand what's going on, yes.

Q. So to the extent that one side were to give the other side some financial information, the other side would then take it and attempt to verify it as much as possible to see whether that's information they wish to act upon in this transaction, correct, typically?

A. Typically.

Q. That's the usual way these deals are done, right?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. One side will say: Let's say the MAFCO/CPH side, they put across the table a set of business projections, what they think they're going to do in their business in future years, how much money they're going to make. The Sunbeam side is going to do what it can to see whether these are reasonable projections, won't they?

A. Yes.

Q. They'll do due diligence, right?

A. Yes.

Q. They'll send the lawyers out to check what lawyers can check, right?

A. Yes.

Q. They'll have their investment bankers go and try and get the underlying facts that support the numbers so they can see whether these are reasonable projections, correct?

A. To the extent that they can get it, yes.

Q. And they may even get their accountants to look at the accounting issues to see if there's issues about accounting that makes the projections reasonable?

A. Yes.

Q. That's how it typically works, right?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. You didn't study whether it worked that way in this particular transaction, did you?

A. That's correct, I did not.

Q. In terms of what's typical, what's expected, that's the process as you would expect to have it unfold?

A. That's correct.

Q. You would not expect the process would be that MAFCO, for example, would give a bunch of financial information across the table and Sunbeam would just take those papers and say, thank you very much, we're going to act on these without checking, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. That would be extraordinary, wouldn't it?

A. That would be a surprise to me, yes.

Q. Never happened in your experience, has it?

A. Not in my experience.

Q. And that's why we do due diligence, right, because firms are going to want to remedy this disparity of information so they can act on the best information possible, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. In due diligence, isn't it true that in the typical case, Dr. Emery, as part of these merger transactions, the two sides will make an agreement that says, all right, to facilitate your getting good information about me, I'm going to give you the right to come in and inspect my books, my plants, my customers and you have to give me the right to do likewise at your company, isn't that a typical arrangement?

A. That would be a common arrangement.

Q. Since we know you have to verify this information and are not going to act just on what we tell you, we're going to remedy this asymmetry of information by having an open house, you come in and look at us and we'll look at you?

A. Understand that you can never completely remedy it, every effort would be reasonable.

Q. You'd open the door, say, come look at what you want to look at?

A. That would not be uncommon.

Q. In fact, that's the typical way it's done, there's a period of time during which both parties go to look?

A. That would be common.

Q. Is it also common, frankly, where one party expresses an unwillingness to let the other side look at something, it would not be unusual for the party not allowed to look to say, I don't want to go into this deal. If you're not willing to let me see these things, I'm walking away from the table?

A. That would also be a possible outcome.

Q. That would be something called a red flag, wouldn't it?

A. Well, there are a number of different things you could call it, but certainly a red flag would, yeah, that would be a reasonable thing to call it.

Q. I guess I just used the term, why don't we let you define that one.

Is "red flag" a term that's used in the financial community?

A. I think it's used in the same way it is in every day language, people understand red flag is a sort of a stop.

Q. Whoa, some problem here we better take a closer look?

A. Yes.

Q. So in other words, if one firm in a merger transaction said to the other firm, we won't let you look at our books, that would be a red flag saying, hmm, there might be some problem with these books, if they won't let us look at them, right?

A. That would certainly be a potential red flag.

Q. Now, you've testified about your experience as a finance professor, you know at least in general terms the kinds of information companies keep within their books and records?

A. In a general sense, yes.

Q. And so would you expect during due diligence that among the things there to be looked at would be the company's own internal financial statements, correct?

A. That would be common, yes.

Q. Are you familiar with a term called "interim financial statements"?

A. I think I understand what that would probably be.

Q. What does that mean to you?

A. That financial statements are typically done on a periodic basis, for example, every quarter. But the company along the way keeps track of things and could produce a set of financial statements that were between periods. And they would do a sort of a, an approximation, usually we would say those are unaudited typically. But they would produce them. That's what I would understand them to be.

Q. So just distinguishing here, Sunbeam, for example, on a yearly basis would have its accountant or its auditor Arthur Andersen review the books and records performance procedures, then issue an opinion as to whether the yearly statement was fair and accurate in all material respects, right?

A. Yes.

Q. And that would be an audit opinion, correct?

A. Right.

Q. That would be true on the other side for Ernst and Young on the MAFCO/CPH side?

A. Yes.

Q. So there would be an outside accountant brought in to look at the books and records, look at financial statement and satisfy itself that the books and records historically were properly recorded in accordance with something called Generally Accepted Accounting Principles?

A. That's correct.

Q. But between these periods, between these yearly periods, there's no audit, for example, of each month of results the company records internally, correct?

A. That's my -- that would be common, right, to not have audited, right.

Q. But still companies need to track what they're doing more frequently than on a yearly basis, right?

A. Yes.

Q. For example, isn't it important for a company to know in any given month how much it sold?

A. I would think so.

Q. Wouldn't it be the case that a company would typically have a monthly financial statement that said to its management, here's how much we sold, here's how much it cost us to sell that product, here's the profit that we were running for that month, recognizing this wasn't our final financial statement, subject to audit?

A. Right.

Q. That's the way big companies typically work?

A. Well, they make projections and they measure them against projections as they go and internally keep track of these things.

Q. So you would expect there would be a monthly so-called interim financial statement available for people to review if people wanted to review it?

A. Certainly a monthly would be reasonable. Some do it perhaps more frequently even.

Q. More frequently. But in other words, from your experience, you certainly expect at least a monthly financial statement to be there?

A. It wouldn't be unheard of to not have that, but that would be my expectation.

Q. That would be the usual case?

A. I would think so.

Q. Did you know whether both on the MAFCO and Sunbeam side they did both, in fact, have monthly financial statements?

A. No, we said earlier I did not examine that part of the transaction.

Q. But that's something you would expect?

A. That would be not unusual, yes.

Q. That would be the sort of thing that would be checked in the due diligence process to see how the company was actually doing in the most current month, correct?

A. Certainly I would think so.

Q. Right. There would be this historical information that would tell you about the sort of more distant past where the auditors had actually gone in and checked, that would be one thing you'd look at, right?

A. I'm sorry, say that again.

Q. You talked about these audited financial statements for a past period, right, because those go back some time and the audit opinion comes out after it's closed?

A. Right.

Q. Aren't you going to want to have the most accurate, up-to-the-date information about how the company is doing?

A. I would certainly want the most accurate information.

Q. And you'd want to see what they were recording in their own books and records in terms of sales, expenses, profits, correct?

A. To the extent feasible, yes.

Q. Well, if -- let's say if the MAFCO side had interim financial statements and these parties were contemplating a merger, you would expect the Sunbeam side to say, I want to see your most recent interim financial statements to see how you're doing?

A. Yeah, that wouldn't surprise me at all.

Q. In fact, that would be the usual way it would proceed?

A. I think that would be common.

Q. In fact, it would be extraordinary if somebody didn't want to see the most recent results, correct?

A. Yeah, but there may be other things they would want to see, too.

Q. Put aside other things. I'm saying it would be extraordinary, would it not, Dr. Emery, if one side didn't even want to see what the other side's most recent interim financial statements showed about its performance?

A. Wouldn't seem usual to me.

Q. Would it mean it was unusual?

A. It's the extra qualifier, yeah, it's a surprise, it would be a surprise, yeah.

Q. It would be odd?

A. Yeah.

Q. It would be odd, okay.

And if you looked at interim financial statements, for example, that would show you the most recent sales trends, in other words, how much they were selling most recently, whether it was going up or down from what people projected, right?

A. Typically you would try to extract out that from the statements, yes.

Q. Well, for example, you talked about in your direct testimony the importance of projections, right?

A. Yes.

Q. And that's something that the company tells some group of people, maybe the public, about what the company is expecting to do over a particular period, correct?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. Let's say we have company A here. And company A says, for our first three months of this year, 2005, we expect to sell 100 million dollars worth of product. And that's the projection. That's what you say influences how the world, the market looks at a company?

A. Yes.

Q. Let's say in our company A example we're two months -- three months constitutes a quarter, correct?

A. Say that again.

Q. A three-month period is typically referred to as a quarter in business?

A. Yes.

Q. So the first quarter of 2005 would be January, February, March?

A. If it's on a calendar year basis, that's correct.

Q. So let's say for first quarter of 2005 company A says, we're going to sell 100 million dollars worth of goods.

A. Correct.

Q. Let's say we're two months into the quarter and you're talking around the table about a merger. And somebody wants to know -- let me back up.

Company B is certainly going to want to know how company A is doing in terms of its projection, correct?

A. I would think so.

Q. Sure. So company B is going to ask company A, give me your January and February interim financials so I can see whether you're really selling enough to make this 100 million dollars projection, correct?

A. That would seem like a reasonable thing.

Q. That would be the typical thing, right?

A. I would think so.

Q. It would be odd not to ask for that, wouldn't it? It would raise a red flag, wouldn't it?

A. If you didn't ask, it would be your choice, that wouldn't be the red flag.

Q. But it would suggest that information wasn't important to you, wouldn't it?

A. No.

Q. Well, if it's the usual case that B is going to want to know about A's sales for the first quarter, if B knew that A had interim financials, it would tell it -- is it your testimony, Dr. Emery, that if B didn't even want to see that, didn't even want to see the actual information, is it your testimony that that information was still something important to B?

A. I'm sorry.

Q. I've lost the question. Bad question, I apologize.

I'm just asking you, sir, if A's first three-month quarter, if its first two months of sales are there to be seen, in other words, they're there for the asking, interim financials, and B says, I don't even want to look at that, knowing it's there to be seen. Wouldn't that suggest to you, Dr. Emery, that B didn't care about that information?

A. Not necessarily. I mean, I don't know the specifics about all of the different things in the way information was gathered. I testified just now that it would be common for them to ask for that. And if A was unwilling to provide them, we talked about that being a red flag. But I don't see how B not asking for something is a red flag. I mean, that's B's choice. B decides what information they want to gather.

And you know, you're focusing on one particular piece of information. There are many different sources of information that might provide the same thing. And I was not privy to this and I didn't study all the different things in this one, so I don't know what other things might be available.

Q. Well, I'm just doing this particular hypothetical and I'm not asking you to consider other things that might be available. One last question, then we'll move on.

Just want to make sure I understand your answer.

If B knows that A has actual operating results for January and February of 2005, and B chooses not to get that information, doesn't that suggest to you that B doesn't care about that information?

A. No, it doesn't.

Q. Dr. Emery, if one looked at the actual books and records of the company, you could judge the way the company was, in fact, recording its sales, couldn't you?

A. Not necessarily.

Q. Give you a much better --

A. These things are pretty complex. I'm careful to point out that I'm not an accountant.

Q. So you wouldn't know, right?

A. I know that there's been enough fraud in the last 10 years for me to be aware that smarter people than I am have been fooled. So I wouldn't pretend to say, well, you know, I could extract this information out by just looking at a set of books.

Q. You're not an accountants?

A. I'm not an accountant.

Q. And you're not an auditor?

A. No.

Q. But you've given testimony about some of those things in your direct exam?

A. Excuse me?

Q. You've given testimony about some of those things in your direct exam?

A. From the finance point of view, from the business point of view.

Q. From a finance point of view, to the extent that one company wanted to see how another company was, for example, recording revenues, it could take its own accounting experts and go look at the same books and records of the other company in order to see whether there was an issue there, correct?

A. To the extent that it was possible, it couldn't necessarily get everything, but it certainly could go and look, yes.

Q. So, for example, in our two sides of the table here, if you wanted to know how Sunbeam was recording its revenue and whether there were accounting issues, you could send Ernst and Young in to actually look at the accounting, an expert accounting firm to see whether there was any question they saw in terms of things like bill and hold sales or channel stuffing, correct?

A. Certainly if they agreed to that, that would be a possibility, yeah.

Q. Right. And if the Sunbeam side didn't agree to that, the MAFCO side could walk away from the deal, right?

A. Yes.

Q. And you would expect that where there were significant issues regarding accounting or how people were recording their revenues or their profits, you would expect in this kind of complicated transaction, as part of due diligence, that the experts on one side of the table would go take a look at the issues in which they were expert on the other, correct?

A. Seems reasonable, yes, typical.

Q. That would be right, that's what you would expect? Yes?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, in addition to what's actually in the books and records of the company, oftentimes it's necessary to talk to customers of the company to get a sense of how the company is doing, correct?

A. Those are possible things you would do.

Q. In other words, for example, let's say a company has a few very, very large and powerful customers. Are you with me so far?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. Let's say the company's future success really depended on how the customers viewed the company. Wouldn't you expect as part of due diligence -- let's go back to A and B -- that A would want to talk to B's biggest customers to see how the customers viewed B before proceeding with the transaction?

A. That would not be -- that would be a reasonable thing to do.

Q. That's what you would expect to happen, wouldn't you?

A. I think what we're getting into is that any given thing might be a reasonable thing to do, but sometimes there are multiple ways to gather information. And so I'm uncomfortable saying, yes, a person should be doing this when, in fact, they might be doing something else to accomplish exactly the same thing, to gather exactly the same information.

If they've satisfied themselves they gathered the information, then they may or may not choose to do it in that way. I think that's where I'm getting hung up is that they have to do a particular thing.

Q. Well --

A. That information is important information that I think would be reasonable to want to gather.

Q. Again, I'm not trying to make this any harder than it looks.

My question is just if B has some limited number of customers that are very important to B, wouldn't you expect, in the usual transaction, a merger transaction between A and B, A is going to want to learn what the customers think?

A. Yes.

Q. And that would be part of due diligence, right?

A. Right.

Q. And isn't it true that due diligence becomes even more important than perhaps it ordinarily would be if there are so-called, quote, red flags out that raise questions about a particular company?

A. The due diligence is -- I mean, there may be the potential for fraud in almost any case. So I think due diligence is an important thing to do.

Q. Well --

A. I'm not sure there's a priority there in terms of saying it's more important or that you would ignore it in some case.

Q. In other words, you think it should be a thorough and complete process even without red flags?

A. I think, as I testified in my deposition, that parties need to do the things that make them comfortable that they've done everything reasonable to satisfy themselves with the situation.

Q. And that may differ from party to party, correct?

A. People make individual decisions about it.

Q. In other words, A's needs for information in terms of B's business may be different from B's needs for information from A?

A. They're two different positions. If A were in B's case, A might gather exactly what B gathered or not. But certainly A and B are in different situations, so they can gather different information.

Q. Exactly, because A and B don't necessarily look at the world the same way, correct?

A. One company is acquiring the other. So being the acquired versus acquiring requires two different things.

Q. A and B might also think different information had different significance, correct?

A. That's possible, yes.

Q. In other words, in our example there's not a checklist that says, this is the important information and it's going to be the same on both sides, correct?

A. I agree, yes.

Q. A will have its own list of what it considers is important that it will check out, correct? B will have its list of what it considers important that it will check out, correct?

A. It will have its methods.

Q. And the information, in addition to methods, it will have the substance that it wants to check out, right? It will have the things it wants to know about?

A. Things that most concern it, yes.

Q. Those things may be different, A may be very interested in knowing B's customers. B may not have any interest in A's customers?

A. I think that's possible.

Q. In other words, the due diligence is tailored to that which the parties find important to them, correct?

A. I think any situation that is this complex has that element. You can't do everything, I guess, so you make choices about what you do.

Q. Would you agree with me, though, that the due diligence process typically in the ordinary merger type transaction is tailored to what each of the parties considers important to it?

A. It is tailored to the situation. I'm uncomfortable with the idea of thinking that there would be something somebody wouldn't care about. There's information that might involve them that they wouldn't care about, I think that's where I'm hung up.

Q. In other words, in your view every bit of information of any sort is going to be of equal significance to the two sides?

A. I didn't say equal significance, but you can say something may be more significant than something else, but that's different than saying that something, some piece of information is I don't care about it or worthless. That's a different -- a relative statement I agree with, but when you get down to saying that there's information that they simply don't care about.

Q. Let me give you an example. Let's say A in my example is seeking to acquire B, okay?

A. Okay.

Q. And B has these customers we're talking about, right?

A. Okay.

Q. And we've talked about how A would ordinarily want to know how B's customers viewed B if they were going to be ongoing customers?

A. Right.

Q. Let's say A instead is planning to close B down, not even planning to use its operations, not planning to have any sales to these particular customers and is buying B to get a tax loss, for example, is not going to operate the company.

Would the diligence be different there regarding B's customers?

A. It could be, but that's a really good example of what I was just saying.

I interpret you wanting me to say that they wouldn't care about what the customers think. And what I'm saying is, no, even in that case they would be interested in having that information. They may not work as hard to get the information because it would be a lower priority. But I can imagine a case where they got the information, found out what the customers said and actually changed their minds about what they were going to do, said, my gosh, you know, we're not going to shut it down for tax reasons, we're going to run it.

So in terms of information, I'm uncomfortable saying, well, you just don't care, wouldn't pay any attention to it.

I'm certainly comfortable saying that if your main purpose was to acquire just the assets, and we talked about this, why you might want to acquire the assets and liquidate, sell off the assets in a valuation technique. If you want to do that, then I can understand that the customer's view would be less important. But there's no way that I would say that it's irrelevant or you wouldn't care about it. It would be a question of how hard you would work maybe to gather that information.

Q. Aren't these kinds of transactions oftentimes in a fairly compressed period of time with merger transactions?

A. Well, I guess it depends what you mean by compressed. I mean, in a business sense, what you and I might think was compressed the general public wouldn't think was particularly compressed. These things go on forever it seems like.

Q. Isn't it often the case that transactions are initiated and closed within a period of weeks or months?

A. Certainly they could be closed within a period of weeks or months.

Q. To the extent that that's your time period, you have to prioritize in terms of what your doing in due diligence?

A. Absolutely.

Q. You would expect that lawyers would be involved in any due diligence process, correct?

A. Certainly.

Q. But they would have to give priority to the things that were most important?

A. That's what we said about how much they cost. You don't want to spend more than the deal is worth.

Q. And the investment bankers, they would be involved in the due diligence process, too, would they not?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. They too would be focusing on what the client considered most important?

A. I believe that's what we said. They would prioritize.

Q. Same with the accountants, they would be involved in the due diligence checking accounting issues, but, again, on a priority basis?

A. I think that's correct.

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, this might be a good time to take our lunch.

THE COURT: Great.

It's time for lunch. We'll see you at 1:30. We still won't talk to you, don't talk about the case. It's a beautiful day outside, enjoy your lunch.

(Jury exits courtroom.)

THE COURT: Okay. Thanks.

Mr. Hansen, how much longer do you think you have, do you know?

MR. HANSEN: Probably another hour, Your Honor.

THE COURT: That's fine. Okay, we'll be back a couple minutes before 1:30 then.

MR. SOLOVY: Your Honor, can I give you our motion on deposition designations? We can either do it at 5 or tomorrow.

MR. HANSEN: We'd like to do it tomorrow, Your Honor.

THE COURT: That should be fine. The only problem tomorrow is we need to leave by about misrepresentation if it actually knew that the misrepresentation was false or if its falsity was obvious. And it may not recover if it did not actually rely on the misrepresentation.

Consequently, evidence about the investigation conducted by CPH may be relevant to your determination of whether CPH knew the statements by Sunbeam and Morgan Stanley were false or if their falsity was obvious and whether CPH actually relied on any misrepresentation.

Consequently, the evidence about any investigation which CPH did or did not conduct should be considered by you only for these issues.

Okay?

Okay. Where's Dr. Emery? Okay. Come on up, sir. And I'll remind you you're still under oath. Thank you, sir.

MR. HANSEN: May I proceed, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Yes, sir.

RESUMED CROSS-EXAMINATION

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Dr. Emery, good afternoon.

A. Good afternoon, Mr. Hansen.

Q. I'm going to try and speak a little more slowly this afternoon so as not to make our poor reporter have to do gymnastics with her fingers. I apologize if I was too fast this morning.

Doctor, you got a nice lunch, I hope.

A. I did.

Q. You spent it with Mr. Scarola and members of the plaintiff's team?

A. I did.

Q. But you didn't talk about the case?

A. No, we did not.

Q. Dr. Emery, you've spoken at some length in your prior testimony on direct examination about the subject of public information. Do you recall that testimony?

A. I believe so, yes.

Q. The public perception of Sunbeam back in 1997, 1998?

A. Yes.

Q. And you talked about that in two components, didn't you? You talked about what stock analysts were thinking and writing, correct?

A. Yes, I talked about that.

Q. And you also talked about what was being written in the newspapers or other publications about Sunbeam, correct?

A. I don't recall using the newspaper particularly. There were press releases, which are different, sometimes different than the newspapers. I guess we did some of that. I don't remember testifying about that.

Q. Well, didn't you say there were press reports or articles written by Mr. Dunlap and Sunbeam that you considered?

A. I don't recall. I may have, but I don't recall.

Q. And, in fact, part of your testimony about the public perception of Sunbeam, you did as part of your work review a number of articles written in the Popular Press; true?

A. I did some, yes.

Q. And the articles that you relied on in doing that work were supplied to you by the lawyers for the plaintiff in this case, correct?

A. No, that's not correct.

Q. Tell me why it isn't.

A. We did an independent investigation, and I directed research analysts to go to the public record and discover what was available at that time.

Q. And that included what was available in the Popular Press, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. In other words, you didn't want to give a misleading picture of what the public perception of Sunbeam and Mr. Dunlap were by choosing only the favorable articles, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. That would have been misleading, wouldn't it?

A. We searched extensively to find everything we could reasonably find without regard to whether it was positive or negative on any particular point.

Q. Because you wanted to give a fair summary of what the good and the bad was out there, correct?

A. I was trying to find what I felt the consensus was and what the perhaps range of consensus or range of opinion was about Sunbeam at that time, yes.

Q. All the good, all the bad, correct, considered fairly by you?

A. All that was available, yes.

Q. Now let's start with the analysts. Stock market analysts work for brokerage houses typically, don't they?

A. Yes, typically they do.

Q. So they perform something of a research function to support the efforts of the people who sell the stocks to customers?

A. Right, the ones we're talking about are referred to as sell side analysts.

Q. And there are a lot of them, are there not?

A. Yeah, there's quite a number of sell side analysts.

Q. And they don't speak with a single voice, do they?

A. That's correct, they do not.

Q. They are independent, are they not?

A. Within as I understand that term, yes.

Q. Well, they don't go together to a convention and sit around a room like the college of cardinals in Rome and agree to a recommendation and that becomes the consensus recommendation, correct?

A. No, but you might say there's -- sometimes you can see contagion in what they're saying. Sometimes they read each other's things. You can track statistically such sort of following, some herding is what we refer to that as.

Q. Herding?

A. And that's been documented.

Q. Herding like animals, like cows?

A. Uh-huh, moving together.

Q. And, in fact, back in the '90s wasn't the head of the SEC a guy named Arthur Levin?

A. He was.

Q. Were you aware of Mr. Levin's public remarks that back in that period of our country's financial history 90 percent of all analyst reports were recommending the buying of the stocks in the report?

A. I may have heard that, yes. I don't -- I don't specifically recall, but that seems quite possible.

Q. Is that consistent with your view of how analysts were functioning back in the late '90s, they were overwhelmingly in favor of buying the stocks they were researching and reporting on?

A. During that time period, there were more buy recommendations than there were sell recommendations. But herding doesn't refer to a direction. It doesn't say all buy or all sell. It could be anything. It could be herding towards neutral.

Q. Were you also aware that Mr. Levin said that a sell recommendation in the late '90s was about as rare as a Barbara Streisand concert?

A. I don't recall that phrase. I think there were quite a few more than concerts.

Q. There are a number of different analysts, and their views may be different over time, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And they have a responsibility not to simply just parrot what the company says but exercise their own independent judgment, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. In other words, they're not just cheerleaders for the company, they're at least in theory supposed to analyze information, reach their own recommendation?

A. Yes.

Q. And would it be fair to say that there were a number of different views of Sunbeam even within the analyst community back in the late 1990s?

A. It depends what you mean by a number of different views. We were not able -- I did not come across any sell recommendations for Sunbeam in that time, so it depends if you mean there were buy and sell. I didn't find any. It's not to say that there couldn't have been any, but all of the sources that we checked in the 50 or 60 reports that we looked at, I don't believe we ever saw one that said sell or even was worse than neutral.

Q. Well, that wouldn't be surprising at a time when 90 percent of all recommendations were buy recommendation, would it, all recommendations for all stock?

A. If 90 percent were buy recommendations, that means 10 percent would have been sell recommendations. So I guess if you're saying that if it's only 10 percent, it can't happen, I don't agree. You certainly could be in that 10 percent. 10 percent of the recommendations were sell recommendations.

Q. In the late 1990s Mr. Dunlap of Sunbeam was a very controversial al figure, wasn't he?

A. Following this, he became especially controversial.

Q. Let's say the latter part of 1997 through the first part of 1998 isn't it true that the items discussed in your report, there was a matter of controversy surrounding Mr. Dunlap as a manager of companies?

A. There was some controversy, as there is frequently, surrounding public figures.

Q. Wasn't -- didn't he generate a lot of press reports, a lot of press attention?

A. I'd have to go back and see compared to other people. He certainly was a colorful figure.

Q. Colorful in the sense he would do sort of offbeat things in the public, wouldn't he?

A. Tell you the truth, I don't recall specifics, doing things in public, funny ties. I don't recall any of that. I recall that there was -- that he seemed to have an aspect to him that, you know, people noticed. And, yes, he was more in the news than, say, some other CEOs that I could mention, but, you know... There were CEOs are in the news sometimes. I mean, you know, there are -- that does happen.

Q. Well, in 1997, in any of the materials you saw, did you see photographs of Mr. Dunlap, for example, wearing ammunition bandoliers and a Rambo style headdress?

A. No, actually I don't recall seeing that.

Q. Wasn't that, in fact, the cover picture of a book about Mr. Dunlap at that time?

A. I don't recall looking at that book.

Q. And Mr. Dunlap courted publicity, didn't he? He was somebody who went out and wanted to get publicity?

A. I have no idea what his motives were, whether he was seeking it or shunning it.

Q. Now there was an analyst -- Just sticking with analysts for a minute, are you familiar with an analyst who you commented upon or at least you incorporate in your report by the name of Andrew Shore?

A. I recall Andrew Shores being in there.

Q. Do you recall that Mr. Shore in January of 1998 claimed that Sunbeam was a, quote, very risky story?

MR. SCAROLA: Excuse me, Your Honor. I object on the basis of hearsay. Although I have no objection to the introduction of any of the analyst reports themselves, I object to quoting from a report that is not admitted into evidence, but no objection to the admission into evidence.

THE COURT: What's the response to the objection?

MR. HANSEN: Response is I'm asking the witness about information. I don't believe a speaking objection is appropriate here, Your Honor. I believe the testimony --

THE COURT: Why don't you guys come on up.

SIDE BAR CONFERENCE:

THE COURT: I mean, my concern is you've asked a series of questions that assume facts that aren't in evidence. And at some point I may need to instruct the jury that the question is not evidence. But to the extent that we're doing that again and allowing a question to be evidence, I think it is asking for hearsay to say have you heard about this hearsay statement.

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, it's not hearsay. It's not offered for its truth. The fact is this witness purported to talk about analyst consensus and analyst views, all of which are hearsay. The only way that you can impeach that testimony is to show there were other things that he didn't consider or that he considered and rejected.

And the document from Mr. Shore, I can't put in evidence at this point, Your Honor, I'm not permitted to.

THE COURT: I think they're saying they don't object.

MR. SCAROLA: We don't.

MR. HANSEN: I can't put it in evidence now. And I don't want to do it the way Mr. Scarola wants me to do it. I want to do it a different way, which is to elicit from the witness that there were negative things said about the company. If he agrees with me, we move on. If he doesn't, I'll put the report before him, and we'll proceed that way. I don't believe that Mr. Scarola should be able to tell me I have to do it the way he wants.

THE COURT: What you want to do is ask him whether -- what he knew of certain negative reports?

MR. HANSEN: Was he aware that Mr. Shore had given such a report. My guess is he will say, yes, because this is material incorporated into his own report. I don't believe I should have to be required to take the time of going through the entire report or doing what Mr. Scarola wants. If he says he doesn't, then I'll do it another way. But that's a matter that he incorporated in his report as materials he relied on, and I believe I'm entitled to elicit there were negative things said about Sunbeam as opposed to some hallelujah chorus about Dunlap and Sunbeam.

THE COURT: I'm sorry. What's the response again?

MR. SCAROLA: I have no objection to asking are you aware of negative things that were said. I do object to quoting from documents that are not in evidence. I don't object to putting the documents in evidence. Then he can quote from them all he wants. I am not standing on the formality that we are not in his case and he, therefore, can not put in evidence. He can put the documents in evidence. He just should not be quoting from documents or purporting to quote from documents that are not in evidence.

THE COURT: I would agree at a minimum it's hearsay within hearsay. I think you're asking him does he know what this document says rather than --

MR. HANSEN: I'm not, Your Honor. This is a misrepresentation -- Mr. Shore was making this kind of misrepresentation --

THE COURT: Whether you're saying are you aware of Shore's statement, you want to put the content of the statement in front of the jury orally, and I think that's what's wrong. So, you know -- and I think I probably need to instruct the jury just globally, and I'm sure we'll do it many times on both sides of the case, that a question is not evidence.

MR. HANSEN: This is cross-examination of the other side's witness. This is not hearsay. He is talking about a public perception. Public perception is informed by statements made.

THE COURT: You're attempting to place the content of the statement in front of the jury by the question is what you're trying to do.

MR. HANSEN: I'm asking the witness if he was aware of this. He clearly is aware.

THE COURT: It's still hearsay within hearsay.

MR. HANSEN: Not offered for the truth.

THE COURT: I understand you disagree. You can ask him does he know of this statement, does he know of this statement. You can't orally by your question put the content of the statement in front of the jury because that's hearsay within hearsay. Even if you're not offering it for the truth of the matter, you're orally saying what a document says.

MR. HANSEN: I'll take it out of quotes and say were you aware that Mr. Shore purported that Sunbeam was a risky story.

THE COURT: Then still the document needs to be in evidence.

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, I waive my directed verdict motion by offering documents into evidence. I don't care if Mr. Scarola says it's okay. I can't offer evidence at this point. That would be unfair and a trap for me.

THE COURT: I'm sure plaintiff will say that they will not deem it a waiver of any motion for directed verdict. Otherwise, you can just simply ask him by analyst and when you open your case, you can put it in.

MR. SCAROLA: I will expressly say that the offering of evidence, of this evidence will not constitute a waiver of their motion for directed verdict.

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, I still believe, with all respect, I should be entitled to ask him if he was aware as part of his work of negative statements made by analysts.

THE COURT: I understand that to be your position.

MR. HANSEN: I can't ask him that?

THE COURT: You can ask him if he was aware of negative statements. What you're trying to do with your question is trying to place oral testimony in front of the jury. That's essentially what you're doing.

MR. HANSEN: No. If he's aware of it. He's an expert. Experts can rely on hearsay. This is hearsay an expert can consider.

THE COURT: I understand you disagree.

MR. IANNO: And if he says that, can we then say what was the statement? That's not being offered for the truth of the matter.

THE COURT: Yeah, I think that's fair.

END OF SIDE BAR.

THE COURT: Let me state the obvious. A question is not evidence. Evidence comes from the witnesses. Do you understand the difference? Okay. Great.

Go ahead, Mr. Hansen.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. We were talking about Mr. Shore, Dr. Emery. Were you aware of what Mr. Shore said about Sunbeam in early 1998?

A. Honestly, I probably read over 50 reports, and I don't remember every one of them. If you want to show me the report, we can go back through it.

Q. Well, do you remember that Mr. Shore had negative things about Sunbeam?

A. I remember that a good number of analyst reports in this case, and in most cases, have both positive and negative things to say about a company. It's somewhat unusual for them to be nothing negative. What was the overall recommendation? I don't recall that.

Q. In 1997, Dr. Emery, isn't it true that there were red flags and warning signs in the public perception available to the public about Dunlap and Sunbeam?

A. There were some analyst reports that said, that mentioned the term "red flags" and noted that there were some people who took a wait and see attitude. In fact, there were some report -- there were some analysts who said explicitly they would take a wait and see attitude and then subsequently raised their recommendation. For example, I think it was the Buckingham Group, William Steel, I think was the name, and he, I think, said something about a wait and see in January, and then on March 24th of 1998, January '98, March 24th of '98, I believe he upgraded his recommendation from a neutral to a buy.

At any given time, as information comes in, there is movement. And nobody in that position wants to be caught completely off guard, and so frequently reports have a variety of things. And if we look into the report and pick out a particular sentence, you know, you could find in most reports something that's, you could construe as being negative.

Q. Dr. Emery, did you or your research assistants undertake an Internet search to try to find all of the articles, good and bad, about Sunbeam in the 1997/1998 period?

A. We used sources like Lexus Nexus, Wall Street Index, sources like that. We looked at Bloomberg, Reuter's and sources like that. These are public information sources, financial information to some extent. And we searched for things that were relevant, yes.

Q. Are you familiar with the business publication Barron's?

A. Yes.

Q. That's a fairly influential business publication?

A. Among several, yes.

Q. It's relied upon in the business community?

A. As is the New York Times, Wall Street Journal, Washington Post.

Q. And Barron's is, in fact, published by the Dow Jones company which also publishes the Wall Street Journal?

A. Yes.

Q. And you've included a number of Barron's articles in your report as materials you've relied upon?

A. Okay.

Q. Were you aware that Mr. Perelman, the owner of the plaintiff in this case, had a clipping service in 1997/98 that included clippings from Barron's?

A. I was not aware that he had such a service.

Q. Isn't it true, sir, in January 1997 Barron's published an article about Dunlap and Sunbeam that covered all the things you talked about this morning in terms of the challenged practices of Sunbeam? I'll put a copy in front of Mr. Scarola and a copy in front of you.

MR. HANSEN: And per Mr. Scarola's offer, we move that into evidence as long as we preserve our rights for directed verdict.

MR. SCAROLA: No objection.

THE COURT: And what number was that?

MR. HANSEN: 199.

THE COURT: So that would be in evidence.

THE CLERK: Defendant's 199.

(Defendant's Exhibit No. 199 in evidence.)

THE COURT: Do you have an extra copy for me?

MR. HANSEN: Yes, Your Honor.

THE COURT: And you gave one to the clerk?

MR. HANSEN: Yes, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Thank you very much.

MR. HANSEN: Thank you, Your Honor.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Dr. Emery, I'll give you a moment to review it. My question would be are you familiar with that article from your work?

THE COURT: While he's looking at that, all the items in evidence you'll have with you during your deliberations. I don't want to scare you that you have to memorize them now, but you should definitely look at them while they're displayed to you.

THE WITNESS: I can't say that I recall this particular article or much about it. There's a good chance that I did read it, look it over and pull out something from it in terms of ideas, but I honestly, I don't, I don't have specific memory of this article.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Dr. Emery, do you believe this is one of the -articles you listed in your report as materials you relied on?

A. I don't recall off the top of my head, no. I mean, we could check the record. If it was, it was.

Q. I'll represent to you that we can't find it, but I'll give you your report if you'd like to double-check. Would you like the opportunity to double-check?

A. If it's listed as a source? It's -- I don't need to. I don't recall whether it is or not. If you'd like me to, we can check.

Q. This is a -- why don't I give you the chance.

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, may I approach?

THE WITNESS: Yes.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. I'm going to hand you MS 910A, which is part of your report that contains the list of sources relied upon. Using the Bates numbers at the bottom of the page, please check to see whether this is a document that you have included in your thinking or relied upon as part of your work.

MR. SCAROLA: Your Honor, if it helps to facilitate this in any way and counsel represents that these Bates stamped numbers are not on Appendix B, which lists Bates stamped numbers, I'd be happy to stipulate to that just to save some time. If we have that affirmative representation from counsel, I'll accept that representation.

MR. HANSEN: Yes, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay. That's fine. So that's established, then, that it is not listed. Thank you.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. This was a cover story in Barron's in June of 1997, correct, Dr. Emery?

A. You say it was.

Q. Cover stories are among the most prominent story in any given publication, right?

A. Right.

Q. And this certainly would be the sort of information that you would want to consider when doing a survey of what the public perception of Sunbeam and Mr. Dunlap was in 1997, correct?

A. Not necessarily. This is the Popular Press. This has a popular element to it. It would not be possible for us to, you know, for my research assistants to have gotten everything that was out there. It would not have been possible for me to read everything and include everything, and just because it wasn't relied upon doesn't mean I didn't look at it. You know, we tried to list the things that we specifically relied on to produce that report where the report was aimed at understanding Sunbeam's fraud that they committed over that time period.

Q. Well, let me approach -- Dr. Emery, I'm going to give you a copy of MS 892. I'm sorry. MS 74, Morgan Stanley 74, and ask you do you recognize this Barron's article.

A. Again, I don't recall this specific article.

Q. I will represent to you that this does appear on the list of publications you relied on in doing your work.

A. Okay.

Q. Can we go to --

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, we offer this pursuant to Mr. Scarola's prior stipulation.

THE COURT: Any objection?

MR. SCAROLA: None.

THE COURT: Okay. I'm sorry. What number for Morgan Stanley?

MR. HANSEN: Number 74, Your Honor.

THE COURT: So that would be in evidence as well.

MR. SCAROLA: Your Honor, just so that the record is clear, we have no objection to the introduction of any of the 1997 or 1998 analyst reports, none.

(Defendant's Exhibit No. 74 in evidence.)

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Hansen. That's not material to what we're doing right now.

MR. HANSEN: 882. I have the deposition Exhibit.

THE COURT: It's number 882. I'm sorry.

MR. HANSEN: The second one was 882.

THE COURT: Okay.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Dr. Emery, I'd like you to go to the second page of 882, which is a document that you said was a basis for your opinion. You see the third paragraph?

MR. SCAROLA: Your Honor, may we identify the date of this publication, please?

MR. HANSEN: I was just about to do it when Dr. Emery was finished reading.

THE WITNESS: June 6th, 1998.

MR. SCAROLA: I'm sorry. June 6?

THE WITNESS: June 6, 1998.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Have you had a chance to read it?

A. Not the entire thing. I was trying to catch the date.

Q. Do you recognize this as one of the documents you relied on in giving us an opinion?

A. Specifically, no, but --

Q. Well, you'll have a chance to look at a break to check your list. On the third paragraph -- why don't you just read it aloud so we can make sure we all follow it.

A. "We can't say we are surprised by Sunbeam's current woes. In a cover story last year entitled Careful AI, we cast a skeptical eye at Dunlap's growth objectives in the low margin cutthroat small appliance industry. We also pointed out the yawning gap between Sunbeam's performance claims and reality. We took special note of Sunbeam's accounting gimmickry which appeared to have transmogrified through accounting wizardry the company's monster 1996 restructuring charge ($337 million before taxes) into 1997's eye-popping sales and earnings rebound. But to no avail, Wall Street remained impressed by Sunbeam's earnings."

They agree that in general the consensus was positive.

THE COURT: That wasn't the question pending.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Read the paragraph.

A. "Sunbeam's earnings and the stock continued to rise from a price of 37 at the time of the story."

Q. Now when you read this, Dr. Emery, you realized that here was Barron's essentially saying I told you so, we knew all along there were problems with Sunbeam, correct?

A. That's not unusual for people to say I told you so, whether they really did or not.

Q. That's what they were saying here, correct?

A. That's what they're saying here.

Q. And you saw that in your work for this case involving Barron's saying we wrote a story in June of 1997 that laid out the accounting fraud at Sunbeam, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And you didn't even go get that cover story to put it in your report, did you, yes or no?

A. No.

Q. Let's go to the report of 1997.

A. You say go to the report, the '97 report.

Q. I'm going to ask --

A. This is after the fact stuff.

Q. The June 1997 document we have before you, which is Exhibit 199, let's go through it to see what was in June of 1997 being predicted by Barron's.

Now do you have it in front of you, Doctor?

A. I do.

Q. Let's go to the bottom of the first page. If we could highlight this last paragraph, if we could, please. Now here's Barron's saying that Mr. Dunlap is a guy who posed during a book tour decked out in a Rambo headband with bandoliers and ammo criss-crossing his chest. That was indeed Mr. Dunlap's public persona, wasn't it?

A. That's what -- yeah. I mean, I guess that's true.

Q. Let's go to the next page, if we could, please, the middle paragraph stopping with, "There are lots of shorts..." The article continues, "The best is yet to come for shareholders, Dunlap insists." He goes on about estimates. And then it says, quote, "There are lots of shorts in Sunbeam now, but I wouldn't short me. That's a gamble I'd hate to take."

What is a short?

A. Short would refer to a short sale.

Q. Under what conditions do people make short -- actually, what is a short sale?

A. A short sale is where you sell stock you don't own.

Q. And that represents a prediction by the person who sells that the stock is likely to decrease in price so that you can then buy it at a lower price and make the difference between what you sold it at and what you then bought it at as profit?

A. If -- yes.

Q. It's a prediction that the stock is going to go down, correct?

A. It's an investment. It's essentially it's a mirror image of buying the stock long. So when you buy the stock, you hold a positive position. When you sell short, you hold a negative position.

Q. Well, when you buy a stock long, you're predicting it's going to go up in value and your investment is going to increase, correct?

A. I guess I'd quibble with the word "prediction." But, you know, you're making the investment because you believe it's a good investment, yes.

Q. And when you sell a stock short, you're predicting that the stock price, or you're hoping that the stock price is going to go down because that's the only way you're going to make money, right?

A. That's correct.

Q. If the stock goes up and you've sold it without owning it, you're going to have to buy it at the higher price, and that will result in a loss, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. So when Mr. Dunlap says there are a lot of shorts in Sunbeam now, doesn't that reflect the market perception that Mr. Dunlap's stock is, his Sunbeam stock has been pumped up or overvalued?

A. No, not necessarily. Virtually any stock of -- well-traded stock will have short sales against it. I mean, we could go and check for virtually any stock. There's a continuous short sale. So there's -- almost everything has shorts against it.

Q. There are a lot of shorts in Sunbeam?

A. The argument about what is a lot... I mean, I did not undertake an analysis to go and check exactly what that is. But I would have to do a comparative analysis based on volume and other things to decide what that -- whether I agree with that conclusion.

Q. Let's go to the top of the next page, if we could, please. And if we could highlight that, this, by the way, is all in the text of a magazine article that's available to the public through Barron's and Dow Jones, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. For 1997?

A. That's what I understand.

Q. Okay. They write -- why don't you read it for us, please, top of the page, first full paragraph...

A. "Finally the huge restructuring charge Sunbeam took last year raises quality of earnings issues. For such items as litigation and bad debts, the company took large reserves that potentially could be tapped to bolster future earnings. Sunbeam also took a $90 million inventory charge that could shore up profits and margins this year, and next as the goods are sold, a 13-percent first quarter sales jump lead to press reports of inventory stuffing to aid the top line. But Sunbeam denies any gimmickry."

Q. Inventory stuffing is the same thing as channel stuffing, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. That's where the manufacturer pushes product out to the customers when customers aren't ready to take it and records those sales as though they were sales as opposed to just parking them on the books?

A. Yes.

Q. And here's an article talking about that very practice?

A. Yes, that's true.

Q. They're talking about reserves in Barron's, aren't they?

A. Yes, they absolutely are.

Q. They're saying the company, this is the prior year, the company, in 1997, Barron's says Sunbeam took large reserves and as a result those reserves could shore up 1997 earnings, just what you talked about this morning, right?

A. That's exactly right, that they were saying that was a possibility.

Q. They said Sunbeam took a $90 million inventory charge that could shore up profit and margins this year, 1997 and next year, 1998 as the goods are sold, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. That's the very practice you talked about when Mr. Scarola examined you this morning?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. And it's, in fact, what happened to Sunbeam, correct?

A. Yes. The problem with the article is --

Q. Well, I'm not asking about the problem with the article. I'm just asking if that is what, in fact, happened. Was there use of reserves in a way that deflated the performance in 1996 and inflated the performance in 1997?

A. Yes, there was apparently one statement that that was what was going to happen.

Q. Continuing on with the paragraph beginning “Finally...”, “Finally, not even the best and brightest in housewares like Newell, the Brahn division of Gillette, and Black & Decker have attained 20-percent operating margins. We'd be laughed out of Wall Street if we made near the same claims of future performance that Dunlap has made, averse a top executive of Rival, a Kansas City based appliance maker, celebrated for the crock pot.”

So Mr. Dunlap was telling the world he could do a 20-percent operating margin that nobody else in his business was able to achieve, correct?

A. That's what this particular article said about the situation. But clearly there were other people who thought differently because certainly the analyst reports that said buy would have contradicted this.

Q. I'm just asking if what he was claiming was an operating performance that was inconsistent with the operating performance other companies in the same industry were able to achieve. That's what this says, right?

A. That's one quote from one executive at one company. And that's true in that one quote.

Q. And that quote raises the red flag as to what's going on in Sunbeam, doesn't it?

A. I dare say there's no event that ever happened in history that wasn't -- you couldn't go back and find somebody who had predicted it. Whether people understood what that prediction was is impossible. People make predictions all the time.

Q. So Barron's got it right, but it just happened to be one predictor in a sea of voices; is that what you're telling me?

A. It was one of, as I said, more than 50 analyst reports didn't have anything less than a neutral recommendation.

Q. Let's go to the page starting at the top of, “Whatever the truth...” and highlight the paragraph beginning, “Yet the numbers may not tell the whole story...” It's page seven, Dr. Emery, the fourth bullet point.

MR. HANSEN: A little higher, please.

You're cutting off the top, if you could. There we go.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Do you have that, Dr. Emery?

A. “Yet the numbers...” Yes.

Q. Read it for me, if you would.

A. “Yet the numbers may not tell the whole story. For one thing, some in the industry suspect that Sunbeam may have delayed some deliveries in its fourth quarter figuring the year had been trashed anyway and hoping to get off to a glowing start in '97. In any event, sales in the fourth quarter fell 5.4 percent. The company blames this on the poor condition of the old system.”

Q. Here we have Barron reporting that what Sunbeam had done in 1996 was to delay sending out products to customers because they figured '96 was a ruined year anyway. They'd rather push the deliveries into '97 even though they were '96 sales to make the disparity between the '96 loss and the '97 profit look greater, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And that's what you told us about this morning, correct?

A. What I testified was that the consensus, the overall consensus was positive.

Q. With all due respect, I'm asking you if you told us this morning that one of the problems at Sunbeam that kept the public from knowing what went on was they played around with when things got recognized, when revenue got recognized, true?

A. Yes.

Q. And here's Barron talking about that revenue recognition in an artificial way, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Let's go to the next paragraph, beginning, "The Wall Street Journal reported..."

A. Wall Street Journal reported, yes.

Q. I want to ask you to read that.

A. "The Wall Street Journal reported several instances of apparently sales loading or stuffing towards the end of the first quarter, including one case in which a Midwestern chain, Younkens, received a large shipment of merchandise long after the cancellation date on the order. It counted as a first quarter sales even though Younkens subsequently returned it."

Q. That's a specific allegation, is it not, of Sunbeam channel stuffing in order to recognize revenue that it shouldn't properly recognize because the customer didn't want the goods, correct?

A. It is.

Q. The next paragraph, "And the small appliance industry..."

A. "And the small appliance industry was abuzz of rumors by heavy discounting by Sunbeam to boost sales in the first quarter's waning weeks. A $90 million inventory write-down the company took in the fourth quarter as part of it's $337 million restructuring charge certainly gave it attitude to play let's make a deal later without impairing profits or margin."

Q. What's that telling us here is that in order to make it look like they were selling a lot of product in 1997 and make it look like they were doing really well, they would heavily discount the price of what they sold, and they would disguise the fact they were discounting by using these reserves, this $337 million cookie jar, if you will, to cover up the heavy discount, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. That's what is plain as day in Barron's, right?

A. That's what I testified in my testimony about.

Q. Public domain information in June of 1997, correct?

A. Public perception.

Q. Was this information available in the public domain to anyone who wanted to read the Barron's article in June of 1997?

A. It was, but what I testified was that there was a perception.

Q. Doctor, I just asked you whether the information was available.

A. Just what it says here.

Q. It's available, right? Information was available, yes?

A. Yeah.

Q. Continuing on, Doctor, let's go to the next page, actually carry-over sentence, "Certain balance sheet developments in the first quarter..." then carrying over to the carry-over paragraph, "Certain balance sheet developments in the first quarter also lend..." then go to the --

A. "... credence to the possibility of inventory stuffing. During the quarter, net accounts receivable zoomed to 296.7 million from $213.4 million at year-end. The company's explanation, some customers used Sunbeam's temporary inability to generate electronic invoices as an excuse to pay slowly."

Q. And the information conveyed here in this public article is that because Sunbeam is stuffing the inventory out to its customers when the customers don't want it, the accounts receivable or the balance of payments that are owed to Sunbeam from the customer is rising because the customers don't want to pay for products they haven't really ordered, correct?

A. That's what it says, yes.

Q. And anybody with any kind of familiarity with business would know that within seconds of reading that article right there, right?

A. Well, as I said before, this was not the only information available. So, you know, there are contradictory information. This contradicted some other information.

Q. Let's go to the next article, "The shear magnitude..."

A. "The shear magnitude of the 1996 structuring charge has engendered some skepticism. Companies can use big write-offs to burnish operating results in subsequent periods by shifting operating expenses from the periods in which they occur taking spurious inventory profits or building up large reserves that can be subsequently reversed into earnings."

Q. So what's happening here in this Barron's article is they have this $337 million cookie jar, that's the restructuring charge, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And they can use that to burnish their later operating results by shifting the operating expenses, say, for 1997, from the 1997 period they can take some kind of spurious inventory profits or other things, and they can take those reserves and put those into earnings, thus mask what the true performance is, right?

