I. THIS COURT MUST APPLY NEW YORK LAW TO PLAINTIFF’S CLAIMS..... 10

A. Settled Choice-of-Law Principles Require Application Of New York Law. 10

B. Where (As Here) Misrepresentation Claims Relating To The Sale Of A Business Have A Factual Nexus To New York, the Eleventh Circuit Has Already Held That Those Claims Must Be Determined By New York Law..... 13

II. THIS COURT SHOULD DISMISS THIS ENTIRE CASE PURSUANT TO FLORIDA RULE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE 1.061. 15

III. PLAINTIFF’S FRAUD CLAIM (COUNT I) MUST BE DISMISSED. 17

A. CPH Specifically Disclaimed Reliance On The Representations Now Alleged To Be Fraudulent..... 18

A.	The Complaint Does Not Allege That MS & Co. Had "Actual Knowledge" Of Sunbeam's Fraud.	27
1.	If MS & Co. Is Deemed To Have Had "Actual Knowledge" Of Sunbeam's Fraud, Then So Did CPH — By Virtue Of Its Equal Access To Sunbeam's Books And Records.....	28
2.	Allegations Of "Constructive Knowledge" Are Not Enough.....	29
3.	Economic Motive Is Not "Actual Knowledge."	29
B.	Plaintiff's Allegations Of "Substantial Assistance" Are Legally Defective.....	30
V.	PLAINTIFF'S NEGLIGENT MISREPRESENTATION CLAIM (COUNT IV) MUST BE DISMISSED.	32
A.	Plaintiff Cannot Allege That A "Special Relationship" Existed Between CPH and MS & Co.	32

INTRODUCTION

This lawsuit is spurious. Filed on the eve of the running of a four-year statute of limitations, Plaintiff Coleman (Parent) Holdings Company ("CPH") seeks to extract vast payments from Morgan Stanley & Co. Incorporated ("MS & Co.") on the sole ground that MS & Co. formerly served as an advisor to the once-bankrupt and now-reorganized Sunbeam Corporation. The dispute revolves around negotiations that occurred in New York in mid 1997 and early 1998, during which CPH agreed to sell its interest in the Coleman Company ("Coleman") to Sunbeam. MS & Co. served as an advisor to Sunbeam — CPH's counterparty in the negotiations — for parts of the deal.

CPH now alleges — five years after the fact — that it sold its stake in Coleman (and agreed to accept Sunbeam stock as part of the purchase price) based on false representations regarding Sunbeam's financial health. CPH purports to bring these claims against MS & Co., but every factual allegation in the Complaint deals exclusively with misrepresentations by Sunbeam insiders and Sunbeam's auditor, Arthur Andersen. In fact, CPH has already asserted precisely the same claims against Sunbeam and Andersen, alleging — through prior filings in this very Court — that it "directly relied" on financial information provided by Sunbeam and Andersen (not MS & Co.) when it agreed to sell its stake in Coleman. CPH's effort to recycle these claims against MS & Co. — which is twice removed from the misrepresentations alleged in the Complaint — is a transparent attempt to extend liability far beyond legal precedent. This Court should not allow CPH to ignore all bounds of principle and precedent in its quest for solvent defendants. Instead, under settled law, this Court should dismiss the Complaint.

Indeed, rather than being a co-participant in alleged fraud at Sunbeam, the pleadings demonstrate that MS & Co. was itself a victim of that fraud, as its own affiliate invested and lost hundreds of millions of dollars in the same transaction that is the subject of this lawsuit. It would be unprecedented to permit a sophisticated plaintiff like CPH to state a claim for fraud against a financial advisor who not only represented the plaintiff's counterparty in a contentious arm's length transaction, but who also was substantially injured by the very fraud that is the subject of the plaintiff's Complaint.

The abusive nature of this suit is further revealed by the fact that it was filed here, in the Fifteenth Judicial District of Florida, rather than in New York, where (1) all named parties are headquartered, (2) all operative legal agreements were negotiated, drafted, and executed, (3) all alleged misstatements or omissions of material fact occurred, and (4) all action taken in reliance on those alleged misstatements and omissions occurred. Given the strong connection between this dispute and New York, this case requires — and MS & Co. now moves for — the application of New York law. For substantially the same reasons, the Complaint should be dismissed on forum non conveniens grounds under Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.061(a).

The reason CPH chose this forum is clear: it hopes to avoid the application of New York law, which bars all of its claims as a matter of law. Indeed, should the Court reach the legal merits of Plaintiff's claims, those claims should be dismissed for any of the following independent reasons:

- First, Plaintiff's misrepresentation claims are barred by various provisions of the written Merger Agreement, which explicitly disclaim reliance on pre-agreement negotiations and representations.
- Second, Plaintiff cannot plead a legally valid misrepresentation claim because it had the same access to Sunbeam's books and records as MS & Co., yet failed to take any steps to verify or investigate the representations it now claims were fraudulent.
- Third, Plaintiff cannot state a valid claim for fraud based on allegations that MS & Co. acted out of ordinary economic motive — such as the collection of investment banking fees — let alone on allegations that MS & Co. acted contrary to its own economic interest in participating in the alleged fraud.

- Fourth, Plaintiff cannot state a claim for negligent misrepresentation because it cannot allege that it enjoyed a “special relationship” with MS & Co., the financial advisor to Plaintiff’s counterparty in a contentious multi-billion dollar negotiation.
- Fifth, Plaintiff cannot state a valid claim for conspiracy or aiding and abetting fraud because there is no factual allegation that MS & Co. knew of the alleged fraud at Sunbeam let alone knowingly facilitated it.

At bottom, CPH should not be permitted to file a lawsuit in Florida over a transaction based entirely in New York, and thereby avoid the impact of settled New York law, which defeats CPH’s claims as a matter of law. Accordingly, in the event that the Court finds the Fifteenth Judicial Circuit a proper forum for this case, the Court should apply New York law to determine the legal sufficiency of Plaintiff’s claims and dismiss the case pursuant to Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.140(c).

FACTUAL BACKGROUND¹

All of the parties in this case are headquartered in New York. Plaintiff CPH is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in New York.² Prior to March 30,

¹ The background statement is based principally on the allegations of the Complaint, which are accepted as true only for purposes of this motion. See, e.g., Harris v. Kearney, 786 So. 2d 1222, 1225 (Fla. 4th DCA 2001). Reference is also made to documents directly quoted and relied upon in the Complaint, including the February 27, 1998 Merger Agreement (quoted at Compl. ¶ 65) and the March 19, 1998 Press Release (quoted at Compl. ¶ 60). The Memorandum also refers to the March 19, 1998 Note Offering Memorandum, and the February 27, 1998 Fairness Opinion, both of which are relied upon or referenced in the Complaint. (Id. ¶¶ 42-43, 47-52.) Copies of these documents and related materials are attached to Defendant’s Answer, which is filed simultaneously herewith (see Answer Exhibits 1-6), and thus may properly be considered on this motion for judgment on the pleadings. See, e.g., Boca Raton Transp., Inc. v. Zaldivar, 648 So. 2d 812, 813 (Fla. 4th DCA 1995). Finally, for purposes of the Court’s choice-of-law analysis, this Memorandum attaches and references the affidavits of several individuals who were present at pertinent meetings and occurrences discussed in the Complaint, all of which occurred in New York. (See Memorandum Exs. A-C.)

² It is telling that CPH conspicuously omits its principal place of business from its own Complaint. (Compl. ¶ 8.) In two pleadings filed by CPH in this very court, however — by the very same counsel who represent CPH here — CPH plainly stated that its “principal offices [are] located in New York.” See March 15, 2002 1st Am. Compl. ¶ 16, Coleman (Parent) Holdings v. Arthur Andersen et al., No. CA 01-06062 AN (Rapp, J.) (“Arthur Andersen 1st Am. Compl.”) (Ex. D); June 8, 2001 Compl. ¶ 15, Coleman (Parent) Holdings v. Arthur Andersen LLP & Phillip Harlow, No. 01-06062AN (Ex. E). The Court may take judicial notice of these pleadings pursuant to Fla. Stat § 90.202(6) (2003), which permits judicial notice of the “[r]ecords of any court of this state.”

1998, CPH owned approximately 82% of the shares of Coleman, a manufacturer and marketer of outdoor recreation products. (Compl. ¶ 8.) On March 30, 1998, pursuant to a written Merger Agreement that was negotiated, executed, and consummated in New York, CPH sold its interest in Coleman to Sunbeam. (Id.) Neither Sunbeam nor Coleman is a party to this action.

Defendant MS & Co., a wholly-owned subsidiary of Morgan Stanley, is a registered broker-dealer headquartered in New York. In mid 1997 and early 1998, MS & Co. assisted Sunbeam in identifying potential acquisition candidates and served as Sunbeam's financial advisor with respect to certain aspects of Sunbeam's acquisition of Coleman and two smaller companies. (Id. ¶¶ 9, 32.) MS & Co. also served as underwriter for a $750 million offering of convertible debentures, which Sunbeam used to finance the acquisitions. (Id. ¶¶ 9, 47, 52.) MS & Co. is incorporated in Delaware and has its principal place of business in New York. (See June 23, 3003 Answer of Morgan Stanley & Co. Incorporated ¶ 6.)

A. Sunbeam Hires MS & Co. To Advise It Regarding A Possible Corporate Sale Or Acquisition — Not To Replace Sunbeam's Outside Auditor Or To Review Sunbeam's Accounting Practices.

In mid 1997, Sunbeam engaged MS & Co. for advice with respect to a possible sale of Sunbeam's core business and/or the initiation of one or more acquisitions. (Compl. ¶ 31.) Throughout the fall of 1997, MS & Co. contacted at least ten potential bidders that it believed might have an interest in acquiring Sunbeam. (Id. ¶ 32.) In December 1997, unable to find a buyer for Sunbeam, MS & Co. recommended that Sunbeam's management consider acquiring other companies instead. (Id. ¶ 34.) According to the Complaint, MS & Co. suggested that Sunbeam consider using Sunbeam stock as part of the consideration offered to potential acquisition candidates. (Id.) Arthur Andersen served as "Sunbeam's outside auditors" (Id. ¶¶ 13, 67-68) and thus assumed responsibility for monitoring Sunbeam's accounting practices and verifying Sunbeam's publicly-filed financial reports, upon which Sunbeam's stock price was based. Plaintiff has recently acknowledged in this Court that it “directly relied on Andersen’s 1996 and 1997 audit reports when it decided to close the transaction with Sunbeam.” Arthur Andersen, 1st Am. Compl. ¶ 93.

B. After A “False Start” In Florida, Sunbeam And CPH Negotiate The Written Merger Agreement In New York.

In December 1997, MS & Co. identified Coleman as a potential acquisition candidate. (Compl. ¶ 36.) After an initial meeting between Sunbeam and CPH in New York to discuss the possibility of such an acquisition (Stynes Decl. ¶ 4 (Ex. A)), according to the Complaint, MS & Co. “laid the groundwork” for a meeting in Palm Beach, Florida between Al Dunlap (CEO of Sunbeam), Russell Kersh (CFO of Sunbeam), and representatives of CPH (Compl. ¶ 37). The meeting was a complete disaster. According to the Complaint, Dunlap “nearly scuttled” the proposed deal when he “cursed and ranted” at the CPH representatives and “stormed out” of the meeting. (Id.) This aborted meeting — which MS & Co. did not attend and which does not form the basis for any claim — is the only meeting alleged in the Complaint that took place in Florida.

Sunbeam and CPH ultimately resumed negotiations in New York. (Stynes Decl. ¶ 5.) The Complaint alleges that, “[d]uring the course of negotiations,” MS & Co. “prepared and provided CPH with false financial and business information about Sunbeam.” (Compl. ¶ 39.) The Complaint alleges that these materials, together with “false projections” and misleading “earnings estimates,” were provided to CPH during “negotiations” and “face-to-face discussions” between CPH and Sunbeam. (Id.) All, or substantially all, such “negotiations” and “face-to-face discussions” took place in New York. (Stynes Decl. ¶ 5.)

On February 27, 1998, after several weeks of arm’s length negotiations, Sunbeam’s Board of Directors convened a special meeting in New York to consider the proposed acquisition of Coleman. (Compl. ¶ 41.) The Board of Directors met at MS & Co.’s offices in New York.

(Stynes Decl. ¶ 6.) Several representatives from MS & Co. attended the board meeting and provided Sunbeam with a written "fairness opinion" regarding the fair acquisition price of Coleman. (Compl. ¶¶ 42-43.) The Complaint does not allege that CPH was present at this board meeting, or that it relied on any representations that were made there. (Id.) At the conclusion of the New York meeting, Sunbeam's Board of Directors approved the Coleman acquisition. (Id. ¶ 44.) Later that same day, Sunbeam and CPH formally executed the Merger Agreement in New York. (Stynes Decl. ¶ 7.)

The Merger Agreement is fundamental to this case. Although the Complaint quotes directly from the Merger Agreement and CPH purports to base its claims (at least in part) on the Merger Agreement itself (Compl. ¶ 65), CPH has failed to attach the Merger Agreement to its Complaint. Its failure to do so is not surprising because several express provisions of the Merger Agreement defeat CPH's claims as a matter of law:

- First, the Merger Agreement contains a clear integration clause which expressly prohibits CPH from relying on any representations or statements made during pre-closing negotiations. (Merger Agmt. § 12.5 (Answer Ex. 1).)
- Second, the Merger Agreement contains detailed covenants, representations and warranties, none of which contemplate reliance on extra-contractual representations or statements. (Merger Agmt. §§ 5.1-6.10.)³
- Third, the Merger Agreement required Sunbeam to provide CPH and all of its "financial advisors, legal counsel, accountants, consultants and other representatives" with "full access . . . to all of [Sunbeam's] books, records, properties, plants and personnel." (Merger Agmt. § 6.7.) Thus, CPH and MS & Co. stood at all times on equal footing regarding access to information pertinent to Sunbeam's true financial condition.

- Fourth, the Merger Agreement expressly recognized that CPH had its own sophisticated financial advisors with respect to the acquisition, and would thus be represented throughout negotiations, due diligence, and closing by Credit Suisse First Boston ("CSFB"). (Id. §§ 1.1; 4.11.)⁴

The Merger Agreement also set forth the commercial terms for the acquisition. In exchange for CPH's 82% ownership interest in Coleman, Sunbeam agreed to pay $159,956,756 in cash — and transfer 14,099,749 shares of Sunbeam's common stock to CPH. (Merger Agmt. § 3.1(a)(i).) In addition, Sunbeam agreed to assume or repay more than $1 billion in debt belonging to Coleman and CPH. The Merger Agreement specified that the acquisition would close in New York and that all share certificates and/or other consideration would be exchanged by the parties at the closing in New York. (Id. §§ 2.2, 3.1(b)(i).)

C. MS & Co. Puts Its Own Money And Reputation On The Line By Agreeing To Serve As Underwriter For Sunbeam's $750 Million Debenture Offering.

Sunbeam needed to raise funds to pay the substantial "cash portion" of consideration for Coleman's $2 billion purchase price. (Compl. ¶ 47; Merger Agmt. § 3.1(a)(i).) MS & Co. recommended that Sunbeam raise a portion of this amount through an offering of convertible debentures ("the Note Offering"). (Compl. ¶ 47; MS & Co.'s Answer ¶¶ 47, 50; March 19, 1998 Note Offering Mem. at 8, 23 (Answer Ex. 5).) MS & Co. agreed to serve as the sole underwriter for Sunbeam's Note Offering and thus agreed to market the debentures to its most valuable institutional clients. (Compl. ¶ 47.) The notes were presented to potential investors at a series of "road show" meetings (id. ¶ 50) in New York (Porat Decl. ¶ 3 (Ex. B).) The Complaint alleges that MS & Co. "misrepresented Sunbeam's financial performance" during the "road shows" and "conference calls" which took place in connection with the Note Offering. (Compl. ¶ 50.) There is no allegation, however, that CPH ever received these alleged misrepresentations or that it relied on them when deciding to close the transaction. (Id.) The Note Offering ultimately raised $750 million, which Sunbeam used to pay part of the cash consideration for the Coleman acquisition. (Id. ¶ 52.)

Another portion of this consideration (approximately $680 million) was financed by Morgan Stanley Senior Funding (“MSSF”), an affiliate of MS & Co., and a wholly-owned subsidiary of Morgan Stanley. (MS & Co.’s Answer ¶ 47; Note Offering Mem. at 8, 23, 47.) Specifically, in March 1998, MSSF entered into a credit agreement with Sunbeam and agreed to lend Sunbeam approximately $680 million to finance the acquisition. (Hart Decl. ¶ 3 (Ex. C).) Thus, through its subsidiary, Morgan Stanley invested hundreds millions of dollars in the Coleman acquisition. (MS & Co.’s Answer ¶¶ 31, 47, 66; Note Offering Mem. at 47; June 1998 Credit Facilities Mem. at 1-2; 39 (Answer Ex. 2).)⁵

D. The March 19, 1998 Press Release.

Plaintiff alleges that on March 19, 1998 — eleven days before the acquisition was scheduled to close — Sunbeam issued a “false press release” regarding Sunbeam’s first quarter financial performance. (Compl. ¶ 59.) Plaintiff alleges that the press release was prepared and issued with MS & Co.’s “knowledge and assistance,” and that the press release “affirmatively misstated and concealed Sunbeam’s true condition.” (Id.) The Complaint nowhere alleges that CPH relied on this press release for any reason or that CPH ever sought to verify the information contained therein.

⁵ MSSF’s loan is the subject of a companion case that is also pending in this Court. See Morgan Stanley Senior Funding, Inc. v. Coleman (Parent) Holdings Inc. & MacAndrews & Forbes Inc., No. 2003 CA 00-5165AG (filed May 12, 2003). In that companion case, MSSF alleges that CPH and MAFCO fraudulently inflated the acquisition price for Coleman, causing MSSF to loan (and ultimately lose) hundreds of millions of dollars.

E. The Acquisition And Financing Transactions Close In New York.

The Note Offering closed in New York on March 19, 1998. (Porat Decl. ¶ 3.) The acquisition itself closed in New York on March 28, 1998. (Stynes Decl. ¶ 8.) CPH tendered its Coleman stock to Sunbeam in New York, as required by the Merger Agreement. (Merger Agmt. §§ 2.2, 3.1(b)(i).) Sunbeam delivered the consideration for these shares (including roughly 14.1 million shares of common stock and $1.6 billion in cash) to CPH at the closing in New York. (Id. § 2.2.) The Bank Facility closed in New York on March 31, 1998. (Hart Decl. ¶ 4.) MSSF funded the Bank Facility by transferring $680 million from its New York bank account. (Id.)

F. Accounting Irregularities Are Discovered At Sunbeam.

Several days after the acquisition closed, Sunbeam announced that its sales for the first quarter of 1998 were lower than sales numbers that it had reported in the first quarter of 1997. (Compl. ¶ 74.) In May 1998, Sunbeam announced that it would record a first quarter loss of $.09 per share. (Id. ¶ 76.) In June 1998, Sunbeam's Board of Directors launched an internal investigation into Sunbeam's accounting practices. (Id. ¶ 77.) That investigation led to the June 13, 1998 firing of Al Dunlap (Sunbeam's CEO) and Russell Kersh (Sunbeam's CFO) and, ultimately, to the October 1998 restatement of Sunbeam's financial statements for 1996, 1997, and the first quarter of 1998. (Id.)

STANDARD OF REVIEW

On a motion for judgment on the pleadings under Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.140(c), the Court must accept as true all well-pleaded factual allegations of the non-moving party. See Cutler v. Aleman, 701 So. 2d 390, 391 (Fla. 3d DCA 1997). The Court need not, however, ignore general factual allegations that are inconsistent with specific facts "revealed by [an] exhibit attached or referred to in the complaint." Hillcrest Pac. Corp. v. Yamamura, 727 So. 2d 1053, 1056 (Fla. 4th DCA 1999) (internal quotation marks & citation omitted). Judgment on the pleadings is appropriate where “on the facts as admitted for the purposes of the motion, the moving party is clearly entitled to judgment.” Cutler, 701 So. 2d at 391.

ARGUMENT

I. THIS COURT MUST APPLY NEW YORK LAW TO PLAINTIFF’S CLAIMS.

A. Settled Choice-of-Law Principles Require Application Of New York Law.

In Bishop v. Florida Specialty Paint Co., 389 So. 2d 999 (Fla. 1980), the Florida Supreme Court adopted the principles set forth in the Restatement (Second) of the Conflict of Laws (“Restatement”) for resolving disputes over choice-of-law in controversies involving more than one jurisdiction. Applying the Restatement analysis to this case, it is clear that this Court must apply New York law to CPH’s claims.

All of the claims in the Complaint are based on allegations of fraud and misrepresentation. As such, the substantive law applied to these claims must be determined in accordance with Section 148 of the Restatement, which provides in relevant part:

When the plaintiff has suffered pecuniary harm on account of his reliance on the defendant’s false representations and when the plaintiff’s action in reliance took place in the state where the false representations were made and received, the local law of this state determines the rights and liabilities of the parties

Restatement § 148(1); see also Eugene F. Scoles & Peter Hay, Conflict of Laws § 17.52 at 798 (3d ed. 2000) (“In cases of fraud and misrepresentation, the choice of the applicable law is relatively easy. When the defendant’s fraud or misrepresentation and the defendant’s reliance occur in the same state, no problem arises.”) (citing Restatement § 148(1)).⁶ Application of these principles here plainly requires this Court to apply New York law to Plaintiff’s claims.

First, every representation alleged in the Complaint occurred in New York. All substantive “negotiations” and “face-to-face” discussions involving MS & Co. took place in New York. (Stynes Decl. ¶ 5.) Preparation for the “road show” meetings took place in New York, and the meetings themselves took place in New York and three other cities, none in Florida. (Porat Decl. ¶ 3.) MS & Co.’s presentation to Sunbeam’s Board of Directors took place in New York. (Stynes Decl. ¶ 6.) MS & Co.’s “fairness opinion” was presented to Sunbeam in New York. To the extent that MS & Co. reviewed the March 19, 1998 press release, it did so in New York. (Porat Decl. ¶ 4.) And there are no allegations — (nor could there be) — that MS & Co. made any representations to anyone in Florida.

Second, every act of reliance alleged in the Complaint occurred in New York. CPH executed and closed the Merger Agreement in New York. (Merger Agmt. § 2.2.) CPH tendered its shares of Coleman in New York. (Id. §§ 2.2, 3.1(b)(i).) CPH accepted shares of Sunbeam stock in New York. (Id.) The Note Offering closed in New York. (Porat Decl. ¶ 3.) The Bank Facility closed in New York. (Hart Decl. ¶ 4.) And there are no allegations — nor could there be — that CPH ever committed a single act of reliance to its detriment in Florida, as opposed to New York, its principal place of business.⁷

Third, every injury alleged in the Complaint occurred in New York. CPH tendered its shares of Coleman in New York. (Merger Agmt. § 3.1(b)(i).) CPH accepted shares of Sunbeam stock in New York. (Id.) Sunbeam filed for bankruptcy in New York. And there is no Florida party before this Court, let alone an injured one.⁸

Fourth, New York has a paramount sovereign interest in having its law applied to this controversy, which arises out of a sophisticated business transaction that was negotiated, executed and closed in New York — between two parties who are headquartered there. Indeed, it is precisely for cases like this that New York has developed a sophisticated body of law to govern fraud and misrepresentation claims that arise from New York-based financial transactions.⁹

Fifth, Florida has no sovereign interest in having its law applied to this controversy. There are no Florida parties before this Court; there is no Florida injury to redress; and every discussion or representation identified in the Complaint took place in New York — not Florida. Indeed, it is only by applying New York law to a case like this one that the Florida courts can ensure — as the Florida Supreme Court requires — that “rights and liabilities” are defined by the law of the state with “the most significant relationship to the occurrence and the parties.” Bishop, 389 So. 2d at 1001.

B. Where (As Here) Misrepresentation Claims Relating To The Sale Of A Business Have A Factual Nexus To New York, the Eleventh Circuit Has Already Held That Those Claims Must Be Determined By New York Law.

This case raises choice-of-law issues that are nearly identical to those presented in Trumpet Vine Investments, N.V. v. Union Capital Partners I, Inc., 92 F.3d 1110 (11th Cir. 1996). That case arose out of the multi-billion dollar acquisition of Del Monte, an international corporation headquartered in Coral Gables, Florida. See id. at 1113-14. The plaintiff (Union Capital) claimed that the defendant (Trumpet Vine) conspired with other companies to shut it out of the acquisition. See id. There, as here, negotiations for the acquisition occurred chiefly in New York. See id. at 1116. There, as here, the plaintiff filed its claims in Florida, where the subject of the New York-based transaction (Del Monte) was headquartered and where some due diligence activities occurred. See id. at 1113-14. And there, as here, the plaintiff sought to assert various tort theories of fraud, misrepresentation, and conspiracy. See id. at 1114.

The “threshold issue” was choice-of-law. Id. at 1115. Union Capital argued that Florida law should govern on grounds that one of the parties to the acquisition (Del Monte) was based in Florida, and that the plaintiff (Union Capital) was itself based there. The defendant (Trumpet Vine) argued that New York law governed the claims because the transaction was negotiated and closed in New York. The District Court, applying Florida’s choice-of-law rules and Section 148 of the Restatement, held that New York law must be applied. A three-judge panel of the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit agreed — and upheld the choice-of-law ruling on appeal. See id. at 1118.

The same considerations that guided the courts in Trumpet Vine apply to this case:

- In Trumpet Vine, as in this case, it was irrelevant that Del Monte was headquartered in Florida, because “the takeover itself was to be consummated in New York.” Id.

- In Trumpet Vine, as in this case, it was irrelevant that some of the preliminary discussions took place in Florida, or even that “some acts in reliance (the due diligence) occurred in Florida.” Id.
- And in Trumpet Vine, as in this case, it was irrelevant that the subject of the underlying transaction was based in Florida because “New York had the most significant contacts, as the place where the misrepresentations and the initial acts of reliance occurred.” Id.

Indeed, this case presents an even stronger basis for applying New York law than Trumpet Vine because no party in this case has any presence in Florida. In Trumpet Vine, the injured plaintiff was headquartered in Florida and the principal injury occurred in Florida. No such interests are implicated here.

Trumpet Vine thus offers powerful guidance that where, as here, a business transaction is executed and closed in New York, and alleged misrepresentations, reliance, and injuries all occur in New York, the legal sufficiency of Plaintiff’s claims must be determined under the law of New York. For the Court’s convenience, a chart summarizing the parallels between CPH’s Complaint and the Trumpet Vine case is attached hereto as Exhibit F.¹⁰

¹⁰ Further guidance is found in the fact that reported cases applying Restatement principles to disputes arising from sophisticated multi-jurisdictional business transactions uniformly reach the same result as Trumpet Vine. See, e.g., Inacom Corp. v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 254 F.3d 683, 688 (8th Cir. 2001) (applying Nebraska law to suit arising out of the sale of a business division located in Illinois because plaintiff received, took action on, and suffered damages from fraudulent concealment in Nebraska); 389 Orange St. Partners v. Arnold, 179 F.3d 656, 662 (9th Cir. 1999) (applying law of state where claimant signed documents containing misrepresentations and was to render payment in reliance on such misrepresentations); Thomas v. N.A. Chase Manhattan Bank, 994 F.2d 236, 241-42 (5th Cir. 1993) (applying law of New York because negotiations and reliance occurred in New York); Macurdy v. Sikov & Love, P.A., 894 F.2d 818, 820-21 (6th Cir. 1990) (applying law of state where misrepresentations and reliance occurred); Sky Tech. Partners, LLC v. Midwest Research Inst., 125 F. Supp. 2d 286, 297-98 (S.D. Ohio 2000) (applying law of state where plaintiffs had their principal place of business and acted in reliance upon alleged misrepresentations); Hari & Assocs. v. RNBC, Inc., 946 F. Supp. 531, 536 (M.D. Tenn. 1996) (applying law of state where contracts and agreements were executed and misrepresentations occurred); Value House, Inc. v. MCI Telecomms. Corp., 917 F. Supp. 5, 7 (D.D.C. 1996) (applying law of state where plaintiffs received negligent misrepresentations and acted in reliance thereon); Default Proof Credit Card Sys., Inc. v. State Street Bank & Trust Co., 753 F. Supp. 1566, 1570-71 (S.D. Fla. 1990) (applying Massachusetts law because negotiations and actionable conduct occurred in Massachusetts notwithstanding that losses from alleged fraud occurred in Florida where the plaintiff had its principal place of business). To apply Florida law here, in short, would not only be unprecedented, it would turn the Restatement on its head.

II. THIS COURT SHOULD DISMISS THIS ENTIRE CASE PURSUANT TO FLORIDA RULE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE 1.061.

As the foregoing makes clear, Florida has scant connection with the underlying facts or the injury alleged in the Complaint. Under a traditional forum non conveniens analysis, codified by the Florida Supreme Court in Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.061(a), CPH's lawsuit should proceed (if at all) only in New York — where all the events alleged occurred, where the overwhelming majority of the witnesses and relevant documents are located, and where the injuries it claims to have suffered occurred. This strong preference for a New York forum is confirmed by the fact that this Court — or any other court adjudicating this controversy — will have to apply New York law to CPH's claims. See, e.g., Kinney System, Inc. v. Continental Ins. Co., 674 So. 2d 86, 92 (Fla. 1996) (“[A] trial court has discretion to grant forum non conveniens dismissal upon finding that . . . foreign law will predominate if jurisdiction is retained.”).

Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.061(a) recognizes that there are certain cases that are so inconvenient to litigate in the forum selected by a plaintiff that they must be dismissed. Rule 1.061(a) allows the court to exercise its “sound discretion” — and dismiss the case — where it appears that the practical interest of the litigants and witnesses require the action to be tried in a more convenient judicial forum. Florida courts considering Rule 1.061 dismissal evaluate three key factors: (1) whether “an adequate alternate forum exists”; (2) whether “all relevant factors of private interest favor the alternate forum”; and (3) “[i]f the balance of private interests is at or near equipoise,” whether “factors of public interest tip the balance in favor of trial in the alternate forum.” Id. at 94; see, e.g., Ground Improvement Techniques, Inc. v. Merchants Bonding Co., 707 So. 2d 1138, 1139 (Fla. 5th DCA 1998) (dismissing complaint under Rule 1.061 where pleadings and attachments showed another state was more convenient).

This case is tailor-made for a Rule 1.061 dismissal. First, the New York courts are clearly an “adequate alternative forum” for adjudication of a dispute which arises out of a business transaction that was negotiated, executed, and closed in New York — between two parties who are headquartered in New York. Indeed, New York courts are routinely asked to decide similar cases involving substantially identical issues. Moreover, both of the parties to this action are undoubtedly subject to personal jurisdiction in New York. And because CPH is a Delaware corporation with a New York headquarters, its choice of a Florida forum is entitled no weight in the Rule 1.061(a) inquiry. See, e.g., Ciba-Geigy Ltd. v. Fish Peddler, Inc., 691 So. 2d 1111, 1118 (Fla. 4th DCA 1997) (reversing denial of motion to dismiss under Rule 1.061(a) because “no special weight should have been given to a foreign plaintiff’s choice of forum”).

Second, all relevant public and private interest factors weigh in favor of this case being pursued in New York. As set forth in detail in Part I of this Memorandum and described in the materials submitted to the Court for the choice-of-law determination:

- The Parties, Witnesses, and Documents Are Located in New York. All of the relevant events occurred in New York, and the overwhelming majority of witnesses, documents, and other relevant evidence are located in New York.
- The Court Must Apply New York Law. The Court must consider the impact of choice-of-law problems on the forum, particularly since the need to apply the law of another state points toward dismissal. The familiarity of New York courts with New York law supports dismissal here under Rule 1.061(a).
- The Localized Nature Of The Controversy. There is a “local interest in having localized controversies decided at home.”...Gulf Oil Corp. v. Gilbert, 330 U.S. 501, 509 (1947). This case presents a case that is “local” to New York. The relevant events all occurred there, and the courts of New York have a significant interest in regulating the conduct of companies that transact business agreements there.
- The Unfairness Of Imposing Jury Duty On Florida Residents. There is no persuasive reason for imposing the burden of jury duty and the cost of trial on the residents of Florida where a transaction is based entirely in New York. In this case especially, the attenuated connection between CPH’s claims and Florida make it unfair to impose the burden of jury duty on the residents of Palm Beach County.

- The Court's Busy Docket Warrants Dismissal. Permitting what promises to be a complex case involving the application of New York law — and discovery disputes involving New York parties, witnesses, and documents — to proceed in Florida will only further crowd an already busy docket and delay justice to Florida residents with Florida-based claims.

For all of the foregoing reasons, New York has a greater interest in this dispute than Florida and is by far the most convenient forum for the litigation of CPH's claims. Accordingly, the convenience of the parties and their witnesses, as well as the interests of justice, require the Court to dismiss the case pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 1.061(a).¹¹

III. PLAINTIFF'S FRAUD CLAIM (COUNT I) MUST BE DISMISSED.

CPH's fraud claim fails for three separate and independent reasons. First, Plaintiff's claims are foreclosed by the integration clause in the Merger Agreement, which expressly disclaims reliance on pre-agreement negotiations. Second, settled law prohibits CPH from bringing a fraud claim based on alleged representations by MS & Co. (the financial advisor to CPH's counterparty in arm's length negotiations) where it failed to inspect and verify the accuracy of those alleged representations, as it had the contractual right to do. Third, CPH cannot base its fraud claims on allegations that MS & Co. acted against its own economic interest — i.e., that it engaged in a massive fraud, allowed its affiliate to risk and lose hundreds of millions of dollars, and intentionally ripped off its own clients, all for the alleged purpose of collecting an ordinary banking fee. Such nonsensical allegations fail, as a matter of law, to establish the “scienter” element of Plaintiff’s fraud claim.

A. CPH Specifically Disclaimed Reliance On The Representations Now Alleged To Be Fraudulent.

To state a claim for fraud, CPH must allege that it reasonably relied on fraudulent representations made by MS & Co. See, e.g., Harsco Corp. v. Segui, 91 F.3d 337, 342 (2d Cir. 1996). But CPH cannot establish this threshold requirement because the only representations alleged to have been made by MS & Co. — statements and materials provided during pre-closing negotiations (Compl. ¶ 39) — are expressly disclaimed in the Merger Agreement’s integration clause. Section 12.5 of the Merger Agreement provides:

Entire Agreement. This Agreement (including all Schedules and Exhibits hereto) contains the entire agreement among the parties hereto with respect to the subject matter hereof and supercedes all prior agreements and understandings, oral or written, with respect to such matters, except for the Confidentiality Agreements which will remain in full force and effect for the term provided for therein.

(Merger Agmt. § 12.5.)

This provision disclaims, in plain language, the representations alleged in Paragraph 39 of the Complaint — the only representations that are alleged to have been made by MS & Co. Indeed, the Merger Agreement contains or expressly incorporates dozens of representations and warranties which, pursuant to the integration clause, are the only representations and warranties CPH relied upon in agreeing to sell its stake in Coleman. (Merger Agmt. § 5.1-5.4; Company Merger Agmt. §§ 5.1-5.12.) These representations and warranties refer to the truth and accuracy of financial information “filed by [Sunbeam] with the SEC” (Company Merger Agmt. § 4.6);

they clearly do not refer to any information alleged to have been “provided” by MS & Co. (Compl. ¶ 39), which is the only factual basis for CPH’s fraudulent misrepresentation claim.¹²

New York law is crystal clear that a party who expressly disclaims reliance on representations in the course of a complex business transaction (as CPH has done here) cannot later sue for fraud claiming reliance on those very same representations. See, e.g., Dyncorp v. GTE Corp., 215 F. Supp. 2d 308, 322-23 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (dismissing fraud claim based on extra-contractual representations where plaintiff negotiated a merger agreement with express representations, warranties, and an integration clause); Emergent Capital Inv. Mgmt., LLC v. Stonepath Group, Inc., 195 F. Supp. 2d 551, 562 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (same).¹³

This well-established principle applies with special force where (as here) the plaintiff is a sophisticated commercial actor with substantial experience negotiating complex financial transactions. See, e.g., Lazard Freres & Co. v. Protective Life Ins. Co., 108 F.3d 1531, 1543 (2d Cir. 1997) (“[A] substantial and sophisticated player . . . [is] under a further duty to protect itself from misrepresentation.”). Indeed, sophisticated entities like CPH have a legal obligation to ¹² It is significant for purposes of this Motion that, in a ninety-six paragraph Complaint, only this single paragraph (Compl. ¶ 39) alleges that MS & Co. made any representations to CPH. Every other substantive portion of the Complaint — including (i) the allegations of Sunbeam’s accounting fraud (Id. ¶¶ 14-27), (ii) statements made by MS & Co. to prospective purchasers of the convertible notes (Id. ¶¶ 47-52), and (iii) statements made by MS & Co. to the Sunbeam Board of Directors (Id. ¶¶ 41-44) — simply has no relevance to CPH’s claims, as there is no factual allegation that MS & Co. knew of the Sunbeam fraud or that representations by MS & Co. to the other parties were ever communicated to CPH. Given the stringent pleading standards for fraudulent misrepresentation claims, moreover, the Complaint’s conclusory and hollow allegations cannot state a claim as a matter of law. See, e.g., Batlemento v. Dove Fountain, Inc., 593 So. 2d 234, 238 (Fla. 5th DCA 1991) (dismissing fraud claim where “the amended complaint does no more than identify the subject matter of the alleged false representations of fact”) (citing Fla. R. Civ. P. 1.120(b)); see also Window Headquarters, Inc. v. MAI Basic Four, Inc., No. 91 Civ. 1816 (MBM), 1994 WL 673519, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 1, 1994) (“To specify fraud with particularity, plaintiffs must allege specifically the circumstances of the fraud claimed, including the content of any alleged misrepresentation, and the date, place and identity of the persons making the misrepresentations.”).

protect themselves before relying on statements or representations apart from those memorialized in a detailed agreement. See, e.g., id. (“[T]he failure to insert [appropriate protective language] in the agreement — by itself — renders reliance unreasonable as a matter of law.”) (citations omitted); Consolidated Edison, Inc. v. Northeast Utilities, 249 F. Supp. 2d 387, 402 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (sophisticated parties cannot allege reasonable reliance on alleged statements and representations where they “could have made them a basis for a specific representation and warranty in the Merger Agreement but failed to do so”) (citations omitted); Dyncorp, 215 F. Supp. 2d at 322 (“Sophisticated parties to major transactions cannot avoid their disclaimers by complaining that they received less than all information, for they could have negotiated for fuller information or more complete warranties.”). Dismissal of Plaintiff’s fraud claim is warranted on this ground alone.

Indeed, CPH is part of a multi-billion dollar financial empire that routinely engages in the world’s most sophisticated and complex corporate mergers and acquisitions. In addition, CPH was represented by an army of attorneys and financial advisors who themselves are experts in precisely the sort of transaction at issue here. (See, e.g., Merger Agmt. §§ 1.1, 4.11 (Credit Suisse First Boston).) As a matter of law, therefore, CPH cannot plead that it reasonably relied on representations supposedly made by MS & Co. — an advisor to CPH’s counterparty in the negotiations — especially after having expressly disclaimed those representations in the Merger Agreement. To the extent CPH now alleges that it relied on such representations to support its fraudulent misrepresentation claim, its allegations are legally deficient and require this Court to dismiss Count I as a matter of law.¹⁴

¹⁴ CPH cannot claim that it is entitled to discovery on this claim, since courts routinely dismiss fraudulent misrepresentation claims that are contrary to an integration clause and not encompassed within any contractual

B. CPH Cannot Bring A Fraud Claim Because It Failed To Exercise Its Contractual Right To Inspect Sunbeam's Books And Records.

Quite apart from the claim-defeating integration clause, Plaintiff's fraud claim is barred for the additional reason that — despite a clear provision in the Merger Agreement that gave it unfettered access to Sunbeam's books and financial records — CPH does not allege that it ever sought to verify the financial representations it now claims were fraudulent. Indeed, “[a]s a matter of law, a sophisticated plaintiff cannot establish that it entered into an arm's length transaction in justifiable reliance on an alleged misrepresentation if that plaintiff failed to make use of the means of verification that were available to it, such as reviewing the files of the other parties.” UST Private Equity Investors Fund, Inc. v. Salomon Smith Barney, 288 A.D.2d 87, 88 (N.Y. App. Div. 2001) (affirming motion to dismiss fraud claims where sophisticated plaintiff failed to verify the accuracy of alleged misrepresentation during due diligence).

The reason for this rule is simple. A sophisticated party who “plainly had both access to the relevant [company] financial statements,” and the “wherewithal through [its] own financial advisors” to ascertain the financial condition of that company, is presumed as a matter of law to have had the “means to ascertain the truth of the alleged representations.” Rotterdam Ventures, Inc. v. Ernst & Young LLP, 752 N.Y.S.2d 746, 749 (N.Y. App. Div. 2002). Therefore, to state a representation or warranty, especially where (as here) the plaintiff is a highly sophisticated party that could have protected itself before relying on alleged extra-contractual representations. See, e.g., Dyncorp, 215 F. Supp. 2d at 320 (“ruling on the legal sufficiency of a complaint based on [fraudulent] representations may properly be made on the complaint and contract alone, without waiting for discovery”); Belin v. Weissler, No. 97 Civ. 8787 (RWS), 1998 WL 391114, *5 (S.D.N.Y. July 14, 1998) (dismissing sophisticated plaintiff's misrepresentation claim that contradicts integration clause because “the asserted reliance must be found to be justifiable under all the circumstances before a complaint can be found to state a cause of action in fraud”) (quoting Danann Realty Corp. v. Harris, 157 N.E.2d 597, 599-600 (N.Y. 1959)); Granite Partners, L.P. v. Bear, Stearns & Co., 17 F. Supp. 2d 275, 290 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (same and noting that “whether a plaintiff has adequately pleaded justifiable reliance is a proper subject for a motion to dismiss”); Valassis Communications, Inc. v. Weimer, 758 N.Y.S.2d 311, 312 (N.Y. App. Div. 2003); (“In light, however, of provisions of the parties' Purchase Agreement specifically prohibiting plaintiff's reliance on extra-contractual representations such as those upon which plaintiff's fraud claim is premised, it is plain that plaintiff's possess no viable claim for fraud”) (citations omitted).

legally valid fraud claim, such a party "must show that he or she made an independent inquiry into the available information." Giannacopoulos v. Credit Suisse, 37 F. Supp. 2d 626, 632 (S.D.N.Y. 1999).¹⁵

CPH clearly had "access to the relevant financial statements" and the "wherewithal, through [its] own financial advisors," to verify the representations identified in the Complaint. The Merger Agreement required Sunbeam to provide CPH and its "financial advisors, legal counsel, accountants consultants and other representatives" with "full access . . . to all of [Sunbeam's] books, records, properties, plants and personnel." (Merger Agmt. § 6.7.) Moreover, CPH is undeniably a sophisticated party that was advised at all times by its own expert financial advisors, consultants, accountants and attorneys, including the international investment bank of Credit Suisse First Boston. (Id. §§ 1.1, 4.11.) And here, CPH was negotiating to acquire "14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock worth approximately $600 million." (Compl. ¶ 40.) Therefore, unlike MS & Co., which never had and was not seeking an equity stake in Sunbeam, CPH had a profound financial incentive to inspect and verify any representation relating to the value of Sunbeam stock.

Thus, there is no question that CPH had the unfettered contractual right to access and inspect Sunbeam's books and records. There is similarly no question that CPH had an equal opportunity — and even greater incentive — to discover accounting problems at Sunbeam before choosing to proceed with the acquisition. Despite this unlimited access, opportunity, and incentive, the Complaint nowhere alleges that CPH ever exercised its right to inspect Sunbeam's books and records or sought to independently verify the financial representations it now claims were fraudulent. Under these circumstances, CPH's fraud claim must be dismissed as a matter of law.

C. Plaintiff Cannot Allege That It Relied On Any Of The Misrepresentations Identified In The Complaint.

CPH purports to base its fraud claim — at least in part — on a March 19, 1998 Sunbeam press release warning investors that Sunbeam's net sales for the first quarter of 1998 would be lower than Wall Street analysts' estimates, but that sales in future quarters should improve. (Compl. ¶¶ 59-66.) Significantly, however, the Complaint does not allege that CPH ever relied on any statement in this press release.¹⁶ Indeed, any such reliance is expressly foreclosed by the plain terms of the press release, which explicitly warned readers not to rely on the forward-looking projections of Sunbeam's future performance:

Cautionary Statements — Statements contained in this press release, including statements relating to the Company's expectations regarding anticipated performance in the future, are 'forward looking statements,' as such term is defined in the Private Securities Litigation Reform Act of 1995. Actual results could differ materially from the Company's statements in this release regarding its expectations, goals, or projected results, due to various factors (March 19, 1998 Press Release at 2 (Answer Ex. 6).) These express warnings and "Cautionary Statements" prevent CPH from relying on the press release as the basis for a fraud claim.

Similarly, the Complaint alleges that "Morgan Stanley misrepresented Sunbeam's financial performance" at a series of "'road show' meetings and conference calls" which took place in the course of the Note Offering. (Compl. ¶ 50.) Significantly, however, the Complaint does not allege that anyone from CPH was present for those "road show" meetings and conference calls, or that the alleged misrepresentations were ever communicated to CPH. Equally fatal, there are no allegations in the Complaint that CPH reasonably relied upon such representations. Nor could there be, since the Note Offering Memorandum makes clear that MS & Co. itself relied on financial information provided by Sunbeam and Arthur Andersen (Note Offering Mem. at 2-3, 72); CPH does not allege that it was an investor in the Note Offering; and no such investor is before this Court.

¹⁶ Equally significant, despite the explicit warning of a sharp and sudden drop in sales, the Complaint never alleges (i) that CPH or any of its expert advisors ever inquired as to why Sunbeam sales had suddenly declined, or (ii) that CPH or any of its expert advisors ever demanded access to Sunbeam's books and records, as the Merger Agreement entitled them to do, to verify future sales projections. This alone is fatal to any fraud and misrepresentation claim based on representations made in the press release. See Part III.B, supra.

The same is true regarding the February 27, 1998 Board Meeting — and the alleged misrepresentations made by MS & Co. in connection with the presentation of its opinion on the fairness of the acquisition price. (Id. ¶¶ 41-44.) It is clear from the face of the Complaint that any such misrepresentation was made to the Sunbeam Board — and not CPH. (Id.) There are no allegations in the Complaint — nor could there be — that CPH ever received those representations, let alone that CPH reasonably relied upon them. (Id.) The written opinion that is referenced in the Complaint definitively states that MS & Co. based its analysis exclusively on audit reports that had been provided by Coleman and Sunbeam "without independent verification [of their] accuracy and completeness." (Feb. 27, 1998 Fairness Op. at 3 (Answer Ex. 4).) This opinion also states, moreover, that MS & Co.'s analysis is provided solely "for the information of the Board of Directors of [Sunbeam] and may not be used for any other purpose without our prior written consent." (Id.) Thus, even if the Complaint alleged that CPH received or relied on information provided to the Board at this meeting, such reliance would not be reasonable as a matter of law.

D. Plaintiff's Allegations Of Scienter Make No Sense — And Fail To Meet The Basic Pleading Requirements For Fraud.

The Complaint alleges that MS & Co. knowingly participated in a massive multi-billion dollar fraud with the intent to (i) retain Sunbeam as a client and (ii) collect roughly $30 million in investment banking and underwriting fees — an amount that is not unusual for a sophisticated $2.2 billion transaction. (Compl. ¶¶ 31, 66, 73.) But if retention of a client and collection of normal fees is enough to plead scienter as a matter of law, then the scienter element would be rendered a dead letter in Florida — and the floodgates would be opened to a wave of frivolous fraud claims based on ordinary economic motive.

Of course, such allegations are not enough to state a claim for fraud. Recognizing the seriousness of fraud-based allegations, the courts have been careful to require more than simply an ordinary economic interest: “In looking for a sufficient allegation of motive, [courts] assume that the defendant is acting in his or her informed economic self-interest.” Shields v. Citytrust Bancorp., Inc., 25 F.3d 1124, 1130 (2d Cir. 1994). Here, however, the only allegations of scienter are the ordinary economic motives of any financial services firm. (See Compl. ¶ 31 (“Morgan Stanley knew that if it failed to deliver a major transaction, Morgan Stanley would not be compensated for the extensive work it had performed for Sunbeam”); Id. ¶ 66 (alleging that “[e]verything . . . depended on closing the Coleman acquisition” because “if the transaction did not close, Morgan Stanley would not be paid its $10.28 million fee for the Coleman acquisition or its $22.5 million fee for underwriting the [Note Offering]”).) These allegations alone require dismissal of Plaintiff’s fraud claim because they fail to plead the requisite element of scienter. See, e.g., THC Holdings Corp. v. Chinn, No. 95 Civ. 4422 (KMW), 1998 WL 50202, *9 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 6, 1998) (“A mere allegation that defendant was in a position to receive normal compensation for professional services rendered is not sufficient to support a showing of motive in the fraud scienter analysis.”) (citing inter alia, Friedman v. Arizona World Nurseries Ltd. P’ship, 730 F. Supp. 521, 532 (S.D.N.Y. 1990) (dismissing fraud-based claim on ground that incentive of receiving fee for professional services is insufficient to allege scienter), aff’d, 927 F.2d 595 (2d Cir. 1991)).

Plaintiff’s allegations of scienter are not merely legally deficient, however. For even if the Court accepts all of the Complaint’s allegations as well-pleaded, it would defy economic reason for MS & Co. to have knowingly participated in Sunbeam’s fraud. It defies all reason to believe that MS & Co. risked its own professional reputation, knowingly ripped off its most valued clients and institutional investors, knowingly permitted its affiliate to invest and lose hundreds of millions of dollars, and exposed itself to massive liability, all for the supposed purpose of retaining a single client and collecting investment banking and underwriting fees for a single transaction. The economic irrationality of Plaintiff’s scienter allegations provide an additional, independent ground for dismissing its fraud claim. See, e.g., Kalnit v. Eichler, 99 F. Supp. 2d 327, 343 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (“[W]here plaintiff’s view of the facts defies economic reason . . . it does not yield a reasonable inference of fraudulent intent.”) (internal quotations & citation omitted), aff’d, 264 F.3d 131 (2d Cir. 2001); see also Duncan v. Pencer, No. 94 Civ. 0321 (LAP), 1996 WL 19043, at *10 (S.D.N.Y. Jan 18, 1996) (dismissing fraud-based claim on grounds that it is “economically irrational” to assume that accounting firm “would knowingly condone a client’s fraud in order to preserve a fee that, at best, is an infinitesimal percentage of its annual revenues”) (citing Shields, 25 F.3d at 1130).

Indeed, Plaintiff’s far-fetched theory of scienter rings especially hollow in light of the Complaint’s allegations that MS & Co. and Sunbeam knew the fraud would be revealed shortly after “the Coleman transaction closed at the end of March 1998.” (Compl. ¶ 58; see id. ¶ 66.) It simply makes no sense to believe that MS & Co. knowingly persuaded its clients to invest hundreds of millions of dollars in Sunbeam and allowed its affiliate to invest hundreds of millions of dollars in Sunbeam two days after the Coleman acquisition closed, all the while knowing that the fraud would be revealed shortly after the closing date. See, e.g., Shields, 25 F.3d at 1130 (affirming dismissal of fraud-based claim for lack of scienter and noting that “[i]t is hard to see what benefits accrue from a short term respite from an inevitable day of reckoning”).

IV. PLAINTIFF’S AIDING-AND-ABETTING CLAIM (COUNT II) MUST BE DISMISSED.

To state a claim for aiding and abetting fraud, Plaintiff must allege with the requisite particularity each of the following elements: (1) the existence of primary fraud; (2) defendant’s actual knowledge of the fraud; and (3) defendant’s substantial assistance in the commission of the fraud. See, e.g., Cromer Fin. Ltd. v. Berger, 137 F. Supp. 2d 452, 470 (S.D.N.Y. 2001); Stolow v. Greg Manning Auctions, Inc., No. 02 Civ 2591 (SAS), 2003 WL 355447, at *10 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 14, 2003) (citing Armstrong v. McAalpin, 699 F.2d 79, 91 (2d Cir. 1983)). Because the Complaint fails to allege either that MS & Co. had “actual knowledge” of Dunlap and Kersh’s alleged fraud, or that MS & Co. provided “substantial assistance” in the commission of that fraud, Count II must be dismissed as a matter of law.

A. The Complaint Does Not Allege That MS & Co. Had “Actual Knowledge” Of Sunbeam’s Fraud.

The Complaint does not contain a single non-conclusory, factual allegation that MS & Co. had actual knowledge of Dunlap and Kersh’s alleged fraud. Plaintiff’s conclusory allegations that MS & Co. “knew of Dunlap’s fraudulent scheme and helped to conceal it” (Compl. ¶ 86) is not enough to state a claim for aiding and abetting fraud. See, e.g., Filler v. Havnit Bank, 247 F. Supp. 2d 425, 431 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (factual elements of aiding and abetting fraud must be alleged with particularity); Myers v. Myers, 652 So. 2d 1214, 1215 (Fla. 5th DCA 1995) (“Allegations contained in a pleading are insufficient if they are too general, vague or conclusory.”) (citations omitted). Here, the Complaint contains no factual allegations — nor could it — to support a claim that MS & Co. had “actual knowledge” of Sunbeam’s fraud.

Indeed, even if all the facts alleged in the Complaint were proven, none would show that MS & Co. had “actual knowledge” of the underlying fraudulent activities at Sunbeam. The Complaint alleges, for example, that MS & Co. recommended an acquisition strategy that included using Sunbeam stock to pay part of the purchase price (Compl. ¶ 34), and that such a strategy permitted Dunlap to conceal his fraud (id. ¶ 35). Notably absent from the Complaint, however, is any factual allegation that MS & Co. ever suspected (much less had “actual knowledge”) that Sunbeam’s stock was inflated by accounting fraud. (Id.) Absent such a factual allegation, the Complaint alleges nothing more than that MS & Co. recommended using stock to finance an acquisition — a common practice in corporate mergers and acquisitions.

1. If MS & Co. Is Deemed To Have Had “Actual Knowledge” Of Sunbeam’s Fraud, Then So Did CPH — By Virtue Of Its Equal Access To Sunbeam’s Books And Records.

To the extent CPH alleges that MS & Co. had “actual knowledge” of Sunbeam’s fraud because MS & Co. conducted due diligence on Sunbeam during the underwriting process, such allegations are fatal to CPH’s misrepresentation claims. If MS & Co. is deemed to have “actual knowledge” of fraud because of its access to Sunbeam during the due diligence process, then CPH — by virtue of the fact that it enjoyed exactly the same access to Sunbeam’s “books, records, properties, plants and personnel” (Merger Agmt. § 6.7) — also had “actual knowledge” of Sunbeam’s fraud, eliminating any claim that it relied on MS & Co. as a matter of law. Similarly, CPH cannot bootstrap MS & Co.’s role as an underwriter of Sunbeam securities into one of advisor for CPH, especially when CPH retained and relied upon its own army of expert advisors, attorneys, and accountants throughout the negotiation process.

2. Allegations Of “Constructive Knowledge” Are Not Enough.

The Complaint alleges that investment bankers at MS & Co. had phone conversations and meetings with Sunbeam insiders, including Dunlap and Kersh, and thus “[MS & Co.] would have been apprised of Sunbeam’s financial performance during the first two months of 1998.” (Compl. ¶ 54.) But such allegations of constructive knowledge are not enough. See, e.g., Kolbeck v. LIT Am. Inc., 939 F. Supp. 240, 246 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) (“New York common law, which controls the analysis here, has not adopted a constructive knowledge standard for imposing aiding and abetting liability.”), aff’d, 152 F.3d 918 (2d Cir. 1998). Similarly, allegations that MS & Co. “should” or “would” have known that Sunbeam’s sales declined during the first two months of 1998 hardly supports a claim that MS & Co. had actual knowledge of an extensive fraud which traced to late 1996.¹⁷

3. Economic Motive Is Not “Actual Knowledge.”

Like Count I, Plaintiff’s aiding and abetting claim must be dismissed because the allegations of fraudulent intent are legally deficient. See Part III.C, supra. As with fraud generally, it is equally well-established that an allegation of “ordinary economic motives [is] insufficient to support the scienter element of an aiding and abetting claim.” Primavera Familienstiftung v. Askin, 173 F.R.D. 115, 127-28 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) (citing Shields, 25 F.3d at 1130); Cromer Fin., 137 F. Supp. 2d at 495 (dismissing aiding and abetting claim against financial advisor for failure to adequately plead fraudulent intent). Accordingly, allegations that MS & Co. was motivated by the collection of ordinary investment banking and underwriting fees cannot give rise to liability for aiding and abetting a massive fraud.

B. Plaintiff's Allegations Of "Substantial Assistance" Are Legally Defective.

Plaintiff does not — and indeed cannot — allege that MS & Co. provided "substantial assistance" to Sunbeam's fraud. A defendant "provides substantial assistance only if it 'affirmatively assists, helps conceal, or by virtue of failing to act when required to do enables [the fraud] to proceed.'" Nigerian Nat'l Petroleum Corp. v. Citibank, N.A., No. 98 Civ. 4960 (MBM), 1999 WL 558141, at *8 (S.D.N.Y. July 30, 1999) (quoting Diduck v. Kaszycki & Sons Contractors, Inc., 974 F.2d 270, 284 (2d Cir. 1992)) (alteration in Nigerian Nat'l). "In alleging the requisite 'substantial assistance' by the aider and abettor, the complaint must allege that the acts of the aider and abettor proximately caused the harm to the [corporation] on which the primary liability is predicated. Allegations of a 'but for' causal relationship are insufficient." Filler, 247 F. Supp. 2d at 431 (internal quotation marks & citations omitted). "Inaction is actionable participation only when the defendant owes a fiduciary duty directly to the plaintiff." Cromer Fin., 137 F. Supp. 2d at 470 (internal quotation marks & citation omitted). Plaintiff's allegations regarding MS & Co. fall well short of these requirements.

Plaintiff's allegations of alleged "assistance" fall into three main categories, all of which fail to support a claim as a matter of law.

First, the Complaint alleges that MS & Co. "assist[ed] with the false March 19, 1998 press release." (Compl. ¶ 87.) But CPH does not allege that it relied on the press release; thus, there can be no allegation that the press release "proximately caused" any harm to CPH. See, e.g., Cromer Fin., 137 F. Supp. 2d at 471-72.

Second, the Complaint alleges that MS & Co. made false statements in the course of marketing the convertible notes, and that the “proceeds from [the notes] were used to fund Sunbeam’s purchase of Coleman.” (Compl. ¶ 87; see also id. ¶ 72 (“debenture offering . . . was needed to close the Coleman transaction”).) But these allegations — which allege only a “but for” causal relationship between the Note Offering and the acquisition — cannot support an aiding and abetting claim. See, e.g., Cromer Fin., 137 F. Supp. 2d at 470-72.¹⁸

Third, the Complaint alleges that MS & Co. provided CPH “with false financial and business information concerning Sunbeam” and thereby “persuad[ed] CPH to sell its interest in Coleman and to accept 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock and other consideration.” (Compl. ¶ 87.) As explained above, however, there is no allegation that MS & Co. knew that Sunbeam’s financial and business information was false, let alone that MS & Co. participated in the preparation of such false information. *See Part IV.A, supra.*¹⁹

Accordingly, because the Complaint contains no allegations that are legally sufficient to support an aiding and abetting claim, Count II must be dismissed as a matter of law.

V. PLAINTIFF'S NEGLIGENT MISREPRESENTATION CLAIM (COUNT IV) MUST BE DISMISSED.

To state a claim for negligent misrepresentation, Plaintiff must allege that “(1) defendant had a duty, as a result of a special relationship, to give correct information; (2) the defendant made a false representation that he or she should have known was incorrect; (3) the information supplied in the representation was known by the defendant to be desired by the plaintiff for a serious purpose; (4) the plaintiff intended to rely and act upon it; and (5) the plaintiff reasonably relied on it to his or her detriment.” Hydro Investors, Inc. v. Trafalgar Power Inc., 227 F.3d 8, 20 (2d Cir. 2000). CPH’s negligent misrepresentation claim fails as a matter of law because (i) the Complaint alleges no facts that give rise to a “special relationship” and (ii) none of the alleged facts support a showing of reasonable reliance.²⁰

A. Plaintiff Cannot Allege That A “Special Relationship” Existed Between CPH and MS & Co.

For the requisite “special relationship” to exist, the parties must enjoy “a closer degree of trust than an ordinary business relationship.” Citibank, N.A. v. Itochu Intern. Inc., No. 01 Civ. 6007 (GBD), 2003 WL 1797847, *5 (S.D.N.Y. April 3, 2003) (internal quotations & citation omitted). “A simple arm’s length relationship is not enough.” North Am. Knitting Mills, Inc. v. International Women’s Apparel, Inc., No. 99 Civ. 4643 (LAP), 2000 WL 1290608, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 12, 2000) (dismissing negligent misrepresentation claim) (quoting United Safety of Am., Inc. v. Consolidated Edison Co. of N.Y., Inc., 213 A.D.2d 283, 286 (N.Y. App. Div. 1995)). To the contrary, “there must be a showing that there was either actual privity of contract between the parties or a relationship so close as to approach that of privity.” Marcellus Constr. Co. v. Village of Broadalbin, 755 N.Y.S.2d 474, 475 (N.Y. App. Div. 2003) (quoting Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. v. Dewey, Ballantine, Bushby, Palmer & Wood, 80 N.Y.2d 377, 382 (N.Y. 1992)); see also Butvin v. Doubleclick, Inc., No. 99 Civ. 4727, 2000 WL 827673, at *10 (S.D.N.Y. June 26, 2000) (“a plaintiff may only recover for negligent misrepresentation where the defendant owes him a fiduciary duty”).

²⁰ There are of course other legal defects in the Complaint, including (i) that only one paragraph of the entire Complaint alleges that MS & Co. made any representations actually received by CPH; (ii) that these representations were explicitly disclaimed in the Merger Agreement; (iii) that no facts are alleged to support the conclusory allegation that MS & Co. knew or had reason to know that Sunbeam’s professionally audited financial reports were false and misleading; and (iv) that no facts are alleged to support the conclusory allegation that MS & Co. intended or believed that CPH, who retained its own expert advisors, would rely without verification on information provided by MS & Co. in the course of negotiating a multi-billion dollar corporate acquisition. Count IV fails as a matter of law for any of these independent reasons.

The Complaint alleges no facts to meet this required element. Nor could it, since, as alleged in the Complaint, MS & Co.’s client and CPH had a contentious business relationship, circumstances which cannot give rise to a negligent misrepresentation claim. Indeed, CPH was never MS & Co.’s client or even a shareholder of MS & Co.’s client. To the contrary, CPH always sat on the other side of the negotiating table from Sunbeam, MS & Co.’s client.²¹ MS & Co. was thus twice removed from CPH, in the context of an arms-length, across-the-table negotiation. And CPH itself was advised at all times by its own team of sophisticated experts, including its own financial advisors from Credit Suisse First Boston. (Merger Agmt. §§ 1.1, 4.11.) Accordingly, the Complaint cannot state a negligent misrepresentation claim. See, e.g., CSI Inv. Partners II, L.P. v. Cendant Corp., 2002 WL 925044, *9 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 28, 2002) (“Since APC alleges nothing more than ordinary arm’s length negotiations, its negligent misrepresentation claims fails as a matter of law.”).

B. Plaintiff Does Not Allege Reasonable Reliance.

Like a claim for fraudulent misrepresentation, a claim of negligent misrepresentation requires a showing of reasonable reliance. See, e.g., Dyncorp v. GTE, 215 F. Supp. 2d 308, 328 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (“In order to plead a claim for negligent misrepresentation, just as for fraud, a plaintiff must adequately plead reasonable reliance upon the alleged misrepresentations by the defendant.”) (citing Heard v. City of N.Y., 82 N.Y.2d 66, 74 (N.Y. 1993)). As detailed above, there can be no such reliance in this case as a matter of law because there is no allegation that CPH ever sought to verify the accuracy of representations alleged to have been made by MS & Co, and because CPH in any event disclaimed those representations in the Merger Agreement. See Part III, supra. Accordingly, Count III must be dismissed.

VI. PLAINTIFF’S CONSPIRACY CLAIM (COUNT III) MUST BE DISMISSED.

Plaintiff’s conspiracy claim is makeweight and frivolous. Neither New York nor Florida recognize an independent tort for conspiracy. See, e.g., American Baptist Churches of Metro N.Y. v. Galloway, 271 A.D.2d 92, 101 (N.Y. App. Div. 2000); Hoch v. Rissman, Weisberg, Barrett, 742 So. 2d 451, 460 (Fla. 5th DCA 1999). Thus, because Plaintiff states no other claim as a matter of law, its conspiracy claim is foreclosed. See, e.g., Linden v. Lloyd’s Planning Serv. Inc., 750 N.Y.S.2d 20, 21 (N.Y. App. Div. 2002) (“[S]ince plaintiff has no viable underlying claim for fraud or any other tort, her civil conspiracy claim was properly dismissed”) (citing Alexander & Alexander of N.Y., Inc. v. Fritzen, 503 N.E.2d 102, 103 (N.Y. 1986)). Even if Plaintiff could plead an actionable tort, moreover, the Complaint falls well short of pleading any facts to support a conspiracy claim.²² Accordingly, Count III must be dismissed.

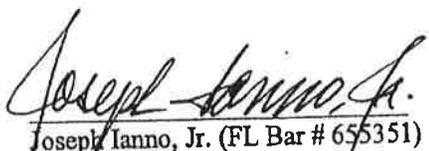

²² To state a claim for conspiracy to defraud, plaintiff must allege “(1) an agreement among two or more parties, (2) a common objective, (3) acts in furtherance of the objective and (4) knowledge [of the underlying fraud].” Filler, 247 F. Supp. 2d at 431 (internal quotation marks & citation omitted). The Complaint obviously fails in this regard. As demonstrated above, the

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, Plaintiff's Complaint should be dismissed in its entirety pursuant to Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.061(a). Alternatively, Defendant is entitled to judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.140(c).

Complaint does not adequately plead a claim of actual knowledge. Thus, there is no allegation — nor could there be an allegation — of knowing participation. Similarly, there is no allegation that MS & Co. and Sunbeam insiders acted with common objective. To the contrary, the Complaint concedes that MS & Co. had nothing to gain from the transaction other than the collection of normal investment banking fees (Compl. ¶ 66) and in fact put its own name and reputation on the line in the course of marketing the convertible notes (Id. ¶¶ 47-52). That is hardly enough to plead a "common objective" with Al Dunlap, whose acknowledged aim was to "collect tens of millions of dollars for himself before the outside world could learn the truth of Sunbeam's phony 'turnaround.'" (Id. ¶ 28.)

DECLARATION OF JAMES STYNES

1. My name is James Stynes. I am a Managing Director in the mergers & acquisitions group at Morgan Stanley & Co. Incorporated ("MS & Co."). I have been employed by MS & Co. continuously for over 20 years and am familiar with MS & Co.'s structure and business operations.

2. My area of expertise is mergers and acquisitions. In that role, I provide financial analysis and advice to clients involved in mergers and acquisitions transactions.

3. In 1997, MS & Co. was formally retained by Sunbeam Corporation ("Sunbeam") to provide general financial advice with respect to Sunbeam's March 1998 acquisition of three companies, including the Coleman Company ("Coleman"). I was one of the people from MS & Co. who worked on these transactions. In this capacity, I was involved in negotiations and face-to-face discussions with Coleman (Parent) Holdings Company ("CPH") and Sunbeam, virtually all of which took place in New York. During these discussions, CPH was represented by the New York law firm Wachtell, Lipton, Rosen & Katz.

4. In December 1997, I attended meetings with representatives of CPH and Sunbeam to discuss Sunbeam's possible acquisition of Coleman. These meetings took place in New York. The initial meeting with CPH representatives took place at the New York offices of CPH's parent company, MacAndrews & Forbes Inc. (“MAFCO”). Neither I nor any representatives of MS & Co. attended a meeting in Florida between CPH and Sunbeam.

5. All of the meetings, negotiations and discussions that I participated in between Sunbeam and CPH were in New York, including a face-to-face meeting at MAFCO’s offices in New York.

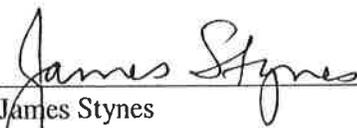

6. In February 27, 1998, I attended a meeting with the Sunbeam Board of Directors to discuss the fairness of the proposed acquisition price in light of financial information provided by Coleman, MAFCO, Sunbeam, and their respective accountants. At this meeting, MS & Co. presented a “Fairness Opinion” to the Sunbeam Board, which opined based on such information that the proposed price was fair to Sunbeam from a financial point of view. At the conclusion of this meeting, Sunbeam’s Board of Directors approved the Coleman acquisition and agreed to memorialize the negotiated terms of the acquisition. This meeting took place at Morgan Stanley’s headquarters in New York.

7. Also on February 27, 1998, Sunbeam and CPH formally executed merger agreements to memorialized the terms of the acquisition. Two merger agreements were executed, one by Sunbeam and Coleman and one by Sunbeam and CPH — both at the New York offices of Morgan Stanley.

8. On March 28, 1998, Sunbeam’s acquisition of Coleman closed at the New York offices of Skadden, Arps, Meagher & Flom, a New York law firm. Pursuant to the terms set forth in the Merger Agreements, CPH tendered its shares of Coleman and received shares of Sunbeam as consideration for the acquisition at the closing.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the United States that the foregoing is true and correct to the best of my knowledge and belief.

Dated this 19th day of June, 2003.

DECLARATION OF RUTH PORAT

1. My name is Ruth Porat. I am a Managing Director of Morgan Stanley & Co. Incorporated ("MS & Co.") and work in its Investment Banking Division. I have been employed by MS & Co. continuously for the past seven years.

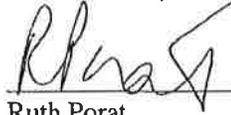

2. At the time of the Sunbeam's March 1998 acquisition of Coleman, I was a Managing Director in MS & Co.'s Equity Capital Markets Department. In that role, I helped analyze whether Sunbeam's acquisition could be financed with an equity or equity-related security and was ultimately involved in Sunbeam's convertible debenture offering ("Note Offering").

3. The Note Offering was marketed to investors through a series of "road show" meetings and conference calls. The road show meetings took place in New York and three other cities. None of the road show meetings took place in Florida. Several of the road show conference calls were conducted from New York. Materials that MS & Co. prepared for the road shows were prepared in New York, and the Note Offering priced and closed in New York.

4. On March 19, 1998, Sunbeam issued a press release stating that Sunbeam sales revenues might not meet analyst expectations for the first quarter 1998. To the extent that I reviewed the press release prior to the time it was issued or discussed the proposed press release with Sunbeam employees or attorneys, I did so from my offices in New York.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the United States that the foregoing is true and correct to the best of my knowledge and belief.

COPIES FILED: 12

9. Within weeks of the closing of the Coleman Company acquisition on March 30, 1998, the deception facilitated by Andersen began to unravel. On April 3, 1998, just four days after the closing, Sunbeam's management issued a press release announcing that, despite having predicted positive quarterly results in another press release just two weeks earlier, Sunbeam now would show a loss for the first quarter of 1998. On May 11, 1998, Sunbeam issued an earnings release for the first quarter of 1998 reporting a loss of 52 cents per share, compared with a gain of 8 cents per share in the same quarter of 1997. Press coverage ensued in the following month questioning whether Sunbeam had utilized – and Andersen had approved – manipulative and improper accounting practices in order to create the ruse of a turnaround.

10. In June 1998, the Sunbeam board of directors began an inquiry into Sunbeam's accounting practices. On June 15, 1998, the board announced that it had removed Dunlap as Chairman and CEO of Sunbeam. On June 25, 1998, Andersen withheld its consent for use of its unqualified 1997 audit opinion in a registration statement that was to have been filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission ("SEC"). On June 30, 1998, Sunbeam acknowledged that it had undertaken a review of its financial statements and the review could result in a restatement of the financial statements. On October 20, 1998, Sunbeam and Andersen announced a restatement of the financial statements. Thereafter, Andersen issued a new unqualified audit opinion for Sunbeam reporting only $93 million in operating earnings for 1997. That amount was approximately half of the figure that Andersen previously certified.

11. In February 2001, Sunbeam filed a voluntary bankruptcy petition under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. Coleman-Parent's equity stake in Sunbeam is now worthless.

are made against each of Andersen-US, Andersen-Worldwide, Andersen-Canada, Andersen-Hong Kong, Andersen-Mexico, Andersen-Venezuela and Andersen-UK jointly and severally.

NATURE OF THE ACTION

1. This action arises out of Coleman-Parent's sale of its controlling interest in The Coleman Company, Inc. ("Coleman Company") to Sunbeam Corporation, Inc. ("Sunbeam") on March 30, 1998, in exchange for 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam common stock, plus other consideration. In deciding to go forward with that sale, Coleman-Parent relied on Sunbeam's financial statements, which were audited by Andersen and certified on behalf of Andersen by Andersen-US. Andersen promoted itself as the largest accounting firm in the world at the time of the audits.

2. Unbeknownst to Coleman-Parent, however, Andersen had audited and certified financial statements that it knew to be inaccurate and misleading. Those audited financial statements painted a false picture of Sunbeam, depicting it as a company in the midst of an impressive financial turnaround. The reality was that Sunbeam's turnaround was a sham, and when the truth emerged, Sunbeam's stock lost virtually all of its value. The company is now in bankruptcy. By relying on the financial statements improperly certified by Andersen, Coleman-Parent has suffered losses exceeding $600 million.

3. By holding itself out as Sunbeam's independent certified public accountant and certifying Sunbeam's financial statements, Andersen knowingly assumed a responsibility that transcended its relationship with Sunbeam as a client. As an independent public accountant auditing Sunbeam's financial statements, Andersen owed a duty to Coleman-Parent and others whom it knew were relying upon Andersen's certification that Sunbeam's reports fairly depicted the company's financial status. Andersen was required to maintain independence from its client, Sunbeam, and speak with total honesty befitting the trust that had been placed in its word. In carrying out its audit of Sunbeam's financial statements, Andersen utterly failed to live up to that responsibility. To the contrary, Andersen's audits were not performed in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards ("GAAS"), and the financial statements it certified were not, as Andersen claimed, in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles ("GAAP"). Even more egregious, Phillip Harlow, the audit partner on the Sunbeam account, and others at Andersen knew the financial statements were not prepared in conformity with GAAP, but Andersen certified them nonetheless.

4. Defendants' motivation was simple – to do whatever was necessary to retain a major client. Andersen had served as Sunbeam's independent auditor for many years. In 1993, Andersen's Fort Lauderdale, Florida, office took charge of the account, and Sunbeam became one of the few Fortune 500 clients in that office. Sunbeam's audits generated significant fees. For example, Sunbeam paid Andersen more than $1 million for its 1995 audit. Over the years, in addition to auditing work, Sunbeam also generated numerous consulting engagements and their accompanying fees. Defendants were motivated to preserve the Sunbeam relationship not only to ensure that audit engagements would continue but also to reinforce the opportunity to perform lucrative consulting work. In addition, maintaining the relationship with Sunbeam was important to defendants because being dropped by a high-profile client such as Sunbeam would have brought negative publicity to the Ft. Lauderdale office and to Andersen.

5. However, in 1996 that relationship was threatened by Sunbeam's new CEO, Albert Dunlap. Dunlap was eager to show a turnaround at Sunbeam in order to position the company for a quick sale, as he recently had done at Scott Paper. To accomplish that goal, Dunlap's new management team knowingly employed improper accounting methods that first overstated the company's loss in 1996 and then inflated the company's income in 1997. In total abrogation of its responsibility as an independent auditor, Andersen permitted – indeed, blessed – those improper accounting treatments, rather than risk losing Sunbeam's audit business to Dunlap's accountant of choice, Coopers & Lybrand.

6. Ironically, the financial results certified by Andersen for 1996 and 1997 drove the price of Sunbeam stock so high that new management could not locate a willing buyer for a quick sale of the company, as had been hoped. As a result, Sunbeam was forced to shift gears and pursue acquisitions of other companies, including Coleman Company, in the hope that those mergers would obscure Sunbeam's true financial position and forestall revelation of the accounting gimmickry. To effectuate that plan, some of the very same Andersen partners and employees who were functioning as Sunbeam's "independent" auditors (including Harlow) added another role and joined Sunbeam's due diligence team for the acquisitions.

7. Because of the dual roles as auditor and acquisitions consultant that defendants played, defendants knew full well not only that the purchase of Coleman Company was taking place, but also that Coleman-Parent was relying on the financial statements certified by Andersen. Nonetheless, Andersen took no steps before the Coleman Company acquisition closed to correct the grossly misleading impression created by its certifications.

8. At the time of the sale to Sunbeam, Coleman Company was a leading manufacturer and marketer of consumer products for the worldwide outdoor recreation market, with annual revenues in excess of $1 billion. As payment for its stake in Coleman Company, Coleman-Parent was to receive 14,099,749 shares of Sunbeam stock, $160 million in cash and other consideration. Based on Sunbeam's share price at the time of the closing, Coleman-Parent received Sunbeam shares that had an aggregate market value of over $619.5 million.

12. In order to retain the Sunbeam account and lucrative auditing and consulting fees, Andersen turned its back on its professional and legal obligations and certified Sunbeam financial statements that it knew to be false and misleading. It did so with full knowledge that Coleman-Parent would be harmed immensely by Andersen's misstatements and omissions. As a direct and foreseeable result of Andersen's actions, Coleman-Parent has sustained damages in excess of $600,000,000.

13. By this complaint, Coleman-Parent seeks recovery of over $600 million in compensatory damages. In addition, Coleman-Parent reserves the right to seek leave to amend its complaint pursuant to Fla. Stat. § 768.72 to assert claims for an additional recovery of punitive damages in excess of $1.2 billion as allowed by law.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

14. This Court has jurisdiction over the subject matter of this action pursuant to Fla. Stat. § 26.012(2)(a). This Court has jurisdiction over Andersen-US, Andersen-Worldwide, Andersen-Canada, Andersen-Hong Kong, Andersen-Mexico, Andersen-Venezuela, Andersen-UK and Harlow pursuant to Fla. Stat. §§ 48.193(1)(a) and (f), (2) and/or (5).

15. Venue is proper in this district pursuant to Fla. Stat. §§ 47.011 and 47.021 because Andersen maintains an office with more than 30 employees and partners in West Palm Beach, Florida, and therefore resides in Palm Beach County. In addition, Harlow is a resident of South Florida.

Andersen-UK participated in the 1996 and 1997 audits of Sunbeam and the 1998 restatement of the reports of those audits.

23. Arthur Andersen LLP ("Andersen-US") is part of Andersen-Worldwide.

Andersen-US is a partnership formed under the laws of the State of Illinois. The partners of Andersen-US are residents of Florida and numerous other states. Andersen-US participated in and coordinated the 1996 and 1997 audits of Sunbeam and the 1998 restatement of the reports of those audits. In addition, Andersen-US partners and employees provided consulting services to Sunbeam as part of due diligence work performed in conjunction with Sunbeam's acquisition of Coleman Company, and on other projects.

24. Phillip E. Harlow ("Harlow") has been a partner at Andersen-US since 1983, and also is a partner of Andersen-Worldwide. He served as the engagement partner on the audits of Sunbeam's financial statements from 1993 to 1998. As engagement partner, Harlow had primary responsibility for supervising the 1996 and 1997 audits of Sunbeam, including overseeing the activities with respect to the Sunbeam work performed by numerous persons at Andersen. Harlow also participated as a member of Sunbeam's due diligence team in connection with Sunbeam's acquisition of Coleman Company.

ANDERSEN AS "ONE FIRM"

25. In 1913, an accounting and consulting partnership was formed in Illinois under the name "Arthur Andersen & Co." The company began to expand internationally in the 1930s. The firm operated on a global scale through a network of international offices, branches and subsidiaries of the U.S. partnership premised under a "one firm" concept.

26. In 1977, as Andersen increased its global presence, it created a new structure: the Andersen Worldwide Organization ("AWO"), comprised of Andersen-Worldwide, the individual partners of Andersen-Worldwide and Andersen-Worldwide's offices around the globe, operating as a single global partnership or joint venture. The AWO structure was and is designed to maintain the "one firm" concept, and was and is intended to foster the belief that Andersen operates as a single entity. In its promotional literature, including its web site, Andersen-Worldwide markets itself as "one firm," "a single worldwide operating structure" that "think[s] and act[s] as one."