A. Absolutely. That's what I testified this morning. There was fraud.

Q. And here Barron's describing just what you testified to, correct?

A. Amongst many other people, yes.

Q. Let's go down to one more paragraph. And you don't have to read it. I'll read a couple. "Perhaps so, but close scrutiny of the chargeoffs yields some industry fodder for discussion. For example, buried in the charge is a $17.7 million boost to the company's litigation reserve."

Let me stop right there. What's a litigation reserve?

A. That would be a reserve like we talked about before, an anticipated expense. So, for example, when a company faces a lawsuit, if they think they're likely to lose the lawsuit, they well may put aside a significant amount of money in anticipation of paying that loss.

Q. So you essentially reserve the money because you may have to pay it, correct?

A. Right. That's what your expected payment is.

Q. So then it goes on, it says, "...which Kersh says..." Kersh was a chief financial officer at the time?

A. Yes.

Q. "...Kersh says reflects an adverse ruling by a court in early January related to a superfund liability."

That's an environmental clean-up issue?

A. Right.

Q. "Yet the ruling wasn't considered material enough to be mentioned specifically in either Sunbeam's latest 10-K or 10-Q which were both filed months after the event."

Tell us what a 10-K is.

A. I believe I testified that a 10-K is an annual set of financial statements filed with the SEC.

Q. And what's a 10-Q?

A. That's a quarterly such statement.

Q. So what Barron's is saying here is Sunbeam has gone ahead and booked this $17 million reserve, but, yet, they've not purported to the SEC in filings they have to make to a government agency about any problem that requires increasing litigation reserve, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Suspicious, right?

A. Put it in the context of how many other things were being said at the same time. I agree with you, after the fact you can always find somebody who has made a prediction.

Q. We're not after the fact here. We're standing here at Barron's in June of 1997.

A. No, this is after the fact. We know that this came true, that this was true. What we didn't know at the time, if we were the investment community, and if you look at all of the other things that were said at the time, the consensus of that opinion, which they say, be that as it may, Wall Street has embraced Dunlap's rosy scenario. That's what I testified to.

Q. Doctor, I'm just asking you, sir, if sitting there in June of 1997 and reading that Sunbeam has made up this litigation reserve for a lawsuit it didn't even see fit to disclose in either of its SEC filings, was it a suspicious fact that would constitute a red flag for someone who needed to know more?

A. If your question is if I had read this article at the time, would I have shorted Sunbeam at the time I read this article and said things were in trouble, I don't know that I would.

Q. That's not my question, Doctor.

MR. HANSEN: Objection. Move to strike.

THE COURT: Sustained. I'll ask you to disregard the last answer.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. I'm asking you a different question, with all respect. I'm asking you if reading in June of 1997 that Sunbeam had created a $17 million reserve for a lawsuit that it hadn't even seen fit to disclose in either of its SEC filings would have been a suspicious fact?

A. I believe the author of this article believes it was a suspicious fact, and that's why he reported it.

Q. I'm asking you, putting yourself in June of 1997 reading this article...

A. I would have to have a lot more information than just a hypothetical.

Q. On its own, though, that's a suspicious fact, you're creating a loss that you don't even disclose, right?

A. If you're looking at a 17, $18 million charge on a billion dollars of revenue, I don't know that. Maybe. It's certainly possible. But I can't -- without a lot more information, you wouldn't be able to say, a-ha.

Q. If a company came to you today and did exactly this, said we're going to put down $17 million for a lawsuit we haven't even seen fit to disclose, would you advise them to do that?

A. I can not answer that without more information. It simply depends.

Q. You can lie about a lawsuit? That's your testimony? You'd lie about a lawsuit you haven't disclosed? Say we need $17 million --

A. That's not what I said.

Q. "Or take the big jump in the allowance for doubtful accounts and cash discounts to $23.4 million in 1996 from 10.7 million in 1995 and $3 million in 1994. The size of the '96 charge, which is largely for bad debts, is curious given that the tidal wave of retailer bankruptcy involving such companies as Jamesway, Ames and Bradleys, had crested long before '96."

Here Barron is saying they've paid for the bad accounts even though the customers were in a better position as they were in prior years?

A. That's what it says.

Q. So that raises a red flag, doesn't it?

A. Taken individually highlighted, yes, you could say, sure, that's -- but in terms of the context of a large corporation, this author believed that things were suspicious, and this was one of a lot of authors who wrote about Sunbeam in that time period.

Q. This is pretty specific, isn't it?

A. It is. And it turned out it was absolutely correct.

Q. Let's go to the next paragraph. "By taking such large reserves in 1996, Sunbeam could cut its provisions in 1997 and 1998 or perhaps eliminate the expense all together. Bolstering operating income and redundant reserves could potentially have an even more powerful effect on earnings if they are ultimately..." quote "...'reversed'..." close quote "...and added to income," correct?

A. That's exactly what I testified about.

Q. That was the very problem that ultimately created the need to go back and restate Sunbeam's financials?

A. It was.

Q. And here's Barron's predicting it in June of 1997, correct?

A. This one author, yes.

Q. Let's go on to the next paragraph, please. Actually, before I finish that, the idea of reversing, I just want to make sure we all understand that, if you have a reserve account you created in 1996, that will make earnings less in 1996, correct?

A. Yes, that's what we said.

Q. In 1997, if you basically decide you don't need that reserve anymore, it's overstated, and you shrink it or cut it down, the amount by which you cut it down becomes money that you could put in your profits for that year, correct?

A. Right. I believe what I said was it moves profit forward in time.

Q. So you can manipulate your financial position to make '96 look worse by robbing profits from 1996?

A. Yes.

Q. And '97 look better by taking the '96 profits and putting them into '97?

A. I believe that's what I testified.

Q. Now, finally, "Sunbeam took a $92 million hit on property, plant and equipment and trademarks as part of the restructuring charge. Though some of this charge applied to assets of businesses the company is selling, the bulk applies to ongoing businesses."

Isn't it true, Dr. Emery, that what this refers to is the accounting rule that says you can't take an inventory write-off for ongoing operations; if you're going to take a write-off, it has to be for discontinued operations?

A. I'm not familiar with the rules. I know there are obsolete inventories that are possible under certain conditions, but I think the rule you're citing is generally the case.

Q. As from your business or finance understanding, you basically can't go out and write down the inventory or today's inventory on a business you're still engaged on. You can on a business you decide --

A. If you have obvious inventory, I suspect you could make a case and have that proved. I think as general rule one wouldn't do that.

Q. $92 million hit, most of it going for ongoing business, so it shouldn't be written down. That's what they're saying. If you're concerned about the accounting issue, one could certainly get an accountant to look at this, go into Sunbeam, actually see what the operations are for these write-downs and make a determination to see if these numbers are accurate, right?

A. I suspect the author did this.

Q. You suspect this Barron's author did just that?

A. What?

Q. You suspect this Barron's author --

A. It's quite possible he or she consulted with an accountant.

Q. It's so thorough and specific that they would almost have to do that, wouldn't they?

A. It's certainly -- it's believable to me, yeah.

Q. Let's go to the next page, the second paragraph. Since my voice is getting a little dry, would you mind, Dr. Emery, doing this one?

A. Where are we now?

Q. First full paragraph on page nine.

A. "But the boost...?"

Q. Yes.

A. "But the boost to earnings from 1996 restructuring charge will fade dramatically by next year. Thus, speed is of the essence for Dunlap to act on his plan to sell Sunbeam or find a juicy acquisition. And that's still the plan as reiterated at the company's annual meeting last week, though Dunlap said Sunbeam wasn't yet in discussions with any other company."

Q. So here we have Barron's saying all this up of numbers can only last so long. The restructuring charge will be extended by 1998. In other words, you won't be able to inflate your profits after 1998 with this cookie jar, right?

A. Right.

Q. So if your plan is to use these reserves to inflate your profits for '97 and '98, boost your stock price and then make an acquisition, you better do it before 1998 is over, correct?

A. That's what he's saying.

Q. That's what this article is exactly saying, isn't it?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. And that's exactly what you were talking about this morning, isn't it?

A. That's exactly what happened.

Q. Let's go to the next full paragraph, "It's unlikely, however, that he will be able to scare up as generous a buyer for Sunbeam as he did for Scott Paper."

Let me stop there. Scott paper was Mr. Dunlap's prior, quote, turnaround situation?

A. Yes.

Q. Isn't it true that there was in the public domain around this time many questions about whether Mr. Dunlap had done the accounting gimmickry at Scott Paper?

A. I can't verify that. My memory is not -- I mean, Scott Paper was a turnaround. I mean, Scott Paper did better after he had been there. I mean, you're saying was it a fraudulent turnaround like Sunbeam? It wasn't.

Q. I'm just saying wasn't there in the public mix of information in the summer of 1997 information that included claims that Scott Paper had, in fact, not been turned around and instead had been pumped up in an artificial way?

A. And as I said a moment ago, there's almost always a range of opinions. There's somebody who says something.

Q. Continuing on with what I didn't read, though, "At a current price of more than three times sales, Sunbeam's stock is selling at two to three times the level of most of its competitor shares and Barron is suggesting that Mr. Dunlap through these creative gimmicks or, as you say, fraud had managed to boost the share price of Sunbeam two to three times what similar company stock was selling at, correct, true?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Let's go to the paragraph beginning, "So..." skip down one more to, So it's more likely..." "So it's more likely, more than likely Dunlap will have to go the acquisition route, perhaps stalking a major player in the related housewares area such as Tupperware or Rubber Maid. Any such acquisition would be done in a manner that would combine the company's results before and after the merger under..." quote "...'pro forma accounting.'" "

Maybe we could stop right there. Can you tell us about pro forma accounting?

A. It would be projected. When you talk about pro forma statements, we're talking about forward looking to see if we did this, what would we look like.

Q. It goes on, "...nicely masking any shortfalls in the three-year goal of doubling sales and the like."

So what Barron's is saying there is the Dunlap plan is to have these goals he can't meet, these pumped up goals, but if he doesn't have an acquisition in time because the two companies will be combined in some form of accounting called pro forma, no one will really be able to tell how far short he's fallen, correct?

A. That's what I testified to.

Q. Very thing you said was the fraud right here in Barron's?

A. Absolutely. Yeah.

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, would right now be a good time for a break?

THE COURT: Sure, that would be fine. We still won't talk to you. You won't talk about the case. We will see you in about ten minutes. Bring in snacks, soda, coffee or tea if you like. Thanks.

(Jury left the courtroom.)

MR. SOLOVY: Your Honor, you asked the question on the confidentiality issue.

THE COURT: Oh, yes.

MR. SOLOVY: I went back and looked at that. I hate to give you this big pile of transcript.

THE COURT: You've found some things that --

MR. SOLOVY: I short-circuited it. What happened was these documents were marked confidential. Then at the beginning of that hearing --

THE COURT: These are the --

MR. SOLOVY: Financial documents. Mr. Dimitrief tried to offer them into evidence. We objected because of the confidentiality order. Then you said, well, before we get into that let's do your motion in limine, because we had a motion in limine to keep those documents out of evidence, period. Then after these many, I don't know, a hundred odd pages, Your Honor said I'm going to deny that motion in limine, but I'm going to give you, CPH, the opportunity to object to the introduction of these evidence at trial.

THE COURT: Okay.

MR. SOLOVY: And that's in the back, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay.

MR. SOLOVY: So that's why it's sort of there in limbo.

THE COURT: I think what we're saying, though, and it's sort of ringing a bell now, I need to grant Morgan Stanley's motion to remove the confidentiality designation subject to your right to object on grounds of relevancy at trial.

MR. HANSEN: Yes, Your Honor.

MR. SOLOVY: Except we don't want it published until -- Let me respectfully suggest this. If Your Honor held those documents were not confidential, was not admissible, there would be no reason to remove the confidentiality designation.

THE COURT: In all honesty, this is ringing a bell. I think the confidentiality designation comes off. It's what I said all along. You litigate in a public forum, this stuff becomes public. I understand your client disagrees.

MR. HANSEN: Two points. I want to make it abundantly clear that when I offered the exhibits in evidence that I did not waive the directed verdict, because Mr. Scarola requested that evidence to come in. I did so on that basis. I relied on his representation.

THE COURT: I understand that.

MR. HANSEN: I thought it was inappropriate, Your Honor, for Mr. Scarola to make what I considered a grandstanding series of remarks before the jury as to his willingness to have any and all Exhibits we sought to put before the jury introduced. I don't believe that's -- That was designed to suggest that we were keeping things from the jury, that he is the party of openness. If he wished to have a conference, we could have come to the bench.

Every time I have wished to make any kind of remark whatsoever he has, on the other hand, sought to shake his head, make remarks, do things that I believe are inappropriate before the jury. I request that the court admonish him for doing so.

THE COURT: Mr. Scarola, from now on I need you to quit trying to curry favor with the jurors, which would include making the jurors believe plaintiff is the only side who wants an efficient truthful presentation of the evidence in this case.

MR. SCAROLA: Thank you, Your Honor.

THE COURT: I think within the confines of evidence, I think both sides want an efficient truthful representation of what the evidence is going to be. I understand you guys disagree on what it's permissibly to include.

Are we ready for a break, then?

MR. HANSEN: Yes.

THE COURT: How long do you think your cross is going to be?

MR. HANSEN: 15 to 30 minutes.

THE COURT: Do you know how long you expect to be, Mr. Scarola, on redirect?

MR. SCAROLA: I would estimate about 20 minutes based on what I've heard so far.

THE COURT: Where do you think we're going next?

MR. SCAROLA: We have Mr. Maher ready to go.

THE COURT: Okay. Thanks. I'm just writing my notes on this.

(A recess was taken from 2:40 p.m. to 2:50 p.m.)

THE COURT: Okay. Are we ready to get the jurors?

MR. HANSEN: One thing real quick, I assume you reject our request for reconsideration of the reliance limiting instruction.

THE COURT: Yes. There's a written order. I can bring in on the break.

MR. SOLOVY: We can wait.

THE COURT: I also did an order on the confidentiality designations. I can bring them both.

MR. SOLOVY: That one we can particularly wait for Your Honor.

(Jury entered the courtroom.)

THE COURT: Go ahead and take your seats. And, Mr. Hansen, go ahead.

MR. HANSEN: May I proceed, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Yes, go ahead.

MR. HANSEN: Thank you, Your Honor.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Dr. Emory, can I change topics to evaluation that we started last Thursday?

A. Yep.

Q. That is one of your particular areas of expertise in the field of finance?

A. Yes. Liabilities management is the thing I'm probably most up on, but evaluation falls in the category of things I'm able to do.

Q. One of the things that falls in the area of your expertise?

A. Um-hum.

Q. Could you help us understand better the concept of market value as you've defined in some of your previous writings?

A. Market value reflects the available information about a stock or other financial securities.

Q. Now there are a number of different ways of looking at value; is that right?

A. We talked about that, yes.

Q. Intrinsic value, book value, market value, correct?

A. I think what we talked about was liquidation value based on present value of future earnings, and then we talked about the market value of the stock.

Q. Now isn't it true, sir, that market value is the price for which something could be bought or sold in a reasonable length of time where reasonable length of time is defined in terms of the items of liquidity?

A. That is one view of market value. If we think about a stock, we think about the market value being close to what it has recently traded at.

Q. Is that --

A. It has a more historic flavor to it.

Q. If I were to get a copy of your book, though, what I just read, would that remind you that that's exactly what you put in your book as the definition part of it?

A. That would be -- yes, that would not be inconsistent.

Q. You've defined it in your own book just the way I read it a minute ago?

A. Okay.

Q. Is it true, sir, that the more liquid an asset, the shorter the time frame?

A. The more liquid the asset, the shorter the time frame we think of in terms of length of time to sell something, yes.

Q. In other words, the idea of being if you're able to sell, if there's a very efficient market and it's readily available and you can conclude a transaction in an hour, that's very liquid. Where if your asset is going to take a year or more to sell, that's highly illiquid, and, therefore, that would affect market value, correct?

A. Right.

Q. How about the concept of intrinsic value? You're familiar with that concept as well, aren't you?

A. With respect to an option?

Q. Well, is there a concept of intrinsic value where a particular asset may be more valuable to one person because of that person's unique situation?

A. I know what you're getting at, and I guess I understand that. I think we talked about the idea that I'm not sure I would use the term "intrinsic value." I think in my field when we say intrinsic value, we're typically referring to something about an option.

Q. But what would you call it, then?

A. Perceived evaluation. One person's or entity's perception of value.

Q. In other words, if we had two people, call them A and B, they might not have the same evaluation on a particular item because of the particular preferences of A or B?

A. I believe we said that Thursday.

Q. Now we talked about liquidity. Is there something known as a, quote, liquidity discount that you work with in your field?

A. Yes, there is.

Q. And when you perform an evaluation, is it often the case that you need to assess the issue of whether a discount is required to deal with the issue of liquidity?

A. Yes.

Q. Why is that?

A. The harder it is to sell something, the less liquid it is. The time and effort creates more, somewhat more risk. And so if you can't sell it conveniently, typically they'll be more effort, transaction costs associated with selling it. So, therefore, that's what we mean when we say a liquidity discount.

Q. Everything else being equal, is it true that the less liquid an asset is, the less valuable it is?

A. All else equal, ceteris paribus.

Q. Pardon me?

A. Ceteris paribus.

Q. From Harry Potter?

A. It's a Latin phrase for "all else equal." It's a academician's phrase.

Q. Is this why the valuations of assets that are subject to restrictions on their sale are often subject to something called a liquidity discount?

A. Yes, that's a -- yes, that happens.

Q. If you were asked, for example, to value a large block of unregistered securities, would it be appropriate to consider a liquidity discount for that large block of unregistered securities?

A. It's -- it could be, it would be analogous to an acquisition premium. It would be a judgment call. And typically for liquidity, you would discount for an acquisition or control. Those two types of things, those are premiums. And they add to the value. Liquidity subtracts from the value.

Q. I'm not talking at the moment about a control premium. I'm just asking you all things being equal if you have a large block of unregistered securities, would you need to consider a liquidity discount?

A. I was trying to say we had already talked about that kind of an adjustment. And liquidity, an adjustment for liquidity would be analogous to that. Yes, you would take a discount for that.

Q. What are unregistered securities? I had forgotten whether that was something covered in your prior examples.

A. I believe we did. What that means is there are securities that are not registered with the SEC and can, therefore, not be traded on public exchange or public market.

Q. They are claims on the company's ownership, but you can't go into the public marketplace and sell them as you would with registered shares?

A. Yeah. If they're stock, they would be claims on ownership. But other financial securities can be unregistered as well.

Q. In the range of your field, in the range of evaluation analysis, is there a standard sort of range of liquidity discounts that are applied in circumstances where, for example, stock is not freely tradable?

A. I believe there are.

Q. What's the range basically?

A. To tell you truth, I don't remember. I would have to check. And check, I would check with some people doing that sort of work currently. I don't -- I don't have that off the top of my head. I just don't.

Q. Wouldn't it be somewhere in the range of 13 to 45 percent?

A. I think I just said I don't know.

Q. Are there treatises you would go to to see what the range of liquidity discounts should be on certain things?

A. There are people that do this sort of work. I would check with them. Or perhaps I would check the literature and find out what a research paper said about that. I think I could do that. I mean, that's what I would do.

Q. But you don't have any idea sitting here today?

A. Unlike the control premium, I haven't written anything on that recently that it's in my mind.

Q. How about the phrase "blockage discount," is that a concept you're familiar with?

A. Sorry?

Q. Blockage or block discount.

A. Oh, discount for a block. That would be -- can I talk about the control premium in terms of --

Q. Let's just put aside things like control premiums. Just talk about a significant block of shares that you're going to try to unload in the public marketplace. What I'm asking you about is where you're going to have to sell a large number of shares, isn't it so that you need to apply a discount because the act of selling a large amount of shares may cause the price to decrease as you go?

A. It's not a linear. It's a continuum that actually reverses. It gets -- the more you sell, you get a larger block, you start to get a discount. But then it becomes large enough where it comes back up, and you can start to get a control premium. That's why I was trying to relate it to the control premium.

There's a range in which you would have a discount. There's a range in which you would have a premium.

Q. So one who was seeking to responsibly value a particular block of securities, and if it was a large block, you would need to assess the very phenomena you just described, a potential discount for some period of time and possibly an increase over time? That's an analysis that would have to be done?

A. No, not over time. If you were buying ten percent of a company, that would be a very very large block of shares -- block of stock. That could have, depending on the situation, that could have a control premium because you would have a much -- a significant say in the company. Or if there were other shareholders who were large, it might actually have a block discount.

So as you -- as you go from, you know, one percent kind of thing, you have -- it's too large for most buyers to buy, but it's too small to really offer much in control.

So the continuum I'm thinking of is the percentage of the company. After you get up to this larger 10, 15, 20 percent of the company, then you start to get into this other range. So it's not an over time thing. It's at the time how large a portion of the company of the ownership are you buying.

Q. Thank you for the clarification. You would agree with me, would you not, that somebody would have to analyze the issue of block in terms of assessing fair value for a large amount of securities?

A. I would certainly think that that would be something I would look at if I were valuing it. That would be a consideration, yes.

Q. And you couldn't, you couldn't avoid the issue. You'd have to look at it. You just can't tell how it would come out without going through the facts? That's a bad question. Let me rephrase. In order to do a fair evaluation of a block of securities on a particular date, someone who does evaluations as you do would have to ask the question what might the block discount be in these circumstances; true?

A. One would ask those questions and try to determine that aspect of the sale, yes.

Q. And it would affect value how it came out?

A. It could. It could be anywhere from negative to positive or zero.

Q. Let me just do an example for you here so we can be concrete. Let's assume you have $500 million worth of unregistered securities. Now with those unregistered securities, how would you go about valuing that block of $500 million securities on any given day?

A. Well, first of all, I would have to have a context. I would have to have a lot of specifics about the company. I'd have to know what type of securities they are; is this common stock; what are the voting rights on this common stock.

Q. Let's say they're unregistered, make life easier. These are unregistered securities.

A. Are they stock? Bonds?

Q. Stock. $500 million of unregistered stock. How would you value that?

A. And the 500 million, if we already know they're 500 million, we would know the value.

Q. Let's say that's the market price, the freely tradable shares on this particular day with no restrictions.

A. These shares are traded.

Q. We're talking about unregistered shares.

A. So there's not a comparable share traded? So we wouldn't know what the market value was.

Q. Let's assume it's, however many, $10 a share in the market times, what, 5,000 shares?

A. And the $10 is shares that are trading on the Exchange?

Q. Right.

A. Publicly traded shares.

Q. Right.

A. And our block is not traded.

Q. Right, unregistered shares. How would you value that?

A. Well, aside from looking at what I thought compared to the market price, I would -- because if I'm buying or selling, I may be thinking that the $10 is high or low. But I would then look at the -- a number of things. But I certainly would look at what portion of the company that was. I would look at how long they were going to be unregistered, whether they could be registered or never be registered. There are any number of contractual stipulations in a contract like this. One of the reasons that people trade stock sometimes privately is the benefits that accrue to being able to work privately and have a contract that specifically meets the needs of the people rather than being bound by the public market.

Q. You would need on this $500 million block of unregistered securities to apply a liquidity discount, correct?

A. I would think that it was possible. That would be an aspect I would deal with. That's why I said how long is it, what are the contracts, what are the various things, and which discount, if I apply a discount, what am I applying it to. If I really am buying these shares and I think they're worth more than $10 to begin with, then what am I discounting it from? Or if I think they're worth less, what am I discounting it from?

Q. Isn't it true, Doctor, that the Securities & Exchange Commission, the United States Government has issued a release saying the valuation of restricted securities at the market quotations for unrestricted securities of the same class or at slight discounts from such quotations is improper?

A. Tell you the truth, I'm not familiar with that legal aspect, that particular rule.

Q. Hasn't the SEC said that you couldn't lawfully value unregistered stock at the same price as registered stock or even close to it?

A. I'm sorry. I don't know that law.

Q. How about the IRS, are you aware that the IRS has revenue rulings?

MR. SCAROLA: Excuse me, Your Honor. Pardon me. It's improper to be asking this witness to state legal conclusions. I object.

THE COURT: I would overrule the objection.

But let me remind you, a question is not evidence. Do you understand what I'm telling you? Okay.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Are you familiar with the IRS guidelines about valuing restricted securities?

A. I do not recall the tax laws, no, I don't.

Q. That would be something you would need to know to have an opinion on it?

A. If I were doing that, yes, I would need to know that.

Q. Are you familiar with an academic survey called the market approach to valuing businesses?

A. Are you talking about a specific paper? I'd need to have more than the title. The authors, the journal in which it appeared, the year in which it appeared. There's 70 journals in finance.

Q. You're not familiar with that one?

A. That paper out of maybe the thousand that are published every year? No.

Q. Let's add to our 500 million block the concept of a lockup. Can you tell the ladies and gentlemen of the jury what a lockup is?

A. Yes, I can.

Q. What is it?

A. A lockup is an agreement whereby shares are set aside and the holder is restricted. It's not just they're unregistered, but the holder can not sell them for some amount of time. They are locked up as it were.

Q. Not only can you not sell them into the marketplace, you can't sell them to anybody?

A. You can't sell them to anybody.

Q. Is that an additional factor that would require an additional discount if you were trying to value a $500 million block?

A. That's what I -- that's what I said a minute ago about all the different factors one would have to bring in. They're too numerous to know without having the entire situation. Is a lockup a positive thing from the buyer's point -- yeah, from the buyer's point of view or from the shareholders' point of view who has them locked up? That depends on the rest of the contract. The contract isn't just that aspect.

Q. Well, whatever the Latin phrase was, if you've got a block of shares that are subject both to being unregistered and they are a lockup indicating they can't be sold, is that a factor in your judgment which requires a liquidity discount as we previously discussed, all other things being equal?

A. That would be part of the liquidity discount because they wouldn't be salable.

Q. You'd have to apply a liquidity discount?

A. You would have to take that into account.

Q. All other things being equal, there would be in my case a liquidity discount, correct?

A. We established that all else equal, liquidity discount; if there was a lack of liquidity, that that could cause a discount. A lockup is a form of causing illiquidity, you can't sell the stock. So --

MR. HANSEN: May I approach?

THE COURT: Sure.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Why don't we deal with specific instance of liquidity discount to see what you can help us understand about it. This is Exhibit 282, a March 31, 1998 Sunbeam 10-QA. This is one of the documents you specifically relied on for your report, correct, Doctor?

A. I believe that's correct, yes.

Q. Go to page six of note two where it says acquisition.

A. I'm sorry. Page six.

THE COURT: Are you offering this into evidence?

MR. HANSEN: If subject to the same stipulation before.

MR. SCAROLA: I have no objection to the offer of this document into evidence.

THE COURT: That's fine. And I'm sorry. It's 282?

MR. HANSEN: 282, Your Honor.

THE COURT: So that would be in evidence.

MR. HANSEN: Subject to the same reservation.

THE COURT: That's my understanding.

MR. SCAROLA: I have no stipulation with regard to this. I have no objection.

THE COURT: Why don't you guys come on up, then.

SIDE BAR CONFERENCE:

THE COURT: I gather when you say subject to the same reservation, you mean that it wouldn't affect your ability to move for a directed verdict.

MR. SCAROLA: I have no stipulation with regard to this document. Have no objection.

THE COURT: You're not stipulating to preserve their right to move for directed verdict?

MR. SCAROLA: I am not stipulating to that, no.

MR. HANSEN: I think that's been submitted to the jury. He stood up previously and said we can let in anything we wanted.

THE COURT: I think it was anything referred to in his report.

MR. HANSEN: This is referred to in his report.

MR. SCAROLA: It was any analyst report. Specifically, I mentioned any analyst report. I don't believe -- I will tell you that the offering of evidence during the course of our case precludes him from moving for a directed verdict, but I'm not stipulating to those things.

MR. HANSEN: I have a solution, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Yes, sir.

MR. HANSEN: This document was on our Exhibit list, and there's no objection on the other side, so I don't believe there can be any prejudice. I will not offer it at this time, but I will show the relevant section. Since he's not objecting to it --

THE COURT: Based on the representation, as soon as we are in defendant's case you will offer it or it will be deemed automatically offered into evidence?

MR. HANSEN: Yes.

THE COURT: Any objection to that?

MR. SCAROLA: Yes. I don't think he should be showing documents to the jury that aren't admitted into evidence. He has to admit it into evidence and then he can show it to the jury.

MR. HANSEN: I can set it up as a hypothetical, but this is a waste of time. This is a document that will come into evidence. They previously lead us into doing this. There's no objection to the document.

THE COURT: Well, my recollection of the offer by Mr. Scarola was that -- was the analyst reports. I mean, I can tell you that -- well, I don't understand by putting it in evidence during their case you would waive the right to move for a directed verdict, but it's not like that's anything I've ever researched.

MR. SCAROLA: I'm going to solve this problem because I don't really believe that is the current state of the law. So if that's a concern, I will stipulate that offering this document into evidence by the defendants at this point in time does not waive their right to move for a directed verdict.

THE COURT: Okay. That's sufficient for your purpose. Great.

END OF SIDE BAR CONFERENCE.

THE COURT: We are back, and MS number 282 is in evidence.

(Defendant's Exhibit No. 282 in evidence.)

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Hansen.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Page 282, page six, note two, could we display that? Now this document is Sunbeam's 10-QA for the period of first quarter of 1998, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. But it was filed later on. It wasn't filed in March of 1998; it was filed sometime thereafter, correct?

A. Is this -- I have to look and see. This is the amended version?

Q. Yes.

A. So this is the one that was redone? This is the redone one?

Q. Correct. And it was filed after the plaintiff's side filed something called a 13-B.

A. I don't recall that.

Q. Can you tell --

A. That doesn't mean anything to me.

Q. What is a 13-B?

A. I don't know.

Q. Is there a filing one can make with the Securities & Exchange Commission when a particular person or entity has attained control over a corporate entity?

A. That's not a familiar -- I don't know what a 13-B is.

Q. But, at any rate, can you tell from this filing when this was filed?

A. Well, the filing on, it says it's the amended because it has amended.

Q. If you go to the second to last page, it might help.

A. I believe that was done -- the original one would have been done after March 31st after the quarter closed in the first place. And this was done, I believe it was late in the year or the next year.

Q. Look at the second to the last page, if you will, where it says --

MR. SCAROLA: If I may, it's on the cover.

THE COURT: It's both places. We just have to direct the witness's attention to either one.

THE WITNESS: I was trying to find the cover, because it seems to me it ought to be there, and I'm sorry, I'm not seeing it. Oh, November 4, 1998.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Actually, if you go to the back page, there's a date when it was signed by the CFO. That's November 25th.

THE COURT: I want to make sure we're all looking at the same thing.

MR. SCAROLA: I'll stipulate it's November 25, 1998.

THE COURT: My only concern is the first page shows a filing date of November 25th as well, not some other date. I want to make sure we're all looking at the same version.

MR. SCAROLA: 11-25-98.

THE COURT: On the first and last page.

MR. HANSEN: We're all on the same page.

THE COURT: We're all on different pages, but we're looking at the same document.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. This was Sunbeam's effort to value the stock given to Coleman in the transaction at issue in this case, correct?

A. This was, yeah, this was a description of some of the aspects of that, yes.

Q. It says, "In exchange for 14,099,749 shares of the company's common stock and approximately $160 million in cash as well as the assumption of one billion 16 million in debt," it says, "previously on March 30, 1998 the company," which is Sunbeam, "through a wholly-owned subsidiary acquired approximately 81 percent of the total number of then outstanding shares of common stock of Coleman from a subsidiary of MacAndrews & Forbes Holding, Inc., M&S." And then it continues on. That's the transaction, correct?

A. Right.

Q. Then it says, "The value of the common stock issued at the date of acquisition, which they put at $524 million, was derived by using the average ending stock price as reported by the New York Stock Exchange composite tape the day before, the day of the public announcement of the acquisition. What is that, the New York Stock Exchange composite tape?"

A. Those are all the transactions that took place on this, the stock from all the different places that the New York Stock Exchange is doing business.

Q. And then it continues on, "Before on the day of the public announcement of the acquisition..." And the public announcement of the acquisition was March 2nd, 1998?

A. Date of the acquisition?

Q. Sound about right?

A. Yeah, it was approximately the first of March or end of February they announced it.

Q. So taking the New York Stock Exchange prices for Sunbeam stock?

A. That on the announcement.

Q. On the announcement date. Discounted by 15 percent due to the restrictive nature of the securities. Correct?

A. Yes, that's what it says.

Q. So is this an example of a liquidity discount being applied to the block of stock?

A. This would have all those things in it we talked about, yes.

Q. This was with the filing of the United States Securities & Exchange Commission?

A. Yes, it was.

Q. So there's a premium on making sure this is accurate?

A. Well, apparently not enough of a premium because the first time they got it wrong.

Q. And they corrected it to get it right?

A. They corrected it to get it right.

Q. This was at a period of time after Mr. Levin had gone and become CEO at Sunbeam?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Levin had been one of the executives of Mr. Perelman's companies before that?

A. That I don't know -- I don't know all the -- I focused on the 1996, '97 and first quarter '98 activities.

Q. And you hadn't focused on how many of the managers previously employed at Coleman Company were put into the Sunbeam company to run it?

A. No, I didn't, actually, no.

Q. We can take that down now.

Bankruptcy, Mr. Scarola asked you about bankruptcy, correct?

A. Yes, I think we talked about Chapter 11 bankruptcy, one form, one aspect of bankruptcy.

Q. And Chapter 11 is a chapter US Bankruptcy Code in which companies can go into bankruptcy and reemerge outside later as continuing companies?

A. They file for what's called protection from their creditors from the liabilities. So they suspend their liabilities, and then they reorganize themselves under the court's jurisdiction. The court dictates what they can and can't do, and negotiations of who gets what take place. And then, yes, they can, at some point it is likely and possible and likely that they will emerge from bankruptcy.

Q. And you were saying in your testimony last week how bankruptcy can actually be a good thing for shareholders as opposed to a bad thing?

A. If, in fact, it's viewed as a positive after a long series of negatives, it can actually be positive, depending on the situation, yes.

Q. And you've written in your book, have you not, that the leading cause of bankruptcy in companies in America is management incompetence, correct?

A. I'm sure you could show that to me. I don't mean -- there's a lot of words in there, and I don't recall those particular words. If you found that, I'll --

Q. Does that not refresh your recollection that that's something you have concluded in your prior work?

A. If you tell me that you found it in the book, I'll -- I don't recall writing that.

Q. Well, is it true?

A. I don't know off the top of my head. I mean, I may have known at some point. I don't recall that particular --

Q. You don't recall that particular aspect of your academic work? Isn't it true you wrote in Corporate Financial Management, at page 840, that, quote, "Managerial inexperience and incompetence are the leading causes of corporate business failure"?

A. I suspect that's the case. There are a thousand pages in the book or 900 pages in the book.

Q. On the same page don't you write, "Lack of management experience, unbalanced experience or outright management incompetence caused 94 percent of business failures"?

A. I'm sorry. I've read every word of the book, but I don't have it all memorized.

Q. Now one of the documents that you identified at page three of Appendix B of your report as a document that you relied on in forming your opinions in this case was an analyst report by a man named Nick Hineman (phonetic). Do you recall that?

A. I can't say that that name is familiar. I remember Constance Manetea (phonetic) and Elizabeth Fontanelle. I mentioned William Steel, Scott Graham.

MR. HANSEN: Can I approach?

THE COURT: Absolutely.

THE WITNESS: What's the name?

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Nicholas Hineman and Lawrence Filer (phonetic).

A. I can look at the report.

MR. HANSEN: May I approach?

THE COURT: Yes.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. I'm going to hand you what we marked as Morgan Stanley 892. I'm going to ask if you recognize that as one of the reports that you relied upon in forming your opinions.

A. I don't remember this particular one, but that doesn't mean I didn't read it.

Q. That report does, in fact, talk about bankruptcy in reference to Sunbeam, does it not? On page two, in particular, before the bottom of the page.

MR. HANSEN: While Dr. Emery is looking at that, subject to the same stipulation, we'd offer 862.

MR. SCAROLA: No objection.

THE COURT: So 892 is in evidence.

(Defendant's Exhibit No. 892 in evidence.)

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. If you could display the second page, third full paragraph and highlight that...

You recall reading that as part of your work, Dr. Emery?

A. No, I don't, I don't recall this particular.

Q. Do you believe it's not one of the items you listed?

A. No. I'm just trying to see if I have my Exhibit list. I'm not seeing my Exhibit list. I wanted to look and see where it was in the context.

Q. It's not attached to the back of your report?

A. It wasn't on the one copy, but it... This says August 7, '98?

Q. Yes.

A. No, my report covered the '96 through March '98 period, so, no, I did not look at this report at all.

Q. You sure about that? You sure it's not listed as one of the documents you relied on in your list?

A. If you look at Exhibit 4 of my report, you'll see that the ones that we focused on stopped March 24th. I think if you read the report, the last thing I said anything about was, I think, June of '98. This is August of '98. No, I don't -- this is -- I'm sorry. I think this is after the time period I was asked to look at.

Q. Let's see if we're -- do you have page three of four of your Appendix B? Go to page three of four on your Appendix B.

A. Page three of four. Okay.

Q. Got it?

A. All right.

Q. Go about halfway down the page where it reads CPH 132. Or, I'm sorry, 139.

THE COURT: Is this item in evidence?

MR. HANSEN: Let's put that down.

THE COURT: We need to be real careful not to display items that are not in evidence.

MR. HANSEN: Pardon me.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. 2178.

A. This one you handed me says 2179.

Q. Turn to the second page. You're looking at the first page.

A. Oh, I see the numberings.

Q. Document front page is CPH 1392172.

A. Apparently.

Q. On your list.

A. Apparently we did look at it, but that was after the time period for which I was asking to look at.

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor --

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Dr. Emery, very simple question. Was this a document that you used in forming your conclusions in the case as listed in your report.

A. Apparently that was, if there was not a typo, apparently it is something we looked at.

Q. You think there's a typo there?

A. I think typos occur.

Q. This is CPH 1392172. That's the first page, right? That's in your report, isn't it?

A. I understand that.

Q. And the finishing page is 1392181. That's the finishing page of this document?

A. I've studied error, and no matter how hard you try error does occur. And I am saying we probably did, yes, apparently list this. I can't say unequivocally that there could never be a mistake.

Q. And this is a Sunbeam --

A. I know that this report happened after the period of time I was focusing on in writing the report that you saw of mine.

Q. And this is a Sunbeam analyst report of the type you talked about Thursday and again today?

A. Yes, it is. It's outside of the time period.

Q. Let's go back to the paragraph before, the third paragraph on page two.

A. Page two is not listed as having been relied on.

Q. This is a beginning Bates number; this is an end Bates number, correct, Dr. Emery? It's a starting page and ending page on your report, isn't it, Dr. Emery?

A. I'm sorry. You're right. Let me just -- no, you're right.

Q. Is it your testimony you only looked at documents by looking at the first page and the last page, is that what you're suggesting?

A. What's that?

Q. Are you suggesting to our jurors when you looked at documents, you only looked at the first page and last page and the between pages weren't looked at by you?

A. No, you look at the page that was listed. I was trying to look at that. The footnotes, when I put together the report, the footnotes refer to the specific pages. And this is a different format. I and apologize for not using the same format in both cases, but the footnotes, so that I could reference them, were put on a one page, one number for each page that we actually had something we were referring to.

Q. So are we now clear that this document, including page two, is a document that you relied on for your work?

A. Yes, we are.

Q. By the way, if it comes from CPH, does that mean it was produced to you from your client, Coleman (Parent) Holdings?

A. Yes.

Q. Now here this analyst writes, "It is vitally important that investors understand the distinct difference between the ongoing viability of Sunbeam as a company and the increasingly probable possibility that as a common shareholder today future participation in SOC..." SOC is the ticker symbol for Sunbeam?

A. SOC is ticker.

Q. "... future, given its fairly extreme overleverage and rapid deterioration, in taxable net worth are two totally distinct situations. Furthermore, we find it ironic that SOC's second largest shareholder, Ron Perelman, could end up financially better off if SOC were to enter Chapter 11 than if he had been successful selling Coleman to SOC or Sunbeam at a significantly lower noncash price as he originally attempted late last year. Were SOC or Sunbeam to enter bankruptcy today, Mr. Perelman could recognize his presently large but unrecognizable paper. Then he could potentially use this loss to offset his earnings and gains in his other profitable enterprises."

Is that an example of what you were explaining to us the other day about how it could be positive for other shareholder?

A. No, that really wasn't what I was referring to.

Q. Couple of other terms, Dr. Emery, I'd like to see if you could help us with. Could you help us with the term beneficial ownership? What is that?

A. In what context? That doesn't ring a bell off the top of my head. Have you got a context for it or something I wrote?

Q. Not something familiar with you, beneficial ownership?

A. It doesn't ring a bell.

Q. If a corporation owns a particular piece of property but all of the shares of the corporation are owned by one human being, is it said in the business community that the human being has beneficial ownership of the property, that it's actually held in legal title by the corporation?

A. I'm sorry. I don't recall that phrase, no.

Q. How about line of credit, is that something you could help us with? What is a line of credit?

A. I could help you with a line of credit. Actually, I couldn't help you with a line of credit. I'm sure your credit is good, though.

A line of credit is simply an available loan that goes up and down that if you're a company, you can go to the bank and borrow more money on a moment's notice. Actually, it's, in the last number of years it's become much more familiar because there are many individuals who also have lines of credit. In particular, especially equity lines of credit on a house. It works in a similar way. The arrangements are made ahead, and then they do what's called drawdown or draw against a line of credit.

Q. How about a debt covenant? Can you help us understand with a debt covenant is?

A. Yes, I can. A debt covenant is a particular item in the bond indenture, which is the contract under which a bond is issued. When the bond is issued, there's a complete contract. It's called the bond indenture.

And the covenants -- a covenant is one particular aspect within that. There are positive covenants and negative covenants. Positive ones require some action. Negative ones restrict against an action.

Q. So, for example, just taking the example there, if I were someone who had a large loan outstanding, might there be a covenant or a part of the term of the bank that said if I earned any additional cash, some or all of that cash would have to be paid back to the bank before I use it for something else?

A. That would certainly be a possible covenant.

Q. How about the idea of pledging stock? To what does that refer?

A. I think that would be very much in the collat -- fall in the collateral. We talked about collateral on Thursday, the idea that somebody would have an asset that if they defaulted on the loan, then the asset -- that's a mortgage kind of thing. And I think that's what that would be.

Q. So, in other words, if I had a very valuable piece of -- a car, for example, and I wanted to get a loan, I might have to tell the bank, you could keep my car as collateral for my loan?

A. Right.

Q. Would it also be true if I had shares of stock, I could go to the bank and say I have these valuable shares of stock; please hold these shares of stock; I'm pledging them to you so you make the loan?

A. Precisely.

Q. If I defaulted or didn't pay, the bank would sell my shares to satisfy the debt?

A. Yes.

Q. Or on the subject of debt, is discharging debt analytically different from getting a cash payment? I'll give you an example. Let's say I owe $50 million to somebody. That's case one. And someone comes in and says, you know, if you'll do something for me, I will pay off your loan, you won't have that loan anymore versus somebody gives me $50 million. Are they functionally the same?

A. Conceptually, they're exactly the same.

Q. They'd both be income to me in that hypothetical?

A. Right. Meaning that all the -- all else equal.

Q. All else equal, that Latin phrase.

A. Right.

Q. Getting the benefit of debt is as much a benefit to me as getting $50 million cash?

A. Right.

Q. How about the issue of forward looking statements. Is that a concept you deal with in your work?

A. Yes.

Q. What are those?

A. We talked about pro forma statements where you look ahead. Forward looking statements are statements which involve some or all projections, expectations. These are things we looking toward. Frequently they also come with a disclaimer that says these are forward looking statements, and you can't rely on them. So it's kind of a, there's a tension between here they are and this is what they say, but you can't rely on them. It's an interesting sort of a tension between the two.

Q. And that's something provided for under the federal securities laws?

A. Yes.

Q. Certain different treatment for forward looking statements versus past historical statements?

A. Yes, um-hum.

Q. How about the issue of an entrepreneur? Is that something you study in your work as a business professor?

A. Certainly we talk about entrepreneurs. There's a bit of sort of a popular image to that. It's not a formal term as much as it is an entrepreneur is somebody who typically we think of them as being very creative in terms of creating new businesses, start-up companies. Those are the types of people we might label entrepreneur.

Q. Is that something you study, the decision making of entrepreneurial individuals?

A. It's certainly -- there are a lot of -- there may be some specifics that I haven't studied closely, but there's a lot of overlap because it's still a business decision. There's still a lot of financial aspects to it.

Q. You told us about proxy this morning, but I wanted to ask just a couple more questions about that, the proxy where you as a shareholder give the right to vote your shares to another person.

A. Right.

Q. Often in the corporate context the right is given by the shareholder to management, incumbent management?

A. That's typically true.

Q. Is that typically referred to as a vote of confidence by the shareholder that the shareholder believes the manager is being a good steward and is allowed to vote the shares?

A. I think. In some cases it can be positive. I view it more as a not negative. I mean, in other words, I think when people are frustrated or people have lack of confidence, they withhold, they may withhold. It's certainly not negative. Sometimes it's a little more routine. I think sometimes investors who are small shareholders check that box, and they haven't really thought about it. So for some of the investors, it's less a thinking thing than a mechanic thing. But it's certainly, it's not negative.

Q. How about for a big investor? Take a Warren Buffet or somebody who was influence --

A. I think it's much more likely he would think about it, and it would be more likely to be viewed as some positive, have a positive aspect to it.

Q. A signal of confidence to the management in the public markets?

A. Yeah, I could view it that way.

Q. So when Warren Buffet happens to be a substantial shareholder in a company and he gives his proxy to the management, that would be viewed positively by the stock market as a vote of confidence to the management?

A. I can't imagine how it would be viewed negatively. As I say, more or less positively depending on the circumstances and some of the particulars, but generally.

Q. Would it be usual for a large shareholder on the order of a Warren Buffet to give a proxy to management where that shareholder believed management had defrauded him?

A. I think that then we're getting into a lot of very specific things where I'm not as comfortable agreeing with you.

Q. Just use my hypothetical. Do you think it would be usual using your business experience or experience teaching for a large shareholder to grant the right to vote that shareholder's shares where the shareholder held the personal view that management had defrauded him?

A. I can imagine it happening. I -- Again, I think the bottom line is the specifics. You'd need specifics to say whether that was particularly odd. It doesn't seem -- I guess I could see how you would say that it doesn't -- it seems somewhat incongruent.

Q. Just trying to figure out where you come out on this. Simple hypothetical. I'm a big shareholder.

A. Hypotheticals are never simple.

Q. Let me just give you one, see what you make of it. We go back to my company A example, and say I'm a 20-percent shareholder in company A, and I learn that the CEO of company A has lied to me and cheated me and caused to put me in substantial jeopardy of losing my investment.

A. Right.

Q. CEO comes to me after I've learned all this and says I want your proxy so I can vote your shares to, A, do what I want to do at the shareholder meeting and, B, vote myself a very large pay package. You would view that as an expected ordinary thing if I were to grant that proxy?

A. I didn't say I would agree it was an expected and ordinary thing. I said I would want more information to be able to say for sure that it was as it appeared, that it was negative.

Q. Well, no, but we're not fighting the hypothetical here. That is the hypothetical. For present purposes I would like you to accept my hypothetical. No additional facts.

I know I've been defrauded, and the management is asking for my vote. In your experience, given your expertise, you're saying it would be an ordinary thing for me to give my vote to management?

A. No, I did not say it would be an ordinary thing. I said it has happened, and I would want to know more about the situation to know whether I thought that something silly or stupid had been done.

Q. An event study. You talked a little bit about how information moves stock market. You remember that testimony?

A. Yes.

Q. It's not true, is it, Dr. Emery, that you could simply say, well, there was some bad news and stock moved, so, therefore, there has to be a direct relationship between news and stock price movement, correct?

A. It is the case that there are situations where a professional judgment could be made that in somebody's judgment, yes, they -- information items are connected.

Q. But there are many many causes of what moves stock prices, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. In other words, bad news could be one cause?

A. Correct.

Q. So could the inflation in the Far East, correct?

A. Well, that's correct.

Q. So could terrible weather in Malaysia, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. So isn't it true a professional that does evaluation work doesn't just say, well, there was a bad report on Tuesday; the stock price fell Thursday; therefore, the stock price drop is attributable to bad news? Doesn't the professional say we have to do something called an event study?

A. No, an event study involves a particular event that happens across many different companies. So you're talking about what happened in one company. When we do event studies, we collect 200, 300 different companies that had the same item like dividend announcement. And that -- those dividend announcements might have taken place over a five-year period, ten-year period. We align those in time. And then after we align those in time we talk about the day before, the day of and the day after in particular. And we do everything according to that. And then statistically we average the two or 300 items and their stock price movements. That's what we do in an event study.

I believe what you're thinking about is in a one-stock case you well might benchmark what the return should have been for the day, so there are a number of different benchmarks you could use. If I watch a stock that drops 25 percent in the day, unless that day were October 19th, 1987, I know the market didn't drop that much. And I know that statistically that was in excess. And so I feel confident in saying that the information was connected to, that is, the price drop was connected to the information.

You can benchmark it in other ways. There's what we call a capital asset pricing model. And in that model we look at benchmarking according to the risk of that individual security, and then we make an adjustment. We don't just simply take the pure change of the market. We adjust just that for what would have been expected in connection with that stock. You don't do that in an individual stock case event study. You do that in a benchmark.

Q. Is that true -- Let me give you a hypothetical here. Today is Monday. Our stock is at $10. I announce I'm not going to earn as much money in company A as I thought we were going to earn. Stock goes to $5 for Tuesday. Are you telling us --

A. You mean by the end of Monday or do you mean the end of Tuesday?

Q. Next day.

A. So that's two days.

Q. Closes at $5 at the end of Tuesday. It's announced Monday. Are you telling us all that you can with confidence say that this $5 drop in the stock price is solely the result of the announcement of the bad news?

A. No, I have to say this very carefully. I didn't say it was solely the result. What I would say is that that announcement -- and, first of all, I wouldn't look over two full days of trading. The reaction is generally quicker than that. I would be measuring from the day before until the close of that day. So the way I would say that, if I were to say that carefully, would be I believe that the information had a significant effect, not that it was the only thing that affected, but that it had a significant effect, that it was part of that drop, yes.

Q. Let me just change our hypothetical a little bit. We won't go much farther with this. Company A is company B's closest competitor. Company B has no such announcement on Monday. Company B goes from 10 down to 3 at the conclusion of Tuesday.

A. Okay. What you've now brought in is another benchmark, and that is another benchmark you could use instead of making an asset pricing model to say the S&P 500 or one of the other market indexes you could benchmark to another company in the industry that was similar enough, you would have various ways. For example, capital structure, market capitalization, total size of the firm. There would be a whole bunch of things we would do to match. But if you found a match, then that would be a benchmark. And in this case if you told me that that was the case, then you're right, I probably wouldn't conclude that the information had done that, because I'd be looking at a benchmark that would tell me that maybe there was something else, there was some other piece of information that affected both of them.

Q. So to end this sequence, one would have to know a lot more than just there's a bad piece of news in order for the stock price drop, to be able to isolate what the particular cause of the particular drop was on that given day, right?

A. To be as absolutely careful as possible, you might want to do that. In most cases we can look at something like that and say, no, it's reasonable to conclude that they're connected.

Q. Dr. Emery, is there a concept in finance known as oppression of the minority shareholders?

A. Oppression?

Q. Oppression, right.

A. Oppression. That's like a democracy.

Q. Well, if somebody has, say, 80 percent of the company and treats him or herself to more benefits from the company on a per share basis than the 20 percent shareholders, that's a bad thing, isn't it?

A. (Nodding head).

Q. Not getting into legal concepts, but that's disfavored in the world of finance; shareholders are supposed to be treated equally?

A. The minority shareholders would very quickly want to sell their stock if they didn't trust the larger shareholder.

Q. If, for example, in a merger where the shareholders are going to lose the shares they have in one company and get shares in another company, typically it will be the case, will it not, that the minority shareholders will get on a per share basis the same consideration as the majority shareholder, right?

A. Yes, some of the laws are designed to try to ensure that, just that very notion.

Q. That would be the expected thing, right?

A. No, actually there's lots of exceptions. The laws are designed to have that happen. Sometimes there is fraud.

Q. But sometimes things happen whereby either the majority or the minority get different kinds of consideration, say, for example stock and cash, but it still has to add up in a way that makes the package they get equal, right?

A. Well, there are cases of what's called green mail where individual shareholders may get bought out at a favorable price and, you know, that sort of stuff happens.

Q. Well, let's put that aside. Talk about the ordinary plain vanilla case where you're trying to do right by the minority shareholders so they get on a per share basis just what the majority gets. In stock and cash they'll have to get an equivalent package, correct?

MR. SCAROLA: Pardon me, Your Honor. Object as clearly beyond the scope of direct examination.

THE COURT: You guys want to come up?

SIDE BAR CONFERENCE:

THE COURT: Let me give them a break while we do this.

END OF SIDE BAR CONFERENCE.

THE COURT: It looks to me like you folks 13 need a break. The kitchen is only open another minutes, so if you want soda, coffee, snacks or tea, please feel free. Please don't talk about the case, and don't talk to anybody about the case. We still won't talk to you.

(Jury left the courtroom.)

THE COURT: This is Mr. Solovy's transcript back. I don't want to forget to give it back to him.

MR. SCAROLA: Your Honor, I have two concerns with regard to the line of questioning being pursued. First is that it is substantially beyond any area that was covered in direct examination. Secondly, Your Honor has imposed significant restrictions on our ability to be able to talk about the loss sustained by other investors, at least in this phase of the proceeding. And Mr. Hansen would clearly be opening the door to discussions of those matters that he has sought or that have been sought by the defendant to be kept out of evidence. So on both grounds we object to this line of questioning.

THE COURT: Okay. So as I understand it, there's an objection that it's beyond the scope of direct and also that it's not relevant at least in phase one. What's the response?

MR. HANSEN: I think we need to know what I'm going to do before they can object.

THE COURT: What's the response to the first objection beyond the scope of direct?

MR. HANSEN: This witness, Your Honor, was proffered as a witness to talk about corporate hierarchy, the interest of investors, what investors want, need, the relationship of investors to corporation, duties of corporation to investors. The only point I'm seeking to make here, Your Honor, has nothing to do with people losing money. It's this, and it's going to come up through many witnesses:

One of the ways we're going to be able to show valuation here is that Sunbeam and Mr. Perelman committed, through the Coleman Company committed on the board level that the minority shareholders, those 18-percent shareholders would get exactly what the majority shareholders got. And that was -- as Dr. Emery says that's corporate law. That's expected.

Okay. What use am I going to make of that? They got a package, but the package is somewhat different. That's where his expertise comes in. Because I can work through with him just by doing the math to come up with a per share value of Sunbeam that everybody at the time recognized was the operative per share value because in order to make the packages equivalent, that's what it had to be.

This witness is the right witness to do it, Your Honor, because he has expertise in the area. He understands the concepts. He's been offered by the plaintiff to do that. Indeed, at the opening Mr. Scarola grandiloquently said he'll be here and answer the defendant's questions, too.

This is not outside the scope. It goes to his core competence and will help the jury understand something which may be more difficult to explain through witnesses without his expertise.

THE COURT: I would sustain it as beyond the scope. Clearly at some point we need a much longer discussion about damages.

Why don't we take a break and we'll be back.

MR. SOLOVY: Thank you, Your Honor.

MR. SCAROLA: Can we have a current estimate as to how much longer?

MR. HANSEN: After that ruling, Your Honor, substantially shorter. So I may even be done. Five minutes.

THE COURT: So you'll take about 20 minutes?

MR. SCAROLA: Yes, Your Honor.

THE COURT: So we plan on getting Mr. Maher on the stand today?

MR. SCAROLA: We'd like to start him.

(A recess was taken from 3:53 p.m. to 4:01 p.m.)

THE COURT: Are we ready?

MR. SCAROLA: We are, Your Honor.

THE COURT: I thought we could talk about scheduling.

MR. IANNO: We need Mr. Hansen.

THE COURT: Okay.

I thought we could take 30 seconds and discuss scheduling before we get the jurors back. We can do the motion to compel compliance with notice to produce either right after court today or my 8:30 is off. I have an 8:00 o'clock for a half hour that I think really is a 15-minute, so I expect I'll have a half hour between 8:15 and 8:45. We could do this then. The other thing I want to tell you is I see I have a three-hour hearing on Friday morning that cancelled from 9:30 to 12:30 so I think we can plan on being here. We haven't done Dr. Nye. It strikes me that also would be an opportune time to do the objections to Morgan Stanley's deposition designations if we haven't done that already. Okay?

MR. SOLOVY: Fine, Your Honor. I would, myself being a night person, I would prefer to do our motion tonight than in the morning.

THE COURT: It looks like it's fairly straightforward.

MR. HANSEN: I don't think we've read it.

MS. BEYNON: In the production of the experts? I think we can do that today.

THE COURT: This is just a consultant.

MS. BEYNON: Correct.

THE COURT: Your expert consultant.

MR. HANSEN: If Miss Beynon is prepared to do that, that's fine. Will we suspend at 5:00 o'clock?

THE COURT: Unless we suspend beforehand.

MR. SOLOVY: Then we have this other deposition designation motion.

THE COURT: That we'll do Friday, that and Dr. Nye. I just know we have three hours on Friday, and I'd rather do that than keep the jurors hanging on one of the trial days.

MR. SOLOVY: I agree, although we can come in at 8:15. We can't move forward with the deposition designations until we get that thing out of the way.

THE COURT: Do we want to try to make an attempt at 8:15 on that?

MR. SOLOVY: I'd like to.

THE COURT: There are different categories. To the extent we have to do specific objections to designated testimony, maybe we could do that Friday morning.

MS. BEYNON: Your Honor, I've only had a chance to quickly review their motion, but it appears to me as though the witnesses they're addressing are ones on which we haven't had an opportunity to submit our objections to your counterdesignations.

MR. SOLOVY: That isn't the point of our motion.

THE COURT: I think what we're talking about is -- I mean, I read it only quickly, but it looked to me like what they're objecting to is the -- you're presenting some witnesses by deposition testimony, and there are three or four different categories. Some of them, you know -- And I think analytically we can probably talk about the different categories tomorrow morning even if we don't get everything resolved.

MR. BEYNON: Could we know which categories you wanted us to address, Your Honor?

THE COURT: I think all the categories analytically. Then we can decide once we have the analytical framework whether that's enough for me to rule on certain categories or do we need the fuller hearing.

MS. BEYNON: We can be prepared to address that.

THE COURT: So we'll do that tomorrow morning at 8:15, and we will do the Request to Produce after we send the jury home today. Okay?

MR. SOLOVY: Thank you.

THE COURT: Are you ready for the jurors, then?

MR. SCAROLA: Ready. Do we have more cross?

MR. HANSEN: We do.

THE COURT: Okay.

MR. HANSEN: Won't be long.

(Jury entered the courtroom.)

THE COURT: Come on in and take your seats.

I'm still waiting for snacks, but that's okay. I know you'll be comfortable soon.

JUROR #7: That's next week.

THE COURT: Next week when you're really comfortable.

And, Mr. Hansen, you had a couple more questions.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Very briefly. Dr. Emery, there's a couple more things I'd like you to explain, if you could. Is there something called a warrant in finance?

A. Yes.

Q. What is it?

A. A warrant is a class of security that falls under the identification of a derivative. A derivative derives its value from other financial securities. And a warrant is such a security.

Q. So it's effectively a right to buy a share of stock at a stated price, for example?

A. It's -- Another way to view it is it is a long-term option. An option is a right to buy a stock at a certain price for some period of time.

Q. So if you had a warrant to buy GM stock at $5, say, that -- for some period of time, you would have the right or the option to exercise the warrant, buy the share of stock for $5?

A. Correct.

Q. And the right itself, the right to buy the share, the warrant would itself trade on an exchange and have a value?

A. That's correct.

Q. Another concept I hope you can explain for us is the concept of hedging. That's the subject of some of your writing, is it not?

A. It is.

Q. What is hedging?

A. Hedging is when you take a countervailing position to the position you have. So a position is -- you may own some asset, and hedge would be that you would take another position that would cover the movement in the value of the asset you own. So, for example, insurance can be viewed as a hedge.

Q. Maybe to use an example to make it easier for me to follow, let's say, use our block of $500 million worth of stock. Now $500 million worth of stock but it's unregistered, and it's locked up in my example. Remember the example?

A. Yeah, yeah.

Q. But it will move, the market price may move up or down as we move forward in time, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. Would there be a way through hedging that you could protect against that?

A. There may well be.

Q. How could you do that using my example?

A. If there are market traded instruments which you can find, you could, for example, purchase a put option?

Q. A put option.

A. Yes, a put option is the right to sell. We just said the right to buy. A put option is the mirror image, the right to sell.

Q. So, in other words, in our example, you can in the marketplace buy a put, which is the right to sell your $500 million block for $500 million for some period of time, correct?

MR. SCAROLA: Objection; relevance; beyond the scope of direct examination, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Sustained on both.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. How would the put work to hedge this investment?

MR. SCAROLA: Same objection.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. How does the put work generally in order to hedge against the position in and stock?

MR. SCAROLA: Same objection, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Sustained.

MR. HANSEN: No further questions.

THE COURT: Do you have any questions, Mr. Scarola.

MR. SCAROLA: I do, Your Honor. Thank you very much.

REDIRECT EXAMINATION

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Dr. Emery, I want to begin by asking you some additional questions about the Barron's article from May of 1997. Did you have a copy of that in front of you?

A. I believe that should still be here. I was going to say...

Q. Mr. Solovy has corrected me again. June 16, 1997.

A. Okay.

Q. Okay. Now this is the article that in cross-examination was characterized as containing, I think they were called red flags. Do you recall that?

A. Yes. That's what I believe Mr. Hansen referred to, yes.

Q. Now we know from the established facts in this case that Morgan Stanley began as the investment bank for the company referenced in this article, Sunbeam, two months before June of 1997 in April of 1997. Now accepting those facts to be true that Morgan Stanley was serving as the investment bank for Sunbeam when this Barron's article came out, is that the kind of information that an investment banker working for Sunbeam would take special note of?

MR. HANSEN: Objection; leading.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. What, if any, impact -- better still, in whose face would the red flag be waving in June of 1997 if Morgan Stanley was working as the investment banker for Sunbeam at that point in time?

A. Well, certainly anybody in connection with the case would be interested in this article and want to take it into account. I think that's what we said.

Q. All right, sir. Now we also know that the very first contact between Sunbeam and CPH was in actuality the end of December 1997. You told us during your direct and cross-examination that there were some things that were typical in terms of an investigation that would be done when you are contemplating a business transaction with another corporation. Would it be typical if one company is purchasing the publicly traded shares of another corporation for the purchaser of the publicly traded shares who has no intent to operate the company whose shares he's buying but simply to be a minority shareholder, would it be typical under those circumstances for the purchaser of publicly traded shares to go back and read six-month old Barron's articles?

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, I object to the leading and Mr. Scarola testifying.

THE COURT: Sustained. And why don't you rephrase it. Let me ask you do you mind having Mr. Scarola there, or do you want him back at this podium?

MR. SCAROLA: I can actually move. I'm happy to move.

MR. HANSEN: No, it's fine for us. Whatever is more comfortable for him.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. To what extent if any, would a typical due diligence investigation on behalf of a corporation that was purchasing publicly traded shares include reading six-month old Barron's articles?

MR. HANSEN: Objection; leading and foundation.

THE COURT: Overruled.

THE WITNESS: As I said, there's a lot of information out there. There are variations of that information. This would be information that may have been discounted at the time. It was information that turned out to be correct, absolutely correct. The market apparently didn't seem to be listening to it carefully because it was as a consensus thinking elsewhere. I would take this to be information that had been largely discounted. People had seen it, observed it. And if you were an acquirer, you might have looked at it.

But even if you looked at it, I mean, it's in a mass of other things you would look at. And you're talking the balance of things, not going and finding one little piece and believing that one little piece.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. All right. One of the things I think you told us you looked at were the stock prices of Sunbeam.

A. Correct.

Q. Over the period of time that you examined, correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. I'm going to put up at this time --

MR. SCAROLA: And with Your Honor's permission, I want to move this a little bit closer so that this can be seen.

THE COURT: That's fine. I want to make sure the jurors can see as well. You want to put it up parallel to the -- this podium?

MR. SCAROLA: That might be fine. May I ask that Dr. Emery step down?

THE COURT: Sure.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. We're really going to make you feel at home, although I don't know whether teachers continue to use these things. It's probably a laser pointer now.

A. Yeah, pretty much, that's what we're moving to.

Q. Do you recognize that document, which for the record, I've got smaller copies, Your Honor.

THE COURT: We're going to mark it for identification?

MR. SCAROLA: Yes.

THE COURT: Are they premarked or not?

MR. SCAROLA: This is CPH trial Exhibit 1296A.

THE COURT: This is for ID only. Thank you.

MR. SCAROLA: You're welcome.

(Plaintiff's Exhibit 1296A for i.d.)

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Tell us, if you would, Dr. Emery, what CPH trial Exhibit 1296A is.

A. This is a graph of stock price. You see over here this tells you what the stock price, it measures the stock price, $10, $20 $30, $40, $50. And each bar is a day, a day's price. The price you see is what's referred to as the closing price. And that's the last transaction in the day before the market closes.

For well-traded stocks, it might be a second or close before it closes. So this is right at the end of the trading day the last trade. So on July 18th, '96, the stock price end of the day was, what is that, 18.70 or something, 75. We also have the numbers.

Q. All right, sir. I want you to find on that chart for us the day the Barron's article we have just been talking about was published, June 16 of 1997.

A. June 16 of '97. Let's see. It's a little hard to read which is -- what day of the week was it? What is June 16?

Q. I can't help you with that, but perhaps some smart person in this courtroom will work that out for us.

A. June 16, is that Monday or is that --

Q. We'll find out.

A. We have to look up which day of the week. But it looks to me like it would be somewhere in here in this particular week of trading where those five closing prices start -- it's probably easier to read it off --

Q. As you assumed, we have a calendar here, and June 16 is indeed the Monday of that week. The 18th is the middle day of the week, and that's -- so these are all, these dates are all marked on the middle day of the week.

A. So Monday's price.

MR. HANSEN: I don't know if Mr. Scarola is testifying or asking a question.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. I want you to assume, Doctor, that, in fact, June 16 was a Monday. And we'll establish that as a matter of evidentiary record a little later. But assume June 16 is a Monday. And I want you to assume if you're able to do this that the 18th is a Wednesday, and the 18th is the middle date that is marked down at the bottom of the chart.

A. Right.

Q. Okay. Now can you tell us, please, based on the information we have in front of us what happens to the stock price when the Barron's article is published on June 16, Monday?

A. Well, if there were any leakage of information, and sometimes there would be in such a thing, if you look back starting the Friday, from Friday to Monday, Monday's closing price is higher than Friday's closing price.

Q. And Tuesday's price?

A. Tuesday's price is still higher; Wednesday's price is higher yet; Thursday's price is even more higher; and Friday is the, actually the highest close within a, quite a period until, I think it's August, two months later when it actually reaches that higher price again.

Q. Okay. Now as has been pointed out, there may well have been other factors going on in the market that could have influenced that stock price, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. But one thing we do know is that whatever else was going on, this article was not perceived by the market to be serious enough.

I'm going to stop and withdraw that question and rephrase it because I see Mr. Hansen standing?

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, I would object to the continued leading. I don't want to get up every time.

MR. SCAROLA: That is a leading question and I'll rephrase it.

THE COURT: Okay.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. What does that observation regarding stock price before and after the publication of this Barron's article tell us about how seriously Wall Street viewed the information contained within this Barron's article?

A. I certainly don't see anything happening there. I thought the article had said, the article itself said very nicely Wall Street's not paying attention to this. Wall Street is thinking things are fine.

Q. Okay. You can resume your seat again, if you would, please, Doctor. And we'll leave that there. We may need to refer to it again unless --

MR. SCAROLA: Is that in Your Honor's way?

I can move it back.

THE COURT: I can't see Mr. Ianno, but that's okay.

Thanks.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Dr. Emery, you told us that it was not at all unusual for analysts to include both positive information and negative information in analyst reports, correct?

MR. HANSEN: Objection; continued leading. I object to having to stand up and object to this all the time.

THE COURT: I understand your concern. Sustained.

MR. SCAROLA: It is merely a predicate for the next question, Your Honor.

THE COURT: I understand that.

MR. HANSEN: Objection. Quibbling with the ruling, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Scarola.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. I would like to take a look at Morgan Stanley 199, this June 16 Barron's article. And let's look at some of the things that were not previously read, beginning with the first paragraph of this article. And read along with me, if you would, please. Could we get that larger if we could? Even if you need to zoom in on the document so that we're not looking at the whole document. We'll begin reading while they're working on the technical aspects.

First paragraph, "Why do I keep doing corporate restructurings when I have more money than I know what to do with?" Albert "Chainsaw Al" Dunlap booms in his Delray, Florida office." Going down to the beginning of the next paragraph, "Indeed the 59-year old Westpoint graduate is riding high. Since he took over as CEO of Sunbeam last July its stock has tripled from 12 to a recent 37 boosting the small appliance maker's market capitalization by over $2 billion."

Is that good news or bad news?

A. It certainly would be positive.

Q. Okay. Move on, if you would, please, down to the second to last full paragraph, which reads, "But Dunlap achieved icon stature on Wall Street only in 1995 by receiving..." excuse me. "...by reviving money-losing Scott Paper in less than two years and selling it to competitor Kimberly Clark for $9 billion, three times its market value when he took over. He personally made more than $100 million on the deal."

Would that be viewed as a positive, neutral or negative statement about Sunbeam?

A. Certainly his past success people would be thinking, well, you know, can he do it here? Yeah. He has a history of doing it.

Q. Let's turn to the next page, page two, the middle of the page, a paragraph that begins with a quote from Mr. Dunlap. It says, "The best is yet to come for shareholders, Dunlap insists. Analysts' earnings estimates run as high as $1.55 for this year and $2.25 for '98." Favorable, neutral or unfavorable as far as Sunbeam is concerned?

A. Again, it's as I testified before, the overall consensus was quite positive. The analysts were projecting growth and higher earnings.

Q. All right. There is, then, a statement below that at the end of that paragraph that was previously read to the jury. It says, "There are a lot of shorts in Sunbeam now, but I wouldn't short me. That's a gamble I'd hate to take."

Do you remember discussing that with opposing counsel?

A. I do.

Q. Let's go on to read the next two sentences. Excuse me. The next sentence. "Indeed, it's perhaps foolhardy to gain-say Dunlap despite his shameless self-promotion. In the past he has delivered the goods."

Bad thing for Sunbeam? Neutral thing for Sunbeam? Good thing for Sunbeam?

A. Certainly positive about him and what he's accomplished.

Q. Down to the bottom of that page, please, second to last sentence, read along with me. "Moreover, it remains to be seen whether he can meet the extraordinary growth targets he has set, an acknowledgment that Mr. Dunlap may very well be pulling off a genuine turnaround."

Neutral statement or unfavorable statement? Which is it?

A. I guess I would consider it to be fairly neutral. It's -- you know, who knows, you know. We're not betting -- we're raising questions, but he might do it.

Q. Okay. Let's go on to the next page, the third bullet point down after the review of concerns expressed by the author of this Barron's article, the following statement appears in the third bullet point, quote, "But Sunbeam denies any gimmickry." And the next bullet point, "Dunlap insists that Sunbeam will double total sales to $2 billion by 1999, triple international sales to $600 million and boost operating margins to 20 percent." Bad news for Sunbeam, neutral or good news?

A. To me, these are claims that are being said, wow, they're really great claims.

Q. So let's go on to the next page, if we could, page four, second full paragraph down, paragraph reads, "Be that as it may, Wall Street has embraced Dunlap's rosy scenario."

Now let's stop there for just a moment. Did your review of both the stock price charts and the analyst reports that you reviewed covering this period of time confirm, deny or fail to provide you any information as to whether that statement was true?

A. I believe that's what I testified was that the consensus was positive. This is certainly consistent with that.

Q. It goes on. It goes on. "One bull..." And let me stop there. We talked about bulls and bears. What is a Wall Street bull and what is a Wall Street bear?

A. A bull is an optimist, favorable, good times ahead. A bear is a pessimist, unfavorable, bad times ahead.

Q. So when we talk about someone being bullish on a company, what does that mean?

A. Very favorable on the company, thinking good things are going to happen.

Q. "One bull, Bear Sterns analyst, Constance Maneaty (phonetic)..." and I think that's one of people you mentioned earlier "...sees earnings of $130.5 million or $1.55 a share this year and $190 million or $2.25 in 1998, and analysts are already talking about $3 per share in '99. Be that as it may, Wall Street has embraced Dunlap's rosy scenario."

Did your research enable you to form an opinion with regard to the accuracy of that statement?"

A. Well, that was one of quite a few that were favorable.

Q. Down to the next paragraph, second sentence, "Dunlap has an almost cult like following by virtue of his forceful personality and his stock's stellar past performances. And his structuring..." Excuse me. "And his restructurings typically generate juicy investment banking fees late in the game for recapitalizations or merger and acquisition activity."

Did your own investigation confirm the accuracy of those observations?

A. In fact, the author was exactly right on that one, too.

Q. Going down to the first sentence in the next paragraph, it reads, "In addition, Dunlap exudes credibility."

What did your investigation show you with regard to whether Mr. Dunlap's statements were being accepted by the investing community?

A. As I said, they were, they were being accepted as true.

Q. Let's go down to the last paragraph on that page and take a look at that. It reads, "For example, Sunbeam was hardly a terminal case despite Chainsaw Al's contention that, 'It would have gone under within a year if I hadn't come in.' Sunbeam had exhibited considerable earnings power under Paul Kazarian of Japonica Partners who had run it from 1990 to 1993 until a blowup with his institutional investor partners, Michael Price and Michael Steinhardt, lead to his ouster. The successful management team made some mistakes and was victimized by deteriorating fundamentals but, nonetheless, gave Sunbeam a raft of innovative new products for which the company is now taking victory laps."

Does that observation tend to contradict the belief that a genuine turnaround was possible at Sunbeam; is it neutral with respect to whether a genuine turnaround was possible at Sunbeam; or does it support the fact that a genuine turnaround was indeed possible at Sunbeam?

A. I think it reflects the same sort of thing I testified earlier about having some positives, some negatives, and all those reports tend to have that. In many ways they say they cover their bets. They overall may be positive, but they say some positive and negative things. And this is consistent with that view.

This author has said some serious questions about what's going on, but then in the next sentence seems to say, well, you know, yeah, maybe they're playing some games, but, gee, they have all these new products. So, you know, I take this as a mixed message, and that certainly is a positive statement.

Q. Let's turn to page eight, if we could. We are at a point in this Barron's article where the author has reviewed the concerns that he has regarding Sunbeam's accounting practices. And let's take a look at what Sunbeam responds to those concerns in the second full paragraph, the second full paragraph, page eight. Let's try the next paragraph which is the second full paragraph. It begins, "The indefatigable Kersh..."

"The indefatigable Kersh denies that any such motive lay behind the Sunbeam restructuring charge. Accounting regulations are strict on that score, and Al has always been vehement about our doing things the right way. We, in fact, have an internal audit team to make sure things are right and proper every quarter, he insists, pounding the table for emphasis."

Is that the kind of statement that the Wall Street investing community would view as raising concerns that the figures being publicly reported by Sunbeam are fraudulent figures?

A. No, it's a defense. It's certainly saying they're not.

Q. Let's move on with this report, if we could, Dr. Emery. And I want to try to finish up with you quickly here.

We talked about the fact that Morgan Stanley was Sunbeam's investment banker beginning back in April of 1997 when the Barron's article came out. What, if anything, does Morgan Stanley's endorsement of the Coleman/Sunbeam merger involving use of Sunbeam stock as consideration tell Wall Street in the investing community about whether Morgan Stanley was concerned about those alleged red flags?

MR. HANSEN: Objection.

THE COURT: What's the legal objection?

MR. HANSEN: No foundation; beyond the scope of opinion; leading question; compound question; irrelevant.

THE COURT: Overruled. You can answer it, sir.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Do you need the question repeated?

A. No. It's okay. Thanks. If you go back to what I said in the cross-examination, we talked about interpreting the information and what you think of that information and the point that, you know, this is something that people would look at, and you would look at carefully and I'm sure that Morgan Stanley as an investment banker involved in the transaction, involved with this company would also look at. And if people are supposed to look hard and careful at it, then I guess everybody should, not just one side.

Q. What, if anything, does Morgan Stanley's decision to be the sole underwriter of a $750 million debenture offering with regard to the Coleman/Sunbeam merger tell Wall Street and the investing world about whether they believed that the red flags referenced in the Barron's article were matters of serious concern?

A. That article was public information and available to people. And as I testified, largely the investment community didn't believe the article. I guess the allegations in the article that we talked about, the negative allegations that actually came true eventually were not believed. And they would have been factored in when Morgan Stanley, as I mentioned I think the other day, Morgan Stanley when they decided to be the sole underwriter, that's a confident position. I mean, that's a signal to the market that, gosh, you know, they believe in it, they believe in the company.

Q. You were asked many questions on cross-examination about what would be typical with respect to due diligence. Is there a difference between what would be typical with respect to due diligence today and what would have been typical with respect to due diligence as it relates to a transaction involving publicly traded corporations, public corporations back in 1997 and early 1998?

A. If you think back to what we -- what I had said on Thursday about the environment changing and the fact that within the last several years we've had a dramatic number of fraudulent situations and scandals, and so I think that people are much more attune today to being exceptionally skeptical, exceptionally leery of people, of all of the aspects of it, but certainly accounting statements have become much more suspect in the last few years.

Q. Could you give us a working definition of due diligence?

A. The sort of background checking you would do to be comfortable that the things that someone is saying you've satisfied yourself to the extent that it's possible that those things are true, that those are -- obviously you can't ever remove all chance of fraud. But due diligence is the idea that you would do a checking to make sure that to the best of your ability, reasonable effort to make sure that things are correct, that things are accurate.

Q. You were going faster than I was able to keep up with you. But can you tell us whether I managed to accurately capture what you have told us in your testimony regarding due diligence.

A. Right. I think I used the phrase “to the best of their ability” also.

Q. Okay. Let's get that in also.

A. Reasonably, you know, it captures some of that, too.

Q. I want to talk very briefly just for a moment about the things that impact on what is reasonably necessary, what is typical of the due diligence investigation, and I want to be sure that we are talking about the kind of due diligence investigation that is not considered necessarily to be reasonable today, but I want to focus on what would have been considered to be typical and reasonable back in the 1997 first quarter 1998 time frame. Okay?

A. (Nodding head).

Q. First, would it make a difference in terms of the nature of the due diligence investigation you would conduct whether you were buying a company to operate it or simply buying a minority interest in a company that you weren't going to operate? Does that make a difference?

A. Well, as we talked about controls and control premiums, that's -- the larger stake you have, the more you're going to be concerned about being able to control things, and with that control comes responsibility. And so the level of due diligence would be greater because you would have more at stake if you were actually controlling it, operating it. So the larger your stake...

Q. To what extent, if any, does the fact that the company is a publicly traded corporation subject to federal regulation regarding its reporting requirements play in terms of what would per -- what would be typical in investigating the financial reports of that company?

A. I'm sorry. Say that again.

Q. Yes, sir. To what extent, if any, is the fact that the company you are contemplating buying shares in is a publicly traded corporation subject to federal regulation about the nature and accuracy of the reports that it must file?

A. Of course, as we said, the information has to be filed regularly. As a general rule, there's considerably more information available about a public corporation than a private corporation. And so by its very nature it can be harder. One could think of it in terms of being harder to hide things because they're public. There's available information.

Q. To what extent, if any, would the nature of the due diligence you would conduct on a company in whom you are buying a minority shareholder interest was audited by a respected accounting firm, what difference would that make?

A. Well, once again, there was more confidence in audited accounting reports at that time in history. And that would give you more confidence, and that would be part of -- you would accept that as part of your due diligence.

Q. To what extent, if any, would the source of the information that you were receiving make a difference? For example, whether the information was coming from someone who was a stranger and unknown to you as opposed to someone with whom you had been doing business for a decade and in whom you had built up a relationship of trust and confidence? Would that make any difference?

A. Well, I think that's a very normal thing in human relations where you get to know somebody, and, you know, you establish either a wariness or a sense of trust. As you establish a sense of trust, then you would be more likely to believe what they say.

Q. To what extent, if any, would it make any difference if you had contracted in written documents for specific guarantees that the information you were being provided was accurate, honest and complete?

MR. HANSEN: Objection. Misstates the evidence.

THE COURT: Overruled.

THE WITNESS: That would -- contracts and due diligence play sort of a combined role. If you've got contracts, you've got contractual clauses that protect you in certain ways.

And then the due diligence is another form. So they are -- it's just sort of one more aspect of protecting yourself in a transaction.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. You were asked about due diligence typically including a review of interim financial statements. To what extent, if any, would it make a difference if in that same contract where your contracting partner guaranteed you the accuracy and honesty and completeness of its financial reports that contracting partner also was legally obliged to inform you of any material change at all that had occurred in the financial circumstances of the company? Would that make any difference in terms of what was typical to be required in terms of due diligence?

MR. HANSEN: Your Honor, this is all leading by Mr. Scarola.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Would the existence of a material adverse change clause in a contract have any impact upon what was typical in terms of due diligence?

MR. HANSEN: It's still leading. Doesn't cure it.

THE COURT: Overruled. You can answer it, sir.

THE WITNESS: The -- As I said a minute ago, they become aspects by which one controls the risk and possibility of bad things happening. And so that would certainly, a material adverse change clause would offer a level of comfort which could be viewed as part of the due diligence and serving as part of the due diligence.

MR. SCAROLA: Thank you very much, Dr. Emery. I may have no more questions if you'll just give me one second.

SIDE BAR CONFERENCE:

MR. SCAROLA: I don't want to be accused of usurping any of the court's authority. Is it the court's intention to remind the jury that if they have any questions, this is the time?

THE COURT: No, I don't do that. And we can talk about the procedure that's in the instruction at some point once we've sent the jurors home. It's my understanding we're not supposed -- to the extent possible, we're not coming back right On time. Once again, we appreciate it.

Are we missing something? Oh, we have them in the wrong order. Maybe we're just seeing if you're on your toes.

BAILIFF: That was a test, folks. Good job.

THE COURT: Okay. We're ready to continue. We're going to go back to Dr. Emery, then go back to Mr. Maher. Okay.

Dr. Emery, is he in the courtroom? Where is Dr. Emery? Is he outside?

VOICE: We're getting him right now.

THE COURT: Okay, great. Thanks.

Do you swear to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth?

THE WITNESS: I do.

THE COURT: Let me remind the jurors, don't draw any inference if a question is not posed to the witness, okay?

Sir, I have a list of questions I want to read to you and ask you to answer.

EXAMINATION

BY THE COURT:

Q. What activities are performed in order to report a cash flow forecast?

A. It would be a large -- there could be a fairly large number of activities that might go through. It would be common to look at -- to sort of start with what is called marketing research. And that would be to estimate what the market reaction might be to the product. We try to get a handle on estimation of sales. That probably would be broken down into various segments. And then those segments would be pulled out to an aggregate number. So you might have more sales in one area or another geographically, or from a market point of view.

Once you have what you think are sales, then you pull back and you start looking at expenses. The expenses will take on two general forms. One form is that of variable costs. Those are the -- or direct costs. Those are the costs that might go into the materials, the labor to produce the product or service. Other costs might be indirect costs or fixed costs. And these would involve things like having a building in which to sell things, having employees who do -- various support staff, but aren't directly related to selling the products.

Once you have that, that would give you what you might call free cash flow or a contribution margin, so -- to what you expect, and then subtract the fixed cost from the contribution margin. And that would give you an aggregate amount.

Now, from there, there are a variety of different directions you can go. One would be to the accounting side, in which case you would have a series of expenses, such as interest expense. From a financial analysis, largely what we would do is we would go to the cash flows, and we would go right to taxes. And the affect of interest cost would be taken into account in what we call the cost of capital.

Once we project those costs, those cash flows, after tax cash flows, once we estimate those, then we calculate present value of those cash flows. We talked about discounted cash flow analysis. And then that would be -- the present value would be what we would look at.

Q. Okay. Thank you, sir.

You focused and have obtained a financial profession, why did you not obtain a CPA qualification?

A. A CPA would be not an unheard of professional qualification for somebody in my position, but it would be quite rare.

A more common designation would be a CFA, which is a certified financial analyst. I don't hold that designation either. That designation is typically associated with people in the investments area, and I focus on the corporate area.

The credential that is uniform, essentially, for people in my position is the doctor of philosophy degree.

Q. As a financial advisor, when reviewing a profit and loss statement, what are the major elements also looked at in order to come to the conclusion that the company is either profitable or nonprofitable?

A. Essentially there are a number of different ways you can look at profitability. Some cases you would be looking at the accounting profit. So if the company is projected to be making a profit, that is, their net income is positive, there are some, especially lay people, who would look at that and say, look, they're making $50,000 a year, that's positive. Therefore, they are making a profit. And that's one way to look at it.

In my discipline, we have a much -- I don't know what to call it, harder, more strident, stringent measurement. Our benchmark, our measure is we look at what do we think the company should be making, earning. So we might look at it and say, gee, we think this. company, based on the risk of the company and what other investments are out there, we think this company should be making $400,000 per year.

Well, if they make less than that, we consider them to be below par. Even though they may be making $50,000 a year, we would say, no, that company is not doing as well as we think it should be doing.

So our benchmark in my discipline includes what you would call an expected profit or a benchmark profit. So we measure from that. Whereas for tax purposes, in your experience as an employee, a day-to-day, a personal finance thing, yours would match the accounting view, which is, if it's positive, well, they're making a profit. So that would be the difference, general difference.

Q. What is the next step to validate that the dollars are true, quote, and sound, quote, in order to complete a business merger transaction?

A. That's much more difficult. In a general sense, in the case of a business merger, or almost any business transaction, the level of trust, it's almost like a personal relationship. I know it's arm's length and I know we talked about that, but if the trust is broken, if you don't trust the other side, essentially you don't engage in a transaction. I mean, people walk away from transactions all the time. I mean, there are -- well, we could do this and people get broken up.

In fact, in some cases you'll see a tension where they'll break up and then a third party will bring them back together. And that can happen a few times.

So in terms of what you do to check, you do what's reasonable to do in the circumstances. And it is situation-specific. I mean, there's not -- there's no general guidelines for how you learn to trust somebody. There are things that you do.

One of the -- one of the experiences I had years ago was, I knew a woman who was involved in a transaction. She was very unsophisticated. And in that transaction, part of the discussion she asked a very -- some very simple questions that the other people, who were more sophisticated, they never would have asked those questions. They would have taken it for granted. She asked the question -- and boy were they glad that she had asked those questions, because it turned out that there were some significant misunderstandings.

So in terms of bringing parties together, what you do, each party must do what it feels is necessary to satisfy itself. But in the end, sometimes there are things you just can't protect yourself against. You know, you can't find them out.

And so what's reasonable depends very much on the situation.

Q. In the event of a false finding from one of the parties, how typical would it be that the transaction to take place or be completed 100 percent, if at all? Would that bring the trust level down between two companies?

A. If I understand the question, I believe it certainly would affect the relationship. There's -- the remedies will vary.

Sometimes, if it's earlier enough in the process, if the ship hasn't launched, if the train hasn't left the station, if it's not been consummated, if it's not been formally put together, those are cases where people might walk away.

After it's put together, there's -- there are some incentives to try to get remedies to, to try to work things out. There are some situations where you might say, well, gosh, I -- if we were to pull away from this, it would be an embarrassment, it would be a major problem. Yes, you've done something wrong, but we're going to try and work it out.

So in that sense, again, back to a personal relationship, it might be like a problem in a marriage where you spend significant effort trying to work it out because you've already taken the steps. I mean, you're already on the train together, on the plane together. A crash would be a bad thing. So, again, it's quite situation-specific.

But the general rule about when you find out something and what you do about it would be the demarcation of you agree to go ahead with the deal, you actually consummate the deal, you're into the deal in some way. Because getting out of the deal, sometimes one party will say, I want out of the deal, things have changed significantly, I want out of the deal. And the other party will say, no, no, everything is okay. Legally you can't get out yet. It hasn't been so bad that you could get out. So there can be disagreements. Different ways to seek remedies.

Q. Are unaudited receipts reliable?

A. We think of them as being less reliable; although, you know, if you think of what's happened in the last five years, eight years, ten years, you think about the scandals that have happened, audited statements have become less reliable. So people have been fooled.

I would say they are more suspect. Unaudited statements are not necessarily unreliable. I mean, I can imagine situations where you would still accept the information, recognizing that they hadn't been audited. Again, it would go back to trust. The legal aspects, which I have no expertise in, that's not what I'm here for, but there would be a lot of those sorts of considerations that would come in.

Q. Okay.

In your opinion, is there any way First Boston could have known that Morgan Stanley didn't have accurate information if they looked a little harder?

A. As a general course, I think, again, if I go back to what's happened in the last few years, people who are a lot smarter than I am, people who are more knowledgeable, were more knowledgeable in the situation than I have been fooled.

If I go back to this situation, I did not study that aspect of it. So I can't say definitively somebody could not have found it out absolutely.

At the same time, it certainly, as I said a minute ago, there are things that can't be found out. And so the idea that you could easily find out, there's no way I would think of it as easily found out. I testified about the general consensus. We saw that there was some variation. There was a range of consensus, but the investment community, if you look at the stock price and you see it going up over this time period, I have -- I -- certainly there were a lot of people fooled about it. So there's no way that I would think that it would be an easy thing. I can't say it couldn't have been done, but I can't envision a way that, oh, sure, just do this and you would have been okay. I think it would have been difficult.

THE COURT: Want to come up a moment?

(A bench conference occurred as follows:)

THE COURT: I don't know that that implicated the instruction, because I don't think there was anything specific about this at all.

MR. HANSEN: I would move to strike the testimony as nonresponsive.

THE COURT: I wouldn't grant a motion to strike as nonresponsive, but I don't think it implicates the instruction.

MR. SCAROLA: I think it does, but if Your Honor doesn't believe --

THE COURT: That's fine. Okay.

(The bench conference ended.)

BY THE COURT:

Q. Sir, when did you, Dr. Emery, start your, his involvement with this case, start to finish, month, day, year?

A. I'm not positive about the day. I was contacted in, I think early -- it was early November. I want to say November 10th of the previous year, 2004. We talked back and forth about whether I would be willing to do the case, to do a report on this, whether I would be willing to be involved. There were a number of considerations. I had never done one of these before, and the truth is, I was really actually a little reluctant to commit to it because I had some other responsibilities and things, so I had to work out the timing to make sure that I would have the time to do the job.

I want to say probably it was a week -- maybe a week later. So maybe it was November 7th or 8th when we first talked, but it was probably about November 17th, 18th, somewhere in there, the point at which I said yes I would go ahead and be involved.

THE COURT: Thank you.

Mr. Scarola, do you have any follow-up questions?

MR. SCAROLA: Just one, Your Honor.

REDIRECT EXAMINATION

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Dr. Emery, can you give the jury an estimate as to the amount of time you spent preparing to give the opinions that you have testified to today? What's the total amount of time that you spent on this project?

A. Today, to this morning?

Q. If you can give us an estimate through to today, that would be great. I'm trying to give the jury some ballpark figure as to the amount of time you've devoted to these tasks.

A. 150 to 200 hours is the range.

Q. Did you actually keep time records?

A. I did.

Q. Would you be able to give us an even more accurate figure if I were to give you the summary of those time records? Would that help you refresh your recollection?

A. I think what's probably at issue is what's happened in April and the things we've done in April.

THE COURT: Right now I just need for you to answer the question Mr. Scarola posed.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. And that is, would it assist you in giving a more accurate response, would it help you refresh your recollection if I gave you a summary of the hours that you put in each month?

A. If you -- sure, I mean, that would increase the accuracy.

MR. SCAROLA: May I approach the witness, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Sure.

MR. SCAROLA: Thank you.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. If you could take a look at that, does that refresh your recollection as to a --

MR. HANSEN: Impeaching his own witness.

The witness has testified, and this is an effort to impeach his own testimony.

THE COURT: Overruled.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. Does that refresh your recollection as to a more accurate summary of the total number of hours that you put in?

A. This says 251.

THE COURT: The question is: Does that -- does that refresh your recollection or not? And that's a yes or no.

If it makes the light bulb go off and say, oh, I remember. If it gives you information that you didn't have before looking at the document, tell us it didn't refresh your recollection.

THE WITNESS: No, it didn't.

BY MR. SCAROLA:

Q. That's fine. So your best estimate is between 150 and 200 hours?

A. Um, that's -- that's what I would have said, but as I said --

Q. That's fine.

MR. SCAROLA: Thank you very much, Dr. Emery.

Nothing further, Your Honor.

RECROSS EXAMINATION

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Dr. Emery, you gave an opinion a moment ago about what CSFB could have known. You were asked a question about that. You were asked what CSFB could have done.

A. I recall the question.

Q. My question, sir, is: Wouldn't you have wanted to know whether CSFB in its own files had a copy of the Barron's article laying out the other things? In your testimony you said, laid out all the elements of the Sunbeam fraud, Morgan Stanley Exhibit 1006, CSFB production code.

And I'm going to ask you, sir, isn't that something you would want to know before giving an opinion about what CSFB would or could have known?

A. That would be part of the information. That would be part of the range of attitudes that were out there. I believe what I testified was there was a range of attitudes. And I tried to capture a consensus view in the investment community without picking out one particular article and saying after that, this is the one aspect I would look at. I looked at many things.

Q. If CSFB had right in front of it those aspects, it wouldn't have been hard to know at all if CSFB --

A. I don't know.

Q. In fact, CSFB, as you can tell from that article, had that information right in front of it?

A. I testified yesterday -- not yesterday, I testified Monday that, in fact, this information was out there, that it turned out to be correct. I do not believe that just seeing one article out after a plethora of articles that you could necessarily pick out one aspect and say, this guy has got it right, as opposed to 50, 100 or 200 other people looking at it. No, I don't agree.

Q. Let me just explore that for a minute. Let's say there are hundreds of articles out about a company and 99 of them say company is great, but there's one article that says this company is a fraud, and I'll tell you exactly why.

A. Right.

Q. Would someone doing an investigation need to focus on even that one out of 100 articles --

MR. SCAROLA: Excuse me, Your Honor, may we have a limiting instruction at this point in time, please?

THE COURT: Why don't you guys come on up?

(A bench conference occurred as follows:)

THE COURT: Any response?

MR. HANSEN: Don't believe the witness has yet given an answer that would implicate that.

MR. SCAROLA: Wouldn't need to look at the one article out of 99 in order to do a better job is the gist of the question.

THE COURT: I think we need to see what the answer is.

(The bench conference ended.)

MR. HANSEN: May I proceed?

THE COURT: Yes, sir.

BY MR. HANSEN:

Q. Do you remember my question, Doctor?

A. I believe I do.

Q. So my question is: If you've got 100 articles out there and 99 of them say, great company, love it a lot, but one of them says, look, people, this company is a fraud and here's why, they're faking this number, they're putting the numbers that should be in this year into another year, wouldn't it be necessary for somebody doing a competent, professional job to look for the problem to see whether there was a problem, as opposed to just saying, well 99 out of 100 people think it's a good company?

A. The analogy that I would give is that in 1995 there were people who said the market is going to crash. In 1996 there were the same. In 1997, '98, '99 and in 2000 there were people who said the market was going to crash. Now, in 2001 when we looked back, does anybody go back and check in 1996 that there was somebody who said it was going to crash? And the answer is, no, it's just history, so what.

But in 2000, ah, that there was somebody who said the market is going to crash this year and after the market crashed they appeared to know perfectly well what was going to happen. But that doesn't mean at the time you would have been listening to that particular person. And that's the analogy that I would give here.

If you've got 100 opinions out there. And after the fact you identify one that happened to be correct, if you go back and say, I could have known because this was the one that said. There have been so many things predicted in history that didn't come through. 9/11 is a great example of it. There were people who predicted 9/11.

Q. We're a ways away from 9/11.

Is it your testimony, sir, as an expert in finance that professionals purporting to conduct a diligence examination of a company could ignore specific information about accounting fraud within a company simply because there were other articles written about the company that said it was a good company? Is that your testimony?

A. I didn't -- I don't know what they looked at. I'm not testifying that they would ignore this. They very well could have read it, looked at it, pawed over it, and checked with other information and concluded, no, this isn't correct, the other is.

Q. But you'd have to follow up and look at it, wouldn't you?

A. I don't know that they didn't.

Q. We're not -- I know you said that. I'm just asking you, would you have to follow up these kinds of allegations and look at them?

A. You'd have to be there. This is something that is clearly situation-specific. And would I look at all the information? I would make every effort to.

Q. Sure. If you were there at the time and somebody gave you these kind of allegations that were in the Barron's article, you'd certainly check them out to see if they were true before advising your client to proceed with the transaction, wouldn't you?

A. I believe that I would do the things to satisfy myself, and that would include looking at all the information that I had available.

Q. With all respect, sir, I don't believe you answered my question.

Specifically as to the Barron's article information, if you were on the scene in 1998 in possession of those Barron's allegations about Sunbeam, would you please tell the jury whether you would have looked further into those allegations to see whether there was merit to them, or would you have ignored those allegations because there were other good things said about Sunbeam?

A. I believe that I would look at this information along with the other information to make a judgment about what I did next.

MR. HANSEN: And, Your Honor, we would offer 1006 subject to the prior stipulation and rules of court.

MR. SCAROLA: Objection, no proper predicate. Hearsay and no proper predicate.

THE COURT: Why don't you guys come on up.

MR. SCAROLA: Certainly.

(A bench conference occurred as follows:)

THE COURT: It's the same one we had. This is not in evidence.

MR. HANSEN: It's a different form, because this is CSFB's copy. This is in evidence.

THE COURT: What's the objection to just the photo?

MR. SCAROLA: The objection is that the suggestion has been made by way of questioning that this comes from CSFB's files. There is no predicate that it, in fact, came from CSFB's files. There's no predicate as to when or how it got in there. There's no predicate as to what, if anything, was done by it. All of that is done by suggestion of counsel's question.

THE COURT: We're talking about just this form.

MR. HANSEN: It's a CSFB production code at the bottom.

THE COURT: Again, I don't know that that would be sufficient. I can certainly tell the jurors it's the same article accepted into evidence. But if you're putting it into evidence just to show they have it, I do think the answer implicates the instruction.

(The bench conference ended.)

THE COURT: I'm sustaining the objection to that exhibit. But I will note for the record it is the same as Exhibit number 199 that was admitted into evidence yesterday.

And I have an instruction that I need to read you.

Let me instruct you again with respect to evidence about CPH's investigation or lack of investigation.

Under Florida law, the recipient of an intentional misrepresentation may rely on it without conducting any investigation of his own. However, evidence about the investigation or lack of investigation conducted by CPH may be relevant to your determination of whether CPH actually relied on the statements of Sunbeam and Morgan Stanley. That is, whether CPH made its decision based on these statements, CPH did not actually rely if it knew the statements to be false, if the falsity was obvious or if the information was simply disregarded.