27. Andersen-Worldwide is the instrumentality through which the "one firm" concept becomes reality. It achieves this in four distinct ways.

(a) Partner Overlap: Andersen-Worldwide is a partnership made up of more than 2,000 individuals from 390 offices in 84 different countries worldwide. Simultaneously, the partners of Andersen-Worldwide also are partners (or the equivalent) in the entities that make up those offices. Thus, all of those offices are managed by individuals who are both local partners (or the equivalent) and partners of Andersen-Worldwide.

(b) Global Setting of Professional Standards: Andersen-Worldwide purports to establish the professional standards and principles under which its offices operate. Andersen-Worldwide's international offices enter into a standard agreement with Andersen-Worldwide under which they agree to be bound by those professional standards and principles. An office of Andersen-Worldwide that breaches the agreement is subject to removal from the organization. The Assurance Professional Standards Group has firm-wide responsibility for providing guidance on the professional standards to be followed by Andersen-Worldwide's offices.

(c) Sharing of Costs and Profits: Andersen-Worldwide coordinates the sharing of costs and allocation of revenues and profits among its partners and its offices around the world.

(d) Infrastructure and Administration: Andersen-Worldwide handles all borrowing on behalf of its international offices, and maintains the financial records, payroll and employee and health benefits for those international offices as well. All of Andersen's offices also share global computer operations, a worldwide tax structure and training facilities.

28. By establishing a legal, financial and administrative infrastructure, Andersen-Worldwide enables each of its offices around the world to function as, and to appear to clients as, an extension of a single, global entity.

29. Andersen-Worldwide manages, directs and controls its international offices in two overlapping groups: by practice areas (also known as "lines of service") and by geographic location.

30. Each practice group is managed by a global practice director who oversees, directs and controls the operations of each practice group worldwide. Regional practice directors report to the global practice director and manage, direct and control the practice group within their regions. The global practice director and managing partner for the audit practice group of Andersen-Worldwide is C.E. Andrews, a United States-based partner.

31. In addition, Andersen-Worldwide groups its offices into several geographic regions and assigns a managing partner to each region.

32. Andersen-Worldwide has grown to be one of the world's largest accounting firms. The Andersen-Worldwide organization employs over 77,000 professionals in fields such as accounting, taxation, business consulting, corporate finance, risk management and business fraud investigation. Andersen-Worldwide's global revenues for the fiscal year ending August 31, 2001 totaled more than $9.3 billion.

33. Andersen-US is dominant within Andersen-Worldwide. Andersen-Worldwide is largely controlled by its U.S.-resident partners, who also are partners of Andersen-US. Approximately half of the partners of Andersen-Worldwide are also partners of Andersen-US. Likewise, approximately half of the partners of Andersen-US are partners of Andersen-Worldwide.

34. The engagement partner on the Sunbeam audits, Harlow, and the concurring partner on those audits, William Pruitt, are partners of both Andersen-US and Andersen-Worldwide. The engagement partner on the Sunbeam restatement, Donald Denkhaus, who as Audit Division Head also was manager of Andersen's audit practice for the entire South Florida region, also is a partner of both Andersen-US and Andersen-Worldwide.

35. In addition to overlapping partners, Andersen-Worldwide and Andersen-US share officers in common as well. For example, the Chief Executive Officer and Managing Partner of Andersen-Worldwide is Joseph Berardino, who also is the Chief Executive Officer and Managing Partner of Andersen-US. In addition, Andrew Pincus is the General Counsel of both Andersen-US and Andersen-Worldwide. The Andersen-Worldwide regional managing partner for North America is Terry E. Hatchett, who also is the country managing partner for Andersen-US.

36. Andersen-Worldwide and Andersen-US share more than partners and officers – they share the same address. In its promotional literature, Andersen-Worldwide states that its headquarters are located at 33 West Monroe Street, Chicago, Illinois 60603. That is the same address as the headquarters of Andersen-US.

37. Andersen-Worldwide and its affiliates demonstrate the "one firm" concept not only through their actions relative to the outside world, but also internally within the Andersen organization itself.

38. The components of the Andersen organization ignore corporate formalities in referring to themselves or to each other. Documents by Andersen-US often bear the insignia and logos of Andersen-Worldwide, including "Andersen Worldwide," "Andersen," and "Arthur Andersen Co., SC". In its promotional literature, Andersen uses the names "Andersen Worldwide," "Andersen," and "Arthur Andersen LLP" interchangeably. In addition, Andersen sometimes uses only the name "Andersen" and does not differentiate between Andersen-Worldwide and its offices around the globe. Some promotional literature has stated, "Arthur Andersen will now be known simply as Andersen." Indeed, when Joseph F. Berardino appeared before Congress in December 2001, he supplied written testimony that identified him as "Managing Partner – Chief Executive Officer, Andersen" (emphasis added).

39. Andersen took the same approach in work relating to Sunbeam. The auditors used Andersen-Worldwide and Andersen-US stationery and logos interchangeably, or otherwise used the identifier "Arthur Andersen," on internal correspondence, on correspondence with Sunbeam and on presentation materials for Sunbeam. Top partners responsible for the Sunbeam audits and restatement were partners of both Andersen-US and Andersen-Worldwide.

40. Andersen's audits and restatement work for Sunbeam illustrate the "one firm" concept in action. Sunbeam was a multinational corporation with operations in Canada, Mexico, Venezuela, Hong Kong and Europe. The engagements required the participation of auditors from each of those countries and numerous American cities. Harlow, on behalf of both Andersen-US and Andersen-Worldwide, developed work plans that he circulated to Andersen-Canada, Andersen-Hong Kong, Andersen-Mexico, Andersen-Venezuela and Andersen-UK. Those offices worked together with Harlow and others to complete the tasks outlined in the plan, and sent their work product to Harlow for inclusion in an Andersen Worldwide Management Letter.

SUBSTANTIVE ALLEGATIONS

A. Sunbeam's New Management Team (1996-1998).

41. In the years leading up to 1996, Sunbeam had experienced increasing financial difficulties and growing losses. In an effort to remedy the situation, Sunbeam's board of directors undertook a change in Sunbeam's management in July 1996. The management team the board brought in was headed by Albert Dunlap, a person who had earned a reputation as a turnaround specialist through brief terms as Chief Executive Officer of a number of publicly traded corporations. Based on his penchant for rapidly slashing personnel and closing plants to achieve quick turnaround results, Dunlap is widely known as "Chainsaw Al."

B. Dunlap Arrives at Sunbeam and Initiates Restructuring.

42. Sunbeam hired Dunlap on July 18, 1996 and installed him as its Chairman and Chief Executive Officer. Immediately after joining Sunbeam, Dunlap hired Russell A. Kersh as Sunbeam's principal financial officer. Kersh had been associated with Dunlap for over 15 years, and had served as a senior executive during various Dunlap turnaround engagements.

Dunlap also brought in other hand-picked executives to make up his senior management team. He hired Donald R. Uzzi as Vice President, Marketing and Product Development. Uzzi later became Executive Vice President, Consumer Products Worldwide. Dunlap also hired Lee B. Griffith as Vice President, Sales. Dunlap retained Robert J. Gluck, formerly Controller of Sunbeam, as Sunbeam's Principal Accounting Officer.

43. Dunlap and the senior members of his management team entered into lucrative employment agreements that gave them a strong financial incentive to cause Sunbeam's stock price to increase and then to sell the company quickly. All stood to make many millions of dollars if that happened. Andersen was fully aware of those audit risks and the fact that a disproportionate share of those executives' potential earnings was dependent on stock options or restricted shares of stock.

44. In addition to the personal financial incentives deriving from his employment contract, Dunlap also had his reputation as a turnaround specialist to protect and advance. Dunlap used his reputation as a specialist in turning around troubled companies to make aggressive promises about Sunbeam's future performance and support false and misleading announcements of record performance -- results that were rendered credible because Andersen had certified Sunbeam's financial statements.

C. Andersen Is Recruited to Help Create the Illusion of a Successful Restructuring.

45. To lay the foundation for the appearance of a successful turnaround in 1997, Sunbeam's new senior management team decided to take improper expenses and record unjustified accounting writeoffs in 1996, thus lowering the benchmark for measuring their ultimate "success" in turning Sunbeam around.

46. Dunlap and his team needed the help of Sunbeam's auditors in approving the improper accounting tactics or the scheme would have had no chance of success. Andersen's Phillip Harlow was such a willing participant. Harlow knew of Dunlap's reputation as a fast-moving turnaround specialist who was quick to fire anyone who did not advance his agenda. Harlow also knew that in other highly publicized turnaround engagements, Dunlap had employed Coopers & Lybrand, one of Andersen's major competitors, as a financial consultant and independent auditor. Consistent with past practice, one of the first things Dunlap did after joining Sunbeam was to hire Coopers & Lybrand as a financial advisor with the lucrative assignment of planning Sunbeam's massive restructuring, which led to the firing of nearly half of Sunbeam's 12,000 employees. Andersen – and especially Harlow – were keenly aware that this did not bode well for the future of Andersen's relationship with Sunbeam.

47. Sunbeam had been a major client of Andersen's for many years and Sunbeam had paid Andersen over $1 million in fees for its 1995 audit alone. Harlow had been the Sunbeam engagement partner since 1993. When Dunlap took control of Sunbeam and hired Coopers & Lybrand for the restructuring, Harlow became concerned that Dunlap would fire Andersen as the company's independent auditor and hire Coopers & Lybrand instead. Indeed, Harlow was so concerned about the possible loss of Sunbeam as a client that he agreed to a 30% reduction in Andersen's fee for 1996. A reduction in audit fees was simply one price Andersen had to pay in order to keep Sunbeam as a client.

D. Andersen's Early Assistance in the Scheme.

48. When Harlow began work on the audit of Sunbeam's 1996 financial statements, Harlow and Andersen learned the true price of keeping Sunbeam as an audit client. In addition to reducing its audit fees, Andersen was required to accept the improper and misleading accounting treatments used by Sunbeam's senior management to create the illusion of a successful turnaround. In the end, Andersen's desire to retain a valuable client overrode any sense of duty or professionalism. To keep Sunbeam as an Andersen client, Harlow and Andersen ignored numerous accounting improprieties Andersen knew had been employed. Even when Harlow expressly identified certain of management's bogus accounting treatments, he ultimately acquiesced in management's refusal to correct the improprieties, and Andersen issued unqualified or "clean" audit opinions. Andersen did so despite the harm it knew would be inflicted on all who relied upon Andersen's audit opinions.

1. Improper Accounting Practices In 1996.

49. As set forth below, Andersen and Harlow permitted management to employ numerous accounting practices in 1996 that did not comply with GAAP.

50. One of the accounting practices permitted by Andersen and Harlow was the creation of a massive $338 million non-GAAP reserve for restructuring charges. Although certain types of restructuring reserves may be proper, the reserves created by management included improper reserves and accruals, excessive write-downs and prematurely recognized expenses that were not proper restructuring reserves under GAAP. Those intentionally inflated reserves served two purposes. First, because the reserves were charged as an expense against income, they allowed Sunbeam to overstate its 1996 loss, and lower the benchmark for measuring the eventual success of Sunbeam's turnaround. Second, the inflated restructuring reserves created a "cookie-jar" of overstated liabilities on Sunbeam's books that Dunlap could reduce in the years after 1996, purportedly to correct the overstatements, and at the same time increase income in the year of the corrections. Those adjustments, too, fostered the illusion of a successful turnaround.

51. One of the largest components of the Sunbeam "cookie-jar" reserves permitted by Andersen and Harlow was millions of dollars in items that benefitted future activities, and hence were not properly part of the restructuring reserve. Those items included costs of redesigning product packaging, costs of relocating employees and equipment, bonuses to be paid to employees who were told that they were being laid off but were asked to stay temporarily, advertising expenses and certain consulting fees. Note 2 to the audited 1996 financial statements falsely described the restructuring charges as follows:

In conjunction with the implementation of the restructuring and growth plan, the Company recorded a pre-tax special charge to earnings of approximately $337.6 million in the fourth quarter of 1996. This amount is allocated as follows in the accompanying Consolidated Statement of Operations: $154.9 million to Restructuring, Impairment and Other Costs as further described below; $92.3 million to Cost of Goods Sold related principally to inventory write-downs from the reduction in SKU's and costs of inventory liquidation programs; $42.5 million to Selling, General and Administrative expenses principally for increases in environmental and litigation reserves (see Notes 12 and 13) and other reserve categories; and the estimated pre-tax loss on the divestiture of the Company's furniture business of approximately $47.9 million.

As Sunbeam's eventual restatement of its financial statements showed, those reserves were materially inflated and were not recorded in accordance with GAAP.

52. In connection with the audit of Sunbeam's 1996 year-end financial statements, Harlow discovered that certain components of Sunbeam's restructuring reserves were not being recorded in compliance with GAAP and proposed that the company reverse several of the accounting entries establishing those reserves. As Harlow told Kersh and Gluck, under GAAP, entries that benefitted Sunbeam's future results were not considered to be proper restructuring charges in 1996. But Kersh and Gluck refused to reverse those items. Instead of standing firm, as professional ethics required, Harlow turned a blind eye to his duties as an independent auditor and caused Andersen to acquiesce in management's refusal to reverse those non-GAAP reserves. Those improper reserves caused Sunbeam's 1996 audited financial statements to be materially false and misleading.

53. In connection with the 1996 audited financial statements, Andersen and Harlow also permitted management to create an excessive $12 million reserve for a lawsuit alleging that Sunbeam was liable for a portion of the cleanup costs for a hazardous waste site. In fact, that reserve overstated Sunbeam's estimated liability by at least 100%, and provided Sunbeam with an inflated reserve that could be drawn down to boost income figures artificially in later periods.

54. Andersen and Harlow also permitted Sunbeam to write down its household products inventory in 1996. In connection with the restructuring, Dunlap's management team planned to eliminate half of Sunbeam's product lines and to liquidate Sunbeam's inventory of eliminated product lines at a substantial discount. Notwithstanding that the change affected only half of Sunbeam's product lines, Andersen and Harlow permitted management to reduce the cost basis for Sunbeam's entire inventory of household products at 1996 year end, without distinction between eliminated and continuing product lines (including inventories that were later sold in the ordinary course of business). As a result, the balance sheet value of Sunbeam's inventory at year-end 1996 was understated by approximately $2 million, and Sunbeam overstated its 1996 loss by the same amount. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that (a) Sunbeam had understated the carrying value of its household products inventory, (b) the understatement had contributed to the material misstatement of Sunbeam's financial statements at year-end 1996 and (c) the understatement would improperly increase Sunbeam's income during 1997 when household products were sold at artificially inflated margins.

55. Andersen and Harlow also permitted management improperly to recognize $2.3 million in 1997 advertising expenses and related costs as a 1996 expense. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that the accounting treatment would contribute to the material overstatement of Sunbeam's 1996 year-end loss and exaggerate Sunbeam's so-called turnaround by the same amount in 1997.

56. Finally, Andersen and Harlow permitted Sunbeam to manipulate its 1996 liabilities for cooperative advertising. In addition to buying national advertising to create demand for its products, Sunbeam funded a portion of its retailers' costs of running local promotions. As required by GAAP, Sunbeam accrued its estimated liabilities for such "cooperative advertising," and then charged its expenses in relation to its sales revenue during the year. At year-end 1996, Sunbeam set its cooperative advertising accrual at $21.8 million, an amount that was approximately 25% higher than the prior year's accrual amount, without any basis for the increase. Harlow learned of the inflated accrual for cooperative advertising in connection with Andersen's audit of Sunbeam's year-end 1996 financial statements and discussed it with Kersh and Gluck. Nevertheless, Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts concerning the lack of a proper basis for the accrual and the likelihood that the excess accrual would be released into income in early 1997. In fact, $5.8 million of that excessive accrual was used (without disclosure) to inflate Sunbeam's 1997 income.

2. Andersen's 1996 Unqualified Audit Opinion.

57. In March 1997, Andersen issued an unqualified audit opinion regarding Sunbeam's 1996 financial statements and authorized the inclusion of its audit opinion in Sunbeam's 1996 Form 10-K filed with the SEC. Andersen's opinion stated:

We conducted our audits in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards. Those standards require that we plan and perform the audit to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the financial statements are free of material misstatement. An audit includes examining, on a test basis, evidence supporting the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements. An audit also includes assessing the accounting principles used and significant estimates made by management, as well as evaluating the overall financial statement presentation. We believe that our audits provide a reasonable basis for our opinion.

In our opinion, the financial statements . . . present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of Sunbeam Corporation and subsidiaries as of December 31, 1995 and December 29, 1996, and the results of their operations and their cash flows for each of the three fiscal years in the period ended December 29, 1996 in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles.

58. Andersen's unqualified audit opinion was false in two material respects.

First, the financial statements Andersen audited did not "fairly" present Sunbeam's financial position in conformity with GAAP, as it represented. Second, Andersen did not, as it claimed, conduct its audit in accordance with GAAS.

59. In all, the 1996 financial statements audited by Andersen were materially false and misleading, and overstated Sunbeam's loss for 1996. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that (a) Andersen's unqualified audit opinion was incorrect, (b) Sunbeam's financial statements were materially false and misleading and not in conformity with GAAP and (c) Andersen had failed to perform an audit in accordance with GAAS.

E. Andersen Assists Sunbeam as a Financial Adviser in Sunbeam's Purchase of Coleman Company.

60. During 1997, Sunbeam's senior management continued to use improper accounting to create the illusion that a successful turnaround was underway at Sunbeam. By maintaining that illusion, Dunlap's management team hoped to position Sunbeam for a quick sale. However, the illusion proved too convincing to the market, and the price of Sunbeam stock was driven so high that no willing buyer could be found. Management was aware that, absent a sale, it would be unable to sustain the appearance of a successful turnaround. Therefore, in late 1997, Sunbeam sought to acquire other businesses, in order to consolidate their results with Sunbeam's and thereby continue to obscure Sunbeam's past accounting improprieties. Once again, Sunbeam management required Andersen's assistance in perpetuating the deception.

61. In early December 1997, officers and directors of Sunbeam met with various officers of Coleman Company regarding a potential combination with Sunbeam. After that initial overture was rejected by Coleman-Parent, Dunlap's representative returned with another proposal in January 1998. At that point, Coleman-Parent indicated it was willing to discuss a potential transaction.

62. On January 28, 1998, Sunbeam announced its financial results for 1997, reporting total revenues of $1.168 billion, and total earnings from continuing operations of $189 million (or $1.41 per share). Sunbeam's announcement coincided with Andersen's purported completion of the field work for its audit of Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements, although its work continued for more than a month.

63. On February 3, 1998, Harlow met with key officers of Sunbeam to discuss the acquisition of Coleman Company and its financial impact on Sunbeam. By that time, Harlow knew that Sunbeam had utilized improper accounting to achieve its 1997 results. Harlow also knew Coleman-Parent would insist on reviewing Andersen's 1997 audit opinion before agreeing to consummate any transaction in which the consideration included hundreds of millions of dollars in Sunbeam stock.

64. On February 20, 1998, Andersen agreed to act as a Sunbeam financial advisor and perform financial due diligence in connection with Sunbeam's acquisition of Coleman Company and two other companies, First Alert, Inc. and Signature Brands USA, Inc. In agreeing to undertake that assignment, Andersen became an active member of the team working to assist Sunbeam in acquiring Coleman Company.

65. During the latter weeks of February 1998, representatives of Sunbeam and Coleman-Parent met to negotiate the details of a potential acquisition of Coleman Company and to prepare a proposed structure for that transaction.

66. Between February 23 and 25, 1998, representatives of Andersen, including Harlow, conducted due diligence concerning Coleman Company and the other target companies on behalf of Sunbeam. During that period, Andersen representatives participated in various meetings with officers and consultants of Coleman Company. At no point, however, did Andersen's representatives suggest that Sunbeam's financial statements were materially false and misleading. Meanwhile, Sunbeam worked on negotiating the terms of its acquisition of Coleman Company.

67. On February 27, 1998, Harlow met with Sunbeam executives in New York to discuss Andersen's due diligence. That afternoon, Sunbeam and Coleman-Parent reached an agreement for the sale of Coleman Company.

68. As part of the Coleman Company acquisition agreement, Sunbeam represented and warranted that all of its filings with the SEC, which included the 1996 financial statements audited by Andersen, were accurate and not misleading, and that they would continue to be accurate and not misleading as of the transaction's closing date, which was expected to be several weeks later. Sunbeam also represented that its audited financial statements were prepared in accordance with GAAP, and that at the time of the closing of the transaction, its representation would continue to be true and correct. Andersen was fully aware of those representations and warranties when the merger agreement was executed on February 27, 1998.

69. As a result of Andersen's involvement in the Coleman Company acquisition transaction, it knew that Coleman-Parent would rely on Sunbeam's audited financial statements (1) in deciding to close the transaction, and (2) in accepting 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock and other consideration in return for its stake in Coleman Company. Moreover, as an independent certified public accountant, Andersen had a duty to disclose to Coleman-Parent that Sunbeam's audited financial statements in fact were neither accurate nor reliable. Notwithstanding that Andersen had met with representatives of Coleman-Parent and its auditors during its due diligence review, Andersen remained mute regarding the true financial condition of Sunbeam and the improprieties buried in Sunbeam's audited financial statements.

F. Andersen Issues its 1997 Audit Report.

70. In the first week of March 1998, shortly after the agreement for Sunbeam's purchase of Coleman Company was signed, but before the transaction closed, Andersen updated its audit work to reflect Sunbeam's acquisitions. That work was done by the same individuals who also were working as consultants on the Sunbeam acquisitions. The three acquisitions were specifically described in Note 14 to the audited financial statements. The description included the fact that Sunbeam was paying for the Coleman Company shares with Sunbeam common stock as well as cash and assumption of debt. Andersen then rendered an unqualified audit opinion for Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements. With Andersen's express consent, management included that opinion in Sunbeam's 1997 Form 10-K filed with the SEC.

1. Andersen's 1997 Unqualified Audit Report.

71. In its opinion concerning Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements, Andersen stated:

We conducted our audits in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards. Those standards require that we plan and perform the audit to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the financial statements are free of material misstatement. An audit includes examining, on a test basis, evidence supporting the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements. An audit also includes assessing the accounting principles used and significant estimates made by management, as well as evaluating the overall financial statement presentation. We believe that our audits provide a reasonable basis for our opinion.

In our opinion, the financial statements . . . present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of Sunbeam Corporation and subsidiaries as of December 29, 1996 and December 28, 1997, and the results of its operations and its cash flows for each of the three fiscal years in the period ended December 28, 1997 in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles.

72. Andersen's 1997 audit opinion was false in two material respects. First, the financial statements Andersen audited did not "fairly" present Sunbeam's financial position in conformity with GAAP, as it represented. Second, Andersen did not, as it claimed, conduct its audit in accordance with GAAS.

73. In all, the 1997 financial statements audited by Andersen were materially false and misleading in that they overstated Sunbeam's operating income for the year by 50%. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that (a) Andersen's unqualified audit opinion was incorrect, (b) Sunbeam's financial statements were materially false and misleading and not in conformity with GAAP and (c) Andersen had failed to perform an audit in accordance with GAAS.

2. Improper Accounting Practices In 1997.

74. Harlow was well aware of the potential for fraud and irregularities in Sunbeam's 1997 books, including the risk that Sunbeam management would attempt to claim profits and revenue on transactions before the earnings process was completed. Harlow specifically advised Andersen's foreign offices (including Andersen-Canada, Andersen-Hong Kong, Andersen-Mexico, Andersen-Venezuela and Andersen-UK), for example, that Dunlap had made promises to the public regarding earnings-per-share to be attained in 1997, and that management had a vested interest in achieving the promised earnings levels because management's primary form of compensation was based on the company's stock price. Harlow also noted the presence of the possibility of a third party purchase of the company's stock or assets.

75. Despite having specifically noted key reasons to employ heightened scrutiny in the 1997 audit, Harlow and Andersen permitted Sunbeam to engage in improper "earnings management" practices designed to achieve exactly the result Harlow had warned the Andersen audit team to watch for.

76. One of the most flagrant accounting abuses Andersen and Harlow permitted in 1997 was to allow Sunbeam to record a profit on a sham sale of its warranty and spare parts business to its spare parts provider, EPI Printers, Inc. Prior to 1997, EPI satisfied spare parts and warranty requests of Sunbeam customers on a fee basis. To raise additional revenue at year end 1997, however, Sunbeam entered into a sham sale of the warranty and spare parts inventories already in EPI's warehouse. As a result of the transaction, management fraudulently recognized millions of dollars of phony sales and profits in 1997.

77. The problem with the EPI transaction was that the transaction was not a sale at all, for at least three reasons. First, there was never a final agreement between Sunbeam and EPI. The closest the parties ever came to a meeting of the minds was the execution of a mere "agreement to agree." Second, by its terms, the proposed sale was to terminate on January 23, 1998, with no payment obligation on the part of EPI, absent a subsequent agreement between Sunbeam and EPI on the value of the inventory. In other words, the sale could be completely unwound just after year-end without EPI ever having paid a cent. Third, Sunbeam had agreed as part of the proposed sale to pay certain fees to EPI and to guarantee a 5% profit to EPI on the eventual resale of the inventory. In essence, even after the proposed sale, EPI remained a contractor compensated by Sunbeam on a fee basis for its services. In sum, the relationship between EPI and Sunbeam was not fundamentally altered by the purported "sale."

78. Harlow became aware of the true nature of the EPI transaction and raised it with management as part of Andersen's 1997 year-end audit. Harlow proposed that Sunbeam reverse the accounting entries reflecting the revenue recognition for that transaction, having concluded that the profit guarantee and the indeterminate value of the contract rendered revenue recognition inconsistent with GAAP. Simply stated, there was no revenue to recognize because the transaction was illusory. Kersh and Gluck refused to reverse the transaction. Instead of refusing to lend Andersen's name to management's fraudulent revenue recognition, Harlow again acquiesced in management's actions. As a result, Sunbeam's 1997 audited financial statements reflect almost $10 million of phony profit on the sham EPI transaction.

79. The EPI transaction raised a clear red flag that should have – and must have – alerted Andersen to the need for greater scrutiny regarding all of Sunbeam's revenue recognition decisions. At a minimum, Andersen should have been on guard as to all items

Harlow previously identified as proposed audit adjustments (but which Harlow eventually acquiesced in), and any previously recognized improper items that were ultimately dismissed as "immaterial."

80. Another 1997 revenue inflation scheme permitted by Andersen and Harlow was Sunbeam's use of improper "bill-and-hold" transactions. A bill-and-hold transaction is a transaction in which the seller bills a customer for a purchase while holding the merchandise for later delivery. During 1997, Dunlap's management team offered financial incentives to various customers to make purchases earlier than they would otherwise have done so. Management then proposed that Sunbeam hold the merchandise until the normal time for delivery.

81. Under certain limited circumstances, bill-and-hold transactions may be permitted for revenue recognition purposes. However, bill-and-hold transactions must meet specific stringent accounting criteria satisfying GAAP. The relevant criteria include, among others: a requirement that the buyer, not the seller, requested a sale on a bill-and-hold basis; that the buyer had a substantial business purpose for ordering the goods on a bill-and-hold basis; and that risks and rewards of ownership passed to the buyer at the time of the bill-and-hold sale.

82. Bill-and-hold transactions improperly added in excess of $29 million to Sunbeam's 1997 sales and $4.5 million to income. In the course of the audit of Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements, Andersen and Harlow discovered that the purported bill-and-hold customers had not requested the bill-and-hold treatment, and that in numerous cases involving rights of return "the risks of ownership and legal title" were not actually "passed to the customer." Nevertheless, Andersen negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that bill-and-hold transactions did not satisfy the required revenue recognition criteria. Ultimately, Andersen acquiesced in Sunbeam's decisions to recognize revenue for all of those non-GAAP sales in 1997, and to misdescribe the company's bill-and-hold practices in the financial statements as customer-driven legitimate sales.

83. Another income inflation tactic Sunbeam management used in 1997 was to decrease the inflated 1996 reserves to create the illusion of 1997 income. By decreasing the reserves in 1997, management increased Sunbeam's 1997 income by almost $5 million. In connection with Andersen's year-end audit of Sunbeam's financial statements, Harlow discovered that tactic and concluded that it was improper. Harlow proposed reversing management's misuse of the reserves, but management refused to do so. Rather than insisting that the adjustments be made, Andersen gave Sunbeam a pass, and permitted the entries. In doing so, Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that the improper accounting materially distorted Sunbeam's reported results of operations for 1997.

84. Another of Sunbeam's 1997 accounting gimmicks was to record income from non-recurring events as ordinary income. In connection with Andersen's work on the 1997 audit, Harlow learned that management had arranged for the sale of deeply discounted and obsolete inventory during 1997, creating $19 million in non-recurring revenue. Although the recognition of that revenue was permitted under GAAP, Sunbeam was required to disclose in its financial statements that the income from the sale was a non-recurring event. Sunbeam failed to do so. Notwithstanding that material omission, Andersen certified Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements.

85. In addition, during Andersen's 1997 audit, Harlow proposed adjustments to reverse $2.9 million related to a Sunbeam inventory overvaluation and $563,000 in additional items. Management again refused to make appropriate adjustments, and Andersen and Harlow acquiesced in the refusal to reverse those errors. In doing so, Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that those items contributed to the misstatement of Sunbeam's 1997 reported results of operations.

86. International sales represented a significant proportion of Sunbeam's overall income from sales. However, part of Sunbeam's reported income from international sales was artificially inflated. Several of Sunbeam's foreign subsidiaries engaged in guaranteed sales that could not have been booked under applicable accounting principles because they included an unlimited right to return unsold merchandise and because the amount of future returns on such sales could not reasonably be estimated.

87. Sunbeam's Hong Kong subsidiary recorded sales revenue of $8.6 million from various guaranteed sales made during the fourth quarter of 1997. However, that revenue should not have been recognized because sales were made with an unlimited right of return and because the amount of future returns could not reasonably be estimated. Indeed, in 1998 much of the product "sold" in 1997 was returned. Nevertheless, Andersen allowed those sales to be booked in 1997.

88. Sunbeam's Canadian subsidiary similarly engaged in guaranteed sales with an unlimited right of return. The revenue from those sales revenue could not have been recognized because the amount of future returns could not reasonably be estimated. Nevertheless, Andersen permitted those sales to be booked.

89. Sunbeam's Mexican subsidiary engaged in $900,000 in bill-and-hold transactions that should not have been recognized as income until 1998. However, Andersen permitted the full amount of such sales to be booked in 1997. Harlow and Andersen identified a total of $2.9 million in adjustments relating to inventory overvaluation that were proposed to

Sunbeam. Management refused to make those adjustments; Andersen and Harlow nevertheless issued clean audit opinions. In addition, the financial statements for Sunbeam's Mexico operations failed to include an expense for the profit sharing obligations of that business, an adjustment that reduced the earnings of that business by more than $3 million when Sunbeam later restated its 1997 results.

90. Sunbeam's Venezuela subsidiary also improperly valued inventory. Its books reflected purchased raw materials that were held at various suppliers. Andersen failed to confirm that the booked amounts represented materials actually in the possession of suppliers. If Andersen had done so, Andersen would have discovered that the materials did not exist. Nevertheless, Andersen permitted the full amount to be included on Sunbeam's financial statements.

91. In the end, Andersen's 1997 audit opinion certified financial statements that reported Sunbeam's income to be $186 million, much of which was improper under GAAP. The overstatements included in all over $90 million of improper net income including, without limitation, approximately $10 million from the sham sale to EPI, approximately $4.5 million from non-GAAP bill-and-hold sales, approximately $35 million in income derived from the use of non-GAAP reserves and accruals taken at year-end 1996 and approximately $6 million from improper revenue recognition.

92. As Andersen and Harlow knew, Coleman-Parent relied on Sunbeam's report of $186 million in income in deciding to close the sale of its interest in Coleman Company. If Andersen had not issued a materially false and misleading audit report, and instead had complied with GAAP and GAAS, Sunbeam's 1997 operating income would have been approximately half of what Andersen certified in the financial statements.

G. Coleman-Parent Relies on Andersen's Unqualified Audit Opinions and Closes the Sale to Sunbeam.

93. The merger agreement signed by Coleman-Parent on February 27, 1998 provided that a condition precedent to Coleman-Parent's obligation to close the transaction was the absence of any event, change, or development that would have a material adverse effect on the business, results of operation, or financial condition of Sunbeam. The closing also was conditioned on the absence of any material misrepresentation or omissions in Sunbeam's SEC filings, including Andersen's 1996 and 1997 audit reports in the Form 10-Ks. If Andersen had not been negligent or fraudulent in performing its audits, and had issued qualified or adverse reports exposing the falsity of Sunbeam's financial statements, Coleman-Parent would have been put on notice of an adverse material change affecting Sunbeam before closing, and of a material misstatement in Sunbeam's SEC filings. Coleman-Parent's obligation to close the transaction with Sunbeam would have been discharged by the failure of a condition precedent, and Coleman-Parent never would have suffered losses in excess of $600 million. Coleman-Parent directly relied on Andersen's 1996 and 1997 audit reports when it decided to close the transaction with Sunbeam and to accept 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock as consideration for selling its interest in Coleman Company.

94. Andersen was fully aware of the terms and conditions of the Coleman Company transaction and of Coleman-Parent's anticipated and actual reliance upon Andersen's unqualified 1996 and 1997 audit opinions.

95. On March 30, 1998, unaware of the falsity of Sunbeam's financial statements and Andersen's audit reports, Coleman-Parent closed the transaction with Sunbeam and accepted 14.1 million shares of what turned out to be essentially worthless Sunbeam common stock for the sale of its interest in Coleman Company.

H. Andersen's Improper Accounting and Misrepresentations Are Revealed, Causing the Market Value of Sunbeam's Stock to Plummet.

96. Almost immediately after the consummation of Coleman-Parent's sale of Coleman Company to Sunbeam, Sunbeam's facade of financial health began to crumble.

97. In an April 3, 1998 conference call with securities analysts, Sunbeam revealed that sales for the first quarter of 1998 were 5% below reported sales for the same period of the prior year. Only two weeks earlier, on March 19, 1998, Sunbeam had issued a press release in which it announced that sales for the first quarter of 1998 were "expected to exceed" sales for the same period of the prior year.

98. On June 6, 1998, an article was published in Barron's that raised serious questions regarding Sunbeam's apparent success under Dunlap, and suggested it was the result of "accounting gimmickry." On June 15, 1998, Sunbeam's Board announced that it had removed Dunlap as Chairman and CEO.

99. On June 25, 1998, Andersen withheld its consent for use of its 1997 audit opinion in a registration statement that was to have been filed with the SEC.

100. On June 30, 1998, Sunbeam announced that the Audit Committee of its Board of Directors would conduct an inquiry into the accuracy of its 1997 financial statements. The Audit Committee subsequently retained Deloitte & Touche LLP to assist in the review, in addition to Andersen. Sunbeam stated that "pending the completion of its review, its 1997 financial statements and the report of Arthur Andersen LLP should not be relied upon." Sunbeam added that the review "could result in a restatement of the 1997 financial statements and the first quarter 1998 Form 10-Q."

101. On August 6, 1998, Sunbeam announced that its Audit Committee had determined that Sunbeam would be required to restate its audited financial statements for 1997 and possibly for 1996, as well as its unaudited financial statements for the first quarter of 1998.

102. On November 12, 1998, Sunbeam released its restated 1996 and 1997 financial results, again audited by Andersen. The restated 1996 financial statements reported operating losses for 1996 that were approximately $40 million less than originally reported, losses from continuing operations that were approximately $26 million less than previously reported and net losses that were approximately $20 million less than previously reported.

103. The restated 1997 financial statements reported operating earnings for 1997 that were approximately $95 million less than originally reported, earnings from continuing operations that were approximately $70 million less than previously reported and net earnings that were approximately $70 million less than previously reported. The new operating income figure for 1997 was approximately 50% less than the amount Andersen previously certified.

104. In the wake of Dunlap's firing, Sunbeam's board of directors asked members of Coleman-Parent's management to assume key positions within Sunbeam in order to carry out damage control and attempt to salvage the value remaining in the company. New management was unable to overcome the devastating effects of the manipulation and distortion of Sunbeam's business.

105. On February 5, 2001, Sunbeam filed a voluntary petition for Chapter 11.

106. As a result of having been fraudulently induced into exchanging its ownership of Coleman Company for over 14 million shares of Sunbeam stock, Coleman-Parent has suffered direct damages in excess of $600,000,000.

VIOLATIONS OF GAAP AND GAAS IN ANDERSEN'S 1996 AND 1997 AUDITS

107. The objectives of financial reporting are to provide information that is useful in investment and credit decisions, information that is useful in assessing cash flow prospects and information about enterprise resources, claims to those resources and changes in them. (See "Objectives of Financial Reporting by Business Enterprises," Statement of Financial Accounting Concepts No. 1 (Financial Accounting Standards Board, November 1978).) In order to minimize misinterpretation of financial statements, the accounting profession has developed sets of standards regarding financial reporting and auditing practice that are generally accepted and universally practiced. Those standards are known as GAAP and GAAS. The development of common standards for auditing and financial reporting has provided businesspeople and investors with a valuable frame of reference in evaluating the financial condition of enterprises.

108. Auditors know they must adhere to GAAP and GAAS, or the standards would cease to have any meaning. Consistent with the objectives of the profession in developing those standards, the public has come to understand the importance of GAAP and GAAS in enhancing the reliability of audited financial statements. As a result, when an auditing firm represents that it has conducted an audit of a company in accordance with GAAS, and opines that such company's financial statements present the company's financial condition fairly in conformity with GAAP, readers of those financial statements have the right to rely on the integrity of those financial statements.

109. In auditing Sunbeam in 1996 and 1997, and in issuing unqualified opinions regarding Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements, Andersen and Harlow did not adhere to the standards of the profession. Although Andersen's audit opinions stated that the firm had conducted its audits of Sunbeam in accordance with GAAS, and based on those audits had concluded that Sunbeam's financial statements presented the company's financial condition fairly in conformity with GAAP, that simply was not true.

A. Sunbeam's Audited 1996 and 1997 Financial Statements Were Not In Conformity With GAAP.

110. As alleged below, Sunbeam's audited 1996 and 1997 financial statements failed to conform to GAAP in numerous respects.

111. Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements, certified by Andersen, failed to conform to GAAP because those financial statements did not comply with the accounting principle of reliability. That principle requires that the quality of reported information assures that the information is reasonably free from error or bias and faithfully represents what it purports to represent. FASB Statement of Financial Accounting Concepts No. 2, §§ 58-71; APB Statement No. 4, §§ 109, 138, 189.

112. The financial statements also failed to comply with the accounting principle of completeness, which requires that financial information be complete and that it validly represent the underlying event and conditions. FASB Statement of Financial Accounting Concepts No. 2, §§ 79, 80; APB Statement No. 4, § 94.

113. The financial statements also failed to comply with the accounting principle of conservatism, which requires that a conservative approach be taken in the accounting for transactions and the early recognition of unfavorable events. FASB Statement of Financial Accounting Concepts No. 2, §§ 91-97; APB Statements No. 9, §§ 35, 71.

114. The financial statements also failed to comply with the accounting principle of neutrality, which requires that there should be an absence in reported information of bias intended to attain a predetermined result. FASB Statement of Financial Accounting Concepts No. 2, § 98.

115. The financial statements also failed to comply with the accounting principle of relevance, which requires that reported information should have the capacity to make a difference in a decision by helping users to form predictions about the outcomes of past, present and future events. FASB Statement of Financial Accounting Concepts No. 2, §§ 47, 48.

B. Andersen's 1996 and 1997 Audits Were Not Conducted In Accordance With GAAS.

116. As alleged below, Andersen failed in numerous respects to conduct its audits in accordance with GAAS.

117. Andersen and Harlow violated GAAS because they negligently or fraudulently failed to perform the audits with an attitude of professional skepticism as required by Statement on Auditing Standards ("SAS") No. 53, which states: "An audit of financial statements in accordance with generally accepted accounting standards should be planned and performed with an attitude of professional skepticism." AU § 316.16. Thus:

a. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently failed to reach a conclusion that there existed a significant risk of intentional distortion of financial statements by Sunbeam management. Andersen and Harlow should have reached that conclusion because Sunbeam's management was dominated by a single person, Dunlap; because Dunlap's attitude toward financial reporting was unduly aggressive; because Dunlap placed undue emphasis on meeting earnings projections; because of the extremely rapid change in Sunbeam's performance; and/or because Dunlap's plan to quickly "turn around" and sell Sunbeam incentivized him to distort financial statements. See AU §§ 316.10 and 316.12.

b. Andersen and Harlow also were negligent or fraudulent in failing to recognize that the accounting policies employed by Sunbeam were not acceptable in the circumstances. Thus, "when the auditor has reached a conclusion that there is a significant risk of intentional distortion of financial statements, the auditor should recognize that management's selection and application of significant accounting policies, particularly those related to revenue recognition, asset valuation, and capitalization versus expensing, may be misused. Increased risk of intentional distortion of the financial statements should cause greater concern about whether accounting principles that are otherwise generally accepted are being used in inappropriate circumstances to create a distortion of earnings." AU § 316.19.

c. Andersen and Harlow also acted negligently or fraudulently by failing to obtain sufficient competent evidential matter through inspection, observation, inquiries and confirmations to afford a reasonable basis for its opinions regarding Sunbeam's financial statements. That failure violated the third standard of field work adopted by the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants ("AICPA") (AU § 150.02). Furthermore, "[w]hen evaluation at the financial statement level indicates significant risk, the auditor requires more or different evidence to support material transactions than would be the case in the absence of such risk. For example, the auditor may perform additional procedures to determine that sales are properly recorded, giving consideration to the possibility that the buyer has a right to return the product. Transactions that are both large and unusual, particularly at year-end, should be selected for testing." AU § 316.20.

118. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently failed to exercise due professional care in the performance of the 1996 and 1997 audits, in violation of the AICPA's third general auditing standard (AU § 150.02).

119. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently failed to plan the work adequately to uncover the errors and irregularities in Sunbeam's accounting information, in violation of the AICPA's first standard of field work (AU § 150.02).

120. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently failed to obtain a sufficient understanding of Sunbeam's internal control structure to plan the audits and to determine the nature, timing and extent of tests to be performed, in violation of the AICPA's second standard of field work (AU § 150.02). Specifically, Andersen and Harlow fraudulently failed to assess properly the risk of management override of controls in light of Dunlap's plan to quickly "turn around" and sell Sunbeam.

121. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently relied on management representations rather than applying the auditing procedures necessary to afford a reasonable basis for an opinion on Sunbeam's financial statements, in violation of SAS No. 19 (AU § 333.02).

122. Andersen and Harlow were negligent or fraudulent in not recognizing that misstatements resulting from misapplication of GAAP, departures from fact and omissions of necessary information, in aggregate, caused Sunbeam's financial statements to be materially misstated, in violation of SAS No. 47 (AU § 312.04).

123. As alleged above, on numerous occasions Andersen and Harlow concluded that certain misstatements caused Sunbeam's financial statements to be materially misstated. Although they requested that Sunbeam management eliminate the misstatements, management refused. Andersen acted negligently or fraudulently in not issuing a qualified or adverse opinion in such instances, in violation of SAS No. 47 (AU § 312.31).

124. Andersen and Harlow were negligent or fraudulent in concluding that the accounting principles applied by Sunbeam were appropriate in the circumstances and that Sunbeam's financial statements were informative of matters that could affect their use, understanding and interpretation, in violation of SAS No. 69 (AU § 411.04(b) and (c)).

125. Andersen and Harlow were negligent or fraudulent in failing to report that a change in the application of accounting principles in Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements had materially affected their comparability with the financial statements for prior periods, especially 1996, due to a different treatment of sales and reserves in those periods, in violation of SAS Nos. 1 and 43 (AU § 420.02).

126. Andersen's and Harlow's failure to conduct the audits in accordance with GAAS, and Andersen's certification of financial statements that were not in conformity with GAAP, as shown above, caused Coleman-Parent to suffer damages in excess of $600,000,000.

127. Andersen-Worldwide, Andersen-US, Andersen-Canada, Andersen-Hong Kong, Andersen-Mexico, Andersen-Venezuela and Andersen-UK are jointly and severally liable to plaintiff because they participated in the course of conduct that constitutes the wrongful acts alleged herein, acted in concert to injure plaintiff, constituted alter egos of one another, constituted agents of one another, aided and abetted the conduct complained of herein, and/or conspired with each other to injure plaintiff.

COUNT I
Fraudulent Misrepresentation

128. Coleman-Parent repeats and realleges each and every allegation above as if set forth fully herein.

129. At the time Andersen issued its unqualified audit opinions for Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements, Andersen and Harlow possessed knowledge superior to

Coleman-Parent concerning Sunbeam's financial position, the accounting principles Sunbeam used, the results of Sunbeam's operations and cash flows and whether Sunbeam's financial condition was presented in conformity with GAAP.

130. As described in detail above, Andersen and Harlow made representations of fact that were false in the unqualified audit opinions it issued for Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements, including, among other things, (a) that Andersen's audits of Sunbeam were conducted in accordance with GAAS; (b) that Sunbeam's financial statements fairly presented the financial position of Sunbeam during the relevant periods; (c) that Sunbeam's financial statements fairly presented the results of Sunbeam's operations and cash flows during the relevant periods; and (d) that Sunbeam's financial statements were in conformity with GAAP.

131. As described in detail above, Andersen and Harlow knew that those representations were false at the time they were made and/or made those representations with recklessness as to their truth.

132. Andersen consented to the publication of its audit reports to the public and business world by consenting to their inclusion in Sunbeam's SEC filings. Given that publication, Andersen and Harlow intended that the public -- including Coleman-Parent -- would rely on Andersen's representations. Moreover, Andersen and Harlow specifically knew the terms of the agreement for Coleman-Parent's sale of Coleman Company to Sunbeam and consented to the publication of Andersen's audit report in Sunbeam's March 6, 1998 Form 10-K filing with the intent that Coleman-Parent rely upon Andersen's representations.

133. In agreeing to sell its interest in Coleman Company for approximately 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock plus cash and other consideration, Coleman-Parent reasonably and justifiably relied upon Andersen's representations and omissions as to Andersen's 1996 and 1997 audits.

134. But for Andersen's misrepresentations, Coleman-Parent would not have agreed to sell its business to Sunbeam in return for artificially-inflated Sunbeam stock, among other consideration. As a result of Andersen's and Harlow's misconduct, Coleman-Parent has been damaged in excess of $600,000,000.

COUNT II
Fraudulent Inducement To Contract
(Conspiracy and Concerted Action)

135. Coleman-Parent repeats and realleges each and every allegation above as if set forth fully herein.

136. As described in detail above, Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements contained false statements of material fact. Those material misrepresentations included, among other things, (a) overstating Sunbeam's 1996 operating losses by approximately $40 million; (b) overstating Sunbeam's 1996 losses from continuing operations by approximately $26 million; (c) overstating Sunbeam's 1996 net losses by approximately $20 million; (d) overstating Sunbeam's 1997 operating earnings by approximately $95 million; (e) overstating Sunbeam's 1997 earnings from continuing operations by over $70 million; (f) overstating Sunbeam's 1997 net earnings by approximately $70 million; and (g) overstating Sunbeam's 1997 operating income figure by approximately 50%.

137. As described in detail above, Andersen and Harlow made representations of fact that were false in the unqualified audit opinions it issued for Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements, including, among other things, (a) that Andersen's audits of Sunbeam were conducted in accordance with GAAS; (b) that Sunbeam's financial statements fairly presented the financial position of Sunbeam during the relevant periods; (c) that Sunbeam's financial statements fairly presented the results of Sunbeam's operations and cash flows during the relevant periods; and (d) that Sunbeam's financial statements were in conformity with GAAP.

138. As described in detail above, Sunbeam, Andersen and Harlow knew that those representations were false when made and/or made those representations with reckless disregard as to their truth.

139. In order to induce Coleman-Parent further into entering into and fulfilling a contract to sell its interest in Coleman Company to Sunbeam in exchange for approximately 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock, Sunbeam represented that its SEC filings dating back to January 1, 1997 were accurate and not misleading as of February 27, 1998 and would be accurate and not misleading on March 30, 1998. Sunbeam's management, Andersen and Harlow knew and/or recklessly disregarded that those representations were false when made because Sunbeam's SEC filings contained Sunbeam's false and misleading 1996 and 1997 financial statements and Andersen's false and misleading audit reports.

140. In reasonable and justifiable reliance on Sunbeam's representations that its SEC filings – including its financial statements and Andersen's audit reports – were accurate with respect to Sunbeam's financial position and operating results, Coleman-Parent agreed to accept 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock and other consideration in exchange for its controlling stake in Coleman Company.

141. As a proximate result of its reliance on those misrepresentations, Coleman-Parent gave up its stake in Coleman Company in exchange for shares of Sunbeam which, once the truth of Sunbeam's financial situation was revealed, became worthless. Those misrepresentations proximately caused injury to Coleman-Parent in excess of $600,000,000.

142. Andersen and Harlow were part of a team with Dunlap, Kersh and the other senior Sunbeam executives that acted in concert and wrongfully conspired to create the appearance that Sunbeam was performing at a high level to artificially inflate the stock price of Sunbeam and make it attractive for a sale to another company. Andersen and Harlow explicitly or implicitly by acquiescence agreed to become part of that conspiracy and committed overt acts in furtherance of its fraudulent scheme in order to retain Sunbeam as a client and earn significant fees.

143. In furtherance of that conspiracy, Dunlap and the other Sunbeam executives decided to acquire Coleman Company in order to further increase Sunbeam's stock price and maintain the illusion of its good performance. In pursuance of that scheme, Andersen and Harlow committed the overt acts of issuing Andersen's false and misleading March 1998 unqualified audit opinion with respect to Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements and of consenting to its publication to the SEC as part of Sunbeam's Form 10-K filing on March 6, 1998. Andersen and Harlow knew that Andersen's audit opinion would be used by Sunbeam to induce Coleman-Parent into selling its controlling stake in Coleman Company in exchange for shares of artificially-inflated Sunbeam stock. Andersen's audit report also furthered that conspiracy by actively supporting the illusion of Sunbeam's performance that had been created in the market, which helped support the company's artificially-inflated stock price. In doing so, Andersen and Harlow committed the tortious act of fraudulent inducement in concert with Dunlap and the other Sunbeam executives pursuant to a common design.

144. As described above, Coleman-Parent was damaged as a result of those concerted acts performed as part of that conspiracy.

COUNT III
Negligent Misrepresentation

145. Coleman-Parent repeats and realleges each and every allegation above as if set forth fully herein.

146. Andersen provided the information in its audit reports regarding Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements in the course of its business as an accounting firm in the employ of Sunbeam.

147. In issuing its audit report regarding Sunbeam's 1997 and 1996 financial statements and in consenting to that report's inclusion in Sunbeam's March 6, 1998 Form 10-K filing with the SEC, Andersen and Harlow were aware that such information was being provided, in part, for the specific guidance and reliance of Coleman-Parent, which was agreeing to sell Coleman Company to Sunbeam for approximately 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock plus cash. In particular, Sunbeam warranted and represented to Coleman-Parent that its SEC filings, and audited financial statements including Andersen's report, were accurate – a fact that Andersen and Harlow were aware of when Andersen issued its report and consented to its publication. Andersen and Harlow expected that Coleman-Parent would rely on Andersen's 1997 audit report. Andersen and Harlow also were aware and expected that Coleman-Parent specifically was relying on Andersen's previously issued 1996 audit report, which Andersen did not retract until long after the Coleman Company transaction closed.

148. As described in detail above, Andersen's unqualified audit opinions for Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements contained material falsehoods, including, among other things, (a) that its audits of Sunbeam were conducted in accordance with GAAS; (b) that Sunbeam's financial statements fairly presented the financial position of Sunbeam during the relevant periods; (c) that Sunbeam's financial statements fairly presented the results of Sunbeam's operations and cash flows during the relevant periods; and (d) that Sunbeam's financial statements were in conformity with GAAP.

149. As described in more detail above, Andersen and Harlow failed to exercise reasonable care or competence in obtaining or communicating the information contained in their audit reports regarding Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements.

150. Coleman-Parent reasonably and justifiably relied upon the information contained in Andersen's audit reports, including their material falsehoods regarding Sunbeam's financial condition and operating results and regarding the conformance of Sunbeam's financial statements to GAAP. In reliance on those material falsehoods, Coleman-Parent agreed to sell its interest in Coleman Company for approximately 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock, cash and other consideration.

151. As a result of Andersen's and Harlow's misconduct, Coleman-Parent has been injured in an amount in excess of $600,000,000.

WHEREFORE, plaintiff Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc. demands judgment against Andersen-Worldwide, Andersen-US, Andersen-Canada, Andersen-Hong Kong, Andersen-Mexico, Andersen-Venezuela, Andersen-UK and Phillip E. Harlow, jointly and severally, as follows:

- A. Compensatory damages in an amount in excess of $600,000,000;
- B. An award of costs and expenses incurred in this action, including reasonable attorneys' and experts' fees; and
- C. Any further relief as the Court may deem just and proper in light of all the circumstances of the case.

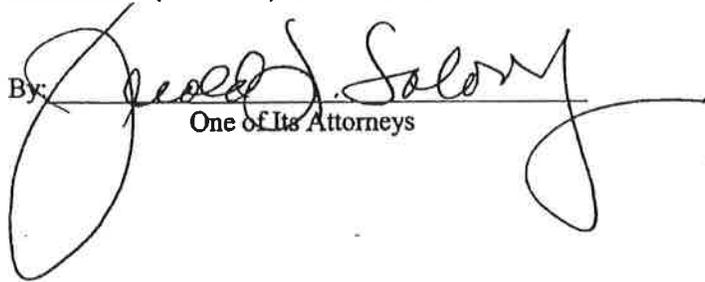

D. Coleman-Parent expressly reserves the right to seek leave to amend its complaint pursuant to Fla. Stat. § 768.72 to assert claims for punitive damages in excess of $1.2 billion as allowed by law.

CIRCUIT CIVIL 8

COMPLAINT

Plaintiff Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc. ("Coleman-Parent"), by its attorneys, alleges the following against defendants Arthur Andersen LLP ("Andersen") and Phillip E. Harlow ("Harlow"):

NATURE OF THE ACTION

1. This action arises out of Coleman-Parent's sale of its controlling interest in The Coleman Company, Inc. ("Coleman Company") to Sunbeam Corporation, Inc. ("Sunbeam") on March 30, 1998, in exchange for 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam common stock, plus other consideration. In deciding to go forward with that sale, Coleman-Parent relied on Sunbeam's financial statements, which were audited and certified by Andersen, the largest accounting firm in the world.

2. Unbeknownst to Coleman-Parent, however, Andersen had audited and certified financial statements that it knew to be inaccurate and misleading. Those audited financial statements painted a false picture of Sunbeam, depicting it as a company in the midst of an impressive financial turnaround. The reality was that Sunbeam's turnaround was a sham, and when the truth emerged, Sunbeam's stock lost virtually all of its value. The company is now in bankruptcy. By relying on the financial statements improperly certified by Andersen, Coleman-Parent has suffered losses exceeding $600 million.

3. By holding itself out as Sunbeam's independent certified public accountant and certifying Sunbeam's financial statements, Andersen knowingly assumed a responsibility that transcended its relationship with Sunbeam as a client. As an independent public accountant auditing Sunbeam's financial statements, Andersen owed a duty to Coleman-Parent and others whom it knew were relying upon Andersen's certification that Sunbeam's reports fairly depicted the company's financial status. Andersen was required to maintain independence from its client, Sunbeam, and speak with total honesty befitting the trust that had been placed in its word. In carrying out its audit of Sunbeam's financial statements, Andersen utterly failed to live up to that responsibility. To the contrary, Andersen's audits were not performed in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards ("GAAS"), and the financial statements it certified were not, as Andersen claimed, in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles ("GAAP"). Even more egregious, Phillip Harlow, the audit partner on the Sunbeam account, and others at Andersen knew the financial statements were not prepared in conformity with GAAP, but Andersen certified them nonetheless.

4. The motivation of Harlow and Andersen was simple – to do whatever was necessary to retain a major client. Sunbeam was one of few Fortune 500 clients of Andersen's Fort Lauderdale, Florida, office. Andersen had served as Sunbeam's independent auditor for many years. Sunbeam had paid Andersen more than $1 million for its 1995 audit. However, in 1996 that relationship was threatened by Sunbeam's new CEO, Albert Dunlap. Dunlap was eager to show a turnaround at Sunbeam in order to position the company for a quick sale, as he recently had done at Scott Paper. To accomplish that goal, Dunlap's new management team knowingly employed improper accounting methods that first overstated the company's loss in 1996 and then inflated the company's income in 1997. In total abrogation of its responsibility as an independent auditor, Andersen permitted – indeed, blessed – those improper accounting treatments, rather than risk losing Sunbeam's audit business to Dunlap's accountant of choice, Coopers & Lybrand.

5. Ironically, the financial results certified by Andersen for 1996 and 1997 drove the price of Sunbeam stock so high that new management could not locate a willing buyer for a quick sale of the company, as had been hoped. As a result, Sunbeam was forced to shift gears and pursue acquisitions of other companies, including Coleman Company, in the hope that those mergers would obscure Sunbeam's true financial position and forestall revelation of the accounting gimmickry. To effectuate that plan, the very same Andersen partners and employees who were functioning as Sunbeam's "independent" auditors (including Harlow) added another role and joined Sunbeam's due diligence team for the acquisitions.

6. Because of Andersen's dual roles as auditor and acquisitions consultant, it knew full well not only that the purchase of Coleman Company was taking place, but also that Coleman-Parent was relying on the financial statements certified by Andersen. Nonetheless, Andersen took no steps before the Coleman Company acquisition closed to correct the grossly misleading impression created by its certifications.

7. At the time of the sale to Sunbeam, Coleman Company was a leading manufacturer and marketer of consumer products for the worldwide outdoor recreation market, with annual revenues in excess of $1 billion. As payment for its stake in Coleman Company, Coleman-Parent was to receive 14,099,749 shares of Sunbeam stock, $160 million in cash, and other consideration. Based on Sunbeam's share price at the time of the closing, Coleman-Parent received Sunbeam shares that had an aggregate market value of over $619.5 million.

8. Within weeks of the closing of the Coleman Company acquisition on March 30, 1998, the deception facilitated by Andersen began to unravel. On April 3, 1998, just four days after the closing, Sunbeam's management issued a press release announcing that, despite having predicted positive quarterly results in another press release just two weeks earlier, Sunbeam now would show a loss for the first quarter of 1998. On May 11, 1998, Sunbeam issued an earnings release for the first quarter of 1998 reporting a loss of 52 cents per share, compared with a gain of 8 cents per share in the same quarter of 1997. Press coverage ensued in the following month questioning whether Sunbeam had utilized – and Andersen had approved – manipulative and improper accounting practices in order to create the ruse of a turnaround.

9. In June 1998, the Sunbeam board of directors began an inquiry into Sunbeam's accounting practices. On June 15, 1998, the board announced that it had removed Dunlap as Chairman and CEO of Sunbeam. On June 25, 1998, Andersen withheld its consent for use of its unqualified 1997 audit opinion in a registration statement that was to have been filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission ("SEC"). On June 30, 1998, Sunbeam acknowledged that it had undertaken a review of its financial statements and the review could result in a restatement of the financial statements. On October 20, 1998, Sunbeam and Andersen announced a restatement of the financial statements. Thereafter, Andersen issued a new unqualified audit opinion for Sunbeam reporting only $93 million in operating earnings for 1997. That amount was approximately half of the figure that Andersen previously certified.

10. In February 2001, Sunbeam filed a voluntary bankruptcy petition under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. Coleman-Parent's equity stake in Sunbeam is now worthless.

11. In order to retain the Sunbeam account and lucrative auditing and consulting fees, Andersen turned its back on its professional and legal obligations and certified Sunbeam financial statements that it knew to be false and misleading. It did so with full knowledge that Coleman-Parent would be harmed immensely by Andersen's misstatements and omissions. As a direct and foreseeable result of Andersen's actions, Coleman-Parent has sustained damages in excess of $600,000,000.

12. By this complaint, Coleman-Parent seeks recovery of over $600 million in compensatory damages. In addition, Coleman-Parent reserves the right to seek leave to amend its complaint pursuant to Fla. Stat. § 768.72 to assert claims for an additional recovery of punitive damages in excess of $1.2 billion as allowed by law.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

13. This Court has jurisdiction over the subject matter of this action pursuant to Fla. Stat. § 26.012(2)(a). This Court has jurisdiction over Andersen and Harlow pursuant to Fla. Stat. §§ 48.193(1)(a) and (f), (2), and (5).

14. Venue is proper in this district pursuant to Fla. Stat. §§ 47.011 and 47.021 because Andersen maintains an office with more than 30 employees in West Palm Beach, Florida, and therefore resides in Palm Beach County. In addition, Harlow is a resident of South Florida.

PARTIES

15. Coleman-Parent is a corporation incorporated in the state of Delaware with its principal business offices located in New York. Coleman-Parent is a wholly owned subsidiary of Mafco Holdings Inc. ("MAFCO"). Prior to March 30, 1998, Coleman-Parent owned approximately 81% of Coleman Company.

16. Andersen is a limited liability partnership formed under the laws of the State of Illinois. As the world's largest accounting firm, Andersen employs over 77,000 professionals in fields such as accounting, taxation, business consulting, corporate finance, risk management, and business fraud investigation. Andersen has partners who are residents of Florida and numerous other states. Andersen's global revenues for the fiscal year ending August 31, 2000 totaled more than $8 billion.

17. Harlow has been a partner at Andersen since 1983. He served as the engagement partner on the Andersen audits of Sunbeam's financial statements from 1993 to 1998. Harlow also participated as a member of Sunbeam's due diligence team for Sunbeam's acquisition of Coleman Company.

SUBSTANTIVE ALLEGATIONS

A. Sunbeam's New Management Team (1996-1998).

18. In the years leading up to 1996, Sunbeam had experienced increasing financial difficulties and growing losses. In an effort to remedy the situation, Sunbeam's board of directors undertook a change in Sunbeam's management in July 1996. The management team the board brought in was headed by Albert Dunlap, a person who had earned a reputation as a turnaround specialist through brief terms as Chief Executive Officer of a number of publicly traded corporations. Based on his penchant for rapidly slashing personnel and closing plants to achieve quick turnaround results, Dunlap is widely known as "Chainsaw Al."

B. Dunlap Arrives at Sunbeam and Initiates Restructuring.

19. Sunbeam hired Dunlap on July 18, 1996 and installed him as its Chairman and Chief Executive Officer. Immediately after joining Sunbeam, Dunlap hired Russell A. Kersh as Sunbeam's principal financial officer. Kersh had been associated with Dunlap for over 15 years, and had served as a senior executive during various Dunlap turnaround engagements. Dunlap also brought in other hand-picked executives to make up his senior management team. He hired Donald R. Uzzi as Vice President, Marketing and Product Development. Uzzi later became Executive Vice President, Consumer Products Worldwide. Dunlap also hired Lee B. Griffith as Vice President, Sales. Dunlap retained Robert J. Gluck, formerly Controller of Sunbeam, as Sunbeam's Principal Accounting Officer.

20. Dunlap and the senior members of his management team entered into lucrative employment agreements that gave them a strong financial incentive to cause Sunbeam's stock price to increase and then to sell the company quickly. All stood to make many millions of dollars if that happened. Andersen was fully aware of those agreements and the fact that a disproportionate share of those executives' potential earnings was dependent on stock options or restricted shares of stock.

21. In addition to the personal financial incentives deriving from his employment contract, Dunlap also had his reputation as a turnaround specialist to protect and advance. Dunlap used his reputation as a specialist in turning around troubled companies to make aggressive promises about Sunbeam's future performance and support false and misleading announcements of record performance – results that were rendered credible because Andersen had certified Sunbeam's financial statements.

C. Andersen Is Recruited to Help Create the Illusion of a Successful Restructuring.

22. To lay the foundation for the appearance of a successful turnaround in 1997, Sunbeam's new senior management team decided to take improper expenses and record unjustified accounting writeoffs in 1996, thus lowering the benchmark for measuring their ultimate "success" in turning Sunbeam around.

23. Dunlap and his team needed the help of Sunbeam's auditors in approving the improper accounting tactics or the scheme would have had no chance of success. Andersen's Phillip Harlow was such a willing participant. Harlow knew of Dunlap's reputation as a fast-moving turnaround specialist who was quick to fire anyone who did not advance his agenda. Harlow also knew that in other highly publicized turnaround engagements, Dunlap had employed Coopers & Lybrand, one of Andersen's major competitors, as a financial consultant and independent auditor. Consistent with past practice, one of the first things Dunlap did after joining Sunbeam was to hire Coopers & Lybrand as a financial advisor with the lucrative assignment of planning Sunbeam's massive restructuring, which led to the firing of nearly half of Sunbeam's 12,000 employees. Andersen – and especially Harlow – were keenly aware that this did not bode well for the future of Andersen's relationship with Sunbeam.

24. Sunbeam had been a major client of Andersen's for many years and Sunbeam had paid Andersen over $1 million in fees for its 1995 audit alone. Harlow had been the Sunbeam engagement partner since 1993. When Dunlap took control of Sunbeam and hired Coopers & Lybrand for the restructuring, Harlow became concerned that Dunlap would fire Andersen as the company's independent auditor and hire Coopers & Lybrand instead. Indeed, Harlow was so concerned about the possible loss of Sunbeam as a client that he agreed to a 30% reduction in Andersen's fee for 1996. A reduction in audit fees was simply one price Andersen had to pay in order to keep Sunbeam as a client.

D. Andersen's Early Assistance in the Scheme.

25. When Harlow began work on the audit of Sunbeam's 1996 financial statements, Harlow and Andersen learned the true price of keeping Sunbeam as an audit client. In addition to reducing its audit fees, Andersen was required to accept the improper and misleading accounting treatments used by Sunbeam's senior management to create the illusion of a successful turnaround. In the end, Andersen's desire to retain a valuable client overrode any sense of duty or professionalism. To keep Sunbeam as an Andersen client, Harlow and Andersen ignored numerous accounting improprieties Andersen knew had been employed. Even when Harlow expressly identified certain of management's accounting treatments as improper, he ultimately acquiesced in management's refusal to correct the improprieties, and Andersen issued unqualified or "clean" audit opinions. Andersen did so despite the harm it knew would be inflicted on all who relied upon Andersen's audit opinions.

1. Improper Accounting Practices In 1996.

26. As set forth below, Andersen and Harlow permitted management to employ numerous accounting practices in 1996 that did not comply with GAAP.

27. One of the accounting practices permitted by Andersen and Harlow was the creation of a massive $338 million non-GAAP reserve for restructuring charges. Although certain types of restructuring reserves may be proper, the reserves created by management included improper reserves and accruals, excessive write-downs, and prematurely recognized expenses that were not proper restructuring reserves under GAAP. Those intentionally inflated reserves served two purposes. First, because the reserves were charged as an expense against income, they allowed Sunbeam to overstate its 1996 loss, and lower the benchmark for measuring the eventual success of Sunbeam's turnaround. Second, the inflated restructuring reserves created a "cookie-jar" of overstated liabilities on Sunbeam's books that Dunlap could reduce in the years after 1996, purportedly to correct the overstatements, and at the same time increase income in the year of the corrections. Those adjustments, too, fostered the illusion of a successful turnaround.

28. One of the largest components of the Sunbeam "cookie-jar" reserves permitted by Andersen and Harlow was millions of dollars in items that benefitted future activities, and hence were not properly part of the restructuring reserve. Those items included costs of redesigning product packaging, costs of relocating employees and equipment, bonuses to be paid to employees who were told that they were being laid off but were asked to stay temporarily, advertising expenses, and certain consulting fees. Note 2 to the audited 1996 financial statements falsely described the restructuring charges as follows:

In conjunction with the implementation of the restructuring and growth plan, the Company recorded a pre-tax special charge to earnings of approximately $337.6 million in the fourth quarter of 1996. This amount is allocated as follows in the accompanying Consolidated Statement of Operations: $154.9 million to Restructuring, Impairment and Other Costs as further described below; $92.3 million to Cost of Goods Sold related principally to inventory write-downs from the reduction in SKU's and costs of inventory liquidation programs; $42.5 million to Selling, General and Administrative expenses principally for increases in environmental and litigation reserves (see Notes 12 and 13) and other reserve categories; and the estimated pre-tax loss on the divestiture of the Company's furniture business of approximately $47.9 million.

As Sunbeam's eventual restatement of its financial statements showed, those reserves were materially inflated and were not recorded in accordance with GAAP.

29. In connection with the audit of Sunbeam's 1996 year-end financial statements, Harlow discovered that certain components of Sunbeam's restructuring reserves were not being recorded in compliance with GAAP and proposed that the company reverse several of the accounting entries establishing those reserves. As Harlow told Kersh and Gluck, under GAAP, entries that benefitted Sunbeam's future results were not considered to be proper restructuring charges in 1996. But Kersh and Gluck refused to reverse those items. Instead of standing firm, as professional ethics required, Harlow turned a blind eye to his duties as an independent auditor and caused Andersen to acquiesce in management's refusal to reverse those non-GAAP reserves. Those improper reserves caused Sunbeam's 1996 audited financial statements to be materially false and misleading.

30. In connection with the 1996 audited financial statements, Andersen and Harlow also permitted management to create an excessive $12 million reserve for a lawsuit alleging that Sunbeam was liable for a portion of the cleanup costs for a hazardous waste site. In fact, that reserve overstated Sunbeam's estimated liability by at least 100%, and provided Sunbeam with an inflated reserve that could be drawn down to boost income figures artificially in later periods.

31. Andersen and Harlow also permitted Sunbeam to write down its household products inventory in 1996. In connection with the restructuring, Dunlap's management team planned to eliminate half of Sunbeam's product lines and to liquidate Sunbeam's inventory of eliminated product lines at a substantial discount. Notwithstanding that the change affected only half of Sunbeam's product lines, Andersen and Harlow permitted management to reduce the cost basis for Sunbeam's entire inventory of household products at 1996 year end, without distinction between eliminated and continuing product lines (including inventories that were later sold in the ordinary course of business). As a result, the balance sheet value of Sunbeam's inventory at year-end 1996 was understated by approximately $2 million, and Sunbeam overstated its 1996 loss by the same amount. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that (a) Sunbeam had understated the carrying value of its household products inventory, (b) the understatement had contributed to the material misstatement of Sunbeam's financial statements at year-end 1996, and (c) the understatement would improperly increase Sunbeam's income during 1997 when household products were sold at artificially inflated margins.

32. Andersen and Harlow also permitted management improperly to recognize $2.3 million in 1997 advertising expenses and related costs as a 1996 expense. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that the accounting treatment would contribute to the material overstatement of Sunbeam's 1996 year-end loss and exaggerate Sunbeam's so-called turnaround by the same amount in 1997.

33. Finally, Andersen and Harlow permitted Sunbeam to manipulate its 1996 liabilities for cooperative advertising. In addition to buying national advertising to create demand for its products, Sunbeam funded a portion of its retailers' costs of running local promotions. As required by GAAP, Sunbeam accrued its estimated liabilities for such "cooperative advertising," and then charged its expenses in relation to its sales revenue during the year. At year-end 1996, Sunbeam set its cooperative advertising accrual at $21.8 million, an amount that was approximately 25% higher than the prior year's accrual amount, without any basis for the increase. Harlow learned of the inflated accrual for cooperative advertising in connection with Andersen's audit of Sunbeam's year-end 1996 financial statements and discussed it with Kersh and Gluck. Nevertheless, Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts concerning the lack of a proper basis for the accrual and the likelihood that the excess accrual would be released into income in early 1997. In fact, $5.8 million of that excessive accrual was used (without disclosure) to inflate Sunbeam's 1997 income.

2. Andersen's 1996 Unqualified Audit Opinion.

34. In March 1997, Andersen issued an unqualified audit opinion regarding Sunbeam's 1996 financial statements and authorized the inclusion of its audit opinion in Sunbeam's 1996 Form 10-K filed with the SEC. Andersen's opinion stated:

We conducted our audits in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards. Those standards require that we plan and perform the audit to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the financial statements are free of material misstatement. An audit includes examining, on a test basis, evidence supporting the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements. An audit also includes assessing the accounting principles used and significant estimates made by management, as well as evaluating the overall financial statement presentation. We believe that our audits provide a reasonable basis for our opinion.

In our opinion, the financial statements . . . present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of Sunbeam Corporation and subsidiaries as of December 31, 1995 and December 29, 1996, and the results of their operations and their cash flows for each of the three fiscal years in the period ended December 29, 1996 in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles.

35. Andersen's unqualified audit opinion was false in two material respects.

First, the financial statements Andersen audited did not "fairly" present Sunbeam's financial position in conformity with GAAP, as it represented. Second, Andersen did not, as it claimed, conduct its audit in accordance with GAAS.

36. In all, the 1996 financial statements audited by Andersen were materially false and misleading, and overstated Sunbeam's loss for 1996. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that (a) Andersen's unqualified audit opinion was incorrect, (b) Sunbeam's financial statements were materially false and misleading and not in conformity with GAAP, and (c) Andersen had failed to perform an audit in accordance with GAAS.

E. Andersen Assists Sunbeam as a Financial Adviser in Sunbeam's Purchase of Coleman Company.

37. During 1997, Sunbeam's senior management continued to use improper accounting to create the illusion that a successful turnaround was underway at Sunbeam. By maintaining that illusion, Dunlap's management team hoped to position Sunbeam for a quick sale. However, the illusion proved too convincing to the market, and the price of Sunbeam stock was driven so high that no willing buyer could be found. Management was aware that, absent a sale, it would be unable to sustain the appearance of a successful turnaround. Therefore, in late 1997, Sunbeam sought to acquire other businesses, in order to consolidate their results with Sunbeam's and thereby continue to obscure Sunbeam's past accounting improprieties. Once again, Sunbeam management required Andersen's assistance in perpetuating the deception.

38. In early December 1997, officers and directors of Sunbeam met with various officers of Coleman Company regarding a potential combination with Sunbeam. After that initial overture was rejected by Coleman-Parent, Dunlap's representative returned with another proposal in January 1998. At that point, Coleman-Parent indicated it was willing to discuss a potential transaction.

39. On January 28, 1998, Sunbeam announced its financial results for 1997, reporting total revenues of $1.168 billion, and total earnings from continuing operations of $189 million (or $1.41 per share). Sunbeam's announcement coincided with Andersen's completion of the field work for its audit of Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements.

40. On February 3, 1998, Harlow met with key officers of Sunbeam to discuss the acquisition of Coleman Company and its financial impact on Sunbeam. By that time, Harlow knew that Sunbeam had utilized improper accounting to achieve its 1997 results. Harlow also knew Coleman-Parent would insist on reviewing Andersen's 1997 audit opinion before agreeing to consummate any transaction in which the consideration included hundreds of millions of dollars in Sunbeam stock.

41. On February 20, 1998, Andersen agreed to act as a Sunbeam financial advisor and perform financial due diligence in connection with Sunbeam's acquisition of Coleman Company and two other companies, First Alert, Inc. and Signature Brands USA, Inc. In agreeing to undertake that assignment, Andersen became an active member of the team working to assist Sunbeam in acquiring Coleman Company.

42. During the latter weeks of February 1998, representatives of Sunbeam and Coleman-Parent met to negotiate the details of a potential acquisition of Coleman Company and to prepare a proposed structure for that transaction.

43. Between February 23 and 25, 1998, representatives of Andersen, including Harlow, conducted due diligence concerning Coleman Company and the other target companies on behalf of Sunbeam. During that period, Andersen representatives participated in various meetings with officers and consultants of Coleman Company. At no point, however, did Andersen's representatives suggest that Sunbeam's financial statements were materially false and misleading. Meanwhile, Sunbeam worked on negotiating the terms of its acquisition of Coleman Company.

44. On February 27, 1998, Harlow met with Sunbeam executives in New York to discuss Andersen's due diligence. That afternoon, Sunbeam and Coleman-Parent reached an agreement for the sale of Coleman Company.

45. As part of the Coleman Company acquisition agreement, Sunbeam represented and warranted that all of its filings with the SEC, which included the 1996 financial statements audited by Andersen, were accurate and not misleading, and that they would continue to be accurate and not misleading as of the transaction's closing date, which was expected to be several weeks later. Sunbeam also represented that its audited financial statements were prepared in accordance with GAAP, and that at the time of the closing of the transaction, its representation would continue to be true and correct. Andersen was fully aware of those representations and warranties when the merger agreement was executed on February 27, 1998.

46. As a result of Andersen's involvement in the Coleman Company acquisition transaction, it knew that Coleman-Parent would rely on Sunbeam's audited financial statements (1) in deciding to close the transaction, and (2) in accepting 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock and other consideration in return for its stake in Coleman Company. Moreover, as an independent certified public accountant, Andersen had a duty to disclose to Coleman-Parent that Sunbeam's audited financial statements in fact were neither accurate nor reliable. Notwithstanding that Andersen had met with representatives of Coleman-Parent and its auditors during its due diligence review, Andersen remained mute regarding the true financial condition of Sunbeam and the improprieties buried in Sunbeam's audited financial statements.

F. Andersen Issues its 1997 Audit Report.

47. In the first week of March 1998, shortly after the agreement for Sunbeam's purchase of Coleman Company was signed, but before the transaction closed, Andersen updated its audit work to reflect Sunbeam's acquisitions. That work was done by the same individuals who also were working as consultants on the Sunbeam acquisitions. The three acquisitions were specifically described in Note 14 to the audited financial statements. The description included the fact that Sunbeam was paying for the Coleman Company shares with Sunbeam common stock as well as cash and assumption of debt. Andersen then rendered an unqualified audit opinion for Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements. With Andersen's express consent, management included that opinion in Sunbeam's 1997 Form 10-K filed with the SEC.

1. Andersen's 1997 Unqualified Audit Report.

48. In its opinion concerning Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements, Andersen stated:

We conducted our audits in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards. Those standards require that we plan and perform the audit to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the financial statements are free of material misstatement. An audit includes examining, on a test basis, evidence supporting the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements. An audit also includes assessing the accounting principles used and significant estimates made by management, as well as evaluating the overall financial statement presentation. We believe that our audits provide a reasonable basis for our opinion.

In our opinion, the financial statements . . . present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of Sunbeam Corporation and subsidiaries as of December 29, 1996 and December 28, 1997, and the results of its operations and its cash flows for each of the three fiscal years in the period ended December 28, 1997 in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles.

49. Andersen's 1997 audit opinion was false in two material respects. First, the financial statements Andersen audited did not "fairly" present Sunbeam's financial position in conformity with GAAP, as it represented. Second, Andersen did not, as it claimed, conduct its audit in accordance with GAAS.

50. In all, the 1997 financial statements audited by Andersen were materially false and misleading in that they overstated Sunbeam's operating income for the year by 50%. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that (a) Andersen's unqualified audit opinion was incorrect, (b) Sunbeam's financial statements were materially false and misleading and not in conformity with GAAP, and (c) Andersen had failed to perform an audit in accordance with GAAS.

2. Improper Accounting Practices In 1997.

51. One of the most flagrant accounting abuses Andersen and Harlow permitted in 1997 was to allow Sunbeam to record a profit on a sham sale of its warranty and spare parts business to its spare parts provider, EPI Printers, Inc. Prior to 1997, EPI satisfied spare parts and warranty requests of Sunbeam customers on a fee basis. To raise additional revenue at year end 1997, however, Sunbeam entered into a sham sale of the warranty and spare parts inventories already in EPI's warehouse. As a result of the transaction, management fraudulently recognized sales revenue of $11 million and $5 million in income in 1997.

52. The problem with the EPI transaction was that the transaction was not a sale at all, for at least three reasons. First, there was never a final agreement between Sunbeam and EPI. The closest the parties ever came to a meeting of the minds was the execution of a mere "agreement to agree." Second, by its terms, the proposed sale was to terminate on January 23, 1998, with no payment obligation on the part of EPI, absent a subsequent agreement between

Sunbeam and EPI on the value of the inventory. In other words, the sale could be completely unwound just after year-end without EPI ever having paid a cent. Third, Sunbeam had agreed as part of the proposed sale to pay certain fees to EPI and to guarantee a 5% profit to EPI on the eventual resale of the inventory. In essence, even after the proposed sale, EPI remained a contractor compensated by Sunbeam on a fee basis for its services. In sum, the relationship between EPI and Sunbeam was not fundamentally altered by the purported "sale."