Consequently, the evidence that you have just heard should be considered in determining -- should be considered by you only in determining the issue of reliance.

I may from time to time remind you of the limited purpose for which other evidence is admitted simply by telling you that this same limiting instruction on reliance applies to that evidence.

Okay?

MR. SCAROLA: May we approach the bench again, Your Honor?

(A bench conference occurred as follows:)

MR. SCAROLA: Your Honor, this is the document that is marked MS 1006 that's been referenced and in fact held up in front of the jury.

This is a complete list of all documents listed by the Defendant through yesterday evening, including all late-listed exhibits. Your Honor will note that this exhibit list ends at MS 1004. This document was never listed. It was-entirely improper to be making reference to it. And I would ask on that basis that the Court instruct the jury to disregard any reference to this article having been in CSFB's files.

MR. HANSEN: The response is the document itself is in evidence. This is simply a different version of it that comes from CSFB files.

THE COURT: Again, I understand what you're telling me. I can't make an evidentiary conclusion they had it at the time they did due diligence or not.

Two things, make sure neither side displays things to the jury that are not in evidence.

MR. HANSEN: I have not displayed it. I've handed it to the witness. I've handed it to counsel. I have not displayed anything.

THE COURT: That's fine.

MR. SCAROLA: I am requesting that any reference to this document having been included in CSFB's files be disregarded.

THE COURT: I would deny the request, but I will remind the jury that questions aren't evidence.

MR. HANSEN: Before we go, I would expect to ask the witness one more time, this does reflect that it comes from the CSFB file?

THE COURT: No, that would be inappropriate.

MR. SCAROLA: Thank you, Your Honor.

(The bench conference ended.)

THE COURT: Let me remind you, the content of a question is not evidence. What comes from the witness is the evidence. Everybody clear?

Mr. Hansen, any other questions?

MR. HANSEN: No further question, thank you.

THE COURT: You can step down and I think you're excused. Thank you, Dr. Emery.

THE WITNESS: I thank you for your accommodation yesterday.

(Witness excused.)

THE COURT: And we're going back to Mr. Maher, correct?

MR. MARKOWSKI: Yes, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Is he outside?

Can all the jurors see that, too?

Do you intend to use the board?

MR. MARKOWSKI: Can you folks see?

THE COURT: Everybody okay? Okay.

Sir, raise your right hand. Do you swear to ??

COLEMAN (PARENT) HOLDINGS INC., Plaintiff,

v.

MORGAN STANLEY & CO., INC., Defendant.

No. CA 03-5045 AI.
February 9, 2005.

CPH's Response to Morgan Stanley's Motion in Limine No. 19 to Exclude the Testimony of William Horton Plaintiff Coleman (Parent) Holdings Inc. (“CPH”) respectfully submits this response opposing Morgan Stanley's Motion in Limine No. 19 to Exclude the Testimony of William Horton. Morgan Stanley seeks an Order prohibiting CPH from introducing any expert testimony by Mr. Horton concerning Morgan Stanley's “due diligence ‘duties,’ the ‘reasonableness’ of CPH's reliance on Morgan Stanley, or the materiality and accuracy of alleged statements or omissions by Morgan Stanley in the course of the Sunbeam-Coleman transaction.” Mot. at 6.

In its motion, Morgan Stanley attempts to frame Mr. Horton's opinions as legal conclusions and hence inadmissible. To the contrary, Mr. Horton is not offering any “legal” opinions -- rather, his opinions relate to the customs and practices of investment bankers involved in mergers and acquisitions, and the customs and practices of parties involved in such transactions when conducting due diligence. Those business issues are before the jury in this case, and they are issues that will involve evidence the jury will need assistance to understand. The opinions offered by Mr. Horton will assist the jury, and they are well within the scope of Mr. Horton's expertise, given his 22 years of experience as an investment banker working on a broad array of transactions.

Contrary to Morgan Stanley's assertions, Mr. Horton makes no effort -- overtly or covertly -- to tell this Court or the jury what the law should be. His opinions are stated in a manner designed to make clear that they are confined to what is customary and appropriate as a business matter. It follows that his opinions are both relevant and admissible.

Morgan Stanley objects to Mr. Horton offering any opinions regarding Morgan Stanley's “duties.” Mot. at 1. But that is a straw man. Morgan Stanley adds the word “duty” in its summaries of Mr. Horton's testimony where Mr. Horton does not use that word.¹ Instead, Mr. Horton offers opinions on the practices and customs of investment bankers and parties involved in transactions of the type at issue in this case.

Morgan Stanley cites the case of Palm Beach County v. Town of Palm Beach, 426 So. 2d 1063, 1070 (Fla. 4th DCA 1983), for the undisputed proposition that an expert may not opine on the law. Mot. at 2. But that case does not begin to support Morgan Stanley's actual argument, which is that opinions about business practices, however relevant, should be excluded if they might be mistaken for statements about the law. As the Florida Supreme Court made clear in a later decision in the same case, Town of Palm Beach v. Palm Beach County, 460 So. 2d 879, 882 (Fla. 1984), the distinction between permissible and impermissible expert testimony depends heavily on the particular words chosen by the expert to express his conclusion. The issue in that case was whether the plaintiffs received “real and substantial” benefits from a tax levied upon them in accordance with the Florida Constitution. Id. at 881. The Court held that an expert could testify within his expertise about benefits received by the plaintiffs, as long as he did not purport to apply the legal standard of “real and substantial” benefits. Id. Mr. Horton's opinions comply fully with this rule, as a review of his opinions makes clear.

I. There Is Nothing Improper About Mr. Horton's Opinion That It Would Be Customary for CPH to Rely on the Debenture Offering Disclosures and Due Diligence.

In his report, Mr. Horton opines that, “[a]s a matter of industry practice and custom,” CPH would expect to benefit from the due diligence performed for the contemporaneous Rule 144A offering and the related disclosures made in connection with that offering. See Horton Rep. at 18, attached as Ex. 1 to Mot. Mr. Horton takes account of all the relevant circumstances, including Sunbeam's status as a public company and its acceptance of a contractual obligation to disclose material adverse changes.²

Morgan Stanley claims that this opinion improperly seeks to establish a legal duty running from Morgan Stanley to CPH. But it does nothing of the kind -- Mr. Horton's testimony relates to industry practice and custom. The law permits the introduction of expert testimony if it “will assist the trier of fact in understanding the evidence or in determining a fact in issue.” Fla. Stat. Ann. § 90.702 (West 2004). Here, Mr. Horton's testimony on this point does both. Given his expertise, Mr. Horton will be able to help the jury understand general customs and practices of investment bankers and of parties involved in major merger transactions, topics with which the jury is unlikely to be familiar. Moreover, his opinion regarding the prevailing customs and practices in the investment-banking industry and in merger transactions will assist the jury in determining whether CPH conducted proper due diligence -- a matter Morgan Stanley has put in issue in this case. See, e.g., Charles W. Ehrhardt, Florida Evidence § 90.406, at 265-66 (2004 ed.) (“Evidence that a person's conduct conformed to a general custom has probative value in proving the conduct was reasonable”); see also Ploetz v. Big Discount Panel Center, Inc., 402 So. 2d 64, 65 (Fla. 4th DCA 1981) (“[W]hat is ordinarily and usually done by men generally, engaged in the same work, has some relevancy to the inquiry as to what an ordinarily prudent person would do under the same circumstances.”) (quoting Sea Board Air Line Ry. Co. v. Watson, 113 So. 716, 718 (Fla. 1927)); Restatement (Second) of Torts § 295A, cmt. b (“Any such custom of the community in general, or of other persons under like circumstances, is always a factor to be taken into account in determining whether the actor has been negligent.”).

II. Mr. Horton Can Offer Opinions on the Industry Meaning of “Materiality,” and He Made Clear that He Is Not Opining on the Legal Meaning of that Term.

In his report, Mr. Horton offers the opinion that the information provided to Morgan Stanley in the March 19, 1998 comfort letter represented a “material adverse change in the business of Sunbeam from any business perspective, and certainly from an investment banking perspective,” and thus it would have been customary for Morgan Stanley to disclose this information. See Horton Rep. at 20-21. Operating from the same perspective, Mr. Horton also opines that the failure of Sunbeam and Morgan Stanley to disclose this information in the March 19 press release rendered that press release “materially misleading.” See Horton Rep. at 23. Morgan Stanley takes issue with those opinions, arguing that any characterization of “facts, representations, or omissions” as “material” renders the opinion a legal conclusion. Mot. at 4-5. Morgan Stanley is again incorrect.

The term “material adverse change,” or “material adverse effect,” is a term of art in the financial industry, and Mr. Horton is eminently qualified to give his opinion on whether certain information about Sunbeam's financial performance would be so considered. Courts have routinely held that experts may opine on whether a particular event had a “material adverse effect” on a company's finances. See Wechsler v. Hunt Health Sys., Ltd., No. 94 Civ. 8294 (PKL), 2003 WL 22358807, at *6 (S.D.N.Y. Oct 16, 2003) (admitting expert testimony of a certified public accountant that a partnership's distributions to its partners “‘had a material adverse effect on the financial well-being of the company,’” as a “factual conclusion[]” that “does not usurp the function of the Court”); Robertson Oil Co. v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 930 F.2d 1342, 1346 (8th Cir. 1991) (affirming district court's admission of expert testimony that pending litigation against defendant would have no “material adverse effect” on its financial position); see also Consolidated Edison, Inc. v. Northeast Utilities, 249 F. Supp. 2d 387, 411-13 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (holding, in case where material adverse change clause was at issue, that there was a material dispute of fact precluding summary judgment, on the basis of conflicting expert reports regarding whether change in company's finances amounted to a "material adverse change").

In addition, the simple fact that the phrase "material adverse change" is used in the merger agreement is no basis for excluding his testimony under Florida law. So long as it will "assist the trier of fact in understanding the evidence or in determining a fact in issue," Fla. Stat. Ann. § 90.702 (West 2004), expert testimony concerning the use of particular practices or terms of art in specialized fields is admissible to help the jury understand the connotations of contractual provisions. See Red Carpet Corp. of Panama City Beach v. Calvert Fire Ins. Co., 393 So. 2d 1160, 1160-61 (Fla. 1st DCA) (holding that trial court, in suit to enforce an insurance contract, erred in excluding expert testimony on industry practice relating to such provisions, which would have "better informed" the jury "as to the meaning of the policy terms" and "equipped [it] to properly resolve the issues of fact"), review denied, 401 So. 2d 608 (Fla. 1981); Aetna Ins. Co. v. Loxahatchee Marina, Inc., 236 So. 2d 12, 14 (Fla. 4th DCA 1970) ("Obscure connotations of an insurance policy can be greatly illuminated by knowledge of custom and usage in the industry as well as the expert's knowledge of terms which take on a different hue in the specialized field than in the field of general knowledge."). Like the insurance-industry experts in Red Carpet Corp. and Aetna Insurance Co., Mr. Horton is highly qualified, through training and experience, to interpret this term of art, and should be permitted to do so in explaining his opinions to the jury.

Morgan Stanley's objection to Horton's opinion regarding the failure to disclose material facts also should be rejected, for the identical reason. Mr. Horton testified that he was using the term "material" in a business sense to connote that the facts concealed by Morgan Stanley relating to the material adverse change at Sunbeam.³ Moreover, whether particular facts are "material" from a business perspective is plainly a matter within the proper scope of expert testimony in investment banking, even where legal materiality is separately at issue. See Calvin Klein Trademark Trust v. Wachner, 124 F. Supp. 2d 207, 209 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (holding that a legal determination of "materiality" presented a question that could not be "adequately resolve[d] without the benefit of an investment banker's expert assessment of which facts were 'material' from a business person's perspective").

Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, this Court should deny Morgan Stanley's Motion in Limine No. 19.

Footnotes

- 1 Ironically, the only times that the word “duty” appear in any of Mr. Horton's three reports -- it appears only twice -- are in reference to opinions offered by Mr. Rosenbloom, Morgan Stanley's expert. See Ex. A, Horton Rep. (12/28/04) at 6.
- 2 Morgan Stanley contends that investment banks have no “obligation . . . to conduct due diligence in connection with the offering of securities.” Mot. at 3 n.1. That contention is disingenuous. As Mr. Horton explained at his deposition, the investment banker's “obligation” to conduct “reasonable and adequate due diligence” in connection with an offering is a matter of “usual customary practice.” Ex. B, Horton Dep. at 84-85. An investment banker who foregoes due diligence runs too great a risk of being sued -- a lesson “that is taught to investment bankers from the very beginning.” Id. at 85. See also Ex. C., Dep of James Lurie (counsel for Morgan Stanley) at 27 (“Q. Did Morgan Stanley have any responsibility to determine that the offering memorandum was fair and accurate? A. Under the '33 Act, they have a due diligence obligation, yes.”)
- 3 See Ex. B, Horton Dep. at 271-72 (That's material, as it . . . relates to sales. . . . Each and every one of those aspects in the comfort letter resulted in material adverse changes. Then I took it the next step, which is Morgan Stanley had all this information. They were in a unique position dealing with the information and it was never disclosed.”); id. at 299 (“So, am I an expert in disclosure[s] that are made and that I feel need to be made in the context of offering documents, mergers and acquisition documents, that type of thing, the answer is yes. Do I apply a legal standard to it? Do I step back and say that disclosure is covered by -- is it legally sufficient? No, I don't make that characterization. I'm dealing with it from a business point of view.”). Mr. Horton also made clear that he was drawing the same distinction between a business term of art and a legal meaning in testifying about the occurrence of a “material adverse change.” See id. at 249-50.

Defendant, Morgan Stanley & Co. Incorporated (“Morgan Stanley”), moves to dismiss the First Amended Complaint filed by the Plaintiff Coleman (Parent) Holdings Inc. for failure to state a cause of action as to “Aiding and Abetting”; for failure to plead fraud, aiding and abetting, and conspiracy with the particularity required by Rule 1.120(b); and failure to state a cause of action for corporate liability for fraud and punitive damages. As grounds therefore, Morgan Stanley states as follows (all cited cases are attached):

No Cause of Action for Aiding and Abetting Exists Under Florida Law

1. Aiding and Abetting, as pled by Plaintiff in the First Amended Complaint and as defined in the Restatement (Second) of Torts II, section 876, does not exist as a civil tort under - the common law of Florida. Since neither this court nor the District Court of Appeal has the authority to create or recognize a new cause of action in the common law, Plaintiff cannot pursue this claim. Hoffman .v Jones, 280 So. 2d 431 (Fla. 1973); Conley v. Boyle Drug Co., 477 So. 2d 600 (Fla. 4th DCA 1985).

The only authoritative Florida case even remotely on point is Ft. Myers Development Corporation .v J. W. McWilliams Co., 122 So. 264 (Fla. 1929), a case involving the liability of a corporate promoter for breaches of fiduciary duty and fraud. In Ft. Myers, the Florida Supreme Court extended the liability of promoters of inchoate corporations for breach of trust and secret profits “to a third person, who is averred to have conspired with one of two parties, between whom fiduciary relations exist, to the injury of the other.” Id. at 269 (emphasis added). Although the court at times referred to the third person as a conspirator and as an aider and abettor in the breach of trust and fraud of the promoter, it is clear that the holding of the court is based on the predicate of a conspiracy or secret agreement between the promoter and the third person to breach a fiduciary duty owed by the promoter and carry out the fraudulent scheme. Id. at 267-269. In the 76 years following Ft. Myers, the Florida Supreme Court has not adopted or recognized “aiding and abetting fraud” as a common law tort: no such tort exists in Florida in the absence of a conspiracy.

It would be reversible error to allow Plaintiff to pursue this unrecognized common law tort and present this claim to the jury. Conley v. Boyle Drug Co., 477 So. 2d 600 (Fla. 4th DCA 1985).

Fraud, Including Fraud as an Element of Conspiracy and Aiding and Abetting, Must Be Pleaded With Particularity

2. While the First Amended Complaint drops Counts I and IV of the original Complaint, all of the paragraphs of Count I alleging the direct fraud of Morgan Stanley remain. Thus, there are two distinct frauds alleged in the First Amended Complaint and Plaintiff fails to specify which of the two form the basis of the underlying tort for the Aiding and Abetting claim and the Conspiracy claim;

3. As to the Conspiracy claim, Plaintiff fails to state with particularity:

A. what was the underlying fraud;

B. who at Morgan Stanley conspired with Dunlap and when;

C. what the agreement and common objective consisted of;

D. who at Morgan Stanley had actual knowledge of the underlying fraud; what that actual knowledge consisted of; and when and where that person in Morgan Stanley acquired that actual knowledge; and

E. who at Morgan Stanley provided the substantial assistance and when it was provided.

The requirements of Rule 1.120(b), pleading fraud with particularity, apply to averments charging conspiracy. Ocala Loan Co. v. Smith, 155 So. 2d 711 (Fla. 1st DCA 1963); General Dynamics Corp. v. Hewitt, 225 So. 2d 561 (Fla. 2d DCA 1969). Furthermore, because an underlying fraud is an element of conspiracy, a party alleging conspiracy must allege all of the elements of fraud. Cf. Buckner v. Lower Florida Keys Hosp. Dist., 403 So. 2d 1025, 1027 (Fla. 3d DCA 1981) (holding that complaint for conspiracy to defame failed to state cause of action because it did not allege publication, an element of defamation). In order for a claim of fraud to withstand a motion to dismiss, it must allege fraud with the requisite particularity required by Fla. R. Civ. P. 1.120(b), including who made the false statement, the substance of the false statement, the time frame in which it was made and the context in which the statement was made. Bankers Mutual Capital Corp. v. United States Fidelity and Guaranty Co., 784 So. 2d 485, 490 (Fla. 4th DCA 2001); Robertson v. PHF Life Insurance Co., 702 So. 2d 555 (Fla. 1st DCA 1997) (Appellants' complaint fails to specifically identify misrepresentations or omissions of fact, the time, place or manner in which they were made, and how the representations were false or misleading.).

The particularity Morgan Stanley seeks has now become especially critical, given Plaintiff's election to proceed to trial solely on the theory of what it calls the “big” fraud. Plaintiff has made that significant election, yet turned around and filed, in essence, an amended complaint identical to the one it was previously proceeding under. All the allegations against Morgan Stanley remain the same. The old Complaint fails to allege with particularity Morgan Stanley's connection to the “big” fraud. In addition, as a matter of necessary pleading - and fairness - Morgan Stanley is entitled to a straightforward particularized statement of what Plaintiff contends established such a connection: what knowledge and what acts of what people, and when and how that knowledge was supposedly obtained and the acts allegedly committed. If Plaintiff intends to claim at trial knowledge or acts not yet particularized in the First Amended Complaint, Morgan Stanley is entitled to know what it is.

4. Likewise, as to the Aiding and Abetting claim, Plaintiff fails to state with particularity who at Morgan Stanley had actual knowledge of the underlying fraud; what that actual knowledge consisted of; and when and where that person in Morgan Stanley acquired that actual knowledge. Further, Plaintiff fails to state with particularity who at Morgan Stanley provided the substantial assistance and when it was provided. These elements must be pled with particularity. See generally. Ocala Loan Co., General Dynamic Corp., Bankers Mutual Capital Corp., and Robertson .v PHF Life Ins. Co., supra.

Corporate Liability and Punitive Damages Must be Plead with Particularity

5. Plaintiff has failed to plead a cause of action for corporate liability against Morgan Stanley because there are no allegations as to what officer or managing agent conspired with Dunlap; what the agreement and common objective consisted of what officer or managing agent at had actual knowledge of the underlying fraud; when and where officer or managing agent acquired that actual knowledge; what that actual knowledge consisted of; what officer or managing agent provided the substantial assistance and when it was provided; Sunrise Olds-Toyota, Inc. v Monroe, 476 So. 2d 240, 241 (Fla. 5th DCA 1985) (Any intentional conduct attributed to a corporation must be committed by an officer, agent or employee of the corporation.).

6. Plaintiff has failed to plead a cause of action for punitive damages against Morgan Stanley, as a corporate entity, because there are no allegations as to what officer, managing agent, or employee committed the alleged intentional wrongful acts. See Schropp v. Crown Eurocars, Inc., 654 So. 2d 1158 (Fla. 1995); Sunrise Olds-Toyota, Inc. v. Monroe, 476 So. 2d 240 (Fla. 5th DCA 1985) (complaint which was vague as to what member or members of corporate employer were grossly negligent and in what capacity they acted for corporation did not make it clear that employer as opposed to some mere employee was at fault, and thus failed to state a cause of action for punitive damages).

WHEREFORE, Morgan Stanley requests that this Court enter an order granting this Motion and dismissing Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint.

COMPLAINT

Plaintiff Coleman (Parent) Holdings Inc. ("CPH") alleges the following against Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc. ("Morgan Stanley"):

NATURE OF THE ACTION

1. This action arises from Morgan Stanley's participation in a massive fraud centered on Florida-based Sunbeam Corporation ("Sunbeam"). As a direct result of that fraud, CPH was induced to accept 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock when CPH sold its 82% interest in The Coleman Company, Inc. ("Coleman") to Sunbeam on March 30, 1998. Morgan Stanley misrepresented Sunbeam's financial condition and assisted Sunbeam's CEO, Albert Dunlap, in concealing Sunbeam's true financial condition so that Sunbeam could complete the purchase of Coleman on March 30, 1998.

2. In April 1997, Morgan Stanley began serving as Sunbeam's investment banker. Morgan Stanley originally attempted to find someone to buy Sunbeam. When Morgan Stanley was unable to find a buyer, Morgan Stanley developed a strategy for Sunbeam to use its fraudulently-inflated stock to acquire a large company that Sunbeam would own and operate. Then, trading on Morgan Stanley's relationships with CPH's senior officers, Morgan Stanley found Coleman for Sunbeam. At the time of the sale to Sunbeam, Coleman was a leading manufacturer and marketer of consumer products for the worldwide outdoor recreation market, with annual revenues in excess of $1 billion. With Morgan Stanley's active and direct participation, CPH was persuaded to sell its interest in Coleman to Sunbeam in return for 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock and other consideration.

3. After Sunbeam announced plans to acquire Coleman, Morgan Stanley agreed to underwrite a $750 million debenture offering for Sunbeam. Sunbeam needed the proceeds of that debenture offering to complete the acquisition of Coleman. As Sunbeam's investment banker and as the sole underwriter for the $750 million debenture offering, Morgan Stanley received detailed and specific information concerning Sunbeam's financial condition and performance. Morgan Stanley received information that directly contradicted Sunbeam's and Morgan Stanley's assertions to CPH that Sunbeam had undergone a successful turnaround and that its financial performance had dramatically improved. By no later than March 18, 1998, Morgan Stanley knew that Sunbeam's January and February 1998 sales were only 50% of January and February 1997 sales, and Morgan Stanley also knew that the shortfall was caused by Sunbeam's practice of accelerating sales which otherwise would have occurred in 1998 in order to boost Sunbeam's income in 1997. Although Morgan Stanley and Sunbeam previously had advised CPH that Sunbeam's sales were running ahead of analysts' expectations for the first quarter, Morgan Stanley decided not to correct those material misrepresentations. Instead, in March 1998, Morgan Stanley assisted Sunbeam in concealing the problems with Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales in order to close transactions that should have been stopped before CPH and others were swindled.

4. CPH brings this action to recover for the losses it has suffered as a result of Morgan Stanley's active participation in successfully defrauding CPH. CPH's Complaint consists of four counts: Fraudulent Misrepresentation (Count I); Aiding and Abetting (Count II); Conspiracy (Count III); and Negligent Misrepresentation (Count IV).

5. CPH seeks compensatory damages for Morgan Stanley's wrongful conduct. Using Morgan Stanley's own valuation of Coleman, CPH has lost at least $485 million. In addition, CPH reserves the right to seek leave to amend its complaint pursuant to Fla. Stat. §768.72 to assert claims for an additional recovery of punitive damages in excess of $1.5 billion.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

6. This Court has jurisdiction over the subject matter of this action pursuant to Fla. Stat. § 26.012(2)(a). This Court has jurisdiction over Morgan Stanley pursuant to Fla. Stat. § 48.193.

7. Venue is proper in this district pursuant to Fla. Stat. § 47.051.

PARTIES AND OTHER KEY PARTICIPANTS

8. Plaintiff Coleman (Parent) Holdings Inc. ("CPH") directly or indirectly owned 44,067,520 shares — or approximately 82% — of Coleman prior to the transactions at issue. On March 30, 1998, Sunbeam acquired CPH's interest in Coleman. Sunbeam paid for the Coleman shares with 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam common stock and other consideration.

9. Defendant Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc. ("Morgan Stanley") is a highly sophisticated investment banking firm that provides a wide range of financial and securities services.

Among other things, Morgan Stanley provides advice on mergers and acquisitions and raises capital in the equity and debt markets. Morgan Stanley served as Sunbeam's investment banker and as the underwriter of securities issued by Sunbeam in connection with the events at issue herein.

10. Sunbeam Corporation ("Sunbeam") was a publicly-traded company headquartered in Delray Beach, Florida. Sunbeam designed and manufactured small household appliances and outdoor consumer products, which it marketed under the Sunbeam and Oster brand names. Sunbeam filed a bankruptcy petition under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code in February 2001.

11. Albert Dunlap ("Dunlap") was the Chief Executive Officer of Sunbeam from July 1996 until June 1998 when he was terminated by Sunbeam's Board of Directors. In May 2001, the United States Securities and Exchange Commission ("SEC") filed a civil injunctive suit in Miami, Florida against Dunlap based on Dunlap's fraudulent and illegal conduct at Sunbeam. In September 2002, Dunlap consented to the entry of a judgment against him in that action. The judgment, among other things, imposed a civil fine and permanently barred Dunlap from serving as an officer or director of a public company. Dunlap still resides in Boca Raton, Florida.

12. Russell Kersh ("Kersh") was the Executive Vice President of Sunbeam from July 1996 until June 1998 when he was terminated by Sunbeam's Board of Directors. In May 2001, the SEC filed a civil injunctive suit in Miami, Florida against Kersh based on Kersh's fraudulent and illegal conduct at Sunbeam. In September 2002, Kersh consented to the entry of a judgment against him in that action. The judgment, among other things, imposed a civil fine and permanently barred Kersh from serving as an officer or director of a public company. Upon information and belief, Kersh still resides in Boca Raton, Florida.

13. Arthur Andersen LLP ("Andersen") provided outside accounting services to Sunbeam through its West Palm Beach, Florida office. Andersen auditors provided information concerning Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales and earnings to Morgan Stanley. Upon information and belief, several of the Andersen auditors who provided information to Morgan Stanley concerning Sunbeam, including Lawrence Bornstein, still reside in Florida.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

A. Sunbeam's Lackluster Performance (1995-1996).

14. Sunbeam designed and manufactured outdoor and household consumer products, which it marketed under the Sunbeam and Oster brand names. Sunbeam's products included small kitchen appliances, humidifiers, electric blankets, and grills. Many of the country's leading retail stores, including Wal-Mart, Target, and Home Depot, were among Sunbeam's major customers.

15. Despite Sunbeam's well-known brands and strong customer base, its financial performance was disappointing. In 1994, Sunbeam earned $1.30 per share. In 1995, Sunbeam's earnings declined to $0.61 per share. In 1996, Sunbeam's earnings continued to suffer. On March 22, 1996, Sunbeam issued an early warning that its first quarter earnings would be well under analysts' expectations and down from first quarter 1995. Shortly after issuing the March 22 earnings warning, Sunbeam's Chief Executive Officer and two of Sunbeam's directors announced their resignations. Less than a week later, Sunbeam announced that its first quarter 1996 earnings had plunged 42% from first quarter 1995 levels. Sunbeam also announced that its second quarter 1996 earnings would be lower than its second quarter 1995 earnings.

16. Sunbeam's disappointing earnings caused its stock price to plummet. During 1995, the price at which Sunbeam's stock traded fell 40%, from a high of $25-1/2. In 1996, Sunbeam's stock price continued to decline until it reached a low of $12-1/4 in July.

B. Sunbeam Hires A New Management Team (July 1996).

17. On July 18, 1996, Sunbeam's board of directors hired Albert Dunlap as Sunbeam's new Chief Executive Officer. Based upon brief terms as Chief Executive Officer of other publicly traded companies, including Scott Paper Company ("Scott Paper"), Dunlap was viewed as a "turnaround specialist" — that is, someone who could take a poorly performing company and significantly increase its value by "turning around" its financial performance. Because Dunlap touted the benefits from firing large numbers of employees and closing large numbers of plants, Dunlap became widely known as "Chainsaw Al." Dunlap lived in Boca Raton, Florida, and one of his first tasks at Sunbeam was to consolidate the company's six headquarters into one located in Delray Beach, Florida.

18. Immediately after joining Sunbeam, Dunlap hired Kersh as Sunbeam's Chief Financial Officer. Kersh had teamed with Dunlap for over 15 years, serving as a senior executive with Dunlap at other companies, including Scott Paper. Dunlap also brought in several other hand-picked executives to make up his senior management team.

19. Dunlap and his senior management team entered into employment agreements with Sunbeam. Under those agreements, Dunlap and his senior management team stood to make tens of millions of dollars if they were able to boost Sunbeam's apparent value and then sell Sunbeam to another company at a premium.

C. Dunlap Cooks The Books At Sunbeam (1996-1997).

20. In order to convince other companies that they should want to purchase Sunbeam, Dunlap needed to improve Sunbeam's reported financial performance quickly and dramatically. It was, of course, no small task to transform Sunbeam from a poorly performing company, with weak sales and declining profits, into a strong company with growing sales and soaring profits. In fact, as the world later learned, Dunlap did not achieve that change in Sunbeam's fortunes. Instead, Dunlap created the illusion of a dramatic turnaround at Sunbeam by engaging in what SEC officials subsequently described as a "case study" in financial fraud.

21. Dunlap had a three-step plan at Sunbeam. In the first step, Dunlap overstated Sunbeam's financial problems so that Sunbeam appeared to be in worse shape than it really was. After making Sunbeam look worse, Dunlap moved to step two, where he made Sunbeam look more valuable than it really was by inflating Sunbeam's sales and engaging in other earnings manipulations. In step three, Dunlap planned to sell Sunbeam to another company before it became apparent that the "improved" results were fictional. By doing so, Dunlap would make tens of millions of dollars and would be free to blame his successor for any subsequent problems.

1. Step One: Make Sunbeam Appear Worse Than It Really Was (1996).

22. Dunlap began implementing his strategy soon after his arrival at Sunbeam in 1996. Claiming to be engaged in a clean-up of Sunbeam's financial problems, Dunlap recorded artificially high reserves and booked expenses that should not have been recorded until later periods. Both of those actions made Sunbeam's financial condition appear worse than it really was, thus lowering the benchmark for measuring Sunbeam's performance in future years.

23. The overstated reserves also provided Dunlap a means by which he could inflate Sunbeam's future results during the second step of his plan. Dunlap later could "re-evaluate" and release millions of dollars from the overstated reserves to boost income in later periods. The income from released reserves contributed to the illusion of a rapid turnaround in Sunbeam's performance. Using inflated reserves to enhance income in future periods is a fraudulent practice and overstated reserves are commonly called "cookie jar" reserves.

2. Step Two: Create The False Appearance Of Dramatically Improved Performance (1997).

24. After making Sunbeam look worse than it really was in 1996, Dunlap manipulated Sunbeam's sales and expenses in 1997 to create the false appearance of quarter after quarter improvement in financial performance. For example, Dunlap caused Sunbeam to inflate its sales by engaging in phony "bill and hold" sales. Under this practice, Sunbeam recognized revenues from "sales," even though customers did not actually pay for or even take delivery of the products, which continued to sit in Sunbeam's own warehouses. Although Sunbeam recorded the "bill and hold" sales as if they were current sales, they were, in reality, simply sales stolen from future quarters. In 1997, phony "bill and hold" sales added approximately $29 million in sales and $4.5 million in income.

25. Throughout 1997, Sunbeam also engaged in a sales practice known as "channel stuffing" — accelerating sales that otherwise would occur in a later period, sometimes by offering steep discounts or other extraordinary customer inducements. On the grand scale employed by Sunbeam, channel stuffing inevitably leads to major sales shortfalls in later periods when

“stuffed” customers simply stop buying. Sunbeam’s senior sales officer referred to Sunbeam’s unsustainable practice of inflating performance through accelerated sales as the “doom loop.”

26. Dunlap further “enhanced” Sunbeam’s income in 1997 by causing Sunbeam to record a “profit” of $10 million from a sham sale of its warranty and spare parts business. Dunlap also made Sunbeam appear to be more successful than it really was by reaching into the “cookie jar,” reversing inflated reserves, and recording $35 million as income. Sunbeam’s 1997 profit margins also looked better than they really were because Dunlap already had recorded millions of dollars of 1997 expenses in 1996.

27. In October 1997, Dunlap announced that Sunbeam’s “turnaround” was complete. Compared to the third quarter of 1996, Sunbeam’s third quarter 1997 performance was remarkable. In the third quarter of 1996, Sunbeam had reported a loss of $18.1 million. In the third quarter of 1997, however, Sunbeam reported earnings of $34.5 million — an extraordinary turnaround from substantial losses to hefty profits. Sunbeam’s combined results for the first three quarters showed dramatic improvement as well. Sunbeam reported that its profits for the first nine months were up tenfold over the same period the year before — from $6.5 million in 1996 to $67.7 million in 1997. Sunbeam’s reversal of fortune caused a spectacular increase in the price of its stock. In July 1996, when Dunlap was hired, Sunbeam’s shares traded at $12-1/4. By October 1997, Sunbeam’s shares had risen to $49-13/16.

3. Step Three: Cash In Before The Turnaround Fraud Is Discovered (1997-1998).

28. With steps one and two successfully completed, Dunlap was more than eager to complete the final step of his scheme: to sell Sunbeam to another company and collect tens of millions of dollars for himself before the outside world could learn the truth about Sunbeam's phony "turnaround." To accomplish that third and final step, Dunlap needed an investment banking firm to serve as his skill. Morgan Stanley was pleased to play that role.

D. Morgan Stanley Vies For A Spot On Dunlap's Team (April - September 1997).

29. When Dunlap announced in early 1997 that he would begin interviewing investment bankers, Morgan Stanley immediately began pursuing the job. Although Morgan Stanley had no previous relationship with Sunbeam, one of Morgan Stanley's senior executives, William Strong, had worked closely with Dunlap on other large transactions between 1986 and 1993, when Strong was employed by Salomon Brothers.

30. Morgan Stanley knew that it was competing with other investment bankers, including Mark Davis, for Dunlap's business. Davis was the head of the mergers and acquisitions department at Chase Securities and had worked previously with Strong at Salomon Brothers. Davis had a very strong relationship with Dunlap, and Davis had served as Dunlap's investment advisor on numerous transactions, including Dunlap's sale of Scott Paper. Shortly after arriving at Sunbeam, Dunlap hired Davis to handle the sale of Sunbeam's furniture business.

31. Morgan Stanley put together a team headed by its Vice Chairman, Bruce Fiedorek, and Strong. Beginning in April 1997, Morgan Stanley's personnel traveled to Sunbeam's offices in Delray Beach, Florida to study Sunbeam and woo Dunlap. After months of uncompensated work, in September 1997, Morgan Stanley finally persuaded Dunlap to name Morgan Stanley as Sunbeam's exclusive investment banker. Dunlap instructed Morgan Stanley to find a buyer for Sunbeam. Morgan Stanley knew that if it failed to deliver a major transaction, Morgan Stanley would not be compensated for the extensive work it had performed for Sunbeam. Morgan Stanley also knew that Davis and Chase Securities were standing by — ready and willing to reclaim their position as Dunlap's investment banker of choice.

E. Morgan Stanley Seeks A Buyer For Sunbeam (Fall 1997).

32. Throughout the fall of 1997, Morgan Stanley aggressively searched for a buyer for Sunbeam. Morgan Stanley put together extensive and detailed materials to use in marketing Sunbeam to potential buyers. Morgan Stanley pitched the transaction to more than 10 companies — including Gillette, Colgate, Sara Lee, Rubbermaid, Whirlpool, and Black & Decker — that Morgan Stanley hoped might have an interest in acquiring Sunbeam. Morgan Stanley, however, was not able to find a buyer.

33. As 1998 approached, the pressure on Dunlap increased. Dunlap was aware that Sunbeam would be unable to sustain the appearance of a successful turnaround in 1998 because Sunbeam had stolen sales from 1998 to boost 1997's numbers and the "cookie jar" reserves had been depleted. Dunlap needed a way to conceal Sunbeam's phony turnaround until a buyer could be found. Morgan Stanley provided the solution to Dunlap's problem.

F. Unable To Find A Buyer For Sunbeam, Morgan Stanley Looks For An Acquisition (December 1997).

34. Morgan Stanley knew that its failure to find a buyer for Sunbeam could prove fatal to the relationship it had worked so hard to establish with Dunlap. As the pressure on Dunlap increased, the pressure on Morgan Stanley increased as well. Although Morgan Stanley was not able to find a buyer for Sunbeam, Morgan Stanley responded with a plan that would allow Dunlap to conceal his fraud. Morgan Stanley recommended that Sunbeam acquire other companies, using Sunbeam's stock, which was fraudulently inflated, as the "currency" that would be used to pay for the acquisitions.

35. Morgan Stanley's strategy was doubly deceptive. First, Morgan Stanley's acquisition strategy would allow Dunlap to consolidate Sunbeam's results with those of the newly-acquired companies. That would help Dunlap camouflage Sunbeam's results and make it difficult to detect any shortfall in Sunbeam's performance. Dunlap simply could label any problems that were detected as attributable to the poor performance of the acquired companies or as a temporary "blip" caused by the distraction of integrating the acquired companies with Sunbeam. Second, Morgan Stanley's strategy would allow Dunlap to take new massive restructuring charges (purportedly relating to the acquisitions) and thus create more "cookie jar" reserves that could be tapped to bolster the future earnings of the combined companies.

36. Morgan Stanley identified Coleman as one of the key potential acquisition targets. CPH owned 82% of Coleman's stock. Morgan Stanley searched the ranks of its investment bankers to locate those with the best access to CPH. Drawing on relationships between some of Morgan Stanley's investment bankers and senior CPH officers, Morgan Stanley set about trying to persuade CPH to sell its interest in Coleman to Sunbeam — and, most importantly, to accept Sunbeam stock as consideration.

37. Morgan Stanley laid the groundwork for a meeting to take place in December 1997 in Palm Beach, Florida between Dunlap and Kersh and representatives of CPH. In advance of the Palm Beach meeting, Morgan Stanley provided materials to Sunbeam to prepare Sunbeam for the meeting. Morgan Stanley also met with Kersh and other Sunbeam personnel to prepare for the Palm Beach meeting. However, Dunlap nearly scuttled Morgan Stanley's carefully crafted plan at the outset. During the December 1997 Palm Beach meeting, when CPH rejected Dunlap's initial all-stock offer, Dunlap became so angry that he cursed and ranted at the CPH representatives and stormed out.

G. Morgan Stanley Revives The Deal And Negotiates With CPH (January-February 1998).

38. Dunlap's tantrum appeared to kill any chance that CPH would sell its interest in Coleman to Sunbeam. Morgan Stanley, however, worked to revive the discussions. Drawing again on Morgan Stanley's relationships with CPH officers, Morgan Stanley was able to restart the discussions with CPH with the promise that Dunlap would be kept away from the negotiating table. Thereafter, Morgan Stanley, through Managing Directors Strong, James Stynes, and Robert Kitts, led the discussions with CPH on Sunbeam's behalf.

39. Morgan Stanley knew that it had to persuade CPH not only to sell Coleman, but also to accept Sunbeam stock — ultimately, 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock — as a major part of the purchase price. During the course of negotiations, Morgan Stanley prepared and provided CPH with false financial and business information about Sunbeam designed to create the appearance that Sunbeam was prospering and that Sunbeam's stock had great value. For example, Morgan Stanley provided CPH with false 1996 and 1997 sales and revenue figures, as well as false projections that Sunbeam could not expect to achieve. Together, in face-to-face discussions, Morgan Stanley and Sunbeam assured CPH that (a) Sunbeam would meet or exceed its first quarter 1998 earnings estimates; (b) analysts' 1998 earnings estimates for Sunbeam were correct; and (c) Sunbeam's plan to earn $2.20 per share in 1998 was easily achievable and probably low. Morgan Stanley and Sunbeam also falsely assured CPH that Sunbeam's "early buy" sales program would not hurt Sunbeam's future revenues. However, the "early buy" program was one of Sunbeam's revenue acceleration programs — and the devastating effects of Sunbeam's revenue acceleration programs already had begun to materialize at Sunbeam. Sunbeam's January and February 1998 sales were down drastically, although those results were not disclosed to CPH or the public. To the contrary, Morgan Stanley and Sunbeam together specifically advised CPH that Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales were "tracking fine" and running ahead of analysts' estimates.

40. Before the truth was revealed, Morgan Stanley persuaded CPH to sell its shares in Coleman to Sunbeam and to accept 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock as part of the consideration. Based on the price at which Sunbeam's stock was trading, the 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock were worth approximately $600 million.

H. Morgan Stanley Advises Sunbeam's Board On The Acquisition (February 27, 1998).

41. On February 27, 1998, Sunbeam's Board of Directors met at Morgan Stanley's offices to consider the purchase of Coleman, as negotiated by Morgan Stanley.

42. At the February 27, 1998 meeting, Morgan Stanley made an extensive presentation to Sunbeam's Board concerning the proposed transaction. Numerous Morgan Stanley representatives, including Managing Directors Strong, Kitts, Stynes, Ruth Porat, and Vikram Pandit, attended the meeting.

43. Morgan Stanley presented Sunbeam's board with Morgan Stanley's opinion on the value of Coleman. Using a discounted cash flow analysis, which Morgan Stanley represented was the best gauge of stand-alone economic value and the best method of capturing the unique value of Coleman, Morgan Stanley valued CPH's Coleman stock at a range of $31.06 to $53.24 per Coleman share. CPH's 44,067,520 Coleman shares were worth, therefore, between $1.369 billion and $2.346 billion.

44. Following Morgan Stanley's presentation, Sunbeam's Board of Directors voted to acquire Coleman on the very favorable terms that Morgan Stanley had negotiated.

I. Morgan Stanley Develops Sunbeam's Public Announcement Of The Coleman Acquisition (February 28-March 1, 1998).

45. Morgan Stanley spent the following weekend developing Sunbeam's public relations strategy to announce the Coleman transaction. Morgan Stanley scripted the points for Dunlap to make in a conference call with analysts. Morgan Stanley also crafted a list of "key media messages" for Dunlap to use in his communications with the press. On Sunday, March 1, 1998, Morgan Stanley spoke with a reporter for the Wall Street Journal to inform him that Sunbeam would announce its acquisition of Coleman the following morning.

46. Sunbeam announced its acquisition of Coleman on Monday, March 2, 1998, prior to the opening of the financial markets. Consistent with Morgan Stanley's valuation, investors viewed Sunbeam's purchase of Coleman — and the price that Sunbeam had paid — very favorably. The day before the acquisition was announced, Sunbeam's stock closed at $41-3/4. In the days following Sunbeam's announcement of the transaction, Sunbeam's stock rose approximately 25%, to a high of $52.

J. Morgan Stanley Serves As The Underwriter For Sunbeam's $750 Million Convertible Debenture Offering (March 1998).

47. Dunlap knew that Sunbeam needed to raise funds to pay the cash portion of the acquisition consideration. Dunlap also knew that Sunbeam needed cash to purchase two other smaller companies in addition to Coleman. Morgan Stanley recommended that Sunbeam raise funds through a $500 million offering of convertible subordinated debentures. To assure the offering's success, Morgan Stanley lent its name to the offering. Indeed, Morgan Stanley agreed to serve as the sole underwriter for the offering.

48. The money raised from the sale of the debentures was used by Sunbeam to complete the acquisition of Coleman.

49. Unbeknownst to CPH or the public, Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales were a small fraction of the financial community's expectations for the quarter. If Dunlap could consolidate Sunbeam's sales with Coleman's sales, Dunlap knew that he could obscure Sunbeam's actual first quarter sales. As a result, Dunlap was especially anxious to complete the acquisition of Coleman before Sunbeam announced its first quarter 1998 sales. Indeed, the success of the scheme depended upon Sunbeam's ability to complete the Coleman acquisition before Sunbeam's first quarter results were announced. To satisfy Dunlap's objectives, Morgan Stanley moved up the launch date of the offering.

50. The debentures were marketed to investors at a series of "road show" meetings and conference calls arranged by Morgan Stanley. Morgan Stanley prepared and distributed a memorandum for its sales force to use in marketing the debentures to investors. Morgan Stanley also developed the script for Dunlap and Kersh to deliver during the road show. In those materials,

Morgan Stanley misrepresented Sunbeam's financial performance and emphasized Dunlap's purported "turnaround" accomplishments.

51. Morgan Stanley launched the debenture offering with a research analyst presentation to the Morgan Stanley sales force. As part of Morgan Stanley's growing relationship with Sunbeam, one of Morgan Stanley's top-rated research analysts planned to initiate equity coverage of Sunbeam. That Morgan Stanley analyst had modeled values for Sunbeam's acquisition of Coleman that were higher than even Sunbeam's management had predicted.

52. Although Morgan Stanley initially planned to sell $500 million worth of debentures, Morgan Stanley's efforts were so successful that the size of the offering was increased to $750 million on March 19, 1998 — the day of the last road show. The debentures were sold to investors nationwide, including investors based in Florida.

K. Morgan Stanley Is Told That Sunbeam's First Quarter Sales Are Down Dramatically (March 17 -18, 1998).

53. As Sunbeam's investment banker and the sole underwriter for the debenture offering, Morgan Stanley had a duty to investigate Sunbeam's finances and business operations. As a matter of law, that duty included an obligation to verify management's claims about Sunbeam's finances and business. Morgan Stanley, which had been working hand-in-hand with Sunbeam for almost a year and had traveled to Sunbeam's Florida offices, repeatedly asserted that it had satisfied that duty.

54. Strong, who was one of the senior Morgan Stanley investment bankers involved, has admitted in sworn testimony that he may have had more than 100 telephone conversations with Dunlap and Kersh (whose offices were in Sunbeam's Delray Beach headquarters) and that Strong was "sure" that he would have been apprised of Sunbeam's financial performance during the first two months of 1998.

55. With the $750 million debenture offering and the Coleman transaction set to close at the end of March 1998, Sunbeam's Florida-based outside auditors were shocked that Morgan Stanley had not asked them about Sunbeam's financial performance for first quarter 1998. Sunbeam's auditors were alarmed because Sunbeam's first quarter results were a disaster, but Dunlap, Kersh, and Morgan Stanley were telling CPH and the investing public, including investors in Florida, that Sunbeam's turnaround was a success, that Sunbeam's sales for the first quarter of 1998 were ahead of the expectations of outside financial analysts, and that Sunbeam was poised for record sales.

56. On March 17, Sunbeam's auditors forced the issue. From their Florida offices, Sunbeam's auditors sent Morgan Stanley a letter reporting that Sunbeam's net sales through January 1998 were down 60% — $28 million in January 1998, as compared to $73 million in January 1997. The March 17 letter explained that the decline was "primarily due to the . . . new early buy program for grills which accelerated grill sales into the fourth quarter of fiscal 1997."

57. The next day, Morgan Stanley was faxed a schedule from Sunbeam's Florida office that showed that Sunbeam's January and February 1998 net sales totaled $72 million, an amount that was 50% lower than Sunbeam's January and February 1997 net sales of $143.5 million.

58. Based on information that Sunbeam and Morgan Stanley had disseminated, CPH, investors, and Wall Street analysts were anticipating that Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 net sales would be in the range of $285 million to $295 million. Sales in that range would have been approximately 15% higher than first quarter 1997 sales. Sunbeam's January and February 1998 sales, however, totaled barely 25% of $285 million. As Sunbeam's outside auditors advised Morgan Stanley in writing, the sales drop-off was caused by Sunbeam's sales acceleration program. The information put into Morgan Stanley's hands on March 17 and March 18 showed that Morgan Stanley's and Sunbeam's assertions to CPH and other investors were false. Contrary to what Morgan Stanley and Sunbeam had represented, Sunbeam had not undergone a successful turnaround, Sunbeam's financial performance had not dramatically improved, and Sunbeam's performance in 1998 was not better than Wall Street analysts' expectations. It was imperative, therefore, that the truth be kept from CPH until the Coleman transaction closed at the end of March 1998.

L. Morgan Stanley Assists Sunbeam In Concealing The Fraud: The False March 19, 1998 Press Release.

59. Morgan Stanley did not disclose Sunbeam's disastrous first quarter, Morgan Stanley did not insist that Sunbeam disclose its disastrous first quarter, Morgan Stanley did not correct any of the false and misleading statements it and Sunbeam had made to CPH about Sunbeam's business or performance, and Morgan Stanley did not suspend any of the critical transactions that were scheduled to close in the next two weeks. Instead, with Morgan Stanley's knowledge and assistance, Sunbeam prepared and issued a false press release on March 19, 1998 that affirmatively misstated and concealed Sunbeam's true condition.

60. The March 19, 1998 press release stated: "Sunbeam Corporation . . . said today that it is possible that its net sales for the first quarter of 1998 may be lower than the range of Wall Street analysts' estimates for $285 million to $295 million, but net sales are expected to exceed 1997 first quarter net sales of $253.4 million. . . . The shortfall from analysts' estimates, if any, would be due to changes in inventory management and order patterns at certain of the Company's major retail customers. The Company further stated that based on the strength of its new product offerings and powerful brand names, it remains highly confident about the overall sales outlook for its products for the entire year.”

61. As Morgan Stanley was fully aware, the March 19, 1998 press release was false, misleading, and failed to disclose material information. The March 19, 1998 press release failed to disclose Sunbeam’s actual January and February 1998 sales or the true reasons for the poor results. Instead, the press release held out the false possibility that Sunbeam still could achieve sales of $285 million to $295 million and suggested that, if any shortfall occurred, that shortfall would be due to the fact that certain retailers had decided to defer first quarter purchases to the second quarter. The press release also assured that Sunbeam at least would exceed first quarter 1997 net sales of $253.4 million.

62. Based on information that Morgan Stanley had in its hands on March 18, 1998, it was obvious that Sunbeam would not achieve sales of $285 million to $295 million and that Sunbeam’s first quarter 1998 sales would be below its first quarter 1997 numbers. To simply meet 1997 first quarter sales, Sunbeam needed sales of $123.3 million over the 12 remaining days of the quarter — an average of $10.28 million per day. Sales of $10.28 million per day would be 306% more than the average per day sales in March 1997, and 281% more than the average per day sales for the first 17 days of March 1998. Furthermore, Morgan Stanley knew that the shortfall from analysts’ estimates was not caused by retailers’ deciding to defer purchases from the first quarter of 1998 to the second quarter, as the press release indicated. Rather, as Sunbeam’s outside auditors had advised Morgan Stanley in writing, the collapse in first quarter sales was caused by Sunbeam’s acceleration of 1998 sales into the fourth quarter of 1997.

63. After Sunbeam's false press release was issued, Morgan Stanley stood arm-in-arm with Sunbeam while Dunlap and Kersh told CPH, analysts, and investors that the March 19, 1998 release was a purely cautionary statement because some first quarter 1998 sales might simply "spillover" into the second quarter and that Sunbeam still believed that it actually would meet analysts' estimates of $285 million to $295 million in first quarter 1998 sales.

64. Morgan Stanley knew that a full and truthful disclosure of Sunbeam's first quarter sales would doom the debenture offering, which was scheduled to close on March 25, 1998, and Sunbeam's purchase of Coleman, which was scheduled to close on March 30, 1998.

65. As Morgan Stanley was fully aware, the written contract between CPH and Sunbeam gave CPH the express legal right to refuse to close the sale if there was a material adverse change in Sunbeam's "business, results of operation or financial condition." Morgan Stanley knew that CPH would exercise its right and walk away from the transaction if CPH became aware of the extent and reasons for Sunbeam's disastrous first quarter results.

66. Furthermore, if the transactions did not close, Morgan Stanley would not be paid its $10.28 million fee for the Coleman acquisition or its $22.5 million fee for underwriting the subordinated debenture offering. Morgan Stanley also knew that Sunbeam would promptly replace Morgan Stanley with another investment banking firm – such as the Chase Securities team led by Mark Davis. Everything, therefore, depended on closing the Coleman acquisition before CPH learned the truth.

M. Sunbeam's Auditors Advise Morgan Stanley That The March 19, 1998 Release Is False.

67. Although Sunbeam's outside auditors already had made it perfectly clear to Morgan Stanley that Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales were a disaster, Morgan Stanley seemed intent on proceeding based upon the false March 19, 1998 press release.

68. One of Sunbeam's senior outside auditors, Lawrence Bornstein, has testified under oath that on March 19, 1998, he told Morgan Stanley's John Tyree that the statement in Sunbeam's March 19, 1998 press release — that Sunbeam would at least exceed first quarter 1997 sales of $253.4 million — was not credible: "Just do the math . . . they've done a million dollars in sales the first 70 days of the year and now they need to do $10 million worth of sales for the next . . . I think it was 11 days . . . I mean, something ridiculous." Bornstein also told Tyree: "I've been to every shipping dock domestically, I've been to Hattiesburg, I've been to Neosho, I've been to Mexico City, and I don't think these guys can physically ship this much stuff."

N. Morgan Stanley Marches Ahead With The Closings (March 19-March 30, 1998).

69. Morgan Stanley knew that the March 19 press release was false and misleading. Despite that knowledge and Bornstein's explicit statements, Morgan Stanley continued with its preparations to close the debenture offering on March 25, 1998 and the Coleman acquisition on March 30, 1998.

70. As part of those preparations, on March 24, 1998, Morgan Stanley's Tyree spoke by telephone with Sunbeam's Kersh, who was located in Sunbeam's Delray Beach offices, to obtain an updated report concerning Sunbeam's first quarter performance. By the time of that March 24, 1998 call, Sunbeam had fallen even further behind first quarter 1997 sales. As of March 18, 1998, Sunbeam needed to achieve average sales of $10.28 million per day, over 12 days, to reach first quarter 1997 sales. Sunbeam's sales between March 18 and March 24, 1998 had averaged only $6.81 million per day — well short of the $10.28 million per day that Sunbeam needed to achieve. Sunbeam's March 18 through March 24, 1998 sales were further proof that Sunbeam's March 19, 1998 press release was false and that Sunbeam would not achieve first quarter 1998 sales in excess of first quarter 1997 sales.

71. Morgan Stanley also knew no later than March 25, 1998, if not much earlier, that Sunbeam's earnings for the first quarter of 1998 were going to miss Wall Street analysts' earnings expectations, which were in the range of $0.28 to $0.31 per share (excluding one-time charges). Sunbeam's outside auditors advised Morgan Stanley on March 25 that Sunbeam had suffered a $41.19 million loss during the first two months of 1998, including a one-time charge of $30.2 million. Even excluding that one-time charge, Sunbeam's loss for the first two months was $0.13 per share. To achieve first quarter 1998 operating earnings of $0.28 per share, which were at the low end of analyst expectations, Sunbeam needed to realize a profit of $35.5 million during March 1998 alone. A net profit of $35.5 million in March was 500% more than Sunbeam's net profit for the entire first quarter of 1997. In fact, Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 earnings fell far short of Wall Street's expectations. Although Sunbeam's first quarter earnings were material, that information was not disclosed to CPH or the public until after the closing of the Coleman transaction on March 30, 1998.

O. Morgan Stanley Allows The Debenture Offering And The Coleman Acquisition To Close (March 25-30, 1998).

72. Having directly participated in misleading CPH and other investors, Morgan Stanley had a duty to disclose the true facts before the closing of the debenture offering and the Coleman acquisition. Morgan Stanley also could have required Sunbeam to postpone the closings of those transactions until the necessary disclosures were made. Morgan Stanley did neither. Instead, Morgan Stanley marched forward and closed the $750 million debenture offering on March 25, 1998, which was needed to close the Coleman transaction, and assisted Sunbeam in closing the acquisition of Coleman on March 30, 1998.

73. Morgan Stanley was richly rewarded for facilitating Sunbeam's fraud. Morgan Stanley received $22.5 million for the subordinated debenture offering and $10.28 million for the Coleman acquisition. Morgan Stanley would have received nothing if the transactions had failed to close.

P. Sunbeam's Fraud Is Revealed, Causing The Market Value Of Sunbeam's Stock To Plummet.

74. On April 3, 1998 — just four days after the Coleman transaction closed — Sunbeam announced that sales for the first quarter of 1998 would be approximately 5% below the $253.4 million in sales that Sunbeam reported in the first quarter of 1997. In other words, Sunbeam was expecting sales in the range of $240 million. That sales shortfall was shocking news, particularly in view of assurances provided by Sunbeam both in and after its March 19, 1998 press release that $285 million to $295 million of sales was still a real possibility. The April 3, 1998 press release also disclosed that Sunbeam expected to show a loss for the quarter, although the release did not disclose the magnitude of the loss or how much of the loss was attributable to operating earnings as opposed to one-time charges. Sunbeam's news stunned CPH and the market. On April 3rd, Sunbeam's stock price dropped 25% — from $45-9/16 to $34-3/8.

75. Sunbeam's actual first quarter 1998 performance was even worse than Sunbeam disclosed on April 3, 1998. The April 3, 1998 release indicated that Sunbeam's first quarter sales were in the range of $240 million. In fact, Sunbeam's first quarter sales were $224.5 million. Sunbeam obscured the true shortfall by extending its quarter from March 29 to March 31, 1998 — thereby adding two more days of Sunbeam sales. Sunbeam also failed to disclose that it had included two days of Coleman sales after the Coleman transaction closed on March 30. Further, Sunbeam inflated first quarter 1998 sales with $29 million of new phony "bill and hold" sales.

76. Just as Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales had been a disaster, so, too, were Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 earnings. Morgan Stanley and Sunbeam had represented to CPH that Sunbeam would achieve or exceed analyst first quarter 1998 earnings estimates. At the time of that representation, the consensus among analysts was that Sunbeam would enjoy first quarter 1998 earnings of $0.33 per share. However, on May 9, 1998, Sunbeam disclosed that it would record a first quarter loss of $0.09 per share (excluding one-time charges) — more than $0.40 per share lower than CPH had been told to expect.

77. Within weeks, Dunlap's fraudulent scheme began to unravel. In June 1998, after a number of news articles critical of Sunbeam's practices, Sunbeam's Board of Directors launched an internal investigation. That investigation led quickly to the firing of Dunlap and Kersh, and, subsequently, to a restatement of Sunbeam's financial statements for 1996, 1997, and the first quarter of 1998.

COUNT I

Fraudulent Misrepresentation

78. CPH repeats and realleges the allegations of paragraphs 1 through 77 above as if set forth fully herein.

79. As detailed above, Morgan Stanley participated in a scheme to mislead CPH and others and cover up the massive fraud at Sunbeam until Morgan Stanley and Sunbeam could close the purchase of Coleman. Morgan Stanley provided CPH with false information concerning Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial performance, its business operations, and the value of Sunbeam's stock. Morgan Stanley also actively assisted Sunbeam in concealing Sunbeam's disastrous first quarter 1998 sales and earnings and the true reasons for Sunbeam's poor performance.

80. Morgan Stanley knew that its statements to CPH were materially false and misleading and omitted the true facts.

81. Morgan Stanley intended that CPH rely on Morgan Stanley's representations concerning Sunbeam.

82. In agreeing to accept approximately 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock in connection with the sale of CPH's interest in Coleman, CPH reasonably and justifiably relied upon Morgan Stanley's representations concerning Sunbeam.

83. As a result of Morgan Stanley's misconduct, CPH has suffered damages in excess of $485 million.

COUNT II

Aiding And Abetting Fraud

84. CPH repeats and realleges the allegations of paragraphs 1 through 77 above as if set forth fully herein.

85. As detailed above, Dunlap engaged in a fraudulent scheme to inflate the price of Sunbeam's stock by improperly manipulating Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 performance, by falsely asserting that Sunbeam had successfully "turned around," and by concealing the collapse of Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales and earnings and the reasons for Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 performance.

86. As detailed above, Morgan Stanley knew of Dunlap's fraudulent scheme and helped to conceal it until after Sunbeam could close the purchase of Coleman.

87. As detailed above, Morgan Stanley provided substantial assistance to Dunlap and Sunbeam, including: (a) concealing Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales collapse; (b) assisting with the false March 19, 1998 press release; (c) arranging road shows and meetings with prospective debenture purchasers at which Morgan Stanley, Dunlap, and others made false statements concerning Sunbeam's financial condition and business operations; (d) preparing and disseminating the preliminary and final offering memoranda for the subordinated debenture offering, both of which contained false information concerning Sunbeam's financial condition and business operations; (e) providing CPH with false financial and business information concerning Sunbeam; (f) scripting Dunlap's false public statements concerning Sunbeam's acquisition of Coleman; (g) persuading CPH to sell its interest in Coleman and to accept 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock and other consideration; and (h) underwriting the $750 million convertible debenture offering, proceeds from which were used to fund Sunbeam's purchase of Coleman.

88. As a result of Morgan Stanley's misconduct, CPH has suffered damages in excess of $485 million.

COUNT III

Conspiracy

89. CPH repeats and realleges the allegations of paragraphs 1 through 77 above as if set forth fully herein.

90. As detailed above, Morgan Stanley conspired with Dunlap and other senior Sunbeam executives to conceal the truth about Sunbeam's financial performance and business operations.

91. As detailed above, Morgan Stanley committed overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy, including: (a) concealing Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales collapse; (b) assisting with the false March 19, 1998 press release; (c) arranging road shows and meetings with prospective debenture purchasers at which Morgan Stanley, Dunlap, and others made false statements concerning Sunbeam's financial condition and business operations; (d) preparing and disseminating the preliminary and final offering memoranda for the subordinated debenture offering, both of which contained false information concerning Sunbeam's financial condition and business operations; (e) providing CPH with false financial and business information concerning Sunbeam; (f) scripting Dunlap's false public statements concerning Sunbeam's acquisition of Coleman; (g) persuading CPH to sell its interest in Coleman and to accept 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock and other consideration; and (h) underwriting the $750 million convertible debenture offering, proceeds from which were used to fund Sunbeam's purchase of Coleman.

92. As a result of Morgan Stanley's misconduct, CPH has suffered damages in excess of $485 million.

COUNT IV

Negligent Misrepresentation

93. CPH repeats and realleges the allegations of paragraphs 1 through 77 above as if set forth fully herein.

94. As detailed above, Morgan Stanley negotiated directly with CPH concerning the transfer of CPH's 82% interest in Coleman to Sunbeam. During the course of Morgan Stanley's dealings with CPH, Morgan Stanley provided CPH with information concerning Sunbeam, which, in the exercise of reasonable care, Morgan Stanley would have known was materially false and misleading. Morgan Stanley failed to use reasonable care in providing CPH with truthful and accurate information concerning Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial performance, Sunbeam's business operations, the value of Sunbeam's stock, and Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 performance.

95. As detailed above, Morgan Stanley intended for CPH to rely, and CPH justifiably relied, on the information provided by Morgan Stanley.

96. As a result of Morgan Stanley's negligence, CPH has suffered damages in excess of $485 million.

WHEREFORE, plaintiff Coleman (Parent) Holdings Inc. demands judgment against defendant Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc. as follows:

- A. Compensatory damages to be determined at trial in an amount in excess of $485 million;
- B. An award of costs and expenses incurred in this action, including reasonable attorneys' and experts' fees and expenses; and
- C. Any further relief as the Court may deem just and proper in light of all the circumstances of the case.
- D. CPH expressly reserves the right to seek leave to amend its complaint pursuant to Fla. Stat. § 768.72 to assert claims for punitive damages in excess of $1.5 billion as allowed by law.

JURY DEMAND

Plaintiff demands a trial by jury on all claims.

Plaintiff,

v.

MORGAN STANLEY & CO., INC.,

Defendant.

FILED
03 MAY 23 PM 4:09
CIR & CO CLS PB, CD FL
CIRCUIT CIVIL 5

MOTION FOR ENLARGEMENT OF TIME TO RESPOND TO COMPLAINT AND ESTABLISH BRIEFING SCHEDULE

Defendant Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc. ("Morgan Stanley & Co."), by and through its undersigned attorneys, pursuant to Rule 1.090 of the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure, respectfully moves this Court to enlarge the time for Defendant to respond to the complaint, and to have this Court establish an efficient briefing schedule for motions to dismiss.

1. On May 8, 2003, Coleman (Parent) Holdings Inc. filed the complaint in this action (the "Coleman-Parent Action").

2. On May 12, 2003, Morgan Stanley Senior Funding, Inc. ("MSSF") filed a related action against MacAndrews & Forbes Holdings Inc., and Coleman (Parent) Holdings Inc. (the "MSSF Action"). The MSSF Action was assigned to Division AG. See Morgan Stanley Senior Funding, Inc. v. MacAndrews & Forbes Holdings Inc. and Coleman (Parent) Holdings Inc., Case No. 2003 CA 005165 AG.

3. The Coleman-Parent Action and the MSSF Action are companion cases pursuant to Local Rule 2.009. Both cases involve the same series of financial transactions, involve a

Coleman v. Morgan Stanley
Case No. 2003 CA 5045 AI
Motion for Enlargement of Time, etc.
Page 2

common set of operative facts, and will require the Court to consider and resolve — in the context of motions to dismiss — substantially similar legal issues. The two cases involve many of the same parties, and counsel in both cases overlap. Accordingly, the Coleman-Parent Action and the MSSF action are companion cases pursuant to Local Rule 2.009.

4. Counsel have agreed that the MSSF Action should be transferred to this division in accordance with Local Rule 2.009. Because the Coleman Parent Action was filed first, it is the lower numbered case. Accordingly, several of the parties have filed a motion to transfer the MSSF action to this Division. It is anticipated that the MSSF Action will be transferred to this Division prior to the time this Motion is heard by the Court. The parties further anticipate that the two cases will be consolidated.

5. The Defendants in both cases intend to file motions to dismiss. One of the first issues that this Court will be required to confront — in both cases — is a choice-of-law issue. Specifically, Morgan Stanley & Co. and MSSF believe that, applying the “significant relationship” test established by the Florida Supreme Court in Bishop v. Florida Specialty Paint Co., 389 So.2d 999 (Fla. 1980), all substantive issues in both cases should be determined in accordance with the law of New York, which has the most “significant relationship” to the transactions and parties. It is anticipated that Plaintiff will argue that the law of Florida should govern both cases.

6. Given the importance of this threshold choice-of-law issue in both cases, and recognizing the judicial economies to be realized by proceeding in a coordinated fashion, Morgan Stanley & Co. has proposed a briefing schedule to Plaintiff. This briefing schedule will permit this Court to determine the choice-of-law question first — and then allow the parties to submit motions to dismiss that are specifically tailored, and supported by citation to relevant

Coleman v. Morgan Stanley
Case No. 2003 CA 5045 AI
Motion for Enlargement of Time, etc.
Page 3

authority, to the law of the state that the Court has determined should apply. Otherwise, the parties' motions to dismiss and supporting memoranda will have to address both the choice-of-law issue and present arguments under both New York and Florida law. Morgan Stanley & Co. submits that such an exercise is inefficient and unnecessary.

7. Accordingly, Morgan Stanley & Co. proposes the following briefing schedule:

a) The parties to the Coleman Parent Action and the MSSF Action will each file Memoranda addressing the Choice of Law issue on June 23, 2003. Any memoranda in opposition will be served on July 9, 2003. The Court will schedule a thirty (30) minute hearing for as soon thereafter as possible.

b) Within thirty (30) days after rendition of the Order determining the choice of law issue, the parties will file responsive motions, together with memoranda of law, or pleadings in both the Coleman Parent Action and the MSSF Action. If a motion is filed, opposing memoranda are due twenty (20) days after service of the Motion. If any party chooses to file a Motion, rather than a responsive pleading, the Court will set the Motion or Motions for hearing in accordance with the customary practice of the Court.

WHEREFORE, Defendant, Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc., respectfully requests that the Court enlarge the time for Defendant to respond to the Complaint and establish a briefing schedule as set forth herein together with such other and further relief as is just and proper.

COLEMAN (PARENT) HOLDINGS, INC.'S OPPOSITION TO MORGAN STANLEY'S REQUEST FOR A SEPARATE BRIEFING SCHEDULE ON THE ISSUE OF CHOICE OF LAW

Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc. ("CPH"), the plaintiff here and one of the defendants in Case No. 2003 CA 005165AG, submits this opposition to the motion of defendant Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc. ("Morgan Stanley") to set a separate schedule for briefing what substantive laws apply to the two lawsuits in advance of the filing of dispositive motions and other responsive pleadings.^{1/}

Argument

Morgan Stanley's request for separate, threshold briefing of disputed choice of law issues is premature, unnecessary and contrary to the goal of judicial economy.

First, briefing the choice of law issue is premature, given that no dispositive motions have been filed yet. The only way to perform a proper choice of law analysis (and the only way to determine whether it is even necessary to do so) is in the context of addressing the specific issues raised by the parties in whatever motions they might file. That analysis cannot be performed in a ^{1/} Morgan Stanley's motion misstates CPH's position in several respects, but given that most of the inaccuracies are not germane to the resolution of the instant motion, CPH will not dwell on them here. CPH, however, is compelled to correct one especially egregious error: In Paragraph 4 of its motion, Morgan Stanley represents that after the case brought by Morgan Stanley's affiliate against CPH and another party is transferred to this Court, "[t]he parties further anticipate that the two cases will be consolidated." In fact, CPH sees no reason why these two fundamentally different lawsuits with only one party in common should be consolidated, and CPH would vigorously oppose any consolidation request by Morgan Stanley.

vacuum. Morgan Stanley's proposal, which would have this Court render an advisory opinion on choice of law without even knowing what the real issues and points of contention are, puts the cart before the horse and is contrary to Florida authorities suggesting that choice of law issues cannot be addressed until they are properly framed by the pleadings. See, e.g., Henry P. Trawick, Jr., Trawick's Florida Practice and Procedure § 6-17.5 at 101 (2003). That proposal therefore should be rejected.

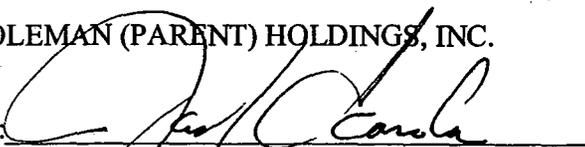

Second, separate choice of law briefing is entirely unnecessary. In the event the parties file motions that require this Court to resolve disputes concerning the governing substantive laws, the parties can address those disputes in their supporting memoranda. That is the way choice of law issues are dealt with every day. There is no reason why addressing choice of law disputes should be a bigger production in this litigation than it is in other cases.

Third, separate briefing and argument on choice of law would be contrary to the goal of judicial economy. Under Morgan Stanley's proposal (¶ 7), threshold briefing on choice of law would drag on into July, and would be followed by a 30-minute Court hearing devoted exclusively to choice of law disputes. And at that point, the Court and the parties would be far from done. The parties would then file dispositive motions, followed by still more briefing lasting into September, and by yet another Court hearing. The wisdom of proceeding in this unorthodox way — which is contrary to the usual, considerably more streamlined procedure followed in case after case — is never explained by Morgan Stanley and is far from clear. But what is clear is that Morgan Stanley's proposal of separate choice of law briefing would result in months of needless delay, the filing of excessive motions and briefs, additional unnecessary expense for the parties, and an abundance of extra work for the Court. Morgan Stanley's proposal, which is needlessly wasteful and contrary to the goal of judicial economy, should be rejected.

Coleman (Parent) Holdings Inc., One of Its Attorneys.

Plaintiff Coleman (Parent) Holdings Inc. (“CPH”) alleges the following against Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc. (“Morgan Stanley”):

NATURE OF THE ACTION

1. This action arises from Morgan Stanley's participation in a massive fraud centered on Florida-based Sunbeam Corporation (“Sunbeam”). As a direct result of that fraud, CPH was induced to accept 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock when CPH sold its 82% interest in The Coleman Company, Inc. (“Coleman”) to Sunbeam on March 30, 1998. Morgan Stanley misrepresented Sunbeam's financial condition and assisted Sunbeam's CEO, Albert Dunlap, in concealing Sunbeam's true financial condition so that Sunbeam could complete the purchase of Coleman on March 30, 1998.

2. In April 1997, Morgan Stanley began serving as Sunbeam's investment banker. Morgan Stanley originally attempted to find someone to buy Sunbeam. When Morgan Stanley was unable to find a buyer, Morgan Stanley developed a strategy for Sunbeam to use its fraudulently-inflated stock to acquire a large company that Sunbeam would own and operate. Then, trading on Morgan Stanley's relationships with CPH's senior officers, Morgan Stanley found Coleman for Sunbeam. At the time of the sale to Sunbeam, Coleman was a leading manufacturer and marketer of consumer products for the worldwide outdoor recreation market, with annual revenues in excess of $1 billion. With Morgan Stanley's active and direct participation, CPH was persuaded to sell its interest in Coleman to Sunbeam in return for 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock and other consideration.

3. After Sunbeam announced plans to acquire Coleman, Morgan Stanley agreed to underwrite a $750 million debenture offering for Sunbeam. Sunbeam needed the proceeds of that debenture offering to complete the acquisition of Coleman. As Sunbeam's investment banker and as the sole underwriter for the $750 million debenture offering, Morgan Stanley received detailed and specific information concerning Sunbeam's financial condition and performance. Morgan Stanley received information that directly contradicted Sunbeam's and Morgan Stanley's assertions to CPH that Sunbeam had undergone a successful turnaround and that its financial performance had dramatically improved. By no later than March 18, 1998, Morgan Stanley knew that Sunbeam's January and February 1998 sales were only 50% of January and February 1997 sales, and Morgan Stanley also knew that the shortfall was caused by Sunbeam's practice of accelerating sales which otherwise would have occurred in 1998 in order to boost Sunbeam's income in 1997. Although Morgan Stanley and Sunbeam previously had advised CPH that Sunbeam's sales were running ahead of analysts' expectations for the first quarter, Morgan Stanley decided not to correct those material misrepresentations. Instead, in March 1998, Morgan Stanley assisted Sunbeam in concealing the problems with Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales in order to close transactions that should have been stopped before CPH and others were swindled.

4. CPH brings this action to recover for the losses it has suffered as a result of Morgan Stanley's active participation in successfully defrauding CPH. CPH's Complaint consists of four counts: Fraudulent Misrepresentation (Count I); Aiding and Abetting (Count II); Conspiracy (Count II); and Negligent Misrepresentation (Count IV).

5. CPH seeks compensatory damages for Morgan Stanley's wrongful conduct. Using Morgan Stanley's own valuation of Coleman, CPH has lost at least $485 million. In addition, CPH reserves the right to seek leave to amend its complaint pursuant to Fla. Stat. §768.72 to assert claims for an additional recovery of punitive damages in excess of $1.5 billion.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

6. This Court has jurisdiction over the subject matter of this action pursuant to Fla. Stat. § 26.012\(2\)\(a\). This Court has jurisdiction over Morgan Stanley pursuant to Fla. Stat. § 48.193.

7. Venue is proper in this district pursuant to Fla. Stat. § 47.051.

PARTIES AND OTHER KEY PARTICIPANTS

8. Plaintiff Coleman (Parent) Holdings Inc. ("CPH") directly or indirectly owned 44,067,520 shares - or approximately 82% - of Coleman prior to the transactions at issue. On March 30, 1998, Sunbeam acquired CPH's interest in Coleman. Sunbeam paid for the Coleman shares with 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam common stock and other consideration.

9. Defendant Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc. ("Morgan Stanley") is a highly sophisticated investment banking firm that provides a wide range of financial and securities services. Among other things, Morgan Stanley provides advice on mergers and acquisitions and raises capital in the equity and debt markets. Morgan Stanley served as Sunbeam's investment banker and as the underwriter of securities issued by Sunbeam in connection with the events at issue herein.

10. Sunbeam Corporation ("Sunbeam") was a publicly-traded company headquartered in Delray Beach, Florida. Sunbeam designed and manufactured small household appliances and outdoor consumer products, which it marketed under the Sunbeam and Oster brand names. Sunbeam filed a bankruptcy petition under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code in February 2001.

11. Albert Dunlap ("Dunlap") was the Chief Executive Officer of Sunbeam from July 1996 until June 1998 when he was terminated by Sunbeam's Board of Directors. In May 2001, the United States Securities and Exchange Commission ("SEC") filed a civil injunctive suit in Miami, Florida against Dunlap based on Dunlap's fraudulent and illegal conduct at Sunbeam. In September 2002, Dunlap consented to the entry of a judgment against him in that action. The judgment, among other things, imposed a civil fine and permanently barred Dunlap from serving as an officer or director of a public company. Dunlap still resides in Boca Raton, Florida.

12. Russell Kersh (“Kersh”) was the Executive Vice President of Sunbeam from July 1996 until June 1998 when he was terminated by Sunbeam’s Board of Directors. In May 2001, the SEC filed a civil injunctive suit in Miami, Florida against Kersh based on Kersh’s fraudulent and illegal conduct at Sunbeam. In September 2002, Kersh consented to the entry of a judgment against him in that action. The judgment, among other things, imposed a civil fine and permanently barred Kersh from serving as an officer or director of a public company. Upon information and belief, Kersh still resides in Boca Raton, Florida.

13. Arthur Andersen LLP (“Andersen”) provided outside accounting services to Sunbeam through its West Palm Beach, Florida office. Andersen auditors provided information concerning Sunbeam’s first quarter 1998 sales and earnings to Morgan Stanley. Upon information and belief, several of the Andersen auditors who provided information to Morgan Stanley concerning Sunbeam, including Lawrence Bornstein, still reside in Florida.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

A. Sunbeam’s Lackluster Performance (1995-1996).

14. Sunbeam designed and manufactured outdoor and household consumer products, which it marketed under the Sunbeam and Oster brand names. Sunbeam’s products included small kitchen appliances, humidifiers, electric blankets, and grills. Many of the country’s leading retail stores, including Wal-Mart, Target, and Home Depot, were among Sunbeam’s major customers.

15. Despite Sunbeam’s well-known brands and strong customer base, its financial performance was disappointing. In 1994, Sunbeam earned $1.30 per share. In 1995, Sunbeam’s earnings declined to $0.61 per share. In 1996, Sunbeam’s earnings continued to suffer. On March 22, 1996, Sunbeam issued an early warning that its first quarter earnings would be well under analysts’ expectations and down from first quarter 1995. Shortly after issuing the March 22 earnings warning, Sunbeam’s Chief Executive Officer and two of Sunbeam’s directors announced their resignations. Less than a week later, Sunbeam announced that its first quarter 1996 earnings had plunged 42% from first quarter 1995 levels. Sunbeam also announced that its second quarter 1996 earnings would be lower than its second quarter 1995 earnings.

16. Sunbeam’s disappointing earnings caused its stock price to plummet. During 1995, the price at which Sunbeam’s stock traded fell 40%, from a high of $25-1/2. In 1996, Sunbeam’s stock price continued to decline until it reached a low of $12-1/4 in July.

B. Sunbeam Hires A New Management Team (July 1996).

17. On July 18, 1996, Sunbeam’s board of directors hired Albert Dunlap as Sunbeam’s new Chief Executive Officer. Based upon brief terms as Chief Executive Officer of other publicly traded companies, including Scott Paper Company (“Scott Paper”), Dunlap was viewed as a “turnaround specialist” - that is, someone who could take a poorly performing company and significantly increase its value by “turning around” its financial performance. Because Dunlap touted the benefits from firing large numbers of employees and closing large numbers of plants, Dunlap became widely known as “Chainsaw Al.” Dunlap lived in Boca Raton, Florida, and one of his first tasks at Sunbeam was to consolidate the company’s six headquarters into one located in Delray Beach, Florida.

18. Immediately after joining Sunbeam, Dunlap hired Kersh as Sunbeam’s Chief Financial Officer. Kersh had teamed with Dunlap for over 15 years, serving as a senior executive with Dunlap at other companies, including Scott Paper. Dunlap also brought in several other hand-picked executives to make up his senior management team.

19. Dunlap and his senior management team entered into employment agreements with Sunbeam. Under those agreements, Dunlap and his senior management team stood to make tens of millions of dollars if they were able to boost Sunbeam's apparent value and then sell Sunbeam to another company at a premium.

C. Dunlap Cooks The Books At Sunbeam (1996-1997).

20. In order to convince other companies that they should want to purchase Sunbeam, Dunlap needed to improve Sunbeam's reported financial performance quickly and dramatically. It was, of course, no small task to transform Sunbeam from a poorly performing company, with weak sales and declining profits, into a strong company with growing sales and soaring profits. In fact, as the world later learned, Dunlap did not achieve that change in Sunbeam's fortunes. Instead, Dunlap created the illusion of a dramatic turnaround at Sunbeam by engaging in what SEC officials subsequently described as a "case study" in financial fraud.

21. Dunlap had a three-step plan at Sunbeam. In the first step, Dunlap overstated Sunbeam's financial problems so that Sunbeam appeared to be in worse shape than it really was. After making Sunbeam look worse, Dunlap moved to step two, where he made Sunbeam look more valuable than it really was by inflating Sunbeam's sales and engaging in other earnings manipulations. In step three, Dunlap planned to sell Sunbeam to another company before it became apparent that the "improved" results were fictional. By doing so, Dunlap would make tens of millions of dollars and would be free to blame his successor for any subsequent problems.

1. Step One: Make Sunbeam Appear Worse Than It Really Was (1996).

22. Dunlap began implementing his strategy soon after his arrival at Sunbeam in 1996. Claiming to be engaged in a clean-up of Sunbeam's financial problems, Dunlap recorded artificially high reserves and booked expenses that should not have been recorded until later periods. Both of those actions made Sunbeam's financial condition appear worse than it really was, thus lowering the benchmark for measuring Sunbeam's performance in future years.

23. The overstated reserves also provided Dunlap a means by which he could inflate Sunbeam's future results during the second step of his plan. Dunlap later could "re-evaluate" and release millions of dollars from the overstated reserves to boost income in later periods. The income from released reserves contributed to the illusion of a rapid turnaround in Sunbeam's performance. Using inflated reserves to enhance income in future periods is a fraudulent practice and overstated reserves are commonly called "cookie jar" reserves.

2. Step Two: Create The False Appearance Of Dramatically Improved Performance (1997).

24. After making Sunbeam look worse than it really was in 1996, Dunlap manipulated Sunbeam's sales and expenses in 1997 to create the false appearance of quarter after quarter improvement in financial performance. For example, Dunlap caused Sunbeam to inflate its sales by engaging in phony "bill and hold" sales. Under this practice, Sunbeam recognized revenues from "sales," even though customers did not actually pay for or even take delivery of the products, which continued to sit in Sunbeam's own warehouses. Although Sunbeam recorded the "bill and hold" sales as if they were current sales, they were, in reality, simply sales stolen from future quarters. In 1997, phony "bill and hold" sales added approximately $29 million in sales and $4.5 million in income.

25. Throughout 1997, Sunbeam also engaged in a sales practice known as "channel stuffing" - accelerating sales that otherwise would occur in a later period, sometimes by offering steep discounts or other extraordinary customer inducements. On the grand scale employed by Sunbeam, channel stuffing inevitably leads to major sales shortfalls in later periods when "stuffed" customers simply stop buying. Sunbeam's senior sales officer referred to Sunbeam's unsustainable practice of inflating performance through accelerated sales as the "doom loop."

26. Dunlap further “enhanced” Sunbeam's income in 1997 by causing Sunbeam to record a “profit” of $ 10 million from a sham sale of its warranty and spare parts business. Dunlap also made Sunbeam appear to be more successful than it really was by reaching into the “cookie jar,” reversing inflated reserves, and recording $35 million as income. Sunbeam's 1997 profit margins also looked better than they really were because Dunlap already had recorded millions of dollars of 1997 expenses in 1996.

27. In October 1997, Dunlap announced that Sunbeam's “turnaround” was complete. Compared to the third quarter of 1996, Sunbeam's third quarter 1997 performance was remarkable. In the third quarter of 1996, Sunbeam had reported a loss of $18.1 million. In the third quarter of 1997, however, Sunbeam reported earnings of $34.5 million - an extraordinary turnaround from substantial losses to hefty profits. Sunbeam's combined results for the first three quarters showed dramatic improvement as well. Sunbeam reported that its profits for the first nine months were up tenfold over the same period the year before - from $6.5 million in 1996 to $67.7 million in 1997. Sunbeam's reversal of fortune caused a spectacular increase in the price of its stock. In July 1996, when Dunlap was hired, Sunbeam's shares traded at $12-1/4. By October 1997, Sunbeam's shares had risen to $49-13/16.

3. Step Three: Cash In Before The Turnaround Fraud Is Discovered (1997- 1998).

28. With steps one and two successfully completed, Dunlap was more than eager to complete the final step of his scheme: to sell Sunbeam to another company and collect tens of millions of dollars for himself before the outside world could learn the truth about Sunbeam's phony “turnaround.” To accomplish that third and final step, Dunlap needed an investment banking firm to serve as his shill. Morgan Stanley was pleased to play that role.

D. Morgan Stanley Vies For A Spot On Dunlap's Team (April - September 1997).

29. When Dunlap announced in early 1997 that he would begin interviewing investment bankers, Morgan Stanley immediately began pursuing the job. Although Morgan Stanley had no previous relationship with Sunbeam, one of Morgan Stanley's senior executives, William Strong, had worked closely with Dunlap on other large transactions between 1986 and 1993, when Strong was employed by Salomon Brothers.

30. Morgan Stanley knew that it was competing with other investment bankers, including Mark Davis, for Dunlap's business. Davis was the head of the mergers and acquisitions department at Chase Securities and had worked previously with Strong at Salomon Brothers. Davis had a very strong relationship with Dunlap, and Davis had served as Dunlap's investment advisor on numerous transactions, including Dunlap's sale of Scott Paper. Shortly after arriving at Sunbeam, Dunlap hired Davis to handle the sale of Sunbeam's furniture business.

31. Morgan Stanley put together a team headed by its Vice Chairman, Bruce Fiedorek, and Strong. Beginning in April 1997, Morgan Stanley's personnel traveled to Sunbeam's offices in Delray Beach, Florida to study Sunbeam and woo Dunlap. After months of uncompensated work, in September 1997, Morgan Stanley finally persuaded Dunlap to name Morgan Stanley as Sunbeam's exclusive investment banker. Dunlap instructed Morgan Stanley to find a buyer for Sunbeam. Morgan Stanley knew that if it failed to deliver a major transaction, Morgan Stanley would not be compensated for the extensive work it had performed for Sunbeam. Morgan Stanley also knew that Davis and Chase Securities were standing by - ready and willing to reclaim their position as Dunlap's investment banker of choice.

E. Morgan Stanley Seeks A Buyer For Sunbeam (Fall 1997).

32. Throughout the fall of 1997, Morgan Stanley aggressively searched for a buyer for Sunbeam. Morgan Stanley put together extensive and detailed materials to use in marketing Sunbeam to potential buyers. Morgan Stanley pitched the transaction to more than 10 companies - including Gillette, Colgate, Sara Lee, Rubbermaid, Whirlpool, and Black & Decker - that Morgan Stanley hoped might have an interest in acquiring Sunbeam. Morgan Stanley, however, was not able to find a buyer.

33. As 1998 approached, the pressure on Dunlap increased. Dunlap was aware that Sunbeam would be unable to sustain the appearance of a successful turnaround in 1998 because Sunbeam had stolen sales from 1998 to boost 1997's numbers and the "cookie jar" reserves had been depleted. Dunlap needed a way to conceal Sunbeam's phony turnaround until a buyer could be found. Morgan Stanley provided the solution to Dunlap's problem.

F. Unable To Find A Buyer For Sunbeam, Morgan Stanley Looks For An Acquisition (December 1997).

34. Morgan Stanley knew that its failure to find a buyer for Sunbeam could prove fatal to the relationship it had worked so hard to establish with Dunlap. As the pressure on Dunlap increased, the pressure on Morgan Stanley increased as well. Although Morgan Stanley was not able to find a buyer for Sunbeam, Morgan Stanley responded with a plan that would allow Dunlap to conceal his fraud. Morgan Stanley recommended that Sunbeam acquire other companies, using Sunbeam's stock, which was fraudulently inflated, as the "currency" that would be used to pay for the acquisitions.

35. Morgan Stanley's strategy was doubly deceptive. First, Morgan Stanley's acquisition strategy would allow Dunlap to consolidate Sunbeam's results with those of the newly- acquired companies. That would help Dunlap camouflage Sunbeam's results and make it difficult to detect any shortfall in Sunbeam's performance. Dunlap simply could label any problems that were detected as attributable to the poor performance of the acquired companies or as a temporary "blip" caused by the distraction of integrating the acquired companies with Sunbeam. Second, Morgan Stanley's strategy would allow Dunlap to take new massive restructuring charges (purportedly relating to the acquisitions) and thus create more "cookie jar" reserves that could be tapped to bolster the future earnings of the combined companies.

36. Morgan Stanley identified Coleman as one of the key potential acquisition targets. CPH owned 82% of Coleman's stock. Morgan Stanley searched the ranks of its investment bankers to locate those with the best access to CPH. Drawing on relationships between some of Morgan Stanley's investment bankers and senior CPH officers, Morgan Stanley set about trying to persuade CPH to sell its interest in Coleman to Sunbeam - and, most importantly, to accept Sunbeam stock as consideration.

37. Morgan Stanley laid the groundwork for a meeting to take place in December 1997 in Palm Beach, Florida between Dunlap and Kersh and representatives of CPH. In advance of the Palm Beach meeting, Morgan Stanley provided materials to Sunbeam to prepare Sunbeam for the meeting. Morgan Stanley also met with Kersh and other Sunbeam personnel to prepare for the Palm Beach meeting. However, Dunlap nearly scuttled Morgan Stanley's carefully crafted plan at the outset. During the December 1997 Palm Beach meeting, when CPH rejected Dunlap's initial all-stock offer, Dunlap became so angry that he cursed and ranted at the CPH representatives and stormed out.

G. Morgan Stanley Revives The Deal And Negotiates With CPH (January-February 1998).

38. Dunlap's tantrum appeared to kill any chance that CPH would sell its interest in Coleman to Sunbeam. Morgan Stanley, however, worked to revive the discussions. Drawing again on Morgan Stanley's relationships with CPH officers, Morgan Stanley was able to restart the discussions with CPH with the promise that Dunlap would be kept away from the negotiating table. Thereafter, Morgan Stanley, through Managing Directors Strong, James Stynes, and Robert Kitts, led the discussions with CPH on Sunbeam's behalf.

39. Morgan Stanley knew that it had to persuade CPH not only to sell Coleman, but also to accept Sunbeam stock - ultimately, 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock - as a major part of the purchase price. During the course of negotiations,

Morgan Stanley prepared and provided CPH with false financial and business information about Sunbeam designed to create the appearance that Sunbeam was prospering and that Sunbeam's stock had great value. For example, Morgan Stanley provided CPH with false 1996 and 1997 sales and revenue figures, as well as false projections that Sunbeam could not expect to achieve. Together, in face-to-face discussions, Morgan Stanley and Sunbeam assured CPH that (a) Sunbeam would meet or exceed its first quarter 1998 earnings estimates; (b) analysts' 1998 earnings estimates for Sunbeam were correct; and (c) Sunbeam's plan to earn $2.20 per share in 1998 was easily achievable and probably low. Morgan Stanley and Sunbeam also falsely assured CPH that Sunbeam's "early buy" sales program would not hurt Sunbeam's future revenues. However, the "early buy" program was one of Sunbeam's revenue acceleration programs - and the devastating effects of Sunbeam's revenue acceleration programs already had begun to materialize at Sunbeam. Sunbeam's January and February 1998 sales were down drastically, although those results were not disclosed to CPH or the public. To the contrary, Morgan Stanley and Sunbeam together specifically advised CPH that Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales were "tracking fine" and running ahead of analysts' estimates.

40. Before the truth was revealed, Morgan Stanley persuaded CPH to sell its shares in Coleman to Sunbeam and to accept 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock as part of the consideration. Based on the price at which Sunbeam's stock was trading, the 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock were worth approximately $600 million.

H. Morgan Stanley Advises Sunbeam's Board On The Acquisition (February 27, 1998).

41. On February 27, 1998, Sunbeam's Board of Directors met at Morgan Stanley's offices to consider the purchase of Coleman, as negotiated by Morgan Stanley.

42. At the February 27, 1998 meeting, Morgan Stanley made an extensive presentation to Sunbeam's Board concerning the proposed transaction. Numerous Morgan Stanley representatives, including Managing Directors Strong, Kitts, Stynes, Ruth Porat, and Vikram Pandit, attended the meeting.

43. Morgan Stanley presented Sunbeam's board with Morgan Stanley's opinion on the value of Coleman. Using a discounted cash flow analysis, which Morgan Stanley represented was the best gauge of stand-alone economic value and the best method of capturing the unique value of Coleman, Morgan Stanley valued CPH's Coleman stock at a range of $31.06 to $53.24 per Coleman share. CPH's 44,067,520 Coleman shares were worth, therefore, between $136 billion and $2.46 billion.

44. Following Morgan Stanley's presentation, Sunbeam's Board of Directors voted to acquire Coleman on the very favorable terms that Morgan Stanley had negotiated.

I. Morgan Stanley Develops Sunbeam's Public Announcement Of The Coleman Acquisition (February 28-March 1, 1998).

45. Morgan Stanley spent the following weekend developing Sunbeam's public relations strategy to announce the Coleman transaction. Morgan Stanley scripted the points for Dunlap to make in a conference call with analysts. Morgan Stanley also crafted a list of "key media messages" for Dunlap to use in his communications with the press. On Sunday, March 1, 1998, Morgan Stanley spoke with a reporter for the Wall Street Journal to inform him that Sunbeam would announce its acquisition of Coleman the following morning.

46. Sunbeam announced its acquisition of Coleman on Monday, March 2, 1998, prior to the opening of the financial markets. Consistent with Morgan Stanley's valuation, investors viewed Sunbeam's purchase of Coleman - and the price that Sunbeam had paid - very favorably. The day before the acquisition was announced, Sunbeam's stock closed at $41-3/4. In the days following Sunbeam's announcement of the transaction, Sunbeam's stock rose approximately 25%, to a high of $52.

J. Morgan Stanley Serves As The Underwriter For Sunbeam's $750 Million Convertible Debenture Offering (March 1998).

47. Dunlap knew that Sunbeam needed to raise funds to pay the cash portion of the acquisition consideration. Dunlap also knew that Sunbeam needed cash to purchase two other smaller companies in addition to Coleman. Morgan Stanley recommended that Sunbeam raise funds through a $500 million offering of convertible subordinated debentures. To assure the offering's success, Morgan Stanley lent its name to the offering. Indeed, Morgan Stanley agreed to serve as the sole underwriter for the offering.

48. The money raised from the sale of the debentures was used by Sunbeam to complete the acquisition of Coleman.

49. Unbeknownst to CPH or the public, Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales were a small fraction of the financial community's expectations for the quarter. If Dunlap could consolidate Sunbeam's sales with Coleman's sales, Dunlap knew that he could obscure Sunbeam's actual first quarter sales. As a result, Dunlap was especially anxious to complete the acquisition of Coleman before Sunbeam announced its first quarter 1998 sales. Indeed, the success of the scheme depended upon Sunbeam's ability to complete the Coleman acquisition before Sunbeam's first quarter results were announced. To satisfy Dunlap's objectives, Morgan Stanley moved up the launch date of the offering.

50. The debentures were marketed to investors at a series of "road show" meetings and conference calls arranged by Morgan Stanley. Morgan Stanley prepared and distributed a memorandum for its sales force to use in marketing the debentures to investors. Morgan Stanley also developed the script for Dunlap and Kersh to deliver during the road show. In those materials, Morgan Stanley misrepresented Sunbeam's financial performance and emphasized Dunlap's purported "turnaround" accomplishments.

51. Morgan Stanley launched the debenture offering with a research analyst presentation to the Morgan Stanley sales force. As part of Morgan Stanley's growing relationship with Sunbeam, one of Morgan Stanley's top-rated research analysts planned to initiate equity coverage of Sunbeam. That Morgan Stanley analyst had modeled values for Sunbeam's acquisition of Coleman that were higher than even Sunbeam's management had predicted.

52. Although Morgan Stanley initially planned to sell $500 million worth of debentures, Morgan Stanley's efforts were so successful that the size of the offering was increased to $750 million on March 19, 1998 - the day of the last road show. The debentures were sold to investors nationwide, including investors based in Florida.

K. Morgan Stanley Is Told That Sunbeam's First Quarter Sales Are Down Dramatically (March 17 -18,1998).

53. As Sunbeam's investment banker and the sole underwriter for the debenture offering, Morgan Stanley had a duty to investigate Sunbeam's finances and business operations. As a matter of law, that duty included an obligation to verify management's claims about Sunbeam's finances and business. Morgan Stanley, which had been working hand-in-hand with Sunbeam for almost a year and had traveled to Sunbeam's Florida offices, repeatedly asserted that it had satisfied that duty.

54. Strong, who was one of the senior Morgan Stanley investment bankers involved, has admitted in sworn testimony that he may have had more than 100 telephone conversations with Dunlap and Kersh (whose offices were in Sunbeam's Delray Beach headquarters) and that Strong was "sure" that he would have been apprised of Sunbeam's financial performance during the first two months of 1998.

55. With the $750 million debenture offering and the Coleman transaction set to close at the end of March 1998, Sunbeam's Florida-based outside auditors were shocked that Morgan Stanley had not asked them about Sunbeam's financial performance for first quarter 1998. Sunbeam's auditors were alarmed because Sunbeam's first quarter results were a disaster, but Dunlap, Kersh, and Morgan Stanley were telling CPH and the investing public, including investors in Florida, that Sunbeam's turnaround was a success, that Sunbeam's sales for the first quarter of 1998 were ahead of the expectations of outside financial analysts, and that Sunbeam was poised for record sales.

56. On March 17, Sunbeam's auditors forced the issue. From their Florida offices, Sunbeam's auditors sent Morgan Stanley a letter reporting that Sunbeam's net sales through January 1998 were down 60% - $28 million in January 1998, as compared to $73 million in January 1997. The March 17 letter explained that the decline was "primarily due to the ... new early buy program for grills which accelerated grill sales into the fourth quarter of fiscal 1997."

57. The next day, Morgan Stanley was faxed a schedule from Sunbeam's Florida office that showed that Sunbeam's January and February 1998 net sales totaled $72 million, an amount that was 50% lower than Sunbeam's January and February 1997 net sales of $143.5 million.

58. Based on information that Sunbeam and Morgan Stanley had disseminated, CPH, investors, and Wall Street analysts were anticipating that Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 net sales would be in the range of $285 million to $295 million. Sales in that range would have been approximately 15% higher than first quarter 1997 sales. Sunbeam's January and February 1998 sales, however, totaled barely 25% of $285 million. As Sunbeam's outside auditors advised Morgan Stanley in writing, the sales drop-off was caused by Sunbeam's sales acceleration program. The information put into Morgan Stanley's hands on March 17 and March 18 showed that Morgan Stanley's and Sunbeam's assertions to CPH and other investors were false. Contrary to what Morgan Stanley and Sunbeam had represented, Sunbeam had not undergone a successful turnaround, Sunbeam's financial performance had not dramatically improved, and Sunbeam's performance in 1998 was not better than Wall Street analysts' expectations. It was imperative, therefore, that the truth be kept from CPH until the Coleman transaction closed at the end of March 1998.