53. Harlow became aware of the true nature of the EPI transaction and raised it with management as part of Andersen's 1997 year-end audit. Harlow proposed that Sunbeam reverse the accounting entries reflecting the revenue recognition for that transaction, having concluded that the profit guarantee and the indeterminate value of the contract rendered revenue recognition inconsistent with GAAP. Simply stated, there was no revenue to recognize because the transaction was illusory. Kersh and Gluck refused to reverse the transaction, but agreed to take a $3 million reserve against the transaction, lessening but not eliminating the fraudulent gain. Instead of refusing to lend Andersen's name to management's fraudulent revenue recognition, Harlow again acquiesced in management's actions. As a result, Sunbeam's 1997 audited financial statements reflect approximately $5 million of phony profit on the sham EPI transaction.

54. The EPI transaction raised a clear red flag that should have – and must have – alerted Andersen to the need for greater scrutiny regarding all of Sunbeam's revenue recognition decisions. At a minimum, Andersen should have been on guard as to all items Harlow previously identified as proposed audit adjustments (but which Harlow eventually acquiesced in), and any previously recognized improper items that were ultimately dismissed as "immaterial."

55. Another 1997 revenue inflation scheme permitted by Andersen and Harlow was Sunbeam's use of improper "bill-and-hold" transactions. A bill-and-hold transaction is a transaction in which the seller bills a customer for a purchase while holding the merchandise for later delivery. During 1997, Dunlap's management team offered financial incentives to various customers to make purchases earlier than they would otherwise have done so. Management then proposed that Sunbeam hold the merchandise until the normal time for delivery.

56. Under certain limited circumstances, bill-and-hold transactions may be permitted for revenue recognition purposes. However, bill-and-hold transactions must meet specific stringent accounting criteria satisfying GAAP. The relevant criteria include, among others: a requirement that the buyer, not the seller, requested a sale on a bill-and-hold basis; that the buyer had a substantial business purpose for ordering the goods on a bill-and-hold basis; and that risks and rewards of ownership passed to the buyer at the time of the bill-and-hold sale.

57. Bill-and-hold transactions improperly added in excess of $29 million to Sunbeam's 1997 sales and $4.5 million to income. In the course of the audit of Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements, Andersen and Harlow discovered that the purported bill-and-hold customers had not requested the bill-and-hold treatment, and that in numerous cases involving rights of return "the risks of ownership and legal title" were not actually "passed to the customer." Nevertheless, Andersen negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that bill-and-hold transactions did not satisfy the required revenue recognition criteria. Ultimately, Andersen acquiesced in Sunbeam's decisions to recognize revenue for all of those non-GAAP sales in 1997, and to misdescribe the company's bill-and-hold practices in the financial statements as customer-driven legitimate sales.

58. Another income inflation tactic Sunbeam management used in 1997 was to decrease the inflated 1996 reserves to create the illusion of 1997 income. By decreasing the reserves in 1997, management increased Sunbeam's 1997 income by almost $5 million. In connection with Andersen's year-end audit of Sunbeam's financial statements, Harlow discovered that tactic and concluded that it was improper. Harlow proposed reversing management's misuse of the reserves, but management refused to do so. Rather than insisting that the adjustments be made, Andersen gave Sunbeam a pass, and permitted the entries. In doing so, Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that the improper accounting materially distorted Sunbeam's reported results of operations for 1997.

59. Another of Sunbeam's 1997 accounting gimmicks was to record income from non-recurring events as ordinary income. In connection with Andersen's work on the 1997 audit, Harlow learned that management had arranged for the sale of deeply discounted and obsolete inventory during 1997, creating $19 million in non-recurring revenue. Although the recognition of that revenue was permitted under GAAP, Sunbeam was required to disclose in its financial statements that the income from the sale was a non-recurring event. Sunbeam failed to do so. Notwithstanding that material omission, Andersen certified Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements.

60. Finally, during Andersen's 1997 audit, Harlow proposed adjustments to reverse $2.9 million related to a Sunbeam inventory overvaluation and $563,000 in additional items. Management again refused to make appropriate adjustments, and Andersen and Harlow acquiesced in the refusal to reverse those errors. In doing so, Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that those items contributed to the misstatement of Sunbeam's 1997 reported results of operations.

61. In the end, Andersen's 1997 audit opinion certified financial statements that reported Sunbeam's income to be $186 million, much of which was improper under GAAP. The overstatements included in all over $90 million of improper revenue including, without limitation, approximately $5 million from the sham sale to EPI, approximately $4.5 million from non-GAAP bill-and-hold sales, approximately $35 million in income derived from the use of non-GAAP reserves and accruals taken at year-end 1996, and approximately $6 million from improper revenue recognition.

62. As Andersen and Harlow knew, Coleman-Parent relied on Sunbeam's report of $186 million in income in deciding to close the sale of its interest in Coleman Company. If Andersen had not issued a materially false and misleading audit report, and instead had complied with GAAP and GAAS, Sunbeam's 1997 operating income would have been approximately half of what Andersen certified in the financial statements.

G. Coleman-Parent Relies on Andersen's Unqualified Audit Opinions and Closes the Sale to Sunbeam.

63. The merger agreement signed by Coleman-Parent on February 27, 1998 provided that a condition precedent to Coleman-Parent's obligation to close the transaction was the absence of any event, change, or development that would have a material adverse effect on the business, results of operation, or financial condition of Sunbeam. The closing also was conditioned on the absence of any material misrepresentation or omissions in Sunbeam's SEC filings, including Andersen's 1996 and 1997 audit reports in the Form 10-Ks. If Andersen had not been negligent or fraudulent in performing its audits, and had issued qualified or adverse reports exposing the falsity of Sunbeam's financial statements, Coleman-Parent would have been put on notice of an adverse material change affecting Sunbeam before closing, and of a material misstatement in Sunbeam's SEC filings. Coleman-Parent's obligation to close the transaction with Sunbeam would have been discharged by the failure of a condition precedent, and Coleman-Parent never would have suffered losses in excess of $600 million. Coleman-Parent directly relied on Andersen's 1996 and 1997 audit reports when it decided to close the transaction with Sunbeam and to accept 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock as consideration for selling its interest in Coleman Company.

64. Andersen was fully aware of the terms and conditions of the Coleman Company transaction and of Coleman-Parent's anticipated and actual reliance upon Andersen's unqualified 1996 and 1997 audit opinions.

65. On March 30, 1998, unaware of the falsity of Sunbeam's financial statements and Andersen's audit reports, Coleman-Parent closed the transaction with Sunbeam and accepted 14.1 million shares of what turned out to be essentially worthless Sunbeam common stock for the sale of its interest in Coleman Company.

H. Andersen's Improper Accounting and Misrepresentations Are Revealed, Causing the Market Value of Sunbeam's Stock to Plummet.

66. Almost immediately after the consummation of Coleman-Parent's sale of Coleman Company to Sunbeam, Sunbeam's facade of financial health began to crumble.

67. In an April 3, 1998 conference call with securities analysts, Sunbeam revealed that sales for the first quarter of 1998 were 5% below reported sales for the same period of the prior year. Only two weeks earlier, on March 19, 1998, Sunbeam had issued a press release in which it announced that sales for the first quarter of 1998 were "expected to exceed" sales for the same period of the prior year.

68. On June 6, 1998, an article was published in Barron's that raised serious questions regarding Sunbeam's apparent success under Dunlap, and suggested it was the result of "accounting gimmickry." On June 15, 1998, Sunbeam's Board announced that it had removed Dunlap as Chairman and CEO.

69. On June 25, 1998, Andersen withheld its consent for use of its 1997 audit opinion in a registration statement that was to have been filed with the SEC.

70. On June 30, 1998, Sunbeam announced that the Audit Committee of its Board of Directors would conduct an inquiry into the accuracy of its 1997 financial statements. The Audit Committee subsequently retained Deloitte & Touche LLP to assist in the review, in addition to Arthur Andersen. Sunbeam stated that "pending the completion of its review, its 1997 financial statements and the report of Arthur Andersen LLP should not be relied upon." Sunbeam added that the review "could result in a restatement of the 1997 financial statements and the first quarter 1998 Form 10-Q."

71. On August 6, 1998, Sunbeam announced that its Audit Committee had determined that Sunbeam would be required to restate its audited financial statements for 1997 and possibly for 1996, as well as its unaudited financial statements for the first quarter of 1998.

72. On November 12, 1998, Sunbeam released its restated 1996 and 1997 financial results, again audited by Andersen. The restated 1996 financial statements reported operating losses for 1996 that were approximately $40 million less than originally reported, losses from continuing operations that were approximately $26 million less than previously reported, and net losses that were approximately $20 million less than previously reported.

73. The restated 1997 financial statements reported operating earnings for 1997 that were approximately $95 million less than originally reported, earnings from continuing operations that were approximately $70 million less than previously reported, and net earnings that were approximately $70 million less than previously reported. The new operating income figure for 1997 was approximately 50% less than the amount Andersen previously certified.

74. In the wake of Dunlap's firing, Sunbeam's board of directors asked members of Coleman-Parent's management to assume key positions within Sunbeam in order to carry out damage control and attempt to salvage the value remaining in the company. New management was unable to overcome the devastating effects of the manipulation and distortion of Sunbeam's business.

75. On February 5, 2001, Sunbeam filed a voluntary petition for Chapter 11.

76. As a result of having been fraudulently induced into exchanging its ownership of Coleman Company for over 14 million shares of Sunbeam stock, Coleman-Parent has suffered direct damages in excess of $600,000,000.

VIOLATIONS OF GAAP AND GAAS IN ANDERSEN'S 1996 AND 1997 AUDITS

77. The objectives of financial reporting are to provide information that is useful in investment and credit decisions, information that is useful in assessing cash flow prospects, and information about enterprise resources, claims to those resources, and changes in them. (See "Objectives of Financial Reporting by Business Enterprises," Statement of Financial Accounting Concepts No. 1 (Financial Accounting Standards Board, November 1978).) In order to minimize misinterpretation of financial statements, the accounting profession has developed sets of standards regarding financial reporting and auditing practice that are generally accepted and universally practiced. Those standards are known as GAAP and GAAS. The development of common standards for auditing and financial reporting has provided businesspeople and investors with a valuable frame of reference in evaluating the financial condition of enterprises.

78. Auditors know they must adhere to GAAP and GAAS, or the standards would cease to have any meaning. Consistent with the objectives of the profession in developing those standards, the public has come to understand the importance of GAAP and GAAS in enhancing the reliability of audited financial statements. As a result, when an auditing firm represents that it has conducted an audit of a company in accordance with GAAS, and opines that such company's financial statements present the company's financial condition fairly in conformity with GAAP, readers of those financial statements have the right to rely on the integrity of those financial statements.

79. In auditing Sunbeam in 1996 and 1997, and in issuing unqualified opinions regarding Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements, Andersen and Harlow did not adhere to the standards of the profession. Although Andersen's audit opinions stated that the firm had conducted its audits of Sunbeam in accordance with GAAS, and based on those audits had concluded that Sunbeam's financial statements presented the company's financial condition fairly in conformity with GAAP, that simply was not true.

A. Sunbeam's Audited 1996 and 1997 Financial Statements Were Not In Conformity With GAAP.

80. As alleged below, Sunbeam's audited 1996 and 1997 financial statements failed to conform to GAAP in numerous respects.

81. Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements, certified by Andersen, failed to conform to GAAP because those financial statements did not comply with the accounting principle of reliability. That principle requires that the quality of reported information assures that the information is reasonably free from error or bias and faithfully represents what it purports to represent. FASB Statement of Financial Accounting Concepts No. 2, §§ 58-71; APB Statement No. 4, §§ 109, 138, 189.

82. The financial statements also failed to comply with the accounting principle of completeness, which requires that financial information be complete and that it validly represent the underlying event and conditions. FASB Statement of Financial Accounting Concepts No. 2, §§ 79, 80; APB Statement No. 4, § 94.

83. The financial statements also failed to comply with the accounting principle of conservatism, which requires that a conservative approach be taken in the accounting for transactions and the early recognition of unfavorable events. FASB Statement of Financial Accounting Concepts No. 2, §§ 91-97; APB Statements No. 9, §§ 35, 71.

84. The financial statements also failed to comply with the accounting principle of neutrality, which requires that there should be an absence in reported information of bias intended to attain a predetermined result. FASB Statement of Financial Accounting Concepts No. 2, § 98.

85. The financial statements also failed to comply with the accounting principle of relevance, which requires that reported information should have the capacity to make a difference in a decision by helping users to form predictions about the outcomes of past, present and future events. FASB Statement of Financial Accounting Concepts No. 2, §§ 47, 48.

B. Andersen's 1996 and 1997 Audits Were Not Conducted In Accordance With GAAS.

86. As alleged below, Andersen failed in numerous respects to conduct its audits in accordance with GAAS.

87. Andersen and Harlow violated GAAS because they negligently or fraudulently failed to perform the audits with an attitude of professional skepticism as required by Statement on Auditing Standards ("SAS") No. 53, which states: "An audit of financial statements in accordance with generally accepted accounting standards should be planned and performed with an attitude of professional skepticism.” AU § 316.16. Thus:

a. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently failed to reach a conclusion that there existed a significant risk of intentional distortion of financial statements by Sunbeam management. Andersen and Harlow should have reached that conclusion because Sunbeam’s management was dominated by a single person, Dunlap; because Dunlap’s attitude toward financial reporting was unduly aggressive; because Dunlap placed undue emphasis on meeting earnings projections; because of the extremely rapid change in Sunbeam’s performance; and/or because Dunlap’s plan to quickly “turn around” and sell Sunbeam incentivized him to distort financial statements. See AU §§ 316.10 and 316.12.

b. Andersen and Harlow also were negligent or fraudulent in failing to recognize that the accounting policies employed by Sunbeam were not acceptable in the circumstances. Thus, “when the auditor has reached a conclusion that there is a significant risk of intentional distortion of financial statements, the auditor should recognize that management’s selection and application of significant accounting policies, particularly those related to revenue recognition, asset valuation, and capitalization versus expensing, may be misused. Increased risk of intentional distortion of the financial statements should cause greater concern about whether accounting principles that are otherwise generally accepted are being used in inappropriate circumstances to create a distortion of earnings.” AU § 316.19.

c. Andersen and Harlow also acted negligently or fraudulently by failing to obtain sufficient competent evidential matter through inspection, observation, inquiries, and confirmations to afford a reasonable basis for its opinions regarding Sunbeam's financial statements. That failure violated the third standard of field work adopted by the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants ("AICPA") (AU § 150.02). Furthermore, "[w]hen evaluation at the financial statement level indicates significant risk, the auditor requires more or different evidence to support material transactions than would be the case in the absence of such risk. For example, the auditor may perform additional procedures to determine that sales are properly recorded, giving consideration to the possibility that the buyer has a right to return the product. Transactions that are both large and unusual, particularly at year-end, should be selected for testing." AU § 316.20.

88. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently failed to exercise due professional care in the performance of the 1996 and 1997 audits, in violation of the AICPA's third general auditing standard (AU § 150.02).

89. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently failed to plan the work adequately to uncover the errors and irregularities in Sunbeam's accounting information, in violation of the AICPA's first standard of field work (AU § 150.02).

90. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently failed to obtain a sufficient understanding of Sunbeam's internal control structure to plan the audits and to determine the nature, timing, and extent of tests to be performed, in violation of the AICPA's second standard of field work (AU § 150.02). Specifically, Andersen and Harlow fraudulently failed to assess properly the risk of management override of controls in light of Dunlap's plan to quickly "turn around" and sell Sunbeam.

91. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently relied on management representations rather than applying the auditing procedures necessary to afford a reasonable basis for an opinion on Sunbeam's financial statements, in violation of SAS No. 19 (AU § 333.02).

92. Andersen and Harlow were negligent or fraudulent in not recognizing that misstatements resulting from misapplication of GAAP, departures from fact, and omissions of necessary information, in aggregate, caused Sunbeam's financial statements to be materially misstated, in violation of SAS No. 47 (AU § 312.04).

93. As alleged above, on numerous occasions Andersen and Harlow concluded that certain misstatements caused Sunbeam's financial statements to be materially misstated. Although they requested that Sunbeam management eliminate the misstatements, management refused. Andersen acted negligently or fraudulently in not issuing a qualified or adverse opinion in such instances, in violation of SAS No. 47 (AU § 312.31).

94. Andersen and Harlow were negligent or fraudulent in concluding that the accounting principles applied by Sunbeam were appropriate in the circumstances and that Sunbeam's financial statements were informative of matters that could affect their use, understanding, and interpretation, in violation of SAS No. 69 (AU § 411.04(b) and (c)).

95. Andersen and Harlow were negligent or fraudulent in failing to report that a change in the application of accounting principles in Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements had materially affected their comparability with the financial statements for prior periods, especially 1996, due to a different treatment of sales and reserves in those periods, in violation of SAS Nos. 1 and 43 (AU § 420.02).

96. Andersen's and Harlow's failure to conduct the audits in accordance with GAAS, and Andersen's certification of financial statements that were not in conformity with GAAP, as shown above, caused Coleman-Parent to suffer damages in excess of $600,000,000.

COUNT I
Fraudulent Misrepresentation

97. Coleman-Parent repeats and realleges each and every allegation above as if set forth fully herein.

98. At the time Andersen issued its unqualified audit opinions for Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements, Andersen and Harlow possessed knowledge superior to Coleman-Parent concerning Sunbeam's financial position, the accounting principles Sunbeam used, the results of Sunbeam's operations and cash flows, and whether Sunbeam's financial condition was presented in conformity with GAAP.

99. As described in detail above, Andersen and Harlow made representations of fact that were false in the unqualified audit opinions it issued for Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements, including, among other things, (a) that Andersen's audits of Sunbeam were conducted in accordance with GAAS; (b) that Sunbeam's financial statements fairly presented the financial position of Sunbeam during the relevant periods; (c) that Sunbeam's financial statements fairly presented the results of Sunbeam's operations and cash flows during the relevant periods; and (d) that Sunbeam's financial statements were in conformity with GAAP.

100. As described in detail above, Andersen and Harlow knew that those representations were false at the time they were made and/or made those representations with recklessness as to their truth.

101. Andersen consented to the publication of its audit reports to the public and business world by consenting to their inclusion in Sunbeam's SEC filings. Given that publication, Andersen and Harlow intended that the public – including Coleman-Parent – would rely on Andersen's representations. Moreover, Andersen and Harlow specifically knew the terms of the agreement for Coleman-Parent's sale of Coleman Company to Sunbeam and consented to the publication of Andersen's audit report in Sunbeam's March 6, 1998 Form 10-K filing with the intent that Coleman-Parent rely upon Andersen's representations.

102. In agreeing to sell its interest in Coleman Company for approximately 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock plus cash and other consideration, Coleman-Parent reasonably and justifiably relied upon Andersen's representations and omissions as to Andersen's 1996 and 1997 audits.

103. But for Andersen's misrepresentations, Coleman-Parent would not have agreed sell its business to Sunbeam in return for artificially-inflated Sunbeam stock, among other consideration. As a result of Andersen's and Harlow's misconduct, Coleman-Parent has been damaged in excess of $600,000,000.

COUNT II
Fraudulent Inducement To Contract
(Conspiracy and Concerted Action)

104. Coleman-Parent repeats and realleges each and every allegation above as if set forth fully herein.

105. As described in detail above, Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements contained false statements of material fact. Those material misrepresentations included, among other things, (a) overstating Sunbeam's 1996 operating losses by approximately $40 million; (b) overstating Sunbeam's 1996 losses from continuing operations by approximately $26 million; (c) overstating Sunbeam's 1996 net losses by approximately $20 million; (d) overstating Sunbeam's 1997 operating earnings by approximately $95 million; (e) overstating

Sunbeam's 1997 earnings from continuing operations by over $70 million; (f) overstating Sunbeam's 1997 net earnings by approximately $70 million; and (g) overstating Sunbeam's 1997 operating income figure by approximately 50%.

106. As described in detail above, Andersen and Harlow made representations of fact that were false in the unqualified audit opinions it issued for Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements, including, among other things, (a) that Andersen's audits of Sunbeam were conducted in accordance with GAAS; (b) that Sunbeam's financial statements fairly presented the financial position of Sunbeam during the relevant periods; (c) that Sunbeam's financial statements fairly presented the results of Sunbeam's operations and cash flows during the relevant periods; and (d) that Sunbeam's financial statements were in conformity with GAAP.

107. As described in detail above, Sunbeam, Andersen, and Harlow knew that those representations were false when made and/or made those representations with reckless disregard as to their truth.

108. In order to induce Coleman-Parent further into entering into and fulfilling a contract to sell its interest in Coleman Company to Sunbeam in exchange for approximately 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock, Sunbeam represented that its SEC filings dating back to January 1, 1997 were accurate and not misleading as of February 27, 1998 and would be accurate and not misleading on March 30, 1998. Sunbeam's management, Andersen, and Harlow knew and/or recklessly disregarded that those representations were false when made because Sunbeam's SEC filings contained Sunbeam's false and misleading 1996 and 1997 financial statements and Andersen's false and misleading audit reports.

109. In reasonable and justifiable reliance on Sunbeam's representations that its SEC filings – including its financial statements and Andersen's audit reports – were accurate with respect to Sunbeam's financial position and operating results, Coleman-Parent agreed to accept 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock and other consideration in exchange for its controlling stake in Coleman Company.

110. As a proximate result of its reliance on those misrepresentations, Coleman-Parent gave up its stake in Coleman Company in exchange for shares of Sunbeam which, once the truth of Sunbeam's financial situation was revealed, became worthless. Those misrepresentations proximately caused injury to Coleman-Parent in excess of $600,000,000.

111. Andersen and Harlow were part of a team with Dunlap, Kersh, and the other senior Sunbeam executives that acted in concert and wrongfully conspired to create the appearance that Sunbeam was performing at a high level to artificially inflate the stock price of Sunbeam and make it attractive for a sale to another company. Andersen and Harlow explicitly or implicitly by acquiescence agreed to become part of that conspiracy and committed overt acts in furtherance of its fraudulent scheme in order to retain Sunbeam as a client and earn significant fees.

112. In furtherance of that conspiracy, Dunlap and the other Sunbeam executives decided to acquire Coleman Company in order to further increase Sunbeam's stock price and maintain the illusion of its good performance. In pursuance of that scheme, Andersen and Harlow committed the overt acts of issuing Andersen's false and misleading March 1998 unqualified audit opinion with respect to Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements and of consenting to its publication to the SEC as part of Sunbeam's Form 10-K filing on March 6, 1998. Andersen and Harlow knew that Andersen's audit opinion would be used by Sunbeam to induce Coleman-Parent into selling its controlling stake in Coleman Company in exchange for shares of artificially-inflated Sunbeam stock. Andersen's audit report also furthered that conspiracy by actively supporting the illusion of Sunbeam's performance that had been created in the market, which helped support the company's artificially-inflated stock price. In doing so, Andersen and Harlow committed the tortious act of fraudulent inducement in concert with Dunlap and the other Sunbeam executives pursuant to a common design.

113. As described above, Coleman-Parent was damaged as a result of those concerted acts performed as part of that conspiracy.

COUNT III
Negligent Misrepresentation

114. Coleman-Parent repeats and realleges each and every allegation above as if set forth fully herein.

115. Andersen provided the information in its audit reports regarding Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements in the course of its business as an accounting firm in the employ of Sunbeam.

116. In issuing its audit report regarding Sunbeam's 1997 and 1996 financial statements and in consenting to that report's inclusion in Sunbeam's March 6, 1998 Form 10-K filing with the SEC, Andersen and Harlow were aware that such information was being provided, in part, for the specific guidance and reliance of Coleman-Parent, which was agreeing to sell Coleman Company to Sunbeam for approximately 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock plus cash. In particular, Sunbeam warranted and represented to Coleman-Parent that its SEC filings, and audited financial statements including Andersen's report, were accurate – a fact that Andersen and Harlow were aware of when Andersen issued its report and consented to its publication. Andersen and Harlow expected that Coleman-Parent would rely on Andersen's 1997 audit report. Andersen and Harlow also were aware and expected that Coleman-Parent specifically was relying on Andersen's previously issued 1996 audit report, which Andersen did not retract until long after the Coleman Company transaction closed.

117. As described in detail above, Andersen's unqualified audit opinions for Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements contained material falsehoods, including, among other things, (a) that its audits of Sunbeam were conducted in accordance with GAAS; (b) that Sunbeam's financial statements fairly presented the financial position of Sunbeam during the relevant periods; (c) that Sunbeam's financial statements fairly presented the results of Sunbeam's operations and cash flows during the relevant periods; and (d) that Sunbeam's financial statements were in conformity with GAAP.

118. As described in more detail above, Andersen and Harlow failed to exercise reasonable care or competence in obtaining or communicating the information contained in their audit reports regarding Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements.

119. Coleman-Parent reasonably and justifiably relied upon the information contained in Andersen's audit reports, including their material falsehoods regarding Sunbeam's financial condition and operating results and regarding the conformance of Sunbeam's financial statements to GAAP. In reliance on those material falsehoods, Coleman-Parent agreed to sell its interest in Coleman Company for approximately 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock, cash, and other consideration.

120. As a result of Andersen's and Harlow's misconduct, Coleman-Parent has been injured in an amount in excess of $600,000,000.

WHEREFORE, plaintiff Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc. demands judgment against Arthur Andersen LLP and Phillip E. Harlow as follows:

- A. Compensatory damages in an amount in excess of $600,000,000;

DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO STAY DISCOVERY

Defendant Morgan Stanley & Co. Incorporated ("MS & Co."), pursuant to Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.280(c), moves for a protective order staying all discovery in this action until the Court has had an opportunity to rule on MS & Co.'s Motion to Dismiss Pursuant to Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.061 (forum non conveniens), and to rule on MS & Co.'s case dispositive Motion For Judgment on the Pleadings. The protective order sought in this motion is designed to protect MS & Co. — and non-party witnesses in this case — from the undue burden and unnecessary expense that would occur from allowing discovery to go forward in a case that is not even properly before this Court.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Plaintiff Coleman (Parent) Holdings Inc. ("CPH") filed this action on May 8, 2003, alleging that it was persuaded to sell its stake in the Coleman Company ("Coleman") to the Sunbeam Corporation ("Sunbeam") in reliance on false and misleading representations about Sunbeam's financial health. The only named defendant is MS & Co., who served as a financial advisor to Sunbeam for part of the deal and who played no role in auditing Sunbeam's financial statements or making representations regarding Sunbeam's financial health. CPH has recently pursued identical claims in this Court against Arthur Anderson — Sunbeam's auditor — and settled those claims for an undisclosed sum.

Immediately after filing its Complaint, Plaintiff served MS & Co. with notice to take depositions of ten individuals over a two week period starting July 10, 2003. (See May 9, 2003 Notice of Taking Videotaped Deps. ("Notice of Deps.") (Ex. A).) Most of these individuals are New York residents; only one is an MS & Co. employee (and he works and lives in London); and only one is under the legal control of MS & Co. Plaintiff also served MS & Co. with a blanket request for production of documents, containing sixty-one separate paragraphs many of which themselves contain two or three separate and independent requests. (See May 9, 2003 Pl.'s 1st Request for Prod. of Docs. ("1st Request") (Ex. B).) These requests have nothing to do with Florida — to the contrary, all or substantially all of the requested documents are located in New York.¹

MS & Co. answered the Complaint on June 23, 2003. The Answer demonstrates that the Complaint fails to state any legally valid claims. The Complaint contains no factual allegation that CPH relied on any representation attributed to MS & Co. and the documents quoted in the Complaint foreclose such reliance as a matter of law. Moreover, MS & Co.'s affiliate lent and lost hundreds of millions of dollars to Sunbeam in the course of the Coleman transaction. Thus, rather than being complicit in the fraud alleged in the Complaint, the pleadings show that MS & Co. was itself a victim of that fraud.

¹ They are also redundant and abusive. See, e.g., id. ¶ 2 ("All documents reflecting all fees and expenses paid by Sunbeam to you, including without limitation all billing statements, invoices, time detail records, individual calendars, daily diaries (including electronic calendar programs), or other documents that describe or record the time spent, or expenses incurred (including back-up for any out-of-pocket expenses), by any Morgan Stanley personnel, or that describe or record any aspect of their activities concerning any services performed on behalf of, or concerning Sunbeam."); id. ¶ 29 ("All documents concerning the closing of the Subordinated Debenture Offering including without limitation all documents concerning the decision to close the Subordinated Debenture Offering."); id. ¶ 30 ("All documents concerning the Subordinated Debenture Offering."); id. ¶ 35 ("All documents concerning the Coleman Transaction."); id. ¶ 36 ("All documents concerning the Subordinated Debenture Offering."); id. ¶ 39 ("All documents concerning Coleman or CPH."); id. ¶ 41 ("All documents concerning the events and matters that are the subject of the Complaint filed [in] this action.").

Simultaneously with this Motion to Stay Discovery, MS & Co. has filed its Motion to Dismiss Pursuant to Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.061 Or, In The Alternative, For Judgment On The Pleadings (“Motion to Dismiss”), which provides the Court with two substantial and independent grounds for disposing of Plaintiff’s Complaint in its entirety.

First, MS & Co. moves to dismiss on the ground of forum non conveniens pursuant to Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.061. Under Rule 1.061, CPH’s lawsuit should proceed in New York — where the events and injuries it complains of allegedly occurred, where both parties are headquartered, and where the overwhelming majority of the witnesses and relevant documents are located. This strong preference for a New York forum is confirmed by the fact that this Court — or any other court adjudicating this controversy — will have to apply New York law to Plaintiff’s claims.

Second, MS & Co. moves for judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.140(c). As set forth in detail in the Motion to Dismiss and Memorandum of Law filed in support thereof, Plaintiff’s Complaint suffers from numerous legal defects and should be dismissed in its entirety for failure to state a legally valid Claim.

DISCUSSION

I. This Court Has Broad Discretion To Control The Timing And Sequence Of Discovery.

Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.280(c) authorizes this Court to stay burdensome and ultimately wasteful discovery pending decision on dispositive motions. Rule 1.280(c) provides:

Upon motion by a party or the person from who discovery is sought, and for good cause shown, the court in which the action is pending may make any order to protect a party or person from annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden or expense that justice requires

Fla. R. Civ. P. 1.280(c). Additionally, Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.280(d) authorizes the Court, upon motion of one of the parties, to issue an order controlling the timing and sequence of discovery “for the convenience of parties and witnesses and in the interest of justice.”

Together, Rule 1.280(c) and Rule 1.280(d) provide the court with broad discretion to impose a stay of discovery pending the determination of dispositive motions by the issuance of a protective order. See, e.g., Rasmussen v. South Fla. Blood Serv., Inc., 500 So. 2d 533, 535 (Fla. 1987) (“The discovery rules . . . confer broad discretion on the trial court to limit or prohibit discovery.”); SCI Funeral Servs. of Fla., Inc. v. Light, 811 So. 2d 796, 798 (Fla. 4th DCA 2002) (“[T]he scope and limitation of discovery is within the broad discretion of the trial court.”).

II. A Stay Of Discovery Is Particularly Appropriate Here Because MS & Co.’s Motion To Dismiss Raises Substantial Forum Non Conveniens Issues — And May Dispose of Plaintiff’s Entire Action As A Matter Of Law.

The requested stay of discovery pending resolution of MS & Co.’s Motion to Dismiss would best serve the interests of justice and judicial economy in this case because that Motion raises the serious threshold question whether — under Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.061 — Florida is the even appropriate forum for resolution of Plaintiff’s claims.

Indeed, nothing compels this Court to oversee the discovery of a New York plaintiff against a New York defendant regarding a transaction that was based entirely in New York. And the oversight required here would be substantial. As stated above, Plaintiff here requests discovery from non-party witnesses over whom MS & Co. has no legal control and of potentially hundreds of thousands of documents, few of which have anything to do with the merits of Plaintiff’s claims, and all (or substantially all) of which are located outside of Florida. (See 1st Request and Notice of Deps.) None of this discovery, of course, is relevant to the dispositive questions now pending before this Court — i.e., whether this Court is the proper forum to resolve this New York-based controversy and/or whether the Complaint states any legally valid claim — either of which may dispose of this case in its entirety.

Under these circumstances, a stay of the discovery sought by Plaintiff is warranted on a number of independent grounds:

First, because this action should proceed — if at all — in New York, not Florida, this Court is not the proper forum for directing discovery on the merits of Plaintiff's claims. See, e.g., Gleneagle Ship Mgmt. Co. v. Leondakos, 602 So. 2d 1282, 1284 (Fla. 1992) (discovery conducted during pendency of motion to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction should not address merits of case and “should not be broad, onerous or expansive”); Church of Scientology of Cal., Inc. v. Cazares, 401 So. 2d 810, 810 (Fla. 2d DCA 1981) (authority of a trial court found to lack venue is limited to entry of an order dismissing or transferring the case).

Second, it would impose an unnecessary burden and expense to require the parties to engage in extensive discovery prior to this Court's ruling on a motion that is likely to dispose of the entire case as a matter of law. See, e.g., Chudasama v. Mazda Motor Corp., 123 F.3d 1353, 1367 (11th Cir. 1997) (“Facial challenges to the legal sufficiency of a claim or defense, such as a motion to dismiss based on failure to state a claim for relief, should . . . be resolved before discovery begins.”) (emphasis added).²

² Florida courts look to federal decisions for guidance in interpreting Florida's Rules of Civil Procedure. See, e.g., Gleneagle, 602 So. 2d at 1283-84; Smith v. Southern Baptist Hosp. of Fla., Inc., 564 So. 2d 1115, 1117 & n.2 (Fla. 1st DCA 1990) (federal cases are “pertinent and highly persuasive” for construing Rule 1.280(c)). These federal decisions typically stay discovery in circumstances materially indistinguishable from this case — indeed, there appears to be no reported case of any jurisdiction questioning a trial court's broad discretion to limit discovery in the circumstances presented here. See, e.g., Enplanar, Inc. v. Marsh, 11 F.3d 1284, 1291 (5th Cir. 1994) (“[Plaintiffs] cite to no authority, and we have found none, holding the district court has abused its discretion in denying merits-related discovery pending ruling on a motion for change of venue.”) (emphasis added); Landry v. Air Line Pilots Ass'n Int'l, 901 F.2d 404, 435-36 (5th Cir. 1990) (affirming stay of broad discovery not related to

Third, non-party witnesses should not be forced to retain counsel and appear for depositions before it is determined that there is some basis for this suit to proceed in this forum, if at all. See Chudasama, 123 F.3d at 1368 (“Allowing a case to proceed through the pretrial process with an invalid claim. . . . does nothing but waste the resources of the litigants in the action before the court, delay resolution of disputes between other litigants, squander scarce judicial resources, and damage the integrity and the public’s perception of the . . . judicial system.”).

Fourth, the discovery sought here imposes the sort of “undue burden or expense” for which “justice requires” a temporary stay under Rule 1.280(c). Plaintiff has indiscriminately demanded every scrap of information from “Morgan Stanley” — defined broadly to include all subsidiaries, divisions, predecessors, successors, and representatives — that even tangentially relates to claims alleged in the Complaint. This information would come in the form of hardcopy files, electronic servers, computer hard drives, and electronic mail, among other sources, and could generate hundreds of thousands of documents from multiple facilities. It is hard to imagine a more burdensome or unnecessary request at this stage of the litigation.

dispositive motion); Transunion Corp. v. PepsiCo, Inc., 811 F.2d 127, 130 (2d Cir. 1987) (affirming stay of discovery pending decision on motion to dismiss for forum non conveniens); Spencer Trask Software & Info. Servs., L.L.C. v. RPost Int’l Ltd., 206 F.R.D. 367, 368 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (“[S]tay of discovery should be granted where motion to dismiss ‘is potentially dispositive, and appears to be not unfounded in the law.’”) (emphasis added) (quoting Gandler v. Nazarov, No. 94 Civ. 2272 (CSH), 1994 WL 702004, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 14, 1994)); Johnson v. New York Univ. School of Educ., 205 F.R.D. 433, 434 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (granting stay where “defendant’s motion to dismiss is potentially dispositive and does not appear to be unfounded in the law”) (emphasis added); Chavous v. D.C. Fin. Responsibility & Mgmt Assistance Auth., 201 F.R.D. 1, 2 (D.D.C. 2001) (“It is well settled that discovery is generally considered inappropriate while a motion that would be thoroughly dispositive of the claims in the Complaint is pending.”) (internal quotation & citation omitted; emphasis added); Anti-Monopoly, Inc. v. Hasbro, Inc., No. 94 Civ. 2120 (LMM), 1996 WL 101277, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. March 7, 1996) (granting stay on the ground that discovery “will be totally unnecessary if [Defendant’s] motion for judgment on the pleadings . . . is granted”) (emphasis added).

Finally, Plaintiff will not be prejudiced if discovery is postponed. The question whether the Plaintiff states any legally valid claims is a pure question of law — no factual development can assist the Court in making that determination. Nor do any of Plaintiff's discovery requests pertain to whether this Court is a proper forum for this suit. At bottom, Plaintiff has filed suit in a foreign jurisdiction with no connection to the underlying claim and now seeks to have discovery directed by a foreign court against a foreign defendant and non-party witnesses. The interests of justice, judicial economy, fundamental fairness and common sense require that such discovery be stayed prior to a ruling on whether this case even belongs in Florida and/or whether this case presents any legally valid claims.

CONCLUSION

Staying discovery pending resolution of MS & Co.'s Motion to Dismiss best serves the interest of justice and judicial economy. MS & Co.'s Motion to Dismiss will allow the Court to dispose of Plaintiff's entire action with no additional expenditure of resources by the parties. Compared to the burden of discovery, especially for non-party and non-resident witnesses, Plaintiff will suffer no cognizable injury from allowing the Court to determine whether the Florida courts are a proper forum for this case before discovery commences. Allowing discovery to go forward, however — before the forum issue has been determined and the legal sufficiency of Plaintiff's Complaint has been established — would be wasteful, burdensome, and prejudicial.

For these reasons, Defendant MS & Co. respectfully requests that this Court enter an order staying all discovery pending the Court's rulings on MS & Co.'s Motion to Dismiss.

ANTI-MONOPOLY, INC., Plaintiff,
v.
HASBRO, INC., Defendant.

No. 94Civ.2120(LMM)(AJP).

March 7, 1996.

Carl E. Person, New York City, for Anti-Monopoly, Inc.

OPINION AND ORDER

PECK, United States Magistrate Judge:

*1 In this antitrust action by Anti-Monopoly, Inc. against major game manufacturer Hasbro, Inc. (the manufacturer of, among other games, "Monopoly"), defendant Hasbro seeks a stay of discovery relating to plaintiff's "secondary-line" Robinson-Patman Act claims until Judge McKenna rules on Hasbro's recently filed motion for judgment on the pleadings on those claims for plaintiff's lack of antitrust standing. For the reasons set forth below, Hasbro's pending motion for judgment on the pleadings provides "good cause" for the stay of discovery, which is granted.

FACTS

Anti-Monopoly's Complaint

Anti-Monopoly's amended complaint (hereafter, "complaint") is summarized in Judge McKenna's prior Opinion granting in part defendants' motion to dismiss the complaint, familiarity with which is assumed. Anti-Monopoly, Inc. v. Hasbro, Inc., 94 Civ. 2120, 1995 WL 380300 (S.D.N.Y. June 27, 1995). Plaintiff Anti-Monopoly, which possesses less than 1% of the market for family board games, developed and marketed a family board game called "Anti-Monopoly."

Id. at *1. Defendant Hasbro is the leading manufacturer of family board games with more than 80% of the market. Id. The complaint also named retailers Toys "R" Us and K-Mart as defendants, id., but plaintiff has subsequently settled with both of them. (See Declaration of Marthe Larosiliere, dated February 22, 1996 [hereafter "Larosiliere Dec."], Exs. A(3)-(4).)

After Judge McKenna's June 1995 decision, the following claims survived against Hasbro: (1) Count I -- violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act "by monopolizing, wilfully attempting to monopolize, and combining and conspiring to monopolize, the manufacturing and sale of family board games" (1996 WL 380300 at *4-5); (2) Count III -- tortious interference with advantageous business relationships under New York law (id. at *6-7); (3) Count VI -- Hasbro's violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act by acquiring competitors where the effect has been to substantially lessen competition and to create a monopoly (id. at *8); (4) Count VII -- violation of the Robinson-Patman Act (§ 2 of the Clayton Act) by "providing substantial discounts, terms and services to major family board game retailers which are not made available on equal terms to competing smaller family board game retailers and wholesalers and which are not either cost justified or otherwise permitted under § 2." (id. at *8, quoting complaint; see also id. at *9); (5) Count VIII -- violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act through illegal contracts, conspiracies and combinations to restrain trade (id. at *9-10); and (6) Count IX -- violation of § 3 of the Clayton Act by selling to K-Mart, Toys "R" Us and others on terms which require them not to buy from Anti-Monopoly and other small competitors (id. at *3).

This motion relates to Count VII of the complaint, plaintiff's Robinson-Patman Act claims for price discrimination. See id. at *8-9. Plaintiff has alleged both a primary-line and secondary-line Robinson-Patman Act claim. Finding that the amended complaint alleged that Hasbro "prices its products below an appropriate measure of its costs," as required by the case law under the Robinson-Patman Act, the Court upheld the claim. Id. at *9. The

(Cite as: 1996 WL 101277, *1 (S.D.N.Y.))

Court noted, however, that "[b]ecause the Court agrees that Anti-Monopoly has stated a claim for primary-line injury, the Court does not address at this time Anti-Monopoly's claim that it has suffered a secondary-line injury." Id.

*2 Hasbro has now moved before Judge McKenna to dismiss plaintiff's secondary-line Robinson-Patman Act claim for lack of standing. That motion, which is pending, provides the linchpin for Hasbro's motion to stay discovery.

Because the difference between primary and secondary-line injury is the key to these motions, I quote Judge McKenna's explanation of primary and secondary-line cases:

Two classes of plaintiffs are recognized to have standing to bring a Robinson-Patman claim. Direct competitors of the predator are said to suffer primary-line injury when they are unable to match the predator's prices and must either sell at a loss or lose market share. Competitors of the favored purchasers are said to suffer secondary-line injuries when they are forced to compete in the same market as the purchasers who are enjoying the benefit of lower overhead for the same product. Anti-Monopoly has argued that it has suffered both types of injuries.

Id. at *9.

Anti-Monopoly's Discovery Requests

After the initial pretrial conference on August 9, 1995, by Order dated August 16, 1995, the Court set a cutoff date of March 15, 1996 for fact discovery and May 10, 1996 for expert discovery. The Court notes that the parties had proposed, and the Court rejected, a much more leisurely schedule -- fact discovery through September 1996 and expert discovery through March 30, 1997. (See 8/9/95 "Proposed Joint Discovery Plan.")

In late December 1995, plaintiff served Requests to Admit and a Second Set of Interrogatories on defendant Hasbro, seeking discovery in support of plaintiff's secondary-line Robinson-Patman Act claim. (Larosiliere Dec. Exs. F-G.) In late January, plaintiff served a Second Set of Requests to Admit, containing requests 201-431, all of which appear directed at the secondary-line claim. (Id. Ex. I.) That same day, plaintiff served its Second Request for Production of Documents, including 12 requests directed at plaintiff's secondary-line claim. (Id. Ex. J.)

ANALYSIS

Pursuant to Rule 26(c), it is clear that the Court has the discretion to stay discovery for "good cause," and that good cause may be shown where a party has filed (or sought leave to file) a dispositive motion such as a motion to dismiss. This is especially so where the stay is for a "short" period of time and the opposing party (here, plaintiff) will not be prejudiced by the stay. See, e.g., In re Towers Financial Corp. Noteholders Litigation, 93 Civ. 0810, --- WL ----- (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 29, 1996) (Peck, M.J.); American Booksellers Assoc., Inc. v. Houghton Mifflin Co., 94 Civ. 8566, 1995 WL 72376 at *1 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 22, 1995); Gandler v. Nazarov, 94 Civ. 2272, 1994 WL 702004 at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 14, 1994); Chrysler Corp. v. Century Power Corp., 137 F.R.D. 209, 211 (S.D.N.Y. 1991); 2 M. Silberberg, Civil Practice in the Southern District of New York § 24.04 at 24-8 (and cases cited therein) (1995).

The Breadth and Burden of the Requested Discovery

*3 Two related factors that the courts consider in deciding a motion for a stay of discovery are the breadth of the discovery sought and the burden of responding to it. E.g., American Booksellers v. Houghton Mifflin, 1995 WL 72376 at *1; Chrysler v. Century, 137 F.R.D. at 211. Here, plaintiff's secondary-line discovery requests are quite extensive. They involve almost 300 Requests to Admit, as well as 14 interrogatories and 12 document requests. (See Hasbro's Brief at 4-5 & nn.7-8, 10; see also Berger 2/29/96 Letter to the Court at 1-2.) These requests will be totally unnecessary if Hasbro's motion for judgment on the pleadings as to the secondary-line Robinson-Patman Act claim is granted.

(Cite as: 1996 WL 101277, *3 (S.D.N.Y.))

(The Court is relying on Hasbro's assertion that these requests only relate to the secondary-line claim, which has not been challenged by plaintiff.)

There Is No Prejudice to Plaintiff from a Stay of Discovery

Another factor that the courts consider is whether the party opposing the stay would be unfairly prejudiced by a stay. E.g., Gandler v. Nazarov, 1994 WL 702004 at *4; Chrysler v. Century, 137 F.R.D. at 211.

Plaintiff will not be prejudiced by a stay here. Plaintiff argues that "The requested stay would destroy the accelerated time schedule for discovery under which the parties and the Court have been working, and almost reached." (Person 2/26/96 Letter to the Court, at 1.) It is true that fact discovery is scheduled to be completed by March 15, 1996. The Court notes, however, that the parties originally proposed that fact discovery run through September 1996 (and expert discovery through March 30, 1997.) The deadlines were accelerated only because this Court believes in running a "rocket docket" and suggested that the parties could condense and expedite their discovery schedule, to which they agreed. The Court has every reason to believe that Hasbro's motion will be decided, and if it is denied that the additional fact and expert discovery needed will be conducted, before the original March 30, 1997 cutoff date.

Plaintiff's second prejudice argument is that:

Plaintiff cannot afford to call witnesses for some of the needed discovery, and then have to go through the process again for the Robinson-Patman type discovery, if a stay is granted. This means additional preparation time, additional travel time to and from the depositions, and other problems associated with bifurcated discovery especially of third-party witnesses, including re-noticing them at this late date in discovery.

(Person 2/26/96 Letter at 1.) However, as of this date, less than two weeks before the scheduled March 15, 1996 close of fact discovery, plaintiff has noticed only three depositions of senior Hasbro executives (Messrs. Hassenfeld, Dittomassi and Wilson), and no non-party depositions. (See Berger 2/29/96 Letter to the Court at 3.) Further, Hasbro contends that these three senior executives do not "have specific or detailed knowledge of pricing issues." (Id.) Thus, according to Hasbro, if their motion for judgment on the pleadings were denied, no depositions would be repeated. (Id.) Even if Hasbro were incorrect and these three depositions would need to be reopened, any extra cost to plaintiff is more than outweighed by the expense to Hasbro (and to plaintiff) of conducting discovery on a claim that may be dismissed as legally insufficient. Moreover, the "additional travel time to and from the depositions" is a factor that, if necessary, can be obviated in other ways later (e.g., by agreement or order that the depositions occur in New York when the witness is in New York for business reasons, or permitting telephonic depositions, etc.). It is premature to decide what cost protection, if any, plaintiff will be given later. But it is clear that there is no prejudice to plaintiff from the stay.

Hasbro's Motion For Judgment on the Pleadings has "Substantial Grounds"

*4 The third and final factor the courts examine is the strength of the dispositive motion that is the basis for the discovery stay application. E.g., Gandler v. Nazarov, 1994 WL 702004 at *4 (stay granted where motion to dismiss "is potentially dispositive, and appears to be not unfounded in the law") (emphasis added); Chrysler v. Century, 137 F.R.D. at 211 (motions to dismiss "appear to have substantial grounds") (emphasis added).

From the Court's preliminary look at Hasbro's motion for judgment on the pleadings, the motion is "not unfounded in the law" and "appears to have substantial grounds."

Plaintiff's secondary-line standing argument appears to be that Hasbro's price discrimination has put small retailers out of business, and that plaintiff sold or would have sold its game to these retailers if they had not gone out of business. (See Larosiliere Dec. Ex. D: Plf's 1994 Brief Opposing Motion to Dismiss, at 16.) In G.K.A. Beverage Corp. v. Honickman, 55 F.3d 762 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 116 S. Ct. 381 (1995), the Second Circuit dismissed a similar Robinson-Patman Act claim for lack of standing, holding:

It follows naturally that a party in a business relationship with an entity that failed as a result of an antitrust violation has not suffered the antitrust injury necessary for antitrust standing....

Although the [plaintiff] distributors undoubtedly suffered injury as a result of the alleged antitrust violation, the injury suffered by the distributors is derivative of the injury suffered by Seven-Up Brooklyn. Thus, ... it was not the distributors that suffered direct antitrust injury, but Seven-Up Brooklyn. Therefore, the proper party to bring the antitrust action on these facts was Seven-Up Brooklyn....

55 F.3d at 766-67. Hasbro argues that the party suffering direct antitrust injury here, and thus the party with standing, are the small retailers allegedly forced out of business by Hasbro's price discrimination, and any injury suffered by plaintiff is derivative and not antitrust injury.

Hasbro also cites two district court decisions that held that a competing manufacturer (like plaintiff here) has no antitrust standing to bring a secondary-line claim under Sections 2(d) and 2(e) of the Robinson-Patman Act for a competitor's providing discriminatory allowances or services to customers. Ashkanazy v. I. Rokeach & Sons, Inc., 757 F. Supp. 1527, 1553-54 (N.D. Ill. 1991); Frito-Lay, Inc. v. Bachman Co., 659 F. Supp. 1129, 1140-41 (S.D.N.Y. 1986).

Plaintiff distinguishes these cases and relies on certain "target area" cases. (See Larosiliere Dec. Ex. D: Plf's 1994 Brief at 16-19.) The Court need not decide whether Anti-Monopoly or Hasbro is correct -- that motion is before Judge McKenna. The Court's reading of the parties' prior briefs on this issue, and the cases cited above, however, makes clear that not only does Hasbro's motion to dismiss "appear not unfounded on the law" but indeed it "appears to have substantial grounds."

CONCLUSION

*5 All of the factors relied on by the courts support a stay of discovery. Accordingly, for the reasons set forth above, the Court grants Hasbro's motion to stay fact and expert discovery that relates solely to plaintiff's secondary-line Robinson-Patman Act claim. The stay will be lifted without further Court order if Judge McKenna denies Hasbro's motion for judgment on the pleadings as to the secondary-line claim.

SO ORDERED.

v.
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY AND MANAGEMENT ASSISTANCE
AUTHORITY, et al., Defendants.

No. CIV.A. 01-0921.

May 21, 2001.

City council members brought action against District of Columbia, District of Columbia Financial Responsibility and Management Assistance Authority, and related defendants, alleging that Authority had exceeded scope of its statutory authority in connection with contract with hospital, in violation of members' constitutional rights, and seeking injunctive relief. Members moved to compel discovery, and defendants moved to quash notices of deposition. The District Court, Robinson, United States Magistrate Judge, held that stay of discovery pending resolution of parties' pending discovery motions was warranted.

Discovery stayed pending determination of parties' dispositive motions.

MEMORANDUM ORDER

ROBINSON, United States Magistrate Judge.

This action was referred to the undersigned United States Magistrate Judge for resolution of the parties' discovery disputes. Two motions which concern the conduct of *2 discovery are pending for determination by the undersigned: (1) plaintiffs' Motion to Compel Production of PriceWaterhouseCoopers Due Diligence Report (Docket No. 6); and (2) Motion of District of Columbia Financial Responsibility and Management Assistance Authority (the "Control Board"), Dr. Alice M. Rivlin and Francis S. Smith to Quash Notices of Deposition (Docket No. 7). Also pending are the parties' dispositive motions: plaintiffs have moved for summary judgment, and each of the defendants has filed a motion to dismiss. Oral argument with respect to plaintiffs' motion for preliminary injunction and the parties' dispositive motions is scheduled for June 8, 2001. [FN1]

FN1. On April 30, counsel for plaintiffs, defendant Control Board and defendant District of Columbia appeared before the court (Roberts, J.) for a hearing on plaintiffs' motion for a temporary restraining order. Plaintiffs suggested that the parties agree that the status quo be maintained for "thirty or sixty days[.]" Transcript of Proceedings Before the Honorable Richard W. Roberts ("Transcript"), p. 3. After hearing the arguments of counsel, the court denied the request for a temporary restraining order. Transcript, p. 84. The court asked plaintiffs' counsel to respond to defendant Control Board's proposal that the court schedule a consolidated hearing on the motion for a preliminary injunction and cross-motions for summary judgment. Plaintiffs' counsel said that [w]e're going to embrace that, your honor, and we'd like to do so on the most expedited basis. Transcript, p. 84.

On May 18, 2001, the undersigned heard the arguments of counsel with respect to the two motions which concern the conduct of discovery. [FN2] Upon consideration of plaintiffs' motion to compel and defendant Control Board's motion to quash; the memoranda in support thereof and in opposition thereto; the proffer of evidence by plaintiffs' counsel; the arguments of all counsel and the entire record herein, all discovery, including further consideration of the motion to compel and motion to quash, will be stayed pending determination of the parties' dispositive motions.

FN2. At the hearing, plaintiffs withdrew the motion to compel with respect to defendant Greater Southeast Community Hospital Corporation 1 ("Greater Southeast") upon consideration of the representation of Greater Southeast that it does not have possession, custody or control of the requested documents. See Defendant Greater Southeast Community Hospital Corporation 1's Opposition to Plaintiffs' Motion to Compel Production of PriceWaterhouseCoopers Due Diligence Report at 1.

DISCUSSION

I. Exercise of Discretion to Stay Discovery

[1][2] It has long been recognized that trial courts are vested with broad discretion to manage the conduct of discovery. See, e.g., Brennan v. Local Union No. 639, Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers, 494 F.2d 1092, 1100 (D.C.Cir.1974); Fed.R.Civ.P. 26. It is settled that entry of an order staying discovery pending determination of dispositive motions is an appropriate exercise of the court's discretion:

A trial court has broad discretion and inherent power to stay discovery until preliminary questions that may dispose of the case are determined.

Petrus v. Bowen, 833 F.2d 581, 583 (5th Cir.1987) (citations omitted); see Ladd v. Equicredit Corp. of Am., No. CIV.A. 00-2688, 2001 WL 175236, at *1 (E.D.La. Feb. 21, 2001); White v. Fraternal Order of Police, 909 F.2d 512, 517 (D.C.Cir.1990).

In accordance with this broad discretion, this court (Oberdorfer, J.) has observed that [i]t is well settled that discovery is generally considered inappropriate while a motion that would be thoroughly dispositive of the claims in the Complaint is pending.

Anderson v. United States Attorneys Office, No. CIV.A. 91-2262, 1992 WL 159186, at *1 (D.D.C. June 19, 1992). A stay of discovery pending the determination of a dispositive motion "is an eminently logical means to prevent wasting the time and effort of all concerned, and to make the most efficient use of judicial resources." Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 84 F.R.D. 278, 282 (D.Del.1979) (citations omitted).

[3] In Anderson, a motion to dismiss that would have been dispositive of all of the issues was pending when the court considered plaintiff's motion to compel discovery *3 and defendant's motion for protective order. In this action, each defendant has filed a motion to dismiss. Perhaps more significantly, plaintiffs have filed a motion for summary judgment, and in it, state that "there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and that based on the undisputed material facts Plaintiffs are entitled to judgment in their favor as a matter of law." Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment (Docket No. 10) at 1. At the May 18 hearing, plaintiffs and defendant Control Board agreed that either plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment or defendant Control Board's motion to dismiss, if granted, would be "thoroughly dispositive." See Anderson, 1992 WL 159186, at *1. While a stay of discovery pending determination of a motion to dismiss "is rarely appropriate when the pending motion will not dispose of the entire case[,]" Keystone Coke Co. v. Pasquale, No. CIV.A. 97-6074, 1999 WL 46622, at *1 (E.D.Pa. Jan. 7, 1999), no such concern exists here, since the parties agree that the grant of either plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment or defendant Control Board's motion to dismiss will be dispositive of "the entire case." See also Feldman v. Flood, 176 F.R.D. 651, 652 (M.D.Fla.1997) ("the Court ordinarily should not stay discovery which is necessary to gather facts in order to defend against the motion.").

[4] Plaintiffs do not contend--nor did they at the April 30 hearing--that they would be unable to file their oppositions to defendants' motions to dismiss in the absence of such discovery. [FN3] A trial court "ordinarily should not stay discovery which is necessary to gather facts in order to defend against [a] motion [to dismiss]." Feldman, 176 F.R.D. at 652; cf. Coastal States Gas Corp., 84 F.R.D. at 282 ("discovery should precede consideration of dispositive motions when the facts sought to be discovered are relevant to consideration of the particular motion at hand."). However, plaintiffs have never suggested that they need the discovery they now seek in order to oppose the pending motions to dismiss. [FN4]

FN3. See n. 1, supra.

FN4. This court (Penn. J.) has previously held that a "bald assertion" by a defendant that its motion to dismiss will be granted, or that discovery would be burdensome, is generally insufficient to justify the entry of an order staying discovery. People With AIDS Health Group v. Burroughs Wellcome Co., No. CIV.A. 91-0574, 1991 WL 221179, at *1. However, the facts of the instant action is distinguishable in two material respects. First, plaintiffs in this action have moved for summary judgment. Second, the significant privilege issues presented by the plaintiffs' discovery requests warrant the conclusion that permitting discovery before the need for such discovery is determined would be wasteful and inefficient. See Coastal States Gas Corp., 84 F.R.D. at 282; cf. Maljack Prod., Inc. v. Motion Picture Ass'n of Am., No. CIV.A. 90-1121, 1990 WL 157900, at *1 (D.D.C. Oct. 3, 1990) ("avoidance of potentially unnecessary discovery is warranted" where a motion to dismiss is pending and plaintiff would not be prejudiced by a stay of discovery pending determination of the motion to dismiss).

In the memorandum in support of their motion for summary judgment, plaintiffs state that they have sought to compel the production of the PriceWaterhouseCoopers due diligence reports, and to depose Dr. Rivlin and Mr. Smith. Plaintiffs' Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment at 4, n. 1. While plaintiffs state that they "reserve the right to supplement the undisputed material facts" with the report and the deposition testimony, they do not contend that their motion is premature or incomplete without such discovery. While a trial court could well be found to have abused its discretion by staying discovery where it is necessary for the party opposing summary judgment to develop "additional facts," see Moore v. United States, 213 F.3d 705, 710 n. 3 (D.C.Cir.2000), no authority supports plaintiffs' effort to concurrently move for summary judgment and take discovery regarding the issues addressed in the motion.

II. Absence of Prejudice to Plaintiffs

[5] In the determination of whether to stay discovery while pending dispositive motions are decided, the trial court "inevitably must balance the harm produced by a delay in discovery against the possibility that [a dispositive] motion will be granted and entirely eliminate the need for such discovery." Feldman, 176 F.R.D. at 652. The undersigned finds that plaintiffs have not demonstrated *4 that they would be harmed by a stay of discovery pending determination of the dispositive motions. When asked at the hearing what prejudice plaintiffs would suffer if discovery were stayed, plaintiffs' counsel responded that the plaintiffs would be prejudiced by (1) the continued violation of their constitutional rights, [FN5] and (2) the compromise of appropriate health care resulting from the reduction of services at D.C. General Hospital.

FN5. Plaintiffs, in their three-count First Amended Complaint, allege, inter alia, that plaintiffs Chavous and Catania, members of the D.C. City Council, "have a constitutionally protected right to cast unimpeded votes on issues of public importance." First Amended Complaint, Count Two, ¶ 46. Plaintiffs also allege that defendant Control Board exceeded the scope of its statutory authority (Count One), and seek to enjoin defendants Greater Southeast and the District of Columbia "from acting in furtherance of" the contract the Control Board entered with Greater Southeast (Count Three).

With respect to the first claim of prejudice, the undersigned finds that there is no nexus between the discovery plaintiffs now seek and the alleged violation of the constitutional rights of plaintiffs Chavous and Catania. The only violation of any constitutional right alleged in this action is that the right of plaintiffs Chavous and Catania "to cast unimpeded votes" was infringed by defendant Control Board. See First Amended Complaint, Count Two, ¶¶ 45-49. The constitutional violation alleged is therefore wholly independent of any facts which could be developed through either the production of the due diligence reports, or the depositions of Dr. Rivlin and Mr. Smith. The undersigned cannot find that plaintiffs would be prejudiced by a stay of discovery where the discovery sought is not relevant to the claims or defenses of any of the parties, or even relevant to the subject matter involved in this action. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 26(b)(1).

With respect to the second claim of prejudice, the undersigned finds that there is no nexus between the discovery plaintiffs now seek and any compromise of health care resulting from the reduction of services at D.C. General Hospital. Access to health care is undeniably a matter of grave public concern. However, it is not the issue presented by plaintiffs in this action; rather, plaintiffs allege only that defendant Control Board exceeded the scope of its statutory authority, and that it violated the constitutional rights of plaintiffs Chavous and Catania. [FN6] Thus, the undersigned again finds that plaintiffs would not be prejudiced by a stay of discovery regarding matters which are not relevant to the claims or defenses of any party, or even relevant to the subject matter of this action. [FN7] See Fed.R.Civ.P. 26(b)(1).

FN6. See n. 5, supra.

FN7. For example, in the memorandum in support of their motion for summary judgment, plaintiffs state that the due diligence reports "[are] essential to an evaluation of whether Greater Southeast will be able to provide equivalent volume and types of services to D.C. General and whether Greater Southeast will meet adequate standards of quality and accessibility." Plaintiffs' Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment at 4, n. 1. However, this issue is not before the court in this action. For that reason, the undersigned denied the request of plaintiffs' counsel that plaintiff Catania be permitted to either "address the court," or testify, to relate the details of reports that some ambulance drivers recently found that the emergency rooms at some local hospitals were closed.

Finally, the undersigned finds that plaintiffs have offered no cogent explanation for their failure to inform the court, when they appeared for oral argument on their motion for a temporary restraining order, that they required discovery before the briefing of dispositive motions could be completed, or to request leave to take such discovery. [FN8] Defendant Control Board, at the hearing before the undersigned, suggested that this failure indicates that discovery was "an afterthought." In response, plaintiffs' counsel claimed simply that counsel "didn't think about it"; however, this self-deprecating explanation undermines plaintiffs' claim that they now require discovery in order "to make [their] best argument for summary judgment." [FN9]

FN8. See n. 1, supra.

FN9. Plaintiffs' counsel referred to the due diligence reports at the April 30 hearing, but never asked that they be produced. Transcript, p. 23. Plaintiffs' counsel's discussion of the reports was limited to the concern that the executive summary plaintiffs received "still doesn't have the detail that tells us whether these entities can do what they promise to do for the price they promise to pay"; however, that is not an issue in this action. See n. 5, supra. The only reference to discovery at the April 30 hearing was by counsel for the Control Board, who said of an issue raised by plaintiffs that "I'd like to know more about it if we have to go forward with discovery which I hope we won't because I'm hopeful that this can be resolved on cross-motions." Transcript, p. 47. Plaintiffs' counsel never disputed this proposition.

5 CONCLUSION

[6] Plaintiffs have failed to articulate any reason which would warrant a departure from the authorities which hold that a trial court properly exercises its discretion to stay discovery where a motion which would be entirely dispositive if granted is pending; the discovery is not needed to permit the party who seeks discovery to oppose the pending dispositive motion; and the party who seeks discovery would not be prejudiced by a stay. A stay of discovery in the circumstances presented here furthers the ends of economy and efficiency, since if either the plaintiffs' dispositive motion or defendant Control Board's dispositive motion is granted, there will be no need for discovery. If both dispositive motions are denied, then the court will undertake an informed consideration of what discovery is appropriate in the context of the issues actually before the court.

It is, therefore, this ____ day of May, 2001,

ORDERED that all discovery, including further consideration of plaintiffs' motion to compel (Docket No. 6) and the Control Board's motion to quash notices of deposition (Docket No. 7), is STAYED pending determination of the parties' dispositive motions.

District Court of Appeal of Florida, Second District.

The CHURCH OF SCIENTOLOGY OF CALIFORNIA, INC., and Mary Sue Hubbard, Appellants,

v.

Gabriel CAZARES and Margaret Cazares, his wife, Appellees.

April 1, 1981.

Defendants appealed from an order of the Circuit Court, Pinellas County, Fred L. Bryson, J., denying their motion for change of venue to the limited extent that they sought a recusal of the court and assignment of the case to another judge in another circuit, but granting the motion to the extent that the trial of the cause would be held in another county. The District Court of Appeal, Scheb, C. J., held that, once the circuit court concluded that the cause should be transferred, it had to enter an order transferring the action to a court of the same jurisdiction in another county and could not retain jurisdiction and merely transfer the trial to another county; defendants were required to pay accrued costs.

SCHEB, Chief Judge.

Gabriel and Margaret Cazares sued The Church of Scientology of California, Inc., and Mary Sue Hubbard in circuit court in Pinellas County. The Church and Hubbard each moved for a change of venue under section 47.101(1)(b), Florida Statutes (1979), on the ground that they could not receive a fair trial in Pinellas County because The Church was odious to the inhabitants of Pinellas County and the people associated Hubbard with The Church because she was the wife of its founder.

Following a hearing the trial court entered its order stating:

(T)hat the Motions for Change of Venue are denied to the limited extent that they seek a recusal of the Court and assignment of the case to another Judge in another Circuit, however,

It is further ORDERED AND ADJUDGED that the Motion is granted in part to the extent that the trial of the cause shall be held in Daytona Beach, Volusia County, Florida.

It is further ORDERED that F.S. 47.191 shall not be applied to require the movants, MARY SUE HUBBARD and THE CHURCH OF SCIENTOLOGY OF CALIFORNIA INC. to pay taxable costs at this time since the cause has not been transferred away from the Circuit Court for Pinellas County, Florida and that jurisdiction still lies in that Court.

While the court denied The Church and Hubbard's motions to the extent that they sought recusal, the order indicates that the court concluded that the cause should be transferred. Once the court determined this, it had to enter an order transferring the action to a court of the same jurisdiction in another county. s 47.141, Fla.Stat. (1979). The court's authority at that point was limited to entry of an order transferring jurisdiction. Kern v.

attempted to retain jurisdiction, it also erred in not requiring The Church and Hubbard, as movants, to pay accrued costs. s 47.191,

Nos. 95-8896, 95-8921.

Sept. 15, 1997.

Auto owners who were injured in accident brought products liability and fraud action against manufacturer of their auto. The United States District Court for the Middle District of Georgia, No. 4:93-CV-61-JRE, J. Robert Elliott, J., 1995 WL 641984, entered default against manufacturer for failing to comply with court order compelling discovery. Manufacturer appealed. The Court of Appeals, Tjoflat, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) prior to issuing order compelling discovery, district court should have ruled on manufacturer's motion to dismiss fraud claim; (2) order of default was abuse of discretion; and (3) case would be reassigned to different judge on remand.

Vacated and remanded with instruction.

Case would be reassigned to different district judge upon remand from reversal of default entered against defendant for failure to comply with order compelling discovery, issuance of which was abuse of discretion; judge's practice of delegating task of drafting sensitive, dispositive orders to plaintiffs' counsel, and then uncritically adopting his proposed orders nearly verbatim, would belie appearance of justice to average observer. 28 U.S.C.A. § 2106.

*1356 Appeals from the United States District Court for the Middle District of Georgia.

Before TJOFLAT and ANDERSON, Circuit Judges, and NANGLE [FN*], Senior Circuit Judge.

FN* Honorable John F. Nangle, Senior U.S. District Judge for the Eastern District of Missouri, sitting by designation.

TJOFLAT, Circuit Judge:

This case illustrates the mischief that results when a district court effectively abdicates its responsibility to manage a case involving contentious litigants and permits excessive and dilatory discovery tactics to run amok. Not only did the district court fail to manage discovery in this case, it in effect delegated the duty to manage to the plaintiffs' counsel. To protect themselves from the plaintiffs' inevitable overreaching, the defendants resorted to self-help and did not provide full discovery. Their tactic resulted in draconian sanctions, including the entry of a default under Rules 26 and 37 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Finding that the district court abused its discretion, we vacate the order imposing sanctions and direct that the case be assigned on remand to another district judge.

In part I of this opinion, we describe the discovery disputes below and the district court's management of the case. In part II, we delineate the scope of our jurisdiction over these consolidated appeals. We conclude, in part III, that the court's order was improper under Rule 37 and, in part IV, that the order was improper under Rule 26 as well. Having decided that the order must be vacated, we explain in part V why the chief district judge must assign the case to another district judge on remand.

I.

On May 16, 1991, Bhupendra Chudasama and his wife, Gunvanti B., appellees, purchased a used 1989 Mazda MPV minivan (the "MPV minivan") from Jays Dodge City, a Columbus, Georgia Dodge dealer. On the morning of October 15, 1991, Gunvanti Chudasama was injured when Bhupendra Chudasama lost control of the minivan and it collided with a utility pole. [FN1] Mrs. Chudasama sustained a broken pelvis and broken facial bones; Mr. Chudasama was uninjured. Mrs. Chudasamas' medical bills totaled approximately $13,000, and she lost approximately $5,000 in wages. The accident left the MPV minivan, worth approximately $11,000, beyond repair.

FN1. The Chudasamas' complaint states that, "[a]ccording to the police report, the vehicle was traveling, in the rain, 45 miles per hour in a 25 mile per hour zone."

On April 30, 1993, the Chudasamas filed a products liability action against the appellants-Mazda Motor Corp. ("Mazda Japan"), a Japanese company, and Mazda Motor of America, Inc. ("Mazda America"), an American subsidiary of Mazda Japan, (collectively "Mazda")-in the United States District Court for the Middle District of Georgia. [FN2] The complaint pointed to two alleged defects in the MPV minivan as the cause of the Chudasamas' accident and resulting injuries: (1) the brakes were likely to cause "the driver's unexpected loss of control ... in the highway environment of its expected use," and (2) the "doors, side panels and supporting members [were] inadequately designed and constructed, and fail[ed] to provide a reasonable degree of occupant safety so that they [were] unreasonably likely to crush and deform into the passenger compartment." Their complaint contained four counts: three standard products liability counts--strict liability, breach of implied warranty, and negligent design and manufacture--and one count of fraud. Each count sought compensatory damages to cover Mrs. Chudasama's medical bills and lost wages, to compensate her for pain and suffering, to compensate Mr. Chudasama for his loss of his wife's "society, companionship and services," and to cover the loss of the vehicle. All but the breach of implied warranty count also sought punitive damages.

FN2. Federal jurisdiction was based on diversity of citizenship under 28 U.S.C. § 1332 (1994). The Chudasamas are Georgia residents; Mazda Japan is a Japanese corporation; and Mazda America is a California corporation.

Over the next two years, the parties engaged in protracted discovery disputes. As has become typical in recent years, both *1357 sides initially adopted extreme and unreasonable positions; the plaintiffs asked for almost every tangible piece of information or property possessed by the defendants, and the defendants offered next to nothing and took several steps to delay discovery. In this case, however, the district court never attempted to resolve the parties' disputes and force the parties to meet somewhere in the middle of their respective extreme positions. As a result, what began as a relatively common discovery dispute quickly deteriorated into unbridled legal warfare.

We see no useful purpose in describing the drawn-out discovery battle in detail; [FN3] a relatively brief summary will suffice. On July 28, 1993, the Chudasamas served Mazda with their first interrogatories and requests for production. Both documents were models of vague and overly broad discovery requests. The production requests, for example, contained 20 "special instructions," 29 definitions, and 121 numbered requests (some containing as many as 11 subparts). Similarly, the interrogatories contained 18 "special instructions," 29 definitions, and 31 numbered interrogatories. "One" interrogatory included five separate questions that applied to each of the 121 numbered requests for production, arguably expanding the number of interrogatories to 635. [FN4]

FN3. The district court's docket sheet contains no fewer than ninety-five entries of discovery-related pleadings. The parties have further supplemented the record with hundreds of pages of additional unfiled correspondence between counsel for both sides and the court.

FN4. The local rules in the Middle District of Georgia currently limit the number of production requests to 10 for each party and the number of interrogatories to 25 for each party without court approval. See M.D. Ga. Local R. 4.3, 4.4. The record shows that the Chudasamas neither requested nor received the approval of the district court to exceed these limits. Mazda specifically objected to this practice, and the Chudasamas contended that the rules in question came into force after their complaint was filed and therefore should not apply. The local rules became effective on June 2, 1993, just over a month after the complaint was filed. As became its standard operating procedure, the district court never ruled on Mazda's objection. We also note that, although Mazda never filed an objection under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the 1993 amendments to the rules also imposed a limit of 25 interrogatories without leave of court. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 33(a). The applicability of these amendments is discussed infra note 32.

The production requests all but asked for every document Mazda ever had in its possession and then some. For example, the Chudasamas sought detailed information about practically all of Mazda's employees worldwide. They requested production of all documents relating to organizational charts, books or manuals of Mazda ... which will or may assist in identifying an [sic] locating those operating divisions, committees, groups, departments, employees, and personnel ... involved in the conception, market analysis, development, testing, design safety engineering and marketing of the product for all years during which the product has been developed, designed, manufactured and marketed.

Record, vol. I, no. 20, at 17, produc. req. C.2. They also sought "all documents relating to any organizational chart or structure for each of Mazda [']s] ... committees, sub-committees, boards, task forces, and technical groups which took any part in overseeing the design, market analysis, cost/benefits analysis, economic feasibility analysis, development, testing and safety engineering of the product." Record, vol. I, no. 20, at 18, produc. req. C.5.

The scope of these requests becomes apparent only after reading the Chudasamas' definition of the term "product":

This word means the Mazda MPV Minivan involved in the incident and all vehicles similar, though not necessarily identical, to that Minivan. The word includes all variations of 1989 Mazda MPV Minivan vehicles, as well as all variations of the MPV Minivan vehicles produced by Mazda ... in all years before and after the incident. The term should be construed to include each and every component part of the vehicle and more specifically the related components of the assemblies and subassemblies of the vehicle's chassis, wheelbase, steering system, suspension system, braking system, side and side supporting system.

Record, vol. I, no. 20, at 9. The Chudasamas thus asked for production of nearly every document ever made that would list or assist in finding every person that ever had anything *1358 to do with any component of any year model of the MPV minivan "and all vehicles similar."

Another representative example of the breadth of discovery sought by the Chudasamas involves Mazda's advertising campaigns. They requested production of all documents relating to any print and broadcast media advertisements, catalogues, sales brochures, product inserts, or promotional information of any kind, relating to the product issued by or on behalf of Mazda ... for the purpose of marketing the product to consumers in the United States [or] in any other country where the product was marketed.

Record, vol. I, no. 20, at 23, produc. req. D.20, D.21. In other words, the Chudasamas wanted every document related to any form of advertising anywhere in the world of any year Mazda MPV minivan and "all vehicles similar" and all components thereof.

In addition to being broad, several requests were so vague as to be all but unintelligible. For example, the Chudasamas requested "all documents reflecting the conditions and circumstances of the environment of use of the product." Record, vol. I, no. 20, at 19, produc. req. D.2. "Environment of use" is defined by the Chudasamas as "real-world conditions to which motor vehicles are actually exposed in their use by members of the public including, but not limited to, the occurrence of collisions and/or side-impacts." Record, vol. I, no. 20, at 6.

Other requests simply asked Mazda to research the Chudasamas' case. They requested "copies of any and all governmental statutes, regulations, or standards, industry standards, corporate standards, authoritative articles or treatises, which Mazda ... contends or admits are applicable to the design, development, testing, safety engineering or distribution of the product," Record, vol. I, no. 20, at 21, produc. req. D.12, and "all documents in [Mazda's] libraries ... which address the design, engineering, and manufacturing of cars and trucks that address brake failures and/or side-impact accidents, injuries, integrity, and/or crush," Record, vol. I, no. 20, at 28, produc. req. E.10. [FN5] Neither request was limited to documents prepared by or for Mazda or to documents relating to the "product." Again, we emphasize that the above examples are only a few representative samples. [FN6]

FN5. In lieu of the actual documents, the Chudasamas offered to allow Mazda to "simply furnish[] a complete bibliography thereof." Record, vol. I, no. 20, at 27, produc. req. E.10 (emphasis in original).

FN6. The boundless discovery requests were not limited to production requests. For example, one of the interrogatories asks Mazda to "[i]dentify every document, every tangible thing, and every item of real or demonstrative evidence which is relevant to the subject matter of this action." Record, vol. I, no. 19, at 13, interrog. 8. Of course, the Chudasamas provide their own 25-part definition of "relevant to the subject matter of this action." Record, vol. I, no. 19, at 9-10.

In response to the Chudasamas' excessively broad discovery requests, Mazda adopted four different strategies. First, it objected to almost every production request and interrogatory on almost every imaginable ground. While some of its objections were clearly boilerplate and bordered on being frivolous, many were directly on point and raised bona fide questions of law. On ten different occasions from September 7, 1993, until November 21, 1994, Mazda filed written objections to the Chudasamas' discovery requests. Moreover, during three different hearings in January, August, and September of 1994, Mazda asked the district court to rule on its objections no fewer than twentyfive times, all to no avail. Finally, on November 4, 1994, counsel for Mazda sent a letter to the court imploring it to rule on three specific aspects of the Chudasamas' discovery requests. [FN7] Mazda apparently hoped that such rulings would limit the scope of discovery or, at the very least, clarify its duties. The district *1359 court never directly ruled on any of these objections or requests for rulings; nor did it ever give any indication that it had considered them in even the most cursory fashion. Accordingly, the Chudasamas continued their broad demands, unchecked by the district court.

FN7. Specifically, it asked the court (1) to limit the Chudasamas' definition of "product," quoted supra, (2) to determine whether Mazda should produce documents relating to the recall of 1990-91 MPV minivans in addition to the recall of the 1989 MPV minivan involved in the case, and (3) to limit the Chudasamas' definition of the term "similar incidents" (another term broadly defined by the Chudasamas) to refer only to those incidents involving 1989 Mazda MPV minivans in which the brakes allegedly locked up or the right-side passenger compartment was alleged to be uncrashworthy.

On October 21, 1993, Mazda began pursuing a second strategy for countering the Chudasamas' vague and overbroad discovery requests. It filed a motion to dismiss their fraud count for failure to plead fraud with particularity, pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(b). [FN8] Mazda contended that the Chudasamas had failed to point to any specific misrepresentation made by Mazda.

FN8. This rule requires that "[i]n all averments of fraud the circumstances constituting fraud ... shall be stated with particularity." Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(b).

The Chudasamas' fraud claim is based on the Federal Motor Vehicle Safety Standards, promulgated by the National Highway and Traffic Safety Administration. [FN9] They alleged in their complaint that the MPV minivan only satisfied the standards that applied to "multipurpose" vehicles (the "multipurpose standards") and not the standards applicable to "passenger cars" (the "car standards"). [FN10] Mazda "defrauded and deceived the American consuming public, including the plaintiffs and others similarly situated," the Chudasamas alleged, because it marketed the MPV minivan "as a family passenger car or vehicle intended to be used primarily for transporting adults and children." This marketing scheme was fraudulent according to the complaint because Mazda "well knew" that the MPV minivan only met the multipurpose standards and not the car standards. [FN11] Moreover, the complaint alleged, the Chudasamas "reasonably relied on the impression created" by this marketing scheme when they purchased their used minivan. [FN12] typical shotgun pleading. The four counts it presents follow forty-three numbered paragraphs of factual allegations, many of which are vague. Each count has two numbered paragraphs, the first of which incorporates by reference all forty-three paragraphs of factual allegations. Many of the factual allegations appear to relate to only one or two counts, or to none of the counts at all. Thus, a reader of the complaint must speculate as to which factual allegations pertain to which count. As a result, discerning the Chudasamas' exact theory of fraud is no easy task. Now that the Chudasamas have been forced to articulate and develop their theory in response to Mazda's motion to dismiss and arguments on appeal, it has become clear that their claim is as we describe it in this opinion.