L. Morgan Stanley Assists Sunbeam In Concealing The Fraud: The False March 19, 1998 Press Release.

59. Morgan Stanley did not disclose Sunbeam's disastrous first quarter, Morgan Stanley did not insist that Sunbeam disclose its disastrous first quarter, Morgan Stanley did not correct any of the false and misleading statements it and Sunbeam had made to CPH about Sunbeam's business or performance, and Morgan Stanley did not suspend any of the critical transactions that were scheduled to close in the next two weeks. Instead, with Morgan Stanley's knowledge and assistance, Sunbeam prepared and issued a false press release on March 19, 1998 that affirmatively misstated and concealed Sunbeam's true condition.

60. The March 19, 1998 press release stated: "Sunbeam Corporation ... said today that it is possible that its net sales for the first quarter of 1998 may be lower than the range of Wall Street analysts' estimates for $285 million to $295 million, but net sales are expected to exceed 1997 first quarter net sales of $253.4 million.... The shortfall from analysts' estimates, if any, would be due to changes in inventory management and order patterns at certain of the Company's major retail customers. The Company further stated that based on the strength of its new product offerings and powerful brand names, it remains highly confident about the overall sales outlook for its products for the entire year."

61. As Morgan Stanley was fully aware, the March 19, 1998 press release was false, misleading, and failed to disclose material information. The March 19, 1998 press release failed to disclose Sunbeam's actual January and February 1998 sales or the true reasons for the poor results. Instead, the press release held out the false possibility that Sunbeam still could achieve sales of $285 million to $295 million and suggested that, if any shortfall occurred, that shortfall would be due to the fact that certain retailers had decided to defer first quarter purchases to the second quarter. The press release also assured that Sunbeam at least would exceed first quarter 1997 net sales of $253.4 million.

62. Based on information that Morgan Stanley had in its hands on March 18, 1998, it was obvious that Sunbeam would not achieve sales of $285 million to $295 million and that Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales would be below its first quarter 1997 numbers. To simply meet 1997 first quarter sales, Sunbeam needed sales of $123.3 million over the 12 remaining days of the quarter - an average of $10.28 million per day. Sales of $10.28 million per day would be 306% more than the average per day sales in March 1997, and 281% more than the average per day sales for the first 17 days of March 1998. Furthermore, Morgan Stanley knew that the shortfall from analysts' estimates was not caused by retailers' deciding to defer purchases from the first quarter of 1998 to the second quarter, as the press release indicated. Rather, as Sunbeam's outside auditors had advised Morgan Stanley in writing, the collapse in first quarter sales was caused by Sunbeam's acceleration of 1998 sales into the fourth quarter of 1997.

63. After Sunbeam's false press release was issued, Morgan Stanley stood arm-in-arm with Sunbeam while Dunlap and Kersh told CPH, analysts, and investors that the March 19, 1998 release was a purely cautionary statement because some first quarter 1998 sales might simply "spillover" into the second quarter and that Sunbeam still believed that it actually would meet analysts' estimates of $285 million to $295 million in first quarter 1998 sales.

64. Morgan Stanley knew that a full and truthful disclosure of Sunbeam's first quarter sales would doom the debenture offering, which was scheduled to close on March 25, 1998, and Sunbeam's purchase of Coleman, which was scheduled to close on March 30, 1998.

65. As Morgan Stanley was fully aware, the written contract between CPH and Sunbeam gave CPH the express legal right to refuse to close the sale if there was a material adverse change in Sunbeam's "business, results of operation or financial condition." Morgan Stanley knew that CPH would exercise its right and walk away from the transaction if CPH became aware of the extent and reasons for Sunbeam's disastrous first quarter results.

66. Furthermore, if the transactions did not close, Morgan Stanley would not be paid its $10.28 million fee for the Coleman acquisition or its $22.5 million fee for underwriting the subordinated debenture offering. Morgan Stanley also knew that Sunbeam would promptly replace Morgan Stanley with another investment banking firm - such as the Chase Securities team led by Mark Davis. Everything, therefore, depended on closing the Coleman acquisition before CPH learned the truth.

M. Sunbeam's Auditors Advise Morgan Stanley That The March 19, 1998 Release Is False.

67. Although Sunbeam's outside auditors already had made it perfectly clear to Morgan Stanley that Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales were a disaster, Morgan Stanley seemed intent on proceeding based upon the false March 19, 1998 press release.

68. One of Sunbeam's senior outside auditors, Lawrence Bornstein, has testified under oath that on March 19, 1998, he told Morgan Stanley's John Tyree that the statement in Sunbeam's March 19, 1998 press release - that Sunbeam would at least exceed first quarter 1997 sales of $253.4 million - was not credible: "Just do the math ... they've done a million dollars in sales the first 70 days of the year and now they need to do $10 million worth of sales for the next... I think it was 11 days ... I mean, something ridiculous." Bornstein also told Tyree: "I've been to every shipping dock domestically, I've been to Hattiesburg, I've been to Neosho, I've been to Mexico City, and I don't think these guys can physically ship this much stuff."

N. Morgan Stanley Marches Ahead With The Closings (March 19-March 30, 1998).

69. Morgan Stanley knew that the March 19 press release was false and misleading. Despite that knowledge and Bornstein's explicit statements, Morgan Stanley continued with its preparations to close the debenture offering on March 25, 1998 and the Coleman acquisition on March 30, 1998.

70. As part of those preparations, on March 24, 1998, Morgan Stanley's Tyree spoke by telephone with Sunbeam's Kersh, who was located in Sunbeam's Delray Beach offices, to obtain an updated report concerning Sunbeam's first quarter performance. By the time of that March 24, 1998 call, Sunbeam had fallen even further behind first quarter 1997 sales. As of March 18, 1998, Sunbeam needed to achieve average sales of $10.28 million per day, over 12 days, to reach first quarter 1997 sales. Sunbeam's sales between March 18 and March 24, 1998 had averaged only $6.81 million per day - well short of the $10.28 million per day that Sunbeam needed to achieve. Sunbeam's March 18 through March 24, 1998 sales were further proof that Sunbeam's March 19, 1998 press release was false and that Sunbeam would not achieve first quarter 1998 sales in excess of first quarter 1997 sales.

71. Morgan Stanley also knew no later than March 25, 1998, if not much earlier, that Sunbeam's earnings for the first quarter of 1998 were going to miss Wall Street analysts' earnings expectations, which were in the range of $0.28 to $0.31 per share (excluding one-time charges). Sunbeam's outside auditors advised Morgan Stanley on March 25 that Sunbeam had suffered a $41.19 million loss during the first two months of 1998, including a one-time charge of $30.2 million. Even excluding that one-time charge, Sunbeam's loss for the first two months was $0.13 per share. To achieve first quarter 1998 operating earnings of $0.28 per share, which were at the low end of analyst expectations, Sunbeam needed to realize a profit of $35.5 million during March 1998 alone. A net profit of $35.5 million in March was 500% more than Sunbeam's net profit for the entire first quarter of 1997. In fact, Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 earnings fell far short of Wall Street's expectations. Although Sunbeam's first quarter earnings were material, that information was not disclosed to CPH or the public until after the closing of the Coleman transaction on March 30, 1998.

O. Morgan Stanley Allows The Debenture Offering And The Coleman Acquisition To Close (March 25-30,1998).

72. Having directly participated in misleading CPH and other investors, Morgan Stanley had a duty to disclose the true facts before the closing of the debenture offering and the Coleman acquisition. Morgan Stanley also could have required Sunbeam to postpone the closings of those transactions until the necessary disclosures were made. Morgan Stanley did neither. Instead, Morgan Stanley marched forward and closed the $750 million debenture offering on March 25, 1998, which was needed to close the Coleman transaction, and assisted Sunbeam in closing the acquisition of Coleman on March 30, 1998.

73. Morgan Stanley was richly rewarded for facilitating Sunbeam's fraud. Morgan Stanley received $22.5 million for the subordinated debenture offering and $10.28 million for the Coleman acquisition. Morgan Stanley would have received nothing if the transactions had failed to close.

P. Sunbeam's Fraud Is Revealed, Causing The Market Value Of Sunbeam's Stock To Plummet.

74. On April 3, 1998 - just four days after the Coleman transaction closed - Sunbe announced that sales for the first quarter of 1998 would be approximately 5% below the $253.4 million in sales that Sunbeam reported in the first quarter of 1997. In other words, Sunbeam was expecting sales in the range of $240 million. That sales shortfall was shocking news, particularly in view of assurances provided by Sunbeam both in and after its March 19, 1998 press release that $285 million to $295 million of sales was still a real possibility. The April 3, 1998 press release also disclosed that Sunbeam expected to show a loss for the quarter, although the release did not disclose the magnitude of the loss or how much of the loss was attributable to operating earnings as opposed to one-time charges. Sunbeam's news stunned CPH and the market. On April 3, Sunbeam's stock price dropped 25% - from $45-9/16 to $34-3/8.

75. Sunbeam's actual first quarter 1998 performance was even worse than Sunbeam disclosed on April 3, 1998. The April 3, 1998 release indicated that Sunbeam's first quarter sales were in the range of $240 million. In fact, Sunbeam's first quarter sales were $224.5 million. Sunbeam obscured the true shortfall by extending its quarter from March 29 to March 31, 1998 - thereby adding two more days of Sunbeam sales. Sunbeam also failed to disclose that it had included two days of Coleman sales after the Coleman transaction closed on March 30. Further, Sunbeam inflated first quarter 1998 sales with $29 million of new phony "bill and hold" sales.

76. Just as Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales had been a disaster, so, too, were Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 earnings. Morgan Stanley and Sunbeam had represented to CPH that Sunbeam would achieve or exceed analyst first quarter 1998 earnings estimates. At the time of that representation, the consensus among analysts was that Sunbeam would enjoy first quarter 1998 earnings of $0.33 per share. However, on May 9, 1998, Sunbeam disclosed that it would record a first quarter loss of $0.09 per share (excluding one-time charges) - more than $0.40 per share lower than CPH had been told to expect.

77. Within weeks, Dunlap's fraudulent scheme began to unravel. In June 1998, after a number of news articles critical of Sunbeam's practices, Sunbeam's Board of Directors launched an internal investigation. That investigation led quickly to the firing of Dunlap and Kersh, and, subsequently, to a restatement of Sunbeam's financial statements for 1996, 1997, and the first quarter of 1998.

COUNT I

Fraudulent Misrepresentation

78. CPH repeats and realleges the allegations of paragraphs 1 through 77 above as if set forth fully herein.

79. As detailed above, Morgan Stanley participated in a scheme to mislead CPH and others and cover up the massive fraud at Sunbeam until Morgan Stanley and Sunbeam could close the purchase of Coleman. Morgan Stanley provided CPH with false information concerning Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial performance, its business operations, and the value of Sunbeam's stock. Morgan Stanley also actively assisted Sunbeam in concealing Sunbeam's disastrous first quarter 1998 sales and earnings and the true reasons for Sunbeam's poor performance.

80. Morgan Stanley knew that its statements to CPH were materially false and misleading and omitted the true facts.

81. Morgan Stanley intended that CPH rely on Morgan Stanley's representations concerning Sunbeam.

82. In agreeing to accept approximately 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock in connection with the sale of CPH's interest in Coleman, CPH reasonably and justifiably relied upon Morgan Stanley's representations concerning Sunbeam.

83. As a result of Morgan Stanley's misconduct, CPH has suffered damages in excess of $485 million.

COUNT II

Aiding And Abetting Fraud

84. CPH repeats and realleges the allegations of paragraphs 1 through 77 above as if set forth fully herein.

85. As detailed above, Dunlap engaged in a fraudulent scheme to inflate the price of Sunbeam's stock by improperly manipulating Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 performance, by falsely asserting that Sunbeam had successfully "turned around,” and by concealing the collapse of Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales and earnings and the reasons for Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 performance.

86. As detailed above, Morgan Stanley knew of Dunlap's fraudulent scheme and helped to conceal it until after Sunbeam could close the purchase of Coleman.

87. As detailed above, Morgan Stanley provided substantial assistance to Dunlap and Sunbeam, including (a) concealing Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales collapse; (b) assisting with the false March 19, 1998 press release; (c) arranging road shows and meetings with prospective debenture purchasers at which Morgan Stanley, Dunlap, and others made false statements concerning Sunbeam's financial condition and business operations; (d) preparing and disseminating the preliminary and final offering memoranda for the subordinated debenture offering, both of which contained false information concerning Sunbeam's financial condition and business operations; (e) providing CPH with false financial and business information concerning Sunbeam; (f) scripting Dunlap's false public statements concerning Sunbeam's acquisition of Coleman; (g) persuading CPH to sell its interest in Coleman and to accept 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock and other consideration; and (h) underwriting the $750 million convertible debenture offering, proceeds from which were used to fund Sunbeam's purchase of Coleman.

88. As a result of Morgan Stanley's misconduct, CPH has suffered damages in excess of $485 million.

COUNT III

Conspiracy

89. CPH repeats and realleges the allegations of paragraphs 1 through 77 above as if set forth fully herein.

90. As detailed above, Morgan Stanley conspired with Dunlap and other senior Sunbeam executives to conceal the truth about Sunbeam's financial performance and business operations.

91. As detailed above, Morgan Stanley committed overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy, including: (a) concealing Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales collapse; (b) assisting with the false March 19, 1998 press release; (c) arranging road shows and meetings with prospective debenture purchasers at which Morgan Stanley, Dunlap, and others made false statements concerning Sunbeam's financial condition and business operations; (d) preparing and disseminating the preliminary and final offering memoranda for the subordinated debenture offering, both of which contained false information concerning Sunbeam's financial condition and business operations; (e) providing CPH with false financial and business information concerning Sunbeam; (f) scripting Dunlap's false public statements concerning Sunbeam's acquisition of Coleman; (g) persuading CPH to sell its interest in Coleman and to accept 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock and other consideration; and (h) underwriting the $750 million convertible debenture offering, proceeds from which were used to fund Sunbeam's purchase of Coleman.

92. As a result of Morgan Stanley's misconduct, CPH has suffered damages in excess of $485 million.

COUNT IV

Negligent Misrepresentation

93. CPH repeats and realleges the allegations of paragraphs 1 through 77 above as if set forth fully herein.

94. As detailed above, Morgan Stanley negotiated directly with CPH concerning the transfer of CPH's 82% interest in Coleman to Sunbeam. During the course of Morgan Stanley's dealings with CPH, Morgan Stanley provided CPH with information concerning Sunbeam, which, in the exercise of reasonable care, Morgan Stanley would have known was materially false and misleading. Morgan Stanley failed to use reasonable care in providing CPH with truthful and accurate information concerning Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial performance, Sunbeam's business operations, the value of Sunbeam's stock, and Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 performance.

95. As detailed above, Morgan Stanley intended for CPH to rely, and CPH justifiably relied, on the information provided by Morgan Stanley.

96. As a result of Morgan Stanley's negligence, CPH has suffered damages in excess of $485 million.

WHEREFORE, plaintiff Coleman (Parent) Holdings Inc. demands judgment against defendant Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc. as follows:

- A. Compensatory damages to be determined at trial in an amount in excess of $485 million;
- B. An award of costs and expenses incurred in this action, including reasonable attorneys' and experts' fees and expenses; and
- C. Any further relief as the Court may deem just and proper in light of all the circumstances of the case.
- D. CPH expressly reserves the right to seek leave to amend its complaint pursuant to Fla. Stat. § 768.72 to assert claims for punitive damages in excess of $1.5 billion as allowed by law.

JURY DEMAND

Plaintiff demands a trial by jury on all claims.

ANSWER OF MORGAN STANLEY & CO. INCORPORATED

Defendant Morgan Stanley & Co. Incorporated ("MS & Co.") responds to Plaintiff Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc.'s ("CPH") Complaint by denying generally that MS & Co. engaged in any fraudulent or negligent misrepresentations, any conspiracy to defraud, that MS & Co. assisted Sunbeam Corporation ("Sunbeam") or any employee, director or agent of Sunbeam in the commission of a fraudulent scheme, or that MS & Co. otherwise defrauded CPH in any manner. Specifically, MS & Co. responds to CPH's allegations as follows:

Nature of the Action

1. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 1.
2. MS & Co. admits that, beginning in mid-1997, MS & Co. served as an investment banker for Sunbeam. MS & Co. admits that it attempted to identify a party interested in purchasing Sunbeam, and that those efforts were ultimately unsuccessful. MS & Co. admits that it recommended that Sunbeam's management consider acquiring other companies instead and suggested, as is common in corporate mergers and acquisitions, that Sunbeam consider, among other options, using Sunbeam stock as part of the consideration for such an acquisition. MS & Co. denies that it had any knowledge as to the accuracy of the value of Sunbeam's stock, or that MS & Co. knew (or even suspected) that the value of Sunbeam's stock had been "fraudulently inflated." MS & Co. admits that it facilitated communications between Sunbeam and Coleman, but denies that it in any way "persuaded" CPH to sell its interest in Coleman. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 2 and consequently denies them.

3. MS & Co. admits that it agreed to serve as underwriter of a $750 million debenture offering for Sunbeam. MS & Co. admits that, as an advisor to Sunbeam, it had access to certain financial documents, and further states that those same documents were made available to CPH during the acquisition negotiations. Further, in that regard, MS & Co. specifically disclaimed any independent evaluation of Sunbeam's financial records, and expressly stated that it relied solely on documentation and information provided by Sunbeam and Sunbeam's audited financial statements. MS & Co. admits that on March 18, 1998, it learned that Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales were "soft." Sunbeam insisted that its sales would meet expectations, but MS & Co. insisted that Sunbeam issue a press release to warn the market of the softening sales. Additionally, MS & Co. received two "comfort letters" from Sunbeam's auditors, Arthur Andersen. MS & Co. performed all of its obligations as an underwriter of Sunbeam securities. MS & Co. denies that it had any role in the accounting judgments described in the complaint, or any obligations to audit or independently examine Sunbeam's accounting records. MS & Co. denies that it owed any duties to CPH. MS & Co. denies that it had any independent knowledge as to the reasons behind Sunbeam's soft sales, that Sunbeam had a "practice of accelerating sales," or that it "materially misrepresent[ed]" information to CPH. Further, MS & Co. specifically denies that it in any manner assisted Sunbeam in concealing its 1998 first quarter sales numbers in order to close the transaction. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 3 and consequently denies them.

4. MS & Co. admits that CPH has brought this action against MS & Co. alleging fraudulent misrepresentation, aiding and abetting, conspiracy, and negligent misrepresentation, but denies that there is any merit to the suit. MS & Co. specifically denies that it made any fraudulent or negligent representations to CPH, that it in any way aided or abetted a fraudulent scheme against CPH, or that it participated in a conspiracy to defraud CPH. MS & Co. denies that any losses that CPH suffered resulted from fraud or any wrongful conduct on the part of MS & Co. MS & Co. denies the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 4.

5. MS & Co. admits that CPH purports to seek compensatory damages against MS & Co., but denies that such claim is valid, for MS & Co. denies that it was engaged in any wrongful conduct. MS & Co. denies the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 5.

Jurisdiction and Venue

6. MS & Co. admits the allegations contained in Paragraph 6. MS & Co. further admits that it is incorporated in Delaware and has its principal place of business in New York.

7. MS & Co. denies that venue is proper in this district.

Parties and Other Key Participants

8. MS & Co. admits that CPH represented, in negotiations with Sunbeam, that it owned, directly or indirectly, approximately 82% of Coleman prior to March 30, 1998. MS & Co. admits that on March 30, 1998, Sunbeam acquired CPH's interest in Coleman by paying CPH with 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam common stock and other consideration, including a cash payment by Sunbeam to CPH in the amount of $159,956,756.00. (See Feb. 27, 1998 Merger Agmt. § 3.1(a)(i) (Ex. 1).) MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 8 and consequently denies them.

9. MS & Co. admits that it is an investment banking firm providing financial and securities services. MS & Co. admits that, as part of its business operations, it at times provides advice on mergers and acquisitions, and raises capital in equity and debt markets, depending on the needs of its clients. MS & Co. admits that it served as Sunbeam's investment banker for certain aspects of Sunbeam's acquisition of Coleman, and served as underwriter of certain securities issued by Sunbeam in connection with the acquisition. MS & Co. denies any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 9.

10. MS & Co. admits that Sunbeam was a publicly-traded company which manufactures and markets household and specialty consumer products, including outdoor cooking products. MS & Co. admits that Sunbeam marketed these products under several brand names, including Sunbeam and Oster. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 10 and consequently denies them.

11. MS & Co. admits that Albert Dunlap had served as the Chief Executive Officer of Sunbeam. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 11 and consequently denies them.

12. MS & Co. admits that Russell Kersh had served as the Executive Vice President of Sunbeam. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 12 and consequently denies them.

13. MS & Co. admits that Arthur Andersen LLP served as Sunbeam's auditors and provided independent/outside accounting services to Sunbeam. MS & Co. further admits that, during the performance of its engagement, it received "comfort letters" from Arthur Andersen. MS & Co. never served as auditor for Sunbeam, and never provided Sunbeam with any accounting or accounting-related services. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to know the location of Lawrence Bornstein or to form a belief as to the truth of any allegations pertaining to him, and consequently denies them. MS & Co. denies any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 13.

Factual Background

14. MS & Co. admits the allegations contained in Paragraph 14.

15. MS & Co. responds that the allegations contained in Paragraph 15 pertain to publicly available information, and refers to such information for the truth or falsity of such allegations. To the extent that further response is required, MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 15 and consequently denies them.

16. MS & Co. responds that the allegations contained in Paragraph 16 pertain to publicly available information, and refers to such information for the truth or falsity of such allegations. To the extent that further response is required, MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 16 and consequently denies them.

17. MS & Co. admits, on information and belief, that Albert Dunlap was hired as Sunbeam's Chief Executive Officer on or about July 18, 1996. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 17 and consequently denies them.

18. MS & Co. admits, on information and belief, that Russell Kersh was hired as Sunbeam's Chief Financial Officer. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 18 and consequently denies them.

19. MS & Co. admits, on information and belief, that Albert Dunlap and members of his senior management team entered into employment agreements with Sunbeam. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 19 and consequently denies them.

20. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 20 and consequently denies them.

21. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 21 and consequently denies them.

22. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 22 and consequently denies them.

23. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 23 and consequently denies them.

24. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 24 and consequently denies them.

25. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 25 and consequently denies them.

26. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 26 and consequently denies them.

27. MS & Co. admits, on information and belief, that Sunbeam reported a loss of $18.1 million in the third quarter of 1996, and that it had a $34.5 million gain in the third quarter 1997. MS & Co. further admits, on information and belief, that Sunbeam reported an increase in profits from $6.5 million in 1996 to $67.7 million in 1997. MS & Co. responds that the allegations contained in Paragraph 27 regarding stock prices pertain to publicly available information and MS & Co. refers to such information for the truth or falsity of such allegations. To the extent that further response is required, MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 27 and consequently denies them.

28. MS & Co. admits that it was engaged by Sunbeam to explore a possible sale of Sunbeam's core business and/or the initiation of one or more acquisitions. MS & Co. denies that it ever served as Dunlap's "shill." MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 28 and consequently denies them.

29. MS & Co. admits that William Strong and other MS & Co. employees met with Sunbeam in the spring of 1997 to discuss Sunbeam's investment banking requirements. Further, MS & Co. admits that, although it was not engaged in a previous relationship with Sunbeam,

William Strong had worked with Dunlap before, during Strong's previous employment with Salomon Brothers. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 29 and consequently denies them.

30. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 30 and consequently denies them.

31. MS & Co. admits that William Strong and other MS & Co. employees met with Sunbeam in the spring of 1997 to discuss Sunbeam's investment banking requirements. MS & Co. admits that it was engaged by Sunbeam to explore a possible sale of Sunbeam's core business and/or the initiation of one or more acquisitions. MS & Co. admits that it initially sought a buyer for Sunbeam. To the extent this Paragraph alleges that MS & Co. was motivated to participate in a fraud in order to retain a single client and receive a customary fee, that allegation is foreclosed, among other reasons, by the fact that MS & Co.'s own affiliate lent hundreds of millions of dollars to Sunbeam two days after the Coleman acquisition closed. (June 1998 Credit Facilities Mem. (Ex. 2).) MS & Co. denies any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 31.

32. MS & Co. admits that it searched for a buyer for Sunbeam. MS & Co. further admits that it assembled marketing materials based on financial documentation and audited financial statements provided to MS & Co. by Sunbeam and Arthur Andersen, for use in meetings with potential acquirers. MS & Co. admits that, despite contacting many companies, it was unable to find a buyer for Sunbeam. MS & Co. specifically denies CPH's allegation that MS & Co. knew that it would not be compensated if "it failed to deliver a major transaction," or that "Davis and Chase were standing by . . . to reclaim their position as Dunlap's investment banker of choice." MS & Co. denies any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 32.

33. MS & Co. denies that it provided the "solution" to any "problem" alleged in Paragraph 33. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 33 and consequently denies them.

34. MS & Co. admits after its unsuccessful attempts to locate a purchaser for Sunbeam, it suggested that Sunbeam acquire one or more other companies instead. MS & Co. admits that it proposed to Sunbeam, among other options, the possibility of paying for any such acquisition in part with Sunbeam's stock. MS & Co. specifically denies any knowledge to the effect that a "failure to find a buyer for Sunbeam could prove fatal to [their] relationship." MS & Co. further denies any involvement in or knowledge of fraudulently inflated Sunbeam stock or concealment of any fraud at Sunbeam. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 34 and consequently denies them.

35. MS & Co. admits that, beginning in mid-1997, MS & Co. served as an investment banker for Sunbeam. MS & Co. admits that it attempted to identify a party interested in purchasing Sunbeam, and that those efforts were ultimately unsuccessful. MS & Co. admits that it recommended that Sunbeam's management consider, among other options, acquiring other companies instead and suggested, as is common in corporate mergers and acquisitions, that Sunbeam consider using Sunbeam stock as part of the consideration for such an acquisition. MS & Co. denies that it developed "acquisition strategies" for Sunbeam or that the services or potential transactions it discussed with Sunbeam's management were deceptive or in any way designed to facilitate fraud. MS & Co. specifically denies that it in any way knew of or knowingly assisted Dunlap to "camouflage Sunbeam's results" thereby making it "difficult to detect any shortfall in Sunbeam's performance," or that it knew of or assisted Dunlap in taking "new massive restructuring charges," which thereby created increased "cookie jar reserves." MS & Co. denies any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 35.

36. MS & Co. admits that, in its capacity as advisor to Sunbeam, it identified Coleman as a potential acquisition candidate. MS & Co. admits that it communicated with representatives of Coleman to discuss a potential acquisition, but denies that it "persuade[d] CPH to sell its interest in Coleman to Sunbeam." MS & Co. admits that CPH represented, in negotiations with Sunbeam, that it owned, directly or indirectly, approximately 82% of Coleman prior to March 30, 1998. MS & Co. denies the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 36.

37. MS & Co. admits that it facilitated a meeting between representatives from Sunbeam and MacAndrews & Forbes Holdings, Inc. ("MAFCO") in December 1997. MS & Co. admits that it prepared Sunbeam's representatives for that meeting. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 37 and consequently denies them.

38. MS & Co. admits that discussions between Sunbeam, MAFCO and CPH resumed in early 1998. MS & Co. further admits that its Managing Directors James Stynes and Robert Kitts worked on MS & Co.'s engagement for Sunbeam. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 38 and consequently denies them.

39. MS & Co. denies that it "persuade[d]" CPH to sell Coleman in exchange for Sunbeam stock. MS & Co. denies that it "prepared" financial information for CPH. There is, in any event, no factual allegation contained in Paragraph 39 or elsewhere that identifies such alleged information at all, let alone with particularity. MS & Co. further denies that it knowingly "provided" CPH with false financial and business information, or otherwise knowingly relayed false information to CPH which created an appearance that "Sunbeam was prospering and that Sunbeam's stock had great value." Specifically, MS & Co. denies that it knowingly provided CPH with false 1996 and 1997 sales and revenue figures or with false projections. MS & Co. denies that it "falsely assured CPH that Sunbeam's 'early buy' sales program would not hurt Sunbeam's future revenues," that "Sunbeam would meet or exceed" first quarter 1998 estimates, that 1998 earnings estimates were accurate, that a plan to earn $2.20/share was attainable or even low, or that it "specifically advised CPH that Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales were 'tracking fine' and running ahead of analysts' estimates."

In any event CPH could not have relied on such alleged representations in light of (i) the Merger Agreement's representations and warranties (Merger Agmt. §§ 5.1-5.4), none of which refer to any alleged representation contained in this Paragraph, (ii) the representations and warranties in a separate agreement that was executed by Coleman and Sunbeam (Feb. 27, 1998 Company Merger Agmt. § 5.1-5.12 (Ex. 3)), which are expressly incorporated into the Merger Agreement and none of which refer to any alleged representation contained in this Paragraph, and (iii) the Merger Agreement's broad integration clause which forecloses reliance on any alleged representation contained in this Paragraph (Merger Agmt. § 12.5). MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 39 and consequently denies them.

40. MS & Co. admits that CPH agreed to sell its shares in Coleman to Sunbeam, and that CPH agreed to accept Sunbeam stock as partial payment for the sale, but denies that MS & Co. "persuaded" CPH to make the deal. CPH is a sophisticated party and was represented by its own expert advisors and attorneys. (Id. §§ 1.1; 4.11.) CPH and its advisors also enjoyed full access to Sunbeam's "books, records, properties, plants and personnel." (Id. § 6.7.) CPH also expressly disclaimed reliance on statements allegedly made during negotiations. (Id. § 12.5.) MS & Co. responds that the allegations contained in Paragraph 40 regarding stock value pertain to publicly available information, and refers to such information for the truth or falsity of such allegations. To the extent that further response is required, MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 40 and consequently denies them.

41. MS & Co. admits that on February 27, 1998, Sunbeam's Board of Directors met at Morgan Stanley's New York offices to discuss Sunbeam's possible purchase of Coleman. MS & Co. denies the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 41.

42. MS & Co. admits it made a presentation during the February 27, 1998 Sunbeam Board of Directors Meeting. MS & Co. further admits that MS & Co. representatives, including William Strong, Robert Kitts, James Stynes and Ruth Porat, were present at this meeting. MS &

Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 42 and consequently denies them.

43. MS & Co. admits that at that February 27, 1998 New York meeting, it provided Sunbeam with a written "fairness opinion" regarding the fair acquisition price of Coleman. This opinion was based on financial information provided to MS & Co. by Sunbeam, Coleman, and Arthur Andersen, and on synergy analyses which MS & Co. received from CPH. The written fairness opinion explicitly stated that MS & Co. "[has] not made any independent valuation or appraisal of the assets or liabilities of [Sunbeam]." (Feb. 27, 1998 Fairness Op. at 3 (Ex. 4).) MS & Co. denies any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 43.

44. MS & Co. admits that the Sunbeam Board of Directors approved the Coleman acquisition at the February 27, 1998 meeting in New York. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 44 and consequently denies them.

45. MS & Co. admits that it continued to provide investment banking services to Sunbeam after the Coleman acquisition was approved. MS & Co. denies any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 45.

46. MS & Co. admits that the Coleman acquisition was announced on March 2, 1998. MS & Co. responds that the allegations contained in Paragraph 46 regarding stock prices pertain to publicly available information, and refers to such information for the truth or falsity of such allegations. To the extent that further response is required, MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 46 and consequently denies them.

47. MS & Co. admits that it agreed to serve as underwriter for Sunbeam's subordinated debentures. The "cash portion" of the consideration set forth in the Merger Agreement was also financed in part through a $680 million loan made by Morgan Stanley Senior Funding, an affiliate of MS & Co. (See Credit Facilities Mem.) MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 47 and consequently denies them.

48. MS & Co. admits that the money raised from the sale of the debentures was used in part to finance Sunbeam's acquisition of Coleman.

49. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 49 and consequently denies them.

50. MS & Co. admits that the convertible debentures were presented to potential investors at a series of "road show" meetings and conference calls. MS & Co. admits that it reviewed and commented on the offering memorandum and other materials used to present the debentures to potential investors. MS & Co. denies that it "misrepresented Sunbeam's financial performance" or "emphasized Dunlap's purported 'turnaround' accomplishments." To the contrary, the offering memorandum expressly stated that MS & Co. assumed no responsibility for the accuracy or completeness of Sunbeam's audited financial information and warned investors not to rely on any projections of future performance. (March 19, 1998 Note Offering Mem. at 2-3, 12-17, 72 (Ex. 5).) MS & Co. denies any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 50.

51. MS & Co. admits that it launched the debenture offering with a presentation to the Morgan Stanley sales force, but denies the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 51.

52. MS & Co. admits that the debenture offering was increased from $500 million to $750 million. MS & Co. admits that the debentures were offered to investors nationwide. MS & Co. denies any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 52.

53. MS & Co. admits that its employees traveled on one occasion to Sunbeam's Florida offices. MS & Co. denies the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 53, except to the extent that they constitute legal conclusions to which no response is required.

54. MS & Co. admits that William Strong worked on MS & Co.'s engagement for Sunbeam. MS & Co. also admits that Strong has provided deposition testimony discussing conversations with Sunbeam officials. MS & Co. denies that Strong or any other MS & Co.

employee was accurately apprised of Sunbeam's financial condition because MS & Co. at all times relied on information provided by Sunbeam management and Arthur Andersen, including Sunbeam's audited financial statements. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 54 and consequently denies them.

55. MS & Co. denies CPH's allegation that it was "telling CPH and the investing public . . . that Sunbeam's turnaround was a success, that Sunbeam's sales for the first quarter of 1998 were ahead of expectations of outside analysts, and that Sunbeam was poised for record sales." Furthermore, any information communicated by MS & Co. was based on financial data and information provided to it by Sunbeam and Arthur Andersen — a fact that MS & Co. regularly publicized through disclaimer statements. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 55 and consequently denies them.

56. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 56.

57. MS & Co. admits that it received a facsimile schedule regarding Sunbeam's finances on or about March 18, 1998. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 57 and consequently denies them.

58. MS & Co. admits that on or about March 18, 1998, it received a faxed financial schedule which reflected that Sunbeam's January and February 1998 sales were below those of January and February 1997. MS & Co. denies that it made assertions or otherwise disseminated information to CPH or others that it knew to be false. MS & Co. denies any knowledge of the fact that Sunbeam had not undergone a successful turnaround, or that Sunbeam's financial performance had not improved in the manner presented by Sunbeam's management and audited financial statements. MS & Co. admits that on March 18, 1998, it learned that Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales were "soft." Sunbeam insisted that its sales would meet expectations, but MS & Co. insisted that Sunbeam issue a press release to warn the market of the softening sales.

Additionally, MS & Co. received two "comfort letters" from Sunbeam's auditors, Arthur Andersen. MS & Co. performed all of its obligations as an underwriter of Sunbeam securities. MS & Co. denies that it had any role in the accounting judgments described in the complaint, or any obligations to audit or independently examine Sunbeam's accounting records. MS & Co. denies that it owed any duties to CPH. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 58 and consequently denies them.

59. MS & Co. admits that on March 18, 1998, it learned that Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales were "soft." Sunbeam insisted that its sales would meet expectations, but MS & Co. insisted that Sunbeam issue a press release to warn the market of the softening sales. Additionally, MS & Co. received two "comfort letters" from Sunbeam's auditors, Arthur Andersen. MS & Co. performed all of its obligations as an underwriter of Sunbeam securities. MS & Co. denies that it had any role in the accounting judgments described in the Complaint, or any obligations to audit or independently examine Sunbeam's accounting records. MS & Co. denies that it owed any duties to CPH. MS & Co. denies all remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 59.

60. MS & Co. admits that Sunbeam issued a press release on March 19, 1998 that included language selectively quoted in Paragraph 60. MS & Co. further states that the March 19, 1998 press release contained the following additional statement, omitted in the Complaint:

Cautionary Statements - Statements contained in this press release, including statements relating to the Company's expectations regarding anticipated performance in the future, are "forward looking statements," as such term is defined in the Private Securities Litigation Reform act of 1995. Actual results could differ materially from the Company's statements in this release regarding its expectations, goals or projected results, due to various factors, including those set forth in the Company's Cautionary Statements contains in its Annual Report on Form 10-K for its fiscal year ended December 31, 1997 filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

(March 19, 1998 Press Release (Ex. 6).)

61. MS & Co. admits that Sunbeam issued a press release on March 19, 1998 that included language selectively quoted in Paragraph 61. MS & Co. further states that the March 19, 1998 press release contained the following additional statement, omitted in the Complaint:

Cautionary Statements - Statements contained in this press release, including statements relating to the Company's expectations regarding anticipated performance in the future, are "forward looking statements," as such term is defined in the Private Securities Litigation Reform act of 1995. Actual results could differ materially from the Company's statements in this release regarding its expectations, goals or projected results, due to various factors, including those set forth in the Company's Cautionary Statements contains in its Annual Report on Form 10-K for its fiscal year ended December 31, 1997 filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

(Id.) MS & Co. denies all remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 61.

62. MS & Co. denies the allegation that it knew that the "shortfall from analysts' estimates was . . . caused by Sunbeam's acceleration of 1998 sales into the fourth quarter of 1997." MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 62 and consequently denies them.

63. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 63.

64. MS & Co. specifically denies that it "knew that a full and truthful disclosure . . . would doom the debenture offering," or that it had any knowledge that the press release was untruthful or otherwise misleading. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 64.

65. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 65. To the extent that this Paragraph quotes the Merger Agreement, that document speaks for itself and contradicts the allegations contained in the Complaint.

66. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 66 and consequently denies them.

67. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 67.

68. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 68 and consequently denies them.

69. MS & Co. admits that it continued to serve as Sunbeam's investment banker, and continued to prepare to close the debenture offering and the acquisition of Coleman, but denies any knowledge as to the alleged falsity of the March 19, 1998 press release. MS & Co. denies the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 69.

70. MS & Co. admits that throughout its service to Sunbeam, MS & Co. employees, including Tyree, spoke via telephone with representatives of Sunbeam. MS & Co. denies any knowledge that the press release was untruthful or otherwise misleading. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 70 and consequently denies them.

71. MS & Co. admits that it received "comfort letters" from Arthur Andersen. MS & Co. denies the allegation that it knew that "Sunbeam's earnings for the first quarter of 1998 were going to miss Wall Street analysts' earning expectations." MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 71 and consequently denies them.

72. MS & Co. admits that it continued to prepare to close both the debenture offering and the acquisition of Coleman. MS & Co. denies any allegation of its "having directly participated in misleading CPH and other investors." MS & Co. responds that the allegation that MS & Co. "had a duty to disclose the true facts" to CPH is a legal conclusion to which no response is required. MS & Co. denies the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 72.

73. MS & Co. admits that it received compensation for investment banking work performed by MS & Co. for Sunbeam. MS & Co. denies the allegation that it facilitated Sunbeam's fraud. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 73 and consequently denies them.

74. MS & Co. admits that on March 19, 1998, Sunbeam issued a press release which stated that "net sales for the first quarter of 1998 may be lower than the range of Wall Street analysts' estimates of $285 million to $295 million." MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 74 and consequently denies them.

75. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 75 and consequently denies them.

76. MS & Co. admits that it advocated issuing a press release to warn the market of the softening sales, but denies that it represented that Sunbeam's sales would exceed analysts' projections. MS & Co. denies the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 76.

77. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 77 and consequently denies them.

Count I – Fraudulent Misrepresentation

78. MS & Co. repeats and realleges its responses to Paragraphs 1 through 77 as if set forth herein.

79. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 79.

80. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 80.

81. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 81.

82. MS & Co. denies the allegation contained in Paragraph 82.

83. MS & Co. denies the allegation contained in Paragraph 83.

Count II – Aiding and Abetting Fraud

84. MS & Co. repeats and realleges its responses to Paragraphs 1 through 77 as if set forth herein.

85. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 85 and consequently denies them.

86. MS & Co. denies the allegation contained in Paragraph 86.

87. MS & Co. admits that, beginning in mid-1997, MS & Co. served as an investment banker and underwriter for Sunbeam. MS & Co. admits that it attempted to identify a party interested in purchasing Sunbeam, and that those efforts were ultimately unsuccessful. MS & Co. admits that it recommended that Sunbeam's management consider acquiring other companies instead and suggested, as is common in corporate mergers and acquisitions, that Sunbeam consider using Sunbeam stock as part of the consideration for such an acquisition. MS & Co. denies that it had any knowledge as to the accuracy of the value of Sunbeam's stock, or that MS & Co. knew (or even suspected) that the value of Sunbeam's stock had been "fraudulently inflated."

MS & Co. admits that it facilitated communications between Sunbeam and Coleman, but denies that it in any way "persuaded" CPH to sell its interest in Coleman.

MS & Co. admits that on March 18, 1998, it learned that Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales were "soft." Sunbeam insisted that its sales would meet expectations, but MS & Co. insisted that Sunbeam issue a press release to warn the market of the softening sales. Additionally, MS & Co. received two "comfort letters" from Sunbeam's auditors, Arthur Andersen. MS & Co. performed all of its obligations as an underwriter of Sunbeam securities.

MS & Co. admits that the convertible debentures were presented to potential investors at a series of "road show" meetings and conference calls. MS & Co. admits that it reviewed and commented on the offering memorandum and other materials used to present the debentures to potential investors. MS & Co. denies the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 87.

88. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 88.

Count III – Conspiracy

89. MS & Co. repeats and realleges its responses to Paragraphs 1 through 77 as if set forth herein.

90. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 90.

91. MS & Co. admits that it served as a financial advisor to Sunbeam and an underwriter of Sunbeam securities, but denies that it in any way committed "overt acts in furtherance of a conspiracy." MS & Co. denies that it performed an independent financial analysis of Sunbeam; to the contrary, MS & Co. informed CPH that it was relying solely on financial data and information provided to it by Sunbeam and Arthur Andersen. MS & Co. admits that it underwrote the $750 million convertible debenture offering. MS & Co. denies the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 91.

92. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 92.

Count IV – Negligent Misrepresentation

93. MS & Co. repeats and realleges its responses to Paragraphs 1 through 77 as if set forth herein.

94. MS & Co. admits that it served as a financial advisor to Sunbeam and an underwriter of Sunbeam securities. MS & Co. responds that the allegations contained in Paragraph 94 constitute legal conclusions to which no response is required. Alternatively, MS & Co. denies the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 94.

95. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 95.

96. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 96.

AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSES

In addition to the foregoing responses, MS & Co. asserts the following affirmative defenses to the claims stated in CPH's Complaint. MS & Co. does not assume the burden of proof on these defenses where the substantive law provides otherwise.

First Affirmative Defense

CPH's claims must be dismissed on forum non conveniens grounds pursuant to Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.061(a).

Second Affirmative Defense

CPH's alleged claims are barred, in whole or in part, for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

Third Affirmative Defense

CPH's alleged claims are barred, in whole or in part, by the doctrine of laches.

Fourth Affirmative Defense

CPH's alleged claims are barred, in whole or in part, by the doctrine of estoppel.

Fifth Affirmative Defense

CPH's alleged claims are barred, in whole or in part, by the doctrine of waiver.

Sixth Affirmative Defense

CPH's alleged claims are barred, in whole or in part, by the doctrine of unclean hands.

Seventh Affirmative Defense

CPH's alleged claims are barred, in whole or in part, by plaintiff's failure to mitigate its damages.

Eighth Affirmative Defense

CPH's alleged claims are barred because CPH has experienced no damages, and any claimed loss is speculative and/or was avoidable.

Ninth Affirmative Defense

CPH's alleged claims are barred, in whole or in part, because the claimed injuries were not proximately caused by any acts or omissions of MS & Co.

Tenth Affirmative Defense

To the extent CPH's fraud claim relies on non-disclosure, that claim is barred, in whole or in part, because MS & Co. was under no duty to disclose.

Eleventh Affirmative Defense

CPH's claims are barred, in whole or in part, because of MS & Co.'s repeated disclaimers of reliance.

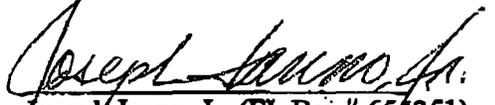

Twelfth Affirmative Defense

Any future claim by CPH for punitive damages is barred, in whole or in part, because (i) the allegedly tortious conduct is not gross, wanton, willful, or otherwise morally culpable; and (ii) the alleged conduct was not part of a pattern directed at the public generally.

WHEREFORE, MS & Co. denies that CPH is entitled to any relief whatsoever, and to the extent that CPH should recover any damage award, that award should be offset by CPH's failure to take appropriate steps to mitigate its damages. MS & Co. respectfully requests that the Court enter judgment for MS & Co. dismissing the complaint with prejudice, award MS & Co. its attorneys' fees, costs and expenses, and grant such other and further relief as may be just and proper.

Incorporated.

Judge Elizabeth T. Maass.

Defendant Morgan Stanley & Co. Incorporated ("MS & Co.") responds to Plaintiff Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc.'s ("CPH") Complaint by denying generally that MS & Co. engaged in any fraudulent or negligent misrepresentations, any conspiracy to defraud, that MS & Co. assisted Sunbeam Corporation ("Sunbeam") or any employee, director or agent of Sunbeam in the commission of a fraudulent scheme, or that MS & Co. otherwise defrauded CPH in any manner. Specifically, MS & Co. responds to CPH's allegations as follows:

Nature of the Action

1. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 1.
2. MS & Co. admits that, beginning in mid-1997, MS & Co. served as an investment banker for Sunbeam. MS & Co. admits that it attempted to identify a party interested in purchasing Sunbeam, and that those efforts were ultimately unsuccessful. MS & Co. admits that it recommended that Sunbeam's management consider acquiring other companies instead and suggested, as is common in corporate mergers and acquisitions, that Sunbeam consider, among other options, using Sunbeam stock as part of the consideration for such an acquisition. MS & Co. denies that it had any knowledge as to the accuracy of the value of Sunbeam's stock, or that MS & Co. knew (or even suspected) that the value of Sunbeam's stock had been "fraudulently inflated." MS & Co. admits that it facilitated communications between Sunbeam and Coleman, but denies that it in any way "persuaded" CPH to sell its interest in Coleman. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 2 and consequently denies them.
3. MS & Co. admits that it agreed to serve as underwriter of a $750 million debenture offering for Sunbeam. MS & Co. admits that, as an advisor to Sunbeam, it had access to certain financial documents, and further states that those same documents were made available to CPH during the acquisition negotiations. Further, in that regard, MS & Co. specifically disclaimed any independent evaluation of Sunbeam's financial records, and expressly stated that it relied solely on documentation and information provided by Sunbeam and Sunbeam's audited financial statements. MS & Co.

admits that on March 18, 1998, it learned that Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales were "soft." Sunbeam insisted that its sales would meet expectations, but MS & Co. insisted that Sunbeam issue a press release to warn the market of the softening sales. Additionally, MS & Co. received two "comfort letters" from Sunbeam's auditors, Arthur Andersen. MS & Co. performed all of its obligations as an underwriter of Sunbeam securities. MS & Co. denies that it had any role in the accounting judgments described in the complaint, or any obligations to audit or independently examine Sunbeam's accounting records. MS & Co. denies that it owed any duties to CPH. MS & Co. denies that it had any independent knowledge as to the reasons behind Sunbeam's soft sales, that Sunbeam had a "practice of accelerating sales," or that it "materially misrepresent[ed]" information to CPH. Further, MS & Co. specifically denies that it in any manner assisted Sunbeam in concealing its 1998 first quarter sales numbers in order to close the transaction. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 3 and consequently denies them.

4. MS & Co. admits that CPH has brought this action against MS & Co. alleging fraudulent misrepresentation, aiding and abetting, conspiracy, and negligent misrepresentation, but denies that there is any merit to the suit. MS & Co. specifically denies that it made any fraudulent or negligent representations to CPH, that it in any way aided or abetted a fraudulent scheme against CPH, or that it participated in a conspiracy to defraud CPH. MS & Co. denies that any losses that CPH suffered resulted from fraud or any wrongful conduct on the part of MS & Co. MS & Co. denies the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 4.

5. MS & Co. admits that CPH purports to seek compensatory damages against MS & Co., but denies that such claim is valid, for MS & Co. denies that it was engaged in any wrongful conduct. MS & Co. denies the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 5.

Jurisdiction and Venue

6. MS & Co. admits the allegations contained in Paragraph 6. MS & Co. further admits that it is incorporated in Delaware and has its principal place of business in New York.

7. MS & Co. denies that venue is proper in this district.

Parties and Other Key Participants

8. MS & Co. admits that CPH represented, in negotiations with Sunbeam, that it owned, directly or indirectly, approximately 82% of Coleman prior to March 30, 1998. MS & Co. admits that on March 30, 1998, Sunbeam acquired CPH's interest in Coleman by paying CPH with 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam common stock and other consideration, including a cash payment by Sunbeam to CPH in the amount of $159,956,756.00. (See Feb. 27, 1998 Merger Agmt. § 3.1(a)(i) (Ex. 1).) MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 8 and consequently denies them.

9. MS & Co. admits that it is an investment banking firm providing financial and securities services. MS & Co. admits that, as part of its business operations, it at times provides advice on mergers and acquisitions, and raises capital in equity and debt markets, depending on the needs of its clients. MS & Co. admits that it served as Sunbeam's investment banker for certain aspects of Sunbeam's acquisition of Coleman, and served as underwriter of certain securities issued by Sunbeam in connection with the acquisition. MS & Co. denies any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 9.