FN9. The Chudasamas' complaint is an all-too-

FN10. The Federal Motor Vehicle Standards are set out at subpart B of 49 C.F.R. § 571 (1996). The specific standard that the Chudasamas alleged the MPV minivan did not satisfy was standard 214 governing side-impact protection. See 49 C.F.R. § 571.214. Before September 1, 1993, this standard applied only to "passenger cars." § 571.214(S2). The term "passenger car" is defined as "a motor vehicle with motive power, except a multipurpose passenger vehicle, motorcycle, or trailer, designed to carry 10 persons or less." § 571.3(b) (emphasis added). The term "multipurpose passenger vehicle" is defined as "a motor vehicle with motive power, except a trailer, designed to carry 10 persons or less which is constructed either on a truck chassis or with special features for occasional off-road operation." Id.

FN11. Mazda asserts, and the Chudasamas concede, that the MPV minivan is a "multipurpose passenger vehicle" (hence the initials "MPV") for purposes of the standards. The Chudasamas therefore do not contend that the MPV minivan does not satisfy the applicable standards.

FN12. The complaint does not indicate how Mazda's allegedly fraudulent marketing scheme caused the accident. The remedies for fraud are generally limited to rescission, in which the buyer seeks to rescind the transaction by tendering a return of the item purchased and asking for a return of the purchase price, or damages, in which the buyer stands on the transaction and seeks damages for the difference between the value of the product as represented and its actual value at the time of purchase. See generally 2 Fowler V. Harper et al., The Law of Torts § 7.15 (2d ed.1986). Because the Chudasamas purchased the MPV minivan from a used car lot, we question whether the Chudasamas could have pursued either claim for relief against Mazda, as opposed to the used car dealer. The complaint makes clear, however, that the Chudasamas do not seek either form of relief. Rather, as indicated in the text, they seek compensatory and punitive damages relating to the accident. We assume that the Chudasamas intend to establish causation by employing the "but-for" theory of causation: Had Mazda not duped them into purchasing the MPV minivan, the accident would never have occurred. The Chudasamas have not represented--in their memoranda to the district court or in their brief to this court--that Georgia law would recognize such a but-for theory of causation. In fact, a review of Georgia case law suggests otherwise. See, e.g., Black v. Georgia S. & Fla. Ry. Co., 202 Ga.App. 805, 807, 415 S.E.2d 705, 707 (1992) (distinguishing between but-for and proximate causation); Ekstedt v. Charter Med. Corp., 192 Ga.App. 248, 384 S.E.2d 276, 277 (1989) (rejecting fraud claim for lack of evidence of proximate cause); Citizens Bank of Ball Ground v. Johnson, 191 Ga.App. 155, 158, 381 S.E.2d 121, 124 (1989) (same). We briefly address two other apparent deficiencies to the fraud claim infra at note 39.

1360 Mazda recognized that the fraud count substantially widened the scope of discovery. Absent the fraud count, the only information that the Chudasamas would be entitled to discover would be information related to the 1989 MPV minivan's brakes and side structure. The fraud count, however, arguably widened the scope of discovery to include information relating to Mazda's intentions in designing and marketing the MPV minivans, and possibly other "vehicles similar." Therefore, if Mazda could convince the district court to dismiss the fraud count, discovery would become substantially more manageable.

In its motion to dismiss the fraud count, Mazda contended that the Chudasamas failed to allege the "time, place and content of the alleged misrepresentations." The Chudasamas' memorandum in opposition to Mazda's motion argued that the misrepresentations were made in advertisements they had viewed in the past. They needed discovery from Mazda, they said, to find out which particular advertisements they had viewed and relied upon.

Despite the fact that both parties fully briefed Mazda's motion to dismiss, the district court never ruled on it. Although Mazda frequently reminded the district court--over a period of time exceeding a year and a half--that the motion was pending, the only indication in the record that the district court even acknowledged the motion was a statement made at a hearing in August 1994 (over nine months after the motion was filed) suggesting that the motion would be considered after discovery. [FN13] The motion thus remained pending [FN14] and failed to narrow the Chudasamas' discovery demands.

FN13. After counsel for Mazda reiterated the need to rule on the motion, the court stated, "Let's go ahead with the discovery, and we can more clearly understand the fraud." Record, vol. 9, no. 70, at 65.

FN14. Mazda amended the still-pending motion on June 22, 1995, to include a request that the fraud count be dismissed pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) on the grounds that Mazda's advertisements, as described by the complaint, were not sufficient to support a claim of fraud. The only "statement" to be gleaned from the complaint was that the MPV minivan was a passenger vehicle intended to transport adults and children. Mazda contended that this statement not only was not misleading, it was entirely accurate, especially in view of the standard's definition of "multipurpose passenger vehicles." Mazda further contended that the Chudasamas' allegation of reliance was refuted by their own testimony. The motion alleged that Mr. Chudasama admitted in a deposition both that he could not remember viewing any specific advertisements and that he did not rely on any advertisements in purchasing the MPV minivan.

Mazda's third strategy was to seek a protective order. Much of the information requested by the Chudasamas involved confidential documents that went to the heart of Mazda's business. They sought, inter alia, marketing studies, internal memoranda, and documentation on the history of the development and design of the MPV minivan and other vehicles. Fearing disclosure of this information to its competitors or to other potential plaintiffs, Mazda sought a "non-sharing" protective order that would keep the information under seal and prohibit the Chudasamas from sharing Mazda's proprietary information with anyone. They filed a motion for such a protective order on August 16, 1994. The Chudasamas objected, but indicated that they would accept a "sharing" protective order that would allow them to share the information with similarly situated plaintiffs, but not with anyone else.

At a hearing in September 1994, Mazda offered to stipulate to a sharing protective order if the Chudasamas would narrow their proposed definition of similarly situated plaintiffs. The Chudasamas declined this invitation, and on September 15, 1994, the district court began an alarming trend by adopting nearly verbatim the proposed sharing protective order drafted by counsel for the Chudasamas. [FN15] If nothing more, however, *1361 the sharing protective order issued by the court provided for the protection of Mazda's confidential information from disclosure to its competitors.

FN15. The order proposed by the Chudasamas' counsel and the order actually entered by the district court are perfectly identical in all but one respect. The proposed order begins with the clause, "With the consent of counsel for the plaintiffs and counsel for the defendants." The actual order also begins with this clause, but the clause has been crossed out.

Perhaps because it realized that the district court had no intention of ruling on its motion to dismiss the fraud count or its various objections, Mazda adopted a fourth strategy; it withheld a substantial amount of information that it later conceded was properly discoverable. Early in the litigation, Mazda Japan moved to dismiss the Chudasamas' claims against it based on alleged deficiencies in their service of process. [FN16] Although the district court denied its motion in August 1993, Mazda Japan refused to participate in discovery until the district court denied its motion for reconsideration in January 1994, out of fear that its objections would be deemed waived if it participated. Because Mazda Japan and Mazda America were represented by the same counsel, Mazda Japan in effect received the benefits of Mazda America's discovery without suffering the burden of complying with the Chudasamas' requests. This was a particularly effective strategic advantage because Mazda America contended that most of the documents and information sought by the Chudasamas were in Mazda Japan's possession.

FN16. Specifically, Mazda Japan contended that the Chudasamas' service of process did not conform to the requirements of the Hague Convention because it did not include copies of the summons and complaint translated into Japanese. See Convention on the Service Abroad of Judicial and Extrajudicial Documents in Civil or Commercial Matters, Jan. 8, 1969, art. 5, 20 U.S.T. 361, 658 U.N.T.S. 163.

On November 12, 1993, the Chudasamas filed a motion to compel Mazda to respond "fully and completely" to a laundry list of their interrogatories and requests for production. [FN17] They also sought attorneys' fees. The motion alleged that Mazda had only provided "evasive and incomplete" responses and that Mazda's objections were all too general, improperly asserted, or simply without merit.

FN17. This list omitted several discovery requests that were either redundant in light of other requests included on the list or obviously lifted from other unrelated cases. We note that all the examples quoted supra were included in the list.

The district court held a hearing on January 21, 1994, to address the discovery disputes. Counsel for the Chudasamas and counsel for Mazda discussed the various disputed issues at the hearing, and Mazda repeatedly asked the court to rule on its objections. [FN18] The district court remained silent throughout most of the hearing, and at the end of the hearing made it clear that it did not want to rule on any objections or motions relating to discovery and warned that, if forced to rule, it would be inclined to issue sanctions "on somebody." [FN19] Instead of managing the disputes itself, the court wanted the parties to confer and settle the disputes on their own. [FN20] The hearing thus ended without any rulings from the bench.

FN18. For example, counsel for Mazda recommended that the parties "go through the objections one by one and simply have [the court] rule on them or have them referred to a magistrate or a special master and have him rule on them." Record, vol. 7, no. 57, at 11-12.

FN19. The court warned: I don't know--you fellows seem to be having so much trouble even agreeing on what is pertinent in the case. Well, if I have to take hold of the thing myself--like I do not want to do--but if I have to take hold of it and straighten it out, I'm going to impose some sanctions on somebody, because it sounds to me like a case that's leading in that direction. I don't know who, either plaintiff or the defendant. If I get the impression that somebody's just deliberately confusing the thing and fouling it up and making it impossible and throwing it on the Court needlessly, I'm going to put a penalty on somebody, one way or another, about it, either plaintiffs' lawyers or the defendants' lawyers, one or the other; in the way of attorney's fees or some other type of sanction. Record, vol. 7, no. 57, at 30-31.

FN20. Specifically, the court stated: Well, I tell you what let's do. Let's see what you can do about getting together on what your problem is. And, if [counsel for the Chudasamas] is still of the attitude that he thinks he needs to pursue his Motion to Compel, he can just let me know that he still thinks he's got to proceed with his motion. And we'll just proceed to rule on the motion. That's all I know. I hope it won't reach that stage. Record, vol. 7, no. 57, at 33.

On January 26, Mazda filed amended objections and responses to the Chudasamas' *1362 requests. Approximately six months later, on August 8, 1994, the Chudasamas renewed their motion to compel. Mazda filed its motion for protective order, discussed supra, on August 16, and the district court conducted a status conference on August 17. As was the case in the January hearing, most of the conference consisted of the attorneys stating their grievances. After reminding the court that its motion to dismiss the fraud count was fully briefed and pending and that it had filed numerous discovery objections on which the court had yet to rule, [FN21] Mazda indicated that it was withholding a substantial amount of information until the court either entered a protective order or conclusively determined that no protective order would be entered. Consistent with its approach at the previous hearing, the district court declined to rule on Mazda's motion or objections. The hearing concluded with the understanding that the attorneys would negotiate a protective order and that Mazda would disclose the withheld discovery shortly thereafter. As noted above, the parties tried to negotiate a stipulated protective order and failed, and the court adopted the plaintiffs' version of the order--verbatim--on September 15.

FN21. Regarding the objections, counsel for Mazda argued that Mazda was "entitled to object, argue that objection and have [the court] rule on it." Record, vol. 9, no. 70, at 50. Later, counsel for Mazda complained to the court that the Chudasamas were "trying to turn this products case into a fraud case. [Mazda has] made a motion to dismiss the fraud cause of action on a number of different grounds. It's been fully briefed and pending before [the court]." Record, vol. 9, no. 70, at 65.

After Mazda disclosed the withheld discovery, the district court held another status conference on September 30. Like the previous two hearings, the court spent most of the hearing simply listening to the attorneys present their grievances. This time, however, the court indicated about halfway through the hearing that it was not interested in hearing Mazda's objections, but simply wanted counsel for the Chudasamas to summarize the state of discovery on each of the discovery requests in dispute. Although Mazda again made clear that it needed a ruling on its various objections, [FN22] this conference ended like the previous two--without a ruling from the bench.

FN22. Counsel for Mazda stated, "There are some objections here that we have made that we cannot go beyond that we would like the court to rule on, which we don't think we can negotiate it further and reach a compromise.... [W]e are frankly prepared for [the court] to rule on these matters." Record, vol. 10, no. 94, at 99-100.

As mentioned previously, counsel for Mazda wrote a letter to the court on November 4, imploring the court to rule on three specific issues. Mazda received no response. On November 28, counsel for the Chudasamas wrote a letter complaining about Mazda's responses. This letter contained a new laundry list of discovery requests to which they had not received satisfactory responses from Mazda. [FN23] They thus sought an order to compel Mazda to respond. Unlike the letter from Mazda's counsel, this letter received prompt treatment by the district court. Three days later, on December 1, 1994, the court granted the Chudasamas' motion and entered a compel order incorporating the laundry list set out in the November 28 letter.

FN23. As with the list contained in their motion, this list did not include all the Chudasamas' original requests, but did contain all the requests discussed earlier in this opinion as well as many more of a similarly broad or vague nature.

The order contained three paragraphs. The first excoriated Mazda for its conduct in the discovery disputes. The second paragraph contained the details of the order. It directed Mazda to "make complete, proper, non-evasive responses to" the listed interrogatories and production requests. The order directed that Mazda comply within fifteen days of the date of the order and concluded in its final paragraph with the warning: "Upon failure of the Defendants to comply with this order it will be the Court's intention to impose the ultimate sanction of judgment by default."

December 1 was clearly a turning point in the case. Although the order made no mention of Mazda's objections or motion to dismiss, Mazda assumed that all of its objections had been implicitly overruled. The Chudasamas' broad and vague discovery requests were no longer simply the initial, *1363 unreasonable discovery demands that had become commonplace. They had been transformed undiluted into the court's unqualified mandate. Although the listed discovery requests were practically impossible to satisfy with any degree of certainty, Mazda had no more than fifteen days [FN24] in which to satisfy the Chudasamas' excessive demands, on pain of a default judgment.

FN24. Mazda has contended, both before the district court and on appeal, that it did not receive the December 1 order in the mail until December 5, and therefore only had eleven days in which to reply.

While it certainly could not hope to satisfy the plaintiffs, Mazda made a near-herculean effort to comply. It gathered four boxes of documents from all over the world, documents that it had hoped it would never need to compile based on its objections. Sometime in the afternoon of Friday, December 16, the date compliance was due, counsel for Mazda in Atlanta telephoned the Chudasamas' counsel to report that Mazda's responses had been compiled and were ready for delivery. He offered to hand deliver the responses to the Chudasamas' counsel at his office in Blakely, Georgia, almost 200 miles away. When he stated that he would be unable to reach Blakely until after five o'clock, counsel for the Chudasamas refused to accept delivery either that day or the following day, a Saturday, because he did not want to wait at the office or ask any of his employees to stay late. Accordingly, counsel for Mazda arranged to have the responses delivered by private courier on Monday, December 19.

Not only did the Chudasamas' counsel refuse to accept Mazda's responses after five o'clock on the day they were due, he drafted a motion for sanctions that very day. The motion requested that the court strike Mazda's answers and enter a default judgment against Mazda on all four counts of the complaint, leaving damages as the only issue to be litigated on the merits. The motion was filed on December 19, the day the Chudasamas' counsel received Mazda's responses. Counsel therefore filed the motion before he could determine whether Mazda's responses, though possibly a day late, [FN25] provided "complete, proper, non-evasive responses" as required by the compel order.

FN25. The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provide the rule for service of pleadings and papers, including "every paper relating to discovery required to be served upon a party." Fed.R.Civ.P. 5(a). They provide that "[s]ervice by mail is complete upon mailing." Fed.R.Civ.P. 5(b). Mazda delivered its responses to the private courier on the date they were due and thus argued below that its responses were not late. The Chudasamas contended that "mailing" in Rule 5(b) only refers to the United States mail and therefore Mazda was one day late. While this argument seems strange in light of the fact that it would have taken longer for the Chudasamas to receive the responses had they been mailed, we note that there are authorities supporting each side. Compare Magnuson v. Video Yesteryear, 85 F.3d 1424, 1430-31 (9th Cir.1996) ("mailing" does not include use of private courier), with United States v. 63-29 Trimble Rd., 812 F.Supp. 332, 334 (E.D.N.Y.1992) ("mailing" does include use of private courier), and Edmond v. United States Postal Serv., 727 F.Supp. 7, 11 (D.D.C.1989) (same), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 949 F.2d 415 (D.C.Cir.1991). At any rate, we have no need to resolve this issue at this time. While the district court concluded in its sanctions order that "[s]ervice by courier is not complete under the rule until the pleading or other paper is handed to the [opposing] counsel or delivered to his office," it revealed this conclusion to be dicta by "mak[ing] clear that sanctions are not being imposed here merely because the Defendants were a few days late in serving their responses." For purposes of this opinion, we will assume that Mazda's responses were a day late.

Counsel for the Chudasamas filed an amended motion on December 21. The amendments contained a number of technical objections to Mazda's attempt to comply with the order. [FN26] On March 2 and 9, 1995, the Chudasamas' counsel augmented his amended motion with two affidavits in which he presented several grounds for default. In *1364 addition to arguing that Mazda's responses were late and suffered several technical deficiencies, he also stated that Mazda had not provided "complete, proper, non-evasive responses" as directed by the compel order.

FN26. For example, the motion was based in part on the fact that some of the responses were improperly initialed by someone other than counsel of record. Record, vol. 4, no. 86, at 2. The motion further complained that Mazda's counsel "falsely signed a certificate of service stating that the supplemental responses ... were deposited in the United States mail," even though they were actually shipped by a private courier. Id. at 3. The amended motion also alleged that the responses were incomplete, but admitted that "plaintiff's counsel has not had sufficient time to make an elaborate comparison between [the responses] and the many prior answers filed by" Mazda. Id.

Before receiving any response from Mazda to the allegations in the two affidavits, the court informed the parties by letter on March 23, 1995, that it intended to grant the Chudasamas' motion. It further requested counsel for the Chudasamas to draft "an appropriate opinion and order, setting forth a narrative history of this matter." On March 30, Mazda moved the court to hold a hearing on the issue and sought leave to respond to the affidavits. The court granted both requests, and on April 19, Mazda filed a comprehensive memorandum addressing the allegations in the two affidavits.

The sanctions hearing, held on April 24, 1995, followed the pattern of the previous three discovery hearings: counsel for both sides presented their arguments, while the court remained mostly silent, made few comments, and did not ask any substantive questions. At the conclusion of the hearing, the court admitted that it had only skimmed through Mazda's memorandum. It pledged to give Mazda's submission more thorough consideration and indicated that it would issue a ruling shortly thereafter.

On April 26, the court again informed the parties by letter that it intended to grant the motion for sanctions. It again asked the Chudasamas' counsel to draft the opinion and order. It directed that a copy of the proposed order be delivered to Mazda for comment.

Counsel for the Chudasamas delivered an eighty-six-page proposed order on May 1, to Mazda. On May 30, Mazda filed a comprehensive memorandum in response. That same day, it also filed a motion for reconsideration or clarification of the December 1 compel order. Mazda contended that compliance with the literal terms of the order was all but impossible and asked the court for guidance as to what deficiencies it perceived in Mazda's responses. During this time, Mazda continued to supplement its responses to the Chudasamas' discovery requests. On June 22, it produced documents which it now concedes were "responsive to legitimate discovery requests and should have been produced at an earlier stage of the litigation." Brief at 16. These documents related to a federal recall of the MPV minivan and arguably suggested that Mazda had deceived the National Highway and Traffic Safety Administration.

On June 26, 1995, the court issued an opinion and order granting the Chudasamas' motion for sanctions (the "sanctions order"). The seventy-page order was largely identical to the proposed order drafted by counsel for the Chudasamas, except that sixteen pages of material had been deleted. In its order, the court struck Mazda's answers and affirmative defenses and directed the clerk to enter a "default judgment" [FN27] in favor of the Chudasamas. The order noted that a jury trial would be required to determine the amount of damages. The order also directed Mazda to pay the Chudasamas' expenses, including attorneys' fees. Finally, the order vacated the previously entered protective order. [FN28]

FN27. Although the Chudasamas requested that a "default judgment" be entered; the court directed that a "default judgment" be entered; and the district court clerk filed a document entitled "default judgment," no judgment has been entered in this case. Defaults are governed by Rule 55. The clerk is required to enter a "default" when a party against whom relief is sought fails to "plead or otherwise defend" the claim. Fed.R.Civ.P. 55(a). The clerk can only enter a "judgment by default" if the "plaintiff's claim ... is for a sum certain or for a sum which can by computation be made certain." Fed.R.Civ.P. 55(b)(1). When the amount of damages is in dispute, as in the instant case, only the court may enter judgment, and then only after determining the amount of damages. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 55(b)(2). There can be no "judgment" without a determination of relief. Thus, the document entitled "default judgment" in this case is more properly termed simply a "default."

FN28. The Chudasamas did not seek this relief in their motion for sanctions, and it was not discussed at any hearing. Moreover, the court's letter requesting counsel for the Chudasamas to draft the sanctions order also made no mention of such relief. We can only presume that counsel for the Chudasamas seized the opportunity to overreach granted by the district court and included this relief either out of spite or for personal gain. Such relief certainly had no beneficial effect on the interests of his clients.

*1365 Mazda sought appellate review through two avenues. First, on June 30, 1995, it moved for a stay of the vacatur of the protective order pending appeal and for certification under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b). [FN29] The district court denied the stay, but amended its June 26 order to include a 1292(b) certification. Mazda also filed a notice of appeal on July 14, 1995. The clerk of this court assigned number 95-8896 to that appeal. On July 26, a panel of this court granted Mazda permission to appeal the sanctions order under section 1292(b), "but only as to that part of the order vacating the Protective Order." [FN30] The panel also granted Mazda a stay pending appeal of the district court's sanctions order to the extent that that order vacated the protective order. The clerk assigned number 95-8921 to the section 1292(b) appeal. The two numbered appeals were consolidated as they both seek review of the same order.

FN29. This provision allows a district judge to certify an interlocutory order for immediate appeal if the order "involves a controlling question of law as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion and ... an immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation." 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b) (1994).

FN30. Section 1292(b) grants courts of appeals discretion whether to accept interlocutory jurisdiction over a certain order.

II.

[1] We begin our analysis by briefly addressing the scope of our jurisdiction in this case. As mentioned supra, another panel of this court granted Mazda permission to proceed with the section 1292(b) appeal, "but only as to that part of the order vacating the Protective Order." While this language implies that our jurisdiction is limited to one part of the sanctions order, there is no such limitation. See Yamaha Motor Corp. v. Calhoun, --U.S.--, 516 U.S. 199, ---, 116 S.Ct. 619, 623, 133 L.Ed.2d 578 (1996); United States v. Fleet Factors Corp., 901 F.2d 1550, 1554 n. 2 (11th Cir.1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 1046, 111 S.Ct. 752, 112 L.Ed.2d 772 (1991). On the contrary, a court of appeals simply has no power to limit its jurisdiction to certain issues. See generally Edwardsville Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Marion Lab. Inc., 808 F.2d 648, 650 (7th Cir.1987) ("[Section 1292(b)] refers to certifying an 'order' for interlocutory appeal. It is not a method of certifying questions."). We therefore have jurisdiction to review the entire sanctions order. [FN31]

FN31. Mazda argues that we also have jurisdiction over this appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291 (1994), under the collateral order doctrine announced in Cohen v. Beneficial Indus. Loan Corp., 337 U.S. 541, 69 S.Ct. 1221, 93 L.Ed. 1528 (1949). Because our jurisdiction under § 1292(b) is clear, we do not address this argument.

[2] Because the sanctions order was issued in part for Mazda's purported violation of the district court's compel order, we must also review that earlier order. Although the compel order is clearly an interlocutory order over which we would not normally have jurisdiction, we may exercise pendent appellate jurisdiction "when a nonappealable decision is 'inextricably intertwined' with an appealable decision or when 'review of the former decision [is] necessary to ensure meaningful review of the latter.'" United States v. Lopez-Lukis, 102 F.3d 1164, 1167 n. 10 (11th Cir.1997) (quoting Swint v. Chambers County Comm'n, 514 U.S. 35, 51, 115 S.Ct. 1203, 1212, 131 L.Ed.2d 60 (1995)). "Meaningful review" of the sanctions order clearly requires review of the compel order. As we discuss below, the propriety of the sanctions order depends in large part on the propriety of the compel order. We therefore have jurisdiction to review the compel order as well as the sanctions order.

III.

The district court based its decision to impose sanctions on Rules 37(b)(2) and 26(g) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Although the order contained several sanctions, it gave no indication as to which sanctions were imposed under which rule. Because the framework for imposing sanctions differs under the two rules, we analyze the propriety of the entire order under both rules. The order must stand unless it cannot be supported by either rule. Because Rule 37(b)(2) explicitly contemplates the sanction of default, *1366 which is at the heart of the order, we analyze the sanctions order under this rule first. We review the propriety of the sanctions order under Rule 26(g) in part IV.

[3][4][5] Rule 37 authorizes a district court to impose such sanctions "as are just" against a party that violates an order compelling discovery. Fed.R.Civ.P. 37(b)(2). [FN32] Included in the rule's list of possible sanctions is an order striking a defendant's answer and entering a default. Fed.R.Civ.P. 37(b)(2)(C). District courts enjoy substantial discretion in deciding whether and how to impose sanctions under Rule 37. See Malautea v. Suzuki Motor Co., 987 F.2d 1536, 1542 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 863, 114 S.Ct. 181, 126

L.Ed.2d 140 (1993). We accordingly review such orders for abuse of discretion. See Maddow v. Procter & Gamble Co., 107 F.3d 846, 853 (11th Cir.1997). When reviewing an order striking a defendant's pleadings, our "review should be particularly scrupulous lest the district court too lightly resort to this extreme sanction, amounting to judgment against the defendant without an opportunity to be heard on the merits." Emerick v. Fenick Indus., 539 F.2d 1379, 1381 (5th Cir.1976). [FN33]

FN32. The rules governing discovery were amended on April 22, 1993. The amendments became effective on December 1, 1993, just over seven months after the Chudasamas' filed their complaint. The Supreme Court has ordered that these amendments apply "insofar as just and practicable, [to] all proceedings in civil cases ... pending" on December 1, 1993. Order of April 22, 1993, Orders of the Supreme Court of the United States Adopting and Amending Rules, Fed.R.Civ.P. Rules 1-11, 28 U.S.C.A. at 23 (Supp.1997); see also Reed v. Binder, 165 F.R.D. 424, 428 n. 4 (D.N.J.1996) (noting that courts have generally applied amendments retroactively "to the maximum extent possible"). We see no reason why the amendments should not have governed the proceedings in this case after December 1, 1993. With few exceptions, the amendments did not materially change the duties of the parties or the court. Although discovery in this case began before the effective date, the vast majority of the discovery-related motions and all the hearings and court orders came well after that date. For these reasons, unless otherwise noted, we quote from and refer to the amended version of the rules.

FN33. In Bonner v. City of Prichard, 661 F.2d 1206, 1209 (11th Cir.1981) (en banc), this court adopted as binding precedent all decisions of the former Fifth Circuit handed down prior to October 1, 1981.

[6][7][8] To the extent that the district court based its sanctions order on Rule 37(b), the propriety of that order depends in large part on the propriety of the earlier compel order. See GFI Computer Indus. v. Fry, 476 F.2d 1, 5 (5th Cir.1973) (reversing order of default imposed for violation of erroneously entered order). We review orders compelling discovery under the same abuse of discretion standard. Maddow, 107 F.3d at 853. In evaluating whether a district court abuses its discretion when it imposes severe sanctions upon a party that violates an order, we believe that an important factor is whether the entry of that order was itself an abuse of discretion. [FN34] We therefore focus our analysis in part A on the district court's decision to compel discovery and conclude that it was an abuse of discretion. In part B, we return to the sanctions order proper and draw the same conclusion.

FN34. Because we expect litigants to obey all orders, even those they believe were improvidently entered, sanctions will very often be sustained, particularly when the infirmity of the violated order is not clear and the sanctions imposed are moderate. This case presents neither of these circumstances.

[9] We find that the district court's decision to compel discovery in this case was an abuse of discretion. We draw this conclusion based on the district court's failure adequately to manage this case. District courts must take an active role in managing cases on their docket. See generally Hoffmann-La Roche Inc. v. Sperling, 493 U.S. 165, 171, 110 S.Ct. 482, 487, 107 L.Ed.2d 480 (1989) (emphasizing "wisdom and necessity for early judicial intervention in the management of litigation"); William W. Schwarzer, Managing Civil Litigation: The Trial Judge's Role, 61 Judicature 400, 402, 404 (1978) (urging district judges to adopt more active role in pretrial proceedings, especially in managing discovery disputes), cited in Hoffmann-La Roche, 493 U.S. at 171, 110 S.Ct. at 487.

We recognize that district courts enjoy broad discretion in deciding how best to manage the cases before them. See, e.g., United States v. McCutcheon, 86 F.3d 187, 190 (11th *1367 Cir.1996). This discretion is not unfettered, however. When a litigant's rights are materially prejudiced by the district court's mismanagement of a case, we must redress the abuse of discretion. The mismanagement of two key parts of this case--Mazda's motion to dismiss the Chudasamas' fraud claim and Mazda's resistance to the Chudasamas' discovery requests--indicates that the district court abused its discretion.

[10][11][12] Failure to consider and rule on significant pretrial motions before issuing dispositive orders can be an abuse of discretion. See, e.g., In re School Asbestos Litig., 977 F.2d 764, 792-93 (3d Cir.1992) (granting writ of mandamus as remedy for district court's "arbitrar [y] refus[all] to rule on a summary judgment motion"); Ellison v. Ford Motor Co., 847 F.2d 297, 300-01 (6th Cir.1988) (finding district court's failure to rule on motion to amend complaint before granting summary judgment abuse of discretion); McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Polin, 429 F.2d 30, 31 (3d Cir.1970) (directing district court to consider and rule on motion to transfer before discovery on the merits of the case (but after discovery related solely to transfer issue)). Resolution of a pretrial motion that turns on findings of fact--for example, a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(2)--may require some limited discovery before a meaningful ruling can be made. Facial challenges to the legal sufficiency of a claim or defense, such as a motion to dismiss based on failure to state a claim for relief, [FN35] should, however, be resolved before discovery begins. Such a dispute always presents a purely legal question; there are no issues of fact because the allegations contained in the pleading are presumed to be true. See Mitchell v. Duval County Sch. Bd., 107 F.3d 837, 838 n. 1 (11th Cir.1997) (per curiam). Therefore, neither the parties nor the court have any need for discovery before the court rules on the motion. See Kaylor v. Fields, 661 F.2d 1177, 1184 (8th Cir.1981) ("Discovery should follow the filing of a well-pleaded complaint. It is not a device to enable a plaintiff to make a case when his complaint has failed to state a claim.").

FN35. We note that these observations would apply with equal force to challenges to the sufficiency of affirmative defenses, counterclaims, or cross-claims found in any party's pleadings. The district court should resolve all such disputes as early as possible for the reasons we state. We focus on motions to dismiss by defendants only because this case involves such a motion.

Although mechanisms for effective discovery are essential to the fairness of our system of litigation, see generally 6 James Wm. Moore et al., Moore's Federal Practice § 26.02 (3d ed.1997) (outlining beneficial purposes of discovery), they also carry significant costs, see generally Maurice Rosenberg, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure in Action: Assessing Their Impact, 137 U. Pa. L.Rev. 2197, 2204-05 (1989) (discussing costs and noting that in survey of 1000 judges, "abusive discovery was rated highest among the reasons for the high cost of litigation"). Discovery imposes several costs on the litigant from whom discovery is sought. These burdens include the time spent searching for and compiling relevant documents; the time, expense, and aggravation of preparing for and attending depositions; the costs of copying and shipping documents; and the attorneys' fees generated in interpreting discovery requests, drafting responses to interrogatories and coordinating responses to production requests, advising the client as to which documents should be disclosed and which ones withheld, and determining whether certain information is privileged. The party seeking discovery also bears costs, including attorneys' fees generated in drafting discovery requests and reviewing the opponent's objections and responses. Both parties incur costs related to the delay discovery imposes on reaching the merits of the case. Finally, discovery imposes burdens on the judicial system; [FN36] scarce judicial resources must be *1368 diverted from other cases to resolve discovery disputes.

FN36. For instance, as discussed infra part IV, Rule 26(g)(2)(C) requires the parties to certify, on pain of mandatory sanctions, that all discovery requests, responses, or objections are not "unreasonably or unduly burdensome or expensive." Failure to rule on a motion to dismiss a claim impacting the needs of the case clouds the parties' ability to certify and hinders their ability to conduct appropriate discovery. Allowing a dubious claim that impacts the needs of the case to remain in the lawsuit without a meaningful ruling from the court therefore prevents discovery from proceeding smoothly and efficiently.

If the district court dismisses a nonmeritorious claim before discovery has begun, unnecessary costs to the litigants and to the court system can be avoided. Conversely, delaying ruling on a motion to dismiss such a claim until after the parties complete discovery encourages abusive discovery and, if the court ultimately dismisses the claim, imposes unnecessary costs. For these reasons, any legally unsupported claim that would unduly enlarge the scope of discovery [FN37] should be eliminated before the discovery stage, if possible. [FN38] Allowing a case to proceed through the pretrial processes with an invalid claim that increases the costs of the case does nothing but waste the resources of the litigants in the action before the court, delay resolution of disputes between other litigants, squander scarce judicial resources, and damage the integrity and the public's perception of the federal judicial system.

FN37. The scope of allowable discovery is determined by the claims (and defenses) raised in the case. The rules describe the general scope of discovery as follows: Parties may obtain discovery regarding any matter, not privileged, which is relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending action, whether it relates to the claim or defense of the party seeking discovery or to the claim or defense of any other party, including the existence, description, nature, custody, condition, and location of any books, documents, or other tangible things and the identity and location of persons having knowledge of any discoverable matter. The information sought need not be admissible at the trial if the information sought appears reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. Fed.R.Civ.P. 26(b)(1) (emphasis added).

FN38. Moreover, the ruling must be meaningful. It is not enough simply to deny a motion to dismiss a claim with little or no comment and then revisit the defendant's legal contentions when the defendant files a motion for summary judgment after discovery has concluded. We realize that the Civil Justice Reform Act has led to strict case management deadlines, making it difficult for district courts to take the time to consider pretrial motions closely. See 28 U.S.C. § 471 (1994) (requiring district courts to implement plans intended in part to "ensure just, speedy, and inexpensive resolutions of civil disputes"). Nonetheless, district courts simply must not allow the most critical pretrial motions to be carried with the case until the final pretrial conference unless to do so is absolutely necessary.

[13] In sum, as the burdens of allowing a dubious claim to remain in the lawsuit increase, so too does the duty of the district court finally to determine the validity of the claim. Thus, when faced with a motion to dismiss a claim for relief that significantly enlarges the scope of discovery, the district court should rule on the motion before entering discovery orders, if possible. The court's duty in this regard becomes all the more imperative when the contested claim is especially dubious.

[14] Turning to the facts of the instant case, we note that even the most cursory review of the Chudasamas' shotgun complaint reveals that it contains a fraud count that is novel and of questionable validity. Upon reading the complaint, the district court should have noted that the fraud count dramatically enlarged the scope of the Chudasamas' case. Without the fraud theory, the scope of discovery likely would have been limited to information tending to show that the MPV minivan was a defective product and that Mazda was negligent in designing it. With the fraud theory in the case, on the other hand, the scope of discovery broadened to include, inter alia, Mazda's marketing strategies and safety testing. As a result, the Chudasamas could seek much broader discovery with the fraud count in the complaint than without it. The presence of the fraud count accordingly contributed greatly to the discovery disputes. Furthermore, as long as the fraud claim remained in the case without a dispositive ruling from the bench, any analysis of "the needs of the case," as required of the court by Rule 26(b)(2) and of the litigants by Rule 26(g)(2)(C), would be hindered. As a result, Mazda faced significant uncertainty in certifying that any of its responses were "complete, proper, and non-evasive."

[15] Many, if not most, of these problems could have been solved had the district court simply ruled on Mazda's motion to dismiss the fraud claim. Had it granted the motion, then the Chudasamas would have been forced to narrow the scope of their discovery requests considerably. Had it denied the *1369 motion and ruled that the Chudasamas had stated a claim for fraud, then Mazda would have been forced to accept a broader view of discoverable information.

The dubious nature of the fraud count made the need for a ruling even more imperative. While the question of whether the Chudasamas' allegations of fraud state a claim for relief is not directly before us, we find it hard to believe that Georgia law would recognize such a claim. [FN39] At any rate, we conclude that this claim was dubious enough to require the district court to rule on Mazda's motion to dismiss prior to entering the compel order. When the court refused to do so and, instead, allowed the case to proceed through discovery without an analysis of the fraud claim, it abused its discretion.

FN39. The Chudasamas do not cite a single reported products liability case in the United States, much less in Georgia or the Eleventh Circuit, that has recognized the fraud theory they allege (i.e., a fraud claim based on advertisements of a product that does not meet an inapplicable federal safety standard). Cf. Logan Equip. Corp. v. Simon Aerials, Inc., 736 F.Supp. 1188, 1200-02 (D.Mass.1990) (fraud claim based on statement that product complied with applicable standards); Geo. Byers Sons, Inc. v. East Europe Import Export, Inc., 488 F.Supp. 574, 582-83 (D.Md.1980) (same). Under Georgia law, "[t]he tort of fraud has five elements: a false representation by a defendant, scienter, intention to induce the plaintiff to act or refrain from acting, justifiable reliance by plaintiff, and damage to plaintiff." Crawford v. Williams, 258 Ga. 806, 806, 375 S.E.2d 223, 224 (1989). Aside from problems with the damages they seek, see supra note 12, the Chudasamas' allegations appear deficient with regard to at least two of these elements. First, they must prove a "false misrepresentation." Although the Chudasamas' correctly point out that an express misrepresentation is not required, see O.C.G.A. § 51-6-4 (1982) (providing that fraud can be shown by acts or silence); Sapp v. ABC Credit & Inv. Co., 243 Ga. 151, 157, 253 S.E.2d 82, 86 (1979) ("There are infinite means by which it can be accomplished.... It may be perpetrated by signs and tricks, and even silence may in some instances amount to fraud.") (citation to original omitted), they must prove that Mazda somehow misled them. The Chudasamas characterize Mazda's alleged deceptive practice as "false advertising." Answer Br. at 8-9, 37. They contend that by advertising the MPV minivan as a "vehicle intended to be used primarily for transporting adults and children," Mazda "deceived" them into believing that the MPV met the federal standards for cars. They concede that (1) that standard does not apply to the MPV minivan and (2) the MPV minivan complies with the applicable multipurpose passenger vehicle standard, which applies to "motor vehicle[s] designed to carry 10 persons or less which [are] constructed either on a truck chassis or with special features for occasional off-road operation." See supra note 10. Nothing in the federal standards suggests that the car standards provide sufficient safety for the transportation of adults and children, while the multipurpose vehicle standards do not. In the face of these facts, how the advertisement described by the Chudasamas could possibly be characterized as false or deceptive is beyond our comprehension. The second glaring problem with their fraud claim is the allegation that they relied on Mazda's "false" advertising. The Chudasamas failed to allege that they were even aware that the federal government imposed different safety standards on "multipurpose passenger vehicles," which the MPV minivan was, and on "passenger cars," which the minivan was not. Georgia law clearly requires proof of reasonable reliance for a claim of fraud. See, e.g., Cobb County Sch. Dist. v. MAT Factory, Inc., 215 Ga.App. 697, 700-01, 452 S.E.2d 140, 144 (1994) (holding that without proof of justifiable reliance, fraud "claim tumbles like a house of cards"). As a threshold matter, the Chudasamas must prove they actually relied on Mazda's advertisements when they bought the MPV minivan. Mazda contends that they have admitted, during a pretrial deposition, that they did not so rely. At any rate, their complaint failed to point to any specific advertisement on which they allegedly relied. The Chudasamas seek to overcome these obstacles with a unique "fraud on the market" theory. Because Mazda subjected "the whole market" to its deceptive advertising, they argue, reliance should be presumed. Answer Br. at 37-38. They do not cite a single Georgia case applying this doctrine (probably because there is no such case). Instead, they cite several federal securities law cases. The fraud on the market theory of securities law, however, is based on concepts and policies that simply do not apply in a products liability case. See generally Basic Inc. v. Levinson, 485 U.S. 224, 241-45, 108 S.Ct. 978, 988-90, 99 L.Ed.2d 194 (1988) (discussing rationale behind fraud on the market theory); Ross v. Bank South, N.A., 885 F.2d 723, 739 (11th Cir.1989) (en banc) (Tjoflat, J., specially concurring) (same), cert. denied, 495 U.S. 905, 110 S.Ct. 1924, 109 L.Ed.2d 287 (1990). We find it very doubtful that Georgia courts would change their historic requirement of proof of reliance by grafting a rule of federal securities law onto their body of tort law. The point of this discussion is not to conclusively demonstrate that the Chudasamas have failed to state a claim for relief. Rather, the clear weaknesses in their claim illustrate the severity of the district court's abuse of discretion in not issuing a ruling on Mazda's motion to dismiss.

[16][17] By and large, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure are designed to minimize the need for judicial intervention into discovery matters. They do not eliminate that need, however. See ACF Indus. v. E.E.O.C., 439 U.S. 1081, 1087, 99 S.Ct. 865, 869, 59 L.Ed.2d 52 (1979) (Powell, J. dissenting from denial of certiorari) ("With respect to abuse of discovery ... there is a pressing need for judicial supervision...."); Malautea, 987 F.2d at 1547 (Roney, J., concurring) (noting that "failure of busy courts to properly monitor the use of discovery procedures" is partially to blame for "improper discovery activity which unnecessarily prolongs and raises the costs of litigation"). When the parties to a case inform the court that there are objections to discovery requests that they cannot resolve, the court should provide rulings on the objections. [FN40] When a party moves the court to compel discovery, the court should consider and rule on the objections filed by the resisting party. While it has discretion to grant or deny the motion, it should not grant the motion in the face of well-developed, bona fide objections without a meaningful explanation of its decision.

FN40. If the parties' disputes are complex or would require an inordinate amount of the district court's time to resolve, the court may appoint a magistrate judge to referee the discovery process pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 72(a). The local rules in the Middle District of Georgia have a similar provision. See M.D. Ga. Local Rule 12.2. While a magistrate judge could not decide dispositive matters, like a motion to dismiss, without the consent of the parties, the judge could issue proposed findings of fact and recommendations to aid the district court in reaching its decision. See 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1)(B)(1994); Fed.R.Civ.P. 72(b); M.D. Ga. Local R. 12.3. If the district court does not believe it has the time to resolve discovery disputes, it is free to delegate much of that task to a magistrate judge.

Filtering out overly burdensome discovery requests before issuing dispositive orders serves many of the same purposes as eliminating nonmeritorious claims for relief that unnecessarily broaden the scope of discovery. To the extent that such requests unduly broaden the scope of discovery, rejecting them saves significant costs to the parties, the court, and other litigants. To the extent the requests unduly increase the parties' costs of compliance, rejecting them will result in more equitable and more efficient discovery management and will discourage further abuse.

[18] Our review of the record in this case convinces us that Mazda filed and argued numerous good-faith objections based on persuasive grounds. Although we express no opinion as to whether the objections should have been sustained, we are deeply concerned by the district court's failure either to explain why it granted the compel order over Mazda's objections or otherwise to indicate that it had taken the objections into consideration. As with the court's refusal to rule on the motion to dismiss, we find that this mismanagement by the court strongly suggests that the court abused its discretion in issuing the compel order. When both instances of the court's mismanagement are viewed together, any doubt that the court abused its discretion in issuing the compel order disappears. That order must be vacated.

B.

[19][20] Having determined that the district court abused its discretion in ordering Mazda to respond to the Chudasamas' requests, we turn to the subsequent sanctions order to determine whether it fell within the district court's broad discretion. The answer is fairly clear: the district court would have been hard pressed to fashion sanctions more severe than those included in its order. Mazda lost nearly everything that was at stake in the litigation and more. In addition to granting costs and attorneys' fees to the Chudasamas, the court struck Mazda's answer and ordered that a default be entered on all claims, [FN41] reserving damages as the only issue to be tried on the merits. Moreover, it *1371 vacated its previously entered protective order. This may have been as prejudicial a sanction as it could adopt. [FN42] Not only could Mazda's commercial competitors gain access to the design documents, marketing materials, and other proprietary information which Mazda had already disclosed, the order made it clear that Mazda had to disclose even more sensitive information to assist the Chudasamas in the looming trial on damages. These sanctions were so unduly severe under the circumstances as to constitute a clear abuse of discretion.

FN41. The court still did not determine whether the fraud claim stated a valid cause of action. Regardless of the willfulness of a party's discovery violation, a default judgment cannot stand on a complaint that fails to state a claim. See Nishimatsu Constr. Co. v. Houston Nat'l Bank, 515 F.2d 1200, 1206 (5th Cir.1975) ("A default judgment is unassailable on the merits but only so far as it is supported by well-pleaded allegations, assumed to be true.") (citing Thomson v. Wooster, 114 U.S. 104, 113, 5 S.Ct. 788, 792, 29 L.Ed. 105 (1885)); Black v. Lane, 22 F.3d 1395, 1399 (7th Cir.1994); Whittlesey v. Weyerhaeuser Co., 640 F.2d 739, 742 (5th Cir.1981).

FN42. This sanction makes us question an earlier panel's characterization of a default as "the most awesome weapon in the Rule 37 arsenal." Adolph Coors Co. v. Movement Against Racism & the Klan, 777 F.2d 1538, 1543 (11th Cir.1985).

[21][22][23] The severity of these sanctions required the court to find that Mazda's "noncompliance" with the compel order was intentional or in bad faith. See Societe Internationale Pour Participations Industrielles et Commerciales v. Rogers, 357 U.S. 197, 212, 78 S.Ct. 1087, 1096, 2 L.Ed.2d 1255 (1958); Searock v. Stripling, 736 F.2d 650, 653 (11th Cir.1984). "Violation of a discovery order caused by simple negligence, misunderstanding, or inability to comply will not justify a Rule 37 default..." Malautea, 987 F.2d at 1542. Moreover, a district court abuses its discretion under Rule 37(b)(2) if it enters a default when "less draconian but equally effective sanctions were available." Adolph Coors Co. v. Movement Against Racism & the Klan, 777 F.2d 1538, 1543 (11th Cir.1985).

In its sanctions order, the district court found that Mazda acted in bad faith when it failed to comply with the compel order. This finding has little support in the record and is erroneous. The district court's compel order required Mazda to "make complete, proper, non-evasive responses" to a list of the Chudasamas' discovery requests. The order itself and the record in general are completely devoid of any guidance from the court as to how Mazda was to respond. As we have illustrated above, many of these requests were extremely broad, vague, or both. Literal compliance with several of the requests was simply not possible. Thus, Mazda's assumption that literal compliance was not required is at least understandable.

Mazda brought these complications to the court's attention both before and after the compel order was entered. Prior to the entry of the order, Mazda's objections, and especially its November 4, 1994, letter listing three main disputes that required resolution, put the court on notice of the need for clarification of the Chudasamas' requests. After the court entered its compel order, it received even clearer notice of Mazda's inability to comply with the Chudasamas' discovery requests; the statements of Mazda's counsel at the April 24, 1995, hearing, Mazda's April 19 memorandum opposing sanctions, and Mazda's May 30 motion for reconsideration or clarification of the compel order all informed the court that literal compliance with the discovery requests--and thus the compel order--was simply not possible. The district court disregarded Mazda's emphatic requests for rulings or clarification and issued a compel order containing no guidance as to how it was to be satisfied. In short, the patent ambiguity in the discovery requests that the court compelled Mazda to satisfy and the court's utter failure to clarify Mazda's obligations were largely to blame for Mazda's "noncompliance." Moreover, less onerous sanctions were available; the vacatur of the protective order in particular was entirely unnecessary. [FN43] Therefore, the severe sanctions *1372 order entered in this case was a clear abuse of discretion and cannot stand under Rule 37(b)(2).

FN43. The sanction of vacating a protective order is particularly problematic. "[A] primary purpose of Rule 37 sanctions is to deter future abuse of discovery." Adolph Coors Co., 777 F.2d at 1542 (citing National Hockey League v. Metropolitan Hockey Club, Inc., 427 U.S. 639, 643, 96 S.Ct. 2778, 2781, 49 L.Ed.2d 747 (1976) (per curiam)). The record clearly shows that Mazda relied on the protective order when it provided a large percentage of its discovery responses. The potential economic harm of allowing Mazda's proprietary information to be disclosed to its commercial competitors may very well exceed its potential liability in this case. If we were to let the sanctions stand, Mazda, and other large corporations amenable to suit in the Middle District of Georgia, may determine that, from the outset, Mazda would have been better off to disclose no proprietary information and accept a default. Although it would have lost the lawsuit, it would have been assured that its proprietary information would not end up in the public record. Thus, instead of deterring Mazda and other potential commercial defendants from abusing the discovery process in the future, the district court's sanctions order could have the opposite effect.

IV.

As noted, the district court also based its sanctions order on Rule 26(g). This rule requires that discovery-related filings bear the signature of an attorney of record. This signature certifies that the filing conforms to the discovery rules, is made for a proper purpose, and does not impose undue burdens on the opposing party in light of the circumstances of the case. Fed.R.Civ.P. 26(g)(2). [FN44] If the court finds that "without substantial justification a certification is made in violation of the rule," then it must impose on the offending party "an appropriate sanction, which may include an order to pay" the other party's expenses including attorneys' fees. Fed.R.Civ.P. 26(g)(3).

FN44. Specifically, the signature certifies that to the best of the signer's knowledge, information, and belief, formed after a reasonable inquiry, the request, response, or objection is: (A) consistent with these rules and warranted by existing law or a good faith argument for the extension, modification, or reversal of existing law; (B) not interposed for any improper purpose, such as to harass or to cause unnecessary delay or needless increase in the cost of litigation; and (C) not unreasonable or unduly burdensome or expensive, given the needs of the case, the discovery already had in the case, the amount in controversy, and the importance of the issues at stake in the litigation. Fed.R.Civ.P. 26(g).

[24][25] The decision whether to impose sanctions under Rule 26(g)(3) is not discretionary. Once the court makes the factual determination that a discovery filing was signed in violation of the rule, it must impose "an appropriate sanction." See Malautea, 987 F.2d at 1545. The decision of what sanction is appropriate, however, is committed to the district court's discretion. Fed.R.Civ.P. 26(g) advisory committee's note (1983 amend.) ("The nature of the sanction is a matter of judicial discretion to be exercised in light of the particular circumstances."). When reviewing a sanctions order entered pursuant to Rule 26(g)(3), we therefore review the court's factual finding that a certification was made in violation of Rule 26(g) for clear error and the court's decision of the appropriate sanction for an abuse of discretion. See Malautea, 987 F.2d at 1545.

[26] The record does contain some evidence that Mazda abused the discovery procedures, withheld admittedly relevant information, and engaged in dilatory tactics. Accordingly, the court's determination that Mazda certified its discovery responses and objections in violation of Rule 26(g) is not clearly erroneous. Contrary to the Chudasamas' assertions, however, this evidence is not enough to support the severe sanctions order. First, the majority of Mazda's misconduct was due to the court's utter failure to exercise its discretion in managing the case. While we do not condone self-help, under the circumstances here, we find the entry of a default and the vacatur of the protective order to be undue punishment.

Second, the imposition of such severe sanctions "is appropriate only as a last resort." Malautea, 987 F.2d at 1542. Had the court taken the time to examine Mazda's motion to dismiss or its discovery objections and then issued a meaningful ruling, we believe that Mazda's compliance with the Chudasamas' requests would have been satisfactory.

Finally and most importantly, in exercising its discretion under Rule 26(g)(3) for determining an appropriate sanction, the district court must analyze the needs of the case. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 26(g)(2)(C). As our earlier analysis demonstrates, the court clearly failed to do this. It never ruled on Mazda's motion to dismiss or offered any indication that it had given the motion serious consideration. The court's failure to rule on the motion to dismiss or to address Mazda's discovery objections demonstrates that it did not analyze the needs of the case. Although sanctions may have been appropriate, the severe sanctions imposed were clearly excessive, and the court's determination of the "appropriate sanction" under Rule 26(g)(2)(C) was therefore an abuse of discretion. [FN45] Because the sanctions order cannot *1373 stand under either Rule 37(b) or Rule 26(g), it must be vacated.

FN45. We note that the imposition of costs and attorneys' fees probably would not have been an abuse of discretion. Rule 26(g)(3) suggests just such a sanction. See Malautea, 987 F.2d at 1545. Although this observation may suggest that we should affirm at least that part of the district court's order imposing this sanction and vacate the rest, we cannot do so in this case. First, the order requires payment of all costs and fees "associated with th[e] protracted and costly discovery dispute." As the text of the rule suggests, an order imposing costs generally should be limited to "the reasonable expenses incurred because of the violation." Fed.R.Civ.P. 26(g)(3) (emphasis added). Clearly, the unreasonably broad and vague discovery requests propounded by the Chudasamas and their unwillingness to narrow them were as much to blame for the delay and excessive costs that have been incurred in this case as were Mazda's dilatory tactics. Even more to blame, in our view, is the district court itself for failing actively to manage this case. Second, as should now be apparent, the district court's management of this case, including the imposition of sanctions, is so infected with abuses of discretion that we must vacate the order in toto. It is simply not possible to carve out a portion of the order and affirm it on the ground that it was not an abuse of discretion.

V.

Understandably, Mazda asks us to reassign this case to another district judge on remand. Our authority to grant this relief is well established. See 28 U.S.C. § 2106 (1994) (authorizing court of appeals to "remand the cause and direct the entry of such appropriate judgment, decree, or order, or require such further proceedings to be had as may be just under the circumstances"); United States v. Remillong, 55 F.3d 572, 577-78 n. 12 (11th Cir.1995) (per curiam).

[27] Three factors inform our decision to reassign a case on remand: "(1) whether the original judge would have difficulty putting his previous views and findings aside; (2) whether reassignment is appropriate to preserve the appearance of justice; (3) whether reassignment would entail waste and duplication out of proportion to the gains realized from reassignment." Id. at 578 n. 12 (quoting United States v. Torkington, 874 F.2d 1441, 1446 (11th Cir.1989) (per curiam)).

[28] While the strong language employed in both the compel order and the sanctions order suggest that the district judge may have trouble putting aside his previous views, we find the second factor the most telling. The extent of the judge's abuse of discretion--and the partiality of the practices constituting that abuse--would have a significant effect on the appearance of justice should he remain assigned to this case. In particular, the judge's practice of delegating the task of drafting sensitive, dispositive orders to plaintiffs' counsel, and then uncritically adopting his proposed orders nearly verbatim, would belie the appearance of justice to the average observer. [FN46]

FN46. We have consistently frowned upon the practice of delegating the task of drafting important opinions to litigants, and "[t]he cases admonishing trial courts for the verbatim adoption of proposed orders drafted by litigants are legion." Colony Square Co. v. Prudential Ins. Co., 819 F.2d 272, 274-75 (11th Cir.1987). This practice harms the quality of the district court's deliberative process, see id. at 275, impedes our ability to review the district court's decisions, see Keystone Plastics, Inc. v. C & P Plastics, Inc., 506 F.2d 960, 962 (5th Cir.1975), and creates "the potential for overreaching and exaggeration on the part of attorneys preparing findings of fact when they have already been informed that the judge has decided in their favor," Anderson v. City of Bessemer City, 470 U.S. 564, 572, 105 S.Ct. 1504, 1510, 84 L.Ed.2d 518 (1985). See also United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Co., 376 U.S. 651, 657 n. 4, 84 S.Ct. 1044, 1047 n. 4, 12 L.Ed.2d 12 (1964) (quoting Judge J. Skelly Wright's admonition that the lawyers who draft opinions "in their zeal and advocacy and their enthusiasm are going to state the case for their side ... as strongly as they possibly can. When these [opinions] get to the courts of appeals they won't be worth the paper they are written on as far as assisting the court of appeals in determining why the judge decided the case."). We fully recognize that the district court's adoption of the Chudasamas' draft orders nearly verbatim does not affect our standard of review, see Anderson, 470 U.S. at 572, 105 S.Ct. at 1510, and does not automatically create an "appearance of impropriety" that would require the district judge to recuse under 28 U.S.C. § 455(a) (1994), see Colony Square Co., 819 F.2d at 276 n. 14. Nonetheless, in light of (1) the extent of the court's abuse of discretion in managing the case, (2) the utter lack of an appearance of impartiality in the text of the proposed orders, (3) the fact that one of the orders imposed sanctions against the opposing party and counsel, (4) the inclusion in the order of the vacatur of the protective order, which was neither requested in the Chudasamas' motion for sanctions nor suggested by the district court when it asked counsel to draft the order, and (5) the frequency with which the district judge employed this procedure in this case, the court's practice of uncritically adopting counsel's proposed orders strongly suggests, if not requires, that this case be reassigned.

1374 Finally, although significant time has already been spent on this case under his direction, the judge's failure to manage the case removes any concerns involving waste or duplication. Although he had the case for over a year and a half by the time he issued the sanctions order, the record gives no indication that the judge ever spent any time considering the key pretrial issue, the motion to dismiss the fraud count. Despite the length of time this case has been pending, it is really a simple products liability case. We have confidence that a new judge who properly manages this case will need little time to "get up to speed." The gains to be realized from reassignment will far outweigh the costs.

VI.

For the foregoing reasons, we VACATE both the district court's order compelling discovery and its order granting the appellee's amended motion for sanctions and REMAND this case with the instruction that the Chief Judge of the Middle District of Georgia reassign the case to a different district judge for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

John MARSH, In His Official Capacity as Secretary of the Army of the United States, et al., Defendants-Appellees.

No. 91-3837.

Jan. 19, 1994.

Contractors brought action challenging suspension of award of contracts under minority set-aside program by the Army Corps of Engineers. The United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana, Henry A. Mentz, Jr., J., entered summary judgment in favor of defendants, and contractors appealed. The Court of Appeals, Garwood, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) Corps articulated nondiscriminatory reason for suspension of award of contracts under minority set-aside program, that it was result of adverse district court decision finding practice to be improper, and contractors failed to show that proffered reasons were a mere pretext for discrimination, and (2) contractors were not entitled to attorney fees under the Equal Access to Justice Act (EAJA) or civil rights statute.

Affirmed.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana.

Before REYNALDO G. GARZA and GARWOOD, Circuit Judges and WERLEIN, [FN*] District Judge.

FN* District Judge of the Southern District of Texas, sitting by designation.

GARWOOD, Circuit Judge:

This case involves the grant of summary judgment against a suit for unspecified damages from a three-month suspension of a discretionary minority set-aside program. E.J.A., Inc. (EJA); Enplanar, Inc. (Enplanar); Dragon Limited, Inc. (Dragon); and V. Keeler & Co., Inc. (Keeler) appeal the district court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the United States Army Corps of Engineers (the Corps). We affirm.

Facts and Proceedings Below

This case relates to the Corps' administration of its set-aside program for minority businesses (the 8(a) program), as described in the Small Business Act § 8(a), 15 U.S.C. § 637(a). The operation of the 8(a) program is delineated in Fordice Constr. Co. v. Marsh, 773 F.Supp. 867, 869-70 (S.D.Miss.1990). As noted in that opinion, Congress created the 8(a) program to encourage minority small-business enterprises. Id. at 869. Under this program, the Small Business Administration (SBA) determines which minority businesses are eligible to participate in the 8(a) program. 15 U.S.C. § 637(a)(4)-(8). The SBA then acts as an intermediary between government procurement agencies--such as the Corps--and these certified minority businesses. Under this system, a procurement agency's proposed project may be placed in the 8(a) program in one of three ways, all of which are entirely at the discretion of the SBA and the procurement agency: (1) the SBA advises the procurement agency of an 8(a) firm's capabilities and asks that agency to identify and submit to the 8(a) program its proposed contracts that support the firm's business plan; (2) the SBA identifies a specific contract for a particular 8(a) firm and asks the agency to offer the contract to the 8(a) program for the firm; or (3) the agency reviews its proposed contracts and identifies and offers those which are suitable for the 8(a) program. Id. at 637(a)(1)(A); 48 C.F.R. §§ 19.800(b), 19.803(a)-(c), 19.804. [FN1] Once a contract has been set aside for minority businesses, the SBA then selects the minority contractor best suited to perform the contract. 15 U.S.C. § 637(a)(1)(B), (a)(7)(A); 13 C.F.R. § 124.307(d). The SBA, on behalf of the minority contractor, then certifies to the procurement agency that the minority contractor can perform the contract, and the SBA begins to negotiate with the agency's contracting officer upon mutually agreeable terms and conditions. 48 C.F.R. § 19.800(c). *1288 Alternatively, upon mutual agreement between the SBA and the agency, the minority contractor itself may be allowed to negotiate with the agency. 48 C.F.R. § 19.808-1(b). Throughout this process, it is within the procurement agency's discretion to withdraw the project from the 8(a) program before the contract is awarded. 48 C.F.R. § 19.800(c). Finally, the minority contractor cannot be awarded the project if the price of the contract results in a cost to the procurement agency which exceeds a fair

FN1. A minority contractor may also influence this discretionary process through informal "self-marketing." Self-marketing is a way for 8(a) contractors to notify a procurement agency of projects the agency could choose to refer to the SBA. The 8(a) contractors contact that agency's personnel and market their services concerning projects that the contractors could work on. The agency can then decide to refer the project to the SBA which may, in its discretion, give the project to the contractor who engaged in the self-marketing. 48 C.F.R. §§ 19.803(c), 19.804-2(a)(12).

Prior to the case sub judice, three nonminority small-business contractors challenged the Corps' joint administration of the 8(a) program with the SBA. Specifically, these contractors challenged the Corps' submission practice whereby it set aside one-hundred percent of its small-business contracts for minority businesses. These contractors contended that in setting aside one-hundred percent of the contracts, the agencies failed to consider the effect a minority enterprise set-aside would have on competing nonminority small-business contractors. The district court initially dismissed the suit on mootness grounds, and we reversed. Valley Constr. Co. v. Marsh, 714 F.2d 26 (5th Cir.1983) (Valley I). On remand, the district court held that the Corps' administration of the 8(a) program impermissibly excluded the nonminority small-business contractors in violation of 42 U.S.C. § 2000d, and that the SBA ignored its statutorily directed policy pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 637(d)(1) requiring it to consider the economic impact on these contractors. Fordice, 773 F.Supp. at 882. The government initially appealed the decision, but it withdrew its appeal on October 23, 1990.

In early November 1990, in response to the Fordice decision and the withdrawal of the government's appeal, the Corps sought legal guidance from Army Headquarters concerning the continuing legality of its administration of the 8(a) program, and the possible personal liability of the contracting officers in submitting contracts to the SBA under the program. While awaiting advice, the Corps continued to abide by previously awarded 8(a) contracts, and exercised the options on all 8(a) contracts for extending performance by the minority contractor into later years. Although the Corps did not terminate any pre-existing 8(a) contracts, it did hold in abeyance any ongoing activity in reference to 8(a) contracts not yet awarded. This abeyance continued until January 22, 1991, when the Corps received guidance from Army Headquarters notifying it that, as to the currently administered 8(a) program, there existed no legal impediment to awarding contracts to the SBA through the 8(a) program. [FN2]

FN2. Subsequently, this advice was at least partially confirmed by this Circuit, which held in a separate case that the Corps there properly administered the 8(a) program in conformity with newly promulgated regulations. See 48 C.F.R. 19.804-1(2)(3); Valley Constr. Co. v. Marsh, 984 F.2d 133, 135 (5th Cir.1993) (Valley II) (Corps reasonably interpreted regulation not to require "impact analysis" for "new, non-recurring construction contracts"). The appellant attempted to rely on Fordice as authority for the proposition that the Corps was still improperly awarding contracts to minority businesses under the 8(a) program because it was not considering the economic impact of nonminority businesses, but we determined that "[n]ot only is Fordice factually distinguishable from this case, but it is non-binding on this court." Id. at 135 n. 5.

On January 8, 1991, EJA, Enplanar, Dragon, and Keeler (collectively, the Contractors) brought suit in Louisiana seeking injunctive and declaratory relief against, inter alia, the Corps and its personnel in their official capacities, and the SBA (collectively, the Defendants), claiming that the Corps' suspension of their 8(a) referrals to the SBA discriminated against the Contractors in violation of 42 U.S.C. §§ 1981, 1985(3), 2000d. The Contractors also argued that the suspension was an unconstitutional taking of their property rights without due process.

Specifically, EJA alleged that, prior to the abeyance, the Corps failed to renew the Southwest Pass program even though EJA had worked on the project during the previous year. The Corps did not dispute that in April of 1990, it had decided not to place the project in the 8(a) program because it already had four of its ten small-business projects in the program, and was concerned about the potential legal liability of adding more small-business projects to the 8(a) program. EJA alleged that it had a reasonable *1289 expectancy that the project would be renewed but because of the constitutional concerns, the project was pulled from the 8(a) program. Enplanar alleged that it was in negotiations concerning two 8(a) contracts but the Corps' suspension had indefinitely postponed the implementation of these projects. Dragon and Keeler alleged that the suspension had indefinitely delayed the Corps from making referrals for other, unspecified, future projects which the SBA might give to Dragon or Keeler when and if the projects materialized. Finally, Keeler also alleged that the Corps had wrongfully failed to award it the Cotton Meade project. [FN3] The Contractors asked for injunctive relief which would remove the suspension and order the Corps to award the Southwest Pass project to EJA and the Cotton Meade Project to Keeler.

FN3. Keeler began negotiating for the Cotton Meade project on April 25, 1989. The Corps withdrew the project from the 8(a) program on August 28, 1990. Keeler claimed that this project was withdrawn in bad faith.

On February 8, the district court directed the parties to brief whether the SBA was a necessary party in light of the fact that the suspension had been lifted. On February 27, in its responsive brief, the Contractors stated that the SBA was not a necessary party, and indicated in the summary of its argument that all injunctive relief was moot. However, in the argument itself, they asked for injunctive relief as to the Cotton Meade project. On March 13, the district court denied the Contractors' partial motion for summary judgment seeking injunctive relief finding that all such relief was moot.

The Defendants then filed motions for summary judgment and for change of venue. On March 26, the magistrate stayed discovery pending a ruling on the venue motion. The Contractors made a Rule 56(f) motion to compel discovery, which was denied. Subsequently, the Contractors filed an amended complaint alleging post-suspension claims for retaliation and unconstitutional interference with the Contractors' rights of access to the courts, based on the Corps engineers' refusal to meet with the Contractors during the pendency of this suit. This amended complaint added as defendants Corps' engineers Stephenson W. Page (Page) and Robert Green (Green) in their individual capacities (the original complaint had included them in their official capacities). It also requested attorneys' fees, claiming that the Contractors' lawsuit caused the Corps to lift its suspension. In response, the Defendants filed a supplemental memorandum in support of their motions for summary judgment, addressing the new claims. [FN4] On July 15, the district court granted summary judgment on all of the Contractors' claims except for Keeler's claims concerning the Cotton Meade project. These latter claims were transferred to Mississippi based on the Defendants' motion for change of venue.

FN4. This response also included a supplemental memorandum concerning the Defendants' earlier motion to dismiss the complaint against Green and Page. The Defendants argued that their service had been improper under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 4(c)(2)(C)(ii) and that therefore their complaint should be dismissed pursuant to Rule 12(b)(5).

Discussion

The Contractors now argue on appeal that the district court erred by: (1) denying their motion for partial summary judgment on the merits for injunctive relief; (2) denying their additional discovery; (3) prematurely ruling on their claims; (4) granting summary judgment against their claims concerning the Defendants' alleged suspension of the 8(a) program and retaliation; (5) dismissing their claim for attorneys fees; and (6) granting the change of venue motion regarding Keeler's Cotton Meade project claims.

I. Denial of Injunctive Relief

[1] The Contractors contend that the district court erred in denying as moot their motion for partial summary judgment concerning injunctive relief. They admit that the resumption of the 8(a) program did moot their request for injunctive and declaratory relief which sought to lift the Corps' suspension of the 8(a) program. However, they argue that the district court erred in ruling that they also were not entitled to injunctive relief concerning the Southwest Pass project and the Cotton Meade project. They contend that the district court erroneously found all of their requested injunctive relief moot *1290 based on their statement summarizing the argument in their brief that the Corps' resumption of awarding new 8(a) contracts "moots all injunctive relief concerning the 8(a) Program." They now contend that the argument in their brief made clear that only the injunctive relief requesting the suspension's removal was moot and that the relief regarding the specific projects was not moot. We tend to agree. A party should not fear the forfeit of his requested relief based merely on a statement made in the introductory section of his brief summarizing his argument. However we still find that the district court did not err in denying such relief.

[2][3][4][5] In Valley I, we held that as to the Corps' administration of the 8(a) program, "injunctive relief would be improper because a necessary party to the suit is the SBA, which administers the overall § 8(a) minority enterprise set-aside program. The Small Business Act, 15 U.S.C. § 634(b)(1), precludes injunctive relief against the SBA. We ... will not allow the contractors to obtain indirectly (against the Army) what they cannot obtain directly (against the SBA)." 714 F.2d at 29. [FN5] We find that this holding is the controlling law in this case. [FN6] The district court did not err in finding that the Contractors were barred from receiving injunctive relief against the Corps concerning its administration of the 8(a) program. [FN7]

FN5. The Contractors argue that the SBA is no longer a party in this case except for its possible liability as to attorneys' fees, and that any injunctive relief granted concerning the Southwest Pass and Cotton Meade projects would not affect the SBA. We disagree. If a court ordered the Corps to award these projects to specific 8(a) participants, this order would also require injunctive relief concerning the SBA's conduct as to its statutory duties regarding its selection of 8(a) contractors for a specific project, and its subsequent negotiations with a procurement agency concerning the terms of the project's contract. See 13 C.F.R. §§ 124.307(d), 124.308(d), 124.309; 48 C.F.R. § 19.800(c).

FN6. The Contractors argue that this holding is no longer binding because The Federal Courts Improvement Act of 1982 as codified at 28 U.S.C. § 1491(a)(3) now allows injunctive relief against the SBA--and by extension, against agencies participating in the SBA's programs. This Court has not addressed the effect that section 1491(a)(3) has on the injunctive immunity of the SBA, although other courts have recognized that this law abrogates the SBA's injunctive immunity in certain circumstances. See Cavalier Clothes, Inc. v. United States, 810 F.2d 1108, 1111-112 (Fed.Cir.1987); Related Industries, Inc. v. United States, 2 Cl.Ct. 517 (1983). However, we need not decide this issue because section 1491(a)(3) applies only to cases brought before the United States Court of Federal Claims. 28 U.S.C. § 1491(a)(1); Cavalier, 810 F.2d at 1112 (holding that this section "specifically empowers the Claims Court generally to grant injunctive relief" against the SBA). Since this case was not brought before the Claims Court, section 1491(a)(3) is irrelevant. The Contractors also argue that other circuits have held that the SBA is subject to injunctive relief in certain circumstances regardless of the applicability of section 1491(a)(3). See Ulstein Maritime, Ltd. v. United States, 833 F.2d 1052, 1056 (1st Cir.1987), and cases cited therein. However, as noted by Ulstein, this Circuit has "concluded that all injunctive relief directed at the SBA is absolutely prohibited." Id. We are bound by our prior decisions that such relief is barred. See Valley I, 714 F.2d at 29, Romeo v. United States, 462 F.2d 1036, 1038 (5th Cir.1972), cert. denied, 410 U.S. 928, 93 S.Ct. 1361, 35 L.Ed.2d 589 (1973); Expedient Servs., Inc. v. Weaver, 614 F.2d 56 (5th Cir.1980).

FN7. Furthermore, as to EJA's claims concerning the Southwest Pass project, during oral argument it was revealed that EJA no longer exists, and therefore it cannot perform the contract. Consequently, the injunctive relief sought is actually "equitable monetary" relief which would provide money damages in lieu of the injunctive relief. Federal courts have granted injunctive relief against governmental units in which the performance of such relief would cost money. See Edelman v. Jordan, 415 U.S. 651, 680, 94 S.Ct. 1347, 1364, 39 L.Ed.2d 662 (1974) (Douglas, J., dissenting) (noting that in cases involving injunctive relief against state government entities "[m]ost ... decisions by federal courts have a financial impact on the States"). Furthermore, "a court in equity may award monetary restitution as an adjunct to injunctive relief." Tull v. United States, 481 U.S. 412, 424, 107 S.Ct. 1831, 1839, 95 L.Ed.2d 365 (1987). However, the Contractors do not cite to any authority where a court has granted monetary damages to a party as a substitute for injunctive relief. To allow such a result would destroy the distinction between monetary and equitable damages. See Edelman, 415 U.S. at 666, 94 S.Ct. at 1357 (rejecting the contention that in an equity proceeding relief in the form of money damages may be awarded under the rubric of "equitable restitution" because "the relief may be labeled 'equitable' in nature"). Furthermore, since EJA's claim concerning the Southwest Pass project names only the Corps and its divisions as defendants, it is thereby suing only the United States. Consequently, it should have brought such a monetary claim in the Court of Claims. See Amoco Production Co. v. Hodel, 815 F.2d 352, 359 (5th Cir.1987), cert. denied, 487 U.S. 1234, 108 S.Ct. 2898, 101 L.Ed.2d 932 (1988). We conclude that the district court did not err in denying injunctive relief as to EJA's claims concerning the Southwest Pass project. As to the Cotton Meade project, the district court's ruling is not before us. Keeler's claims concerning this project have not been disposed of, but merely transferred to a different venue. Therefore, the district court's ruling denying the Contractors' partial summary-judgment motion concerning the availability of injunctive relief as to this project is an interlocutory order not subject to appeal at this time. See 10 Charles A. Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2715 p. 636 (noting that "the denial of a Rule 56 motion is an interlocutory order from which no appeal is available until the entry of judgment"); see also In re Corrugated Container Antitrust Litigation, 694 F.2d 1041 (5th Cir.1983).

II. Discovery

The Contractors claim that the district court denied them proper discovery so that *1291 they were unable to create contested issues of fact to overcome the Defendants' summary judgment motions. Specifically, the Contractors contend that they were improperly denied discovery as to the abeyance of the 8(a) program, and as to Keeler's Cotton Meade claims. In reviewing such claims, "The trial judge's decision to curtail discovery is granted great deference and, thus, is reviewed under an abuse of discretion standard." Wichita Falls Office Assoc. v. Banc One Corp., 978 F.2d 915, 918 (5th Cir.1992), cert. denied, 508 U.S. 910, 113 S.Ct. 2340, 124 L.Ed.2d 251 (1993); see also Landry v. Air Line Pilots Ass'n Int'l, 901 F.2d 404, 436 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 895, 111 S.Ct. 244, 112 L.Ed.2d 203 (1990).

[6] As to the Cotton Meade project, these claims were not disposed of in summary judgment, but were rather transferred to another court based on the Defendants' motion for change of venue. 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a); Fed.R.Civ.P. 21. As such, the claims were still alive and still subject to discovery--albeit in a different venue. The Contractors cite to no authority, and we have found none, holding the district court has abused its discretion in denying merits-related discovery pending ruling on a motion for change of venue. Federal courts have long recognized that two of the factors supporting a change in venue are convenience of the witnesses and the location of records and documents. 15 Charles A. Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure §§ 3851, 3853; see also Southern Investors II v. Commuter Aircraft Corp., 520 F.Supp. 212, 218 (M.D.La.1981); American Standard, Inc. v. Bendix Corp., 487 F.Supp. 254, 264 (W.D.Mo.1980). Although these factors are usually considered in connection with securing the witnesses' and documents' availability for trial, they also necessarily implicate the ease of conducting merits-related discovery in a location which is near the relevant witnesses and documents. Moreover, if a change of venue motion is granted, the discovery is not denied but merely delayed. The Contractors tendered no showing that the delay in discovery somehow prejudiced their case respecting the Cotton Meade project through loss of documents or unavailability of witnesses. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 61; FDIC v. Fuller, 994 F.2d 223 (5th Cir.1993); King v. Gulf Oil Co., 581 F.2d 1184 (5th Cir.1978). The district court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow discovery concerning Keeler's claims arising from the Cotton Meade project pending the grant of the Defendants' change of venue motion regarding these claims.

[7] Concerning the remaining claims, which were subsequently disposed of by the district court's grant of the Defendants' summary judgment motion, the Contractors were entitled to receive a continuance for additional discovery if they: (i) requested extended discovery prior to the court's ruling on summary judgment; (ii) placed the district court on notice that further discovery pertaining to the summary judgment motion was being sought; and (iii) demonstrated to the district court with reasonable specificity how the requested discovery pertained to the pending motion. Chevron U.S.A., Inc. v. Traillour Oil Co., 987 F.2d 1138, 1155-56 (5th Cir.1993); Wichita Falls, 978 F.2d at 919 (citing Int'l Shortstop, Inc. v. Rally's, Inc., 939 F.2d 1257 (5th Cir.1991)).

[8] As to the first two requirements, we can review a claim alleging improperly denied *1292 discovery only if the complaining party presented to the district court a Rule 56(f) motion or an " 'equivalent statement preferably in writing' that conveys the need for additional discovery" in the areas now complained of on appeal. Wichita Falls, 978 F.2d at 919 (quoting Fontenot v. Upjohn Co., 780 F.2d 1190, 1194 (5th Cir.1986)). In this regard, the Contractors contend in their reply brief that they made a Rule 56(f) motion or its equivalent in six separate instances.

However, as to four of the motions cited to us, even when read broadly as complying with the requirements of Rule 56(f), these motions concern only the Cotton Meade project. Therefore, as to these motions, the Contractors failed to inform the district court that they were seeking any additional discovery outside the scope of that project.

[9][10] Only in two motions, do the Contractors bring to the district court's attention a request for additional discovery concerning claims other than the Cotton Meade project. In their opposition motion and additional opposition motion to the Defendants' motions for summary judgment and for change of venue, the Contractors note in passing that they have been refused a copy of the Justice Department's memorandum concerning its October 1990 determination not to appeal the Fordice decision. [FN8] In these passing references, they do not explain how this requested discovery would or could create a fact issue to overcome the Defendants' summary-judgment motion. [FN9] Therefore, they have failed the third requirement which requires them to demonstrate to the district court with reasonable specificity how the requested discovery would likely pertain to the pending summary judgment motion. See Krim v. BancTexas Group, Inc., 989 F.2d 1435, 1442 (5th Cir.1993) (holding that a nonmovant's Rule 56(f) motion was insufficient where "absent from the affidavit was an explanation of ... how the materials listed in the plaintiff's first document request, or in the handwritten list appended to the affidavit, would enable plaintiff to oppose defendant's summary judgment motion by establishing a genuine issue of material fact"). Certainly, we are not requiring clairvoyance on the part of the Contractors. They do not need to know the precise content of the requested discovery, but they do need to give the district court some idea of how the sought-after discovery might reasonably be supposed to create a factual dispute. The mere fleeting mention of a matter, without a description of its likely relevance, will not suffice to alert the district court to the potential importance of that undiscovered item. Therefore, the district court did not abuse its discretion in denying additional discovery.

FN8. The Contractors now complain on appeal that they were denied needed discovery as to: (1) an October 17, 1990 memorandum prepared by a member of the Corps; (2) a November 15, 1990 memorandum prepared by the Corps' assistant general counsel; (3) an undated memorandum by the Vicksburg district counsel; and (4) the September 1990 written recommendations of the Department of Justice, Small Business Administration, and the Department of the Army concerning the constitutionality of the 8(a) program. None of these matters were the subject of the Contractors' Rule 56(f) motions or equivalents. In their reply brief, the Contractors assert, with no citation to the record, that they notified the district court of their need for these documents. After a fruitless search of the record, we conclude that there exists no indication in the record that these matters were brought to the attention of the district court, and therefore, it did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow discovery concerning these matters.

FN9. We infer from the placement of the stray remark noting that the Contractors had been denied this memorandum, that this undiscovered document will bolster their argument that the 8(a) program was suspended based on the Corps' contracting officers fear of personal liability. However, this matter is undisputed.

III. Summary Judgment Procedure

[11] The Contractors complain that the district court prematurely dismissed their claims of retaliation against defendants Page and Green in their individual capacity, and that it prematurely granted summary judgment in favor of all of the Defendants without giving the Contractors notice. Specifically, the Contractors assert that the district court sua sponte dismissed their claims against Page and Green because the only motion filed on their behalf was a motion to dismiss for improper service which was subsequently cured. Furthermore, the Contractors claim that the district court granted summary judgment dismissing their amended *1293 complaint although the Defendants failed to move for summary judgment as to that complaint.

These two arguments conveniently overlook the Defendants' supplemental memorandum in support of their motions for summary judgment. This document was filed on May 13, 1991, after the Contractors' amended complaint, and it specifically addresses the claims in that amended complaint. This document addresses, as a ground for dismissal, the Contractors' failure to properly serve Page and Green, but it also explicitly discusses various grounds for summary judgment as to all the defendants—including the retaliation claims brought against Page and Green. Therefore, this memorandum served to supplement the original summary judgment motion, and provided the Contractors with notice of the Defendants' challenges to their amended complaint. Cf. Spickard v. Ribicoff, 211 F.Supp. 555, 558 (W.D.Ky.1962) (granting summary judgment where no motion was filed but the movant submitted a brief in support of summary judgment and the nonmovant treated it as a summary judgment motion). [FN10] Although the district court on July 15, 1991, granted a dismissal as to Page and Green, it also granted summary judgment as to all the defendants based on evidence not contained in the pleadings. Under these circumstances, the district court's order to dismiss the complaint as to Page and Green is disregarded, and we instead review the grant of summary judgment as to all defendants—including Page and Green. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b); Wilson v. U.S. Dept. of Agriculture, 991 F.2d 1211, 1214 (5th Cir.1993); Conoco, Inc. v. Republic Ins. Co., 819 F.2d 120, 122 n. 1 (5th Cir.1987) (treating a court's order as granting summary judgment and disregarding the statement in the order directing, "and this case is dismissed"). The district court did not sua sponte dismiss the claims against Page and Green, but rather granted summary judgment in their favor based on the Defendants' memorandum in support of summary judgment filed approximately two months previously. Cf. Carlinas Cotton Growers Ass'n v. United States, 785 F.2d 1195, 1200 (4th Cir.1986) ("[I]t is the conclusion of the court that the references to summary judgment are in fact simply mislabeledings not affecting the validity of the finding of the court below."). [FN11] This equivalent of a motion for summary judgment explicitly also covered the other defendants, and served as the proper basis for the district court's summary judgment as to those defendants. Therefore, the district court did not prematurely rule on the Contractors' claims.

FN10. This case is distinguishable from Reese v. Sparks, 760 F.2d 64 (3d Cir.1985), which held that a district court could not grant summary judgment on an amended complaint based on a motion for summary judgment filed before that amended complaint if the amended complaint contained new legal theories and additional, different facts. Id. at 66. Here, the equivalent of a summary judgment motion was properly filed after the amended complaint and it specifically addressed the new claims alleged in it.

FN11. Since the Defendants filed the supplement to their summary-judgment motion some two months before the district court entered summary judgment, the Contractors received sufficient notice of the Defendants' new arguments supporting their summary judgment motion. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(c) (requiring that the summary judgment motion "shall be served at least 10 days before the time fixed for the hearing"); Arkwright-Boston Mfrs. Mut. Ins. Co. v. Aries Marine Corp., 932 F.2d 442, 445 (5th Cir.1991); Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Buell, 480 U.S. 557, 568 n. 15, 107 S.Ct. 1410, 1417 n. 15, 94 L.Ed.2d 563 (1987). This two-month notice also satisfied the "hearing" requirement in Rule 56(c). As long as the nonmovants have sufficient notice of the pending summary judgment motion, the district court may rule on that motion based solely on the pleadings and evidence on file without a formal conference with the parties. See Western Fire Ins. Co. v. Copeland, 786 F.2d 649, 652 (5th Cir.1986) (holding that the district court erred by not affording the nonmovants "either the ten-day notice of Rule 56(c) or an opportunity to present their evidence"); Cowgill v. Raymark Indus. Inc., 780 F.2d 324, 329 (3d Cir.1985) (holding that nonmovant not entitled to notice of date when motion for summary judgment would be resolved because the nonmovant "is under an obligation to respond ... in a timely fashion and to place before the court all materials it wishes to have considered when the court rules on the motion"); see also Daniels v. Morris, 746 F.2d 271 (5th Cir.1984); Brumley Estate v. Iowa Beef Processors, Inc., 704 F.2d 1351 (5th Cir.1983), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1028, 104 S.Ct. 1288, 79 L.Ed.2d 690 (1984).

IV. Summary Judgment Claims

The Contractors contend that the district court erred in granting summary judgment *1294 dismissing the claims in their amended complaint. This Court reviews a district court's grant of summary judgment de novo, taking the evidence and inferences to be drawn therefrom in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, and determining whether the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and affidavits show that there is no genuine issue of material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Crenshaw v. General Dynamics Corp., 940 F.2d 125, 127 (5th Cir.1991); Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(c). Summary judgment is proper "against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 106 S.Ct. 2548, 2552, 91 L.Ed.2d 265 (1986). Here, the burden of proof was on the Contractors.

[12][13][14] The Contractors first argue that the district court erred in ruling that they were not entitled to declaratory relief arising from the partial suspension of the 8(a) program. [FN12] They contend that because of their minority status they were denied their equal-protection rights, and that the 8(a) program was administered in a discriminatory manner in violation of 42 U.S.C. §§ 1981, 1985(2), 2000d. However, the Defendants articulated a nondiscriminatory reason for the suspension, namely that it was due to the Fordice decision which found that the Corps' practice of awarding a large number of small-business projects to the minority set-aside program was improper. The Contractors admit in their briefs to this Court that the suspension was due to the Defendants' belief that the 8(a) program was unconstitutional as a result of the Fordice decision. The Contractors even surmise that the presidential administration--at the time of the suspension--believed that all minority set-aside programs were unconstitutional. They then make the conclusory assertion that such a belief was an unjustified pretext. We disagree.

FN12. The Contractors also claim on appeal that they were denied a property interest without procedural due process in violation of the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment because the suspension was enacted without notice or a hearing. As a result, they claim they are entitled to monetary damages on a Bivens constitutional-tort claim based on the suspension. See Bivens v. Six Unknown Agents of Federal Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388, 91 S.Ct. 1999, 29 L.Ed.2d 619 (1971). However, a Bivens claim is available only against government officers in their individual capacities. Williamson v. U.S. Dept. of Agriculture, 815 F.2d 368, 380 (5th Cir.1987) (holding that a Bivens claim "only applies against the individual appellees in their individual capacities"). In their claim concerning the suspension, the Contractors state that the only defendants are "the Corps of Engineers and the Vicksburg Corps," which are subdivisions of the United States. The United States may be sued only under the Federal Torts Claims Act. See Rykers v. Alford, 832 F.2d 895, 897 (5th Cir.1987) (holding that "[t]he United States may be sued only within the exception to sovereign immunity provided by the Federal Torts Claims Act"). This the Contractors have failed to do. The Contractors have not raised a cognizable Bivens claim concerning the suspension.

The three-month suspension affected only the Corps' decisions regarding the submission of new projects to the SBA. Such a decision is within the complete discretion of the Corps. 48 C.F.R. § 19.803(a)-(c). Even when the Corps offers a project to the SBA, it is then within the SBA's complete discretion to accept the project, and then to select a minority contractor to work on the project. 15 U.S.C. § 637(a)(1)(B); 13 C.F.R. §§ 124.307(d), 124.309. Therefore, this is not an instance where a government agency is accused of discrimination because of its failure to undertake some mandatory requirement; rather, this is an instance where the agency's discretionary failure can be fairly attributed to reasons other than invidious discrimination. [FN13] Here, the Corps' decision to suspend the submission of new contracts to the SBA was reasonable in light of the Fordice decision *1295 in which the district court issued a declaratory judgment finding that the Corps had illegally administered the 8(a) program--specifically in regard to its submission practice. 773 F.Supp. at 882. If the Fordice decision was a mere pretext for discrimination on the Corps' part, then it seems remarkable that the Corps would have sought legal advice, and then after a mere three months, the Corps upon receipt of that advice would have immediately lifted the suspension concerning that part of the 8(a) program which was directly involved in the Fordice litigation. The Contractors have failed to carry their burden to produce summary judgment evidence which would sustain a finding that the Defendants' proffered reasons were a mere pretext for discrimination. See Guthrie v. Tifco Industries, 941 F.2d 374, 378 (5th Cir.1991), cert. denied, 503 U.S. 908, 112 S.Ct. 1267, 117 L.Ed.2d 495 (1992) (holding that in deciding a summary judgment motion "[a]bsent countervailing evidence, the trier of fact must accept the defendant's explanation as the real reason" for the action); Brown v. American Honda Motor Co., 939 F.2d 946 (11th Cir.1991), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1058, 112 S.Ct. 935, 117 L.Ed.2d 106 (1992) (granting summary judgment when "the defendant's proffer of credible, nondiscriminatory reasons for its actions is sufficiently probative, then the plaintiff must come forward with specific evidence demonstrating that the reasons given by defendant were a pretext for discrimination"). Given the Corps' unfettered discretion and its real apprehensions regarding the legality of its administration of the 8(a) program, we find that the Contractors have failed to carry their burden of proof to refute the reasons offered by the Defendants. See Grigsby v. Reynolds Metals Co., 821 F.2d 590, 596 (11th Cir.1987) (holding that a defendant can present such strong evidence of a nondiscriminatory rationale that summary judgment is warranted). Therefore, the district court did not err in granting summary judgment against the Contractors' discrimination claims. [FN14]

FN13. We do not hold that a minority plaintiff cannot prevail on a claim for discrimination where an agency has unfettered discretion but chooses to use such discretion to discriminate against minorities. Rather, we are merely pointing out that complete discretion makes it more difficult for a minority plaintiff to make out a prima facie case, since the violation of a mandated policy in and of itself can serve as the basis for the finding of discriminatory intent. See Young v. Pierce, 822 F.2d 1368, 1371 (5th Cir.1987) (finding of discriminatory intent by the Department of Housing and Urban Development based on its failure to perform its affirmative duty under Title VIII to learn of and to abate segregation in public housing).

FN14. The Contractors also complain that the district court erred in granting summary judgment against EJA's claim concerning the Southwest Pass project. However, as explained above, the Corps had complete discretion concerning whether it would submit the project to the 8(a) program. The Contractors argue that EJA had already worked on the project the prior year and had an "expectation" that it would receive the project again. They allege it did not receive the project because the Corps feared that too many of its small business set-asides were going into the 8(a) program. Assuming this explanation is true, it still does not suffice to sustain a finding that the Corps' decision not to submit the project was based on a discriminatory intent.

[15][16] Finally, the Contractors contend that the district court erred in rejecting their Bivens claims for declaratory, injunctive, and monetary relief. Their Bivens claims alleged constitutional torts against Page and Green for denying the Contractors the ability to self-market their services to the Corps. [FN15] Under Bivens, "the victim of a constitutional violation by a federal agent has a right to recover damages against the agent in federal court." Bush v. Lucas, 647 F.2d 573, 575 (5th Cir. Unit B June 1981), aff'd, 462 U.S. 367, 103 S.Ct. 2404, 76 L.Ed.2d 648 (1983). Therefore, a Bivens action requires the plaintiff to "claim a deprivation of a constitutional right." Zernial v. United States, 714 F.2d 431, 435 (5th Cir.1983). This action extends to alleged violations of the First Amendment and to deprivations of Fifth Amendment due process rights. Bush, 462 U.S. 367, 103 S.Ct. 2404 (First Amendment); Butz v. Economou, 438 U.S. 478, 98 S.Ct. 2894, 57 L.Ed.2d 895 (1978) (Fifth Amendment). The Contractors' Bivens claims are based on two theories: that they have a right to self-marketing and they have been deprived of that right without procedural due process in contravention of the Fifth Amendment; and that this denial of self-marketing is in retaliation against the Contractors, and is an attempt to deny them access to the courts as is their right under the First Amendment.

FN15. The Contractors also brought this claim against the Corps, but as already explained above, such a claim is cognizable only against individuals. Williamson, supra.

[17] To succeed on a procedural due process claim, the Contractors must show they had a "cognizable property or liberty interest," and such a property interest must be "a legitimate claim of entitlement." *Broadway 1296 v. Block, 694 F.2d 979, 985 (5th Cir.1982). Here, there exists no legitimate claim of entitlement. The Contractors have no right to access of Corps personnel for this purpose. 48 C.F.R. 19.803(c). As described above, under the 8(a) program, the SBA, and not the individual minority contractor, is authorized to contract as the prime contractor with the procurement agency. Id. The SBA may, in its discretion, allow the individual minority contractor to negotiate directly with the procurement agency, and familiarize that agency with its capabilities for future contracts; but the SBA is not required to do so. 48 C.F.R. §§ 19.803(c), 19.804-2(a)(12). These direct communications through "self-marketing" are not required by any statute or regulation. As found by the district court, the Contractors are allowed to self-market at the sufferance of Corps personnel, and the Corps has complete discretion concerning whether it will give such access to the Contractors. Under these facts no liberty or property interest is implicated. The district court did not err in finding that the Contractors had failed to present a violation of procedural due process.

[18][19] The Contractors also contend that the denial of self-marketing is in retaliation for the lawsuit and is designed to chill access to the courts of the United States in violation of the Contractors' First Amendment rights. [FN16] Because of the preeminent place that the First Amendment occupies in our constitutional jurisprudence, the Contractors need not prove that in being denied the right to self-market, they have been denied a property right or liberty interest or some other independent legal right. See Connick v. Myers, 461 U.S. 138, 103 S.Ct. 1684, 75 L.Ed.2d 708 (1983). But they still must show a constitutional violation. Here, the fact that the contracting officers refused to speak to the Contractors during the pendency of this suit does not indicate that such refusal was made in an effort to chill the Contractors' access to the courts or to punish them for having brought suit. Rather, such a refusal was made pursuant to an Information Paper that instructed agency procurement officers to avoid contact with contractors during the pendency of their litigation with the agency. [FN17] This paper was issued on February 6, 1990--months before the suspension--and was apparently distributed by the Army's general counsel to all defense procurement agencies. It notes that contact should be avoided so that the procurement officer will not inadvertently "give the contractor any ammunition to weaken the Government's position. Any such statements may be used by the contractor in litigation and may ultimately lead to the depositions of the officials who make the statements and their subsequent testimony." A government employee who is a potential witness is not improperly chilling access to the courts or retaliating for use of the judicial system when he refuses to speak to a party concerning a matter that is related to the gravamen of that party's litigation against him or his employer. Page and Green did not deny the Contractors their constitutional rights under the First Amendment. There is nothing which would sustain a finding that Page and Green's actions--perhaps more accurately, their inactions--were retaliatory or motivated by considerations other than those of the Information Paper or that they were a pretext for unconstitutional retaliation. Consequently, "any assertion that [the officers'] actions ... were retaliatory can only be speculation." Bowles v. U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, 841 F.2d 112, 117 (5th Cir.), cert. *1297 denied, 488 U.S. 803, 109 S.Ct. 33, 102 L.Ed.2d 13 (1988). The district court did not err in finding that since access for self-marketing was discretionary and that the denial of self-marketing was based on official army policy, it was not unconstitutional or "retaliatory" for Corps personnel to avoid the plaintiffs during the litigation. [FN18]

FN16. In their opaque brief, the Contractors make some murky allusions to the possibility that their First Amendment rights have also been violated by the mere fact that Page and Green will not speak to them. They cite no authority for this theory, and we will not root about in the case law seeking support for it. Cf. United States v. Dunkel, 927 F.2d 955, 956 (7th Cir.1991) ("Judges are not like pigs, hunting for truffles buried in briefs."). Furthermore, their amended complaint does not offer this theory as a basis for recovery, and they did not argue this theory below. Therefore, the Contractors have waived any claim on this basis.

FN17. The Contractors now contend that this paper is hearsay, and cannot be relied on by the district court in rendering summary judgment. However, they did not raise this hearsay objection below, so the error, if any, is waived. See United States v. Maddox, 492 F.2d 104, 107 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 851, 95 S.Ct. 92, 42 L.Ed.2d 82 (1974) (holding that "[a] rule of evidence not invoked is waived").

FN18. Furthermore, as to both Bivens claims, the Contractors sought monetary damages against Page and Green. However, as pointed out by the district court, the Contractors introduced no evidence showing that Page's and Green's refusal to speak with the Contractors led to the Contractors being denied any contracts. In an earlier suit against the Corps concerning the discretionary award of contracts, this Court noted that the plaintiffs wisely abstained from pressing any claims for monetary damages because, "Such a claim would force upon them the Herculean task of proving the Corps actually would have awarded them the contracts in question in the absence of the claimed violations." Valley 1, 714 F.2d at 29 n. 4. In the case sub judice, not only have the Contractors failed to show that the Corps would have awarded them contracts if the Contractors were allowed to self-market, but they have also failed to describe any particular contracts as to which they were in contention. Therefore, for this reason also, the district court did not err in finding that the Contractors were not entitled to monetary damages based on their Bivens claims.

V. Attorneys' Fees

[20] The Contractors argue that they are entitled to attorneys' fees under 28 U.S.C. § 2412(d) and 42 U.S.C. § 1988 because by filing the lawsuit and vigorously prosecuting it, they forced the Corps to resume the 8(a) program. Allegedly, these actions qualify them to be considered as prevailing parties because they "acted as a catalyst in prompting the opposing party to make amends." Ramon by Ramon v. Soto, 916 F.2d 1377, 1384 (9th Cir.1989). We reject these contentions.

Section 1988 can serve as the basis for the recovery of attorneys' fees only if the Contractors can show that they have presented a substantial racial discrimination claim. See Kelly v. City of Leesville, 897 F.2d 172, 177 (5th Cir.1990); McDonald v. Doe, 748 F.2d 1055, 1077 (5th Cir.1984) (noting that section 1988 "was adopted because the actions in which fees are allowed vindicate rights based on the federal constitution or federal statutes. If it is determined that no constitutional right was violated, the predicate for the award of fees vanishes."). However, as we have discussed above, the Contractors have wholly failed to make out a claim for racial discrimination. At best, the Contractors have alleged that the Corps suspended the 8(a) program for an inadequate reason: their fear that the Fordice decision will lead to further lawsuits or potential liability concerning their participation in the 8(a) program. But, the Corps' suspension of the program based on its reaction to the Fordice decision does not somehow transmute that motivation into racial discrimination. Even assuming that the Contractors' actions caused the resumption of the 8(a) program, since the suspension was not based on any racial animus, the Contractors could not recover under section 1988(b) and therefore cannot be considered prevailing parties under that statute. See McQuiston v. Marsh, 707 F.2d 1082, 1085 (9th Cir.1983) (finding that an unsuccessful bidder on a government contract could be a prevailing party under section 2412 based on his claim of bad faith, but not under section 1988 because he could not prevail on his discrimination claim).

[21] The Contractors can recover under the Equal Access to Justice Act codified at section 2412(d)(1)(A) only if they show: (1) that they are a "prevailing party"; (2) that the Government's position was not "substantially justified"; and (3) that no "special circumstances make an award unjust." Perales v. Casillas, 950 F.2d 1066, 1072 (5th Cir.1992). [FN19] The Contractors have not alleged any facts showing that the Defendants' position was not substantially justified. Since the Defendants' abeyance was based on the adverse Fordice decision, we find that their position concerning the suspension of the 8(a) program pending further guidance was substantially *1298 justified. Therefore, the district court did not err in denying attorneys' fees to the Contractors.

FN19. We note that the Ramon court decided only the first factor and held that the plaintiffs were entitled to fees "unless the government's position was substantially justified or special circumstances would make an award unjust." Ramon, 916 F.2d at 1384. Therefore, even if the Contractors can be classified as "catalysts" for the Defendants' resumption of the 8(a) program, they still must satisfy the remaining requirements of section 2412(d).

VI. Change of Venue

[22] The Contractors contend that the district court erred in granting the Defendants' change of venue motion as to Keeler's Cotton Meade project claims. However, the grant of a change of venue motion is an interlocutory order and is not reviewable. See Louisiana Ice Cream Distributors v. Carvel Corp., 821 F.2d 1031, 1033-34 (5th Cir.1987); Garner v. Wolfenbarger, 433 F.2d 117, 120 (5th Cir.1970); Chas. Pfizer & Co. v. Olin Mathieson Chem. Corp., 225 F.2d 718 (5th Cir.1955). Keeler's Cotton Meade project claims have been severed from this action and transferred to a different forum. These claims are unreviewable in this appeal.

Conclusion

Based on the foregoing, the district court's orders are

AFFIRMED.

Advisors Co., Plaintiffs,

v.

Andrei NAZAROV, Defendant.

No. 94 Civ. 2272 (CSH).

Dec. 14, 1994.

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

HAIGHT, District Judge:

*1 Three issues in this breach of contract action are now before the Court: (1) Whether the law firm of Berkovich & McMenemy should be disqualified from representing plaintiffs; (2) Whether plaintiffs are entitled to Rule 11 sanctions based on defendant's motion for disqualification; and (3) Whether discovery should be stayed pending resolution of defendant's motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction. I will consider each of these issues in turn.

1. Law Firm Disqualification

The Court is presented with the issue of whether vicarious disqualification of a law firm is warranted when one of the firm's attorney's is disqualified under the advocate-witness rule.

Plaintiffs had previously been represented by Alexander Berkovich, a partner in the firm of Berkovich & McMenemy. The underlying action surrounds a contract allegedly entered into by the parties.

Plaintiff International Sports Advisors Co. ("ISA") is in the business of representing professional hockey players in the National Hockey League ("NHL"). Plaintiff Mark Gandler is a principal of ISA. In May of 1992, plaintiffs entered into a written Representation Agreement with defendant Andrei Nazarov, at the time a 17-year old

Russian hockey player aspiring to play in the NHL in the United States. This Agreement provided that ISA would represent Nazarov in his attempts to secure employment in the NHL, in return for which Nazarov would pay ISA a commission.

In April of 1993, Nazarov informed ISA that he was terminating the Representation Agreement. Plaintiffs maintain that this attempted termination placed Nazarov in breach of the Representation Agreement, prompting them to institute the present suit. Nazarov contends that the contract is unenforceable, in whole or in part, because the terms of the contract were never adequately explained to him, he was never provided a Russian translation of the contract, and the terms of the contract are inherently unfair.

Of particular significance here is a dispute over the extent to which plaintiffs translated and explained the terms and meaning of the Representation Agreement to Nazarov. On May 15 and 16, 1992, Berkovich met with Nazarov and Nazarov's father to discuss the Representation Agreement. Berkovich maintains that his efforts at those meetings adequately conveyed to Nazarov the import of the various provisions of the Representation Agreement. Nazarov disputes the scope of the efforts that Berkovich says he made, and contends that they were entirely inadequate.

It is thus apparent that a key issue is what happened at those meetings in May of 1992. Aware of the centrality of this issue, this Court, on July 1, 1994, raised with counsel the possibility that Berkovich would need to serve as a witness at trial, and that this possibility might merit disqualification of Berkovich under the advocate-witness rule.

After allowing the parties an opportunity to present arguments on the issue, this Court issued an opinion on July 27, 1994, finding that Berkovich should be disqualified as counsel. That ruling was grounded on Disciplinary Rule ("DR") 5-102(A), which reads:

"If, after undertaking employment in contemplated or pending litigation, a lawyer learns or it is obvious that the lawyer ought to be called as a witness on behalf of his own client, the lawyer shall withdraw as an advocate before the tribunal, except that the lawyer may continue as an advocate and may testify in the circumstances enumerated in DR 5-101(B)(1) through (4)."

*2 Applying this Rule, this Court wrote:

"Berkovich was intimately involved in the negotiation and execution of the Representation Agreement. Absent his testimony, it will be impossible for the plaintiffs to explain or rebut defendant's testimony. See MacArthur v. Bank of New York, 524 F.Supp. 1205, 1207 (S.D.N.Y.1981) (applying a "significantly useful" standard rather than a "necessary" standard). The mandatory direction of DR 5-102(A) requires that in those circumstances, an attorney be disqualified."

Following the disqualification of Berkovich, Paul McMenamain, Berkovich's law partner, informed the Court by letter that he would be substituting as counsel for plaintiffs. [FN1] By letter to the Court dated August 11, 1994, defendant argues that since Berkovich was disqualified, the lawyers in Berkovich's firm should be vicariously disqualified, and that McMenamain should therefore not be allowed to substitute as counsel. In its reply papers, plaintiff maintains that relatively recent revisions to the New York Code of Professional Responsibility dictate that Berkovich's firm should not be disqualified.

Discussion

Attorney disqualification and vicarious disqualification of an attorney's law firm are in the discretion of the court. Kubin v. Miller, 801 F.Supp. 1101 (S.D.N.Y.1992). Nonetheless, the cases are uniform in holding that pursuant to Disciplinary Rule 5-102(A) of the New York Code of Professional Responsibility (22 NYCRR 1200.21), an attorney's firm should not be disqualified simply because that attorney will testify on behalf of his client. Talvy v. American Red Cross, 1994 WL 593353 (N.Y.A.D. 1st Dep't 1994); Tisby v. Buffalo General Hospital, 1994 WL 522792 (W.D.N.Y.1994); Kubin, 801 F.Supp. at 1114; Kaplan v. Maytex Mills, Inc., 590 N.Y.S.2d 136 (N.Y.A.D. 2nd Dep't 1992); Minami International Corp. v. Clark, 1991 WL 102464 (S.D.N.Y.1991); Paretti v. Cavalier Label Company, Inc., 722 F.Supp. 985, 988-89 (S.D.N.Y.1989).

In its opposition papers, defendant cites a number of cases that reached an opposite result, holding that vicarious disqualification of a law firm follows after one of the firm's attorney's is disqualified as a witness. These cases, however, all predate 1990, before the New York Code of Professional Responsibility was revised to permit a law firm to continue representation even if one attorney in the firm is required to testify. Kaplan, 590 N.Y.S. at 137. [FN2]

Given that the cases cited by defendant are no longer good law, the only component of defendant's argument that might plausibly allow a finding in its favor is its contention that disqualification is in the discretion of the Court. [FN3] Indeed, defendant acknowledges that its cited cases predate the 1990 revisions to the disciplinary rules, but maintains that the policy reasons cited for the old rule should still guide the Court in its exercise of discretion.

While defendant is correct that this Court has the discretion to disqualify Berkovich's law firm, it has offered no reason why the Court, in exercising its discretion, should not be guided by the revised disciplinary rules. Vicarious disqualification of a law firm is discretionary because the New York Code of Professional Responsibility is not legally binding on the federal courts in New York. See, e.g. United States v. Perlmutter, 637 F.Supp. 1134, 1137 (S.D.N.Y.1986). Nonetheless, the ethical guidelines contained in the New York Code of Professional Responsibility, and the cases applying those guidelines, are highly instructive to the Court in arriving at an equitable resolution of the disqualification issue.

*3 The 1990 revisions reflected a growing consensus that vicarious disqualification of a law firm should occur only rarely, and that the reasons traditionally stated for disqualifying the firm when one of its attorneys will testify were no longer compelling. See, e.g., Paretti, 772 F.Supp. at 988-89. [FN4] Undoubtedly, there is a clear public policy in preventing an individual attorney from being both trial counsel and witness. See, e.g., Paretti, 722 F.Supp. at 988. [FN5] As to the attorney's firm, however, the New York State Bar Association argued, in recommending the revision to the disciplinary rules at issue here, that "[t]he change is consistent with the public policy of avoiding confusion between the lawyer's role as advocate and witness without unduly interfering with the client's ability to be represented by counsel of the client's choice." New York State Bar Ass'n, Report of the Special Committee to Consider Adoption of ABA Model Rules of Professional Conduct, 21 (1984).

Given that those with an expertise in formulating the ethics of the profession feel that public policy is best served by not disqualifying a firm when one of its attorneys must serve as a party witness, it is wise for this Court to adopt that same view in reaching an equitable resolution of the present case. Indeed, as the cases cited earlier show, those federal courts that have considered the revisions have embraced them as well.

Therefore, defendant having offered no reason why the Court's discretion should be exercised in its favor, and the weight of authority being in favor of no vicarious disqualification in the present situation, defendant's motion to disqualify the firm of Berkovich & McMenamain is denied. McMenamain may therefore substitute as counsel for plaintiffs.

McMenamin has also moved to be admitted to practice before this Court pursuant to Local Rule 2(C) of the United States District Courts for the Southern District. He has submitted the required documentation, and his motion is granted.

2. Rule 11 Sanctions

McMenamin, in his letter opposing disqualification, asks the Court to impose Rule 11 sanctions upon defendant for making what he believes is a frivolous disqualification motion. It is this Court's policy to entertain Rule 11 motions only at the conclusion of the case. Therefore, McMenamain's request for Rule 11 sanctions is denied without prejudice and is freely renewable at the conclusion of the case.

3. Discovery

On July 5, 1994, this Court ordered that discovery in this case be stayed. Prior to the issuance of that Order, defendant had argued that a stay was warranted, since defendant had made a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, potentially obviating the need to engage in costly discovery. Plaintiffs opposed this motion, and expressed their belief that discovery should proceed expeditiously, since difficulties were perceived in finding an opportunity to depose defendant once the NHL season had begun. [FN6]

*4 The July 5 Order staying discovery, however, was not a ruling on whether discovery should be stayed pending adjudication of the motion to dismiss. Rather, the Court stayed discovery pending resolution of the motion to disqualify counsel. As this opinion holds, that motion is denied. Plaintiffs have thus moved to lift the stay and begin discovery.

It is well-settled that a district court has discretion to halt discovery pending its decision on a motion to dismiss. Chrysler Capital Corporation v. Century Power Corp., 137 F.R.D. 209, 211 (S.D.N.Y.1991); Transunion Corp. v. PepsiCo, Inc., 811 F.2d 127, 130 (2d Cir.1987). Defendant's motion to dismiss based on lack of personal jurisdiction is potentially dispositive, and appears to be not unfounded in the law. In addition, plaintiffs have not presented any evidence to suggest that they will be unfairly prejudiced by a stay. Therefore, because the adjudication of the pending motion to dismiss might avoid the need for costly and time-consuming discovery, all discovery in this case is hereby stayed pending resolution of defendant's motion to dismiss.

The pending motion to dismiss is sub judice, and will be resolved in due course.

SO ORDERED.

FN1. McMenamain also applied for pro hac vice admission before this Court.

FN2. Prior to the revision, DR 5-102(A) read: "If, after undertaking employment in contemplated or pending litigation, a lawyer learns or it is obvious that he or a lawyer in his firm ought to be called as a witness on behalf of his client, he shall withdraw from the conduct of the trial and his firm, if any, shall not continue representation in the trial, except that he may continue the representation and he or a lawyer in his firm may testify in the circumstances enumerated in DR 5-101(B)(1) through (4)." (emphasis added).

FN3. If Berkovich had been disqualified due to a conflict of interest, or if he were going to offer testimony adverse to his client, then disqualification of the firm might be warranted. As this Court's July 27, 1994, opinion made clear, however, Berkovich will be testifying, if at all, only on behalf of his client.

FN4. Indeed, the American Bar Association's Code of Professional Responsibility, as well as the Model Rules of Professional Conduct, both embody the principle that vicarious disqualification is no longer necessary when an individual attorney is disqualified as a necessary witness. Kubin, 801 F.Supp. at 1113-14.

FN5. "[The] cases explain that D.R. 5-102(A) is designed to avoid the public perception that the lawyer as witness is distorting the truth for the sake of a client, or is enhancing his own credibility as an advocate by taking an oath as a witness, and is also designed to deny opposing counsel the unfair and difficult task of cross-examining an adversary and impeaching the adversary's credibility." Paretti, 722 F.Supp. at 988.

GLENEAGLE SHIP MANAGEMENT CO.,
etc., et al., Petitioners,
v.
Anthony LEONDAKOS, et ux., Respondents.

July 16, 1992.

Injured plaintiff moved to compel discovery relating to issue of jurisdiction and motion was served while defendant management company's motion to dismiss, made on grounds of lack of jurisdiction, was pending. The Circuit Court, Pinellas County, Crockett Farnell, J., ordered company to respond to discovery request, and company petitioned for writ of certiorari. The District Court of Appeal, Second District, 581 So.2d 222, denied the petition. On review based on conflict, the Supreme Court, Harding, J., held that limited discovery is allowed on questions of jurisdiction to provide trial court with additional information on which to base its decision regarding jurisdiction.

Remanded.

HARDING, Justice.

We have for review Gleneagle Ship Management Co. v. Leondakos, 581 So.2d 222 (Fla. 2d DCA 1991), based on express and direct conflict with F. Hoffmann LaRoche & Co. v. Felix, 512 So.2d 997 (Fla. 3d DCA 1987). We have jurisdiction based on article V, section 3(b)(3) of the Florida Constitution.

The issue here is whether discovery is appropriate on jurisdictional issues while the jurisdictional question is still pending before the trial court. Although this issue is one of first impression in this Court, we note that the federal courts allow discovery to answer jurisdictional questions and find that this policy expresses the better view.

Anthony Leondakos (Leondakos), a Florida resident, brought an action alleging that he was injured in the Persian Gulf while on board the Bridgeton, a ship owned and operated by the petitioners, Gleneagle Ship Management Company and Chesapeake Shipping. Leondakos contends *1283 his injury occurred because the petitioners negligently maintained a stairwell on the ship. He filed an action in the circuit court based on general maritime law and the Jones Act, 46 U.S.C.App. § 688 (1988). Because the petitioners are foreign corporations, the Florida Secretary of State accepted the summons and complaint pursuant to chapter 48 of the Florida Statutes. The petitioners filed an answer and affirmative defenses to the complaint alleging the following grounds: 1) failure to state a cause of action; 2) lack of personal jurisdiction; 3) improper venue; 4) negligence on Leondakos' part; 5) lack of subject matter jurisdiction; 6) forum non conveniens; and 7) failure to comply with section 768.72, Florida Statutes (1989) (no claim for punitive damages can be brought in a civil action without a reasonable showing by the evidence of a basis for recovery of such damages). One month later, the petitioners filed a motion to dismiss based on a lack of personal jurisdiction, forum non conveniens, and improper venue. The petitioners filed sworn affidavits from two of their corporate officers alleging a lack of contacts with the State of Florida.

In response to the motion to dismiss, Leondakos moved for a continuance asserting that he needed more time to complete discovery in order to support his contention that the trial court had proper jurisdiction. After the trial court granted the continuance, Leondakos filed a request for production and interrogatories. Leondakos' discovery requests focused on any business contacts that the petitioners might have with the State of Florida or its citizens. The petitioners filed a motion for a protective order on the grounds that until the trial court determined whether it had jurisdiction, Leondakos' discovery request was premature. When the trial court denied the motion for a protective order, the petitioners filed a writ of certiorari with the Second District Court of Appeal seeking the protective order, which the district court denied. The district court upheld the trial court and adopted the federal judiciary's policy of permitting discovery. [FN1] The district court held that " 'jurisdictional discovery' is available during the pendency of jurisdictional issues, subject of course to the supervision of the trial court." Gleneagle, 581 So.2d at 223. Further, the district court expressly rejected the reasoning of the Third District Court of Appeal in F. Hoffmann LaRoche.

FN1. Oppenheimer Fund, Inc. v. Sanders, 437 U.S. 340, 351 n. 13, 98 S.Ct. 2380, 2389 n. 13, 57 L.Ed.2d 253 (1978) (allowing discovery for limited jurisdictional questions).

In F. Hoffmann LaRoche, the Third District Court of Appeal held that a plaintiff could not seek discovery as to jurisdictional issues while the question of jurisdiction was still before the trial court. In F. Hoffmann LaRoche, the court followed the reasoning of Far Out Music, Inc. v. Jordan, 438 So.2d 912 (Fla. 3d DCA 1983), which "held that a plaintiff could not seek party discovery, including the use of interrogatories, as to jurisdictional issues while that question is being contested by the defendant on appeal from an order sustaining jurisdiction." F. Hoffmann LaRoche, 512 So.2d at 998 (explaining Far Out Music). The district court in F. Hoffmann LaRoche reasoned that if discovery as to jurisdictional issues was not allowed until the question was finally determined on review, then discovery would not be allowed where the trial court has not decided the issue of jurisdiction. However, the court also stated that had the question been an open one, it would have favored applying the federal rule which permits jurisdictional discovery, including interrogatories, production, and depositions directed to "parties," while the jurisdictional issue was still pending before the trial court. F. Hoffmann LaRoche, 512 So.2d at 998 n. 3.

[1] Although the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure differ in some respects, "the objective in promulgating the Florida rules has been to harmonize our rules with the federal rules." Miami Transit Co. v. Ford, 155 So.2d 360, 362 (Fla.1963); see also Fontainebleau Hotel Corp. v. Walters, 246 So.2d 563, 565 (Fla.1971) (Florida's rules modeled after federal rules of civil procedure). Thus, we look to the federal *1284 rules and decisions for guidance in interpreting Florida's civil procedure rules. See Zuberbuhler v. Division of Admin., 344 So.2d 1304, 1306 (Fla. 2d DCA 1977).

[2] Federal courts permit discovery for the purpose of determining issues such as whether jurisdiction exists. See Oppenheimer Fund, Inc. v. Sanders, 437 U.S. 340, 351 n. 13, 98 S.Ct. 2380, 2389 n. 13, 57 L.Ed.2d 253 (1978). In Silk v. Sieling, 7 F.R.D. 576, 577 (E.D.Pa.1947), the federal district court stated: There can be no doubt that this Court has the judicial power to hear and determine questions involving its jurisdiction either of the person or of the subject matter nor that, in order to resolve fact issues on which jurisdiction depends, the ordinary process of the court is available to cause evidence bearing on the fact in issue to be produced.

The Silk court reasoned that if it refused to allow discovery, defendants would be able to withhold facts concerning the issue which the defendants had raised to the court. In another case which is factually similar to the instant case, the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals held that a sailor injured on a foreign ship was "not required to rely exclusively upon a defendant's affidavit for resolution of the jurisdictional issue where that defendant ha[d] failed to answer plaintiff's interrogatories specifically directed to that issue." Blanco v. Carigulf Lines, 632 F.2d 656, 658 (5th Cir.1980). The Fifth Circuit reasoned that to require a plaintiff to rely solely on a defendant's affidavits regarding jurisdiction would give the defendant, who fails to comply with discovery, an unfair advantage in the proceedings.

[3] We adopt the federal courts' policy allowing discovery on questions of jurisdiction because limited discovery in such instances will provide the trial court with additional information on which to base its decision regarding jurisdiction. This policy is in harmony with our decision in Venetian Salami Co. v. Parthenais, 554 So.2d 499 (Fla.1989), where this Court set out the procedure to be followed when a nonresident defendant contests the complaint regarding jurisdiction or lack of minimum contacts. As we stated in Venetian Salami:

A defendant wishing to contest the allegations of the complaint concerning jurisdiction or to raise a contention of minimum contacts must file affidavits in support of his position. The burden is then placed upon the plaintiff to prove by affidavit the basis upon which jurisdiction may be obtained. In most cases, the affidavits can be harmonized, and the court will be in a position to make a decision based upon facts which are essentially undisputed.

Id. at 502-03 (citation omitted). Venetian

Salami presented a problem of opposing and irreconcilable affidavits. Under those facts, we held that the trial court should conduct a limited evidentiary hearing in order to determine the jurisdictional issue. Limited discovery on jurisdictional issues will assist the trial court in answering the question of whether to grant or deny jurisdiction. While a plaintiff should not file a frivolous complaint alleging personal jurisdiction, we recognize that averments made in good faith may not always rise to assertions which could be made under oath. Thus, a plaintiff should be able to conduct limited discovery on the jurisdictional question in order to gather facts and file an opposing affidavit. Once discovery on the jurisdictional issue is concluded, the procedure outlined in Venetian Salami should be followed by the trial court.

We emphasize that the discovery which is envisioned by our holding here should not be broad, onerous or expansive, nor should it address the merits of the case. Also, where possible, the discovery should be carried out so as to minimize expense to the defendant.

Accordingly, we approve the Second District Court of Appeal's decision in Gleneagle and disapprove the Third District Court of Appeal's decision in F. Hoffmann LaRoche to the extent it is inconsistent with this opinion. We remand to the trial court for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

ELLIS, United States Magistrate Judge.

Defendant has requested a stay of discovery pending this Court's determination of its motion to dismiss filed on December 14, 2001. Based on the following, defendant's request is GRANTED.

[1][2] Pursuant to Rule 26(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a district court may stay discovery upon a showing of "good cause." Thrower v. Pozzi, 2002 WL 91612 at *7 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 24, 2002) (quoting Siemens Credit Corp. v. American Transit Ins. Co., 2000 WL 534497, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. May 3, 2000)). This Court may also control the timing and sequence of discovery pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure Rule 26(d). Based on these provisions, courts in this district have held "that a stay of discovery is appropriate pending resolution of a potentially dispositive motion where the motion 'appear[s] to have substantial grounds' or, stated another way, 'do[es] not appear to be without foundation in law.'" In re Currency Conversion Fee Antitrust Litigation, 2002 WL 88278, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 22, 2002) (quoting Chrysler Capital Corp. v. Century Power Corp., 137 F.R.D. 209, 209-10 (S.D.N.Y.1991)) (citing Flores v. Southern Peru Copper Corp., 203 F.R.D. 92, 2001 WL 396422, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 19, 2001); Anti-Monopoly, Inc. v. Hasbro, Inc., 1996 WL 101277, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. March 7, 1996)). In granting a stay, courts generally consider "the breadth of discovery sought and the burden of responding to it." Anti-Monopoly, Inc., 1996 WL 101277, at *3.

[3] In this case, defendant's motion to dismiss is potentially dispositive and does not appear to be unfounded in the law.

Additionally, plaintiff has not demonstrated that he would be prejudiced by a stay. The discovery being sought by plaintiff consists of an extensive set of interrogatories directed at New York University's Director of Personnel that asks for information covering a span of more than five years. Therefore, because the adjudication of the pending motion to dismiss may obviate the need for burdensome discovery, defendant's request for a stay of discovery is GRANTED, until resolution of the motion to dismiss.

Frank LANDRY, et al., Plaintiffs-Appellants,
v.
AIR LINE PILOTS ASSOCIATION INTERNATIONAL AFL-CIO, Taca Airlines,
S.A. and
Charles J. Huttinger, Defendants-Appellees.

No. 88-3363.

Jan. 31, 1990.

Opinion Modified, Rehearing Denied April 27, 1990.

Airline pilots brought suit against airline, pilots' union, pilot who represented union in negotiations with airline, and administrator of their pension plan, alleging violations of labor law, ERISA and RICO. The United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana, George Arceneaux, Jr., J., granted defendants' motions for summary judgment and granted protective order preventing further discovery of defendants, and pilots appealed. The Court of Appeals, Brown, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) statute of limitations barred labor law claims; (2) fact questions as to fiduciary status of defendants precluded summary judgment on ERISA claims; (3) fact questions precluded summary judgment on some RICO claims; and (4) trial court did not abuse its discretion in staying discovery until summary judgment motions were resolved.

Affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded.

[1] Labor Relations ⇨ 759

Airline pilots' claim that their union breached its fair duty of representation in negotiating a new collective bargaining agreement was subject to National Labor Relations Act's six-month statute of limitations, even though claim arose under Railway Labor Act, which had its own two-year limitations provision.

Railway Labor Act, §§ 1-208, as amended, 45 U.S.C.A. §§ 151-188; Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, § 301, 29 U.S.C.A. § 185; National Labor Relations Act, § 10(b), as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. § 160(b).

[2] Limitation of Actions ⇨ 95(14)
241k95(14)

Six-month statute of limitations on airline pilots' claim against their union for breach of duty of fair representation was not tolled by alleged fraudulent concealment of facts that gave rise to cause of action; pilots were on "inquiry notice" if not actual notice of acts that formed basis of their claim for much longer than six months before they filed suit. National Labor Relations Act, § 10(b), as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. § 160(b).

[3] Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 2016
170Ak2016

District court properly refused to reopen case imposing injunction allegedly violated by pilots' union; issues involved in old case and new one were not substantially similar, parties were different and transfer or consolidation would have complicated the case.

[4] Labor Relations ⇨ 416.4
232Ak416.4

Any dispute over whether defendants' action was an improper attempt to decertify pilots' union as bargaining agent for pilots was within exclusive jurisdiction of National Mediation Board. Railway Labor Act, § 2, subd. 9, as amended, 45 U.S.C.A. § 152, subd. 9.

[5] Pensions ⇨ 43.1

Decisions as to whether or when to establish employee benefit plan, or how to design a plan, are not subject to any ERISA fiduciary obligation; nor does any fiduciary obligation arise during negotiation or execution of agreement regarding future benefits. [6] Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 2497.1
(Formerly 170Ak2481)

In airline pilots' action alleging ERISA violations, there was fact question as to whether airline, pilots' union and pilot who represented union in negotiations with airline had any fiduciary duties under ERISA that would make them liable for wrongs alleged, precluding summary judgment. Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, § 3(21)(A), as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. § 1002(21)(A).

(Formerly 296k43)

Airline, pilots' union and pilot representing union in negotiations with airline were impressed with fiduciary duties under ERISA by virtue of control exercised over disposition of plan assets, even if they were not listed as fiduciaries with respect to that function, and if they colluded in order to provide pilot with retirement benefits, these duties were breached. Claim of mail fraud, as predicate offense for RICO, was stated by allegations that false misrepresentations, omissions and false promises of airline, pilots' union and pilot representing union in negotiations with airline lulled pilots into inaction, with ultimate effect of defrauding pilots of their jobs and pension benefits, while airline was able to relocate, union was not prosecuted and was able to drop its representation of pilots, and defendant pilot received severance and retirement benefits. 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 1341, 1962.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana.

Before BROWN, JOHNSON and DAVIS,
Circuit Judges.

JOHN R. BROWN, Circuit Judge:

Several airline pilots brought this action against their former employer, union, union representative, and the administrator of their pension plan. The pilots alleged violations of labor law, ERISA, and RICO. Granting motions for summary judgment, the Court held: (i) the statute of limitations barred the labor law claims; (ii) ERISA imposed no fiduciary duties on the defendants; and (iii) the pilots failed to meet the necessary elements of a RICO claim. The Court also granted a protective order preventing further discovery of the defendants. On appeal, we affirm the lower court's holding with respect to the statute of limitations and the protective order. However, we find that summary judgment was improper on the ERISA and RICO claims. Accordingly, we reverse and remand to the trial court the ERISA and RICO claims.

I. The Facts

A. History of Relations between TACA and ALPA

1. If at first you don't succeed ...

TACA International Airlines, S.A. (TACA), incorporated under the laws of El Salvador, operates in Central America and the United States. From 1949 until 1985, all TACA pilots were based in New Orleans, Louisiana. In 1968, the Airline Pilots Association, International, AFL-CIO (ALPA), was certified as the collective bargaining representative for all pilots employed by TACA, and thereafter negotiated numerous collective bargaining agreements with TACA.

The relevant history of this case begins over two decades ago. In 1969, shortly after TACA entered into its first agreement with ALPA, the Republic of El Salvador requested that TACA relocate its pilot base from New Orleans to El Salvador. When TACA attempted to comply with the request of the Salvadoran government, ALPA sought and obtained an injunction, maintaining that if the relocation occurred, ALPA could no longer, under Salvadoran law, represent the pilots. A bar of representation would have abrogated the recently-entered collective bargaining agreement between ALPA and TACA. This Court affirmed the district court injunction. Ruby v. TACA International Airlines, S.A., 439 F.2d 1359 (5th Cir.1971).

2. ... try, try, again ...

In October of 1979, TACA and ALPA entered into a collective bargaining agreement, effective January 1, 1980 and amendable on December 31, 1983 (the 1980 collective bargaining agreement). In October, 1983, ALPA and TACA commenced negotiations to amend and continue the 1980 collective bargaining agreement.

However, on December 20, 1983, the Republic of El Salvador adopted a new Constitution; Article 110, § 4 of that constitution provided that Salvadoran public service *408 companies must have their work center and base of operations in El Salvador. Airline Pilots Ass'n, Int'l v. TACA, Int'l Airlines, S.A., 748 F.2d 965, 968 (5th Cir.1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1100, 105 S.Ct. 2324, 85 L.Ed.2d 842 (1985). As a result, while in the midst of negotiations, TACA announced its intention to immediately relocate its pilot base from New Orleans to El Salvador, to unilaterally terminate the existing agreement and impose new terms and conditions of employment on its pilot employees, and to withdraw its recognition of ALPA. R. 503. Pilots were given until December 31, 1983 to accept the new terms or lose their employment with TACA. Meanwhile, because of the potential that the pilots would not move, TACA began advertising for new pilots.

ALPA filed a lawsuit in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana, seeking injunctive relief against TACA. Judge Feldman issued a permanent injunction prohibiting TACA from relocating the pilot base, unilaterally changing the terms of employment, recruiting replacement pilots, and interfering with the pilots' choice of ALPA as their bargaining agent.

This court affirmed the injunction, but stated

we neither hold nor suggest that TACA may not relocate its pilot base. We hold only that TACA must relocate its pilot base and effect the other intended steps in accordance with the substantive laws and procedures set forth in the Railway Labor Act and other relevant domestic laws.

3. ... until you do

Between 1984 and 1985, TACA and ALPA

continued negotiations under the auspices of the National Mediation Board (NMB). On July 24, 1985, TACA and ALPA reached an agreement entitled "Pilots' Agreement," which superseded the 1980 collective bargaining agreement under which the parties had been operating. The "Pilots' Agreement" provided that ALPA would not oppose TACA's relocation of its pilot base to El Salvador after August 31, 1985. All pilots on the seniority list as of June 30, 1985 could elect either: (i) to receive severance pay ($1,200.00 to each pilot for each full year of service and pro rata amounts for partial years, with length of service calculated through August 31, 1985), and other benefits (passes and insurance), or (ii) to continue their employment as TACA pilots, based in El Salvador. R. 504.

On July 24, 1985, Mr. Charles J. Huttinger, a TACA pilot who represented ALPA in the negotiations with TACA, sent a letter to all TACA pilots stating that "The Association has reached a tentative agreement (subject to ratification) with TACA.... The Company has agreed to a total package which we believe justifies your support."

Some of the pilots allegedly understood the July 24, 1985 letter to mean that the agreement would not be final until it was ratified by the individual pilots. However, on August 3, 1985, a representative of TACA sent a memorandum to all TACA pilots, informing them that "an agreement [has been] reached by which TACA will move its pilots base to El Salvador effective September 1, 1985." The memorandum further stated that "the decision to continue working for the company or retire must be made by August 15, 1985, at the latest." Each of the named plaintiffs, except Gary Zyriek, elected to take severance pay. Mr. Zyriek had changed jobs and was flying for United Airlines by June 30, 1985, the date of eligibility for severance payments.

The July 24, 1985 "Pilots' Agreement" further provided that TACA's obligation to contribute to the pilots' retirement fund would cease as of August 31, 1985. Although the parties dispute the effective date of the retirement plan (see infra), it was formally implemented on April 18, 1985. Fringe Benefit Administrators (FBA) was named as the plan administrator and the First National Bank of Covington was the plan trustee.

On December 17, 1985, TACA and ALPA entered into a final "settlement agreement" *409 which resolved all claims arising out of the July 24, 1985, "Pilots' Agreement." Among other things, the agreement provided that "ALPA agrees and acknowledges that TACA has no further obligations to the individuals who selected the severance option under the 'Pilots' Agreement'.... concerning insurance coverage or benefits of any kind, or premium payments of any kind."

B. Procedural History

In the original Complaint, the pilots [FN1] asserted that the July 24, 1985 "Pilots' Agreement" was negotiated and executed in breach of ALPA's duty of fair representation (DFR) to the TACA pilots and TACA's prior collective bargaining agreement with ALPA, in violation of the Railway Labor Act (RLA), 45 U.S.C. §§ 151-88, and the National Labor Relations Act (NRLA), 29 U.S.C. §§ 141-87. Pilots sought approximately $30 million in damages. R. 1-18. Pilots did not file their Complaint until July 23, 1986. R. 1.

FN1. There were fifteen plaintiff pilots at the trial court: Frank Landry, Jules Corona, Charles South, Robert A. Massa, Don Johnson, Thomas Brignac, T.Q. Howard, Robert Lukenbill, Bert Haffner, Walter Keller, Joe Haas, Gary Zyriek, Don Jenkins, Emile Cerisier, and M. Letona. The same pilots are appellants on appeal, except for Thomas Brignac, Robert Lukenbill, Bert Haffner, and Gary Zyriek, who have dropped out of the case.

Pilots alleged that ALPA agreed to enter into the July 24, 1985 agreement as a result of TACA's threat to sue ALPA because some of the pilots purportedly sabotaged TACA property at ALPA's direction. The pilots characterized this conduct as a breach of the duty of fair representation by ALPA. In addition, the pilots have asserted that Mr. Huttinger was unqualified to represent ALPA in the negotiation of the "Pilots' Agreement."

Huttinger had been placed on "sick" status by TACA, and according to the pilots, under the Constitution and By-Laws of ALPA, a pilot classified as "sick" was not permitted to hold an office within the union.

Moreover, the pilots have filed the affidavit of Emile Cerisier, one of the plaintiffs. Mr. Cerisier states that Mr. G.M. Padgett was a TACA pilot who was a member of the ALPA negotiation team that arranged the relocation of the pilot base to El Salvador. The pilots claim that Mr. Padgett should not have been allowed on the team because he had been suspended by TACA for sabotaging TACA equipment.

The Original Complaint also alleged that ALPA, TACA, and FBA violated the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA), 29 U.S.C. §§ 1001-1461. The pilots claim that ALPA, TACA, and FBA breached fiduciary duties imposed by ERISA in the administration and implementation of the Plan. More specifically, the pilots allege that the defendants: (i) delayed Plan implementation for three years; (ii) refused to disclose Plan details despite repeated requests; (iii) failed to disclose various information about the fund's location, amount, etc.; and (iv) colluded among each other to allow Huttinger to illegitimately receive retirement benefits.

FBA filed an answer on October 22, 1986. R. 261. ALPA and TACA filed motions to dismiss or, alternatively, for summary judgment, contending that the DFR/breach of contract claim was barred by the applicable six-month statute of limitations and that the pilots had failed to state a claim for relief under ERISA. R. 33-51, 240-60. On January 13, 1987, the pilots noticed the depositions of Charles Huttinger and First National Bank, eventually postponed at the request of the defendants. R. 383-86.

On February 10, 1987, while those motions were pending, the pilots asked the District Court to stay all proceedings and to transfer the case for consolidation with an action filed by ALPA in 1983, Air Line Pilots Ass'n, Int'l

v. TACA Int'l Airlines, S.A., Civ. No. 83-6238 (E.D.La.), aff'd, 748 F.2d 965 (5th Cir.1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1100, 105 S.Ct. 2324, 85 L.Ed.2d 842 (1985), for the expressed purpose of seeking an adjudication that TACA was in contempt of an injunction issued to ALPA in the 1983 case. R. 408-13. Judge Feldman, who had presided over the earlier action, denied pilots' motion, explaining that *410 "[t]his case had been closed for several years, and this Court no longer has any jurisdiction in this matter." Supplemental Record on Appeal, Minute Entry, (Feldman, J.), March 13, 1987. By subsequent Order, the Court below denied pilots' motion to transfer, determining, in consultation with Judge Feldman, "that the issues presented in this matter [the case sub judice] are not sufficiently similar to warrant transfer." R. 427.

On March 11, 1987, the pilots filed an amended and supplemental Complaint, alleging violations of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-68, and requesting nearly $100 million in damages. R. 493-99. Huttinger was added as a defendant in the Amended Complaint, which incorporated all of the allegations in the original Complaint.

By Opinion and Order dated April 24, 1987, the District Court granted the ALPA and TACA motions directed at the Original Complaint, holding, inter alia, that the pilots had failed to demonstrate that "TACA or ALPA should be held liable as a 'fiduciary' within the meaning of ERISA and, to the extent that the pilots intend to assert a 'hybrid' claim under the RLA, [FN2] it is clearly barred by the six-month [statute] of limitations." R. 511.

FN2. See infra.

In May, 1987, TACA, ALPA, and Huttinger responded to the RICO claim in the Amended Complaint by filing motions to dismiss or alternatively, for summary judgment. R. 516-83; 584-608. The Court denied the motions without prejudice and ordered the pilots, in accordance with a newly adopted Standing Order, to file a RICO Case Statement (RICO St.) [FN3] R. 759-62. Pursuant to express leave of the Court, R. 758, ALPA, Huttinger, and TACA renewed their dispositive motions, R. 855-974, 798-854, following the filing of pilots' RICO St. R. 764-90.

FN3. See Appendix A: see also Elliott v. Foufas, 867 F.2d 877, 880 (5th Cir.1989).

On November 18, 1987, the defendants moved for protective orders to quash depositions of TACA, Huttinger, and FBA that the pilots had noticed for October. R. 1007. The protective order was granted on December 11, 1987. R. 1104.

On December 14, 1987, the pilots filed a motion for the Court to reconsider the application of tolling principles to the dismissal of their DFR claims, contending that the Court had "overlooked the doctrine of equitable tolling." R. 1109. A request by the pilots to file a supplemental brief in support of their motion to reconsider was disallowed. On February 29, 1988, the Court denied the pilots' motion for reconsideration and ordered the pilots to respond to the defendants' request for sanctions.

By Opinion and Order dated March 17, 1988, the District Court granted summary judgment on the RICO claim. R. 1295-1311. Judgments pursuant to F.R.Civ.P. 54(b) in favor of ALPA and TACA were entered on April 28, 1988, R. 1315, and, as to Huttinger, on May 4, 1988. R. 1316. Eleven of the fifteen plaintiffs filed a notice of appeal on May 27, 1988.

The following issues are presented on appeal: (i) Did the District Court apply the appropriate statute of limitations to the pilots' labor law claims, and did it give adequate consideration to when the limitations period began to run? (ii) Did the lower court properly find no ERISA plan was established until the spring of 1985, and that neither ALPA, Huttinger, nor TACA were fiduciaries under ERISA? (iii) Did the court below err in ruling against the pilots' RICO claims? (iv) Did the trial judge abuse his discretion in quashing discovery depositions the pilots had noticed for hearing?

II. Statute of Limitations

In their Original Complaint, pilots alleged that ALPA breached its duty of fair representation (DFR), implied under the RLA. They also alleged that TACA was a party to the DFR breach. The breach arose during the process of negotiating a new collective bargaining agreement--which ultimately resulted in the removal of *411 the TACA pilot base to El Salvador and the severance of all of the plaintiffs to this action. The trial court found that by its allegations, pilots brought a "hybrid" claim. [FN4] Such claims are subject to a six month statute of limitations. [FN5] The complaint was filed August 25, 1986, but the cause of action accrued, at the latest, on December 17, 1985 when the settlement agreement was signed. Thus the pilots' labor law claims were held time barred.

FN4. In the original "hybrid" action, an employee brought a claim against his employer under § 301 of the NLRA for breach of the collective bargaining agreement and against his union for breach of the duty of fair representation implied under the NLRA. The two actions are inextricably intertwined, for in order to prevail on one, the employee must prevail on both. See DelCostello v. International Bhd. of Teamsters, 462 U.S. 151, 164-65, 103 S.Ct. 2281, 2290-91, 76 L.Ed.2d 476, 489 (1983). As we shall develop, infra, this original meaning has been expanded to apply to the type of claim brought here.

FN5. DelCostello v. International Bhd. of Teamsters, 462 U.S. 151, 103 S.Ct. 2281, 76 L.Ed.2d 476 (1983). This limitation period is imported from § 10(b) of the NLRA and applies both to the cause of action against the union and to the one against the employee. The DelCostello court chose to apply this analogous federal statute of limitations rather than borrow from state law.

Pilots challenge this ruling on several grounds. They assert that (1) this is not a DelCostello "hybrid" action; (2) more appropriate limitations periods may be found by resort to Louisiana's one year statute of limitations for tort law and ten year statute of limitations for contract law; (3) the running of the statute should have been tolled until defendants' fraud and collusion was discovered by pilots; (4) defendants should have been required to honor the judgment that forbid their relocation unless it was accomplished in compliance with the RLA; (5) any decertification of ALPA as the employees' collective bargaining agent should have been carried out by the National Mediation Board.

[1] We find that dismissal under F.R.Civ.P. 56(c) was warranted because it was clear from the face of the complaint and the declarations submitted that no material facts were in dispute and that defendants were entitled to judgment as a matter of law on the undisputed facts. [FN6] We agree with the trial court that DelCostello states the appropriate limitations period and that pilots' labor law claims were time-barred.

FN6. "[T]he judgment sought shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." F.R.Civ.P. 56(c).

Pilots argue that DelCostello does not apply for two reasons. First, this case implicates the RLA, while DelCostello dealt with a violation of § 301 of the NLRA. Second, DelCostello arose in the context of a grievance proceeding under an existing collective bargaining agreement. In the case sub judice by contrast, the dispute arose out of the process of negotiating a collective bargaining agreement. There was no grievance procedure in place, so a time bar on the federal cause of action would preclude pilots from all avenues of relief.

The Fifth Circuit has held that when a claim alleges unfair representation, it is subject to DelCostello's six month limitations period even when it arises under the RLA, rather than the NLRA as was the case in DelCostello. [FN7] The claim also need not be a "classic" hybrid claim. The six month limitation period is applicable whenever there is a DFR claim. [FN8] Pilots have clearly alleged a breach of the duty of fair representation.

FN7. Brock v. Republic Airlines, Inc., 776 F.2d 523, 525-26 (5th Cir.1985) (The "six-month statute of limitations in § 10(b) of the [NLRA] controls hybrid actions brought under the [RLA]. Hybrid claims under either act originate from an identical implied duty of fair representation and involve a similar balancing of competing interests."); see also Coyle v. Brotherhood of Ry., Airline & S.S. Clerks, 838 F.2d 1404, 1405 (5th Cir.1988).

FN8. Richardson v. United Steelworkers of America, 864 F.2d 1162, 1167 (5th Cir.1989); see also Degan v. Ford Motor Co., 869 F.2d 889, 892-93 (5th Cir.1989).

In addition, at least one other circuit has held explicitly that the limitations period should apply "equally to disputes arising *412 from the process of negotiation and to those arising from actions under the agreement resulting from the negotiations." [FN9] We agree that the rationale of DelCostello applies to the facts before us now. Thus pilots' labor law claims are subject to a six month statute of limitations.

FN9. United Independent Flight Officers v. United Air Lines, 756 F.2d 1262, 1271 (7th Cir.1985).

In support of their second argument, pilots cite United Parcel Service, Inc. v. Mitchell, [FN10] for the proposition that state law provides the appropriate limitations period. Mitchell held that a state statute of limitations for vacation of an arbitration award rather than for breach of contract governed a similar suit. Two questions were left unanswered in Mitchell, however: (i) what statute of limitations should govern the action against the union (only the action against the employer was subject to the arbitration statute) and (ii) whether the statute of limitations should be borrowed from federal law, namely NLRA § 10(b), 29 U.S.C. § 160(b), rather than from state law. DelCostello resolved these unanswered questions holding that it was indeed appropriate to borrow from federal law and apply the six month statute of limitations from § 10(b). That limitations period applies to the claims against the employer and those against the union. [FN11]

FN11. DelCostello, 462 U.S. at 154-55, 103 S.Ct. at 2285-86, 76 L.Ed.2d at 482-83.

In the pilots' third challenge to the trial court's ruling, they assert that the trial court should have applied the doctrine of equitable tolling to find that pilots' claims were not barred by the statute of limitations. Pilots argue that they didn't know of the fraud and collusion perpetrated upon them until less than six months before they filed suit. They do not, however, detail the fraud and collusion which kept this knowledge from them or what and how they found out about it.

Pilots begin by arguing that where fraud and collusion have been alleged, DelCostello is inapplicable and a two year statute of limitations set forth in the RLA applies. [FN12] Brock v. Republic Airlines, Inc., [FN13] the only case pilots cite for this proposition, does not go nearly as far as pilots would take it. The RLA's statute of limitations applies only to actions arising under its own provisions; pilots have not alleged a violation of those provisions. The "fraud and collusion" Brock alleged denied him a fair hearing before the National Railroad Adjustment Board which issued the order Brock appealed. [FN14] Pilots do not appeal an Adjustment Board order, nor do they allege fraud and collusion in connection with such an order. In short, their claims fall entirely outside the parameters of Brock.

FN12. 45 U.S.C. § 153 (First) (r), the section pilots claim is applicable, provides: All actions at law based upon the provisions of this section shall be begun within two years from the time the cause of action accrues under the award of the division of the Adjustment Board, and not after.

FN13. 776 F.2d 523, 526-27 (5th Cir.1985).

FN14. Id. Such a cause of action is specifically provided for in 45 U.S.C. § 153 (First) (p) and therefore subject to the two year limitation period established in 45 U.S.C. § 153 (First) (r).

[2] Even though DelCostello does apply, and not Brock's two year limitations period, pilots nevertheless argue that they meet the six month statute of limitations. Eight months after the DFR claim was dismissed, pilots moved for reconsideration of the dismissal arguing that the trial court had "apparently overlooked the doctrine of equitable tolling in its ruling." [FN15] Pilots argued that the statute should have been tolled until a time less than six months before they filed suit because the defendants had fraudulently concealed the facts that gave rise to their cause of action. The trial court found that their motion had no merit because the issue was not adequately raised when the claims were initially disposed of and pilots failed to show a proper basis for the exercise of equitable tolling. We agree.

FN15. R. 1110.

Allegations of fraudulent concealment do not free plaintiffs of their obligation to *413 exercise reasonable diligence to discover frauds perpetrated against them once they are on notice that such acts might have occurred. [FN16] Plaintiffs' own affidavits submitted before the summary judgment and with the motion for reconsideration show they were on "inquiry notice" if not actual notice of the acts that form the basis of their DFR claim for much longer than six months before they filed suit.

FN16. Jensen v. Snellings, 841 F.2d 600, 607 (5th Cir.1988), reh'g granted in part (unpublished opinion). [A]n act of concealment should not relieve the plaintiff of his duty to exercise reasonable diligence to discover the fraud.... Concealment by the defendant is only a factor to be considered in determining when the plaintiff should have discovered the fraud. The requirement of diligent inquiry imposes an affirmative duty upon the potential plaintiff.... A plaintiff who has learned of facts which would cause a reasonable person to inquire further must proceed with a reasonable and diligent investigation, and is charged with the knowledge of all facts such an investigation would have disclosed. (Citations omitted). Although Jensen dealt with alleged securities fraud, its reasoning extends to this situation. Like investors, employees "are not free to ignore storm warnings" that would alert a reasonable employee to the possibility of fraud. Id.

For example, plaintiffs allege that Huttinger misrepresented that the Pilots' Agreement would be subject to ratification in July 1985; pilots knew by August 3, 1985 that the agreement was to be immediately implemented without ratification. [FN17] Haffner, one of the pilots, was aware in July or August 1985 that Huttinger and ALPA had no alternative but to take the buyout. ALPA would not support the pilots through a strike because (i) ALPA was financially depleted and could not afford to do so and (ii) ALPA had been threatened with suit by TACA and ALPA's legal department felt they would lose. [FN18] In the spring of 1985, while negotiations were ongoing, Zyriek--another pilot--learned from a vice president of TACA that Huttinger was not qualified to represent the pilots and that Huttinger and Padgett were lying to the pilots about the course of the negotiations. [FN19]

FN17. See Amended Complaint at ¶¶ 41-42, R. 495-96; ALPA's Statement of Material Facts Not in Dispute at ¶ 10, R. 571 and Pilots' Controverted Statements at ¶ 10, R. 727.

FN18. Declaration of Bert Haffner, R. 1179-1181.

FN19. See Declaration of Gary Zyriek, R. 1196-98.

At least some of the pilots were informed about the events taking place and potential problems with the negotiations. Many of the pilots also declared that they were aware of and asked by ALPA to participate in sabotage of TACA equipment. This alone should have put them on notice that things were not as they should be. Finally, First Federal Savings and Loan Assoc. of Miami v. Mortgage Corp. of the South [FN20] holds that ignorance of one aspect of an alleged fraud, where many other facts were known, is insufficient to delay the running of the statute.

Given these allegations, there is no question that the pilots were on inquiry notice of the labor law claims they raised in this suit in the spring or summer of 1985. Pilots have not alleged or provided any proof which would tend to show that defendants actively concealed their conduct or that the pilots exercised reasonable diligence, from that time until less than six months before they filed suit, in order to learn of their legal claims. [FN21] The trial court did not abuse its discretion in failing to grant reconsideration. No fact issues regarding the pilots' exercise of diligence in finding the grounds of their complaint were presented for resolution.

FN21. United Klans of America v. McGovern, 621 F.2d 152, 153 (5th Cir. 1980): Fraudulent concealment tolls the statute of limitations. To rely on this tolling doctrine, "plaintiff must show that the defendants concealed the conduct complained of, and that he failed, despite the exercise of due diligence on his part, to discover the facts that form the basis of his claim." Citing In re Beef Industry Antitrust Litigation, 600 F.2d 1148, 1169 (5th Cir. 1979).

Pilots' fourth argument measures the actions of ALPA and TACA against an injunction. In 1983, El Salvador adopted a new Constitution which required Salvadoran public service companies to have their *414 bases in El Salvador. Pursuant to that new requirement, TACA attempted to move its pilots base to San Salvador. ALPA immediately sought an injunction against the move which was granted by the district court and upheld by the Fifth Circuit. [FN22] The injunction did not prevent TACA from relocating its base. It simply provided that "TACA must relocate its pilot base, and effect the other intended steps in accordance with the substantive law and procedures set forth in the Railway Labor Act and other relevant domestic laws." [FN23] The pilots contend that TACA effected its move in violation of the RLA and thus is in violation of the injunction.

FN22. See Airline Pilots Ass'n International, AFL-CIO v. TACA International Airlines, S.A., 748 F.2d 965 (5th Cir.1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1100, 105 S.Ct. 2324, 85 L.Ed.2d 842 (1985).

FN23. Id. at 972.

[3] Pilots did not raise this issue until February 1987--long after they had filed this action. We find that the courts below acted properly in refusing to reopen that case. The issues involved in the old case and the current one are not substantially similar and the parties are different--only TACA was bound by the injunction. A transfer or consolidation to resolve this issue would have complicated the case--not simplified it.

Pilots' final argument against the operation of DelCostello and the bar of the six month statute of limitations is to classify the actions of ALPA and TACA as an improper attempt to decertify ALPA as the bargaining agent for the pilots. In this guise, pilots argue that the rationale of DelCostello is inappropriate. [FN24]

FN24. Pilots do not explain why they believe this characterization makes DelCostello inapplicable, nor do they state which statute of limitations then becomes applicable or why. We respond to pilots' arguments without the need to answer these questions.

[4] Disputes which involve the determination of the certified representative of airline employees in collective bargaining and contract administration are classified by the RLA as "representation" disputes. Such disputes are governed by Section 2, Ninth of the RLA, [FN25] which provides that "it is the duty of the [National Mediation] Board to investigate any dispute as to who is the collective bargaining representative of employees and to certify the organization properly designated." [FN26] We have no jurisdiction over this claim.

FN25. 45 U.S.C. § 152, Ninth.

FN26. International Bhd. of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen & Helpers of America v. Texas International Airlines, Inc., 717 F.2d 157, 159 (5th Cir.1983).

The Act commits disputes involving a determination of who is to represent airline employees in collective bargaining to the exclusive jurisdiction of the National Mediation Board. A court may not entertain an action involving such a dispute even if it arises in the context of otherwise justiciable claims. [FN27]

FN27. Id. at 161 (citations omitted).

In conclusion, we hold that pilots' labor law claims were time barred. A straightforward application of DelCostello, as it has evolved, compels this result. The remainder of pilots' arguments--equitable tolling, enforcement of a prior injunction, and wrongful decertification of ALPA--avail them not at all.

III. Erisa Claims

A. Did a "Plan" Exist Before April 18, 1985?

[5] The fiduciary obligations created by Title I of ERISA apply only to established "plans." Section 401(a), 29 U.S.C. § 1101(a) (fiduciary responsibilities apply to employee benefit plans); Section 4(a), 29 U.S.C. § 1003(a) ("this subchapter shall apply to any employee benefit plan if it is established or maintained" by an employer, employee organization, or both) (emphasis added). Decisions as to whether or when to establish a plan, or how to design a plan, are not subject to any ERISA fiduciary obligation. [FN28] Nor does any fiduciary obligation *415 arise during the negotiation or execution of an agreement regarding future pension benefits. [FN29] Thus, we must determine when the retirement plan for the TACA pilots went into effect, so that we can decide when any fiduciary duties may have been created.

FN28. See UMWA Health & Retirement Funds v. Robinson, 455 U.S. 562, 573-76, 102 S.Ct. 1226, 1232-34, 71 L.Ed.2d 419 (1982); NLRB v. Amax Coal Co., 453 U.S. 322, 336-38, 101 S.Ct. 2789, 2797-98, 69 L.Ed.2d 672 (1981); United

FN29. UIFO-I, 756 F.2d at 1268; United Independent Flight Officers, Inc. v. United Air Lines, Inc., 756 F.2d 1274, 1280 (7th Cir.1985); Sutton v. Weirton Steel Division of National Steel Corp., 567 F.Supp. 1184, 1201 (N.D.W.Va.), aff'd, 724 F.2d 406 (4th Cir.1983), cert. denied, 467 U.S. 1205, 104 S.Ct. 2387, 81 L.Ed.2d 345 (1984).

A pension plan subject to ERISA is one which is "established or maintained by an employer or by an employee organization or both" to provide retirement income to employees. Section 3(21)(A), 29 U.S.C. s 1002(21)(A). ALPA cites Donovan v. Dillingham, 688 F.2d 1367, 1373 (11th Cir.1982) (en banc), for the proposition that a plan is "established" if, "from the surrounding circumstances a reasonable person could ascertain" the following four elements: "the intended [i] benefits, [ii] beneficiaries, [iii] source of financing, and [iv] procedures for receiving benefits." [FN30]

FN30. Accord Rasmussen v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 675 F.Supp. 1497, 1500 (W.D.La.1987); Ogden v. Michigan Bell Telephone Co., 657 F.Supp. 328, 332 n. 3 (E.D.Mich.), appeal dismissed, 829 F.2d 1126 (6th Cir.1987).

On February 2, 1982, ALPA and TACA entered a "Letter of Agreement" in which they agreed to establish a retirement plan for all TACA pilots. However, a formal retirement plan was not implemented until April 18, 1985, when TACA and ALPA executed the "TACA International Air Lines, S.A. Pilots' Retirement Plan and Trust" (the Plan). The 1982 "Letter of Agreement" provided that TACA would contribute $75,000 a year to a fund for the pilots' retirement plus a variable amount depending upon the number of pilots listed on the seniority list and whether a second B-737 aircraft was acquired. TACA's obligation to make monthly contributions commenced on March 31, 1982. "[U]ntil such time as the retirement plan for pilots has been established and implemented," TACA's contributions were to be deposited in an institution named by ALPA to be held in trust for the benefit of the retirement plan. The "Letter of Agreement" was effective from February 25, 1982 to February 25, 1987, at which time the agreement would be subject to renewal.

Since the 1982 agreement did not describe the intended benefits or procedure for receipt of benefits, (although it does impart the source of financing and the beneficiaries), ALPA argues that there was no plan until the signing of the 1985 retirement plan, which satisfies all four of the Dillingham requirements. [FN31]

FN31. In Dillingham, an en banc Eleventh Circuit held that employers and unions that subscribed to a group insurance trust to furnish health insurance for employees or members, "established employee welfare benefit plans" for purposes of deciding subject matter jurisdiction over ERISA claims. Dillingham, 688 F.2d at 1374.

Our opinion in no way undermines Dillingham's holding that a plan is established if "from the surrounding circumstances a reasonable person can ascertain the intended benefits, a class of beneficiaries, the source of financing, and procedures for receiving benefits." Id. at 1373. But in our case the issue is not if a plan has been established, as in Dillingham, (because it is undisputed that an ERISA-covered plan was eventually established), but rather when the plan was established, taking into consideration the retroactivity provision in the 1985 retirement plan. [FN32]

FN32. Of course, this distinction can easily be collapsed by recognizing that a plan is normally established when all of the requirements for a plan are met. But the distinction is useful here because there is no contention that all of the requirements for a plan were met by 1985.

ALPA also argues that the "circumstances" surrounding the February, 1982 Letter of Agreement, as reflected in its terms, prove that a plan was not established at that time. In particular, ALPA points to the following language of the 1982 Agreement *416 to support its claim that a pension plan was to be created at some time in the future, and not by the 1982 Agreement itself: "the specifics of the retirement plan for the pilots shall be determined ..."; TACA's contributions would be held in trust "until such time as the retirement plan for pilots has been established and implemented"; and "[a]t that time the Company's required monthly contributions shall be made to the retirement plan for pilots." (Emphasis added by ALPA). [FN33]

FN33. The more complete version of relevant provisions of the 1982 Agreement are as follows:

LETTER OF AGREEMENT between
TACA INTERNATIONAL AIRLINES, S.A.
and
THE AIR LINE PILOTS
in the service of TACA INTERNATIONAL AIRLINES, S.A.
as represented by
THE AIR LINE PILOTS ASSOCIATION INTERNATIONAL

THIS LETTER OF AGREEMENT is made and entered into in accordance with the provisions of the Railway Labor Act as amended, by and between TACA INTERNATIONAL AIRLINES, S.A. (hereinafter referred to as the "Company") and the AIR LINE PILOTS in the services of TACA INTERNATIONAL AIRLINES, S.A. as represented by the AIR LINE PILOTS ASSOCIATION, INTERNATIONAL (hereinafter referred to as the "Association").

* * * * *

1. The Company will fund a retirement plan for all pilots of the Company on the seniority list as of February 1, 1982 and any pilots added to the seniority list thereafter. The Company contributions to the plan shall be as follows: (a) $75,000 per year, and (b) an additional $25,000 per year when second B-737 aircraft is acquired by (i.e. owned by or leased to) the Company, and (c) an additional $2,000 per year for each pilot on the seniority list in excess of fifty (50) pilots and (d) all obligations coming due under clauses (a), (b), and (c) above will be paid by 12 payments 1/12 each such payments on the last business calendar day of the month and each such payments prorated to any increased obligation.

* * * * *

5. The specifics of the retirement plan for pilots shall be determined by the Association provided that the plan receives I.R.S. qualification and it treats all pilots in a fair and equitable manner. 6. The Company contributions required by Paragraphs 1 and 4 above shall be deposited in a trust account established in an institution to be named by the Association to be held in trust by that institution for the benefit of the retirement plan for pilots until such time as the retirement plan for pilots has been established and implemented. At that time the Company's required monthly contributions shall be made to the retirement plan for pilots.

* * * * *

We can ignore the implications of these terms in the 1982 Letter of Agreement, however, because the April, 1985 retirement plan is explicitly retroactive to February, 1982. The very first sentence of the 1985 retirement plan states that TACA "established a pension plan for its Pilots" on February 1, 1982. [FN34] The retirement plan unambiguously marks the plan's Effective Date as February 1, 1982. [FN35] All pilots employed on the Effective Date are eligible to *417 participate in the Plan. [FN36] We will not interfere with the intent of the parties to make the Plan effective on February 1, 1982. Thus, we instruct the court on remand to accept as a matter of law that the Plan was in effect on February 1, 1982.

FN34. Article 1.1 of the TACA INTERNATIONAL AIRLINES, S.A. PILOTS RETIREMENT PLAN AND TRUST provides: Establishment and Name of the Plan and Trust--TACA INTERNATIONAL AIRLINES, S.A., (hereinafter referred to as the "Company"), on February 1, 1982, established a pension plan for its Pilots, which, as it may be amended from time to time, is known as the TACA International Airlines, S.A. Pilots Retirement Plan and Trust.

FN35. Article II--(Definitions) defines "Effective Date": The term 'Effective Date' means February 1, 1982, the date on which the provisions of this Plan are effective. Other provisions support the view that the 1985 Plan is retroactive to 1982. "Future Service" is defined as "a Pilot's aggregate period of employment as a Pilot on or after February 1, 1982, including approved leaves of absence and furloughs." "Past Service" is defined as "a Pilot's aggregate period of employment as a Pilot prior to February 1, 1982, including approved leaves of absence and furloughs; provided, however, that a Pilot's total Past Service which may be credited under the Plan shall not exceed twenty (20) years." "Plan Year" is defined as "the twelve (12) month period commencing each January 1st and ending on the following December 31st. However, the first Plan Year shall commence February 1, 1982 and end December 31, 1982." 4.1 Company Contributions--The Company shall contribute to the Plan such amounts as shall be required by the Letter of Agreement between TACA INTERNATIONAL AIRLINES, S.A. and the AIR LINE PILOTS in the service of TACA INTERNATIONAL AIRLINES, S.S. as represented by THE AIR LINE PILOTS ASSOCIATION, INTERNATIONAL in effect as of February 24, 1982 and as subsequently amended or replaced, in accordance with the funding standards of the Internal Revenue Code and ERISA.