10. MS & Co. admits that Sunbeam was a publicly-traded company which manufactures and markets household and specialty consumer products, including outdoor cooking products. MS & Co. admits that Sunbeam marketed these products under several brand names, including Sunbeam and Oster. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 10 and consequently denies them.

11. MS & Co. admits that Albert Dunlap had served as the Chief Executive Officer of Sunbeam. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 11 and consequently denies them.

12. MS & Co. admits that Russell Kersh had served as the Executive Vice President of Sunbeam. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 12 and consequently denies them.

13. MS & Co. admits that Arthur Andersen LLP served as Sunbeam's auditors and provided independent/outside accounting services to Sunbeam. MS & Co. further admits that, during the performance of its engagement, it received "comfort letters" from Arthur Andersen. MS & Co. never served as auditor for Sunbeam, and never provided Sunbeam with any accounting or accounting-related services. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to know the location of Lawrence Bornstein or to form a belief as to the truth of any allegations pertaining to him, and consequently denies them. MS & Co. denies any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 13.

Factual Background

14. MS & Co. admits the allegations contained in Paragraph 14.

15. MS & Co. responds that the allegations contained in Paragraph 15 pertain to publicly available information, and refers to such information for the truth or falsity of such allegations. To the extent that further response is required, MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 15 and consequently denies them.

16. MS & Co. responds that the allegations contained in Paragraph 16 pertain to publicly available information, and refers to such information for the truth or falsity of such allegations. To the extent that further response is required, MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 16 and consequently denies them.

17. MS & Co. admits, on information and belief, that Albert Dunlap was hired as Sunbeam's Chief Executive Officer on or about July 18, 1996. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 17 and consequently denies them.

18. MS & Co. admits, on information and belief, that Russell Kersh was hired as Sunbeam's Chief Financial Officer. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 18 and consequently denies them.

19. MS & Co. admits, on information and belief, that Albert Dunlap and members of his senior management team entered into employment agreements with Sunbeam. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 19 and consequently denies them.

20. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 20 and consequently denies them.

21. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 21 and consequently denies them.

22. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 22 and consequently denies them.

23. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 23 and consequently denies them.

24. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 24 and consequently denies them.

25. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 25 and consequently denies them.

26. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 26 and consequently denies them.

27. MS & Co. admits, on information and belief, that Sunbeam reported a loss of $18.1 million in the third quarter of 1996, and that it had a $34.5 million gain in the third quarter 1997. MS & Co. further admits, on information and belief, that Sunbeam reported an increase in profits from $6.5 million in 1996 to $67.7 million in 1997. MS & Co. responds that the allegations contained in Paragraph 27 regarding stock prices pertain to publicly available information and MS & Co. refers to such information for the truth or falsity of such allegations. To the extent that further response is required, MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 27 and consequently denies them.

28. MS & Co. admits that it was engaged by Sunbeam to explore a possible sale of Sunbeam's core business and/or the initiation of one or more acquisitions. MS & Co. denies that it ever served as Dunlap's "shill." MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 28 and consequently denies them.

29. MS & Co. admits that William Strong and other MS & Co. employees met with Sunbeam in the spring of 1997 to discuss Sunbeam's investment banking requirements. Further, MS & Co. admits that, although it was not engaged in a previous relationship with Sunbeam, William Strong had worked with Dunlap before, during Strong's previous employment with Salomon Brothers. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 29 and consequently denies them.

30. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 30 and consequently denies them.

31. MS & Co. admits that William Strong and other MS & Co. employees met with Sunbeam in the spring of 1997 to discuss Sunbeam's investment banking requirements. MS & Co. admits that it was engaged by Sunbeam to explore a possible sale of Sunbeam's core business and/or the initiation of one or more acquisitions. MS & Co. admits that it initially sought a buyer for Sunbeam. To the extent this Paragraph alleges that MS & Co. was motivated to participate in a fraud in order to retain a single client and receive a customary fee, that allegation is foreclosed, among other reasons, by the fact that MS & Co.'s own affiliate lent hundreds of millions of dollars to Sunbeam two days after the Coleman acquisition closed. (June 1998 Credit Facilities Mem. (Ex. 2).) MS & Co. denies any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 31.

32. MS & Co. admits that it searched for a buyer for Sunbeam. MS & Co. further admits that it assembled marketing materials based on financial documentation and audited financial statements provided to MS & Co. by Sunbeam and Arthur Andersen, for use in meetings with potential acquirers. MS & Co. admits that, despite contacting many companies, it was unable to find a buyer for Sunbeam. MS & Co. specifically denies CPH's allegation that MS & Co. knew that it would not be compensated if "it failed to deliver a major transaction," or that "Davis and Chase were standing by ... to reclaim their position as Dunlap's investment banker of choice." MS & Co. denies any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 32.

33. MS & Co. denies that it provided the "solution" to any "problem" alleged in Paragraph 33. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 33 and consequently denies them.

34. MS & Co. admits after its unsuccessful attempts to locate a purchaser for Sunbeam, it suggested that Sunbeam acquire one or more other companies instead. MS & Co. admits that it proposed to Sunbeam, among other options, the possibility of paying for any such acquisition in part with Sunbeam's stock. MS & Co. specifically denies any knowledge to the effect that a "failure to find a buyer for Sunbeam could prove fatal to [their] relationship." MS & Co. further denies any involvement in or knowledge of fraudulently inflated Sunbeam stock or concealment of any fraud at Sunbeam. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 34 and consequently denies them.

35. MS & Co. admits that, beginning in mid-1997, MS & Co. served as an investment banker for Sunbeam. MS & Co. admits that it attempted to identify a party interested in purchasing Sunbeam, and that those efforts were ultimately unsuccessful. MS & Co. admits that it recommended that Sunbeam's management consider, among other options, acquiring other companies instead and suggested, as is common in corporate mergers and acquisitions, that Sunbeam consider using Sunbeam stock as part of the consideration for such an acquisition. MS & Co. denies that it developed "acquisition strategies" for Sunbeam or that the services or potential transactions it discussed with Sunbeam's management were deceptive or in any way designed to facilitate fraud. MS & Co. specifically denies that it in any way knew of or knowingly assisted Dunlap to "camouflage Sunbeam's results" thereby making it "difficult to detect any shortfall in Sunbeam's performance," or that it knew of or assisted Dunlap in taking "new massive restructuring charges," which thereby created increased "cookie jar reserves." MS & Co. denies any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 35.

36. MS & Co. admits that, in its capacity as advisor to Sunbeam, it identified Coleman as a potential acquisition candidate. MS & Co. admits that it communicated with representatives of Coleman to discuss a potential acquisition, but denies that it "persuade[d] CPH to sell its interest in Coleman to Sunbeam." MS & Co. admits that CPH represented, in negotiations with Sunbeam, that it owned, directly or indirectly, approximately 82% of Coleman prior to March 30, 1998. MS & Co. denies the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 36.

37. MS & Co. admits that it facilitated a meeting between representatives from Sunbeam and MacAndrews & Forbes Holdings, Inc. ("MAFCO") in December 1997. MS & Co. admits that it prepared Sunbeam's representatives for that meeting. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 37 and consequently denies them.

38. MS & Co. admits that discussions between Sunbeam, MAFCO and CPH resumed in early 1998. MS & Co. further admits that its Managing Directors James Stynes and Robert Kitts worked on MS & Co.'s engagement for Sunbeam. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 38 and consequently denies them.

39. MS & Co. denies that it "persuade[d]" CPH to sell Coleman in exchange for Sunbeam stock. MS & Co. denies that it "prepared" financial information for CPH. There is, in any event, no factual allegation contained in Paragraph 39 or elsewhere that identifies such alleged information at all, let alone with particularity. MS & Co. further denies that it knowingly “provided” CPH with false financial and business information, or otherwise knowingly relayed false information to CPH which created an appearance that “Sunbeam was prospering and that Sunbeam's stock had great value.” Specifically, MS & Co. denies that it knowingly provided CPH with false 1996 and 1997 sales and revenue figures or with false projections. MS & Co. denies that it “falsely assured CPH that Sunbeam's ‘early buy’ sales program would not hurt Sunbeam's future revenues,” that “Sunbeam would meet or exceed” first quarter 1998 estimates, that 1998 earnings estimates were accurate, that a plan to earn $2.20/share was attainable or even low, or that it “specifically advised CPH that Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales were ‘tracking fine’ and running ahead of analysts' estimates.”

In any event CPH could not have relied on such alleged representations in light of (i) the Merger Agreement's representations and warranties (Merger Agmt. §§ 5.1-5.4), none of which refer to any alleged representation contained in this Paragraph, (ii) the representations and warranties in a separate agreement that was executed by Coleman and Sunbeam (Feb. 27, 1998 Company Merger Agmt. § 5.1-5.12 (Ex. 3)), which are expressly incorporated into the Merger Agreement and none of which refer to any alleged representation contained in this Paragraph, and (iii) the Merger Agreement's broad integration clause which forecloses reliance on any alleged representation contained in this Paragraph (Merger Agmt. § 12.5). MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 39 and consequently denies them.

40. MS & Co. admits that CPH agreed to sell its shares in Coleman to Sunbeam, and that CPH agreed to accept Sunbeam stock as partial payment for the sale, but denies that MS & Co. “persuaded” CPH to make the deal. CPH is a sophisticated party and was represented by its own expert advisors and attorneys. (Id. §§ 1.1; 4.11.) CPH and its advisors also enjoyed full access to Sunbeam's “books, records, properties, plants and personnel.” (Id. § 6.7.) CPH also expressly disclaimed reliance on statements allegedly made during negotiations. (Id. § 12.5.) MS & Co. responds that the allegations contained in Paragraph 40 regarding stock value pertain to publicly available information, and refers to such information for the truth or falsity of such allegations. To the extent that further response is required, MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 40 and consequently denies them.

41. MS & Co. admits that on February 27, 1998, Sunbeam's Board of Directors met at Morgan Stanley's New York offices to discuss Sunbeam's possible purchase of Coleman. MS & Co. denies the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 41.

42. MS & Co. admits it made a presentation during the February 27, 1998 Sunbeam Board of Directors Meeting. MS & Co. further admits that MS & Co. representatives, including William Strong, Robert Kitts, James Stynes and Ruth Porat, were present at this meeting. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 42 and consequently denies them.

43. MS & Co. admits that at that February 27, 1998 New York meeting, it provided Sunbeam with a written “fairness opinion” regarding the fair acquisition price of Coleman. This opinion was based on financial information provided to MS & Co. by Sunbeam, Coleman, and Arthur Andersen, and on synergy analyses which MS & Co. received from CPH. The written fairness opinion explicitly stated that MS & Co. “[has] not made any independent valuation or appraisal of the assets or liabilities of [Sunbeam].” (Feb. 27, 1998 Fairness Op. at 3 (Ex. 4).) MS & Co. denies any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 43.

44. MS & Co. admits that the Sunbeam Board of Directors approved the Coleman acquisition at the February 27, 1998 meeting in New York. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 44 and consequently denies them.

45. MS & Co. admits that it continued to provide investment banking services to Sunbeam after the Coleman acquisition was approved. MS & Co. denies any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 45.

46. MS & Co. admits that the Coleman acquisition was announced on March 2, 1998. MS & Co. responds that the allegations contained in Paragraph 46 regarding stock prices pertain to publicly available information, and refers to such information for the truth or falsity of such allegations. To the extent that further response is required, MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 46 and consequently denies them.

47. MS & Co. admits that it agreed to serve as underwriter for Sunbeam's subordinated debentures. The "cash portion" of the consideration set forth in the Merger Agreement was also financed in part through a $680 million loan made by Morgan Stanley Senior Funding, an affiliate of MS & Co. (See Credit Facilities Mem.) MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 47 and consequently denies them.

48. MS & Co. admits that the money raised from the sale of the debentures was used in part to finance Sunbeam's acquisition of Coleman.

49. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 49 and consequently denies them.

50. MS & Co. admits that the convertible debentures were presented to potential investors at a series of "road show" meetings and conference calls. MS & Co. admits that it reviewed and commented on the offering memorandum and other materials used to present the debentures to potential investors. MS & Co. denies that it "misrepresented Sunbeam's financial performance" or "emphasized Dunlap's purported 'turnaround' accomplishments." To the contrary, the offering memorandum expressly stated that MS & Co. assumed no responsibility for the accuracy or completeness of Sunbeam's audited financial information and warned investors not to rely on any projections of future performance. (March 19, 1998 Note Offering Mem. at 2-3, 12-17, 72 (Ex. 5).) MS & Co. denies any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 50.

51. MS & Co. admits that it launched the debenture offering with a presentation to the Morgan Stanley sales force, but denies the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 51.

52. MS & Co. admits that the debenture offering was increased from $500 million to $750 million. MS & Co. admits that the debentures were offered to investors nationwide. MS & Co. denies any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 52.

53. MS & Co. admits that its employees traveled on one occasion to Sunbeam's Florida offices. MS & Co. denies the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 53, except to the extent that they constitute legal conclusions to which no response is required.

54. MS & Co. admits that William Strong worked on MS & Co.'s engagement for Sunbeam. MS & Co. also admits that Strong has provided deposition testimony discussing conversations with Sunbeam officials. MS & Co. denies that Strong or any other MS & Co. employee was accurately apprised of Sunbeam's financial condition because MS & Co. at all times relied on information provided by Sunbeam management and Arthur Andersen, including Sunbeam's audited financial statements. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 54 and consequently denies them.

55. MS & Co. denies CPH's allegation that it was "telling CPH and the investing public ... that Sunbeam's turnaround was a success, that Sunbeam's sales for the first quarter of 1998 were ahead of expectations of outside analysts, and that Sunbeam was poised for record sales." Furthermore, any information communicated by MS & Co. was based on financial data and information provided to it by Sunbeam and Arthur Andersen -- a fact that MS & Co. regularly publicized through disclaimer statements. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 55 and consequently denies them.

56. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 56.

57. MS & Co. admits that it received a facsimile schedule regarding Sunbeam's finances on or about March 18, 1998. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 57 and consequently denies them.

58. MS & Co. admits that on or about March 18, 1998, it received a faxed financial schedule which reflected that Sunbeam's January and February 1998 sales were below those of January and February 1997. MS & Co. denies that it made assertions or otherwise disseminated information to CPH or others that it knew to be false. MS & Co. denies any knowledge of the fact that Sunbeam had not undergone a successful turnaround, or that Sunbeam's financial performance had not improved in the manner presented by Sunbeam's management and audited financial statements. MS & Co. admits that on March 18, 1998, it learned that Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales were "soft." Sunbeam insisted that its sales would meet expectations, but MS & Co. insisted that Sunbeam issue a press release to warn the market of the softening sales. Additionally, MS & Co. received two "comfort letters" from Sunbeam's auditors, Arthur Andersen. MS & Co. performed all of its obligations as an underwriter of Sunbeam securities. MS & Co. denies that it had any role in the accounting judgments described in the complaint, or any obligations to audit or independently examine Sunbeam's accounting records. MS & Co. denies that it owed any duties to CPH. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 58 and consequently denies them.

59. MS & Co. admits that on March 18, 1998, it learned that Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales were "soft." Sunbeam insisted that its sales would meet expectations, but MS & Co. insisted that Sunbeam issue a press release to warn the market of the softening sales. Additionally, MS & Co. received two "comfort letters" from Sunbeam's auditors, Arthur Andersen. MS & Co. performed all of its obligations as an underwriter of Sunbeam securities. MS & Co. denies that it had any role in the accounting judgments described in the Complaint, or any obligations to audit or independently examine Sunbeam's accounting records. MS & Co. denies that it owed any duties to CPH. MS & Co. denies all remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 59.

60. MS & Co. admits that Sunbeam issued a press release on March 19, 1998 that included language selectively quoted in Paragraph 60. MS & Co. further states that the March 19, 1998 press release contained the following additional statement, omitted in the Complaint:

Cautionary Statements - Statements contained in this press release, including statements relating to the Company's expectations regarding anticipated performance in the future, are "forward looking statements," as such term is defined in the Private Securities Litigation Reform act of 1995. Actual results could differ materially from the Company's statements in this release regarding its expectations, goals or projected results, due to various factors, including those set forth in the Company's Cautionary Statements contains in its Annual Report on Form 10-K for its fiscal year ended December 31, 1997 filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

(March 19, 1998 Press Release (Ex. 6).)

61. MS & Co. admits that Sunbeam issued a press release on March 19, 1998 that included language selectively quoted in Paragraph 61. MS & Co. further states that the March 19, 1998 press release contained the following additional statement, omitted in the Complaint:

Cautionary Statements - Statements contained in this press release, including statements relating to the Company's expectations regarding anticipated performance in the future, are "forward looking statements," as such term is defined in the Private Securities Litigation Reform act of 1995. Actual results could differ materially from the Company's statements in this release regarding its expectations, goals or projected results, due to various factors, including those set forth in the Company's Cautionary Statements contains in its Annual Report on Form 10-K for its fiscal year ended December 31, 1997 filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

(Id.) MS & Co. denies all remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 61.

62. MS & Co. denies the allegation that it knew that the “shortfall from analysts' estimates was ... caused by Sunbeam's acceleration of 1998 sales into the fourth quarter of 1997.” MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 62 and consequently denies them.

63. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 63.

64. MS & Co. specifically denies that it “knew that a full and truthful disclosure ... would doom the debenture offering,” or that it had any knowledge that the press release was untruthful or otherwise misleading. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 64.

65. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 65. To the extent that this Paragraph quotes the Merger Agreement, that document speaks for itself and contradicts the allegations contained in the Complaint.

66. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 66 and consequently denies them.

67. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 67.

68. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 68 and consequently denies them.

69. MS & Co. admits that it continued to serve as Sunbeam's investment banker, and continued to prepare to close the debenture offering and the acquisition of Coleman, but denies any knowledge as to the alleged falsity of the March 19, 1998 press release. MS & Co. denies the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 69.

70. MS & Co. admits that throughout its service to Sunbeam, MS & Co. employees, including Tyree, spoke via telephone with representatives of Sunbeam. MS & Co. denies any knowledge that the press release was untruthful or otherwise misleading. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 70 and consequently denies them.

71. MS & Co. admits that it received “comfort letters” from Arthur Andersen. MS & Co. denies the allegation that it knew that “Sunbeam's earnings for the first quarter of 1998 were going to miss Wall Street analysts' earning expectations.” MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 71 and consequently denies them.

72. MS & Co. admits that it continued to prepare to close both the debenture offering and the acquisition of Coleman. MS & Co. denies any allegation of its “having directly participated in misleading CPH and other investors.” MS & Co. responds that the allegation that MS & Co. “had a duty to disclose the true facts” to CPH is a legal conclusion to which no response is required. MS & Co. denies the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 72.

73. MS & Co. admits that it received compensation for investment banking work performed by MS & Co. for Sunbeam. MS & Co. denies the allegation that it facilitated Sunbeam's fraud. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of any remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 73 and consequently denies them.

74. MS & Co. admits that on March 19, 1998, Sunbeam issued a press release which stated that "net sales for the first quarter of 1998 may be lower than the range of Wall Street analysts' estimates of $285 million to $295 million." MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 74 and consequently denies them.

75. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 75 and consequently denies them.

76. MS & Co. admits that it advocated issuing a press release to warn the market of the softening sales, but denies that it represented that Sunbeam's sales would exceed analysts' projections. MS & Co. denies the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 76.

77. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 77 and consequently denies them.

Count I -- Fraudulent Misrepresentation

78. MS & Co. repeats and realleges its responses to Paragraphs 1 through 77 as if set forth herein.

79. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 79.

80. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 80.

81. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 81.

82. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 82.

83. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 83.

Count II -- Aiding and Abetting Fraud

84. MS & Co. repeats and realleges its responses to Paragraphs 1 through 77 as if set forth herein.

85. MS & Co. lacks sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in Paragraph 85 and consequently denies them.

86. MS & Co. denies the allegation contained in Paragraph 86.

87. MS & Co. admits that, beginning in mid-1997, MS & Co. served as an investment banker and underwriter for Sunbeam. MS & Co. admits that it attempted to identify a party interested in purchasing Sunbeam, and that those efforts were ultimately unsuccessful. MS & Co. admits that it recommended that Sunbeam's management consider acquiring other companies instead and suggested, as is common in corporate mergers and acquisitions, that Sunbeam consider using Sunbeam stock as part of the consideration for such an acquisition. MS & Co. denies that it had any knowledge as to the accuracy of the value of Sunbeam's stock, or that MS & Co. knew (or even suspected) that the value of Sunbeam's stock had been "fraudulently inflated."

MS & Co. admits that it facilitated communications between Sunbeam and Coleman, but denies that it in any way "persuaded" CPH to sell its interest in Coleman.

MS & Co. admits that on March 18, 1998, it learned that Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales were "soft." Sunbeam insisted that its sales would meet expectations, but MS & Co. insisted that Sunbeam issue a press release to warn the market of the softening sales. Additionally, MS & Co. received two "comfort letters" from Sunbeam's auditors, Arthur Andersen. MS & Co. performed all of its obligations as an underwriter of Sunbeam securities.

MS & Co. admits that the convertible debentures were presented to potential investors at a series of "road show" meetings and conference calls. MS & Co. admits that it reviewed and commented on the offering memorandum and other materials used to present the debentures to potential investors. MS & Co. denies the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 87.

88. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 88.

Count III -- Conspiracy

89. MS & Co. repeats and realleges its responses to Paragraphs 1 through 77 as if set forth herein.

90. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 90.

91. MS & Co. admits that it served as a financial advisor to Sunbeam and an underwriter of Sunbeam securities, but denies that it in any way committed "overt acts in furtherance of a conspiracy." MS & Co. denies that it performed an independent financial analysis of Sunbeam; to the contrary, MS & Co. informed CPH that it was relying solely on financial data and information provided to it by Sunbeam and Arthur Andersen. MS & Co. admits that it underwrote the $750 million convertible debenture offering. MS & Co. denies the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 91.

92. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 92.

Count IV -- Negligent Misrepresentation

93. MS & Co. repeats and realleges its responses to Paragraphs 1 through 77 as if set forth herein.

94. MS & Co. admits that it served as a financial advisor to Sunbeam and an underwriter of Sunbeam securities. MS & Co. responds that the allegations contained in Paragraph 94 constitute legal conclusions to which no response is required. Alternatively, MS & Co. denies the remaining allegations contained in Paragraph 94.

95. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 95.

96. MS & Co. denies the allegations contained in Paragraph 96.

AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSES

In addition to the foregoing responses, MS & Co. asserts the following affirmative defenses to the claims stated in CPH's Complaint. MS & Co. does not assume the burden of proof on these defenses where the substantive law provides otherwise.

First Affirmative Defense

CPH's claims must be dismissed on forum non conveniens grounds pursuant to Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.061\(a\).

Second Affirmative Defense

CPH's alleged claims are barred, in whole or in part, for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

Third Affirmative Defense

CPH's alleged claims are barred, in whole or in part, by the doctrine of laches.

Fourth Affirmative Defense

CPH's alleged claims are barred, in whole or in part, by the doctrine of estoppel.

Fifth Affirmative Defense

CPH's alleged claims are barred, in whole or in part, by the doctrine of waiver.

Sixth Affirmative Defense

CPH's alleged claims are barred, in whole or in part, by the doctrine of unclean hands.

Seventh Affirmative Defense

CPH's alleged claims are barred, in whole or in part, by plaintiff's failure to mitigate its damages.

Eighth Affirmative Defense

CPH's alleged claims are barred because CPH has experienced no damages, and any claimed loss is speculative and/or was avoidable.

Ninth Affirmative Defense

CPH's alleged claims are barred, in whole or in part, because the claimed injuries were not proximately caused by any acts or omissions of MS & Co.

Tenth Affirmative Defense

To the extent CPH's fraud claim relies on non-disclosure, that claim is barred, in whole or in part, because MS & Co. was under no duty to disclose.

Eleventh Affirmative Defense

CPH's claims are barred, in whole or in part, because of MS & Co.'s repeated disclaimers of reliance.

Twelfth Affirmative Defense

Any future claim by CPH for punitive damages is barred, in whole or in part, because (i) the allegedly tortuous conduct is not gross, wanton, willful, or otherwise morally culpable; and (ii) the alleged conduct was not part of a pattern directed at the public generally.

WHEREFORE, MS & Co. denies that CPH is entitled to any relief whatsoever, and to the extent that CPH should recover any damage award, that award should be offset by CPH's failure to take appropriate steps to mitigate its damages. MS & Co. respectfully requests that the Court enter judgment for MS & Co. dismissing the complaint with prejudice, award MS & Co. its attorneys' fees, costs and expenses, and grant such other and further relief as may be just and proper.

CIRCUIT CIVIL DIVISION

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT
IN AND FOR PALM BEACH COUNTY, FLORIDA

COLEMAN (PARENT) HOLDINGS, INC.,

Plaintiff,

CASE NO: 2003 CA 005045 AI

v.

Judge Elizabeth T. Maass

MORGAN STANLEY & CO., INC.,

Defendant.

DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO DISMISS PURSUANT TO FLORIDA RULE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE RULE 1.061 OR, IN THE ALTERNATIVE, FOR JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS

Defendant, Morgan Stanley & Co. Incorporated ("MS & Co."), moves to dismiss the complaint pursuant to Florida Rule of Civil Procedure Rule 1.061 or, in the alternative, for judgment on the pleadings and says:

1. Plaintiff, Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc. ("CPH") has filed a four count complaint against MS & Co. alleging fraudulent misrepresentation, aiding and abetting fraud, conspiracy and negligent misrepresentation. MS & Co. filed its answer and affirmative defenses to the complaint on June 23, 2003. The complaint is based on CPH's sale of its interest in the Coleman Company to Sunbeam Corporation.

2. As more fully set forth in the memorandum of law served contemporaneously with this Motion, incorporated herein by reference and attached hereto, MS & Co. moves to dismiss this action pursuant to Fla.R.Civ.P., Rule 1.061 on the ground that New York courts are the more appropriate forum for resolution of this dispute.

3. Additionally, as more fully set forth in the memorandum of law served contemporaneously with this Motion, incorporated herein by reference and attached hereto, MS & Co. moves for judgment on the pleadings on Counts I through IV of the complaint on the grounds that these counts fail to state a cause of action pursuant to New York law.

WHEREFORE, Defendant respectfully requests that this Court dismiss this action pursuant to Fla.R.Civ.P., Rule 1.061 or in the alternative enter judgment in favor of Defendant together with such other and further relief as is just and proper.

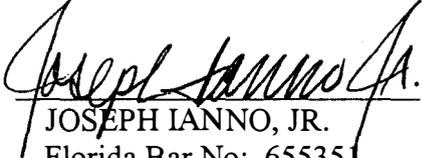

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I HEREBY CERTIFY that a true and correct copy of the foregoing has been furnished by Federal Express to all counsel of record on the attached service list on this 25th day of June, 2003.

ARGUMENT 10

I. THIS COURT MUST APPLY NEW YORK LAW TO PLAINTIFF’S CLAIMS..... 10

 A. Settled Choice-of-Law Principles Require Application Of New York Law. 10

 B. Where (As Here) Misrepresentation Claims Relating To The Sale Of A Business Have A Factual Nexus To New York, the Eleventh Circuit Has Already Held That Those Claims Must Be Determined By New York Law..... 13

II. THIS COURT SHOULD DISMISS THIS ENTIRE CASE PURSUANT TO FLORIDA RULE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE 1.061. 15

III. PLAINTIFF’S FRAUD CLAIM (COUNT I) MUST BE DISMISSED. 17

 A. CPH Specifically Disclaimed Reliance On The Representations Now Alleged To Be Fraudulent..... 18

 B. CPH Cannot Bring A Fraud Claim Because It Failed To Exercise Its Contractual Right To Inspect Sunbeam’s Books And Records. 21

C.	Plaintiff Cannot Allege That It Relied On Any Of The Misrepresentations Identified In The Complaint.....	23
D.	Plaintiff’s Allegations Of Scienter Make No Sense — And Fail To Meet The Basic Pleading Requirements For Fraud.	25
IV.	PLAINTIFF’S AIDING-AND-ABETTING CLAIM (COUNT II) MUST BE DISMISSED.	27
A.	The Complaint Does Not Allege That MS & Co. Had “Actual Knowledge” Of Sunbeam’s Fraud.	27
1.	If MS & Co. Is Deemed To Have Had “Actual Knowledge” Of Sunbeam’s Fraud, Then So Did CPH — By Virtue Of Its Equal Access To Sunbeam’s Books And Records.....	28
2.	Allegations Of “Constructive Knowledge” Are Not Enough.....	29
3.	Economic Motive Is Not “Actual Knowledge.”	29
B.	Plaintiff’s Allegations Of “Substantial Assistance” Are Legally Defective.....	30
V.	PLAINTIFF’S NEGLIGENT MISREPRESENTATION CLAIM (COUNT IV) MUST BE DISMISSED.	32
A.	Plaintiff Cannot Allege That A “Special Relationship” Existed Between CPH and MS & Co.	32
B.	Plaintiff Does Not Allege Reasonable Reliance.	34
VI.	PLAINTIFF’S CONSPIRACY CLAIM (COUNT III) MUST BE DISMISSED.....	34

INTRODUCTION

This lawsuit is spurious. Filed on the eve of the running of a four-year statute of limitations, Plaintiff Coleman (Parent) Holdings Company (“CPH”) seeks to extract vast payments from Morgan Stanley & Co. Incorporated (“MS & Co.”) on the sole ground that MS & Co. formerly served as an advisor to the once-bankrupt and now-reorganized Sunbeam Corporation. The dispute revolves around negotiations that occurred in New York in mid 1997 and early 1998, during which CPH agreed to sell its interest in the Coleman Company (“Coleman”) to Sunbeam. MS & Co. served as an advisor to Sunbeam — CPH’s counterparty in the negotiations — for parts of the deal.

CPH now alleges — five years after the fact — that it sold its stake in Coleman (and agreed to accept Sunbeam stock as part of the purchase price) based on false representations regarding Sunbeam’s financial health. CPH purports to bring these claims against MS & Co., but every factual allegation in the Complaint deals exclusively with misrepresentations by Sunbeam insiders and Sunbeam’s auditor, Arthur Andersen. In fact, CPH has already asserted precisely the same claims against Sunbeam and Andersen, alleging — through prior filings in this very Court — that it “directly relied” on financial information provided by Sunbeam and Andersen (not MS & Co.) when it agreed to sell its stake in Coleman. CPH’s effort to recycle these claims against MS & Co. — which is twice removed from the misrepresentations alleged in the Complaint — is a transparent attempt to extend liability far beyond legal precedent. This Court should not allow CPH to ignore all bounds of principle and precedent in its quest for solvent defendants. Instead, under settled law, this Court should dismiss the Complaint.

Indeed, rather than being a co-participant in alleged fraud at Sunbeam, the pleadings demonstrate that MS & Co. was itself a victim of that fraud, as its own affiliate invested and lost hundreds of millions of dollars in the same transaction that is the subject of this lawsuit. It would be unprecedented to permit a sophisticated plaintiff like CPH to state a claim for fraud against a financial advisor who not only represented the plaintiff's counterparty in a contentious arm's length transaction, but who also was substantially injured by the very fraud that is the subject of the plaintiff's Complaint.

The abusive nature of this suit is further revealed by the fact that it was filed here, in the Fifteenth Judicial District of Florida, rather than in New York, where (1) all named parties are headquartered, (2) all operative legal agreements were negotiated, drafted, and executed, (3) all alleged misstatements or omissions of material fact occurred, and (4) all action taken in reliance on those alleged misstatements and omissions occurred. Given the strong connection between this dispute and New York, this case requires — and MS & Co. now moves for — the application of New York law. For substantially the same reasons, the Complaint should be dismissed on forum non conveniens grounds under Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.061(a).

The reason CPH chose this forum is clear: it hopes to avoid the application of New York law, which bars all of its claims as a matter of law. Indeed, should the Court reach the legal merits of Plaintiff's claims, those claims should be dismissed for any of the following independent reasons:

- First, Plaintiff's misrepresentation claims are barred by various provisions of the written Merger Agreement, which explicitly disclaim reliance on pre-agreement negotiations and representations.
- Second, Plaintiff cannot plead a legally valid misrepresentation claim because it had the same access to Sunbeam's books and records as MS & Co., yet failed to take any steps to verify or investigate the representations it now claims were fraudulent.
- Third, Plaintiff cannot state a valid claim for fraud based on allegations that MS & Co. acted out of ordinary economic motive — such as the collection of investment banking fees — let alone on allegations that MS & Co. acted contrary to its own economic interest in participating in the alleged fraud.

- Fourth, Plaintiff cannot state a claim for negligent misrepresentation because it cannot allege that it enjoyed a “special relationship” with MS & Co., the financial advisor to Plaintiff’s counterparty in a contentious multi-billion dollar negotiation.
- Fifth, Plaintiff cannot state a valid claim for conspiracy or aiding and abetting fraud because there is no factual allegation that MS & Co. knew of the alleged fraud at Sunbeam let alone knowingly facilitated it.

At bottom, CPH should not be permitted to file a lawsuit in Florida over a transaction based entirely in New York, and thereby avoid the impact of settled New York law, which defeats CPH’s claims as a matter of law. Accordingly, in the event that the Court finds the Fifteenth Judicial Circuit a proper forum for this case, the Court should apply New York law to determine the legal sufficiency of Plaintiff’s claims and dismiss the case pursuant to Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.140(c).

FACTUAL BACKGROUND¹

All of the parties in this case are headquartered in New York. Plaintiff CPH is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in New York.² Prior to March 30,

¹ The background statement is based principally on the allegations of the Complaint, which are accepted as true only for purposes of this motion. See, e.g., Harris v. Kearney, 786 So. 2d 1222, 1225 (Fla. 4th DCA 2001). Reference is also made to documents directly quoted and relied upon in the Complaint, including the February 27, 1998 Merger Agreement (quoted at Compl. ¶ 65) and the March 19, 1998 Press Release (quoted at Compl. ¶ 60). The Memorandum also refers to the March 19, 1998 Note Offering Memorandum, and the February 27, 1998 Fairness Opinion, both of which are relied upon or referenced in the Complaint. (Id. ¶¶ 42-43, 47-52.) Copies of these documents and related materials are attached to Defendant’s Answer, which is filed simultaneously herewith (see Answer Exhibits 1-6), and thus may properly be considered on this motion for judgment on the pleadings. See, e.g., Boca Raton Transp., Inc. v. Zaldivar, 648 So. 2d 812, 813 (Fla. 4th DCA 1995). Finally, for purposes of the Court’s choice-of-law analysis, this Memorandum attaches and references the affidavits of several individuals who were present at pertinent meetings and occurrences discussed in the Complaint, all of which occurred in New York. (See Memorandum Exs. A-C.)

² It is telling that CPH conspicuously omits its principal place of business from its own Complaint. (Compl. ¶ 8.) In two pleadings filed by CPH in this very court, however — by the very same counsel who represent CPH here — CPH plainly stated that its “principal offices [are] located in New York.” See March 15, 2002 1st Am. Compl. ¶ 16, Coleman (Parent) Holdings v. Arthur Andersen et al., No. CA 01-06062 AN (Rapp, J.) (“Arthur Andersen 1st Am. Compl.”) (Ex. D); June 8, 2001 Compl. ¶ 15, Coleman (Parent) Holdings v. Arthur Andersen LLP & Phillip Harlow, No. 01-06062AN (Ex. E). The Court may take judicial notice of these pleadings pursuant to Fla. Stat § 90.202(6) (2003), which permits judicial notice of the “[r]ecords of any court of this state.”

1998, CPH owned approximately 82% of the shares of Coleman, a manufacturer and marketer of outdoor recreation products. (Compl. ¶ 8.) On March 30, 1998, pursuant to a written Merger Agreement that was negotiated, executed, and consummated in New York, CPH sold its interest in Coleman to Sunbeam. (Id.) Neither Sunbeam nor Coleman is a party to this action.

Defendant MS & Co., a wholly-owned subsidiary of Morgan Stanley, is a registered broker-dealer headquartered in New York. In mid 1997 and early 1998, MS & Co. assisted Sunbeam in identifying potential acquisition candidates and served as Sunbeam's financial advisor with respect to certain aspects of Sunbeam's acquisition of Coleman and two smaller companies. (Id. ¶¶ 9, 32.) MS & Co. also served as underwriter for a $750 million offering of convertible debentures, which Sunbeam used to finance the acquisitions. (Id. ¶¶ 9, 47, 52.) MS & Co. is incorporated in Delaware and has its principal place of business in New York. (See June 23, 3003 Answer of Morgan Stanley & Co. Incorporated ¶ 6.)

A. Sunbeam Hires MS & Co. To Advise It Regarding A Possible Corporate Sale Or Acquisition — Not To Replace Sunbeam's Outside Auditor Or To Review Sunbeam's Accounting Practices.

In mid 1997, Sunbeam engaged MS & Co. for advice with respect to a possible sale of Sunbeam's core business and/or the initiation of one or more acquisitions. (Compl. ¶ 31.) Throughout the fall of 1997, MS & Co. contacted at least ten potential bidders that it believed might have an interest in acquiring Sunbeam. (Id. ¶ 32.) In December 1997, unable to find a buyer for Sunbeam, MS & Co. recommended that Sunbeam's management consider acquiring other companies instead. (Id. ¶ 34.) According to the Complaint, MS & Co. suggested that Sunbeam consider using Sunbeam stock as part of the consideration offered to potential acquisition candidates. (Id.) Arthur Andersen served as "Sunbeam's outside auditors" (Id. ¶¶ 13, 67-68) and thus assumed responsibility for monitoring Sunbeam's accounting practices and verifying Sunbeam's publicly-filed financial reports, upon which Sunbeam's stock price was based. Plaintiff has recently acknowledged in this Court that it “directly relied on Andersen’s 1996 and 1997 audit reports when it decided to close the transaction with Sunbeam.” Arthur Andersen, 1st Am. Compl. ¶ 93.

B. After A “False Start” In Florida, Sunbeam And CPH Negotiate The Written Merger Agreement In New York.

In December 1997, MS & Co. identified Coleman as a potential acquisition candidate. (Compl. ¶ 36.) After an initial meeting between Sunbeam and CPH in New York to discuss the possibility of such an acquisition (Stynes Decl. ¶ 4 (Ex. A).), according to the Complaint, MS & Co. “laid the groundwork” for a meeting in Palm Beach, Florida between Al Dunlap (CEO of Sunbeam), Russell Kersh (CFO of Sunbeam), and representatives of CPH (Compl. ¶ 37). The meeting was a complete disaster. According to the Complaint, Dunlap “nearly scuttled” the proposed deal when he “cursed and ranted” at the CPH representatives and “stormed out” of the meeting. (Id.) This aborted meeting — which MS & Co. did not attend and which does not form the basis for any claim — is the only meeting alleged in the Complaint that took place in Florida.

Sunbeam and CPH ultimately resumed negotiations in New York. (Stynes Decl. ¶ 5.) The Complaint alleges that, “[d]uring the course of negotiations,” MS & Co. “prepared and provided CPH with false financial and business information about Sunbeam.” (Compl. ¶ 39.) The Complaint alleges that these materials, together with “false projections” and misleading “earnings estimates,” were provided to CPH during “negotiations” and “face-to-face discussions” between CPH and Sunbeam. (Id.) All, or substantially all, such “negotiations” and “face-to-face discussions” took place in New York. (Stynes Decl. ¶ 5.)

On February 27, 1998, after several weeks of arm’s length negotiations, Sunbeam’s Board of Directors convened a special meeting in New York to consider the proposed acquisition of Coleman. (Compl. ¶ 41.) The Board of Directors met at MS & Co.’s offices in New York.

(Stynes Decl. ¶ 6.) Several representatives from MS & Co. attended the board meeting and provided Sunbeam with a written “fairness opinion” regarding the fair acquisition price of Coleman. (Compl. ¶¶ 42-43.) The Complaint does not allege that CPH was present at this board meeting, or that it relied on any representations that were made there. (Id.) At the conclusion of the New York meeting, Sunbeam’s Board of Directors approved the Coleman acquisition. (Id. ¶ 44.) Later that same day, Sunbeam and CPH formally executed the Merger Agreement in New York. (Stynes Decl. ¶ 7.)

The Merger Agreement is fundamental to this case. Although the Complaint quotes directly from the Merger Agreement and CPH purports to base its claims (at least in part) on the Merger Agreement itself (Compl. ¶ 65), CPH has failed to attach the Merger Agreement to its Complaint. Its failure to do so is not surprising because several express provisions of the Merger Agreement defeat CPH’s claims as a matter of law:

- First, the Merger Agreement contains a clear integration clause which expressly prohibits CPH from relying on any representations or statements made during pre-closing negotiations. (Merger Agmt. § 12.5 (Answer Ex. 1).)
- Second, the Merger Agreement contains detailed covenants, representations and warranties, none of which contemplate reliance on extra-contractual representations or statements. (Merger Agmt. §§ 5.1-6.10.)³
- Third, the Merger Agreement required Sunbeam to provide CPH and all of its “financial advisors, legal counsel, accountants, consultants and other representatives” with “full access . . . to all of [Sunbeam’s] books, records, properties, plants and personnel.” (Merger Agmt. § 6.7.) Thus, CPH and MS & Co. stood at all times on equal footing regarding access to information pertinent to Sunbeam’s true financial condition.

³ Article V of the Merger Agreement further incorporates every additional representation and warranty contained in the separate agreement that was executed by Coleman and Sunbeam, none of which contemplate reliance on extra-contractual representations. (See Feb. 27, 1998 Company Merger Agmt. §§ 5.1-5.12 (Answer Ex. 3).)

- Fourth, the Merger Agreement expressly recognized that CPH had its own sophisticated financial advisors with respect to the acquisition, and would thus be represented throughout negotiations, due diligence, and closing by Credit Suisse First Boston (“CSFB”). (Id. §§ 1.1; 4.11.)⁴

The Merger Agreement also set forth the commercial terms for the acquisition. In exchange for CPH’s 82% ownership interest in Coleman, Sunbeam agreed to pay $159,956,756 in cash — and transfer 14,099,749 shares of Sunbeam’s common stock to CPH. (Merger Agmt. § 3.1(a)(i).) In addition, Sunbeam agreed to assume or repay more than $1 billion in debt belonging to Coleman and CPH. The Merger Agreement specified that the acquisition would close in New York and that all share certificates and/or other consideration would be exchanged by the parties at the closing in New York. (Id. §§ 2.2, 3.1(b)(i).)

C. MS & Co. Puts Its Own Money And Reputation On The Line By Agreeing To Serve As Underwriter For Sunbeam’s $750 Million Debenture Offering.

Sunbeam needed to raise funds to pay the substantial “cash portion” of consideration for Coleman’s $2 billion purchase price. (Compl. ¶ 47; Merger Agmt. § 3.1(a)(i).) MS & Co. recommended that Sunbeam raise a portion of this amount through an offering of convertible debentures (“the Note Offering”). (Compl. ¶ 47; MS & Co.’s Answer ¶¶ 47, 50; March 19, 1998 Note Offering Mem. at 8, 23 (Answer Ex. 5).) MS & Co. agreed to serve as the sole underwriter for Sunbeam’s Note Offering and thus agreed to market the debentures to its most valuable institutional clients. (Compl. ¶ 47.) The notes were presented to potential investors at a series of “road show” meetings (id. ¶ 50) in New York (Porat Decl. ¶ 3 (Ex. B).) The Complaint alleges that MS & Co. “misrepresented Sunbeam’s financial performance” during the “road shows” and “conference calls” which took place in connection with the Note Offering. (Compl. ¶ 50.) There is no allegation, however, that CPH ever received these alleged misrepresentations or that it relied on them when deciding to close the transaction. (Id.) The Note Offering ultimately raised $750 million, which Sunbeam used to pay part of the cash consideration for the Coleman acquisition. (Id. ¶ 52.)

Another portion of this consideration (approximately $680 million) was financed by Morgan Stanley Senior Funding (“MSSF”), an affiliate of MS & Co., and a wholly-owned subsidiary of Morgan Stanley. (MS & Co.’s Answer ¶ 47; Note Offering Mem. at 8, 23, 47.) Specifically, in March 1998, MSSF entered into a credit agreement with Sunbeam and agreed to lend Sunbeam approximately $680 million to finance the acquisition. (Hart Decl. ¶ 3 (Ex. C).) Thus, through its subsidiary, Morgan Stanley invested hundreds millions of dollars in the Coleman acquisition. (MS & Co.’s Answer ¶¶ 31, 47, 66; Note Offering Mem. at 47; June 1998 Credit Facilities Mem. at 1-2; 39 (Answer Ex. 2).)⁵

D. The March 19, 1998 Press Release.

Plaintiff alleges that on March 19, 1998 — eleven days before the acquisition was scheduled to close — Sunbeam issued a “false press release” regarding Sunbeam’s first quarter financial performance. (Compl. ¶ 59.) Plaintiff alleges that the press release was prepared and issued with MS & Co.’s “knowledge and assistance,” and that the press release “affirmatively misstated and concealed Sunbeam’s true condition.” (Id.) The Complaint nowhere alleges that CPH relied on this press release for any reason or that CPH ever sought to verify the information contained therein.

⁵ MSSF’s loan is the subject of a companion case that is also pending in this Court. See Morgan Stanley Senior Funding, Inc. v. Coleman (Parent) Holdings Inc. & MacAndrews & Forbes Inc., No. 2003 CA 00-5165AG (filed May 12, 2003). In that companion case, MSSF alleges that CPH and MAFCO fraudulently inflated the acquisition price for Coleman, causing MSSF to loan (and ultimately lose) hundreds of millions of dollars.

E. The Acquisition And Financing Transactions Close In New York.

The Note Offering closed in New York on March 19, 1998. (Porat Decl. ¶ 3.) The acquisition itself closed in New York on March 28, 1998. (Stynes Decl. ¶ 8.) CPH tendered its Coleman stock to Sunbeam in New York, as required by the Merger Agreement. (Merger Agmt. §§ 2.2, 3.1(b)(i).) Sunbeam delivered the consideration for these shares (including roughly 14.1 million shares of common stock and $1.6 billion in cash) to CPH at the closing in New York. (Id. § 2.2.) The Bank Facility closed in New York on March 31, 1998. (Hart Decl. ¶ 4.) MSSF funded the Bank Facility by transferring $680 million from its New York bank account. (Id.)

F. Accounting Irregularities Are Discovered At Sunbeam.

Several days after the acquisition closed, Sunbeam announced that its sales for the first quarter of 1998 were lower than sales numbers that it had reported in the first quarter of 1997. (Compl. ¶ 74.) In May 1998, Sunbeam announced that it would record a first quarter loss of $.09 per share. (Id. ¶ 76.) In June 1998, Sunbeam's Board of Directors launched an internal investigation into Sunbeam's accounting practices. (Id. ¶ 77.) That investigation led to the June 13, 1998 firing of Al Dunlap (Sunbeam's CEO) and Russell Kersh (Sunbeam's CFO) and, ultimately, to the October 1998 restatement of Sunbeam's financial statements for 1996, 1997, and the first quarter of 1998. (Id.)

STANDARD OF REVIEW

On a motion for judgment on the pleadings under Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.140(c), the Court must accept as true all well-pleaded factual allegations of the non-moving party. See Cutler v. Aleman, 701 So. 2d 390, 391 (Fla. 3d DCA 1997). The Court need not, however, ignore general factual allegations that are inconsistent with specific facts "revealed by [an] exhibit attached or referred to in the complaint." Hillcrest Pac. Corp. v. Yamamura, 727 So. 2d 1053, 1056 (Fla. 4th DCA 1999) (internal quotation marks & citation omitted). Judgment on the pleadings is appropriate where “on the facts as admitted for the purposes of the motion, the moving party is clearly entitled to judgment.” Cutler, 701 So. 2d at 391.

ARGUMENT

I. THIS COURT MUST APPLY NEW YORK LAW TO PLAINTIFF’S CLAIMS.

A. Settled Choice-of-Law Principles Require Application Of New York Law.

In Bishop v. Florida Specialty Paint Co., 389 So. 2d 999 (Fla. 1980), the Florida Supreme Court adopted the principles set forth in the Restatement (Second) of the Conflict of Laws (“Restatement”) for resolving disputes over choice-of-law in controversies involving more than one jurisdiction. Applying the Restatement analysis to this case, it is clear that this Court must apply New York law to CPH’s claims.

All of the claims in the Complaint are based on allegations of fraud and misrepresentation. As such, the substantive law applied to these claims must be determined in accordance with Section 148 of the Restatement, which provides in relevant part:

When the plaintiff has suffered pecuniary harm on account of his reliance on the defendant’s false representations and when the plaintiff’s action in reliance took place in the state where the false representations were made and received, the local law of this state determines the rights and liabilities of the parties

Restatement § 148(1); see also Eugene F. Scoles & Peter Hay, Conflict of Laws § 17.52 at 798 (3d ed. 2000) (“In cases of fraud and misrepresentation, the choice of the applicable law is relatively easy. When the defendant’s fraud or misrepresentation and the defendant’s reliance occur in the same state, no problem arises.”) (citing Restatement § 148(1)).⁶ Application of these principles here plainly requires this Court to apply New York law to Plaintiff’s claims.

⁶ Unless otherwise indicated, all emphasis is supplied.