FN36. However, one year of service is required before eligibility: 3.1 Eligibility--Each person who is employed as a Pilot on the Effective Date and who, as of the Effective Date, has completed one year of Past Service, shall participate in this Plan as of the Effective Date.

B. Did TACA, ALPA and Huttinger Have Any Fiduciary Duties Under the Retirement Plan?

Finding a need for greater protection of employees covered by benefit plans, Congress enacted ERISA in 1974. 29 U.S.C. §§ 1001 et seq. In so doing, Congress sought to protect "the interests of participants in private pension plans and their beneficiaries by improving the equitable character and the soundness of such plans." 29 U.S.C. § 1001(c). [FN37] ERISA is therefore to be construed liberally to safeguard the interests of fund participants and beneficiaries, and to preserve the integrity of fund assets. This court has previously held that a liberal construction of ERISA is in keeping with its remedial purposes. [FN38]

FN37. Amending ERISA in 1986 with the Single-Employer Pension Plan Amendments Act, (SEPPAA) Title XI of Pub.L.No. 99-272, tit. XI, 100 Stat. 237 (1986), Congress declared that the policy of the legislation was "to increase the likelihood that participants and beneficiaries under single-employer defined benefit pension plans will receive their full benefits." 29 U.S.C. § 1001b(c)(3) (Supp. VII 1989). Another declaration of policy under SEPPAA was "to provide for the transfer of unfunded pension liabilities onto the single-employer pension plan termination insurance system only in cases of severe hardship." 29 U.S.C. § 1001b(c)(4) (Supp. VII 1989).

FN38. American Federation of Unions Local 102 Health & Welfare Fund v. Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, 841 F.2d 658, 662 (5th Cir.1988); Donovan v. Mercer, 747 F.2d 304, 308 (5th Cir.1984).

[6] Section 3(21)(A) of ERISA, 29 U.S.C. § 1002(21)(A), provides that a "person" is a fiduciary only "to the extent" he

(1) exercises discretionary control or authority over the management of the Plan or the Plan's disposition of its assets, (2) renders investment advice with regard to assets of the plan, or (3) has discretionary authority or responsibility in the administration of the plan."

In Sommers Drug Stores, Co. Employee Profit Sharing Trust v. Corrigan Enterprises, Inc., 793 F.2d 1456, 1459-60 (5th Cir.1986), reh'g den., 797 F.2d 977 (5th Cir.1986) cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1034, 107 S.Ct. 884, 93 L.Ed.2d 837 (1987), we held that "[t]he phrase 'to the extent' indicates that a person is a fiduciary [under ERISA] only with respect to those aspects of the plan over which he exercises authority or control." [FN39] The court below applied 3(21)(A) and Sommers to conclude that neither TACA nor ALPA had any fiduciary duties "because the 1985 retirement plan does not establish any power or authority on behalf of TACA or ALPA, nor has any such authority or power been demonstrated to have been exercised in fact." Landry v. ALPA, No. 86-3196, slip op. at p. 9 (E.D.La. Apr. 24, 1987) (mem.). A genuine issue of material fact [FN40] existed as to whether TACA, ALPA, and Huttinger had any fiduciary duties under ERISA that *418 would make them liable for the wrongs alleged in the pilots' complaint.

FN39. Accord Gelardi v. Pertec Computer Corp., 761 F.2d 1323, 1325 (9th Cir.1985); Brandt v. Grounds, 687 F.2d 895, 897 (7th Cir.1982); Holland v. Bank of America, 673 F.Supp. 1511, 1518 (S.D.Cal.1987).

FN40. In a practice all too common in summary judgment decisions, the trial court made no mention of the standard it was applying to reach its decision. Assuming that the appropriate standard for a rule 56(c) motion was being tacitly applied, it would behoove the district court to spell out that "no genuine issues as to any material fact" could be found in support of plaintiff's case. F.R.Civ.P. 56(c). See also, S. Childress & M. Davis, Standard of Review 310 (Wiley & Sons 1986). Such judicial pedagogy might reduce the frequency of the same omission in briefs, motions, etc.

Initially, we must emphasize that fiduciary status is to be determined by looking at the actual authority or power demonstrated, as well as the formal title and duties of the party at issue. As described in the legislative history of ERISA, "the definition [of 'fiduciary'] includes persons who have authority and responsibility with respect to the matter in question, regardless of their formal title." H.R.Conf.Rep. No. 93-1280, 93d Cong., 2nd Sess., reprinted in 1974 U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 4639, 5038, 5103. Thus "fiduciary" should be defined not only by reference to particular titles such as "plan administrator," "committee chairman," or "sponsor," but also by considering the authority which a particular person or entity exercises over the employee benefit plan at issue. Donovan v. Mercer, 747 F.2d at 308. See also Brink v. DaLesio, 496 F.Supp. 1350, 1374-75 (D.Md.1980), rev'd in part on other grounds, 667 F.2d 420 (4th Cir.1982); Leigh v. Engle, 727 F.2d 113, 134 n. 33 (7th Cir.1984) ("we think ERISA directs courts to look beyond ... formal authority with respect to the plan ... to consider what real authority they had over plan investments ...").

The fact that someone is a fiduciary under a retirement plan does not necessarily mean he is a fiduciary with respect to all of the obligations under the plan. As we stressed in Sommers, 793 F.2d at 1459, the key language in the statutory definition is that a person is a fiduciary "to the extent" he or she exercises control over the plan. The Secretary of Labor explained this language in a bulletin interpreting ERISA, which was published in the Code of Federal Regulations. In this bulletin, the Secretary was asked the following question and gave the following response:

D-4 Q: In the case of a plan established and maintained by an employer, are members of the board of directors of the employer fiduciaries with respect to the plan?

A: Members of the board of directors of an employer which maintains an employee benefit plan will be fiduciaries only to the extent that they have responsibility for the functions described in section 3(21)(A) of the Act. For example, the board of directors may be responsible for the selection and retention of plan fiduciaries. In such a case, members of the board of directors exercise "discretionary authority or discretionary control respecting management of such plan" and are, therefore, fiduciaries with respect to the plan. However, their responsibility, and consequently, their liability, is limited to the selection and retention of fiduciaries (apart from co-fiduciary liability arising under circumstances described in section 405(a) of the Act). In addition, if the directors are made named fiduciaries of the plan, their liability may be limited pursuant to a procedure provided for in the plan instrument for the allocation of fiduciary responsibilities among named fiduciaries or for the designation of persons other than named fiduciaries to carry out fiduciary responsibilities, as provided in section 405(c)(2).

The Internal Revenue Service notes that it would reach the same answer to this question under section 4975(e)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

ERISA Interpretive Bulletin 75-8, 29 CFR § 2509.75-8 (1983) (emphasis supplied).

While the fiduciary duty of a board of directors is not directly at issue in our case, the excerpted dialogue from the bulletin illustrates the important parameters and limitations of fiduciary responsibility. Thus, it will be the task of the court on remand to determine precisely the extent, as a factual matter, of actual fiduciary authority possessed or exercised by ALPA, Huttinger, and TACA with respect to the wrongs alleged by the pilots. The pilots' complaint maintains the following four wrongs as a consequence of ERISA violations: [FN41]

FN41. Of course, to the extent the district court allows the pilots to amend their complaint on remand pursuant to F.R.Civ.P. 15, this list of alleged wrongs may be expanded.

(i) delay in implementation of the retirement plan for three years; (ii) failure and *419 refusal to discuss or disclose the Plan and its benefits to the Pilots upon repeated requests; (iii) failure to disclose the amount of contributions by TACA, where the funds were deposited, the type of investment account and interest rates the invested funds received; and (iv) collusion between TACA, ALPA, and FBA to allow Huttinger to receive benefits to which he was not legitimately entitled. [FN42]

FN42. FBA is only an intervenor in this appeal. See infra. The original Complaint alleged collusion between ALPA, FBA, and Huttinger. The amended Complaint, however, implicates TACA in this collusion to improperly provide Huttinger with funds.

1. Too Slow

Although, as we determined above, the Plan was in effect in February, 1982, a detailed retirement plan laying out the rights and obligations of the parties was not implemented until over three years later. [FN43] In August of 1984, FBA was contacted by ALPA about a possible contract to perform retirement plan services. On October 30, 1984, a Plan Services Agreement was entered between ALPA and FBA delineating specific services that FBA would provide under the Plan. In this Plan Services Agreement, FBA agreed to take "all the steps required to make the plan and trust operative."

FN43. In an inquiry filed with the U.S. Department of Labor, Division of Technical Assistance, Bert Haffner, one of the plaintiff TACA pilots, complained of an "unusual time delay and lapse from time of inception (1 Feb 82) to the time of issuance of plan outline (16 April 85)." R. 1183.

However, while FBA's duties under the Plan are retroactive to February, 1982, any fiduciary obligations undertaken by FBA in the Plan Services Agreement do not begin until October 30, 1984. Thus, assuming without deciding that FBA had a fiduciary duty to implement the Plan beginning on October 30, 1984, there is still a disputed fact issue as to which party had the responsibility to implement the Plan from February, 1982 until the signing of the Plan Services Agreement. [FN44] If the trial court on remand discovers that TACA, ALPA, or Huttinger formally possessed or actually assumed any fiduciary duty with respect to implementing the Plan, then they will be potentially liable for any damages resulting from the delay in implementation.

FN44. There is nothing in either the "Letter of Agreement" or the Plan itself that imposes a fiduciary duty to implement the Plan.

2. Didn't Show

The pilots' alleged that Charles Huttinger refused to discuss or disclose the Plan and details about its benefits despite repeated requests. Huttinger was appointed to the pilots' retirement committee which, according to section 12.4 of the Plan, [FN45] was charged with interpreting and construing the Plan, determining questions of eligibility and rights of participants and their beneficiaries, and providing guidelines for the plan administrator as required for the orderly and uniform administration of the Plan.

FN45. 12.4 Retirement Committee--In order to assist in the administration of the Plan, the Association shall appoint a Retirement Committee to: (a) interpret and construe the Plan; (b) determine questions of eligibility and of rights of Participants and their Beneficiaries; (c) provide guidelines for the Plan Administrator, as required for the orderly and uniform administration of the Plan.

The affidavit of Bert Haffner, one of the TACA pilots, declares that Huttinger "refused to supply [him] with a copy of the retirement plan or tell [him] how to get one" despite repeated requests. R. 1179. In July or August of 1985, Haffner met with Huttinger at his home "in order to obtain his help in applying for all benefits [that he] might be eligible for." R. 1180. Haffner claimed that he "did this in accordance with recommendations in ALPA manuals, to contact the union chairman for help in applying for benefits." R. 1180.

Another pilot, Jules Corona, declared that despite numerous requests, he "was never given any information as to where the TACA contributed retirement funds were held in Trust, nor when the plan was implemented, nor any of the ERISA required disclosure information until after *420 the August 1, 1985 termination date of the plan." R. 303.

Huttinger clearly assumed both a de facto and a de jure role in construing the Plan and informing the pilots about its contents. Thus, we find as a matter of law that Huttinger had a fiduciary duty to disclose information about the Plan to the pilots when asked. Whether he breached that fiduciary duty must be resolved on remand.

3. Couldn't Know

ALPA argues that it is not a fiduciary with respect to the alleged failure to disclose information about the Plan and its assets because the Plan charged the Plan Administrator, FBA, with the day-to-day administration of the Plan, and consistent with Section 101 of ERISA, 29 U.S.C. § 1021, [FN46] with specific responsibility for providing participants in the Plan with all information required by law, including information and reports regarding the Plan and its assets. [FN47]

FN46. § 1021. Duty of disclosure and reporting
(a) Summary plan description and information to be furnished to participants and beneficiaries The administrator of each employee benefit plan shall cause to be furnished in accordance with section 1024(b) of this title to each participant covered under the plan and to each beneficiary who is receiving benefits under the plan--(1) a summary plan description described in section 1022(a)(1) of this title; and (2) the information described in section 1024(b)(3) and 1025(a) and (c) of this title.

FN47. Formal responsibility to notify beneficiaries and participants about the Plan falls on FBA. 9.8 Powers, Duties and Responsibilities of the Plan Administrator--The specific powers and responsibilities of the Plan Administrator are to:

* * * * *

(c) Prepare and arrange for delivery to Participants such summaries, descriptions, announcements and reports as are required to be given to Participants under applicable laws and regulations; Our opinion decides nothing with respect to FBA. See infra.

However, while the responsibility for notifying beneficiaries and participants with Plan information formally fell upon FBA, there are indications that FBA's actual authority over Plan matters was (at least sometimes) subordinated to and dependent upon decisions by ALPA. [FN48] For example, when the president of FBA, Richard Watson, was asked why Huttinger was able to apply for and begin receiving benefits in November of 1985, but Haffner was not allowed to do the same, Watson reportedly explained "that was the way ALPA had told him to do it." [FN49]

FN48. The Plan plainly gives ALPA some fiduciary duties. Article 11.2 of the Plan gives ALPA the authority to terminate the plan and the trust by an instrument in writing signed by the president of ALPA or his designee for such purpose. R. 1389. Article 11.2 provides: Termination of Plan and Trust--"This Plan and Trust may be terminated by an instrument in writing signed by the President of the Association or his designee for such purpose. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Plan shall automatically terminate in the event of a complete discontinuance of contributions by the Company. Upon the termination or partial termination of the Plan, the rights of all affected Participants and Beneficiaries to benefits accrued to the date of such termination, partial termination, or discontinuance, to the extent funded as of such date, are nonforfeitable." ALPA has the sole authority and control to remove and appoint the Trustee, the Plan Administrator and the Investment Manager. Article 9.5(a) provides: The Association is empowered to appoint and remove the Trustee, the Plan Administrator and the Investment Manager as it deems necessary for the proper administration of the Plan, to assure that the Plan is being operated for the exclusive benefit of the Participants and their Beneficiaries in accordance with the terms of this Agreement, the Internal Revenue Code and ERISA. Article 9.5(c) explicitly provides for the discretion of ALPA: "The Association may in its discretion appoint an Investment Manager to manage all or a designated portion of the assets of the Plan. In such event, the Trustee shall follow the directives of the Investment Manager in investing the assets of the Plan managed by the Investment Manager. While there is an Investment Manager, the Association shall have no obligation under this Plan with regard to the performance or non-performance of the duties delegated to the Investment Manager."

FN49. Bert Haffner provided this information about his conversation with Watson. R. 1181.

Even if the actual fiduciary duty to disclose information about the Plan falls upon FBA, its failure to notify Plan participants *421 and beneficiaries may not constitute a breach of that duty because ALPA and TACA undertook an obligation to keep FBA informed about certain matters. [FN50] If ALPA failed to do so, FBA may have been prevented from fulfilling its fiduciary duty to notify the beneficiaries and participants.

FN50. Sections 3 and 4 of the Plan Services Agreement provide in full: 3. Obtaining Information--The Association agrees to furnish information or data which FBA requests in order to perform services under this Agreement within 90 days of the initial request or FBA will not be held responsible for services under this Agreement. FBA reserves the right to require that data be furnished over the signature of an authorized official of the Association or the entity or representative providing the data on behalf of the Association. FBA reserves the right to reject information or data which it considers unsuitable for processing. FBA's sole responsibility, in this regard, shall be to forward questionnaires and forms as necessary to the Association on a timely basis, enabling the Association to provide the information needed. 4. Liability for Information--The Association shall provide complete, accurate and timely information, upon which information FBA may rely fully. The Company and the Association shall indemnify and hold FBA harmless for errors, omissions, and inaccurate or incomplete reports completed, based on inaccurate, incomplete or untimely information furnished by the Company and the Association.

Similarly, in the Plan, TACA agrees to supply "full and timely information to the Plan Administrator on all matters relating to the compensation of all Participants, their periods of service, their retirement, death, disability or termination of employment, and such other pertinent facts as [FBA] may require." [FN51] However, any fiduciary duty on the part of TACA arising under § 9.9 (or any other section) of the Plan is unenforceable, because TACA is neither a signatory nor a party to the Plan. [FN52]

FN51. Plan § 9.9 provides: 9.9 Information From Company--To enable the Plan Administrator to perform his functions, the Company shall supply full and timely information to the Plan Administrator on all matters relating to the compensation of all Participants, their periods of service, their retirement, death, disability, or termination of employment, and such other pertinent facts as the Administrator may require; and the Administrator shall advise the Trustee and the Investment Manager of such of the foregoing facts as may be pertinent to their duties under the Plan. Subject to Section 9.2, all fiduciaries may rely upon such information as is supplied by the Company and shall have no duty or responsibility to verify such information.

FN52. Merely because TACA was not a party to the Plan does not preclude a finding that TACA was a fiduciary with respect to the Plan. If further facts discovered on remand reveal that TACA undertook actual obligations to notify in accordance with § 9.9 of the Plan, then TACA will be a fiduciary to that extent. See Section II.B.4. Where'd the $ Go?

The trial court on remand must determine the actual fiduciary duties assumed by ALPA and TACA with respect to providing FBA and the Plan beneficiaries and participants with information under the Plan. [FN53]

FN53. In a memorandum responding to ALPA's motion to dismiss, FBA, a defendant below, admitted that "[a] factual determination is required to determine whether those disclosures [pertaining to the Plan] were made." FBA also asserted: "Factual determinations abound in the delegation issue, pretermittng summary judgment on that basis." R. 1191.

4. Where'd the $ Go?

A genuine issue of material fact exists as to whether TACA and ALPA colluded with Huttinger in order to provide him with retirement benefits. As discussed supra, Frank Landry declared in an affidavit that each party to the alleged collusion was motivated by different factors. According to Landry, TACA threatened civil suit and criminal prosecution against ALPA for the intentional damage of TACA's engines by some of the ALPA pilots. [FN54] In return for ALPA's accepting the 1986 Pilots' Agreement, TACA agreed not to carry out this threat. TACA, meanwhile, would be able to move its pilot base to El Salvador and avoid its obligations under the Plan.

FN54. These allegations are discussed more fully in the RICO section, infra.

[7] Landry further claimed that Huttinger was offered benefits to which he would otherwise not have been entitled as an incentive for him to vote against the *422 pilots' interests. If such collusion did occur, then TACA, ALPA, and Huttinger are implicated as fiduciaries under 3(21)(A) because they would have exercised actual control over the disposition of the assets of the Plan. In other words, by allegedly colluding to provide Huttinger with retirement benefits, ALPA, TACA, and Huttinger became fiduciaries over the distribution of Plan funds, even if they are not listed as fiduciaries with respect to that function.

C. Breach of Fiduciary Duties

Plan fiduciaries are statutorily prohibited from dealing with Plan assets in their own interest. [FN55] Moreover, the Plan fiduciaries agreed to "discharge [their] duties solely in the interest of the Participants and their Beneficiaries" and to act "for the exclusive purpose of providing benefits to Participants." [FN56] To the extent that ALPA and TACA colluded with Huttinger to provide the latter with Plan benefits, so that the former could serve their own interests, fiduciary duties were breached under § 1106(b).

FN55. § 1106. Prohibited transactions

* * * * *

(b) Transactions between plan and fiduciary A fiduciary with respect to a plan shall not-(1) deal with the assets of the plan in his own interest or for his own account, (2) in his individual or in any other capacity act in any transaction involving the plan on behalf of a party (or represent a party) whose interests are adverse to the interests of the plan or the interests of its participants or beneficiaries, or (3) receive any consideration for his own personal account from any party dealing with such plan in connection with a transaction involving the assets of the plan. 29 U.S.C. § 1106(b).

FN56. Article 9.2 provides in relevant part: General

(Cite as: 901 F.2d 404, *422)

Fiduciary Duties--Each Plan fiduciary will discharge his duties solely in the interest of the Participants and their Beneficiaries and act: (a) for the exclusive purpose of providing benefits to Participants and their Beneficiaries and defraying reasonable expenses of administering the Plan; (b) with the care, skill, prudence and diligence under the circumstances then prevailing that a prudent person acting in a like capacity and familiar with such matters would use in the conduct of an enterprise of a like character and with like aims; ... No Plan fiduciary shall engage in any transaction prohibited under ERISA, the Internal Revenue Code, or any other law." This Plan language follows the terms of the ERISA provision on the standard of care for fiduciaries: § 1104. Fiduciary duties (a) Prudent man standard of care (1) Subject to sections 1103(c) and (d), 1342, and 1344 of this title, a fiduciary shall discharge his duties with respect to a plan solely in the interest of the participants and beneficiaries and--(A) for the exclusive purpose of: (i) providing benefits to participants and their beneficiaries; and (ii) defraying reasonable expenses of administering the plan; (B) with the care, skill, prudence, and diligence under the circumstances then prevailing that a prudent man acting in a like capacity and familiar with such matters would use in the conduct of an enterprise of a like character and with like aims; (C) by diversifying the investments of the plan so as to minimize the risk of large losses, unless under the circumstances it is clearly prudent not to do so; and (D) in accordance with the documents and instruments governing the plan insofar as such documents and instruments are consistent with the provisions of this subchapter or subchapter III of this chapter. 29 U.S.C. § 1104(a).

Moreover, we must stress that although Sommers limited the liability of fiduciaries by the "to the extent" language of § 3(21)(A) this limitation does not apply to § 1105(a). [FN57] To illustrate, even if ALPA is only found to be a fiduciary "to the extent" of appointing and removing the Plan administrator *423 and Trustee, [FN58] ALPA may still be liable, for example, for the breaches of FBA if ALPA "participat[ed] knowingly in, or knowingly undertook to conceal, an act or omission of [FBA], knowing such act or omission [was] a breach." § 1105(a)(1).

FN57. § 1105. Liability for breach of co-fiduciary (a) Circumstances giving rise to liability In addition to any liability which he may have under any other provision of this part, a fiduciary with respect to a plan shall be liable for a breach of fiduciary responsibility of another fiduciary with respect to the same plan in the following circumstances: (1) if he participates knowingly in, or knowingly undertakes to conceal, an act or omission of such other fiduciary, knowing such act or omission is a breach; (2) if, by his failure to comply with section 1104(a)(1) of this title in the administration of his specific responsibilities which give rise to his status as a fiduciary, he has enabled such other fiduciary to commit a breach; or (3) if he has knowledge of a breach by such other fiduciary, unless he makes reasonable efforts under the circumstances to remedy the breach. 29 U.S.C. § 1105(a).

FN58. This example is only an illustration to assist the trial court on remand; it reaches no conclusions.

D. Status of FBA

The pilots' case against FBA is still pending in the district court. FBA has moved for summary judgment against the pilots' claims, but the trial court has not decided the motion. [FN59] Although the decision appealed herein does not directly address FBA's fiduciary status or liability, FBA has filed an intervenor brief seeking to protect its interest in the litigation. Basically, FBA appears to be concerned that since the trial court found that TACA and ALPA were not fiduciaries, and dismissed the claim against Huttinger, the only party remaining upon which fiduciary duty can be imposed is FBA.

FN59. In expectation of an appellate opinion that would be forced to explicitly or implicitly discuss the fiduciary status and liability of FBA, the trial court may, wisely, be waiting for our decision before ruling on FBA's motion for summary judgment. An obvious possibility is to consolidate this remanded action with the FBA action.

Thus, in its intervenor brief FBA argues that a determination of whether TACA or ALPA acted in accordance with the fiduciary provisions of ERISA is neither necessary nor relevant. FBA asserts that allegations of improper plan termination do not raise any ERISA issues--but rather involve the RLA--since plan termination is a mandatory subject of collective bargaining under the RLA. FBA also claims that the Plan should be placed into trusteeship by voluntary action of the Pension Benefits Guarantee Corporation (PBGC).

FBA's arguments are unconvincing. The ERISA claim against ALPA and TACA on which the Court below ruled--the only ERISA ruling before us on appeal--only concerned action taken prior to Plan termination. Because the District Court's ruling properly confined itself to the claims before it, and did not address any ERISA claim related to Plan termination, there is no ERISA "finding" related to Plan termination which we could reverse. FBA's request actually asks us to become a fact-finder ab initio, a role which does not properly rest with this Court. Booker v. School Dist. No. 1, 585 F.2d 347, 353 (8th Cir.1978) ("function of the appellate court is not to make an initial decision [on factual issues] but simply to review the action of the trial court."), cert. denied, 443 U.S. 915, 99 S.Ct. 3106, 61 L.Ed.2d 878 (1979).

Moreover, arguments by FBA that it should initiate proceedings against PBGC for ancillary relief under the insurance guaranty provisions of ERISA are not relevant to the issue of whether TACA, ALPA, or Huttinger had any fiduciary duties under the Plan. An August 10, 1988 letter from the PBGC to the president of FBA stated that the notification given to the pilots was insufficient, and that the Plan was an ongoing plan until properly terminated. According to the PBGC letter, TACA is required to meet the minimum funding standards under § 302 of ERISA and § 412 of the Internal Revenue Code as long as the Plan is ongoing. Thus, while the pilots may ultimately choose to seek relief from the PBGC, FBA cannot force it to take this approach.

In sum, when summary judgment was granted on the ERISA claims, the record contained disputed issues of material fact regarding the fiduciary status of the defendants with respect to the wrongs alleged in the complaint. We remand to the trial court for a determination not inconsistent with this opinion.

IV. RICO CLAIMS

In their amended complaint, pilots sought treble damages from TACA, ALPA and Huttinger under two subsections of RICO. [FN60] We must determine whether *424 TACA, ALPA, and Huttinger showed there were no genuine issues of material fact concerning the existence of (i) a RICO person, (ii) predicate acts of racketeering activity, (iii) a pattern of racketeering activity, and (iv) an enterprise. [FN61] The absence of a fact issue regarding any one of these elements is sufficient to grant summary judgment provided the legal analysis also favors the movants.

FN60. 18 U.S.C. § 1962. Prohibited Activities:

(b) It shall be unlawful for any person through a pattern of racketeering activity or through collection of an unlawful debt to acquire or maintain, directly or indirectly, any interest in or control of any enterprise which is engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce. (c) It shall be unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt.

FN61. Delta Truck & Tractor, Inc. v. J.I. Case Co., 855 F.2d 241, 242 (5th Cir.1988), cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1079, 109 S.Ct. 1531, 103 L.Ed.2d 836 (1989) ("Reduced to its three essentials, a civil RICO claim must involve: (1) a person who engages in (2) a pattern of racketeering activity (3) connected to the acquisition, establishment, conduct, or control of an enterprise."); see also Gray v. Cauble, 849 F.2d 946, 949 n. 7 (5th Cir.1988) (test for § 1962(c)); Moss v. Morgan Stanley, Inc., 719 F.2d 5, 17 (2d Cir.1983), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1025, 104 S.Ct. 1280, 79 L.Ed.2d 684 (1984) (test for § 1962(a)-(c)).

The trial judge granted summary judgment against the pilots. In brief, he found that if any predicate acts occurred, they took place before the alleged RICO enterprise came into being. Additionally, none of the alleged predicate acts were found sufficient for the RICO claim. [FN62] The trial court did find that a "pattern" of racketeering activities was alleged, [FN63] but held that there was no enterprise because plaintiffs failed to allege the appropriate "continuity" under either of its enterprise theories.

FN62. For the specifics as to the trial court's disposition of each of the alleged predicate acts, see infra Part IV. B.

FN63. In making this ruling, the trial court was constrained by R.A.G.S. Couture, Inc. v. Hyatt, 774 F.2d 1350 (5th Cir.1985), although it made an effort to show why no pattern should be found in this circumstance.

Our review of a grant of summary judgment is de novo. [FN64] The standards for granting or denying summary judgment are well known.

FN64. Impossible Electronics Techniques, Inc. v. Wackenhut Protective Systems, Inc., 669 F.2d 1026, 1030 (5th Cir. Unit B 1982) ("In reviewing a decision granting or denying summary judgment, this court applies the same legal standards as those that control the district court in determining whether summary judgment is appropriate.") (Citations omitted).

The party seeking summary judgment bears the exacting burden of demonstrating that there is no actual dispute as to any material fact in the case.... In assessing whether the movant has met this burden, the courts should view the evidence introduced and all factual inferences from that evidence in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion.... All reasonable doubts about the facts should be resolved in favor of the non-moving litigant.... A court must not decide any factual issues it finds in the record, but if such are present, the court must deny the motion and proceed to trial.... If reasonable minds might differ on the inference arising from undisputed facts, then the court should deny summary judgment. [FN65]

FN65. Id. at 1031 (citations omitted).

Appropriate summary judgment evidence consists of "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any." F.R.Civ.P. 56(c). The affidavits must be made on "personal knowledge, shall set forth such facts as would be admissible in evidence, and shall show affirmatively that the affiant is competent to testify to the matters stated therein." F.R.Civ.P. 56(e). Finally, once the movant has made and supported its motion as provided in this rule, the "adverse party may not rest upon the mere allegations or denials of the adverse party's pleadings, but the adverse party's response, by affidavits or as otherwise provided in this rule, must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Id.

*425 A. The RICO Persons

The Fifth Circuit recently clarified the definition of the RICO "person"--the defendant--in Delta Truck & Tractor, Inc. v. J.I. Case Co. [FN66]

FN66. 855 F.2d 241, 242 (5th Cir.1988), cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1079, 109 S.Ct. 1531, 103 L.Ed.2d 836 (1989).

If we are to restrict RICO to the type of conduct Congress intended to proscribe, the RICO person must be either one that poses or has posed a continuous threat of engaging in acts of racketeering.... The continuous threat requirement may not be satisfied if no more is pled than that the person has engaged in a limited number of predicate racketeering acts.

We are faced here with three RICO defendants and two theories of the enterprise [FN67] which figure them in different ways.

FN67. Pilots' two enterprise theories are discussed in detail, infra, Part IV.D..

1. Association-in-fact Persons

Under pilots' "association-in-fact" enterprise theory, Huttinger, ALPA and TACA formed or acted as an enterprise, whose alleged purpose was to move the TACA pilot base, end ALPA's representation of the TACA pilots, ensure Huttinger's retirement benefits and ultimately deprive the pilots of their rights under the collective bargaining agreement. Under this enterprise theory, all three could be RICO defendants. According to pilots' allegations and affidavit evidence, those goals have been accomplished, so the enterprise no longer exists. [FN68] There are no RICO defendants under this theory.

FN68. This is discussed in detail in Part IV.D., infra.

2. ALPA-as-Enterprise Persons

[8] The pilots' other enterprise theory regards ALPA as a lawful enterprise which was the vehicle for racketeering activities perpetrated by TACA and Huttinger. Under this theory, ALPA cannot be a RICO person-or defendant-for the § 1962(c) violation because in such a situation, "the 'person' and the 'enterprise' must be distinct." [FN69] The rationale for this distinction comes from the language of the statute which deals with a "person employed by or associated with any enterprise." 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c). [FN70] This language shows that Congress intended for the RICO person and the enterprise to be separate entities.

FN69. Bishop v. Corbitt Marine Ways, Inc., 802 F.2d 122, 123 (5th Cir.1986); see also Atkinson v. Anadarko Bank and Trust Co., 808 F.2d 438, 441 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 483 U.S. 1032, 107 S.Ct. 3276, 97 L.Ed.2d 780 (1987).

FN70. The Fifth Circuit has adopted the rationale of the Seventh Circuit in this regard. See Haroco v. American National Bank & Trust Co. of Chicago, 747 F.2d 384, 400 (7th Cir.1984), aff'd 473 U.S. 606, 105 S.Ct. 3291, 87 L.Ed.2d 437 (1985).

[9] It would be incongruous here to find that while ALPA, as the enterprise, cannot be a RICO person, it can be held vicariously liable for the acts of Huttinger. If this were the rule, all legal enterprises could be found liable under RICO if their employees or agents were involved in perpetrating predicate acts through or against them. This is contrary to the rule Congress meant to impose as evidenced by the language of the statute. ALPA is thus not appropriately a defendant under this legal enterprise theory for purposes of the § 1962(c) violation, either as a RICO person or vicariously.

[10][11] ALPA can be both the enterprise and a RICO defendant for the § 1962(b) violation. In contrast to the language of subsection (c) which "requires a relationship between the 'person' and the 'enterprise,' subsection [...] (b) require[s] only the use of an 'enterprise' by a 'person.'" [FN71] Thus the RICO person and the enterprise need not be distinct for a person to be held liable under subsection (b). A finding of vicarious liability on the part of an enterprise which derived benefit from its representative's wrongful acts is also consistent with this view. [FN72]

FN72. Id.

426 [12][13] The continuing threat requirement must still be met. For purposes of the alleged subsection (c) violation, only TACA and Huttinger could be defendants. Pilots have not alleged that TACA constitutes or has constituted a continuing threat--it is not a RICO person. A fact issue exists as to whether Huttinger poses a continuing threat resulting from his receipt of retirement benefits. This turns on the fact issue which we find to exist, as to whether the receipt of these benefits constitutes mail fraud.

For purposes of the subsection (b) violation, pilots have alleged that ALPA poses a threat of continuing harm to other victims. As an example, they cite a suit against ALPA by Continental Airlines pilots making much the same allegations as the TACA pilots: ALPA sold them out to protect itself from prosecution for the acts of sabotage it directed. This allegation is unrefuted by any summary judgment evidence. Thus the allegation that ALPA poses a continuing threat of engaging in racketeering activities remains to be resolved. Likewise there is a fact issue as to whether Huttinger's receipt of retirement benefits is a continuation of racketeering activity. Again, TACA is not a RICO person for purposes of this violation. [FN73]

FN73. Although we have found that TACA is not appropriately a RICO person—or defendant—for any of the alleged RICO violations, pilots' allegations of TACA's past wrongdoing will frequently be discussed in the remainder of this section. We will explain the effect of TACA's status where appropriate.

B. Racketeering Activity [FN74]

FN74. Racketeering activity is defined in relevant part as: (A) state law felonies; (B) acts indictable under several sections of 18 U.S.C. relating to, e.g., bribery (§ 201), embezzlement from pension and welfare funds (§ 664), mail fraud (§ 1341), wire fraud (§ 1343); (C) acts indictable under sections of 29 U.S.C. including violations of restrictions on payments and loans to labor organizations (§ 186) and embezzlement from union funds (§ 501(c)); and (D) offenses involving fraud under Title 11, in the sale of securities, etc. 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1).

1. The Extortion Claim

[14] As one of the predicate acts of racketeering activity, the pilots claimed that TACA, ALPA and Huttinger committed extortion in violation of Louisiana state law [FN75] and 18 U.S.C. § 1951. [FN76] In support of these claims, the pilots alleged that Padgett, at the direction of Huttinger and ALPA, committed acts of sabotage against TACA aircraft and equipment to coerce concessions during negotiation of the collective bargaining agreement.

FN75. The particular provision of Louisiana state law that was violated is not specified in the RICO case statement or the trial court's opinion.

FN76. 18 U.S.C. § 1951 Interference with commerce by threats or violence. "(a) Whoever in any way or degree obstructs, delays, or affects commerce or the movement of any article or commodity in commerce, by robbery or extortion or attempts or conspires so to do, or commits or threatens physical violence to any person or property in furtherance of a plan or purpose to do anything in violation of this section shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than twenty years, or both."

We agree with the trial court that these acts may not properly be considered predicate acts. The pilots did not allege that these extortionate acts were committed in the establishment or conduct of the affairs of an enterprise. If anything, they could only have been hostile to the goals of an alleged enterprise of which TACA and ALPA were both members. [FN77] Finally, the acts of sabotage are not actionable because the pilots did not allege or show that they sustained any injury as a result. [FN78] In fact, *427 the sabotage, under the theory advanced by pilots, was intended to provide the pilots with an advantage in the form of bargaining concessions. It was not intended to deprive them of any rights.

FN77. This claim could not properly be raised under the ALPA-as-Enterprise theory in connection with the § 1962(c) claim since ALPA is not properly a defendant for that claim. See supra notes 68-70 and accompanying text.

FN78. R.A.G.S. Couture, Inc. v. Hyatt, 774 F.2d 1350, 1354 (5th Cir.1985) ("Any injury to business or property caused by a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c) is sufficient.") (Emphasis added). The Fifth Circuit derived this rule from Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 495, 105 S.Ct. 3275, 3284, 87 L.Ed.2d 346, 358 (1985), which held, If the defendant engages in a pattern of racketeering activity in a manner forbidden by these provisions, and the racketeering activities injure the plaintiff in his business or property, the plaintiff has a claim under § 1964(c).

2. The 29 U.S.C. § 186 Violation

The pilots alleged that ALPA made illegal payments to a labor official in violation of 29 U.S.C. § 186, which is section 302 of the LMRA. [FN79] In support of their claim, they provide the following facts. Huttinger suffered from a disability which prevented him from flying. The result of this should have been his removal from active status in late 1984, five years after he became disabled. Once removed from active status, he would not have been entitled to sick leave, to be on the priority list, or to represent ALPA in its negotiations with TACA. Yet Huttinger stayed on the seniority list, received sick leave benefits, represented ALPA in its negotiations with TACA, and received a $26,000 severance payment.

FN79. 29 U.S.C. § 186 provides: (a) It shall be unlawful for any employer or association of employers or any person who acts as a labor relations expert, adviser, or consultant to an employer or who acts in the interest of an employer to pay, lend, or deliver, or agree to pay, lend, or deliver, any money or other thing of value--(1) to any representative of any of his employees who are employed in an industry affecting commerce; or (2) to any labor organization, or any officer or employee thereof, which represents, seeks to represent, or would admit to membership, any of the employees of such employer who are employed in an industry affecting commerce; or (3) to any employee or group or committee of employees of such employer employed in an industry affecting commerce in excess of their normal compensation for the purpose of causing such employee or group or committee directly or indirectly to influence any other employees in the exercise of the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing; or (4) to any officer or employee of a labor organization engaged in an industry affecting commerce with intent to influence him in respect to any of his actions, decisions, or duties as a representative of employees or as such officer or employee of such labor organization. (b)(1) It shall be unlawful for any person to request, demand, receive, or accept, or agree to accept, any payment, loan, or delivery of any money or other thing of value prohibited by subsection (a) of this section.

[15][16] There is no factual issue to be resolved regarding these allegations for two reasons. First, ALPA has produced affidavits and documents that we find establish as a matter of law that under its constitution and by-laws, Huttinger was properly on the "active" status list and therefore entitled to all the privileges of ALPA membership including the right to vote and hold office. Since the pilots presented no evidence to rebut this, ALPA has shown the absence of a material fact issue in this respect. Second, the LMRA makes it illegal for an employer to pay or lend money to a union that represents its employees and for the union to receive or demand such payments. However, the LMRA excludes from coverage RLA employers and employees. [FN80] Airlines and airline pilots come under the RLA. [FN81]

FN80. 29 U.S.C. §§ 142(3), 152(2), (3); see also United States v. Davidoff, 359 F.Supp. 545, 547-48 (E.D.N.Y.1973).

FN81. 45 U.S.C. § 182.

In response to the seemingly conclusory statutory disposition of this issue, pilots raise a subtle argument. Their theory is that TACA, ALPA, and Huttinger contractually converted themselves from RLA to LMRA coverage through the agreement by which TACA was relocated to El Salvador and the pilots were terminated. The district court rejected this argument, finding that TACA was not relieved of RLA obligations until September 1, 1985 which was after any enterprise that may have existed was dissolved. We agree that TACA was an RLA employer when the alleged LMRA violations occurred. Although TACA is not a RICO defendant, we must reach this issue to determine the status of Huttinger and ALPA, who were likewise subject to the RLA. Thus no predicate racketeering act is stated.

3. The Mail and Wire Fraud Claims

The pilots have described four acts which they allege constituted mail fraud and *428 therefore predicate acts for RICO. (1) On July 3, 1985 Huttinger wrote the pilots to say negotiations between ALPA and TACA had broken down. He said that regardless of the outcome of the negotiations, TACA would have to contribute to the pension plan. TACA has not continued its contributions to the plan. (2) On July 24, 1985 Huttinger sent a letter and telegram to the pilots saying that TACA and ALPA had reached an agreement "subject to ratification." Pilots were not given the chance to ratify the agreement. (3) On August 3, 1985 TACA sent a letter to the pilots informing them that ALPA had agreed to the relocation of the pilot base to El Salvador. The pilots were given twelve days to decide to leave TACA and take severance pay or to move themselves and their families to El Salvador. This communication did not inform the pilots that their retirement fund would be terminated or that they needed to take certain actions to protect their eligibility to receive benefits. Pilots later learned that they had lost their right to receive benefits. (4) The pilots allege that illegal payments of severance pay and retirement benefits were made and are being made by mail to Huttinger in furtherance of the scheme to defraud the pilots.

The trial court disregarded the final allegation (No. (4)) on the grounds that it had not been pleaded with sufficient particularity to withstand F.R.Civ.P. 9(b). [FN82] It apparently found that the other allegations of mail fraud were insufficient, based upon its general finding that the alleged acts predated any possible enterprise.

FN82. This is discussed infra; see text accompanying notes 92-93.

[17] We disagree with the trial court's characterization of the timing. These alleged acts of mail and wire fraud occurred during the negotiation process. ALPA was continuously in existence throughout this time so any acts that occurred or were alleged took place during the existence of the "ALPA-as-enterprise" enterprise.

[18] The crime of mail fraud is committed when the mails are used as part of a scheme or artifice to defraud. [FN83] The elements of mail fraud as a predicate offense for civil RICO purposes are:

FN83. 18 U.S.C. § 1341. Frauds and Swindles. Whoever, having devised or intending to devise any scheme or artifice to defraud, or for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises, ... for the purpose of executing such scheme or artifice or attempting to do so, places in any post office or authorized depository for mail matter, any matter or thing whatever to be sent or delivered by the Postal Service, or takes or receives therefrom, any such matter or thing, or knowingly causes to be delivered by mail according to the direction thereon, or at the place at which it is directed to be delivered by the person to whom it is addressed, any such matter or thing, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

- (1) A scheme or artifice to defraud or to obtain money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representation or promises.
- (2) Interstate or intrastate use of the mails for the purpose of furthering or executing the scheme or artifice to defraud.
- (3) The use of the mails by the defendant connected with the scheme artifice [sic] to defraud.
- (4) Actual injury to the business or property of the plaintiff. [FN84]

FN84. 1 D. McCormack, Racketeer Influenced Corrupt Organizations 4-46-4-47 (Knowles Law Book Publishing, Inc. 1989).

The mail fraud statute proscribes two different offenses. The first is acting pursuant to a scheme or artifice to defraud. The second is acting pursuant to a scheme or artifice for the purpose of obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations or promises. [FN85] Plaintiffs have alleged both types of schemes in this case.

*429 [19] First, they allege that TACA and Huttinger operating through and with the enterprise ALPA, schemed to achieve the relocation of TACA's pilot base to El Salvador. [FN86] Each of the participants had individual motivations for wishing the achievement of this end, but they all required the success of this common goal. In order to achieve their end, TACA, ALPA and Huttinger participated in a scheme to defraud the pilots of their jobs and pension benefits. [FN87] Reading the facts in the light most favorable to the pilots, the following steps could have occurred as part of this plan to defraud. The pilots were sent letters telling them that the plan would not be touched and was not a subject of the negotiations between TACA and ALPA. They were told that the agreement ultimately reached was "subject to ratification." They were not told that the agreement which was reached, and which actually did not require ratification by the membership, terminated their pension benefits at the time they had to decide between quitting (for severance pay) and relocating to El Salvador.

FN86. The pilots also alleged that the association-in-fact enterprise of ALPA, TACA, and Huttinger, which we find did not exist, had this goal.

FN87. The pilots have sufficiently alleged an intent to defraud, but even in the absence of such a showing, the intent to defraud is imputed to civil RICO defendants who act with reckless indifference to the truth or falsity of their representations. United States v. Frick, 588 F.2d 531, 536 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 913, 99 S.Ct. 2013, 60 L.Ed.2d 385 (1979); see also United States v. Love, 535 F.2d 1152, 1158 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 847, 97 S.Ct. 130, 50 L.Ed.2d 119 (1976); United States v. Beecroft, 608 F.2d 753, 757 (9th Cir.1979). If the misrepresentations, omissions and false promises alleged here were not intentional, then they were certainly reckless. The RICO defendants correctly state that under the mail fraud statute, the determination of what constitutes fraud is left largely to outside sources of law. Parr v. United States, 363 U.S. 370, 389, 80 S.Ct. 1171, 1182, 4 L.Ed.2d 1277, 1289 (1960). They are incorrect, however, in their position that such fraud must be found in the pilots' DFR, ERISA, LMRA, or conversion claims. Clearly the state common law of fraud may provide a source of substantive law and the allegations are sufficient to support such a claim having been made.

These misrepresentations, omissions [FN88] and false promises may have initially lulled the pilots into inaction. Based on these communications, they thought that Huttinger and ALPA were protecting their interests and they had no reason to question the system. Pilots allege that this correspondence ultimately had the effect of defrauding them of their jobs and pension benefits. TACA was able to relocate; ALPA was not prosecuted and was able to drop its representation of the TACA pilots; Huttinger received severance and retirement benefits. Only the pilots lost out. The intentional misrepresentations and omissions could have created a valuable undue advantage for TACA, ALPA and Huttinger [FN89] and thus constituted a scheme or artifice to defraud. [FN90]

FN88. See United States v. Beecroft, 608 F.2d 753, 757 (9th Cir.1979) (both communication of half truths and concealment of material facts are actionable under the mail fraud statute).

FN89. Although we have referred to TACA's goals and the benefits it received, they are not necessary. The fact issues with regard to ALPA and Huttinger are sufficient to state the claim.

FN90. United States v. Rasheed, 663 F.2d 843, 849 (9th Cir.1981), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1157, 102 S.Ct. 1031, 71 L.Ed.2d 315 (1982).

Additionally, the defendants allegedly sought to obtain money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representation or promises. These are seen in their asserted motivations for their common goal of effecting the relocation and the benefits each received as a result. ALPA would save money by ridding itself of a small, yet costly, local union. It would also avoid the expense of defending against civil cases and criminal charges based on its alleged sabotage of TACA's planes. Huttinger would gain his severance pay and pension benefits. [FN91]

FN91. Because he retired at the appropriate time, Huttinger qualified for pension benefits. However, the pension plan was underfunded and could not afford to pay full benefits to all the pilots eligible for retirement under the plan. Thus, one could infer from the undisputed facts that once Huttinger began receiving payment under the plan, or realized he could qualify for benefits and preempt any other pilots from doing so, he had an incentive to provoke the relocation, thereby denying the other pilots the opportunity to prove their eligibility. Even before he began to receive retirement payments, Huttinger had an incentive to keep the pilots in ignorance of the effect a termination would have and of their rights under the plan. As chairman of the pension committee, he was in the perfect spot to have all the information needed to protect his interest and at the same time to know what information he should not disseminate in order to protect that interest against diminution by the claims of all the eligible pilots.

*430 Only ALPA has controverted the goals, outlined above, which pilots have asserted. In an unchallenged affidavit ALPA has stated that the cost of representing the TACA pilots was not a factor in its negotiating strategy or posture. We point out that ALPA has not said exactly what it was trying to accomplish on behalf of the pilots. ALPA also has not denied that it was threatened with criminal prosecution and civil damage suits. In light of the remaining undisputed facts and the inferences therefrom, we find that mail fraud has been sufficiently alleged to create genuine factual issues regarding predicate acts of racketeering activity.

We also disagree with the trial court's disposition of the allegations of mail fraud in connection with Huttinger's receipt of pension benefits. F.R.Civ.P. 9(b) requires that "[i]n all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity." However, Rule 9(b) is read in connection with F.R.Civ.P.

8 which requires only a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." [FN92] The pilots have certainly pleaded sufficient facts to put the defendants on notice of their claim with regard to Huttinger's receipt of pension benefits. As early as the Original Complaint, [FN93] the pilots alleged that Huttinger had breached his duty of fair representation, a fiduciary duty, by agreeing to the structuring of the termination agreement in such a way that Huttinger's pension would be funded, but no one else's. Additionally, in the amended complaint, the pilots alleged that Huttinger applied for and is receiving pension benefits and that this was in connection with the scheme to defraud the pilots.

FN92. F.R.Civ.P. 8(a)(2); see Ross v. A.H. Robins Co., 607 F.2d 545, 557 n. 20 (2d Cir.1979), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 946, 100 S.Ct. 2175, 64 L.Ed.2d 802 (1980) ("The requirement of particularity does not abrogate Rule 8, and it should be harmonized with the general directives ... of Rule 8 that the pleading should contain a 'short and plain' statement of the claim or defense and with each averment should be 'simple, concise and direct.' Rule 9(b) does not require nor make legitimate the pleading of detailed evidentiary matter.") (Citations omitted).

FN93. The claims alleged in the original complaint were dismissed before the RICO claim was addressed by the trial court. The factual allegations contained in the Original Complaint are relevant to the RICO claim, however, because the Amended Complaint incorporates them all by reference.

Finally, in the RICO Case Statement, the pilots spent a great deal of time detailing their factual allegations regarding Huttinger's receipt of pension funds. They alleged, in pertinent part, that Huttinger and ALPA bargained away TACA's obligation to continue funding the pension plan in return for TACA's agreement not to bring civil or criminal charges against ALPA for the acts of espionage described, supra. Huttinger was aware that this left the plan underfunded and that not all pilots would be able to receive their pension benefits. The pilots claimed that Huttinger intentionally failed to inform them of their right to apply for early retirement or of the fact that if they did not apply for benefits prior to the termination of funding, they would not be entitled to receive any benefits. Thus, the pilots argued that, in manifest abuse of his fiduciary position, Huttinger assured himself of his own benefits by keeping those he represented in the dark. We cannot conceive of how the defendants failed to be put on notice of the claim with the amount of detail that was provided. We find that the pilots have alleged with particularity the defendants' acts which they contend amount to fraud. [FN94]

FN94. See Unimobil 84, Inc. v. Spurney, 797 F.2d 214, 217 (5th Cir.1986).

431 4. Violation of 18 U.S.C. § 664 [FN95]

FN95. 18 U.S.C. § 664 Theft or embezzlement from employee benefit plan: Any person who embezzles, steals, or unlawfully and willfully abstracts or converts to his own use or to the use of another, any of the moneys, funds, securities, premiums, credits, property, or other assets of any employee welfare benefit plan or employee pension benefit plan, or of any fund connected therewith, shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

[20] Pilots allege that Huttinger's receipt of retirement benefits is a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 664. The trial court did not address this issue, finding that pilots had not pleaded the issue in its Original or Amended Complaints. We disagree, finding the allegation at Paragraph 39 of the Amended Complaint where pilots said: "On information and belief, ... TACA and Charles J. Huttinger converted money and funds of the TACA pilot's employee benefit plan for their own uses." Additionally, the trial court found that pilots had adduced no evidence on this claim since the only relevant affidavit was not based on personal knowledge. We deal with this finding below.

Pilots have not directly shown, by affidavit or otherwise, what acts constituted conversion, who committed these acts, when the acts were done, or by whom. However, it is clear, in connection with pilots' other factual allegations, that they are referring to Huttinger's receipt of retirement benefits.

The Ninth Circuit dealt extensively with § 664 liability in United States v. Andreen, 628 F.2d 1236 (9th Cir.1980). The terms in the statute are to be given their traditional meanings. Thus, "[t]he concept of unlawful conversion encompasses the use of property, placed in one's custody for a limited purpose, in an unauthorized manner or to an unauthorized extent." [FN96] Embezzlement "encompasses the fraudulent appropriation of the property of another by one in lawful possession thereof." [FN97] The statute encompasses more than traditional embezzlement and unlawful conversion, however, and imposes liability for intentional breaches of special fiduciary duties imposed by other statutes or the instruments governing the trust. [FN98]

FN97. Id., citing, United States v. Dupee, 569 F.2d 1061, 1064 (9th Cir.1978).

FN98. Id.

The RICO defendants argue that pilots have not stated a predicate act here because they have shown neither scienter, [FN99] nor that Huttinger's receipt of pension benefits was "substantially inconsistent with the fiduciary purposes and objectives of the ... pension plan, as set forth by statutes, bylaws, charters, or trust documents which govern uses of the funds in question." [FN100]

FN99. Id. Scienter is an essential element of a § 664 violation.

FN100. Brief of ALPA and Huttinger at 36-37, citing, United States v. Andreen, 628 F.2d 1236, 1241 (9th Cir.1980).

We state once again that pilots' burden in response to the motions for summary judgment was not to prove its case, but to show the existence of genuine and material fact issues regarding its essential elements. The RICO defendants have not produced any evidence negating the scienter element. They have not demonstrated that Huttinger did not act willfully, that is "with a fraudulent intent or a bad purpose or an evil motive." [FN101] Since the movants have not shown the absence of any disputed fact issues in this regard, they have failed to meet their burden. Thus the allegations in the pilots' Complaints stand and remain for resolution on remand.

The fact that pilots have made allegations which the RICO defendants refute in brief but not with facts, by way of affidavit evidence or otherwise, shows that factual issues remain to be resolved. The only way movants could prevail on this aspect of their summary judgment motion is by a legal finding that Huttinger did not breach any fiduciary duties under ERISA or 29 *432 U.S.C. § 501. [FN102] As we found above that Huttinger clearly did breach fiduciary duties, [FN103] the factual issues remain to be resolved.

FN102. Pilots allege that Huttinger breached the fiduciary duties imposed by ERISA and those created by 29 U.S.C. § 501. The ERISA claims are dealt with, supra, 29 U.S.C. § 501. Fiduciary responsibility of officers of labor organizations: (a) The officers, agents, shop stewards, and other representatives of a labor organization occupy positions of trust in relation to such organization and its members as a group. It is, therefore, the duty of each such person ... to hold its money and property solely for the benefit of the organization and its members....

FN103. See supra, ERISA portion of opinion.

C. Pattern

The United States Supreme Court has recently revised and "clarified" the definition of pattern in the RICO statute. In H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 U.S. 229, 109 S.Ct. 2893, 106 L.Ed.2d 195 (1989), the Supreme Court rejected the Eighth Circuit's "multiple scheme" requirement and also disagreed with "those courts that have suggested that a pattern is established merely by proving two predicate acts." [FN104] The Fifth Circuit has explicitly recognized that H.J. Inc. narrowed the definition of pattern from that previously used in this circuit. [FN105] Thus prior Fifth Circuit precedent, and those cases cited by the parties, are of little assistance to us.

FN104. H.J., Inc., 492 U.S. at ----, 109 S.Ct. at 2899, 106 L.Ed.2d at 206.

FN105. Smith v. Cooper/T. Smith Corp., 886 F.2d 755, 756 (5th Cir.1989). The prior Fifth Circuit pattern requirement was described in R.A.G.S. Couture, Inc. v. Hyatt, 774 F.2d 1350, 1355 (5th Cir.1985) (holding that two "related" acts of mail fraud constitute a pattern).

In H.J. Inc., the Supreme Court found that RICO's legislative history reveals Congress' intent that to prove a pattern of racketeering activity a plaintiff or prosecutor must show that the racketeering predicates are related, and that they amount to or pose a threat of continued criminal activity. [FN106]

FN106. H.J. Inc., 492 U.S. at ----, 109 S.Ct. at 2900, 106 L.Ed.2d at 208. The relationship element has been defined by borrowing from a related statute. "[C]riminal conduct forms a pattern if it embraces criminal acts that have the same or similar purposes, results, participants, victims, or methods of commission or otherwise are interrelated by distinguishing characteristics and are not isolated events." [FN107] The Supreme Court found the definition of continuity more difficult, and opted for a flexible approach that they believe derives from a common everyday understanding of RICO.

FN107. Id. The definition of relationship thus adopted is the pattern definition from Title X of the Organized Crime Control Act (OCCA), which is the Dangerous Special Offender Sentencing Act, 18 U.S.C. § 3575, et seq. RICO forms Title IX of the OCCA.

What a plaintiff or prosecutor must prove is continuity of racketeering activity, or its threat, simpliciter.... "Continuity" is both a closed- and open-ended concept, referring either to a closed period of repeated conduct, or to past conduct that by its nature projects into the future with a threat of repetition.... It is, in either case, centrally a temporal concept-and particularly so in the RICO context, where what must be continuous, RICO's predicate acts or offenses, and the relationship these predicates must bear to one another, are distinct requirements. [FN108]

FN108. Id., 492 U.S. at ---, 109 S.Ct. at 2901, 106 L.Ed.2d at 209. The Court went on to clarify how "continuity" may be proved. A party alleging a RICO violation may demonstrate continuity over a closed period by proving a series of related predicates extending over a substantial period of time. Predicate acts extending over a few weeks or months and threatening no future criminal conduct do not satisfy this requirement: Congress was concerned in RICO with long-term criminal conduct. Often a RICO action will be brought before continuity can be established in this way. In such cases, liability depends on whether the threat of continuity is demonstrated.

*433 [21] The relationship element is easily satisfied here by pilots' allegations. First, all of the predicate acts were aimed at achieving a single goal-relocation of the pilots' base to El Salvador. Only through the accomplishment of this goal could all of the RICO defendants' subsidiary goals be accomplished. Second, we find the participants were the same: ALPA and Huttinger. Third, the victims were the same: the pilots. Finally, the events are in no way isolated, but are related in the sense that they all occurred or commenced during or grew out of the process of negotiating TACA's relocation program. The RICO defendants have put on some evidence that might negate the first element. For example, they have showed that ALPA's actions were not motivated by a desire to rid itself of a small, costly union. They have not, however, rebutted the allegation that ALPA gave in to TACA to avoid prosecution for its sabotage activities. Likewise, they have tried to show that Huttinger's receipt of pension benefits was proper from the standpoint of FBA. They have not, however, removed factual disputes regarding the propriety of Huttinger's activities or his goals.

In sum, pilots have alleged relationship. The RICO defendants' affidavits and submissions do not "show that there is no genuine issues as to any material fact" in this regard. F.R.Civ.P. 56(c). Thus, on remand, the trial court must determine whether the relationship element of the pattern requirement is met.

We find that the continuity element of the pattern requirement is disposed of by our prior discussion of the RICO person requirement. There we found the existence of factual issues regarding the threat of continued racketeering activity by these defendants/appellees. At least some of the racketeering acts that threaten to continue are related under the test applied above and for the same reasons.

D. Enterprise

Pilots have developed two alternative theories of the enterprise. The above discussion has made reference to these separate claims where necessary, and they will be dealt with in detail here.

1. "Association-in-Fact" Enterprise

[22][23] An association-in-fact enterprise must also meet a continuity requirement. Such an enterprise "(1) must have an existence separate and apart from the pattern of racketeering, (2) must be an ongoing organization and (3) its members must function as a continuing unit shown by a hierarchical or consensual decision making structure." [FN109] We find that the association-in-fact enterprise, if it ever existed, was one that "briefly flourished and faded" and therefore fails to meet the requirement that it function as a continuing unit. We do not believe this to be inconsistent with our findings of fact issues regarding continuity in the RICO person and the pattern requirements. There the threat was sufficient if it came from an individual.

Here pilots were required to show that the enterprise as a whole functioned as a continuing unit. In a case like this, where the enterprise's goals have been accomplished, and where those goals were achieved in a matter of months, through a discrete pattern of activity, there is no continuity.

FN109. Delta Truck & Tractor, Inc. v. J.I. Case Co., 855 F.2d 241, 243 (5th Cir.1988), cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1079, 109 S.Ct. 1531, 103 L.Ed.2d 836 (1989), citing, Manax v. McNamara, 842 F.2d 808, 811 (5th Cir.1988); Foval v. First Nat'l Bank of Commerce, 841 F.2d 126, 129-30 (5th Cir.1988); Montesano v. Seafirst Commercial Corp., 818 F.2d 423, 426-27 (5th Cir.1987); Atkinson v. Anadarko Bank & Trust Co., 808 F.2d 438, 440-41 (5th Cir.1987), cert. denied, 483 U.S. 1032, 107 S.Ct. 3276, 97 L.Ed.2d 780 (1987); Shaffer v. Williams, 794 F.2d 1030, 1032 (5th Cir.1986).

In addition, pilots have not alleged or shown the existence of an enterprise separate and apart from the pattern of racketeering activity. [FN110] It appears that once the "Pilots' Agreement" was reached, and the follow-up acts-such as obtaining the pilots' severances and terminating ALPA *434 representation-had occurred, the enterprise ceased to exist. In reality, the association of ALPA and Huttinger had no alleged purpose other than to commit the predicate acts leading up to the relocation.

FN110. See Ocean Energy II v. Alexander & Alexander, Inc., 868 F.2d 740, 748-49 (5th Cir.1989), citing, Montesano v. Seafirst Commercial Corp., 818 F.2d 423, 427 (5th Cir.1987).

2. ALPA as Enterprise

[24] The pilots' second enterprise theory sees ALPA as the legal enterprise which was a vehicle for racketeering activities by TACA and Huttinger. [FN111] There is no question that ALPA itself satisfies § 1961(4)'s definition of enterprise: "enterprise" includes any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, and any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity." ALPA was continuously in existence throughout the period when the alleged predicate acts occurred. It remains in existence today. Thus this district court erred in not finding an enterprise under this theory.

FN111. ALPA's position as a defendant under this theory is discussed, supra at Part IV.A.1.

E. RICO Conclusion

We have found that TACA is not an appropriate RICO defendant because pilots did not allege that it constitutes a continuing threat. ALPA is a RICO defendant only for purposes of the § 1962(b) violation; it cannot be both the enterprise and a defendant for purposes of the § 1962(c) claim. Huttinger is properly a RICO defendant as to all of pilots' claims.

With regard to the alleged predicate acts of racketeering activity, we have affirmed the trial court in some regards and reversed in others. We agree with the trial court that the extortion claim was not properly alleged nor supported by the record. The 29 U.S.C. § 186 claim cannot stand because RLA employers and employees, as a matter of law, are not subject to this provision of the LMRA. We reverse the trial court's decision with respect to the mail and wire fraud claims. There are genuine issues of material fact. Finally, we find that the summary judgment movants have not met their burden of showing the absence of factual disputes regarding Huttinger's alleged embezzlement or conversion. Thus pilots' allegations remain to be resolved on remand.

The Supreme Court's recent decision in H.J., Inc. holds that in order to prove a pattern of racketeering activity, the RICO plaintiff must show both relationship and continuity. We affirm the trial court's holding that a pattern was properly alleged under this new test. The increased complexity of the new test requires that we remand this issue for resolution of material factual disputes.

Finally, we affirm in part and reverse in part the trial court's holding that there was no enterprise alleged. We agree that there was no "association-in-fact" enterprise alleged because pilots could not show the requisite continuity. However, we hold that the pilots properly alleged that ALPA is a RICO enterprise.

V. Discovery Issues

The pilots filed an amended complaint setting forth a RICO claim on April 6, 1987 and a RICO Case Statement, required by the district court's standing order, on August 25, 1987. At no time in this interval did the pilots seek discovery. ALPA, TACA and Huttinger moved for summary judgment on the RICO claims and those motions were set for hearing on October 21, 1987. After the motions were set for argument, the pilots requested and received a "courtesy" continuance [FN112] postponing the hearing until December 2, 1987. Once they had the continuance, pilots noticed the depositions of Huttinger, FBA and Captain Donald Scott for the last week in October.

FN112. We adopt this term to refer to an unopposed continuance motion signed by the trial court.

TACA, ALPA and Huttinger moved for protective orders pursuant to F.R.Civ.P. 26(c) and (d) to prevent the taking of these depositions prior to the resolution of the summary judgment motions. The hearing on the summary judgment motions was again continued so that the requests for protective orders could be heard. At ALPA's request the depositions were rescheduled *435 to mid-December. The trial court granted the protective order staying discovery pending its decision on the summary judgment motions. Eventually, the summary judgment motions were granted on March 17, 1988, with no discovery having been taken.

In its order, the trial court stayed discovery pursuant to F.R.Civ.P. 26(c) "for good cause." It found that many of the issues raised by the summary judgment motions were purely legal and that discovery would therefore not aid their resolution. As to the factual issues presented by the motion, the trial court ruled that "the plaintiffs have failed to identify with the requisite specificity of F.R.Civ.P. 56(f) the issues which must be amplified by discovery."

F.R.Civ.P. 56(f) provides that:
Should it appear from the affidavits of a party opposing the [summary judgment] motion that the party cannot for reasons stated present by affidavit facts essential to justify the party's opposition, the court may refuse the application for judgment or may order a continuance to permit affidavits to be obtained or depositions to be taken or discovery to be had or may make such other order as is just.

[25][26] However, what existed below was not a Rule 56(f) motion. In the typical 56(f) case, a nonmovant submits affidavits and requests additional time to conduct discovery to enable him to respond to a summary judgment motion. In the case at bar, a continuance was granted. In the time thus created before the hearing on the motions, the pilots sought discovery to enable them better to respond. In the ordinary course of events this discovery would have been freely allowed, even unquestioned. However, in this case, the summary judgment movants, ALPA, TACA and Huttinger, moved the court for a Rule 26(c) protective order to prevent the taking of the depositions. Thus the burden was on ALPA, TACA and Huttinger to show why a protective order was warranted. The burden was not on the pilots, other than in rebuttal, to show why the discovery was needed. [FN113] Although the trial court applied the wrong standard and placed the burden on the wrong party, we find that it reached the correct result.

FN113. Had pilots sought a continuance for purposes of obtaining summary judgment evidence, the burden would have been on them to demonstrate "how postponement of a ruling on the motion [would] enable [them], by discovery or other means, to rebut the movant's showing of the absence of a genuine issue of fact." S.E.C. v. Spence & Greene, 612 F.2d 896, 901 (5th Cir.1980), citing, Willmar Poultry Co. v. Morton-

Norwich Products, Inc., 520 F.2d 289, 297 (8th Cir.1975), cert. denied, 424 U.S. 915, 96 S.Ct. 1116, 47 L.Ed.2d 320 (1976). However, as we have stated, supra, no Rule 56(f) motion was filed. Pilots had already received the continuance order when they noticed the depositions. Pilots had a rebuttal burden, but no burden to make a prima facie showing of need. We acknowledge that pilots filed a Rule 56(f) affidavit in response to the motions for protective orders. This was an inappropriate response on their part. Pilots did not have the burden to make a Rule 56(f) showing to counter the Rule 26(c) motions.

"Upon motion by a party or by the person from whom discovery is sought, and for good cause shown," a district court is authorized to "make any order which justice requires to protect a party or person from annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden or expense." F.R.Civ.P. 26(c). In their motions for protective orders, the defendants gave several reasons why this discovery was not needed prior to the resolution of the summary judgment motions which, if granted, would preclude the need for the discovery altogether. They correctly stated that no discovery was needed to resolve the motions to dismiss under F.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6). Such motions are decided on the face of the complaint. Defendants also argued that the summary judgment motions could be decided as a matter of law on the basis of the undisputed facts already before the court. They alleged that the timing of the depositions--coming as they did after the grant of a courtesy continuance to respond to the motions--was evidence of bad faith. Finally, they argued that since the discovery was not needed to resolve the summary judgment motions--and thus perhaps *436 not needed at all--the depositions would be unduly expensive and burdensome.

We find that by these arguments ALPA, TACA and Huttinger met their burden of showing, prima facie, why a protective order was warranted--that is, why the discovery sought would be unduly burdensome and expensive. Thus the burden reverted to the pilots, on rebuttal, to show a need for the depositions such that their burden and expense would not be "undue." Pilots did respond. They argued that the case was still in a "preliminary stage" given the complexity of the legal issues involved and that they had "always contemplated discovery" but that the "early motions of the defendants simply required none." Also they pointed to the fact that no pretrial discovery deadline had been set.

The protective order suspended activity until a decision could be made on the summary judgment motion. The trial court sought to resolve an issue that might preclude the need for the discovery altogether thus saving time and expense. [FN114] In response to the movants' showing, the pilots failed to show the protective order was unwarranted. They asserted no facts they hoped to adduce, no genuine issues of material fact they hoped to create, no showing they hoped to rebut. In fact pilots said they had sufficient evidence to defeat the summary judgment motions and sought discovery only to obtain "better" evidence.

FN114. Trial courts possess broad discretion to supervise discovery. Pan-Islamic Trade Corp. v. Exxon Corp., 632 F.2d 539, 550 (5th Cir.1980), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 927, 102 S.Ct. 427, 70 L.Ed.2d 236 (1981).

We find that pilots' showing was insufficient. "[A] plaintiff's entitlement to discovery prior to a ruling on a motion for summary judgment is not unlimited and may be cut off when the record shows that the requested discovery is not likely to produce the facts needed by [the party] to withstand a Rule 56(e) motion for summary judgment." [FN115]

FN115. Williamson v. United States Dept. of Agriculture, 815 F.2d 368, 382 (5th Cir.1987), citing, Paul Kadair, Inc. v. Sony Corp. of America, 694 F.2d 1017, 1029-30 (5th Cir.1983).

Discovery is not justified when cost and inconvenience will be its sole result. [FN116] On the record before it, the trial court had to reach the decision that it did reach. The procedural posture of the case and the showings of the parties left it little choice. Whether the trial judge surmised that pilots would not be able to defeat the summary judgment motions or whether he, like us, saw sufficient disputed facts to preclude summary judgment is irrelevant. Under the circumstances, there was no abuse of discretion in the order staying discovery until the summary judgment motions were resolved. [FN117]

FN116. See Washington v. Norton Manufacturing, Inc., 588 F.2d 441, 447 (5th Cir.1979), cert. denied, 442 U.S. 942, 99 S.Ct. 2886, 61 L.Ed.2d 313 (1979) (discovery properly denied where it "could not have added any significant facts and would only have been expensive and burdensome ..."); Wyatt v. Kaplan, 686 F.2d 276, 284 n. 15 (5th Cir.1982) (clarifying Washington).

FN117. See Scroggins v. Air Cargo, Inc., 534 F.2d 1124, 1133 (5th Cir.1976) (no abuse of discretion in limiting discovery to issues raised by the summary judgment motions, although "the situation would be quite different if plaintiff had been denied discovery which related to the summary judgment motion").

Of course our finding that the stay of discovery was not an abuse of discretion has no effect as to those matters remanded. The parties are entitled to the full scope of discovery generally available during preparation for trial.

VI. Conclusion

Our opinion affirms in part, reverses in part, and remands in part.

We affirm the trial court's holding that pilots' labor law claims were barred by the statute of limitations.

As for ERISA, we reverse the trial court's holding that the Plan was not in effect until April 15, 1985. On remand, we instruct the court to accept as a matter of law that the Plan was in effect on February 1, 1982.

We reverse the court's holding that there were no genuine issues of material fact as to whether ALPA, TACA, or Huttinger had *437 any fiduciary duties under the Plan. On remand, we instruct the court to determine whether ALPA, TACA, or Huttinger had any fiduciary duties with respect to the ERISA-based wrongs alleged in the complaint. We also find as a matter of law that Huttinger had a fiduciary duty to disclose information about the Plan when asked.

On the RICO issues, we affirm the trial court's holdings that: (i) TACA is not a RICO defendant; [FN118] (ii) pilots have not properly alleged extortion or a violation of 29 U.S.C. § 186 as predicate acts; (iii) a pattern of racketeering activity was alleged; and (iv) no association-in-fact enterprise existed.

FN118. We also find that ALPA is not a RICO defendant for purposes of the § 1962(c) claim.

We reverse the trial court and hold that ALPA was a RICO enterprise. Finally, we find that genuine issues of material fact exist with regard to the following allegations made by the pilots: (i) ALPA and Huttinger are RICO persons and thus appropriate RICO defendants; (ii) predicate acts of mail and wire fraud and an 18 U.S.C. § 664 violation occurred; (iii) a pattern of racketeering activity exists; and (iv) ALPA constitutes an enterprise for RICO purposes. Because we find that a genuine issue of material fact exists as to each of the elements essential to stating a valid RICO claim, we remand these issues to the trial court for proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Lastly, we affirm the trial court's decision to grant a protective order staying discovery pending its summary judgment decision. Our affirmance of this order has no effect as to those matters remanded. We expect that discovery will proceed on a normal course at that time.

AFFIRMED IN PART, REVERSED IN PART AND REMANDED.

ON PETITION FOR REHEARING

PER CURIAM:

[27] Defendants-Appellees Air Line Pilots Association, International (ALPA) and Charles J. Huttinger (Huttinger) petition this court for rehearing in our opinion, Landry v. Air Line Pilots Association International AFL-CIO, 901 F.2d 404 (5th Cir.1990). In Landry, we reversed the District Court's grant of summary judgment to ALPA and Huttinger. [FN1] Although we remanded the case to the District Court for a determination of several issues, we also entered findings against ALPA and Huttinger as to the following: (i) "we instruct the court on remand to accept as a matter of law that the [retirement plan for the plaintiffs-pilots] was in effect on February 1, 1982" Landry, at 417; and (ii) "we find as a matter of law that Huttinger had a fiduciary duty to disclose information about the Plan when asked." [FN2] Landry, at 420.

FN1. TACA International Airlines, S.A. was also a defendant in that action. TACA's petition for rehearing, however, has been denied.

FN2. We also inadvertently stated: "As we found above that Huttinger clearly did breach fiduciary duties, the factual issues [as to whether 18 U.S.C. § 664 was violated] remain to be resolved." TACA at 432. We intended to assert that "Huttinger clearly did possess fiduciary duties." Obviously, however, in light of our discussion herein, we no longer make any conclusive findings with respect to Huttinger's fiduciary duties, except to hold that a genuine issue of material fact exists as to whether or not he had any fiduciary duties. Factual issues also exist as to whether any fiduciary duties which Huttinger may have had were breached.

In their petition for rehearing, ALPA and Huttinger urge that on a motion for summary judgment, the Court's role "is not ... to weigh the evidence and determine the truth of the matter but to determine whether there is a genuine issue for trial." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 249, 106 S.Ct. 2505, 2511, 91 L.Ed.2d 202 (1986); Mozeke v. International Paper Co., 856 F.2d 722 (5th Cir.1988). This court went too fast in making findings against ALPA and Huttinger. Because they have never been placed on notice of any need or obligation to respond to any of plaintiffs' assertions (i.e., that a failure to respond *438 could subject them to adverse factual findings or to adverse legal determinations predicated on such factual determinations), as, for example, they would have been had plaintiffs cross-moved for relief, the effect of entry of factual findings against ALPA and Huttinger under these circumstances deprived them of an opportunity to dispute the facts material to the plaintiffs' claims. Fountain v. Filson, 336 U.S. 681, 683, 69 S.Ct. 754, 755, 93 L.Ed. 971 (1949); E.C. Ernst, Inc. v. General Motors Corp., 537 F.2d 105, 109 (5th Cir.1976).

Accordingly, we modify our earlier opinion to withdraw the two findings, supra. Instead, based on the evidence discussed in Landry, we now hold that there was a genuine issue of material fact as to whether (i) the retirement plan was in effect on February 1, 1982, and (ii) Huttinger had a fiduciary duty to disclose information about the plan when asked. On remand, after the parties have been given a full opportunity to discover and present the evidence, these issues are for determination by the trier of fact in accordance with our earlier opinion, Landry v. ALPA, 901 F.2d 404, as modified herein.

ALPA and Huttinger have also questioned our use of 29 U.S.C. § 501(a) in the portion of our opinion which holds that a fact issue exists as to whether there was a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 664 (a RICO predicate act). Section 501(a) imposes special fiduciary duties upon officers of labor organizations. As we stated in our opinion, see Landry at 431, text accompanying note 98, a breach of special fiduciary duties may be a violation of § 664. In order to clarify this holding, we insert the following text at the end of the existing footnote 102, Landry at 432:

We find that a fact issue exists as to whether Huttinger breached any of the fiduciary duties imposed by 29 U.S.C. § 501(a). As we state, supra, "intentional breaches of special fiduciary duties imposed by other statutes ..." then 18 U.S.C. § 664 may give rise to liability under 18 U.S.C. § 664.

With respect to ALPA and Huttinger's criticism of that portion of our footnote 87,

Landry at 429, which states that state law fraud may serve as a source of substantive law for the mail fraud claim and the question of pre-emption which they raise, we neither approve nor disapprove their position. The resolution of this issue must await the development of all the facts before the trier of fact.

In all other respects, the petition of ALPA and Huttinger for rehearing is denied.

Supreme Court of Florida.

Donald RASMUSSEN, Petitioner,
v.
SOUTH FLORIDA BLOOD SERVICE, INC., Respondent.

No. 67081.

Jan. 5, 1987.

AIDS victim served blood donation organization with subpoena requesting names and addresses of blood donors. The Circuit Court denied motion to quash subpoena, but the Third District Court of Appeal, 467 So.2d 798, reversed, and certified question of great public importance. The Supreme Court, Barkett, J., held that AIDS victim was not entitled to subpoena to assist him in proving that source of his disease was blood transfusions he received in medical treatment following automobile accident; privacy interests of blood donors and society's interest in maintaining strong volunteer blood donation system outweighed victim's interest, which could be protected under present discovery rules, pursuant to which method could be formulated to verify organization's report that none of the donors was known AIDS victim, while preserving confidentiality of donors' identities.

Third district decision approved.

Boyd, J., concurred in result only.

BARCKETT, Justice.

We have for review South Florida Blood Service, Inc. v. Rasmussen, 467 So.2d 798 (Fla. 3d DCA 1985). In that decision, the district court certified the following as a question of great public importance:

Do the privacy interests of volunteer blood donors and a blood service's and society's interest in maintaining a strong volunteer blood donation system outweigh a plaintiff's interest in discovering the names and addresses of the blood donors in the hope that further discovery will provide some evidence that he contracted AIDS from transfusions necessitated by injuries which are the subject of his suit?

Id. at 805 n. 13. We have jurisdiction. Art. V, § 3(b)(4), Fla.Const. We answer the question in the affirmative.

On May 24, 1982, petitioner, Donald Rasmussen, was sitting on a park bench when he was struck by an automobile. He sued the driver and alleged owner of the automobile for personal injuries he sustained in the accident. While hospitalized as a result of his injuries, Rasmussen received fifty-one units of blood via transfusion. In July of 1983, he was diagnosed as having "Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome" (AIDS) and died of that disease one year later. [FN1] In an attempt to prove that the source of his AIDS was the necessary medical treatment he received because of injuries sustained in the accident,

Rasmussen served respondent, South Florida Blood Service (Blood Service), with a subpoena duces tecum requesting "any and all records, documents and other material indicating the names and addresses of the [51] blood donors." (South Florida Blood Service is not a party to the underlying personal injury litigation, and there has been no allegation of negligence on the part of the Blood Service.)

FN1. His estate is proceeding with this action.

The Blood Service moved the trial court to either quash the subpoena or issue a protective order barring disclosure. That court denied the motion and ordered the Blood Service to disclose the subpoenaed information. On certiorari review, the Third District Court of Appeal, applying the balancing test that courts have traditionally performed under the Florida discovery rules, concluded that the requested material should not be discovered. Although we agree with respondent's contention that Rasmussen's blood donors' rights of privacy are protected by state and federal *535 constitutions, we need not engage in the stricter scrutiny mandated by constitutional analysis. We find that the interests involved here are adequately protected under our discovery rules and approve the decision of the district court. This opinion in no way changes or dilutes the compelling state interest standard appropriate to a review of state action that infringes privacy rights under article I, section 23 of the Florida Constitution as established in Winfield v. Division of Pari-Mutuel Wagering, Department of Regulation, 477 So.2d 544, 547 (Fla.1985).

The potential for invasion of privacy is inherent in the litigation process. Under the Florida discovery rules, any nonprivileged matter that is relevant to the subject matter of the action is discoverable. Fla.R.Civ.P. 1.280(b)(1). The discovery rules also confer broad discretion on the trial court to limit or prohibit discovery in order to "protect a party or person from annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden or expense." Fla.R.Civ.P. 1.280(c). Under this authority, a court may act to protect the privacy of the affected person. Springer v. Greer, 341 So.2d 212, 214 (Fla. 4th DCA 1976), appeal dismissed, 351 So.2d 406 (Fla.1977).

In deciding whether a protective order is appropriate in a particular case, the court must balance the competing interests that would be served by granting discovery or by denying it. North Miami General Hospital v. Royal Palm Beach Colony, Inc., 397 So.2d 1033, 1035 (Fla. 3d DCA 1981); Dade County Medical Association v. Hlis, 372 So.2d 117, 121 (Fla. 3d DCA 1979). Thus, the discovery rules provide a framework for judicial analysis of challenges to discovery on the basis that the discovery will result in undue invasion of privacy. This framework allows for broad discovery in order to advance the state's important interest in the fair and efficient resolution of disputes while at the same time providing protective measures to minimize the impact of discovery on competing privacy interests.

Accordingly, we must assess all of the interests that would be served by the granting or denying of discovery--the importance of each and the extent to which the action serves each interest. In undertaking this analysis, we begin by examining the nature and importance of the donors' rights.

The Supreme Court first recognized a right of privacy based on the United States Constitution in Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 85 S.Ct. 1678, 14 L.Ed.2d 510 (1965). This right of privacy has been described as "the most comprehensive of rights and the right most valued by civilized man." Stanley v. Georgia, 394 U.S. 557, 564, 89 S.Ct. 1243, 1248, 22 L.Ed.2d 542 (1969) (citing Olmstead v. United States, 277 U.S. 438, 478, 48 S.Ct. 564, 572-73, 72 L.Ed. 944 (1928) (Brandeis, J., dissenting)). In recent cases, the Court has discussed the privacy right as one of those fundamental rights that are " 'implicit in the concept of ordered liberty' such that 'neither liberty nor justice would exist if [they] were sacrificed.' " Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 106 S.Ct. 2841, 2844, 92 L.Ed.2d 140 (1986) (quoting Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319, 325-26, 58 S.Ct. 149, (1937)). See Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 152, 93 S.Ct. 705, 726, 35 L.Ed.2d 147 (1973). In Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S.

589, 599-600, 97 S.Ct. 869, 876-77, 51 L.Ed.2d 64 (1977), the Supreme Court specifically recognized that the right to privacy encompasses at least two different kinds of interests, "the individual interest in avoiding disclosure of personal matters, and ... the interest in independence in making certain kinds of important decisions." [FN2] In Nixon v. Administrator of General Services, 433 U.S. 425, 457-458, 97 S.Ct. 2777, 2797-98, 53 L.Ed.2d 867 (1977), the Supreme Court reaffirmed the confidentiality strand of privacy. *536 Lower federal courts have recognized that the essential core of this zone of privacy is the right "to prevent disclosure of ... identity in a damaging context." E.g., Lora v. Board of Education of City of New York, 74 F.R.D. 565, 580 (1977). These cases clearly establish that the federal right to privacy extends protection in some circumstances against disclosure of personal matters.

FN2. One commentator has incorporated these related interests into a unitary concept by defining privacy as autonomy or control over the intimate aspects of identity. Gerety, Redefining Privacy, 12 Harv.C.R.--C.L.L.Rev. 233, 236 (1977).

Moreover, in Florida, a citizen's right to privacy is independently protected by our state constitution. In 1980, the voters of Florida amended our state constitution to include an express right of privacy. Art. V, § 23, Fla.Const. [FN3] In approving the amendment, Florida became the fourth state to adopt a strong, freestanding right of privacy as a separate section of its state constitution, [FN4] thus providing an explicit textual foundation for those privacy interests inherent in the concept of liberty which may not otherwise be protected by specific constitutional provisions. [FN5]

FN3. Article I, section 23, Florida Constitution, provides:
Right of Privacy.--Every natural person has the right to be let alone and free from governmental intrusion into his private life except as otherwise provided herein. This section shall not be construed to limit the public's right of access to public records and meetings as provided by law.

FN4. The other three are Alaska, California, and Montana. Six other states--Arizona, Hawaii, Illinois, Louisiana, South Carolina, and Washington--protect privacy to a lesser degree. See Note, Toward a Right of Privacy as a Matter of State Constitutional Law, 5 Fla.St.U.L.Rev. 631, 636-37 (1977).

FN5. For example, intrusions into privacy during criminal investigations are generally protected by the prohibition against unreasonable search and seizure. See art. I, § 12, Fla.Const.

Although the general concept of privacy encompasses an enormously broad and diverse field of personal action and belief, [FN6] there can be no doubt that the Florida amendment was intended to protect the right to determine whether or not sensitive information about oneself will be disclosed to others. The proceedings of the Constitution Revision Commission reveal that the right to informational privacy was a major concern of the amendment's drafters. At the opening session of Florida's 1977-78 Constitution Revision Commission, then Chief Justice Ben F. Overton remarked:

FN6. See, e.g., Stanley v. Georgia, 394 U.S. 557, 89 S.Ct. 1243, 22 L.Ed.2d 542 (1969) (privacy of one's personal library); Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 85 S.Ct. 1678, 14 L.Ed.2d 510 (1965) (privacy of marital relationship).

[W]ho, ten years ago, really understood that personal and financial data on a substantial part of our population could be collected by government or business and held for easy distribution by computer operated information systems? There is a public concern about how personal information concerning an individual citizen is used, whether it be collected by government or by business. The subject of individual privacy and privacy law is in a developing stage.... It is a new problem that should probably be addressed. (Emphasis added.)

Address by Chief Justice Ben F. Overton to the Constitution Revision Commission (July 6, 1977). Thus, a principal aim of the constitutional provision is to afford individuals some protection against the increasing collection, retention, and use of information relating to all facets of an individual's life.

It is now known that AIDS is a major health problem with calamitous potential. At present, there is no known cure and the mortality rate is high. [FN7] As noted by the court below, medical researchers have identified a number of groups which have a high incidence of the disease and are labeled "high risk" groups. Rasmussen, 467 So.2d at 800. Seventy-two percent of all AIDS victims are homosexual or bisexual males with multiple sex partners and seventeen percent are intravenous drug users. Id. Other high risk groups are hemophiliacs (1 percent), heterosexual partners of *537 AIDS victims (1 percent), and blood transfusion recipients (1 percent). Id. at n. 4.

FN7. The mortality rate may be as high as 40 percent. Blodgett, Despite the public's hands-off attitude towards AIDS, those who discriminate against the disease's victims are finding immunity from the law, 12 Student Law 8 (Jan. 1984).

As the district court recognized, petitioner needs more than just the names and addresses of the donors. His interest is in establishing that one or more of the donors has AIDS or is in a high risk group. Petitioner argues that his inquiry may never go beyond comparing the donors' names against a list of known AIDS victims, [FN8] or against other public records (e.g., conviction records in order to determine whether any of the donors is a known drug user). He contends that because a limited inquiry may reveal the information he seeks, with no invasion of privacy, the donors' privacy rights are not yet at issue. We find this argument disingenuous. As we have already noted, the discovery rules allow a trial judge upon good cause shown to set conditions under which discovery will be given. Fla.R.Civ.P. 1.280(c). Some method could be formulated to verify the Blood Service's report that none of the donors is a known AIDS victim while preserving the confidentiality of the donors' identities. However, the subpoena in question gives petitioner access to the names and addresses of the blood donors with no restrictions on their use. There is nothing to prohibit petitioner from conducting an investigation without the knowledge of the persons in question. We cannot ignore, therefore, the consequences of disclosure to nonparties, including the possibility that a donor's co-workers, friends, employers, and others may be queried as to the donor's sexual preferences, drug use, or general life-style.

FN8. South Florida Blood Service has stated that none of Rasmussen's fifty-one donors appears in lists of identified AIDS victims. We agree with petitioner, however, that he should not have to rely on the Blood Service's statement.

The threat posed by the disclosure of the donors' identities goes far beyond the immediate discomfort occasioned by third party probing into sensitive areas of the donors' lives. Disclosure of donor identities in any context involving AIDS could be extremely disruptive and even devastating to the individual donor. If the requested information is released, and petitioner queries the donors' friends and fellow employees, it will be functionally impossible to prevent occasional references to AIDS. As the district court recognized:

AIDS is the modern day equivalent of leprosy. AIDS, or a suspicion of AIDS, can lead to discrimination in employment, education, housing and even medical treatment.

Rasmussen, 467 So.2d at 802. We wish to emphasize that although the importance of protecting the privacy of donor information does not depend on the special stigma associated with AIDS, public response [FN9] to the disease does make this a more critical matter. By the very nature of this case, disclosure of donor identities is "disclosure in a damaging context." See Lora, 74 F.R.D. at 580. We conclude, therefore, that the disclosure sought here implicates constitutionally protected privacy interests.

FN9. Social hostility to the disease has been extended to individuals associated with the disease, however tangentially, even though they do not in fact have AIDS. See, e.g., N.Y. City Commission on Human Rights, Gay and Lesbian Discrimination Documentation Project (1984).

Our analysis of the interests to be served by denying discovery does not end with the effects of disclosure on the private lives of the fifty-one donors implicated in this case. Society has a vital interest in maintaining a strong volunteer blood supply, a task that has become more difficult with the emergence of AIDS. The donor population has been reduced by the necessary exclusion of potential blood donors through AIDS screening and testing procedures [FN10] as well *538 as by the unnecessary reduction in the donor population as a result of the widespread fear that donation itself can transmit the disease. [FN11] In light of this, it is clearly "in the public interest to discourage any serious disincentive to volunteer blood donation." Rasmussen, 467 So.2d at 804. Because there is little doubt that the prospect of inquiry into one's private life and potential association with AIDS will deter blood donation, we conclude that society's interest in a strong and healthy blood supply will be furthered by the denial of discovery in this case.

FN10. On March 2, 1985, a serologic test which detects the presence of AIDS antibodies (the "HTLV-III antibody test") was licensed by the FDC, and is now being implemented in blood centers across the nation. Testing data indicates that, for a blood center collecting 100,000 units of blood annually, use of the HTLV-III test could result in discarding 610 units of blood annually and deferring 220 donors. Council of Community of Blood Centers Newsletter (March 4, 1985) at 3.

FN11. This fear prompted the Surgeon General to distribute the following to newspapers across the nation: "There is no way that a donor can contract AIDS or any other disease by giving a pint of blood. Despite the known safety of donating blood, some people are afraid to give. In fact, blood donations are down from a year ago, and there is evidence that some previous donors are staying away from blood drives because they are afraid they will get AIDS." Public Health Service, Department of Health and Human Services, Donate Blood Regularly (December 1984).

In balancing the competing interests involved, we do not ignore Rasmussen's interest in obtaining the requested information in order to prove aggregation of his injuries and obtain full recovery. We recognize that petitioner's interest parallels the state's interest in ensuring full compensation for victims of negligence. However, we find that the discovery order requested here would do little to advance that interest. The probative value of the discovery sought by Rasmussen is dubious at best. The potential of significant harm to most, if not all, of the fifty-one unsuspecting [FN12] donors in permitting such a fishing expedition is great and far outweighs the plaintiff's need under these circumstances.

FN12. Without fully addressing the issue as it is unnecessary to our decision, we note that because disclosure of the information requested threatens damage to the donors' reputation and other liberty interests, the donors' due process rights are also implicated. See Wisconsin v. Constantineau, 400 U.S. 433, 437, 91 S.Ct. 507, 510, 27 L.Ed.2d 515 (1971) ("Where a person's good name, reputation, honor, or integrity is at stake because of what the government is doing to him, notice and an opportunity to be heard are essential."); Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee v. McGrath, 341 U.S. 123, 168, 71 S.Ct. 624, 646-47, 95 L.Ed. 817 (1951) (Frankfurter, J., concurring) ("the right to be heard before being condemned to suffer grievous loss of any kind ... is a principle basic to our society"); *Utz v. Accordingly, we approve the decision of the Third District.

Joan LIGHT, Shirley Eisenberg and Carol

March 14, 2002.

Plaintiffs sued cemetery operators, alleging operators mismanaged cemeteries and otherwise engaged in wrongful conduct by selling burial plots without sufficient space, burying remains in the wrong plots, and desecrating remains in an effort to wrongfully conceal their mismanagement. The Circuit Court, Broward County, J. Leonard Fleet, J., ordered depositions closed to the public but permitted media to obtain transcripts and videotapes of depositions. Cemetery operators petitioned for writ of certiorari. The District Court of Appeal, Warner, J., held that operators were not entitled to stronger protective order limiting public access to discovery.

Petition denied.

WARNER, J.

Petitioners seek review of a protective order limiting public access to discovery conducted in the underlying action. Petitioners argue that the order did not go far enough in limiting the public's access to discovery. Because the trial court is granted broad discretion in determining what type of order is necessary, petitioners have failed to show a departure from the essential requirements of law. We deny the petition.

Petitioners ("SCI") own and operate several South Florida cemeteries know as "Menorah Gardens." The plaintiffs filed suit against SCI, on behalf of themselves and similarly situated individuals, alleging SCI mismanaged the cemeteries and otherwise engaged in wrongful conduct by selling burial plots without sufficient space, burying remains in the wrong plots, and desecrating remains in an effort to wrongfully conceal their mismanagement.

Before discovery began, SCI filed a motion for a protective order to, (1) exclude persons other than the parties and their attorneys from attending depositions in the case; (2) prohibit any of the parties, their attorneys, or court reporters from using or disseminating any information obtained in discovery without prior court approval; and (3) prohibit the parties or their attorneys from filing with the court any evidentiary matters or information obtained in discovery without first obtaining court approval. SCI's grounds for requesting such relief were, (1) protection of the privacy interests of plot owners in Menorah Gardens from being "unnecessarily upset" by the release of information, and (2) protection of SCI's right to a fair trial because of pretrial publicity.

The court held a hearing at which both the plaintiffs and news media organizations argued against a protective order. After hearing from all sides, the trial court *798 ordered the depositions closed to all but the parties, their attorneys, and a representative of the attorney general. However, it permitted the media to obtain the transcripts and videotapes of the depositions directly from the court reporter once they were finalized. The court also admonished all participants "to conduct themselves in a manner consistent with Florida Bar Rule 4-3.6 regarding trial publicity." Finally, the judge noted that prohibiting the dissemination of information may be more harmful than disseminating the condition of the cemetery to loved ones whose relatives are buried in Menorah Gardens and who are unaware of what has happened to their plots or their deceased loved ones' remains.

[1][2] In its petition to this court, SCI maintains that there is no constitutional right to disseminate unfiled discovery information and that the protective order requested, prohibiting all access to discovery information without court approval, is essential to prevent harm to families whose private burial information will be the subject of the discovery. It is settled law that there is no First Amendment right of access to pretrial discovery materials. See Fla. Freedom Newspapers, Inc. v. McCrary, 520 So.2d 32, 35 (Fla.1988); Miami Herald Publ'g. Co. v. Gridley, 510 So.2d 884, 885 (Fla.1987) (extending the rule to pretrial discovery in civil proceedings); Palm Beach Newspapers, Inc. v. Burk, 504 So.2d 378, 382 (Fla.1987). However, because there is no right to this discovery, it does not necessarily follow that there is a constitutional right to prevent access to discovery. Indeed, in Seattle Times Co. v. Rhinehart, 467 U.S. 20, 104 S.Ct. 2199, 81 L.Ed.2d 17 (1984), upon which our supreme court relied in Burk and Gridley, the Supreme Court explained that trial courts have broad discretion to decide what type of protective order may be necessary to prevent damaging information from being released. It stated:

[Washington Rule of Civil Procedure] 26(c) confers broad discretion on the trial court to decide when a protective order is appropriate and what degree of protection is required. The legislature of the State of Washington, following the example of the Congress in its approval of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, has determined that such discretion is necessary, and we find no reason to disagree. The trial court is in the best position to weigh fairly the competing needs and interests of parties affected by discovery. The unique character of the discovery process requires that the trial court have substantial latitude to fashion protective orders.

Id. at 36, 104 S.Ct. 2199 (citations omitted) (emphasis added). Similarly, Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.280(c) provides for the issuance of protective orders upon good cause shown. Thus, the scope and limitation of discovery is within the broad discretion of the trial court. See Gross v. Sec. Trust Co., 453 So.2d 944, 945 (Fla. 4th DCA 1984).

[3] No abuse of that discretion resulting in a departure from the essential requirements of law has been shown. The trial court considered the issues and the affidavits. Those affidavits attested to the significant publicity already surrounding the discovery of the desecrated graves and the victims' emotional upset regarding the cemetery's conditions. The trial court concluded that this publicity would not stop and that disseminating correct information would be more helpful than prohibiting the flow of all information to the plot owners and loved ones of persons buried in the cemetery.

Moreover, the trial court did offer some protection. The depositions could not be attended by the press. If highly confidential, private matters were revealed in the depositions, a motion for a protective order *799 could be filed to prevent the release of any particular deposition.

Finally, we question whether SCI may assert the privacy interests of the plot owners when the plaintiffs seek to represent the plot owners as a class and whose attorneys apparently already represent a sizeable portion of that class. See generally Alterra Health Care Corp. v. Shelley ex rel. Mitchell, 779 So.2d 635, 636 (Fla. 1st DCA 2001) (holding an employer does not have standing to raise the privacy rights of its employees). The plaintiffs and their attorneys clearly opposed the protective order sought by SCI.

Finding no departure from the essential requirements of law, the petition is denied.

FLORIDA, INC., etc., et al., Appellees.

No. 90-391.

June 21, 1990.

Order on Motion for Certification, Opinion
Revised July 19, 1990.

Patient sued supervising doctor for medical malpractice. Patient moved to exclude nonparty treating doctor from attending supervising doctor's deposition. Thereafter the patient filed petition for writ of certiorari requesting that Court of Appeal quash lower court order allowing attendance. The District Court of Appeal, Thompson, Ford L. (Ret.), Associate Judge, held that: (1) there was no unwritten rule of sequestration prohibiting prospective witnesses from attending depositions, and (2) court did not abuse discretion in denying her request for protective order based upon alleged annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or expense arising out of attendance of treating doctor.

Writ of certiorari denied.

Charles Cook Howell, III and Michael S. O'Neal, of Commander, Legler, Werber, Dawes, Sadler & Howell, P.A., Jacksonville, for appellee Bd. of Regents of the State of Fla.

THOMPSON, FORD L. (Ret.), Associate Judge.

Smith, the plaintiff below, filed a petition for writ of certiorari requesting that this court quash the lower court's order that a nonparty witness be allowed to attend the deposition of one of the defendants. We deny certiorari.

In August of 1987, Smith was admitted to Baptist Medical Center to undergo medical treatment. She later filed a medical negligence action against Dr. David T. Murray for failing to diagnose a circulation problem which resulted in an allegedly needless amputation of her leg. Dr. Kenneth Parks, a resident physician-in-training, also treated her. The claims against the hospital and the Board of Regents arise from the alleged negligence of Dr. Parks. However, Dr. Parks was not named a party defendant because Section 768.28, Florida Statutes (1987), provides that no action shall be brought against an officer or an employee of an agency of the state personally unless such act or omission was committed in bad faith or with malicious purpose or in a manner exhibiting wanton and willful disregard of human rights, safety, or property.

The plaintiff scheduled Dr. Murray for deposition on February 6, 1990, and Dr. Parks was present at the deposition. One hour into Dr. Murray's deposition, Smith's counsel asked if Dr. Parks was the person sitting next to counsel for the Board of Regents. The Board's attorney responded in the affirmative and Smith's counsel then invoked the rule of sequestration of witnesses and asked that Dr. Parks leave the room. The Board's attorney declined to exclude Dr. Parks.

The plaintiff's attorney then sought a ruling from the assigned trial court judge but he was not available. Counsel then made an oral motion to Judge Mattox Hair for a protective order excluding Dr. Parks from the deposition of Dr. Murray. After hearing arguments, Judge Hair denied the oral motion for the reasons that Dr. Murray's deposition had been in progress for approximately one hour before plaintiff's counsel attempted to invoke the exclusionary rule, and further that the defendant Board of Regents of the State of Florida is a defendant in the law suit solely because of the alleged negligence of Dr. Parks.

*1117 Smith relies primarily upon the case of Dardashti v. Singer, 407 So.2d 1098 (Fla. 4th DCA 1982), in support of her contention that the trial court abused its discretion in refusing to compel sequestration of a nonparty witness during the taking of a party's deposition, requiring the issuance of a writ of certiorari. While Dardashti involved the exclusion and sequestration of witnesses at deposition, the court utilized reasoning which is applicable to the rule of exclusion and sequestration of witnesses at trial. This "rule" is established by case law and has never been adopted by the supreme court as a written rule. Moreover, this unwritten rule is applicable at the trial of cases, not depositions. The presence of witnesses at a deposition is controlled by Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.280(c), a written rule adopted by the Supreme Court of Florida, which provides that upon a motion by a party and for good cause shown, the court in which an action is pending may enter a protective order that discovery may be conducted with no one present except persons designated by the court. The court in Dardashti makes it very clear that the latter rule was not involved in that case as no attempt had been made by the petitioner to seek its assistance either before in the trial court or the appellate court. In Dardashti the court did not cite any case to support its conclusion that the unwritten rule of exclusion or sequestration of witnesses at trial is applicable to depositions, and we have been unable to find any such case except Dardashti.

Because Florida has no written rule of sequestration; the Board of Regents urges this court to look to the federal rule and federal decisions for guidance. Federal Rule of Evidence 615 makes the exclusion of witnesses mandatory when requested. [FN1] However, it does except from the rule: (1) a party who is a natural person; (2) an officer or employee of a party who is not a natural person designated as its representative by its attorney; or (3) a person whose presence is shown by a party to be essential to the presentation of his cause. Even if the unwritten rule of sequestration of witnesses at trial were applicable to depositions, the Board argues, the federal rule would indicate that Dr. Parks, whose presence is essential to the Board of Regents' presentation of its cause, would be excused from the rule.

FN1. On the contrary, in Stano v. State, 473 So.2d 1282 (Fla.1985), the supreme court held that the trial court is vested with the discretion to permit a witness to attend proceedings even though the rule of sequestration of witnesses has been invoked, and that absent a showing of an abuse of discretion, the court's ruling will not be disturbed on appeal.

[1] However, there are several decisions in which federal courts have held that evidence rule 615 applies to court proceedings, and not to depositions, and that Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(c), which is nearly identical to

Florida's rule 1.280(c), [FN2] applies to the taking of depositions. BCI Communications Sys., Inc. v. Bell Atlantic Sys., Inc., 112 F.R.D. 154 (N.D.Ala.1986); Skidmore v. Northwest Eng'g Co., 90 F.R.D. 75 (S.D.Fla.1981). "Since Rule 26(c), Fed.R.Civ.P., specifically requires a court order before persons may be excluded from the conduct of the deposition discovery process, it is clear that Fed.R.Evid. 615 does not apply to the taking of depositions." BCI Communications, 112 F.R.D. at 157. But see Lumpkin v. Bi-Lo, Inc., 117 F.R.D. 451 (M.D.Ga.1987) (rule 615 does apply to oral depositions, justifying exclusion of defendant's employees from plaintiff's deposition). [FN3]

FN2. Because the federal rule is nearly identical to the Florida rule, federal case law in which the rule is interpreted is pertinent and highly persuasive. Delta Rent-A-Car, Inc. v. Rihl, 218 So.2d 467 (Fla. 4th DCA 1969).

FN3. The court in Lumpkin may have been influenced by the fact that Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 30(c) states that the Federal Rules of Evidence apply to depositions. This is unlike Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.310(c), which, although otherwise essentially tracking the federal rule, does not provide that Florida's evidentiary rules apply to depositions.

[2] We similarly conclude that the burden was on Smith to satisfy the provisions of rule 1.280(c) to justify excluding Dr. Parks from Dr. Murray's deposition, rather *1118 than simply invoking the unwritten rule of sequestration which is applicable at trial.

[3] Rule 1.280(c) provides, in part:
Upon motion by a party or by the person from whom discovery is sought, and for good cause shown, the court in which the action is pending may make any order to protect a party or person from annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden or expense that justice requires, including ...
(5) that discovery be conducted with no one present except persons designated by the court[.]

The trial court has broad discretion in determining whether a protective order is warranted under the circumstances. Waite v. Wellington Boats, Inc., 459 So.2d 425 (Fla. 1st DCA 1984); Gross v. Security Trust Co., 453 So.2d 944 (Fla. 4th DCA 1984). The trial court may limit discovery only when the movant has made an affirmative showing of good cause. Deltona Corp. v. Bailey, 336 So.2d 1163 (Fla.1976); Travelers Indem. Co. v. Hill, 388 So.2d 648 (Fla. 5th DCA 1980). In her brief, Smith did not allege that she would be harmed in any of the ways enumerated in rule 1.280(c). Instead, she simply argued that she should be permitted to invoke the rule of sequestration, and that the trial judge had made no finding that Smith would not be prejudiced if the rule was not applied.

Smith did obliquely state in her brief that "Dr. Parks, as a critical eyewitness, should never be allowed to be influenced or 'colored' by his having listened to the testimony of Dr. Murray." This indirect statement does not satisfy Smith's burden of affirmatively showing good cause for a protective order. See e.g., Kerschbaumer v. Bell, 112 F.R.D. 426 (D.D.C.1986) (court refused to bar a party from deposition based upon "some inchoate fear that perjury would result"); BCI Communication Sys., Inc. v. Bell Atlantic Sys., Inc., 112 F.R.D. 154 (N.D.Ala.1986) (defendant's contention that excluding potential witness for plaintiff from depositions of other deponents was necessary to prevent witness from being exposed to deponent's testimony, thus permitting subsequent collusion or fabrication, did not justify protective order); Skidmore v. Northwest Eng'g Co., 90 F.R.D. 75 (S.D.Fla.1981) (defendant's argument that attendance of plaintiff's expert at deposition of defendant's employee would be unfair because expert had not yet formed opinions was not sufficient to justify protective order). Smith failed to show that the trial court abused its discretion in denying her motion for protective order.

MEMORANDUM ORDER

LEISURE, District Judge.

Defendants RPost International Limited ("RPost") and its three co-founders, Zafar Khan, Terry Tomkow, and Ken Barton, move this Court pursuant to Rule 26(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure for a stay of discovery during the pendency of their motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. For the following reasons, defendants' motion is granted.

Background

Plaintiffs Spencer Trask Software and Information Services, LLC ("Information Services"), formerly known as Spencer Trask Internet Group, LLC ("the Internet Group") and Spencer Trask Ventures, Inc. ("Ventures") (with their affiliates collectively as "Spencer Trask") bring this action for inter alia: (1) breach of contract; (2) promissory estoppel; (3) equitable estoppel; (4) unjust enrichment; and (5) fraud. At the root of the lawsuit is an agreement allegedly entered into by the parties to enable RPost to finance its new venture involving electronic mail. RPost is an internet company seeking to provide a secure means of sending electronic email that operates like registered mail on behalf of the United States Postal Service. Plaintiffs contend this new product venture will be very lucrative. The overall result of the alleged agreement was to give Spencer Trask the right to acquire approximately 20% of RPost stock.

Discussion

Defendants have moved to dismiss the First Amended Complaint in this action pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6). See Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6). Based on the face of the complaint, defendants assert, inter alia, that: (1) plaintiffs' *368 contract claims fail to state a claim on the merits as a matter of law; (2) their contract claims are barred in their entirety by the statute of frauds; and (3) their fraud claims fail as a matter of law. See Defendants' Memorandum of Law in Support of Motion to Dismiss the First Amended Complaint ("Defs.' Mem. Dismiss"). Plaintiffs are due to serve and file their opposition papers by April 25, 2002 and defendants shall serve and file their reply papers, if any, by May 6, 2002.

Pursuant to Rule 26(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a court has discretion to stay discovery "for good cause shown." Fed.R.Civ.P. 26(c). Good cause may be shown where a party has filed a dispositive motion, the stay is for a short period of time, and the opposing party will not be prejudiced by the stay. See Anti-Monopoly, Inc. v. Hasbro, Inc., No. 94 Civ. 2120, 1996 WL 101277, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. March 7, 1996) (collecting cases).

[1] However, while discovery may in a proper case be stayed pending the outcome of a motion to dismiss, "the issuance of a stay is by no means automatic." In re WRT Energy Secs. Litig., No. 96 Civ. 3610, 1996 WL 580930, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. Oct.9, 1996) (Keenan, J.); see Moran v. Flaherty, No. 92 Civ. 3200, 1992 WL 276913, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. Sept.25, 1992) ("[D]iscovery should not be routinely stayed simply on the basis that a motion to dismiss has been filed."); In re Chase Manhattan Corp. Secs. Litig., No. 90 Civ. 6092, 1991 WL 79432, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. May 7, 1991) (same). Two related factors a court may consider in deciding a motion for a stay of discovery are the breadth of discovery sought and the burden of responding to it. See Anti-Monopoly, Inc., 1996 WL 101277, at *3. Finally, a court should also consider the strength of the dispositive motion that is the basis of the discovery stay application. See, e.g., Gandler v. Nazarov, No. 94 Civ. 2272, 1994 WL 702004, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 14, 1994) (stay of discovery should be granted where motion to dismiss "is potentially dispositive, and appears to be not unfounded in the law.").

[2] This Court cannot attempt to predict the outcome of the motion to dismiss, particularly because it has not yet viewed plaintiffs' opposition papers. However, based on the papers submitted and upon oral argument from counsel, the Court notes at this preliminary stage that defendants do appear to have substantial arguments for dismissal of many, if not all, of the claims asserted in this lawsuit. Although plaintiffs contend that the breadth of discovery sought is not outrageously broad, nor is the burden substantial, the Court finds otherwise and believes that the expense and possible injury to the success of defendants' current contractual negotiations are great. [FN1] Furthermore, the Court intends to decide the motion expeditiously and thus the stay will neither unnecessarily delay the action nor prejudice the plaintiffs thereby. "A stay pending determination of a dispositive motion that potentially eliminates the entire action will neither substantially nor unduly delay the action, should it continue." Rivera v. Heyman, No. 96 Civ. 4489, 1997 WL 86394, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. Feb.27, 1997). Therefore, at this point in the litigation, proceeding with discovery while the motion to dismiss is pending would unnecessarily drain the parties' resources.

FN1. One of the third-parties plaintiffs seek to depose is the Deputy Postmaster General of the United States Postal Service, with whom RPost is currently in discussions regarding the new email venture. RPost notes that the issuance of a subpoena at this stage in their "delicate" negotiations could irreparably damage the success of the venture. See Defendants' Proposed Emergency Motion for Stay of Discovery and/or A Protective Order ("Defs.' Stay Mem."), at 3.

Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the requested stay of discovery pending disposition of the motion to dismiss is HEREBY GRANTED.

United States Court of Appeals, Second Circuit.

TRANSUNION CORPORATION and Union Industries, Inc., Appellants,

v.

PEPSICO, INC., Appellee.

No. 561, Docket 86-7805.

Argued Dec. 9, 1986.

Decided Feb. 5, 1987.

Philippine corporation brought suit against United States corporation for breach of contract, fraud, and RICO violations, and United States corporation moved to dismiss on grounds of forum non conveniens. The United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, Edward Weinfeld, J., 640 F.Supp. 1211, conditionally granted motion, and Philippine corporation appealed. The Court of Appeals held that: (1) dismissal of action on forum non conveniens grounds was appropriate as Philippine corporation had very minimal contacts with United States; (2) although Philippine corporation would not be able to claim RICO violations in Philippine court, it would still be able to maintain fraud actions underlying RICO counts; (3) fact that Philippine corporation could not obtain treble damages if successful in demonstrating fraud did not require United States court to hear case; and (4) trial judge did not abuse his discretion in granting protective order to prevent further discovery prior to his decision on motion to dismiss.

Affirmed.

Dismissal of Philippine corporation's action against United States corporation on forum non conveniens grounds was proper where Philippine corporation had minimal contacts with United States, contracts at issue related exclusively to the Philippines, most witnesses and documents were in the Philippines, many witnesses speak Philippine dialect as primary language, and there was no showing that political unrest in the Philippines would have adverse effect upon judicial system there.

Inability of Philippine corporation to bring RICO claim in Philippine court, if United States action were dismissed on grounds of forum non conveniens, was not dispositive, where Philippine corporation could assert three underlying fraud claims upon which their RICO claim was based, though they would not be entitled to triple damages, and where, RICO cause of action, as alleged, appeared to be legally deficient. 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 1961-1968.

Reference in RICO statute to "present" antitrust legislation indicated that earlier antitrust interpretation, which provided that such actions could not be dismissed on forum non conveniens grounds, was effectively overruled, and thus at time RICO was enacted, forum non conveniens doctrine applied both to antitrust suits and RICO actions. Ronald S. Rolfe, Cravath, Swaine & Moore, New York City, (Louis M. Solomon, James J. Buchal, of counsel), for appellee.

Before OAKES, CARDAMONE and WINTER, Circuit Judges.

PER CURIAM:

Transunion Corporation ("Transunion") and its subsidiary Union Industries, Inc. ("UII"), Philippines corporations, appeal the judgment and order of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, Edward Weinfeld, Judge, dismissing their action against PepsiCo, Inc. ("PepsiCo"), for fraudulently inducing them to enter into a Compromise Agreement to settle an earlier dispute, for damages for breach of this and of an earlier agreement, and for treble damages for civil RICO violations under 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961- 1968 (1982). Judge Weinfeld's opinion is reported as Transunion Corp. v. PepsiCo, Inc., 640 F.Supp. 1211 (S.D.N.Y.1986). Appellants argue that Judge Weinfeld abused his discretion when he granted PepsiCo's motion to dismiss the complaint on the ground of forum non conveniens. They argue too that he abused his discretion when he stayed discovery pending determination of the motion to dismiss. We affirm, substantially on Judge Weinfeld's opinion.

Transunion had a contract (the "1981 Supply Agreement") to supply Pepsi-Cola Bottling Company of the Philippines ("PCBCP") with glass bottles. In 1983, Transunion brought an action in the Philippines against PCBCP and PepsiCo for breach of this contract. Following negotiations in the Philippines and in New York, this action was settled by a 1983 Compromise Agreement that required, inter alia, PepsiCo to buy bottles from Transunion through 1986 and Transunion to meet certain quality standards. In March 1985, PepsiCo sold its Philippines bottling operations to a third party. On December 5, 1985, Transunion gave notice of its cancellation of the 1983 Compromise Agreement on the ground that PepsiCo had breached it by this sale. On December 17, 1985, however, PepsiCo filed suit in the Philippines alleging, inter alia, that appellants had breached the Agreement's quality standards. The Philippine court granted PepsiCo a writ of preliminary attachment on properties of Transunion and its president, Carlos Ty.

On December 27, appellants filed this suit in the Southern District of New York. Dismissal on forum non conveniens grounds was conditioned on PepsiCo's (1) waiver of any statute of limitations defenses it might have in the Philippines with respect to the claims asserted in the Southern District of New York and (2) agreement to make its employees available in the Philippines for deposition or trial.

The appropriate standard of review of a forum non conveniens determination is whether the trial court abused its discretion in weighing the established public and *129 private interest factors articulated by the Supreme Court. Piper Aircraft Co. v. Reyno, 454 U.S. 235, 257, 102 S.Ct. 252, 266, 70 L.Ed.2d 419 (1981); Gulf Oil Corp. v. Gilbert, 330 U.S. 501, 509, 67 S.Ct. 839, 843, 91 L.Ed. 1055 (1947); see also Piper Aircraft, 454 U.S. at 241 n. 6, 102 S.Ct. at 258 n. 6 (factors). The judge's opinion here is typically careful and complete, and his decision a reasonable one. The judge clearly stated that "a plaintiff's choice of forum should rarely be disturbed and the burden is on the defendant to establish that the action should be dismissed on the ground of forum non conveniens." 640 F.Supp. at 1215. His statement that this presumption is less weighty where plaintiffs are foreigners, id., is fully supported by his citation to Piper Aircraft, 454 U.S. at 255-56, 102 S.Ct. at 265-66.

[1] Judge Weinfeld reasonably held that appellants have very minimal contacts with the United States: the contracts at issue in this action relate exclusively to the Philippines; most witnesses and documents are in the Philippines; many witnesses speak Tagalog, a Philippines dialect, as their primary language; and obtaining documents located in the Philippines would probably require the use of letters rogatory and might also be complicated by a Philippines presidential decree prohibiting removal of documents from the Philippines without official approval. 640 F.Supp. at 1215-17. On the other side, favoring a New York forum, were the facts that PepsiCo is a New York corporation; some negotiations for the 1983 settlement did happen to occur in New York while Transunion's president was visiting there, and it was during these negotiations that the alleged fraudulent misrepresentations were made by senior PepsiCo officials; and some few witnesses and documents are in New York. Id. at 1216. Judge Weinfeld reasonably concluded that "[p]laintiffs have not offered a single compelling reason with respect to their own convenience to support their choice of this forum." Id. at 1217.

Public interest factors similarly were reasonably held to favor dismissal: Philippines law would probably apply to both the 1981 and 1983 agreements and to the effects of the order entered by a Philippine court upon settlement of the 1983 Philippine litigation; Philippine courts are apparently no more congested than the courts of the Southern District of New York; no showing was made that political unrest in the Philippines has had an adverse effect upon the judicial system there; PepsiCo has assets in the Philippines against which a Philippine judgment could be enforced (alternatively, if these proved inadequate, a Philippines judgment could be enforced against New York assets); and appellants could assert their claims in the New York complaint as counterclaims in PepsiCo's Philippines action, thereby saving the unwarranted waste of judicial resources that would result from the trial of claims arising out of the same facts in both New York and the Philippines. Id. at 1217-19.

[2] Appellants rely heavily on the fact that the New York complaint includes a RICO count that they may not be able to assert in the Philippines. This argument has no merit. First, though appellants might not be able to claim RICO violations and RICO triple damages in the Philippines, they could assert the three underlying frauds (set out at 640 F.Supp. at 1214). That they could not get triple damages if they proved the frauds underlying their RICO claim in the Philippines is irrelevant: "dismissal may not be barred solely because of the possibility of an unfavorable change in law." Piper Aircraft, 454 U.S. at 249, 102 S.Ct. at 262. Furthermore, Judge Weinfeld noted that "plaintiffs' RICO cause of action, as alleged, appears to be legally deficient" due to improper pleading and lack of standing as to two of the three alleged predicate acts, 640 F.Supp. at 1217 & n. 19.

Appellants raise for the first time on appeal the argument that the RICO statute specifies venue in the United States. Though 18 U.S.C. § 1965(a) (1982) provides that any civil RICO action "may be instituted" in the district court in any district with which the defendant has certain specified *130 connections, dismissal on forum non conveniens grounds has been upheld in many other cases involving statutes with special venue provisions. For example, the Jones Act provides, 46 U.S.C. § 688(a) (1982), that jurisdiction "shall be" in district court. Yet this court, upholding a dismissal of a Jones Act claim when there was a convenient Philippines forum, has held that the forum non conveniens doctrine is applicable in Jones Act cases. Cruz v. Maritime Company of Philippines, 702 F.2d 47, 48 (2d Cir.1983) (per curiam); see also Koster v. Lumbermens Mutual Casualty Co., 330 U.S. 518, 522 n. 2 & 531-32, 67 S.Ct. 828, 830 n. 2 & 835, 91 L.Ed. 1067 (1947) (upholding dismissal on forum non conveniens grounds of a derivative suit filed under 28 U.S.C. § 112 (recodified as amended at 28 U.S.C. § 1401 (1982))); Wells Fargo & Co. v. Wells Fargo Express Co., 556 F.2d 406, 431 (9th Cir.1977) (suggesting a Lanham Act infringement claim might be dismissed on forum non conveniens grounds, though the Act contains a special venue provision, 15 U.S.C. § 1121 (1982)).

[3] Appellants' argument that RICO cases cannot be dismissed on forum non conveniens grounds is based chiefly upon the statement in the legislative history that "[s]ection 1965 [of RICO] contains broad provisions regarding venue ..., which are modelled on present antitrust legislation," H.R.Rep. No. 1549, 91st

Cong., 2d Sess. 58 (1970) ("House Report"), reprinted in 1970 U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 4007, 4034. This statement, they argue, indicates congressional intent that the RICO venue provision should embody the holding in United States v. National City Lines, Inc., 334 U.S. 573, 68 S.Ct. 1169, 92 L.Ed. 1584 (1948), that a special venue provision, section 12 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 22 (1982), deprived the court of discretion to dismiss a Sherman Act suit on forum non conveniens grounds. This argument is unpersuasive. The decision in National City Lines was based upon a thorough review of legislative history of the Clayton Act, which disclosed "no other thought than that the choice of forums was given as a matter of right, not as one limited by judicial discretion." 334 U.S. at 586-87, 68 S.Ct. at 1176. A review of the legislative history of RICO, however, discloses no mandate that the doctrine of forum non conveniens should not apply, nor is there any indication that Congress had the interpretation of 15 U.S.C. § 22 in National City Lines in mind when it drafted section 1965 of RICO. Indeed, the House Report's reference to "present" antitrust legislation suggests that Congress was aware that the result in National City Lines was effectively overruled by Congress in 1948 when it enacted 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a) (1982), the legislative history of which states that it "was drafted in accordance with the doctrine of forum non conveniens, permitting transfer to a more convenient forum, even though the venue is proper." H.R.Rep. No. 308, 80th Cong., 1st Sess. A132 (1947); see United States v. National City Lines, Inc., 337 U.S. 78, 69 S.Ct. 955, 93 L.Ed. 1226 (1949). It follows that at the time RICO was enacted in 1970, the forum non conveniens doctrine applied to antitrust suits by virtue of 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a), so the reference in the RICO legislative history to 18 U.S.C. § 1965(a) having been modeled on the antitrust venue provisions does not avail appellants.

[4] Nor is there any merit in appellants' claim that the judge abused his discretion in granting a protective order to prevent further discovery prior to its decision on the motion to dismiss. Motions to dismiss for forum non conveniens may be decided on the basis of affidavits. Alcoa Steamship Co. v. M/V Nordic Regent, 654 F.2d 147, 149 (2d Cir.) (en banc), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 890, 101 S.Ct. 248, 66 L.Ed.2d 116 (1980). Indeed, as the Court noted in Piper Aircraft, 454 U.S. at 258, 102 S.Ct. at 267, "[r]equiring extensive investigation would defeat the purpose of [the] motion."

Judgment affirmed.

RULE 1.010. SCOPE AND TITLE OF RULES

These rules apply to all actions of a civil nature and all special statutory proceedings in the circuit courts and county courts except those to which the Florida Probate Rules, the Florida Family Law Rules of Procedure, or the Small Claims Rules apply. The form, content, procedure, and time for pleading in all special statutory proceedings shall be as prescribed by the statutes governing the proceeding unless these rules specifically provide to the contrary. These rules shall be construed to secure the just, speedy, and inexpensive determination of every action. These rules shall be known as the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure and abbreviated as Fla. R. Civ. P.

RULE 1.030. NONVERIFICATION OF PLEADINGS

Except when otherwise specifically provided by these rules or an applicable statute, every written pleading or other paper of a party represented by an attorney need not be verified or accompanied by an affidavit.

Committee Notes

1976 Amendment. Subdivisions (a)-(b) have been amended to require the addition of the filing party's telephone number on all pleadings and papers filed.

RULE 1.040. ONE FORM OF ACTION

There shall be one form of action to be known as "civil action."

RULE 1.050. WHEN ACTION COMMENCED

Every action of a civil nature shall be deemed commenced when the complaint or petition is filed except that ancillary proceedings shall be deemed commenced when the writ is issued or the pleading setting forth the claim of the party initiating the action is filed.

RULE 1.060. TRANSFERS OF ACTIONS

(a) Transfers of Courts. If it should appear at any time that an action is pending in the wrong court of any county, it may be transferred to the proper court within said county by the same method as provided in rule 1.170(j).

(b) Wrong Venue. When any action is filed laying venue in the wrong county, the court may transfer the action in the manner provided in rule 1.170(j) to the proper court in any county where it might have been brought in accordance with the venue statutes. When the venue might have been laid in 2 or more counties, the person bringing the action may select the county to which the action is transferred, but if no such selection is made, the matter shall be determined by the court.

(c) Method. The service charge of the clerk of the court to which an action is transferred under this rule shall be paid by the party who commenced the action within 30 days from the date the order of transfer is entered, subject to taxation as provided by law when the action is determined. If the service charge is not paid within the 30 days, the action shall be dismissed without prejudice by the court that entered the order of transfer.

Court Commentary

1984 Amendment. Because of confusion in some circuits, subdivision (c) is added:

(a) to specify who is to pay the clerk's service charge on transfer;

(b) to provide for the circumstance in which the service charge is not paid; and

(c) to require the dismissal to be by the court which entered the order of transfer.

RULE 1.061. CHOICE OF FORUM

(a) Grounds for Dismissal. An action may be dismissed on the ground that a satisfactory remedy may be more conveniently sought in a jurisdiction other than Florida when:

(1) the trial court finds that an adequate alternate forum exists which possesses jurisdiction over the whole case, including all of the parties;

(2) the trial court finds that all relevant factors of private interest favor the alternate forum, weighing in the balance a strong presumption against disturbing plaintiffs' initial forum choice;

(3) if the balance of private interests is at or near equipoise, the court further finds that factors of public interest tip the balance in favor of trial in the alternate forum; and

(4) the trial judge ensures that plaintiffs can reinstate their suit in the alternate forum without undue inconvenience or prejudice.

The decision to grant or deny the motion for dismissal rests in the sound discretion of the trial court, subject to review for abuse of discretion.

(b) Stipulations in General. The parties to any action for which a satisfactory remedy may be more conveniently sought in a jurisdiction other than Florida may stipulate to conditions upon which a forum-non-conveniens dismissal shall be based, subject to approval by the trial court. The decision to accept or reject the stipulation rests in the sound discretion of the trial court, subject to review for abuse of discretion.

A forum-non-conveniens dismissal shall not be granted unless all defendants agree to the stipulations required by subdivision (c) and any additional stipulations required by the court.

(c) Statutes of Limitation. In moving for forum-non-conveniens dismissal, defendants shall be deemed to automatically stipulate that the action will be treated in the new forum as though it had been filed in that forum on the date it was filed in Florida, with service of process accepted as of that date.

(d) Failure to Refile Promptly. When an action is dismissed in Florida for forum non conveniens, plaintiffs shall automatically be deemed to stipulate that they will lose the benefit of all stipulations made by the defendant, including the stipulation provided in subdivision (c) of this rule, if plaintiffs fail to file the action in the new forum within 120 days after the date the Florida dismissal becomes final.

(e) Waiver of Automatic Stipulations. Upon unanimous agreement, the parties may waive the conditions provided in subdivision (c) or (d), or both, only when they demonstrate and the trial court finds a compelling reason for the waiver. The decision to accept or reject the waiver shall not be disturbed on review if supported by competent, substantial evidence.

(f) Reduction to Writing. The parties shall reduce their stipulation to a writing signed by them, which shall include all stipulations provided by this rule and which shall be deemed incorporated by reference in any subsequent order of dismissal.

(g) Time for Moving for Dismissal. A motion to dismiss based on forum non conveniens shall be served not later than 60 days after service of process on the moving party.

(h) Retention of Jurisdiction. The court shall retain jurisdiction after the dismissal to enforce its order of dismissal and any conditions and stipulations in the order.

Court Commentary

This section was added to elaborate on Florida's adoption of the federal doctrine of forum non conveniens in Kinney System, Inc. v. Continental Insurance Co., 674 So.2d 86 (Fla. 1996), and it should be interpreted in light of that opinion.

Subdivision (a) codifies the federal standard for reviewing motions filed under the forum-non-conveniens doctrine. Orders granting or denying dismissal for forum non conveniens are subject to appellate review under an abuse-of-discretion standard.

As stated in Kinney, the phrase "private interests" means adequate access to evidence and relevant sites, adequate access to witnesses, adequate enforcement of judgments, and the practicalities and expenses associated with the litigation. Private interests do not involve consideration of the availability or unavailability of advantageous legal theories, a history of generous or stingy damage awards, or procedural nuances that may affect outcomes but that do not effectively deprive the plaintiff of any remedy.

"Equipoise" means that the advantages and disadvantages of the alternative forum will not significantly undermine or favor the "private interests" of any particular party, as compared with the forum in which suit was filed.

"Public interests" are the ability of courts to protect their dockets from causes that lack significant connection to the jurisdiction; the ability of courts to encourage trial of controversies in the localities in which they arise; and the ability of courts to consider their familiarity with governing law when deciding whether to retain jurisdiction over a case. Even when the private conveniences of the litigants are nearly in balance, a trial court has discretion to grant a forum-non-conveniens dismissal upon finding that retention of jurisdiction would be unduly burdensome to the community, that there is little or no public interest in the dispute, or that foreign law will predominate if jurisdiction is retained.

Subdivision (b) provides that the parties can stipulate to conditions of a forum-non-conveniens dismissal, subject to the trial court's approval. The trial court's acceptance or rejection of the stipulation is subject to appellate review under an abuse-of-discretion standard.

Subdivisions (c) and (d) provide automatic conditions that shall be deemed included in every forum-non-conveniens dismissal. The purpose underlying subdivision (c) is to ensure that any statute of limitation in the new forum is applied as though the action had been filed in that forum on the date it was filed in Florida. The purpose underlying subdivision (d) is to ensure that the action is promptly refiled in the new forum. Both of these stipulations are deemed to be a part of every stipulation that does not expressly state otherwise, subject to the qualification provided in subdivision (e).

Subdivision (e) recognizes that there may be extraordinary conditions associated with the new forum that would require the waiver of the conditions provided in subdivisions (c) and (d). Waivers should be granted sparingly. Thus, the parties by unanimous consent may stipulate to waive those conditions only upon showing a compelling reason to the trial court. The trial court's acceptance or rejection of the waiver may not be reversed on appeal where supported by competent, substantial evidence.

Subdivision (f) requires the parties to reduce their stipulation to written form, which the parties must sign. When and if the trial court accepts the stipulation, the parties' agreement then is treated as though it were incorporated by reference in the trial court's order of dismissal. To avoid confusion, the parties shall include the automatic stipulations provided by subdivisions (c) and (d) of this rule, unless the latter are properly waived under subdivision (e). However, the failure to include these automatic conditions in the stipulation does not waive them unless the dismissing court has expressly so ruled.

Committee Notes

2000 Amendment. Subdivision (a)(1) is amended to clarify that the alternative forum other than Florida must have jurisdiction over all of the parties for the trial court to grant a dismissal based on forum non conveniens.

Subdivision (b) is amended to clarify that all of the defendants, not just the moving defendant, must agree to the stipulations required by subdivision (c) as well as any additional stipulations required by the trial court before an action may be dismissed based on forum non conveniens.

Subdivision (g) is added to require that a motion to dismiss based on forum non conveniens be served not later than 60 days after service of process on the moving party.

Subdivision (h) is added to require the court to retain jurisdiction over the action after the dismissal for purposes of enforcing its order of dismissal and any conditions and stipulations contained in the order.

RULE 1.070. PROCESS

(a) Summons; Issuance. Upon the commencement of the action, summons or other process authorized by law shall be issued forthwith by the clerk or judge under the clerk's or the judge's signature and the seal of the court and delivered for service without precept.

(b) Service; By Whom Made. Service of process may be made by an officer authorized by law to serve process, but the court may appoint any competent person not interested in the action to serve the process. When so appointed, the person serving process shall make proof of service by affidavit promptly and in any event within the time during which the person served must respond to the process. Failure to make proof of service shall not affect the validity of the service. When any process is returned not executed or returned improperly executed for any defendant, the party causing its issuance shall be entitled to such additional process against the unserved party as is required to effect service.

(c) Service; Numerous Defendants. If there is more than 1 defendant, the clerk or judge shall issue as many writs of process against the several defendants as may be directed by the plaintiff or the plaintiff's attorney.

(d) Service by Publication. Service of process by publication may be made as provided by statute.

(e) Copies of Initial Pleading for Persons Served. At the time of personal service of process a copy of the initial pleading shall be delivered to the party upon whom service is made. The date and hour of service shall be endorsed on the original process and all copies of it by the person making the service. The party seeking to effect personal service shall furnish the person making service with the necessary copies. When the service is made by publication, copies of the initial pleadings shall be furnished to the clerk and mailed by the clerk with the notice of action to all parties whose addresses are stated in the initial pleading or sworn statement.

(f) Service of Orders. If personal service of a court order is to be made, the original order shall be filed with the clerk, who shall certify or verify a copy of it without charge. The person making service shall use the certified copy instead of the original order in sued in a representative capacity, that party shall do so by specific negative averment which shall include such supporting particulars as are peculiarly within the pleader's knowledge.

(b) Fraud, Mistake, Condition of the Mind. In all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with such particularity as the circumstances may permit. Malice, intent, knowledge, mental attitude, and other condition of mind of a person may be averred generally.

(c) Conditions Precedent. In pleading the performance or occurrence of conditions precedent, it is sufficient to aver generally that all conditions precedent have been performed or have occurred. A denial of performance or occurrence shall be made specifically and with particularity.

(d) Official Document or Act. In pleading an official document or official act it is sufficient to aver that the document was issued or the act done in compliance with law.

(e) Judgment or Decree. In pleading a judgment or decree of a domestic or foreign court, a judicial or quasi-judicial tribunal, or a board or officer, it is sufficient to aver the judgment or decree without setting forth matter showing jurisdiction to render it.

(f) Time and Place. For the purpose of testing the sufficiency of a pleading, averments of time and place are material and shall be considered like all other averments of material matter.

(g) Special Damage. When items of special damage are claimed, they shall be specifically stated.

RULE 1.130. ATTACHING COPY OF CAUSE OF ACTION AND EXHIBITS

(a) Instruments Attached. All bonds, notes, bills of exchange, contracts, accounts, or documents upon which action may be brought or defense made, or a copy thereof or a copy of the portions thereof material to the pleadings, shall be incorporated in or attached to the pleading. No papers shall be unnecessarily annexed as exhibits. The pleadings shall contain no unnecessary recitals of deeds, documents, contracts, or other instruments.

(b) Part for All Purposes. Any exhibit attached to a pleading shall be considered a part thereof for all purposes. Statements in a pleading may be adopted by reference in a different part of the same pleading, in another pleading, or in any motion.

RULE 1.140. DEFENSES

(a) When Presented.

(1) A defendant shall serve an answer within 20 days after service of original process and the initial pleading on the defendant, or not later than the date fixed in a notice by publication. A party served with a pleading stating a crossclaim against that party shall serve an answer to it within 20 days after service on that party. The plaintiff shall serve an answer to a counterclaim within 20 days after service of the counterclaim. If a reply is required, the reply shall be served within 20 days after service of the answer.

(2) The service of a motion under this rule, except a motion for judgment on the pleadings or a motion to strike under subdivision (f), alters these periods of time so that if the court denies the motion or postpones its disposition until the trial on the merits, the responsive pleadings shall be served within 10 days after notice of the court's action or, if the court grants a motion for a more definite statement, the responsive pleadings shall be served within 10 days after service of the more definite statement unless a different time is fixed by the court in either case.

(3) If the court permits or requires an amended or responsive pleading or a more definite statement, the pleading or statement shall be served within 10 days after notice of the court's action. Responses to the pleadings or statements shall be served within 10 days of service of the pleadings or statements.

(b) How Presented. Every defense in law or fact to a claim for relief in a pleading shall be asserted in the responsive pleading, if one is required, but the following defenses may be made by motion at the option of the pleader: (1) lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter, (2) lack of jurisdiction over the person, (3) improper venue, (4) insufficiency of process, (5) insufficiency of service of process, (6) failure to state a cause of action, and (7) failure to join indispensable parties. A motion making any of these defenses shall be made before pleading if a further pleading is permitted. The grounds on which any of the enumerated defenses are based and the substantial matters of law intended to be argued shall be stated specifically and with particularity in the responsive pleading or motion. Any ground not stated shall be deemed to be waived except any ground showing that the court lacks jurisdiction of the subject matter may be made at any time. No defense or objection is waived by being joined with other defenses or objections in a responsive pleading or motion. If a pleading sets forth a claim for relief to which the adverse party is not required to serve a responsive pleading, the adverse party may assert any defense in law or fact to that claim for relief at the trial, except that the objection of failure to state a legal defense in an answer or reply shall be asserted by motion to strike the defense within 20 days after service of the answer or reply.

(c) Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings. After the pleadings are closed, but within such time as not to delay the trial, any party may move for judgment on the pleadings.

(d) Preliminary Hearings. The defenses 1 to 7 in subdivision (b) of this rule, whether made in a pleading or by motion, and the motion for judgment in subdivision (c) of this rule shall be heard and determined before trial on application of any party unless the court orders that the hearing and determination shall be deferred until the trial.

(e) Motion for More Definite Statement. If a pleading to which a responsive pleading is permitted is so vague or ambiguous that a party cannot reasonably be required to frame a responsive pleading, that party may move for a more definite statement before interposing a responsive pleading. The motion shall point out the defects complained of and the details desired. If the motion is granted and the order of the court is not obeyed within 10 days after notice of the order or such other time as the court may fix, the court may strike the pleading to which the motion was directed or make such order as it deems just.

(f) Motion to Strike. A party may move to strike or the court may strike redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter from any pleading at any time.

(g) Consolidation of Defenses. A party who makes a motion under this rule may join with it the other motions herein provided for and then available to that party. If a party makes a motion under this rule but omits from it any defenses or objections then available to that party that this rule permits to be raised by motion, that party shall not thereafter make a motion based on any of the defenses or objections omitted, except as provided in subdivision (h)(2) of this rule.

(h) Waiver of Defenses.

(1) A party waives all defenses and objections that the party does not present either by motion under subdivisions (b), (e), or (f) of this rule or, if the party has made no motion, in a responsive pleading except as provided in subdivision (h)(2).

(2) The defenses of failure to state a cause of action or a legal defense or to join an indispensable party may be raised by motion for judgment on the pleadings or at the trial on the merits in addition to being raised either in a motion under subdivision (b) or in the answer or reply. The defense of lack of jurisdiction of the subject matter may be raised at any time.

Committee Notes

1972 Amendment. Subdivision (a) is amended to eliminate the unnecessary statement of the return date when service is made by publication, and to accommodate the change proposed in rule 1.100(a) making a reply mandatory under certain circumstances. Motions to strike under subdivision (f) are divided into 2 categories, so subdivision (a) is also amended to accommodate this change by eliminating motions to strike under the new subdivision (f) as motions that toll the running of time. A motion to strike an insufficient legal defense will now be available under subdivision (b) and continue to toll the time for responsive pleading. Subdivision (b) is amended to include the defense of failure to state a sufficient legal defense. The proper method of attack for failure to state a legal defense remains a motion to strike. Subdivision (f) is changed to accommodate the 2 types of motions to strike. The motion to strike an insufficient legal defense is now in subdivision (b). The motion to strike under subdivision (f) does not toll the time for responsive pleading and can be made at any time, and the matter can be stricken by the court on its initiative at any time. Subdivision (g) follows the terminology of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(g). Much difficulty has been experienced in the application of this and the succeeding subdivision with the result that the same defenses are being raised several times in an action. The intent of the rule is to permit the defenses to be raised one time, either by motion or by the responsive pleading, and thereafter only by motion for judgment on the pleadings or at the trial. Subdivision (h) also reflects this philosophy. It is based on federal rule 12(h) but more clearly states the purpose of the rule.

1988 Amendment. The amendment to subdivision (a) is to fix a time within which amended pleadings, responsive pleadings, or more definite statements required by the court and responses to those pleadings or statements must be served when no time limit is fixed by the court in its order. The court's authority to alter these time periods is contained in rule 1.090(b).

RULE 1.150. SHAM PLEADINGS

(a) Motion to Strike. If a party deems any pleading or part thereof filed by another party to be a sham, that party may move to strike the pleading or part thereof before the cause is set for trial and the court shall hear the motion, taking evidence of the respective parties, and if the motion is sustained, the pleading to which the motion is directed shall be stricken. Default and summary judgment on the merits may be entered in the discretion of the court or the court may permit additional pleadings to be filed for good cause shown.

(b) Contents of Motion. The motion to strike shall be verified and shall set forth fully the facts on which the movant relies and may be supported by affidavit. No traverse of the motion shall be required.

RULE 1.160. MOTIONS

All motions and applications in the clerk's office for the issuance of mesne process and final process to enforce and execute judgments, for entering defaults, and for such other proceedings in the clerk's office as do not require an order of court shall be deemed motions and applications grantable as of course by the clerk. The clerk's action may be suspended or altered or rescinded by the court upon cause shown.

RULE 1.170. COUNTERCLAIMS AND CROSSCLAIMS

(a) Compulsory Counterclaims. A pleading shall state as a counterclaim any claim which at the time of serving the pleading the pleader has against any opposing party, provided it arises out of the transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of the opposing party's claim and does not require for its adjudication the presence of third parties over whom the court cannot acquire jurisdiction. But the pleader need not state a claim if (1) at the time the action was commenced the claim was the subject of another pending action, or (2) the opposing party brought suit upon that party's claim by attachment or other process by which the court did not acquire jurisdiction to render a personal judgment on the claim and the pleader is not stating a counterclaim under this rule.

(b) Permissive Counterclaim. A pleading may state as a counterclaim any claim against an opposing party not arising out of the transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of the opposing party's claim.

(c) Counterclaim Exceeding Opposing Claim. A counterclaim may or may not diminish or defeat the recovery sought by the opposing party. It may claim relief exceeding in amount or different in kind from that sought in the pleading of the opposing party.

(d) Counterclaim against the State. These rules shall not be construed to enlarge beyond the limits established by law the right to assert counterclaims or to claim credits against the state or any of its subdivisions or other governmental organizations thereof subject to suit or against a municipal corporation or against an officer, agency, or administrative board of the state.

(e) Counterclaim Maturing or Acquired after Pleading. A claim which matured or was acquired by the pleader after serving the pleading may be presented as a counterclaim by supplemental pleading with the permission of the court.

(f) Omitted Counterclaim or Crossclaim. When a pleader fails to set up a counterclaim or crossclaim through oversight, inadvertence, or excusable neglect, or when justice requires, the pleader may set up the counterclaim or crossclaim by amendment with leave of the court.

(g) Crossclaim against Co-Party. A pleading may state as a crossclaim any claim by one party

(c) Adding Parties. Parties may be added once as a matter of course within the same time that pleadings can be so amended under rule 1.190(a). If amendment by leave of court or stipulation of the parties is permitted, parties may be added in the amended pleading without further order of court. Parties may be added by order of court on its own initiative or on motion of any party at any stage of the action and on such terms as are just.

Committee Notes

1972 Amendment. Subdivision (c) is amended to permit the addition of parties when the pleadings are amended by stipulation. This conforms the subdivision to all of the permissive types of amendment under rule 1.190(a). It was an inadvertent omission by the committee when the rule in its present form was adopted in 1968 as can be seen by reference to the 1968 committee note.

RULE 1.260. SURVIVOR; SUBSTITUTION OF PARTIES

(a) Death.

(1) If a party dies and the claim is not thereby extinguished, the court may order substitution of the proper parties. The motion for substitution may be made by any party or by the successors or representatives of the deceased party and, together with the notice of hearing, shall be served on all parties as provided in rule 1.080 and upon persons not parties in the manner provided for the service of a summons. Unless the motion for substitution is made within 90 days after the death is suggested upon the record by service of a statement of the fact of the death in the manner provided for the service of the motion, the action shall be dismissed as to the deceased party.

(2) In the event of the death of one or more of the plaintiffs or of one or more of the defendants in an action in which the right sought to be enforced survives only to the surviving plaintiffs or only against the surviving defendants, the action shall not abate. The death shall be suggested upon the record and the action shall proceed in favor of or against the surviving parties.

(b) Incompetency. If a party becomes incompetent, the court, upon motion served as provided in subdivision (a) of this rule, may allow the action to be continued by or against that person's representative.

(c) Transfer of Interest. In case of any transfer of interest, the action may be continued by or against the original party, unless the court upon motion directs the person to whom the interest is transferred to be substituted in the action or joined with the original party. Service of the motion shall be made as provided in subdivision (a) of this rule.

(d) Public Officers; Death or Separation from Office.

(1) When a public officer is a party to an action in an official capacity and during its pendency dies, resigns, or otherwise ceases to hold office, the action does not abate and the officer's successor is automatically substituted as a party. Proceedings following the substitution shall be in the name of the substituted party, but any misnomer not affecting the substantial rights of the parties shall be disregarded. An order of substitution may be entered at any time, but the omission to enter such an order shall not affect the substitution.

(2) When a public officer sues or is sued in an official capacity, the officer may be described as a party by the official title rather than by name but the court may require the officer's name to be added.

RULE 1.270. CONSOLIDATION; SEPARATE TRIALS

(a) Consolidation. When actions involving a common question of law or fact are pending before the court, it may order a joint hearing or trial of any or all the matters in issue in the actions; it may order all the actions consolidated; and it may make such orders concerning proceedings therein as may tend to avoid unnecessary costs or delay.

(b) Separate Trials. The court in furtherance of convenience or to avoid prejudice may order a separate trial of any claim, crossclaim, counterclaim, or third-party claim or of any separate issue or of any number of claims, crossclaims, counterclaims, third-party claims, or issues.

RULE 1.280. GENERAL PROVISIONS GOVERNING DISCOVERY

(a) Discovery Methods. Parties may obtain discovery by one or more of the following methods: depositions upon oral examination or written questions; written interrogatories; production of documents or things or permission to enter upon land or other property for inspection and other purposes; physical and mental examinations; and requests for admission. Unless the court orders otherwise and under subdivision (c) of this rule, the frequency of use of these methods is not limited, except as provided in rule 1.200 and rule 1.340.

(b) Scope of Discovery. Unless otherwise limited by order of the court in accordance with these rules, the scope of discovery is as follows:

(1) In General. Parties may obtain discovery regarding any matter, not privileged, that is relevant to the subject matter of the pending action, whether it relates to the claim or defense of the party seeking discovery or the claim or defense of any other party, including the existence, description, nature, custody, condition, and location of any books, documents, or other tangible things and the identity and location of persons having knowledge of any discoverable matter. It is not ground for objection that the information sought will be inadmissible at the trial if the information sought appears reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

(2) Indemnity Agreements. A party may obtain discovery of the existence and contents of any agreement under which any person may be liable to satisfy part or all of a judgment that may be entered in the action or to indemnify or to reimburse a party for payments made to satisfy the judgment. Information concerning the agreement is not admissible in evidence at trial by reason of disclosure.

(3) Trial Preparation: Materials. Subject to the provisions of subdivision (b)(4) of this rule, a party may obtain discovery of documents and tangible things otherwise discoverable under subdivision (b)(1) of this rule and prepared in anticipation of litigation or for trial by or for another party or by or for that party's representative, including that party's attorney, consultant, surety, indemnitor, insurer, or agent, only upon a showing that the party seeking discovery has need of the materials in the preparation of the case and is unable without undue hardship to obtain the substantial equivalent of the materials by other means. In ordering discovery of the materials when the required showing has been made, the court shall protect against disclosure of the mental impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal theories of an attorney or other representative of a party concerning the litigation. Without the required showing a party may obtain a copy of a statement concerning the action or its subject matter previously made by that party. Upon request without the required showing a person not a party may obtain a copy of a statement concerning the action or its subject matter previously made by that person. If the request is refused, the person may move for an order to obtain a copy. The provisions of rule 1.380(a)(4) apply to the award of expenses incurred as a result of making the motion. For purposes of this paragraph, a statement previously made is a written statement signed or otherwise adopted or approved by the person making it, or a stenographic, mechanical, electrical, or other recording or transcription of it that is a substantially verbatim recital of an oral statement by the person making it and contemporaneously recorded.

(4) Trial Preparation: Experts. Discovery of facts known and opinions held by experts, otherwise discoverable under the provisions of subdivision (b)(1) of this rule and acquired or developed in anticipation of litigation or for trial, may be obtained only as follows:

(A) (i) By interrogatories a party may require any other party to identify each person whom the other party expects to call as an expert witness at trial and to state the subject matter on which the expert is expected to testify, and to state the substance of the facts and opinions to which the expert is expected to testify and a summary of the grounds for each opinion.

(ii) Any person disclosed by interrogatories or otherwise as a person expected to be called as an expert witness at trial may be deposed in accordance with rule 1.390 without motion or order of court.

(iii) A party may obtain the following discovery regarding any person disclosed by interrogatories or otherwise as a person expected to be called as an expert witness at trial:

1. The scope of employment in the pending case and the compensation for such service.

2. The expert's general litigation experience, including the percentage of work performed for plaintiffs and defendants.

3. The identity of other cases, within a reasonable time period, in which the expert has testified by deposition or at trial.

4. An approximation of the portion of the expert's involvement as an expert witness, which may be based on the number of hours, percentage of hours, or percentage of earned income derived from serving as an expert witness; however, the expert shall not be required to disclose his or her earnings as an expert witness or income derived from other services.

An expert may be required to produce financial and business records only under the most unusual or compelling circumstances and may not be compelled to compile or produce nonexistent documents. Upon motion, the court may order further discovery by other means, subject to such restrictions as to scope and other provisions pursuant to subdivision (b)(4)(C) of this rule concerning fees and expenses as the court may deem appropriate.

(B) A party may discover facts known or opinions held by an expert who has been retained or specially employed by another party in anticipation of litigation or preparation for trial and who is not expected to be called as a witness at trial, only as provided in rule 1.360(b) or upon a showing of exceptional circumstances under which it is impracticable for the party seeking discovery to obtain facts or opinions on the same subject by other means.

(C) Unless manifest injustice would result, the court shall require that the party seeking discovery pay the expert a reasonable fee for time spent in responding to discovery under subdivisions (b)(4)(A) and (b)(4)(B) of this rule; and concerning discovery from an expert obtained under subdivision (b)(4)(A) of this rule the court may require, and concerning discovery obtained under subdivision (b)(4)(B) of this rule shall require, the party seeking discovery to pay the other party a fair part of the fees and expenses reasonably incurred by the latter party in obtaining facts and opinions from the expert.

(D) As used in these rules an expert shall be an expert witness as defined in rule 1.390(a).

(5) Claims of Privilege or Protection of Trial Preparation Materials. When a party withholds information otherwise discoverable under these rules by claiming that it is privileged or subject to protection as trial preparation material, the party shall make the claim expressly and shall describe the nature of the documents, communications, or things not produced or disclosed in a manner that, without revealing information itself privileged or protected, will enable other parties to assess the applicability of the privilege or protection.

(c) Protective Orders. Upon motion by a party or by the person from whom discovery is sought, and for good cause shown, the court in which the action is pending may make any order to protect a party or person from annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden or expense that justice requires, including one or more of the following: (1) that the discovery not be had; (2) that the discovery may be had only on specified terms and conditions, including a designation of the time or place; (3) that the discovery may be had only by a method of discovery other than that selected by the party seeking discovery; (4) that certain matters not be inquired into, or that the scope of the discovery be limited to certain matters; (5) that discovery be conducted with no one present except persons designated by the court; (6) that a deposition after being sealed be opened only by order of the court; (7) that a trade secret or other confidential research, development, or commercial information not be disclosed or be disclosed only in a designated way; and (8) that the parties simultaneously file specified documents or information enclosed in sealed envelopes to be opened as directed by the court. If the motion for a protective order is denied in whole or in part, the court may, on such terms and conditions as are just, order that any party or person provide or permit discovery. The provisions of rule 1.380(a)(4) apply to the award of expenses incurred in relation to the motion.

(d) Sequence and Timing of Discovery. Except as provided in subdivision (b)(4) or unless the court upon motion for the convenience of parties and witnesses and in the interest of justice orders otherwise, methods of discovery may be used in any sequence, and the fact that a party is conducting discovery, whether by deposition or otherwise, shall not delay any other party's discovery.

(e) Supplementing of Responses. A party who has responded to a request for discovery with a response that was complete when made is under no duty to supplement the response to include information thereafter acquired.

Committee Notes

1972 Amendment. The rule is derived from Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26 as amended in 1970. Subdivisions (a), (b)(2), and (b)(3) are new. Subdivision (c) contains material from former rule 1.310(b). Subdivisions (d) and (e) are new, but the latter is similar to former rule 1.340(d). Significant changes are made in discovery from experts. The general rearrangement of the discovery rule is more logical and is the result of 35 years of experience under the federal rules.

1988 Amendment. Subdivision (b)(2) has been added to enable discovery of the existence and contents of indemnity agreements and is the result of the enactment of sections 627.7262 and 627.7264, Florida Statutes, proscribing the joinder of insurers but providing for disclosure. This rule is derived from Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(b)(2). Subdivisions (b)(2) and (b)(3) have been redesignated as (b)(3) and (b)(4) respectively.

The purpose of the amendment to subdivision (b)(3)(A) (renumbered (b)(4)(A)) is to allow, without leave of court, the depositions of experts who have been disclosed as expected to be used at trial. The purpose of subdivision (b)(4)(D) is to define the term "expert" as used in these rules.

1996 Amendment. The amendments to subdivision (b)(4)(A) are derived from the Supreme Court's decision in Elkins v. Syken, 672 So. 2d 517 (Fla. 1996). They are intended to avoid annoyance, embarrassment, and undue expense while still permitting the adverse party to obtain relevant information regarding the potential bias or interest of the expert witness.

Subdivision (b)(5) is added and is derived from Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(b)(5) (1993).

Court Commentary

2000 Amendment. Allstate Insurance Co. v. Boecher, 733 So.2d 993, 999 (Fla. 1999), clarifies that subdivision (b)(4)(A)(iii) is not intended "to place a blanket bar on discovery from parties about information they have in their possession about an expert, including the party's financial relationship with the expert."

RULE 1.290. DEPOSITIONS BEFORE ACTION OR PENDING APPEAL

(a) Before Action.

(1) Petition. A person who desires to perpetuate that person's own testimony or that of another person regarding any matter that may be cognizable in any court of this state may file a verified petition in the circuit court in the county of the residence of any expected adverse party. The petition shall be entitled in the name of the petitioner and shall show: (1) that the petitioner expects to be a party to an action cognizable in a court of Florida, but is presently unable to bring it or cause it to be brought, (2) the subject matter of the expected action and the petitioner's interest therein, (3) the facts which the petitioner desires to establish by the proposed testimony and the petitioner's reasons for desiring to perpetuate it, (4) the names or a description of the persons the petitioner expects will be adverse parties and their addresses so far as known, and (5) the names and addresses of the persons to be examined and the substance of the testimony which the petitioner expects to elicit from each; and shall ask for an order authorizing the petitioner to take the deposition of the persons to be examined named in the petition for the purpose of perpetuating their testimony.

(2) Notice and Service. The petitioner shall thereafter serve a notice upon each person named in the petition as an expected adverse party, together with a copy of the petition, stating that the petitioner will apply to the court at a time and place named therein for an order described in the petition. At least 20 days before the date of hearing the notice shall be served either within or without the county in the manner provided by law for service of summons, but if such service cannot with due diligence be made upon any expected adverse party named in the petition, the court may make an order for service by publication or otherwise, and shall appoint an attorney for persons not served in the manner provided by law for service of summons who shall represent them, and if they are not otherwise represented, shall cross-examine the deponent.

(3) Order and Examination. If the court is satisfied that the perpetuation of the testimony may prevent a failure or delay of justice, it shall make an order designating or describing the persons whose depositions may be taken and specifying the subject matter of the examination and whether the deposition

FIFTEENTH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT
IN AND FOR PALM BEACH
COUNTY, FLORIDA

CASE NO: 03 CA-005045 AI

COLEMAN (PARENT) HOLDINGS, INC.,

Plaintiff,

v.

MORGAN STANLEY & CO., INC.,

Defendant.

MORGAN STANLEY & CO. INCORPORATED'S OBJECTIONS TO COLEMAN (PARENT) HOLDINGS, INC. FIRST REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS

Pursuant to Rules 1.280 and 1.350 of the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure, defendant, Morgan Stanley & Co. Incorporated ("MS & Co.") hereby interposes the following objections to Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc.'s ("CPH") First Request for Production of Documents ("Request for Production").

GENERAL OBJECTIONS

The following general objections apply to all specifications of CPH's Request for Production. Each General Objection is hereby incorporated in the response to each request herein as if fully set forth:

1. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production on the ground that discovery at this stage of the litigation would result in unnecessary burden and expense to MS & Co. On June 25, 2003, MS & Co. filed a Motion to Dismiss Or In the Alternative For Judgment on the Pleadings that is potentially dispositive of all of CPH's claims and will allow the Court to dismiss CPH's Complaint as a matter of law. Requiring MS & Co. to respond to CPH's Request for Production before the Court has had an opportunity to rule on this case-dispositive motion is unduly burdensome and would require MS & Co. to incur additional and unnecessary expense. MS & Co. is simultaneously filing a Motion To Stay Discovery, and hereby incorporates by reference all of the arguments contained in that Motion to Temporarily Stay as general objections to the entire Request for Production.

2. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production as over broad and unduly burdensome. CPH has requested the production of impermissibly broad categories of documents that would require MS & Co. to collect, review and produce potentially hundreds of thousands of pages of documents, e-mails, electronic documents on servers and hard drives, and other materials from multiple MS & Co. business locations around the United States. MS & Co. should not be required to shoulder this burden that goes well beyond the requirements of the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure, particularly where, as here, MS & Co.'s Motion to Dismiss Or In the Alternative For Judgment on the Pleadings is potentially dispositive of all of CPH's claims.

3. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production because many of these requests seek documents which MS & Co. had produced in connection with other related actions. CPH has obtained or has access to copies of MS & Co.'s prior productions, and therefore already has documents responsive to these requests in its possession. MS & Co. should not be required to bear the burden of expending valuable time and financial resources to search for, review and produce documents that CPH already has in its possession.

4. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production to the extent that it seeks documents that are protected from disclosure by the attorney-client, attorney work product, other applicable common law or statutory privileges, or which are otherwise immune from discovery (hereinafter referred to as "Privileges"). MS & Co. expressly reserves the right to assert any and all common law or statutory privileges to which MS & Co. and its attorneys are entitled under applicable law. MS & Co. will exchange with CPH a categorization of documents not produced based on a claim of privilege or discovery immunity at the time the documents are produced, or at such time as may be agreed upon by the parties.

5. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production to the extent it seeks documents not relevant to the subject matter of this litigation or not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

6. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production, including the Instructions, to the extent it purports to impose requirements beyond those specified by the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure, discovery guidelines of this Court, and applicable case law.

7. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production to the extent it calls for documents which are in the public domain and accessible to all parties.

8. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production to the extent that it is intended to harass or annoy MS & Co. or its employees, to create additional and unnecessary expense for MS & Co., or intended to serve any other improper purpose.

9. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production to the extent it seeks the production of documents beyond MS & Co.'s possession, custody or control. Any statement by MS & Co. to the effect that it will produce responsive documents shall not be construed as an admission that any such documents exist or are within MS & Co.'s possession, custody or control.

10. MS & Co.'s responses to CPH's document requests shall not be construed in any way as an admission that any definition provided by CPH is either factually correct or legally binding upon MS & Co., or a waiver of any of MS & Co.'s Objections including, but not limited to, objections regarding discoverability and admissibility of documents.

11. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production, including the Instructions, to the extent it purports to impose a continuing duty of supplementation extending beyond the requirements of the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure, discovery guidelines of this Court, or applicable case law.

12. MS & Co.'s objections are based on its investigations and discovery to date. MS & Co. expressly reserves the right to modify and supplement these objections.

MS & Co.’s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to the definition of “Coleman” as overbroad on the grounds that such a definition is vague and ambiguous and purports to impute to MS & Co. the responsibility for ascertaining relationships and affiliations unknown to MS & Co., as well as determining the present and former officers, directors, employees, representatives, agents, and all other persons acting or purporting to act on its behalf.

MS & Co.’s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to the definition of the term “documents” as overly broad, unduly burdensome, and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence to the extent it purports to require a search of all electronic media without regard for the undue expense and burden of such an undertaking in light of the marginal benefits to be obtained from such a search.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to the definition of the term "MS & Co." on the ground that its adoption would require a document search that is overly broad, unduly burdensome, and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence to the extent that it may be construed to require MS & Co. to produce documents that are not within its actual "possession, custody, or control" pursuant to Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.350(a).

Further, MS & Co. objects to this definition to the extent that it purports to impose on MS & Co. the obligation to provide documents outside of its possession, custody, or control.

INSTRUCTION NO. 3

The relevant period, unless otherwise indicated, shall be from January 1 1997 through the date of trial of this matter, and shall include all documents and information which relate in whole or in part to such period, or to events or circumstances during such period, even though dated, prepared, generated, or received prior to or subsequent to that period. Please supplement or correct your responses to these requests if, at any time, you become aware that your responses are incomplete or incorrect in any respect.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this Instruction as vague and ambiguous insofar as it refers to documents and information "which relate in whole or in part to" the relevant period, or "to events or circumstances during such period." MS & Co. also objects to this Instruction to the extent that it purports to impose a continuing duty of supplementation not required by the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure.