First, every representation alleged in the Complaint occurred in New York. All substantive “negotiations” and “face-to-face” discussions involving MS & Co. took place in New York. (Stynes Decl. ¶ 5.) Preparation for the “road show” meetings took place in New York, and the meetings themselves took place in New York and three other cities, none in Florida. (Porat Decl. ¶ 3.) MS & Co.’s presentation to Sunbeam’s Board of Directors took place in New York. (Stynes Decl. ¶ 6.) MS & Co.’s “fairness opinion” was presented to Sunbeam in New York. To the extent that MS & Co. reviewed the March 19, 1998 press release, it did so in New York. (Porat Decl. ¶ 4.) And there are no allegations — (nor could there be) — that MS & Co. made any representations to anyone in Florida.

Second, every act of reliance alleged in the Complaint occurred in New York. CPH executed and closed the Merger Agreement in New York. (Merger Agmt. § 2.2.) CPH tendered its shares of Coleman in New York. (Id. §§ 2.2, 3.1(b)(i).) CPH accepted shares of Sunbeam stock in New York. (Id.) The Note Offering closed in New York. (Porat Decl. ¶ 3.) The Bank Facility closed in New York. (Hart Decl. ¶ 4.) And there are no allegations — nor could there be — that CPH ever committed a single act of reliance to its detriment in Florida, as opposed to New York, its principal place of business.⁷

Third, every injury alleged in the Complaint occurred in New York. CPH tendered its shares of Coleman in New York. (Merger Agmt. § 3.1(b)(i).) CPH accepted shares of Sunbeam stock in New York. (Id.) Sunbeam filed for bankruptcy in New York. And there is no Florida party before this Court, let alone an injured one.⁸

⁷ Even if CPH based its claims on representations made from Florida, the Restatement would still compel application of New York law. The fact that CPH relied to its detriment in New York — the same state as its principal place of business — is completely determinative of the choice-of-law question, regardless of whether the representations were made from another state. See Restatement § 148 (comment j) (“[W]hen the plaintiff acted in reliance upon the defendant’s representations in a single state, this state will usually be the state of the applicable law . . . if (a) the defendant’s representations were received by the plaintiff in this state, or (b) this state is the state of the plaintiff’s domicile or principal place of business.”).

Fourth, New York has a paramount sovereign interest in having its law applied to this controversy, which arises out of a sophisticated business transaction that was negotiated, executed and closed in New York — between two parties who are headquartered there. Indeed, it is precisely for cases like this that New York has developed a sophisticated body of law to govern fraud and misrepresentation claims that arise from New York-based financial transactions.⁹

Fifth, Florida has no sovereign interest in having its law applied to this controversy. There are no Florida parties before this Court; there is no Florida injury to redress; and every discussion or representation identified in the Complaint took place in New York — not Florida. Indeed, it is only by applying New York law to a case like this one that the Florida courts can ensure — as the Florida Supreme Court requires — that “rights and liabilities” are defined by the law of the state with “the most significant relationship to the occurrence and the parties.” Bishop, 389 So. 2d at 1001.

⁸ The Complaint makes curious reference to “Florida investors” who may have purchased some of the convertible notes (Compl. ¶ 52), but this is entirely irrelevant to the choice-of-law inquiry because (i) no such “Florida investors” are before this Court and (ii) CPH’s claims have nothing to do with investors in the convertible notes, from Florida or anywhere else.

⁹ The federal and state courts of New York have repeatedly and consistently recognized this paramount sovereign interest. See, e.g., Marine Midland Bank, N.A. v. United Mo. Bank, 223 A.D.2d 119, 124 (N.Y. App. Div. 1996) (“[A] known, stable, and commercially sophisticated body of law may be considered as much an attraction to conducting business in New York as its unique financial and communications resources.”) (citing Ehrlich-Bober & Co. v. University of Houston, 49 N.Y.2d 574, 581 (N.Y. 1980)); Optopics Labs. Corp. v. Savannah Bank of Nigeria, Ltd., 816 F. Supp. 898, 904 (S.D.N.Y. 1993) (recognizing that New York has “an overriding and paramount interest” in the outcome of financial transaction litigation because New York is “a financial capital of the world [and] international clearinghouse and market place for a plethora of international transactions”) (quoting J. Zeevi & Sons, Ltd. v. Grindlays Bank (Uganda) Ltd., 333 N.E.2d 168, 172 (N.Y. 1975)).

B. Where (As Here) Misrepresentation Claims Relating To The Sale Of A Business Have A Factual Nexus To New York, the Eleventh Circuit Has Already Held That Those Claims Must Be Determined By New York Law.

This case raises choice-of-law issues that are nearly identical to those presented in Trumpet Vine Investments, N.V. v. Union Capital Partners I, Inc., 92 F.3d 1110 (11th Cir. 1996). That case arose out of the multi-billion dollar acquisition of Del Monte, an international corporation headquartered in Coral Gables, Florida. See id. at 1113-14. The plaintiff (Union Capital) claimed that the defendant (Trumpet Vine) conspired with other companies to shut it out of the acquisition. See id. There, as here, negotiations for the acquisition occurred chiefly in New York. See id. at 1116. There, as here, the plaintiff filed its claims in Florida, where the subject of the New York-based transaction (Del Monte) was headquartered and where some due diligence activities occurred. See id. at 1113-14. And there, as here, the plaintiff sought to assert various tort theories of fraud, misrepresentation, and conspiracy. See id. at 1114.

The “threshold issue” was choice-of-law. Id. at 1115. Union Capital argued that Florida law should govern on grounds that one of the parties to the acquisition (Del Monte) was based in Florida, and that the plaintiff (Union Capital) was itself based there. The defendant (Trumpet Vine) argued that New York law governed the claims because the transaction was negotiated and closed in New York. The District Court, applying Florida’s choice-of-law rules and Section 148 of the Restatement, held that New York law must be applied. A three-judge panel of the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit agreed — and upheld the choice-of-law ruling on appeal. See id. at 1118.

The same considerations that guided the courts in Trumpet Vine apply to this case:

- In Trumpet Vine, as in this case, it was irrelevant that Del Monte was headquartered in Florida, because “the takeover itself was to be consummated in New York.” Id.

- In Trumpet Vine, as in this case, it was irrelevant that some of the preliminary discussions took place in Florida, or even that “some acts in reliance (the due diligence) occurred in Florida.” Id.
- And in Trumpet Vine, as in this case, it was irrelevant that the subject of the underlying transaction was based in Florida because “New York had the most significant contacts, as the place where the misrepresentations and the initial acts of reliance occurred.” Id.

Indeed, this case presents an even stronger basis for applying New York law than Trumpet Vine because no party in this case has any presence in Florida. In Trumpet Vine, the injured plaintiff was headquartered in Florida and the principal injury occurred in Florida. No such interests are implicated here.

Trumpet Vine thus offers powerful guidance that where, as here, a business transaction is executed and closed in New York, and alleged misrepresentations, reliance, and injuries all occur in New York, the legal sufficiency of Plaintiff’s claims must be determined under the law of New York. For the Court’s convenience, a chart summarizing the parallels between CPH’s Complaint and the Trumpet Vine case is attached hereto as Exhibit F.¹⁰

¹⁰ Further guidance is found in the fact that reported cases applying Restatement principles to disputes arising from sophisticated multi-jurisdictional business transactions uniformly reach the same result as Trumpet Vine. See, e.g., Inacom Corp. v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 254 F.3d 683, 688 (8th Cir. 2001) (applying Nebraska law to suit arising out of the sale of a business division located in Illinois because plaintiff received, took action on, and suffered damages from fraudulent concealment in Nebraska); 389 Orange St. Partners v. Arnold, 179 F.3d 656, 662 (9th Cir. 1999) (applying law of state where claimant signed documents containing misrepresentations and was to render payment in reliance on such misrepresentations); Thomas v. N.A. Chase Manhattan Bank, 994 F.2d 236, 241-42 (5th Cir. 1993) (applying law of New York because negotiations and reliance occurred in New York); Macurdy v. Sikov & Love, P.A., 894 F.2d 818, 820-21 (6th Cir. 1990) (applying law of state where misrepresentations and reliance occurred); Sky Tech. Partners, LLC v. Midwest Research Inst., 125 F. Supp. 2d 286, 297-98 (S.D. Ohio 2000) (applying law of state where plaintiffs had their principal place of business and acted in reliance upon alleged misrepresentations); Hari & Assocs. v. RNBC, Inc., 946 F. Supp. 531, 536 (M.D. Tenn. 1996) (applying law of state where contracts and agreements were executed and misrepresentations occurred); Value House, Inc. v. MCI Telecomms. Corp., 917 F. Supp. 5, 7 (D.D.C. 1996) (applying law of state where plaintiffs received negligent misrepresentations and acted in reliance thereon); Default Proof Credit Card Sys., Inc. v. State Street Bank & Trust Co., 753 F. Supp. 1566, 1570-71 (S.D. Fla. 1990) (applying Massachusetts law because negotiations and actionable conduct occurred in Massachusetts notwithstanding that losses from alleged fraud occurred in Florida where the plaintiff had its principal place of business). To apply Florida law here, in short, would not only be unprecedented, it would turn the Restatement on its head.

II. THIS COURT SHOULD DISMISS THIS ENTIRE CASE PURSUANT TO FLORIDA RULE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE 1.061.

As the foregoing makes clear, Florida has scant connection with the underlying facts or the injury alleged in the Complaint. Under a traditional forum non conveniens analysis, codified by the Florida Supreme Court in Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.061(a), CPH's lawsuit should proceed (if at all) only in New York — where all the events alleged occurred, where the overwhelming majority of the witnesses and relevant documents are located, and where the injuries it claims to have suffered occurred. This strong preference for a New York forum is confirmed by the fact that this Court — or any other court adjudicating this controversy — will have to apply New York law to CPH's claims. See, e.g., Kinney System, Inc. v. Continental Ins. Co., 674 So. 2d 86, 92 (Fla. 1996) (“[A] trial court has discretion to grant forum non conveniens dismissal upon finding that . . . foreign law will predominate if jurisdiction is retained.”).

Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.061(a) recognizes that there are certain cases that are so inconvenient to litigate in the forum selected by a plaintiff that they must be dismissed. Rule 1.061(a) allows the court to exercise its “sound discretion” — and dismiss the case — where it appears that the practical interest of the litigants and witnesses require the action to be tried in a more convenient judicial forum. Florida courts considering Rule 1.061 dismissal evaluate three key factors: (1) whether “an adequate alternate forum exists”; (2) whether “all relevant factors of private interest favor the alternate forum”; and (3) “[i]f the balance of private interests is at or near equipoise,” whether “factors of public interest tip the balance in favor of trial in the alternate forum.” Id. at 94; see, e.g., Ground Improvement Techniques, Inc. v. Merchants Bonding Co., 707 So. 2d 1138, 1139 (Fla. 5th DCA 1998) (dismissing complaint under Rule 1.061 where pleadings and attachments showed another state was more convenient).

This case is tailor-made for a Rule 1.061 dismissal. First, the New York courts are clearly an “adequate alternative forum” for adjudication of a dispute which arises out of a business transaction that was negotiated, executed, and closed in New York — between two parties who are headquartered in New York. Indeed, New York courts are routinely asked to decide similar cases involving substantially identical issues. Moreover, both of the parties to this action are undoubtedly subject to personal jurisdiction in New York. And because CPH is a Delaware corporation with a New York headquarters, its choice of a Florida forum is entitled no weight in the Rule 1.061(a) inquiry. See, e.g., Ciba-Geigy Ltd. v. Fish Peddler, Inc., 691 So. 2d 1111, 1118 (Fla. 4th DCA 1997) (reversing denial of motion to dismiss under Rule 1.061(a) because “no special weight should have been given to a foreign plaintiff’s choice of forum”).

Second, all relevant public and private interest factors weigh in favor of this case being pursued in New York. As set forth in detail in Part I of this Memorandum and described in the materials submitted to the Court for the choice-of-law determination:

- The Parties, Witnesses, and Documents Are Located in New York. All of the relevant events occurred in New York, and the overwhelming majority of witnesses, documents, and other relevant evidence are located in New York.
- The Court Must Apply New York Law. The Court must consider the impact of choice-of-law problems on the forum, particularly since the need to apply the law of another state points toward dismissal. The familiarity of New York courts with New York law supports dismissal here under Rule 1.061(a).
- The Localized Nature Of The Controversy. There is a “local interest in having localized controversies decided at home.” Gulf Oil Corp. v. Gilbert, 330 U.S. 501, 509 (1947). This case presents a case that is “local” to New York. The relevant events all occurred there, and the courts of New York have a significant interest in regulating the conduct of companies that transact business agreements there.
- The Unfairness Of Imposing Jury Duty On Florida Residents. There is no persuasive reason for imposing the burden of jury duty and the cost of trial on the residents of Florida where a transaction is based entirely in New York. In this case especially, the attenuated connection between CPH’s claims and Florida make it unfair to impose the burden of jury duty on the residents of Palm Beach County.

- The Court's Busy Docket Warrants Dismissal. Permitting what promises to be a complex case involving the application of New York law — and discovery disputes involving New York parties, witnesses, and documents — to proceed in Florida will only further crowd an already busy docket and delay justice to Florida residents with Florida-based claims.

For all of the foregoing reasons, New York has a greater interest in this dispute than Florida and is by far the most convenient forum for the litigation of CPH's claims. Accordingly, the convenience of the parties and their witnesses, as well as the interests of justice, require the Court to dismiss the case pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 1.061(a).¹¹

III. PLAINTIFF'S FRAUD CLAIM (COUNT I) MUST BE DISMISSED.

CPH's fraud claim fails for three separate and independent reasons. First, Plaintiff's claims are foreclosed by the integration clause in the Merger Agreement, which expressly disclaims reliance on pre-agreement negotiations. Second, settled law prohibits CPH from bringing a fraud claim based on alleged representations by MS & Co. (the financial advisor to CPH's counterparty in arm's length negotiations) where it failed to inspect and verify the accuracy of those alleged representations, as it had the contractual right to do. Third, CPH cannot base its fraud claims on allegations that MS & Co. acted against its own economic interest — i.e., that it engaged in a massive fraud, allowed its affiliate to risk and lose hundreds of millions of dollars, and intentionally ripped off its own clients, all for the alleged purpose of collecting an ordinary banking fee. Such nonsensical allegations fail, as a matter of law, to establish the “scienter” element of Plaintiff’s fraud claim.

A. CPH Specifically Disclaimed Reliance On The Representations Now Alleged To Be Fraudulent.

To state a claim for fraud, CPH must allege that it reasonably relied on fraudulent representations made by MS & Co. See, e.g., Harsco Corp. v. Segui, 91 F.3d 337, 342 (2d Cir. 1996). But CPH cannot establish this threshold requirement because the only representations alleged to have been made by MS & Co. — statements and materials provided during pre-closing negotiations (Compl. ¶ 39) — are expressly disclaimed in the Merger Agreement’s integration clause. Section 12.5 of the Merger Agreement provides:

Entire Agreement. This Agreement (including all Schedules and Exhibits hereto) contains the entire agreement among the parties hereto with respect to the subject matter hereof and supercedes all prior agreements and understandings, oral or written, with respect to such matters, except for the Confidentiality Agreements which will remain in full force and effect for the term provided for therein.

(Merger Agmt. § 12.5.)

This provision disclaims, in plain language, the representations alleged in Paragraph 39 of the Complaint — the only representations that are alleged to have been made by MS & Co. Indeed, the Merger Agreement contains or expressly incorporates dozens of representations and warranties which, pursuant to the integration clause, are the only representations and warranties CPH relied upon in agreeing to sell its stake in Coleman. (Merger Agmt. § 5.1-5.4; Company Merger Agmt. §§ 5.1-5.12.) These representations and warranties refer to the truth and accuracy of financial information “filed by [Sunbeam] with the SEC” (Company Merger Agmt. § 4.6);

they clearly do not refer to any information alleged to have been “provided” by MS & Co. (Compl. ¶ 39), which is the only factual basis for CPH’s fraudulent misrepresentation claim.¹²

New York law is crystal clear that a party who expressly disclaims reliance on representations in the course of a complex business transaction (as CPH has done here) cannot later sue for fraud claiming reliance on those very same representations. See, e.g., Dyncorp v. GTE Corp., 215 F. Supp. 2d 308, 322-23 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (dismissing fraud claim based on extra-contractual representations where plaintiff negotiated a merger agreement with express representations, warranties, and an integration clause); Emergent Capital Inv. Mgmt., LLC v. Stonepath Group, Inc., 195 F. Supp. 2d 551, 562 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (same).¹³

This well-established principle applies with special force where (as here) the plaintiff is a sophisticated commercial actor with substantial experience negotiating complex financial transactions. See, e.g., Lazard Freres & Co. v. Protective Life Ins. Co., 108 F.3d 1531, 1543 (2d Cir. 1997) (“[A] substantial and sophisticated player . . . [is] under a further duty to protect itself from misrepresentation.”). Indeed, sophisticated entities like CPH have a legal obligation to ¹² It is significant for purposes of this Motion that, in a ninety-six paragraph Complaint, only this single paragraph (Compl. ¶ 39) alleges that MS & Co. made any representations to CPH. Every other substantive portion of the Complaint — including (i) the allegations of Sunbeam’s accounting fraud (Id. ¶¶ 14-27), (ii) statements made by MS & Co. to prospective purchasers of the convertible notes (Id. ¶¶ 47-52), and (iii) statements made by MS & Co. to the Sunbeam Board of Directors (Id. ¶¶ 41-44) — simply has no relevance to CPH’s claims, as there is no factual allegation that MS & Co. knew of the Sunbeam fraud or that representations by MS & Co. to the other parties were ever communicated to CPH. Given the stringent pleading standards for fraudulent misrepresentation claims, moreover, the Complaint’s conclusory and hollow allegations cannot state a claim as a matter of law. See, e.g., Batlemento v. Dove Fountain, Inc., 593 So. 2d 234, 238 (Fla. 5th DCA 1991) (dismissing fraud claim where “the amended complaint does no more than identify the subject matter of the alleged false representations of fact”) (citing Fla. R. Civ. P. 1.120(b)); see also Window Headquarters, Inc. v. MAI Basic Four, Inc., No. 91 Civ. 1816 (MBM), 1994 WL 673519, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 1, 1994) (“To specify fraud with particularity, plaintiffs must allege specifically the circumstances of the fraud claimed, including the content of any alleged misrepresentation, and the date, place and identity of the persons making the misrepresentations.”).

¹³ Florida law is no different in this regard. See, e.g., Hillcrest Pac. Corp. v. Yamamura, 727 So. 2d 1053, 1056 (Fla. 4th DCA 1999) (“A party cannot recover in fraud for alleged oral misrepresentations that are adequately covered or expressly contradicted in a later written contract.”).

protect themselves before relying on statements or representations apart from those memorialized in a detailed agreement. See, e.g., id. (“[T]he failure to insert [appropriate protective language] in the agreement — by itself — renders reliance unreasonable as a matter of law.”) (citations omitted); Consolidated Edison, Inc. v. Northeast Utilities, 249 F. Supp. 2d 387, 402 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (sophisticated parties cannot allege reasonable reliance on alleged statements and representations where they “could have made them a basis for a specific representation and warranty in the Merger Agreement but failed to do so”) (citations omitted); Dyncorp, 215 F. Supp. 2d at 322 (“Sophisticated parties to major transactions cannot avoid their disclaimers by complaining that they received less than all information, for they could have negotiated for fuller information or more complete warranties.”). Dismissal of Plaintiff’s fraud claim is warranted on this ground alone.

Indeed, CPH is part of a multi-billion dollar financial empire that routinely engages in the world’s most sophisticated and complex corporate mergers and acquisitions. In addition, CPH was represented by an army of attorneys and financial advisors who themselves are experts in precisely the sort of transaction at issue here. (See, e.g., Merger Agmt. §§ 1.1, 4.11 (Credit Suisse First Boston).) As a matter of law, therefore, CPH cannot plead that it reasonably relied on representations supposedly made by MS & Co. — an advisor to CPH’s counterparty in the negotiations — especially after having expressly disclaimed those representations in the Merger Agreement. To the extent CPH now alleges that it relied on such representations to support its fraudulent misrepresentation claim, its allegations are legally deficient and require this Court to dismiss Count I as a matter of law.¹⁴

¹⁴ CPH cannot claim that it is entitled to discovery on this claim, since courts routinely dismiss fraudulent misrepresentation claims that are contrary to an integration clause and not encompassed within any contractual (Continued...)

B. CPH Cannot Bring A Fraud Claim Because It Failed To Exercise Its Contractual Right To Inspect Sunbeam's Books And Records.

Quite apart from the claim-defeating integration clause, Plaintiff's fraud claim is barred for the additional reason that — despite a clear provision in the Merger Agreement that gave it unfettered access to Sunbeam's books and financial records — CPH does not allege that it ever sought to verify the financial representations it now claims were fraudulent. Indeed, “[a]s a matter of law, a sophisticated plaintiff cannot establish that it entered into an arm's length transaction in justifiable reliance on an alleged misrepresentation if that plaintiff failed to make use of the means of verification that were available to it, such as reviewing the files of the other parties.” UST Private Equity Investors Fund, Inc. v. Salomon Smith Barney, 288 A.D.2d 87, 88 (N.Y. App. Div. 2001) (affirming motion to dismiss fraud claims where sophisticated plaintiff failed to verify the accuracy of alleged misrepresentation during due diligence).

The reason for this rule is simple. A sophisticated party who “plainly had both access to the relevant [company] financial statements,” and the “wherewithal through [its] own financial advisors” to ascertain the financial condition of that company, is presumed as a matter of law to have had the “means to ascertain the truth of the alleged representations.” Rotterdam Ventures, Inc. v. Ernst & Young LLP, 752 N.Y.S.2d 746, 749 (N.Y. App. Div. 2002). Therefore, to state a representation or warranty, especially where (as here) the plaintiff is a highly sophisticated party that could have protected itself before relying on alleged extra-contractual representations. See, e.g., Dyncorp, 215 F. Supp. 2d at 320 (“ruling on the legal sufficiency of a complaint based on [fraudulent] representations may properly be made on the complaint and contract alone, without waiting for discovery”); Belin v. Weissler, No. 97 Civ. 8787 (RWS), 1998 WL 391114, *5 (S.D.N.Y. July 14, 1998) (dismissing sophisticated plaintiff's misrepresentation claim that contradicts integration clause because “the asserted reliance must be found to be justifiable under all the circumstances before a complaint can be found to state a cause of action in fraud”) (quoting Danann Realty Corp. v. Harris, 157 N.E.2d 597, 599-600 (N.Y. 1959)); Granite Partners, L.P. v. Bear, Stearns & Co., 17 F. Supp. 2d 275, 290 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (same and noting that “whether a plaintiff has adequately pleaded justifiable reliance is a proper subject for a motion to dismiss”); Valassis Communications, Inc. v. Weimer, 758 N.Y.S.2d 311, 312 (N.Y. App. Div. 2003); (“In light, however, of provisions of the parties' Purchase Agreement specifically prohibiting plaintiff's reliance on extra-contractual representations such as those upon which plaintiff's fraud claim is premised, it is plain that plaintiff's possess no viable claim for fraud”) (citations omitted).

legally valid fraud claim, such a party “must show that he or she made an independent inquiry into the available information.” Giannacopoulos v. Credit Suisse, 37 F. Supp. 2d 626, 632 (S.D.N.Y. 1999).¹⁵

CPH clearly had “access to the relevant financial statements” and the “wherewithal, through [its] own financial advisors,” to verify the representations identified in the Complaint. The Merger Agreement required Sunbeam to provide CPH and its “financial advisors, legal counsel, accountants consultants and other representatives” with “full access . . . to all of [Sunbeam’s] books, records, properties, plants and personnel.” (Merger Agmt. § 6.7.) Moreover, CPH is undeniably a sophisticated party that was advised at all times by its own expert financial advisors, consultants, accountants and attorneys, including the international investment bank of Credit Suisse First Boston. (Id. §§ 1.1, 4.11.) And here, CPH was negotiating to acquire “14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock worth approximately $600 million.” (Compl. ¶ 40.) Therefore, unlike MS & Co., which never had and was not seeking an equity stake in Sunbeam, CPH had a profound financial incentive to inspect and verify any representation relating to the value of Sunbeam stock.

Thus, there is no question that CPH had the unfettered contractual right to access and inspect Sunbeam’s books and records. There is similarly no question that CPH had an equal opportunity — and even greater incentive — to discover accounting problems at Sunbeam before choosing to proceed with the acquisition. Despite this unlimited access, opportunity, and incentive, the Complaint nowhere alleges that CPH ever exercised its right to inspect Sunbeam’s books and records or sought to independently verify the financial representations it now claims were fraudulent. Under these circumstances, CPH's fraud claim must be dismissed as a matter of law.

¹⁵ See also Schlaifer Nance & Co. v. Estate of Andy Warhol, 119 F.3d 91, 98 (2d Cir. 1997) (“Where sophisticated businessmen engaged in major transactions enjoy access to critical information but fail to take advantage of that access, New York courts are particularly disinclined to entertain claims of justifiable reliance.”) (quoting Grumman Allied Indus., Inv. v. Rohr Indus., 748 F.2d 729, 737 (2d Cir. 1984)).

C. Plaintiff Cannot Allege That It Relied On Any Of The Misrepresentations Identified In The Complaint.

CPH purports to base its fraud claim — at least in part — on a March 19, 1998 Sunbeam press release warning investors that Sunbeam's net sales for the first quarter of 1998 would be lower than Wall Street analysts' estimates, but that sales in future quarters should improve. (Compl. ¶¶ 59-66.) Significantly, however, the Complaint does not allege that CPH ever relied on any statement in this press release.¹⁶ Indeed, any such reliance is expressly foreclosed by the plain terms of the press release, which explicitly warned readers not to rely on the forward-looking projections of Sunbeam's future performance:

Cautionary Statements — Statements contained in this press release, including statements relating to the Company's expectations regarding anticipated performance in the future, are 'forward looking statements,' as such term is defined in the Private Securities Litigation Reform Act of 1995. Actual results could differ materially from the Company's statements in this release regarding its expectations, goals, or projected results, due to various factors (March 19, 1998 Press Release at 2 (Answer Ex. 6).) These express warnings and "Cautionary Statements" prevent CPH from relying on the press release as the basis for a fraud claim.

Similarly, the Complaint alleges that "Morgan Stanley misrepresented Sunbeam's financial performance" at a series of "road show" meetings and conference calls" which took place in the course of the Note Offering. (Compl. ¶ 50.) Significantly, however, the Complaint ¹⁶ Equally significant, despite the explicit warning of a sharp and sudden drop in sales, the Complaint never alleges (i) that CPH or any of its expert advisors ever inquired as to why Sunbeam sales had suddenly declined, or (ii) that CPH or any of its expert advisors ever demanded access to Sunbeam's books and records, as the Merger Agreement entitled them to do, to verify future sales projections. This alone is fatal to any fraud and misrepresentation claim based on representations made in the press release. See Part III.B, supra.

does not allege that anyone from CPH was present for those “road show” meetings and conference calls, or that the alleged misrepresentations were ever communicated to CPH. Equally fatal, there are no allegations in the Complaint that CPH reasonably relied upon such representations. Nor could there be, since the Note Offering Memorandum makes clear that MS & Co. itself relied on financial information provided by Sunbeam and Arthur Andersen (Note Offering Mem. at 2-3, 72); CPH does not allege that it was an investor in the Note Offering; and no such investor is before this Court.

The same is true regarding the February 27, 1998 Board Meeting — and the alleged misrepresentations made by MS & Co. in connection with the presentation of its opinion on the fairness of the acquisition price. (Id. ¶¶ 41-44.) It is clear from the face of the Complaint that any such misrepresentation was made to the Sunbeam Board — and not CPH. (Id.) There are no allegations in the Complaint — nor could there be — that CPH ever received those representations, let alone that CPH reasonably relied upon them. (Id.) The written opinion that is referenced in the Complaint definitively states that MS & Co. based its analysis exclusively on audit reports that had been provided by Coleman and Sunbeam “without independent verification [of their] accuracy and completeness.” (Feb. 27, 1998 Fairness Op. at 3 (Answer Ex. 4).) This opinion also states, moreover, that MS & Co.’s analysis is provided solely “for the information of the Board of Directors of [Sunbeam] and may not be used for any other purpose without our prior written consent.” (Id.) Thus, even if the Complaint alleged that CPH received or relied on information provided to the Board at this meeting, such reliance would not be reasonable as a matter of law.

D. Plaintiff's Allegations Of Scierter Make No Sense — And Fail To Meet The Basic Pleading Requirements For Fraud.

The Complaint alleges that MS & Co. knowingly participated in a massive multi-billion dollar fraud with the intent to (i) retain Sunbeam as a client and (ii) collect roughly $30 million in investment banking and underwriting fees — an amount that is not unusual for a sophisticated $2.2 billion transaction. (Compl. ¶¶ 31, 66, 73.) But if retention of a client and collection of normal fees is enough to plead scierter as a matter of law, then the scierter element would be rendered a dead letter in Florida — and the floodgates would be opened to a wave of frivolous fraud claims based on ordinary economic motive.

Of course, such allegations are not enough to state a claim for fraud. Recognizing the seriousness of fraud-based allegations, the courts have been careful to require more than simply an ordinary economic interest: “In looking for a sufficient allegation of motive, [courts] assume that the defendant is acting in his or her informed economic self-interest.” Shields v. Citytrust Bancorp., Inc., 25 F.3d 1124, 1130 (2d Cir. 1994). Here, however, the only allegations of scierter are the ordinary economic motives of any financial services firm. (See Compl. ¶ 31 (“Morgan Stanley knew that if it failed to deliver a major transaction, Morgan Stanley would not be compensated for the extensive work it had performed for Sunbeam”); Id. ¶ 66 (alleging that “[e]verything . . . depended on closing the Coleman acquisition” because “if the transaction did not close, Morgan Stanley would not be paid its $10.28 million fee for the Coleman acquisition or its $22.5 million fee for underwriting the [Note Offering]”).) These allegations alone require dismissal of Plaintiff’s fraud claim because they fail to plead the requisite element of scierter. See, e.g., THC Holdings Corp. v. Chinn, No. 95 Civ. 4422 (KMW), 1998 WL 50202, *9 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 6, 1998) (“A mere allegation that defendant was in a position to receive normal compensation for professional services rendered is not sufficient to support a showing of motive in the fraud scienter analysis.”) (citing inter alia, Friedman v. Arizona World Nurseries Ltd. P’ship, 730 F. Supp. 521, 532 (S.D.N.Y. 1990) (dismissing fraud-based claim on ground that incentive of receiving fee for professional services is insufficient to allege scienter), aff’d, 927 F.2d 595 (2d Cir. 1991)).

Plaintiff’s allegations of scienter are not merely legally deficient, however. For even if the Court accepts all of the Complaint’s allegations as well-pleaded, it would defy economic reason for MS & Co. to have knowingly participated in Sunbeam’s fraud. It defies all reason to believe that MS & Co. risked its own professional reputation, knowingly ripped off its most valued clients and institutional investors, knowingly permitted its affiliate to invest and lose hundreds of millions of dollars, and exposed itself to massive liability, all for the supposed purpose of retaining a single client and collecting investment banking and underwriting fees for a single transaction. The economic irrationality of Plaintiff’s scienter allegations provide an additional, independent ground for dismissing its fraud claim. See, e.g., Kalnit v. Eichler, 99 F. Supp. 2d 327, 343 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (“[W]here plaintiff’s view of the facts defies economic reason . . . it does not yield a reasonable inference of fraudulent intent.”) (internal quotations & citation omitted), aff’d, 264 F.3d 131 (2d Cir. 2001); see also Duncan v. Pencer, No. 94 Civ. 0321 (LAP), 1996 WL 19043, at *10 (S.D.N.Y. Jan 18, 1996) (dismissing fraud-based claim on grounds that it is “economically irrational” to assume that accounting firm “would knowingly condone a client’s fraud in order to preserve a fee that, at best, is an infinitesimal percentage of its annual revenues”) (citing Shields, 25 F.3d at 1130).

Indeed, Plaintiff’s far-fetched theory of scienter rings especially hollow in light of the Complaint’s allegations that MS & Co. and Sunbeam knew the fraud would be revealed shortly after “the Coleman transaction closed at the end of March 1998.” (Compl. ¶ 58; see id. ¶ 66.) It simply makes no sense to believe that MS & Co. knowingly persuaded its clients to invest hundreds of millions of dollars in Sunbeam and allowed its affiliate to invest hundreds of millions of dollars in Sunbeam two days after the Coleman acquisition closed, all the while knowing that the fraud would be revealed shortly after the closing date. See, e.g., Shields, 25 F.3d at 1130 (affirming dismissal of fraud-based claim for lack of scienter and noting that “[i]t is hard to see what benefits accrue from a short term respite from an inevitable day of reckoning”).

IV. PLAINTIFF’S AIDING-AND-ABETTING CLAIM (COUNT II) MUST BE DISMISSED.

To state a claim for aiding and abetting fraud, Plaintiff must allege with the requisite particularity each of the following elements: (1) the existence of primary fraud; (2) defendant’s actual knowledge of the fraud; and (3) defendant’s substantial assistance in the commission of the fraud. See, e.g., Cromer Fin. Ltd. v. Berger, 137 F. Supp. 2d 452, 470 (S.D.N.Y. 2001); Stolow v. Greg Manning Auctions, Inc., No. 02 Civ 2591 (SAS), 2003 WL 355447, at *10 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 14, 2003) (citing Armstrong v. McAalpin, 699 F.2d 79, 91 (2d Cir. 1983)). Because the Complaint fails to allege either that MS & Co. had “actual knowledge” of Dunlap and Kersh’s alleged fraud, or that MS & Co. provided “substantial assistance” in the commission of that fraud, Count II must be dismissed as a matter of law.

A. The Complaint Does Not Allege That MS & Co. Had “Actual Knowledge” Of Sunbeam’s Fraud.

The Complaint does not contain a single non-conclusory, factual allegation that MS & Co. had actual knowledge of Dunlap and Kersh’s alleged fraud. Plaintiff’s conclusory allegations that MS & Co. “knew of Dunlap’s fraudulent scheme and helped to conceal it” (Compl. ¶ 86) is not enough to state a claim for aiding and abetting fraud. See, e.g., Filler v. Havnit Bank, 247 F. Supp. 2d 425, 431 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (factual elements of aiding and abetting fraud must be alleged with particularity); Myers v. Myers, 652 So. 2d 1214, 1215 (Fla. 5th DCA 1995) (“Allegations contained in a pleading are insufficient if they are too general, vague or conclusory.”) (citations omitted). Here, the Complaint contains no factual allegations — nor could it — to support a claim that MS & Co. had “actual knowledge” of Sunbeam’s fraud.

Indeed, even if all the facts alleged in the Complaint were proven, none would show that MS & Co. had “actual knowledge” of the underlying fraudulent activities at Sunbeam. The Complaint alleges, for example, that MS & Co. recommended an acquisition strategy that included using Sunbeam stock to pay part of the purchase price (Compl. ¶ 34), and that such a strategy permitted Dunlap to conceal his fraud (id. ¶ 35). Notably absent from the Complaint, however, is any factual allegation that MS & Co. ever suspected (much less had “actual knowledge”) that Sunbeam’s stock was inflated by accounting fraud. (Id.) Absent such a factual allegation, the Complaint alleges nothing more than that MS & Co. recommended using stock to finance an acquisition — a common practice in corporate mergers and acquisitions.

1. If MS & Co. Is Deemed To Have Had “Actual Knowledge” Of Sunbeam’s Fraud, Then So Did CPH — By Virtue Of Its Equal Access To Sunbeam’s Books And Records.

To the extent CPH alleges that MS & Co. had “actual knowledge” of Sunbeam’s fraud because MS & Co. conducted due diligence on Sunbeam during the underwriting process, such allegations are fatal to CPH’s misrepresentation claims. If MS & Co. is deemed to have “actual knowledge” of fraud because of its access to Sunbeam during the due diligence process, then CPH — by virtue of the fact that it enjoyed exactly the same access to Sunbeam’s “books, records, properties, plants and personnel” (Merger Agmt. § 6.7) — also had “actual knowledge” of Sunbeam’s fraud, eliminating any claim that it relied on MS & Co. as a matter of law. Similarly, CPH cannot bootstrap MS & Co.’s role as an underwriter of Sunbeam securities into one of advisor for CPH, especially when CPH retained and relied upon its own army of expert advisors, attorneys, and accountants throughout the negotiation process.

2. Allegations Of “Constructive Knowledge” Are Not Enough.

The Complaint alleges that investment bankers at MS & Co. had phone conversations and meetings with Sunbeam insiders, including Dunlap and Kersh, and thus “[MS & Co.] would have been apprised of Sunbeam’s financial performance during the first two months of 1998.” (Compl. ¶ 54.) But such allegations of constructive knowledge are not enough. See, e.g., Kolbeck v. LIT Am. Inc., 939 F. Supp. 240, 246 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) (“New York common law, which controls the analysis here, has not adopted a constructive knowledge standard for imposing aiding and abetting liability.”), aff’d, 152 F.3d 918 (2d Cir. 1998). Similarly, allegations that MS & Co. “should” or “would” have known that Sunbeam’s sales declined during the first two months of 1998 hardly supports a claim that MS & Co. had actual knowledge of an extensive fraud which traced to late 1996.¹⁷

3. Economic Motive Is Not “Actual Knowledge.”

Like Count I, Plaintiff’s aiding and abetting claim must be dismissed because the allegations of fraudulent intent are legally deficient. See Part III.C, supra. As with fraud generally, it is equally well-established that an allegation of “ordinary economic motives [is] insufficient to support the scienter element of an aiding and abetting claim.” Primavera Familienstiftung v. Askin, 173 F.R.D. 115, 127-28 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) (citing Shields, 25 F.3d at 1130); Cromer Fin., 137 F. Supp. 2d at 495 (dismissing aiding and abetting claim against financial advisor for failure to adequately plead fraudulent intent). Accordingly, allegations that MS & Co. was motivated by the collection of ordinary investment banking and underwriting fees cannot give rise to liability for aiding and abetting a massive fraud.

¹⁷ Nor could there be such an allegation, since, as the Complaint itself acknowledges, MS & Co. was retained by Sunbeam only to provide financial advice to Sunbeam with respect to potential mergers and acquisitions. (Compl. ¶¶ 29-31.) MS & Co. was not retained to verify the accuracy of Sunbeam’s professionally audited financial reports, and, in fact, relied at all times on financial information provided to it by Sunbeam, Coleman, and their respective accountants. (See Fairness Op. at 2-3; Note Offering Mem. at 2-3, 12-17, 72); e.g., In Re Reliance Sec. Litig., 135 F. Supp. 2d 480, 516 (D. Del. 2001) (dismissing claims against financial advisors where advisors “did not contract to re-audit [the company’s] financial statements and projections. Rather, [the company] asked the Financial Advisors to make a judgment based on a limited set of data”). It goes without saying, moreover, that if MS & Co. “should” or “would” have known of Sunbeam’s fraud, then so “should” or “would” have CPH known of Sunbeam’s fraud by virtue of its equal access to Sunbeam’s books, records, property, plants, and personnel. (Merger Agmt. § 6.7.)

B. Plaintiff's Allegations Of "Substantial Assistance" Are Legally Defective.

Plaintiff does not — and indeed cannot — allege that MS & Co. provided “substantial assistance” to Sunbeam’s fraud. A defendant “provides substantial assistance only if it ‘affirmatively assists, helps conceal, or by virtue of failing to act when required to do enables [the fraud] to proceed.’” Nigerian Nat’l Petroleum Corp. v. Citibank, N.A., No. 98 Civ. 4960 (MBM), 1999 WL 558141, at *8 (S.D.N.Y. July 30, 1999) (quoting Diduck v. Kaszycki & Sons Contractors, Inc., 974 F.2d 270, 284 (2d Cir. 1992)) (alteration in Nigerian Nat’l). “In alleging the requisite ‘substantial assistance’ by the aider and abettor, the complaint must allege that the acts of the aider and abettor proximately caused the harm to the [corporation] on which the primary liability is predicated. Allegations of a ‘but for’ causal relationship are insufficient.” Filler, 247 F. Supp. 2d at 431 (internal quotation marks & citations omitted). “Inaction is actionable participation only when the defendant owes a fiduciary duty directly to the plaintiff.” Cromer Fin., 137 F. Supp. 2d at 470 (internal quotation marks & citation omitted). Plaintiff’s allegations regarding MS & Co. fall well short of these requirements.

Plaintiff’s allegations of alleged “assistance” fall into three main categories, all of which fail to support a claim as a matter of law.

First, the Complaint alleges that MS & Co. “assist[ed] with the false March 19, 1998 press release.” (Compl. ¶ 87.) But CPH does not allege that it relied on the press release; thus, there can be no allegation that the press release “proximately caused” any harm to CPH. See, e.g., Cromer Fin., 137 F. Supp. 2d at 471-72.

Second, the Complaint alleges that MS & Co. made false statements in the course of marketing the convertible notes, and that the “proceeds from [the notes] were used to fund Sunbeam’s purchase of Coleman.” (Compl. ¶ 87; see also id. ¶ 72 (“debenture offering . . . was needed to close the Coleman transaction”).) But these allegations — which allègè only a “but for” causal relationship between the Note Offering and the acquisition — cannot support an aiding and abetting claim. See, e.g., Cromer Fin., 137 F. Supp. 2d at 470-72.¹⁸

Third, the Complaint alleges that MS & Co. provided CPH “with false financial and business information concerning Sunbeam” and thereby “persuad[ed] CPH to sell its interest in Coleman and to accept 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock and other consideration.” (Compl. ¶ 87.) As explained above, however, there is no allegation that MS & Co. knew that Sunbeam’s financial and business information was false, let alone that MS & Co. participated in the preparation of such false information. See Part IV.A, supra.¹⁹

Accordingly, because the Complaint contains no allegations that are legally sufficient to support an aiding and abetting claim, Count II must be dismissed as a matter of law.

¹⁸ Furthermore, the Complaint itself forecloses any argument that the note offering “proximately caused” CPH’s alleged harm. The Complaint concedes that the note offering provided the “cash portion of the acquisition consideration.” (Compl. ¶ 47.) The only injury alleged in the Complaint, however, concerns the equity portion of consideration, which fell in value when Sunbeam restated its 1996 and 1997 earnings and later declared bankruptcy. On the face of the Complaint, therefore, the Note Offering has no causal relation — proximate or otherwise — with the only injury that CPH seeks to redress in this case. See, e.g., Hirsch v. Arthur Andersen & Co., 72 F.3d 1085, 1095 (2d Cir. 1995) (sustaining dismissal of the complaint where “attenuated allegations” supporting claim “are contradicted . . . by more specific allegations in the complaint”).

¹⁹ Furthermore, there is no connection (causal or otherwise) between information allegedly provided by the advisor to a counterparty across the table from a sophisticated corporate entity like CPH, and that entity’s decision to enter into a $2 billion transaction, especially where the entity has retained its own team of sophisticated advisors, accountants and lawyers.

V. PLAINTIFF'S NEGLIGENT MISREPRESENTATION CLAIM (COUNT IV) MUST BE DISMISSED.

To state a claim for negligent misrepresentation, Plaintiff must allege that “(1) defendant had a duty, as a result of a special relationship, to give correct information; (2) the defendant made a false representation that he or she should have known was incorrect; (3) the information supplied in the representation was known by the defendant to be desired by the plaintiff for a serious purpose; (4) the plaintiff intended to rely and act upon it; and (5) the plaintiff reasonably relied on it to his or her detriment.” Hydro Investors, Inc. v. Trafalgar Power Inc., 227 F.3d 8, 20 (2d Cir. 2000). CPH’s negligent misrepresentation claim fails as a matter of law because (i) the Complaint alleges no facts that give rise to a “special relationship” and (ii) none of the alleged facts support a showing of reasonable reliance.²⁰

A. Plaintiff Cannot Allege That A “Special Relationship” Existed Between CPH and MS & Co.

For the requisite “special relationship” to exist, the parties must enjoy “a closer degree of trust than an ordinary business relationship.” Citibank, N.A. v. Itochu Intern. Inc., No. 01 Civ. 6007 (GBD), 2003 WL 1797847, *5 (S.D.N.Y. April 3, 2003) (internal quotations & citation omitted). “A simple arm’s length relationship is not enough.” North Am. Knitting Mills, Inc. v. International Women’s Apparel, Inc., No. 99 Civ. 4643 (LAP), 2000 WL 1290608, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 12, 2000) (dismissing negligent misrepresentation claim) (quoting United Safety of Am., Inc. v. Consolidated Edison Co. of N.Y., Inc., 213 A.D.2d 283, 286 (N.Y. App. Div. 1995)). To the contrary, “there must be a showing that there was either actual privity of contract between the parties or a relationship so close as to approach that of privity.” Marcellus Constr. Co. v. Village of Broadalbin, 755 N.Y.S.2d 474, 475 (N.Y. App. Div. 2003) (quoting Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. v. Dewey, Ballantine, Bushby, Palmer & Wood, 80 N.Y.2d 377, 382 (N.Y. 1992)); see also Butvin v. Doubleclick, Inc., No. 99 Civ. 4727, 2000 WL 827673, at *10 (S.D.N.Y. June 26, 2000) (“a plaintiff may only recover for negligent misrepresentation where the defendant owes him a fiduciary duty”).

²⁰ There are of course other legal defects in the Complaint, including (i) that only one paragraph of the entire Complaint alleges that MS & Co. made any representations actually received by CPH; (ii) that these representations were explicitly disclaimed in the Merger Agreement; (iii) that no facts are alleged to support the conclusory allegation that MS & Co. knew or had reason to know that Sunbeam’s professionally audited financial reports were false and misleading; and (iv) that no facts are alleged to support the conclusory allegation that MS & Co. intended or believed that CPH, who retained its own expert advisors, would rely without verification on information provided by MS & Co. in the course of negotiating a multi-billion dollar corporate acquisition. Count IV fails as a matter of law for any of these independent reasons.

The Complaint alleges no facts to meet this required element. Nor could it, since, as alleged in the Complaint, MS & Co.’s client and CPH had a contentious business relationship, circumstances which cannot give rise to a negligent misrepresentation claim. Indeed, CPH was never MS & Co.’s client or even a shareholder of MS & Co.’s client. To the contrary, CPH always sat on the other side of the negotiating table from Sunbeam, MS & Co.’s client.²¹ MS & Co. was thus twice removed from CPH, in the context of an arms-length, across-the-table negotiation. And CPH itself was advised at all times by its own team of sophisticated experts, including its own financial advisors from Credit Suisse First Boston. (Merger Agmt. §§ 1.1, 4.11.) Accordingly, the Complaint cannot state a negligent misrepresentation claim. See, e.g., CSI Inv. Partners II, L.P. v. Cendant Corp., 2002 WL 925044, *9 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 28, 2002) (“Since APC alleges nothing more than ordinary arm’s length negotiations, its negligent misrepresentation claims fails as a matter of law.”).

²¹ Indeed, Plaintiff’s own Complaint shows how contentious the pre-acquisition negotiations were between Sunbeam and CPH. Paragraph 37 of the Complaint describes how, during an initial meeting, Sunbeam CEO Al Dunlap “cursed and ranted” at CPH representations and “stormed out” of the meeting. (Compl. ¶ 37.)

B. Plaintiff Does Not Allege Reasonable Reliance.

Like a claim for fraudulent misrepresentation, a claim of negligent misrepresentation requires a showing of reasonable reliance. See, e.g., Dyncorp v. GTE, 215 F. Supp. 2d 308, 328 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (“In order to plead a claim for negligent misrepresentation, just as for fraud, a plaintiff must adequately plead reasonable reliance upon the alleged misrepresentations by the defendant.”) (citing Heard v. City of N.Y., 82 N.Y.2d 66, 74 (N.Y. 1993)). As detailed above, there can be no such reliance in this case as a matter of law because there is no allegation that CPH ever sought to verify the accuracy of representations alleged to have been made by MS & Co, and because CPH in any event disclaimed those representations in the Merger Agreement. See Part III, supra. Accordingly, Count III must be dismissed.

VI. PLAINTIFF’S CONSPIRACY CLAIM (COUNT III) MUST BE DISMISSED.

Plaintiff’s conspiracy claim is makeweight and frivolous. Neither New York nor Florida recognize an independent tort for conspiracy. See, e.g., American Baptist Churches of Metro N.Y. v. Galloway, 271 A.D.2d 92, 101 (N.Y. App. Div. 2000); Hoch v. Rissman, Weisberg, Barrett, 742 So. 2d 451, 460 (Fla. 5th DCA 1999). Thus, because Plaintiff states no other claim as a matter of law, its conspiracy claim is foreclosed. See, e.g., Linden v. Lloyd’s Planning Serv. Inc., 750 N.Y.S.2d 20, 21 (N.Y. App. Div. 2002) (“[S]ince plaintiff has no viable underlying claim for fraud or any other tort, her civil conspiracy claim was properly dismissed”) (citing Alexander & Alexander of N.Y., Inc. v. Fritzen, 503 N.E.2d 102, 103 (N.Y. 1986)). Even if Plaintiff could plead an actionable tort, moreover, the Complaint falls well short of pleading any facts to support a conspiracy claim.²² Accordingly, Count III must be dismissed.

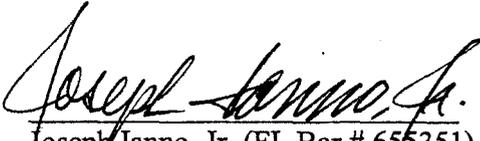

²² To state a claim for conspiracy to defraud, plaintiff must allege “(1) an agreement among two or more parties, (2) a common objective, (3) acts in furtherance of the objective and (4) knowledge [of the underlying fraud].” Filler, 247 F. Supp. 2d at 431 (internal quotation marks & citation omitted). The Complaint obviously fails in this regard. As demonstrated above, the

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, Plaintiff's Complaint should be dismissed in its entirety pursuant to Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.061(a). Alternatively, Defendant is entitled to judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.140(c).