INSTRUCTION NO. 4

If you claim the attorney-client privilege, or any other privilege or work-product protection for all or any portion of a document, you shall provide a privilege log that describes the withheld material sufficiently to allow CPH to test the privilege or protection asserted.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. will exchange with CPH a privilege log listing otherwise responsive documents for which privilege is claimed within thirty (30) days after the categories of documents that include such documents for which privilege is claimed are produced, either pursuant to unobjected-to discovery requests or pursuant to Court order.

All documents concerning your efforts to have Sunbeam retain or maintain your investment banking and/or securities underwriting services.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

In addition to the General Objections set forth above, MS & Co. objects to this request because it seeks documents which MS & Co. had produced in connection with other related actions. MS & Co.'s Objections:

In addition to the General Objections set forth above, MS & Co. objects to this request because it seeks documents which MS & Co. had produced in connection with other related actions. Documents previously produced by MS & Co. include all documents responsive to this request. CPH has obtained or has access to MS & Co.'s prior productions, and therefore already has documents responsive to this request in its possession. In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 49 and 59.

Further, MS & Co. objects to this request on the ground that it consists of two distinct requests which are each overly broad and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

MS & Co. further objects to the Request to the extent that it seeks documents “that describe or record any aspect of their activities concerning any services performed on behalf of, or concerning, Sunbeam” as duplicative of Request 31.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 3

All documents concerning any investigation, analysis, or due diligence of Sunbeam conducted by you or on your behalf in 1997 or 1998.

MS & Co.’s Objections:

In addition to the General Objections set forth above, MS & Co. objects to this request because it seeks documents which MS & Co. had produced in connection with other related actions. Documents previously produced by MS & Co. include all documents responsive to this request. CPH has obtained or has access to MS & Co.’s prior productions, and therefore already has documents responsive to this request in its possession. DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 4

All documents concerning any investigation, analysis, or due diligence of Coleman or CPH conducted by you or on your behalf in 1997 or 1998.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 49 and 59.

Further, MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents "conducted . . . on your behalf" as being vague and ambiguous. MS & Co. also objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents which are not in MS & Co.'s possession or control.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 5

All documents concerning your attempts in 1997 or 1998 to locate someone to purchase or otherwise acquire Sunbeam, whether through merger, purchase, transfer of assets or securities, or otherwise.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

In addition to the General Objections set forth above, MS & Co. objects to this request because it seeks documents which MS & Co. had produced in connection with other related actions. Documents previously produced by MS & Co. include all documents responsive to this request. CPH has obtained or has access to MS & Co.'s prior productions, and therefore already has documents responsive to this request in its possession. In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 49 and 59.

Documents previously produced by MS & Co. include all documents responsive to this request. CPH has obtained or has access to MS & Co.'s prior productions, and therefore already has documents responsive to this request in its possession. In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 49 and 59.

In addition to the General Objections set forth above, MS & Co. objects to this request because it seeks documents which MS & Co. had produced in connection with other related actions. Documents previously produced by MS & Co. include all documents responsive to this request. CPH has obtained or has access to MS & Co.'s prior productions, and therefore already has documents responsive to this request in its possession. In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 49 and 59.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 8

All documents concerning the closing of the Coleman Transaction, including without limitation all documents concerning the decision to close the Coleman Transaction.

MS & Co. further objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents that had not in the custody or control of MS & Co. Given that the decision to close the Coleman Transaction was made by the Sunbeam Board of Directors -- not MS & Co. -- many of the requested documents will in fact not be within MS & Co.'s custody or control.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 9

All documents concerning the meetings of Sunbeam's Board of Directors in 1997 and 1998.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

In addition to the General Objections set forth above, MS & Co. objects to this request because it seeks documents which MS & Co. had produced in connection with other related actions. Documents previously produced by MS & Co. include all documents responsive to this request. CPH has obtained or has access to MS & Co.'s prior productions, and therefore already has documents responsive to this request in its possession. In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 49 and 59.

MS & Co. objects to the Request for “[a]ll documents concerning the meetings of Sunbeam’s Board of Directors” as vague, ambiguous, overbroad and burdensome. MS & Co. understands this request to cover all documents regarding all meetings of the Sunbeam Board of Directors, regardless of whether such documents, or such meetings, addresses the Sunbeam/Coleman transaction at issue in this litigation therefore it is irrelevant to this litigation and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

MS & Co. further objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents that had not in the possession or control of MS & Co. Given that the decision to close the Coleman Transaction was made by the Sunbeam Board of Directors -- not MS & Co. -- many of the requested documents will in fact not be within MS & Co.’s possession or control.

In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 49 and 59.

MS & Co. objects to this request as vague, ambiguous, overbroad and burdensome. MS & Co. understands this request to cover all documents regarding any research analyst’s coverage of Sunbeam, or its securities, regardless of whether the analyst was affiliated with MS & Co. or whether such coverage pertained to the Sunbeam/Coleman transaction at issue in this litigation, therefore it is irrelevant to this litigation and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

MS & Co. further objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents which are not in MS & Co.'s possession or control. MS & Co. also objects to this request to the extent that it assumes the existence of such a "discussion, promise, agreement or plan."

CPH has obtained or has access to MS & Co.'s prior productions, and therefore already has documents responsive to this request in its possession. MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. further objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents which are not in MS & Co.'s possession or control. CPH has obtained or has access to MS & Co.'s prior productions, and therefore already has documents responsive to this request in its possession. In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 49 and 59.

MS & Co. further objects to this request to the extent that it seeks the production of documents which are not in MS & Co.'s custody or control. MS & Co. objects to this request for all documents concerning “the events that took place” on March 19, 1998 as vague, ambiguous and over broad.

CPH has obtained or has access to MS & Co.’s prior productions, and therefore already has documents responsive to this request in its possession. In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 49 and 59.

MS & Co. further objects to this request to the extent that it seeks the production of documents which are not in MS & Co.’s custody or control. MS & Co. objects to this request for all documents concerning “your communications with Sunbeam on March 18, 1998” as vague, ambiguous and over broad.

already has documents responsive to this request in its possession. In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 49 and 59.

MS & Co. further objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents which are not in MS & Co.'s custody or control.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 27

All documents concerning your communications with Sunbeam on March 24, 1998.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

In addition to the General Objections set forth above, MS & Co. objects to this request because it seeks documents which MS & Co. had produced in connection with other related actions. Documents previously produced by MS & Co. include all documents responsive to this request. CPH has obtained or has access to MS & Co.'s prior productions, and therefore already has documents responsive to this request in its possession. MS & Co. objects to this request for all documents concerning "your communications with Sunbeam on March 24, 1998" as vague, ambiguous and over broad.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 28

All documents concerning Sunbeam's first quarter 1998 sales and/or earnings.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

In addition to the General Objections set forth above, MS & Co. objects to this request because it seeks documents which MS & Co. had produced in connection with other related actions. Documents previously produced by MS & Co. include all documents responsive to this request. CPH has obtained or has access to MS & Co.'s prior productions, and therefore already has documents responsive to this request in its possession. In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 49 and 59.

MS & Co. further objects to this request on the grounds that it is duplicative of Requests 13 and 17. MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents which are not in MS & Co.'s custody or control, are publicly available, and therefore equally accessible by all parties.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 29

All documents concerning the closing of the Subordinated Debenture Offering including without limitation all documents concerning the decision to close the Subordinated Debenture Offering.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

In addition to the General Objections set forth above, MS & Co. objects to this request because it seeks documents which MS & Co. had produced in connection with other related actions. Documents previously produced by MS & Co. include all documents responsive to this request. CPH has obtained or has access to MS & Co.'s prior productions, and therefore already has documents responsive to this request in its possession. In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 49 and 59.

MS & Co. further objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents that had not in the custody or control of MS & Co. Given that the decision to close the Subordinated Debenture Offering was made by the Sunbeam Board of Directors -- not MS & Co. -- many of the requested documents will in fact not be within MS & Co.'s custody or control.

Requiring MS & Co. to produce all documents "concerning the Subordinated Debenture Offering," with no further specification or identification of requested documents would impose an unreasonable and undue burden on MS & Co. It is unreasonable to so broadly tailor a request so as to encompass absolutely every document drafted or received by MS & Co. pertaining to the Subordinated Debenture Offering.

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents that had not in the custody or control of MS & Co.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 32

All documents concerning press releases issued by Sunbeam on October 23, 1997, March 19, 1998, April 3, 1998, May 9, 1998, June 15, 1998, June 25, 1998, June 30, 1998, October 20, 1998, and November 12, 1998.

CPH has obtained or has access to MS & Co.'s prior productions, and therefore already has documents responsive to this request in its possession. In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 49 and 59.

MS & Co. further objects to this request to the extent it calls for documents that are the public domain, and thus equally accessible to all parties, and as duplicative of Request 32. DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 34

In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 49 and 59.

MS & Co. further objects to this request to the extent that it is over broad, unduly burdensome and duplicative of other requests.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 35

All documents concerning the Coleman Transaction.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

In addition to the General Objections set forth above, MS & Co. objects to this request because it seeks documents which MS & Co. had produced in connection with other related actions. Documents previously produced by MS & Co. include all documents responsive to this request. CPH has obtained or has access to MS & Co.'s prior productions, and therefore already has documents responsive to this request in its possession. In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 49 and 59.

MS & Co. objects to this request as vague, ambiguous, overbroad, and unduly burdensome. Requiring MS & Co. to produce all documents "concerning the Coleman Transaction," with no further specification or identification of requested documents would impose an unreasonable and undue burden on MS & Co. It is unreasonable to so broadly tailor a request so as to encompass absolutely every document pertaining to the Coleman Transaction.

All documents concerning the Subordinated Debenture Offering.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

In addition to the General Objections set forth above, MS & Co. objects to this request because it seeks documents which MS & Co. had produced in connection with other related actions. In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 49 and 59.

MS & Co. further objects to this request as vague, ambiguous, overbroad, unduly burdensome, and duplicative of Requests 10, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 26, 29 and 36. Additionally, this request is verbatim the same as request 30. MS & Co. will not produce documents responsive to this request.

In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 49 and 59.

Furthermore, MS & Co. objects to this request as vague, overbroad, and unduly burdensome. This requests seeks documents that are irrelevant to this litigation and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 38

All documents concerning the Scott Paper Company.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request as vague, ambiguous, overly broad, and unduly unduly burdensome. Further, MS & Co. objects to this request in that it is wholly irrelevant to the instant litigation and is not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. MS & Co. had no interactions with the Scott Paper Company, or with Albert Dunlap or Russell Kersh during their tenures at the Scott Paper Company. The Scott Paper Company is not party to this action. MS & Co. will not produce documents responsive to this request.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 39

All documents concerning Coleman or CPH.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

In addition to the General Objections set forth above, MS & Co. objects to this request because it seeks documents which MS & Co. had produced in connection with other related actions. In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 49 and 59.

MS & Co. objects to this request as vague, ambiguous, overbroad, and unduly burdensome. Furthermore, this request also is duplicative of Requests 4, 8, 12, 15, 16, 34, 35, and 40. Requiring MS & Co. to produce all documents “concerning Coleman or CPH,” with no further specification or identification of requested documents would impose an unreasonable and undue burden on MS & Co. It is unreasonable to so broadly tailor a request so as to encompass absolutely every document pertaining to Coleman or CPH.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 40

All documents concerning MacAndrews & Forbes Holdings, Inc. with respect to Sunbeam, Coleman or CPH.

MS & Co.’s Objections:

In addition to the General Objections set forth above, MS & Co. objects to this request because it seeks documents which MS & Co. had produced in connection with other related actions. Documents previously produced by MS & Co. include all documents responsive to this request. CPH has obtained or has access to MS & Co.’s prior productions, and therefore already has documents responsive to this request in its possession. In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 49 and 59.

MS & Co. objects to this request as vague, ambiguous, overbroad, and unduly burdensome. Furthermore, this request also is duplicative of Requests 4, 8, 12, 15, 16, 34, 35, and 39. Requiring MS & Co. to produce all documents concerning MacAndrews & Forbes Holdings, Inc., despite the further specification of documents relating to the equally overbroad “Sunbeam, Coleman or CPH,” would impose an unreasonable and undue burden on MS & Co. It is unreasonable to so broadly tailor a request so as to encompass absolutely every document pertaining to MacAndrews & Forbes Holdings, Inc.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 41

All documents concerning the events and matters that are the subject of the Complaint filed this [stet] action.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

In addition to the General Objections set forth above, MS & Co. objects to this request because it seeks documents which MS & Co. had produced in connection with other related actions. Documents previously produced by MS & Co. include all documents responsive to this request. CPH has obtained or has access to MS & Co.'s prior productions, and therefore already has documents responsive to this request in its possession. In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 49 and 59.

MS & Co. objects to this request as vague, ambiguous, overbroad, and unduly burdensome. Furthermore, this request is duplicative of almost all other document requests listed by CPH. Requiring MS & Co. to produce all documents concerning "the events and matters that are the subject of the Complaint" would impose an unreasonable and undue burden on MS & Co. It is unreasonable to so broadly tailor a request so as to encompass absolutely every document pertaining to the subject litigation.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 42

Organizational charts, memoranda, or similar documents that describe the business organizational structure and the administrative, management, and reporting structure of MS & Co. from and including January 1, 1997 through and including December 31, 1998.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

In addition to the General Objections set forth above, MS & Co. objects to this request because it seeks documents which MS & Co. had produced in connection with other related actions. Documents previously produced by MS & Co. include all documents responsive to this request. CPH has obtained or has access to MS & Co.'s prior productions, and therefore already has documents responsive to this request in its possession. In addition, MS & Co.

objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 49 and 59.

MS & Co. further objects to this request on the ground that it is an overbroad request for documents for entities other than MS & Co. and Morgan Stanley Senior Funding.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 43

All documents concerning MS & Co.'s policies, procedures, manuals, guidelines, reference materials, or checklists that were in effect from and including January 1, 1997 through and including December 31, 1998 for the performance of due diligence, including without limitation due diligence performed in connection with underwriting the sale of equity or debt securities.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent that it is vague, ambiguous, over broad and unduly burdensome. To the extent that it seeks documents concerning MS & Co.'s policies, procedures, manuals, etc... for the performance of due diligence other than that due diligence performed in the course of MS & Co.'s engagement for Sunbeam, the request is requesting documents which are irrelevant to this litigation and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. MS & Co. further objects to this request to the extent that it seeks the production of documents which do not exist.

Subject to and without waiving its specific or general objections, MS & Co. will, if necessary following the Court's determination of the pending case-dispositive motions, endeavor to produce any non-privileged documents in its possession, responsive to this request.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 44

All documents concerning employment contracts, performance evaluations, and/or personnel files (including without limitation any documents that describe or discuss the training, experience, competence, and accomplishments) of all MS & Co. personnel who performed services for or on behalf of Sunbeam in 1997 or 1998.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents which are protected by the attorney-client, attorney work product, other common law or statutory privileges, or which are otherwise immune from discovery. MS & Co. expressly reserves the right to assert any and all common law or statutory privileges to which MS & Co. and its attorneys are entitled under applicable law.

This request seeks to compel production of personnel files and performance evaluations of individual MS & Co. employees that are neither relevant to CPH's claims nor reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence and, in addition, would unnecessarily infringe on the privacy interests of those employees.

MS & Co. will not produce documents responsive to this request.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 45

All documents concerning MS & Co.'s performance evaluation criteria or guidelines in effect from and including January 1, 1997 through and including December 31, 1998.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request in that it seeks the production of documents which are irrelevant to this litigation and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

MS & Co. will not produce documents responsive to this request.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 46

All documents concerning MS & Co.'s compensation criteria or guidelines in effect from and including January 1, 1997 through and including December 31, 1998.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request in that it seeks the production of documents which are irrelevant to this litigation and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

MS & Co. will not produce documents responsive to this request.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 47

All marketing or other promotional material prepared or used by, or on behalf of, MS & Co. concerning investment banking or securities underwriting services that were created or used at any time from and including January 1, 1997 through and including December 31, 1998.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request for "all marketing or promotional material...concerning investment banking or securities underwriting services" as overbroad, unduly burdensome and inadequately tailored. Requiring MS & Co. to produce all documents sought in this request would necessitate the production of all of MS & Co.'s promotional materials, in their entirety, which would result in the production of documents irrelevant to this litigation and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. MS & Co. stands ready to negotiate a limitation to this request, if necessary following the Court's determination of the pending case-dispositive motions.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 48

All of your document retention or document destruction policies or procedures or similar procedures for the back-up or deletion of electronic or hard copy documents of any kind for any time during 1997 through the present, including without limitation any amendments to any such policies or procedures, schedules or related documents, and any memoranda or other instructions communicated to your employees concerning the obligation and procedures to be utilized to preserve all relevant documents, including without limitation evidence concerning the Litigations, the Arbitrations, and the SEC Administrative Proceedings.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents which are protected by the attorney-client, attorney work product, other common law or statutory privileges, or which are otherwise immune from discovery. MS & Co. expressly reserves the right to assert any and all common law or statutory privileges to which MS & Co. and its attorneys are entitled under applicable law. Subject to and without waiving its specific or general objections, MS & Co. will, if necessary following the Court's determination of the pending case-dispositive motions, endeavor to produce any formal document retention policies in its possession, custody or control only if CPH agrees to reciprocate by providing the same.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 49

All documents you have provided or produced to any party (whether voluntarily or in response to a document request, subpoena duces tecum, or other process served on you) in any of the Litigations, the Arbitrations, or the SEC Administrative Proceedings (including without limitation any reports, communications, filings, testimony, legal memoranda, statements, or other documents submitted to the Securities & Exchange Commission or any other party).

MS & Co.'s Objections:

In addition to the General Objections set forth above, MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents already in CPH's possession. CPH has already obtained copies of MS & Co.'s prior productions, and therefore already has documents responsive to this request in its possession. Further, MS & Co. objects to this request as being duplicative of other of CPH's requests for production.

Subject to and without waiving its specific or general objections, MS & Co. will, if necessary following the Court's determination of the pending case-dispositive motions, endeavor to produce any non-privileged documents in its possession and which CPH does not already have, responsive to this request only if CPH agrees to reciprocate by providing the same.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 50

All documents you have provided to the SEC, the Attorney General of New York, or any other governmental or regulatory body concerning Sunbeam.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

In addition to the General Objections set forth above, MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents already in CPH's possession. Documents previously produced by MS & Co. include all documents responsive to this request. CPH has already obtained copies of MS & Co.'s prior productions, and therefore already has documents responsive to this request in its possession.

MS & Co. further objects to this request as duplicative of Request No. 49. Subject to and without waiving its specific or general objections, MS & Co. will, if necessary following the Court's determination of the pending case-dispositive motions, endeavor to produce any non-privileged documents in its possession and which CPH does not already have, responsive to this request only if CPH agrees to reciprocate by providing the same.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 51

All documents you have received from the SEC, the Attorney General of New York, or any other governmental or regulatory body concerning Sunbeam.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

In addition to the General Objections set forth above, MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents already in CPH's possession. CPH has already obtained copies of MS & Co.'s prior productions, and therefore may already have documents responsive to this request in its possession.

MS & Co. further objects to this request in that it is vague, ambiguous and over broad. "All documents . . . received from . . . any other governmental or regulatory body concerning Sunbeam” seeks documents which are potentially irrelevant to this litigation, and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

Subject to and without waiving its specific or general objections, MS & Co. will, if necessary following the Court’s determination of the pending case-dispositive motions, endeavor to produce any non-privileged documents in its possession and which CPH does not already have, responsive to this request only if CPH agrees to reciprocate by providing the same.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 52

All discovery requests or subpoenas served on you in any of the Litigations, the Arbitrations, or the SEC Administrative Proceedings.

MS & Co.’s Objections:

In addition to the General Objections set forth above, MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents already in CPH’s possession. CPH has already obtained copies of MS & Co.’s prior productions, and therefore may already have documents responsive to this request in its possession.

Subject to and without waiving its specific or general objections, MS & Co. will, if necessary following the Court’s determination of the pending case-dispositive motions, endeavor to produce any non-privileged documents in its possession and which CPH does not already have, responsive to this request only if CPH agrees to reciprocate by providing the same.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 53

All responses and/or objections that you provided or produced in response to a discovery request or subpoena served on you in any of the Litigations, the Arbitrations, or the SEC Administrative Proceedings.

MS & Co.’s Objections:

In addition to the General Objections set forth above, MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents already in CPH’s possession. CPH has already obtained copies of MS & Co.'s prior productions, and therefore may already have documents responsive to this request in its possession.

Subject to and without waiving its specific or general objections, MS & Co. will, if necessary following the Court's determination of the pending case-dispositive motions, endeavor to produce any non-privileged documents in its possession and which CPH does not already have, responsive to this request only if CPH agrees to reciprocate by providing the same.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 54

All communications concerning any discovery request or subpoena served on you in any of the Litigations, the Arbitrations, or the SEC Administrative Proceedings.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

In addition to the General Objections set forth above, MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents already in CPH's possession. CPH has already obtained copies of MS & Co.'s prior productions, and therefore may already have documents responsive to this request in its possession.

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents which are protected by the attorney-client, attorney work product, other common law or statutory privileges, or which are otherwise immune from discovery. MS & Co. expressly reserves the right to assert any and all common law or statutory privileges to which MS & Co. and its attorneys are entitled under applicable law.

MS & Co. objects to this request for "[a]ll communications concerning any discovery request" as impermissibly overbroad and burdensome, irrelevant to this litigation and not likely to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. MS & Co. stands ready to negotiate a more limited request, if necessary following the Court's determination of the pending case-dispositive motions.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 55

All motions, memoranda, briefs, rulings, orders, or transcripts of proceedings concerning any discovery request, subpoena, or other process in any of the Litigations, the Arbitrations, or the SEC Administrative Proceedings.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents which are publicly available, and therefore equally accessible by all parties, and not in the possession, custody or control of MS & Co. MS & Co. objects to this request for all of the pleadings, papers, orders, and transcripts in all of the prior proceedings only tangentially relating to this action, if at all, as shifting a facially impermissible cost burden onto MS & Co. Furthermore, MS & Co. objects to this request in that it seeks documents irrelevant to this litigation, and not likely to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

MS & Co. will not produce documents responsive to this request.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 56

All privilege logs you prepared in any of the Litigations, the Arbitrations, or the SEC Administrative Proceedings with respect to documents that you withheld from production in response to any document requests, subpoenas duces tecum, or other process.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents which are protected by the attorney-client, attorney work product, other common law or statutory privileges, or which are otherwise immune from discovery. MS & Co. expressly reserves the right to assert any and all common law or statutory privileges to which MS & Co. and its attorneys are entitled under applicable law.

MS & Co. further objects to this request in that it seeks documents irrelevant to this litigation, and not likely to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. Subject to and without waiving its specific or general objections, MS & Co. will, if necessary following the Court's determination of the pending case-dispositive motions, endeavor to produce any non-privileged documents in its possession, responsive to this request only if CPH agrees to reciprocate by providing the same.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 57

All transcripts of and exhibits to any depositions, recorded statements, or affidavits in connection with any of the Litigations, the Arbitrations, or the SEC Administrative Proceedings.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents which are publicly available, and therefore equally accessible by all parties, and not in the possession, custody or control of MS & Co. MS & Co. objects for this request as duplicative of Requests 55 and 61. MS & Co. further objects to this request for all transcripts of depositions and their exhibits, all recorded statements, and all affidavits in all of the prior proceedings relating to this action as once again shifting a facially impermissible cost burden onto MS & Co. Furthermore, MS & Co. objects to this request in that it seeks documents irrelevant to this litigation, and not likely to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

MS & Co. will not produce documents responsive to this request.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 58

All documents obtained by you or produced to you by other parties, third parties, or non-parties (whether voluntarily or in response to any document requests, subpoenas duces tecum, or other process served by you or any other party) concerning Sunbeam.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request as overbroad and vague and will construe this request as calling for documents produced to MS & Co. concerning Sunbeam during the prior Litigations, Arbitrations, or SEC Administrative Proceedings by other parties, third parties or non-parties. MS & Co. further objects to this request to the extent that it calls for the production of documents that were provided to MS & Co. pursuant to the terms of a Confidentiality Agreement. MS & Co. will not produce documents responsive to this request without having first obtained the requisite approval from the original owners of the documents. Subject to and without waiving its specific or general objections, MS & Co. will, if necessary following the Court's determination of the pending case-dispositive motions, endeavor to produce any non-privileged documents in its possession, responsive to this request only if CPH agrees to reciprocate by providing the same.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 59

All document requests, subpoenas duces tecum, interrogatories, requests for admission, responses, or objections that you served on, or received from, any party, third party or non-party in In re Sunbeam Corp., Inc., No. 01-40291 (AJG) (Bankr. S.D.N.Y.) and any adversary proceedings therein.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

In addition to the General Objections set forth above, MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents already in CPH's possession. CPH has already obtained copies of MS & Co.'s prior productions, and therefore may already have documents responsive to this request in its possession.

MS & Co. objects to the request as vague and ambiguous with regard to the phrase "any adversary proceedings therein." MS & Co. objects to this request as being duplicative of CPH's other requests for production specifications, including Request No. 52. Furthermore, MS & Co. objects to this request in that it is overbroad, unduly burdensome, and seeking documents that are potentially irrelevant to this litigation, and not likely to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

Subject to and without waiving its specific or general objections, MS & Co. will, if necessary following the Court's determination of the pending case-dispositive motions, endeavor to produce any non-privileged documents in its possession and which CPH does not already have, responsive to this request only if CPH agrees to reciprocate by providing the same.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 60

All transcripts of any hearings held in connection with the Litigations, the Arbitrations, or the SEC Administrative Proceedings.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents which are publicly available, and therefore equally accessible by all parties, and not in the possession, custody or control of MS & Co. MS & Co. further objects to this request for all transcripts of any hearings regarding the Litigations, Arbitrations, or SEC Administrative Proceedings as once again shifting a facially impermissible cost burden onto MS & Co. Furthermore, MS & Co. objects to this request in that it seeks documents irrelevant to this litigation, and not likely to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

Furthermore, MS & Co. objects to this request as duplicative of the demand in Request 55 for “[a]ll...transcripts of proceedings concerning any...other process in any of the Litigations, the Arbitrations, or the SEC Administrative Proceedings.” MS & Co. will not produce documents responsive to this request.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 61

All affidavits, declarations, or other testimonial statements filed or submitted in connection with any of the Litigations, the Arbitrations, or the SEC Administrative Proceedings.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents which are publicly available, and therefore equally accessible by all parties, and not in the possession, custody or control of MS & Co. MS & Co. objects for this request as duplicative of Requests 55 and 57's demand for “[a]ll transcripts of...recorded statements or affidavits” filed “in connection with any of the Litigations the Arbitrations, or the SEC Administrative Proceedings.” MS & Co. further objects to this request for all affidavits, testimonial statements filed in any of the prior proceedings relating to this action as once again shifting a facially impermissible cost burden onto MS & Co. Furthermore, MS & Co. objects to this request in that it seeks documents irrelevant to this litigation, and not likely to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

MS & Co. will not produce documents responsive to this request.

CASE NO: 2003 CA 005045 AI

Plaintiffs,

vs.

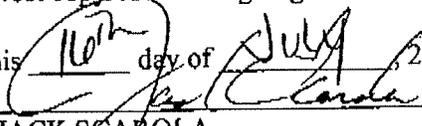

MORGAN STANLEY & CO., INC.

MOTION TO EXTEND DEADLINE FOR SUBMISSION OF MEMORANDUM

Plaintiff, Coleman (Parent) Holdings Inc., moves this Honorable Court to extend the deadline for submission of Plaintiff's memorandum in response to Defendant's Motion to Dismiss, which deadline is presently set at July 25, 2003. In support of this motion, Plaintiff would show that scheduling conflicts among counsel for the parties and the availability of the Court preclude scheduling a hearing on Defendant's Motion to Dismiss before October of 2003. Accordingly, a delay of 30 days in the submission of Plaintiff's memorandum will not delay the disposition of the motion, will permit a more thorough review of the issues, and will still allow more than adequate time for the preparation and submission of a reply well in advance of the contemplated hearing.

COLEMAN (PARENT) HOLDINGS, INC.,

Plaintiff,

v.

MORGAN STANLEY & CO., INC.,

Defendant.

MORGAN STANLEY & CO. INCORPORATED'S SUPPLEMENTAL OBJECTIONS TO COLEMAN (PARENT) HOLDINGS, INC. FIRST REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS

Pursuant to Rules 1.280 and 1.350 of the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure, defendant, Morgan Stanley & Co. Incorporated ("MS & Co.") hereby interposes the following supplemental objections to plaintiff Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc.'s ("CPH") First Request for Production of Documents ("Request for Production").

GENERAL OBJECTIONS

The following general objections apply to all specifications of CPH's Request for Production. Each General Objection is hereby incorporated in the response to each specific request as if fully set forth therein:

1. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production as over broad and unduly burdensome. CPH has requested the production of impermissibly broad categories of documents that, if read literally and in combination with the equally overbroad Definitions, would require MS & Co. to collect, review and produce potentially hundreds of thousands of pages of documents, e-mails, electronic documents on servers and hard drives, and other materials from multiple MS & Co. business locations around the United States. MS & Co. should not be required to shoulder this burden that goes well beyond the requirements of the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure.

2. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production because it seeks documents that MS & Co. has previously produced in response to subpoenas in related legal proceedings. Although it was under no legal obligation to do so, MS & Co. permitted CPH to have access to these documents years ago. The documents requested and produced in these cases are substantially identical to the categories of documents that CPH now seeks. To the extent that MS & Co. has already made these documents available to CPH in prior cases, MS & Co. should not be required to bear the burden of expending valuable time and financial resources to search for, review and produce the documents again.

3. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production to the extent that it seeks documents that are protected from disclosure by the attorney-client, attorney work product, other applicable common law or statutory privileges, or which are otherwise immune from discovery (hereinafter referred to as "Privileges"). MS & Co. expressly reserves the right to assert any and all common law or statutory privileges to which MS & Co. and its attorneys are entitled under applicable law. MS & Co. will exchange a privilege log with CPH in accordance with the terms of the agreement that is currently being negotiated by the parties.

4. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production to the extent it seeks documents not relevant to the subject matter of this litigation or not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

5. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production, including the Instructions, to the extent it purports to impose requirements beyond those specified by the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure, discovery guidelines of this Court, and applicable case law.

6. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production to the extent it calls for documents which are in the public domain and accessible to all parties.

7. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production to the extent that it is intended to harass or annoy MS & Co. or its employees, to create additional and unnecessary expense for MS & Co., or intended to serve any other improper purpose.

8. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production to the extent it seeks the production of documents beyond MS & Co.'s possession, custody or control. Any statement by MS & Co. to the effect that it will produce responsive documents shall not be construed as an admission that any such documents exist -- or that any such documents are within MS & Co.'s possession, custody or control.

9. MS & Co.'s responses to CPH's document requests shall not be construed in any way as an admission that any Definition, statement, or characterization is either factually correct or legally binding upon MS & Co., or a waiver of any objection that MS & Co. is entitled to make at trial, including but not limited to objections regarding relevance and admissibility of documents.

10. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production, including the Instructions, to the extent it purports to impose a continuing duty of supplementation extending beyond the requirements of the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure, discovery guidelines of this Court, or applicable case law.

11. Discovery in this case has just begun. MS & Co.'s objections and responses are based on a good-faith search for documents and information within its possession, custody, and control. MS & Co. expressly reserves the right to amend, modify and supplement its objections and responses.

12. MS & Co. generally objects to the production of any documents unless and until an appropriate Protective Order has been agreed to by both parties to this litigation and entered by the Court.

SPECIFIC OBJECTIONS

Each of the General Objections set forth above is deemed incorporated into each Specific Objection. The enumeration of specific objections does not constitute, and shall not be construed or deemed as, a waiver of any objection listed.

DEFINITION NO. 2

"Coleman" means the Coleman Company, Inc. or any of its present and former officers, directors, employees, representatives, agents, and all other persons acting or purporting to act on its behalf.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to the definition of "Coleman" as overbroad on the grounds that it is vague and ambiguous and purports to impute to MS & Co. the responsibility for ascertaining relationships and affiliations unknown to MS & Co., as well as the responsibility for determining the identities of Coleman's present and former officers, directors, employees, representatives, agents, and all other persons "acting or purporting to act" on its behalf. MS &

Co. will construe references to "Coleman" to mean the Coleman Company, Inc. or any of its present and former officers, directors, employees, representatives, and agents known by MS & Co. to be acting on behalf of the Coleman Company, Inc.

DEFINITION NO. 3

"CPH" means Coleman (Parent) Holdings Inc., Coleman Worldwide Corporation, CLN Holdings, Co., Inc., or any of their present and former officers, directors, employees, representatives, agents, and all other persons acting or purporting to act on their behalf.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to the definition of "CPH" as overbroad on the grounds that such a definition is vague and ambiguous and purports to impute to MS & Co. the responsibility for ascertaining relationships and affiliations unknown to MS & Co., as well as the responsibility for determining the identities of CPH's present and former officers, directors, employees, representatives, agents, and all other persons "acting or purporting to act" on its behalf. MS & Co. will construe references to "CPH" to mean the Coleman (Parent) Holdings Inc., Coleman Worldwide Corporation CLN Holdings Co., Inc., or any of their present and former officers, directors, employees, representatives, and agents known by MS & Co. to be acting on behalf of the Coleman Company, Inc. or Coleman Worldwide Corporation CLN Holdings Co., Inc.

DEFINITION NO. 7

"Documents" means documents whether fixed in tangible medium or electronically stored. The word "documents" shall include, by way of example and not by way of limitation, all of the following: papers, correspondence, trade letters, envelopes, memoranda, telegrams, cables, notes, messages, reports, studies, press releases, comparisons, books, accounts, checks, audio and video recordings and transcriptions thereof, pleadings, testimony, articles, bulletins, pamphlets, brochures, magazines, questionnaires, surveys, charts, newspapers, calendars, desk calendars, pocket calendars, lists, logs, publications, notices, diagrams, instructions, diaries, minutes for meetings, corporate minutes, orders, resolutions, agendas, memorials or notes of oral communications, whether by telephone or face-to-face, contracts, agreements, drafts of or proposed contracts or agreements, memoranda of understanding, letters of intent, computer tapes, computer drives or memories, computer diskettes or disks, e-mail, CD-ROMS, or any other tangible thing on which any handwriting, typing, printing, photostatic, electronic, or other form of communication or information is recorded or reproduced, together with all notations of any of the foregoing, all originals, file copies, or other unique copies of the foregoing, and all versions or drafts thereof, whether used or not.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to the definition of the term "documents" as overly broad, unduly burdensome, and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence to the extent it purports to require a search of all electronic media without regard for the undue expense and burden of such an undertaking in light of the marginal benefits to be obtained from such a search. With respect to electronic media, MS & Co. will review custodian electronic mail files, electronic files of custodians stored on servers, and the hard drives of custodians.

DEFINITION NO. 11

"Morgan Stanley" means Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc. or any of its subsidiaries, divisions, predecessors, successors, present and former employees, representatives, agents, attorneys, accountants, advisors, or all other persons acting or purporting to act on its behalf.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to the definition of the term "Morgan Stanley" on the ground that its adoption would require a document search that is overly broad, unduly burdensome, and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. MS & Co. further objects to this definition to the extent that it purports to require MS & Co. to produce documents that are not within its actual "possession, custody, or control" pursuant to Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.350(a). MS & Co. will construe references to "MS & Co." to mean Morgan Stanley & Co. Incorporated and its officers, directors, former or present employees, representatives, agents, and all other persons known by MS & Co. to be acting on its behalf.

DEFINITION NO. 16

"Sunbeam" means Sunbeam Corporation, or any of its subsidiaries, divisions, affiliates, predecessors, successors, present and former employees, representatives, agents and all other persons acting or purporting to act on its behalf.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to the definition of "Sunbeam" as overbroad on the grounds that it is vague and ambiguous and purports to impute to MS & Co. the responsibility for ascertaining relationships and affiliations unknown to MS & Co., as well as the responsibility for determining the identities of Sunbeam's subsidiaries, divisions, affiliates, predecessors, successors, present and former employees, representatives, agents, and all other persons "acting or purporting to act" on its behalf. MS & Co. will construe references to "Sunbeam" to mean Sunbeam Corporation and any of its officers, directors, former or present employees, representatives, and agents, and all other persons known by MS & Co. to be acting on behalf of Sunbeam Corporation.

DEFINITION NO. 17

"You" or "Your" means Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc. and/or any of its subsidiaries, divisions, predecessors, successors, present or former employees, representatives, agents, attorneys, accountants, advisors, or anyone acting or purporting to act on its behalf.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to the definition of the terms "You" and "Your" on the ground that its adoption would require a document search that is overly broad, unduly burdensome, and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. MS & Co. further objects to this definition to the extent that it purports to require MS & Co. to produce documents that are not within its actual "possession, custody, or control" pursuant to Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.350(a). MS & Co. will construe references to "You" and "Your" to mean Morgan Stanley & Co. Subject to and without waiving its general and specific objections, MS & Co. will produce non-privileged documents, located after a good-faith search of documents in its possession, custody, or control, that are responsive to this request.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 34

All documents concerning communications relating to Sunbeam, Coleman, or CPH, including without limitation internal communications within Morgan Stanley or communications between or among Morgan Stanley and Sunbeam; Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom LLP; Coopers & Lybrand LLP; Llama Company; Arthur Andersen LLP; Sard Verbinnen & Co., Inc.; Hill & Knowlton, Inc.; The Coleman Company, Inc.; Credit Suisse First Boston; Coleman (Parent) Holdings Inc.; MacAndrews & Forbes Holdings, Inc.; Wachtell Lipton, Rosen & Katz; Davis Polk & Wardwell; or any other person or company, and/or any of their respective employees, agents, or representatives.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent it seeks documents which MS & Co. has previously produced in response to subpoenas in related legal proceedings, and which MS & Co. has previously agreed to make available to CPH. In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 2, 49 and 59. MS & Co. further objects to the extent that this request calls for privileged communications.

Subject to and without waiving its general and specific objections, MS & Co. will produce non-privileged documents, located after a good-faith search of documents in its possession, custody, or control, concerning communications relating to Sunbeam Corporation, the Coleman Company, Inc., or Coleman (Parent) Holdings Inc.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 35

All documents concerning the Coleman Transaction.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent it seeks documents which MS & Co. has previously produced in response to subpoenas in related legal proceedings, and which MS & Co. has previously agreed to make available to CPH. In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 49 and 59. Subject to and without waiving its general and specific objections, MS & Co. will produce non-privileged documents, located after a good-faith search of documents in its possession, custody, or control, that are responsive to this request.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 36

All documents concerning the Subordinated Debenture Offering.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent it seeks documents which MS & Co. has previously produced in response to subpoenas in related legal proceedings, and which MS & Co. has previously agreed to make available to CPH. In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 10, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 26, 29, 36, 49 and 59. Additionally, this request is verbatim the same as request 30. Subject to and without waiving its general and specific objections, MS & Co. will produce non-privileged documents, located after a good-faith search of documents in its possession, custody, or control, that are responsive to this request.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 37

All documents concerning Albert Dunlap and/or Russell Kersh.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent it seeks documents which MS & Co. has previously produced in response to subpoenas in related legal proceedings, and which MS & Co. has previously agreed to make available to CPH. In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 49 and 59. Subject to and without waiving its general and specific objections, MS & Co. will produce non-privileged documents, located after a good-faith search of documents in its possession, custody, or control, that are responsive to this request .

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 38

All documents concerning the Scott Paper Company.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request as vague, ambiguous, overly broad, and unduly unduly burdensome. Further, MS & Co. objects to this request in that it is wholly irrelevant to the instant litigation and is not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. The Scott Paper Company is not party to this action. MS & Co. will not produce documents responsive to this request.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 39

All documents concerning Coleman or CPH.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent it seeks documents which MS & Co. has previously produced in response to subpoenas in related legal proceedings, and which MS & Co. has previously agreed to make available to CPH. In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 4, 8, 12, 15, 16, 34, 35, 40, 49 and 50. Requiring MS & Co. to produce all documents "concerning Coleman or CPH," with no further specification or identification of requested documents would impose an unreasonable and undue burden on MS & Co. It is unreasonable to so broadly tailor a request so as to encompass absolutely every document pertaining to Coleman or CPH. Subject to and without waiving its general and specific objections, MS & Co. will produce non-privileged documents, located after a good-faith search of documents in its possession, custody, or control, relating to the Coleman Company, Inc. or Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc. to the extent that they also relate to Sunbeam Corporation and/or the Coleman Transaction.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 40

All documents concerning MacAndrews & Forbes Holdings, Inc. with respect to Sunbeam, Coleman or CPH.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent it seeks documents which MS & Co. has previously produced in response to subpoenas in related legal proceedings, and which MS & Co. has previously agreed to make available to CPH. In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 4, 8, 12, 15, 16, 34, 35, 39, 49 and 59. MS & Co. further objects to this request as overbroad and unduly burdensome. It is unreasonable to so broadly tailor a request so as to encompass absolutely every document pertaining to MacAndrews & Forbes Holdings, Inc. Subject to and without waiving its general and specific objections, MS & Co. will produce non-privileged documents, located after a good-faith search of documents in its possession, custody, or control, relating to MacAndrews & Forbes Holdings, Inc. to the extent that they also relate to Sunbeam Corporation and/or the Coleman Transaction.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 41

All documents concerning the events and matters that are the subject of the Complaint filed this [sic] action.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent it seeks documents which MS & Co. has previously produced in response to subpoenas in related legal proceedings, and which MS & Co. has previously agreed to make available to CPH. MS & Co. also objects to this request as vague, ambiguous, overbroad, and unduly burdensome. Furthermore, this request is duplicative of almost all other document requests listed by CPH. Requiring MS & Co. to produce all documents concerning "the events and matters that are the subject of the Complaint" would impose an unreasonable and undue burden on MS & Co. It is unreasonable to so broadly tailor a request so as to encompass absolutely every document pertaining to the subject litigation. Subject to and without waiving its general and specific objections, MS & Co. will produce non-privileged documents, located after a good-faith search of documents in its possession, custody, or control, that are responsive to this request, insofar as the documents are also responsive to one of the other requests.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 42

Organizational charts, memoranda, or similar documents that describe the business organizational structure and the administrative, management, and reporting structure of Morgan Stanley from and including January 1, 1997 through and including December 31, 1998.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent it seeks documents which MS & Co. has previously produced in response to subpoenas in related legal proceedings, and which MS & Co. has previously agreed to make available to CPH. In addition, MS & Co. objects to this request because it is duplicative of other document requests, including, but not limited to Request Nos. 49 and 59. Subject to and without waiving its general and specific objections, MS & Co. will produce non-privileged documents, located after a good-faith search of documents in its possession, custody, or control, sufficient to show the structure of Morgan Stanley & Co. Incorporated and Morgan Stanley Senior Funding Incorporated.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 43

All documents concerning Morgan Stanley's policies, procedures, manuals, guidelines, reference materials, or checklists that were in effect from and including January 1, 1997 through and including December 31, 1998 for the performance of due diligence, including without limitation due diligence performed in connection with underwriting the sale of equity or debt securities.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent that it is vague, ambiguous, over broad and unduly burdensome. To the extent that it seeks documents concerning due diligence other than that due diligence performed in the course of MS & Co.'s engagement for Sunbeam, the request is requesting documents which are irrelevant to this litigation and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. Subject to and without waiving its general and specific objections, MS & Co. will produce non-privileged documents, located after a good-faith search of documents in its possession, custody, or control, relating to the due diligence performed by MS & Co. in the course of its engagement with Sunbeam Corporation or relating to the Coleman Transaction, and any general due diligence materials responsive to this request. MS & Co. will not produce documents that relate to other transactions not relevant to this lawsuit.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 44

All documents concerning employment contracts, performance evaluations, and/or personnel files (including without limitation any documents that describe or discuss the training, experience, competence, and accomplishments) of all Morgan Stanley personnel who performed services for or on behalf of Sunbeam in 1997 or 1998.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents which are protected by the attorney-client, attorney work product, other common law or statutory privileges, or which are otherwise immune from discovery. MS & Co. expressly reserves the right to assert any and all common law or statutory privileges to which MS & Co. and its attorneys are entitled under applicable law.

This request seeks to compel production of personnel files and performance evaluations of individual MS & Co. employees that are neither relevant to CPH's claims nor reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence and, in addition, would unnecessarily infringe on the privacy interests of those employees.

MS & Co. will not produce documents responsive to this request.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 45

All documents concerning Morgan Stanley's performance evaluation criteria or guidelines in effect from and including January 1, 1997 through and including December 31, 1998.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents which are protected by the attorney-client, attorney work product, other common law or statutory privileges, or which are otherwise immune from discovery. MS & Co. expressly reserves the right to assert any and all common law or statutory privileges to which MS & Co. and its attorneys are entitled under applicable law.

MS & Co. objects to this request in that it seeks the production of documents which are irrelevant to this litigation and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. MS & Co. will not produce documents responsive to this request.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 46

All documents concerning Morgan Stanley's compensation criteria or guidelines in effect from and including January 1, 1997 through and including December 31, 1998.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents which are protected by the attorney-client, attorney work product, other common law or statutory privileges, or which are otherwise immune from discovery. MS & Co. expressly reserves the right to assert any and all common law or statutory privileges to which MS & Co. and its attorneys are entitled under applicable law.

MS & Co. objects to this request in that it seeks the production of documents which are irrelevant to this litigation and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. MS & Co. will not produce documents responsive to this request.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 47

All marketing or other promotional material prepared or used by, or on behalf of, Morgan Stanley concerning investment banking or securities underwriting services that were created or used at any time from and including January 1, 1997 through and including December 31, 1998.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request for "all marketing or promotional material...concerning investment banking or securities underwriting services" as overbroad, unduly burdensome and inadequately tailored. Requiring MS & Co. to produce all documents sought in this request would necessitate the production of all of MS & Co.'s promotional materials, in their entirety, which would result in the production of documents irrelevant to this litigation and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. Subject to and without waiving its general and specific objections, MS & Co. will produce any general marketing or promotional materials responsive to this request, and any marketing or promotional material provided or presented to Sunbeam, CPH, or MAFCO, responsive to this request, located after a good-faith search of documents in its possession, custody, or control.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 48

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents which are protected by the attorney-client, attorney work product, other common law or statutory privileges, or which are otherwise immune from discovery. MS & Co. expressly reserves the right to assert any and all common law or statutory privileges to which MS & Co. and its attorneys are entitled under applicable law. Subject to and without waiving its general and specific objections, MS & Co. will produce non-privileged documents, located after a good-faith search of documents in its possession, custody, or control, reflecting document retention policies adopted by MS & Co.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents already in CPH's possession. Further, MS & Co. objects to this request as being duplicative of other of CPH's requests for production. Subject to and without waiving its general and specific objections, MS & Co. will produce non-privileged documents, located after a good-faith search of documents in its possession, custody, or control, that are responsive to this request.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 50

All documents you have provided to the SEC, the Attorney General of New York, or any other governmental or regulatory body concerning Sunbeam.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

Subject: MS & Co.'s Supplemental Objections to CPH's First Request for Production

Attached please find MS & Co.'s supplemental objections, which were sent by fax Friday evening (7/25).

MS & CO.'s Supplemental Objections

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT
IN AND FOR PALM BEACH
COUNTY, FLORIDA

CASE NO: 03 CA-005045 AI

COLEMAN (PARENT) HOLDINGS, INC.,

Plaintiff,

v.

MORGAN STANLEY & CO., INC.,

Defendant.

MORGAN STANLEY & CO. INCORPORATED'S OBJECTIONS TO COLEMAN (PARENT) HOLDINGS, INC. SECOND REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS

Pursuant to Rules 1.280 and 1.350 of the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure, defendant Morgan Stanley & Co. Incorporated ("MS & Co.") hereby interposes the following objections to plaintiff Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc.'s ("CPH") Second Request for Production of Documents ("Request for Production").

GENERAL OBJECTIONS

The following general objections apply to all specifications of CPH's Request for Production. Each General Objection is hereby incorporated in the response to each specific request as if fully set forth therein:

1. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production as over broad and unduly burdensome. CPH has requested the production of impermissibly broad categories of documents that, if read literally and in combination with the equally overbroad Definitions, would require MS & Co. to collect, review and produce potentially hundreds of thousands of pages of documents, e-mails, electronic documents on servers and hard drives, and other materials from multiple MS & Co. business locations around the United States. MS & Co. should not be required to shoulder this burden that goes well beyond the requirements of the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure.

2. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production because it seeks documents that MS & Co. has previously produced in response to subpoenas in related legal proceedings. Although it was under no legal obligation to do so, MS & Co. permitted CPH to have access to these documents years ago. The documents requested and produced in these cases are substantially identical to the categories of documents that CPH now seeks. To the extent that MS & Co. has already made these documents available to CPH in prior cases, MS & Co. should not be required to bear the burden of expending valuable time and financial resources to search for, review and produce the documents again.

3. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production to the extent that it seeks documents that are protected from disclosure by the attorney-client, attorney work product, other applicable common law or statutory privileges, or which are otherwise immune from discovery (hereinafter referred to as "Privileges"). MS & Co. expressly reserves the right to assert any and all common law or statutory privileges to which MS & Co. and its attorneys are entitled under applicable law. MS & Co. will exchange a privilege log with CPH in accordance with the terms of the agreement that is currently being negotiated by the parties.

4. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production to the extent it seeks documents not relevant to the subject matter of this litigation or not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

5. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production, including the Instructions, to the extent it purports to impose requirements beyond those specified by the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure, discovery guidelines of this Court, and applicable case law.

6. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production to the extent it calls for documents which are in the public domain and accessible to all parties.

7. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production to the extent that it is intended to harass or annoy MS & Co. or its employees, to create additional and unnecessary expense for MS & Co., or intended to serve any other improper purpose.

8. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production to the extent it seeks the production of documents beyond MS & Co.'s possession, custody or control. Any statement by MS & Co. to the effect that it will produce responsive documents shall not be construed as an admission that any such documents exist -- or that any such documents are within MS & Co.'s possession, custody or control.

9. MS & Co.'s responses to CPH's document requests shall not be construed in any way as an admission that any Definition, statement, or characterization is either factually correct or legally binding upon MS & Co., or a waiver of any objection that MS & Co. is entitled to make at trial, including but not limited to objections regarding relevance and admissibility of documents.

10. MS & Co. objects to the entire Request for Production, including the Instructions, to the extent it purports to impose a continuing duty of supplementation extending beyond the requirements of the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure, discovery guidelines of this Court, or applicable case law.

11. Discovery in this case has just begun. MS & Co.'s objections and responses are based on a good-faith search for documents and information within its possession, custody, and control. MS & Co. expressly reserves the right to amend, modify and supplement its objections and responses.

12. MS & Co. generally objects to the production of any documents unless and until an appropriate Protective Order has been agreed to by both parties to this litigation and entered by the Court.

SPECIFIC OBJECTIONS

Each of the General Objections set forth above is deemed incorporated into each Specific Objection. The enumeration of specific objections does not constitute, and shall not be construed or deemed as, a waiver of any objection listed.

DEFINITION NO. 2

"Coleman" means the Coleman Company, Inc. or any of its present and former officers, directors, employees, representatives, agents, and all other persons acting or purporting to act on its behalf.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to the definition of "Coleman" as overbroad on the grounds that it is vague and ambiguous and purports to impute to MS & Co. the responsibility for ascertaining relationships and affiliations unknown to MS & Co., as well as the responsibility for determining the identities of Coleman's present and former officers, directors, employees, representatives, agents, and all other persons "acting or purporting to act" on its behalf.

DEFINITION NO. 3

“CPH” means Coleman (Parent) Holdings Inc., Coleman Worldwide Corporation, CLN Holdings, Co., Inc., or any of their present and former officers, directors, employees, representatives, agents, and all other persons acting or purporting to act on their behalf.

MS & Co.’s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to the definition of “CPH” as overbroad on the grounds that such a definition is vague and ambiguous and purports to impute to MS & Co. the responsibility for ascertaining relationships and affiliations unknown to MS & Co., as well as the responsibility for determining the identities of CPH’s present and former officers, directors, employees, representatives, agents, and all other persons “acting or purporting to act” on its behalf.

DEFINITION NO. 7

“Documents” means documents whether fixed in tangible medium or electronically stored. The word “documents” shall include, by way of example and not by way of limitation, all of the following: papers, correspondence, trade letters, envelopes, memoranda, telegrams, cables, notes, messages, reports, studies, press releases, comparisons, books, accounts, checks, audio and video recordings and transcriptions thereof, pleadings, testimony, articles, bulletins, pamphlets, brochures, magazines, questionnaires, surveys, charts, newspapers, calendars, desk calendars, pocket calendars, lists, logs, publications, notices, diagrams, instructions, diaries, minutes for meetings, corporate minutes, orders, resolutions, agendas, memorials or notes of oral communications, whether by telephone or face-to-face, contracts, agreements, drafts of or proposed contracts or agreements, memoranda of understanding, letters of intent, computer tapes, computer drives or memories, computer diskettes or disks, e-mail, CD-ROMS, or any other tangible thing on which any handwriting, typing, printing, photostatic, electronic, or other form of communication or information is recorded or reproduced, together with all notations of any of the foregoing, all originals, file copies, or other unique copies of the foregoing, and all versions or drafts thereof, whether used or not.

MS & Co.’s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to the definition of the term “documents” as overly broad, unduly burdensome, and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence to the extent it purports to require a search of all electronic media without regard for the undue expense and burden of such an undertaking in light of the marginal benefits to be obtained from such a search. With respect to electronic media, MS & Co. will review custodian electronic mail files, electronic files of custodians stored on servers, and the hard drives of custodians.

DEFINITION NO. 11

“Morgan Stanley” means Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc. or any of its subsidiaries, divisions, predecessors, successors, present and former employees, representatives, agents, attorneys, accountants, advisors, or all other persons acting or purporting to act on its behalf.

MS & Co.’s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to the definition of the term “Morgan Stanley” on the ground that its adoption would require a document search that is overly broad, unduly burdensome, and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. MS & Co. further objects to this definition to the extent that it purports to require MS & Co. to produce documents that are not within its actual “possession, custody, or control” pursuant to Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.350(a).

DEFINITION NO. 16

“Sunbeam” means Sunbeam Corporation, or any of its subsidiaries, divisions, affiliates, predecessors, successors, present and former employees, representatives, agents and all other persons acting or purporting to act on its behalf.

MS & Co.’s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to the definition of “Sunbeam” as overbroad on the grounds that it is vague and ambiguous and purports to impute to MS & Co. the responsibility for ascertaining relationships and affiliations unknown to MS & Co., as well as the responsibility for determining the identities of Sunbeam’s subsidiaries, divisions, affiliates, predecessors, successors, present and former employees, representatives, agents, and all other persons “acting or purporting to act” on its behalf.

DEFINITION NO. 17

“You” or “Your” means Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc. and/or any of its subsidiaries, divisions, predecessors, successors, present or former employees, representatives, agents, attorneys, accountants, advisors, or anyone acting or purporting to act on its behalf.

MS & Co.’s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to the definition of the terms “You” and “Your” on the ground that its adoption would require a document search that is overly broad, unduly burdensome, and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. MS & Co. further objects to this definition to the extent that it purports to require MS & Co. to produce documents that are not within its actual “possession, custody, or control” pursuant to Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.350(a).

INSTRUCTION NO. 2

All documents shall be produced in the file folder envelope or other container in which the documents are kept or maintained by you. If, for any reason, the container cannot be produced, produce copies of all labels or other identifying marks.

MS & Co.’s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to Instruction No. 2 insofar as it purports to impose on MS & Co. the obligation to disclose information beyond the scope of obligations imposed by the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure and other applicable law.

INSTRUCTION NO. 3

The relevant period, unless otherwise indicated, shall be from January 1 1997 through the date of trial of this matter, and shall include all documents and information which relate in whole or in part to such period, or to events or circumstances during such period, even though dated, prepared, generated, or received prior to or subsequent to that period. Please supplement or correct your responses to these requests if, at any time, you become aware that your responses are incomplete or incorrect in any respect.

MS & Co.’s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this Instruction to the extent that it purports to impose a continuing duty of supplementation not required by the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure.

INSTRUCTION NO. 4

If you claim the attorney-client privilege, or any other privilege or work-product protection for all or any portion of a document, you shall provide a privilege log that describes the withheld material sufficiently to allow CPH to test the privilege or protection asserted.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. will exchange a privilege log with CPH in accordance with the terms of the agreement that is currently being negotiated by the parties.

All documents concerning, or that may tend to support or refute, your assertion in your answers to paragraphs 3, 58, and 59 of the Complaint that you "performed all of [your] obligations as an underwriter of Sunbeam securities."

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent it seeks documents which MS & Co. has previously produced in response to subpoenas in related legal proceedings, and which MS & Co. has previously agreed to make available to CPH. Subject to and without waiving its general and specific objections, MS & Co. will produce non-privileged documents, located after a good-faith search of documents in its possession, custody, or control, that are responsive to this request.

All documents concerning, or that may tend to support or refute, your assertion in your answer to paragraph 3 of the Complaint that, during the negotiation process, CPH had access to the same documents that Morgan Stanley had access to as a result of its work for Sunbeam.

MS & Co.'s Objections:

Subject to and without waiving its general and specific objections, MS & Co. will produce non-privileged documents, located after a good-faith search of documents in its possession, custody, or control, that are responsive to this request.

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents which are not in MS & Co.'s possession, custody, or control. Subject to and without waiving its general and specific objections, MS & Co. will produce non-privileged documents, located after a good-faith search of documents in its possession, custody, or control, that are responsive to this request.

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 4

MS & Co.'s Objections:

MS & Co. objects to this request to the extent it seeks documents which MS & Co. has previously produced in response to subpoenas in related legal proceedings, and which MS & Co. has previously agreed to make available to CPH. Subject to and without waiving its general and specific objections, MS & Co. will produce non-privileged documents, located after a good-faith search of documents in its possession, custody, or control, that are responsive to this request.

MOTION OF NON-PARTY TO APPEAR THROUGH USE OF COMMUNICATION EQUIPMENT

Non-Party, Bank of America, N.A., pursuant to Rule 2.071(c) of the Florida Judicial Administration Rules, hereby requests this Court that it be permitted to participate through communication equipment in the motion calendar hearing which has been scheduled by plaintiff for Monday, September 29, 2003 and as grounds therefor would show:

1. Bank of America, N.A. is a non-party in this action. Bank of America, N.A. has been served with certain subpoenas to produce documents.
2. Because the subpoenas seek disclosure of banking records protected by Fla. Stat. § 655.059(2)(b), Bank of America, N.A. has advised plaintiff that the documents Bank of America, N.A. has agreed to produce can only be produced upon the entry of an appropriate order pursuant to § 655.059(2)(b).

3. Plaintiff has filed a Motion to Compel, which Bank of America, N. A. has been advised seeks the entry of an order that production of the agreed-upon documents is appropriate under § 655.059(2)(b). Plaintiff, on Tuesday, September 23, 2003, scheduled a hearing on the Motion to Compel for Monday, September 29, 2003, at 8:45 a.m. on the Court's motion calendar. Bank of America, N.A. was not consulted about the hearing date.

4. The undersigned counsel for Bank of America, N.A. cannot be present in West Palm Beach on Monday, September 29, but does not wish to impede the ability of the parties to proceed forward with discovery. Accordingly, Bank of America, N.A. is prepared to proceed with the hearing and appear by telephone. Pursuant to Rule 2.071(c) of the Florida Judicial Administrative Rules, appearance by telephone is appropriate, absent a showing of good cause to deny the request, where the hearing is set for not longer than 15 minutes. The pending motion is set for the Court's motion calendar which is intended to deal with motions of less than 15 minutes.

WHEREFORE, Bank of America, N.A. requests that it be permitted to appear for the above-referenced hearing by telephone or that the hearing be rescheduled to a mutually convenient date.

MORGAN STANLEY & CO., INC.

CASE NO.: 2003 CA 005045 AI

Defendant.

NON-PARTY BANK OF AMERICA, N.A.'S RESPONSE TO MOTION TO COMPEL PRODUCTION

Bank of America, N.A. ("Bank of America") a non-party to the above-styled action, responds to the Motion to Compel of Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc. ("CPH") and states:

1. CPH has filed a Motion to Compel Production ("Motion") directed to non-party Bank of America seeking a ruling from the Court that the production of documents agreed to between CPH and Bank of America may proceed notwithstanding the restrictions on the disclosure of banking records imposed by Fla. Stat. § 655.059(2)(b). As set forth below, Bank of America has no objection to the entry of the order CPH requests so long as the depositor/borrower in question Sunbeam Corporation n/k/a American Household, Inc. is given valid and appropriate notice of the Motion and a reasonable opportunity to respond.

2. The instant subpoena was served upon Bank of America on July 3, 2003 and required the production of documents by July 31, 2003. See Exhibit A.

3. On July 29, 2003, Bank of America, through counsel, responded in writing and requested an extension of the compliance date so that a reasonable document search could be done, and expressly cautioned that many of the documents requested appeared to fall under the protections of Fla. Stat. § 655.059(2)(b). See Exhibit B.

4. Counsel for CPH and Bank of America then conferred and agreed that the compliance date would be extended to August 15, 2003 to allow Bank of America to look for documents and issue a written response to the subpoena, identifying the documents it expected to produce and proposing a time and manner of production. See Exhibit C.

5. The same day, CPH issued a nearly identical replacement subpoena, requiring the deposition of a Bank of America corporate representative in West Palm Beach on August 15, 2003. See Exhibit D.

6. Counsel for Bank of America did not learn of the service of the replacement subpoena until August 12, 2003, since, like the original, it was purportedly served directly upon unknown personnel at a retail bank branch in West Palm Beach. Upon receipt, counsel for Bank of America wrote to counsel for CPH and objected to the deposition aspect of the replacement subpoena since counsel and Bank of America had not been consulted in advance as to scheduling. See Exhibit E.

7. Counsel for CPH and Bank of America conferred, and on August 13, 2003 counsel for CPH indicated that no deposition was necessary, and counsel then exchanged letters confirming their previous agreement that Bank of America would by August 15, 2003 produce a list of documents it would produce and otherwise respond to the subpoena. See composite Exhibit F.

8. On August 15, 2003 Bank of America served its written response and objections to the subpoena identifying a number of documents to be produced, and, importantly, asserting objections to significant number of the individual subpoena requests. See composite Exhibit G. In the response and objection letter, Bank of America indicated that it would produce, without objection, the following documents responding to the subpoena:

- The March 30, 1998 Credit Agreement
- Agreements and closing documents ancillary thereto
- Amendments to and waivers of the March 30, 1998 Credit Agreement
- Circulated drafts of the March 30, 1998 Credit Agreement
- Documents pertaining to analyses or evaluations of the Sunbeam-Coleman transaction
- Borrowing requests issued by Sunbeam pertaining to the March 30, 1998 Credit Agreement
- Brokerage reports and other documents valuing Sunbeam and Sunbeam stock
- News articles and wire stories discussing changes in the price of Sunbeam stock and related issues
- Documents pertaining to meetings among Sunbeam, Bank of America, First Union, and Morgan Stanley
- Pledge agreements and other documents regarding the collateral pledged under the March 30, 1998 Credit Agreement
- The Morgan Stanley Offering Statement pertaining to the subordinated debentures
- Documents pertaining to Sunbeam's Q1 1998 financials
- 1998 Sunbeam press releases

However, production could not yet issue since the majority of these documents are protected by Fla. Stat. § 655.059(2)(b) as confidential banking and borrowing records.

9. In an attempt to resolve the obstacle to production imposed by Fla. Stat. § 655.059(2)(B), counsel for CPH on August 19, 2003 wrote to counsel for Bank of America indicating that a confidentiality order had been entered in this action between the parties. See Exhibit H.

10. By return letter dated August 20, 2003, counsel for Bank of America inquired as to whether the confidentiality order addressed the restriction imposed by Fla. Stat. § 655.059(2)(b). See Exhibit I. Upon receipt of a copy of the confidentiality order, it was apparent that it did not encompass the restrictions imposed by Fla. Stat. § 655.059(2)(b). Accordingly, counsel for Bank of America wrote to counsel for CPH on September 12, 2003 and indicated that, to satisfy the statute, either the protected party—Sunbeam—would need to consent to the request for documents or a Court order requiring disclosure and vitiating the protections of the statute would need to issue before Bank of America could proceed to turn over the documents it agreed to produce on August 15, 2003. See Exhibit J.

11. Thereafter, CPH filed its Motion to Compel Production on September 19, 2003, which, notably, does not state any basis for compelling the production of the documents protected by Fla. Stat. § 655.059(2)(b), but which presumably seeks an order from the Court vitiating the protections of the statute.

12. Insofar as CPH seeks an order removing the protections of Fla. Stat. § 655.059(2)(b) for those documents Bank of America has agreed to produce, Bank of America has no objection to the relief CPH seeks in its Motion, but questions whether the protected party—Sunbeam Corporation n/k/a American Household, Inc.—has been given reasonable notice¹ of the basis of the Motion. However, it is Bank of America's understanding the CPH's Motion is not directed toward those documents for which Bank of America asserted a timely, valid objection in its August 15, 2003 letter, and for which a more extensive evidentiary hearing and briefing would be required, given the undue burden analysis the objections implicate.

WHEREFORE, non-party Bank of America, N.A. respectfully requests that this Court enter an Order ruling on whether the protections of Fla. Stat. § 655.059(2)(b) prevent the discovery by CPH of the above-described documents in the custody of Bank of America, and for such other relief as is just and proper.

Re: Subpoenas issued by Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc. to Bank of America
National Trust and Savings Association

Dear Mr. Scarola:

I represent Bank of America, N.A. On July 3, 2003, you served a Palm Beach, Florida office of Bank of America, N.A. with a July 1, 2003 Subpoena Duces Tecum Without Deposition directed to Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association. While I have some concerns about this subpoena, which I will share with you, I hope that we can work together in a cooperative fashion to meet your client's need for documents while protecting Bank of America, N.A.'s interests and non-party rights.

At the outset, it appears that the subpoena was not served according to the requirements of Section 48.081, Florida Statutes, in that no attempt was made to serve any officer of Bank of America, N.A. prior to the July 3rd service on the Bank of America office in Palm Beach. This resulted in an unusual delay in processing the subpoena and getting it before lawyers' eyes.

As a matter of pure logistics, the subpoena as written is onerous. There are 58 separate categories of requested documents, and the subpoena requires production in West Palm Beach twenty-seven days after service. There will be significant costs involved in responding.

I also have concerns about the substance of many of the requests in the subpoenas. They appear to ask for documents relating to Sunbeam's banking and loan records, which records are expressly confidential and not subject to production via subpoena under Florida Statute § 655.059.

Many of the requests are extremely broad, seeking "all" documents over a 7 year span relating to entire corporations and what may be lengthy business relationships. I have not yet had the opportunity to review the claims and defenses in your lawsuit, to determine whether the dispute between your client and Morgan Stanley makes material the entire scope of the documents you have requested.

To preserve these and other objections to the subpoena, I must take action on or before the day of compliance, which is Thursday, July 31st. I would prefer to avoid moving to quash at this time because I think that the most efficient, most reasonable course of action for both of our clients is to cooperate and agree on a document search and production that is fair to Bank of America, N.A. and necessary to the maintenance of your client's case. To that end, I suggest that you agree to a thirty (30) day extension of the response date to your July 1st subpoena in case number 005045, and the identical subpoena you executed on July 8th in the sister litigation between CPH and Morgan Stanley in case number 005565. During that time I will work with you to try to reach agreement on what will be produced, when and under what terms. If we are unable to reach complete agreement, we can then turn to the Court with each of our rights preserved.

I will call you shortly to discuss my proposal. Thank you.

Very truly yours,

David M. Wells

Dear Mr. Scarola:

This will confirm that you have agreed to extend by fifteen days, or until August 15, 2003, the deadline for Bank of America, N.A. to provide a written response and/or motion identifying any objections to the two subpoenas you served on Bank of America, N.A. and identifying any documents that will be produced and when. As we discussed, I will get back with you next week to discuss the issues these subpoenas raise.

Very truly yours,

David M. Wells

Re: Subpoenas Issued by Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc. to Bank of America
National Trust and Savings Association

Dear Mr. Scarola:

We have just learned that on July 29, 2003 you executed notices of deposition for the August 15, 2003 deposition of a Bank of America custodian of documents. We are not aware of any deposition subpoena being served on Bank of America, and we were not provided with the courtesy of a copy of the deposition notice or the attendant subpoena that would be required for the deposition of a non-party. Nor were we consulted as to the proposed time or place of the deposition.

As set forth in my letters of July 29 and July 30, we agreed that you would provide Bank of America with an initial two week extension to respond to the two Subpoena Duces Tecum Without Deposition issued by your client. We agreed that prior to August 15, we would discuss the scope of these subpoenas to see if we could agree to a solution that worked for both of our clients. There was no discussion of a deposition.

I presume that not copying me on the notice of deposition was an oversight, and that you will have no objection to postponing the depositions until such time as we have resolved any outstanding issues with the subpoenas, and can agree on an appropriate time and place for depositions, if they are necessary. Either I or my colleague Mike Cavendish will call tomorrow to confirm that depositions will be postponed, so that we may avoid filing motions with the Court.

Very truly yours,

David M. Wells

Matter No.: 029986-230580

Dear David:

This will confirm our telephone discussions regarding the subpoena issued to Bank of America in the referenced matter. We will not expect a records custodian to appear in response to the subpoena on August 15. We will instead expect to receive from you on that date, a written response identifying the documents Bank of America expects to make available to us and the time and manner of production. You will also identify categories of documents described in the subpoena, which will not be made available, and the reason production cannot or will not be made.

We thank you for your cooperation.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Scarola:

This will confirm our telephone conversation of today where you indicated that the Subpoena Duces Tecum issued on July 29, 2003 and their accompanying notices of deposition were issued only to cure a procedural defect caused by the Subpoena Duces Tecum Without Deposition issued on July 1 and July 8, 2003, that there will be no deposition on Friday, August 15, 2003, and that our agreement reflected in my letter to you of July 30, 2003 remains in effect.

I will provide you with our response to the original subpoenas on August 15, and then we can work together to resolve Bank of America's objections thereto and set a mutually agreeable date and location for production.

Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc.*, 2003 CA 005165

Dear Mr. Scarola:

As previously agreed, we have carefully reviewed each of the 58 discrete requests for production of documents contained within each of the two identical subpoenas served by you on Bank of America, N.A. in the above-captioned actions. The purpose of this letter is to attempt to reach agreement upon what documents should be produced, when and where.

To avoid reviewing the 58 separate requests in a vacuum, we obtained copies of the complaints and answers filed in the above-captioned cases and carefully reviewed them to develop an understanding of what the issues in the cases are, and, accordingly, what would be fair, reasonable and necessary discovery. In reviewing the 58 separate requests, we also took into consideration the fact that Bank of America is not a party to these actions and the fact that the conduct of Bank of America is not at issue in these actions.

Our review of the 58 separate requests was hampered somewhat by the fact that the events at issue happened some five years ago and, as might be expected, there has been some turnover of personnel who might have knowledge of the loan relationship.

Nevertheless, we have undertaken reasonable due diligence, spoken to available bank personnel with the best knowledge available about the loan relationship and have gathered certain documents from a variety of locations. Many of the separate requests seek "all documents concerning" or "all documents reflecting" certain broadly described transactions, events or entities. Rather than debate what such terms may mean, we have identified the foregoing specific documents or categories of documents that we are prepared to produce within the next two weeks at our offices for review or, if you wish, copied and sent to you.

These documents were located as a result of a reasonable search of the files most likely to yield responsive documents. We have not conducted an exhaustive search of the files of each person that may have had some involvement in the loan facility over time. We have, however, in good faith searched the likely repositories. In offering the production of the following documents, we do so without waiving specific objections to the breadth and/or vagueness of the request. The documents available for review and production are:

- The March 30, 1998 Credit Agreement
- Agreements and closing documents ancillary thereto
- Amendments to and waivers of the March 30, 1998 Credit Agreement
- Circulated drafts of the March 30, 1998 Credit Agreement
- Documents pertaining to analyses or evaluations of the Sunbeam-Coleman transaction
- Borrowing requests issued by Sunbeam pertaining to the March 30, 1998 Credit Agreement
- Brokerage reports and other documents valuing Sunbeam and Sunbeam stock
- News articles and wire stories discussing changes in the price of Sunbeam stock and related issues
- Documents pertaining to meetings among Sunbeam, Bank of America, First Union, and Morgan Stanley
- Pledge agreements and other documents regarding the collateral pledged under the March 30, 1998 Credit Agreement
- The Morgan Stanley Offering Statement pertaining to the subordinated debentures
- Documents pertaining to Sunbeam's Q1 1998 financials
- 1998 Sunbeam press releases

We believe that the foregoing documents are generally responsive to requests 3-4, 6, 11, 17-18, 21-22, 24, 33, 37-38, 41 and 43. Certain of these documents may contain confidential, proprietary or private information and, as such, should be the subject of a confidentiality order. We are prepared to discuss the terms of the confidentiality order with you. If one has already been entered in either of the cases, please forward the order to me for review.

As noted above, certain of the individual requests are vague, ambiguous and overbroad and would, as written, impose an improper and undue burden on Bank of America. These requests are 1-4, 7-20, 23-25, 29, 31-40, 42-45 and 47-48.

Other of the requests seek documents that should be peculiarly within the custody of Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc. or Morgan Stanley. It would be appropriate to seek those documents there rather than impose the burden of production on Bank of America. Those requests are 2-3, 7, 12-15, 18, 20, 22-23, 25, 32-34, 36-37, 41-42, 44, 46-47 and 51.

Certain of the separate requests seek documents that do not appear to be reasonably calculated to lead to discovery of any evidence relevant to any of the claims or defenses in these actions. As a non-party, Bank of America should not be burdened with reviewing the records of transactions that took place some five years ago in search of documents of no relevance to the case. These requests are 5, 9, 10, 16, 24-31, 45, and 49-58.

Other requests, in addition to the foregoing problems, appear to seek trade secret or confidential business information as well as documents protected by the Attorney-Client Privilege. Those requests are 3, 44, and 50.

To avoid unnecessary argument and without waiving any of the foregoing objections, our due diligence to date has not revealed documents responsive to requests 7, 14, 16, 19 (other than as set forth in the text of the Credit Agreement) 20, 32, 36, 42 and 54, at least as we interpret the requests. Moreover, we have not located documents responsive to requests 8, 39 and 40, but we note that we are not familiar with the general descriptions of the subject matter provided.

We are prepared to discuss these specific objections with you at your convenience.

Very truly yours,

David M. Wells

We believe that the foregoing documents are generally responsive to requests 3-4, 6, 11, 17-18, 21-22, 24, 33, 37-38, 41 and 43. Certain of these documents may contain confidential, proprietary or private information and, as such, should be the subject of a confidentiality order. We are prepared to discuss the terms of the confidentiality order with you. If one has already been entered in either of the cases, please forward the order to me for review.

As noted above, certain of the individual requests are vague, ambiguous and overbroad and would, as written, impose an improper and undue burden on Bank of America. These requests are 1-4, 7-20, 23-25, 29, 31-40, 42-45 and 47-48.

Other of the requests seek documents that should be peculiarly within the custody of Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc. or Morgan Stanley. It would be appropriate to seek those documents there rather than impose the burden of production on Bank of America. Those requests are 2-3, 7, 12-15, 18, 20, 22-23, 25, 32-34, 36-37, 41-42, 44, 46-47 and 51.

Certain of the separate requests seek documents that do not appear to be reasonably calculated to lead to discovery of any evidence relevant to any of the claims or defenses in these actions. As a non-party, Bank of America should not be burdened with reviewing the records of transactions that took place some five years ago in search of documents of no relevance to the case. These requests are 5, 9, 10, 16, 24-31, 45, and 49-58.

Other requests, in addition to the foregoing problems, appear to seek trade secret or confidential business information as well as documents protected by the Attorney-Client Privilege. Those requests are 3, 44, and 50.

To avoid unnecessary argument and without waiving any of the foregoing objections, our due diligence to date has not revealed documents responsive to requests 7, 14, 16, 19 (other than as set forth in the text of the Credit Agreement) 20, 32, 36, 42 and 54, at least as we interpret the requests. Moreover, we have not located documents responsive to requests 8, 39 and 40, but we note that we are not familiar with the general descriptions of the subject matter provided.

We are prepared to discuss these specific objections with you at your convenience.

Very truly yours,

David M. Wells

Re: Subpoenas issued by Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc. to Bank of America
National Trust and Savings Association

Dear Mr. Scarola:

I am in receipt of your notice of today's date setting a hearing on your Motion to Compel for 8:45 a.m. on Monday, September 29, 2003.

I was surprised to receive this notice. Upon receipt of your Motion to Compel, I immediately faxed you a letter suggesting that we agree upon a mutually convenient date to set the hearing. No one from your office contacted me or my secretary to set the hearing for Monday, which I understand is a five-minute motion calendar hearing. I cannot attend an 8:45 a.m. hearing on Monday in West Palm Beach nor will five minutes be sufficient if Sunbeam has any objection to the entry of an order resolving our concerns under Florida Statute §655.059(2)(b).

I note from your motion and notice, that you have apparently been able to identify the counsel for Sunbeam. I suggest that the more efficient course of action would be to contact Sunbeam's counsel and determine if they have any objection to the entry of an order providing that documents can be produced pursuant to the existing confidentiality order. We have placed a call to Sunbeam's counsel but have been advised that both of the lawyers identified in your notice are out until tomorrow. Please let me know if there is a time tomorrow when we could try to have a conference call with Sunbeam's counsel to determine if they would agree to the entry of an appropriate order. If so, we can send an appropriate order to the court for entry and avoid the need for a hearing. At that point we can produce the previously agreed-upon documents for your review and consideration.

I look forward to hearing from you. I hope that we can work this out and I do not have to

Re: Coleman Holdings, Inc. vs Morgan Stanley & Company
Morgan Stanley Senior Funding v. MacAndrews & Forbes
Matter No.: 029986-230580

Dear Mr. Wells:

This is in partial response to various points raised in your letter of April 15, 2003.

First, a confidentiality order has been entered in this matter and we are prepared to agree to its application to documents produced by Bank of America, N.A., in response to our subpoena in the referenced matter. Please confirm in writing your acceptance of the obligations, procedures and protections contained in that order.

To assist us in determining whether we will inspect the currently available documents in your offices or have them copied and sent to us, we would like a reasonable estimate of the volume of the production and an opportunity to obtain an estimate of copying costs.

As to your assertion that Bank of America ought not to be obliged to produce documents "that should be peculiarly within the custody of Coleman (Parent) Holdings Inc. or Morgan Stanley", we respectfully disagree. What "should be" in the custody of others either may not be in their custody or may not be acknowledged to be in their custody. A legitimate function of third party production is to test the accuracy and completeness of a party's discovery responses.

Concerning your privilege assertions, we would expect to receive a properly detailed privilege log to enable us (and, if necessary, the Court) to assess the propriety of such assertions.

Finally, we will address other issues raised in your letter once we have been able to review the documents you are willing to produce.

Thank you for your anticipated cooperation.

Sincerely,

JACK SCAROLA

Dear Mr. Scarola:

I have now had the opportunity to review your letter of August 19, 2003.

Please forward to me a copy of the Confidentiality Order referenced in the second paragraph of your letter. Does the Confidentiality Order entered in the above-captioned action address the bank privacy concerns embedded within Fla. Stat. § 655.059 raised in our letter of July 29th? Specifically, does it address the issue whether Coleman Holdings, Inc. has obtained the appropriate consents to review the banking records and financial records of Bank of America's borrower? If not, you will need to procure the appropriate consents from the borrower or obtain a ruling from the Court vitiating the statutory protection and authorizing Bank of America to produce before we can turn the documents over.

Once I have had the opportunity to review the Confidentiality Order and confirm that the appropriate consents are in place, we can coordinate the copying or production for review by you here. We can address your other issues at an appropriate time.

Very truly yours,

Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc., 2003 CA 005165

Dear Mr. Scarola:

Thank you for your letter of September 10, 2003 and the enclosed confidentiality order.

As I mentioned in my previous letter, unless the advance consent of Sunbeam is procured, or a court order issues specifically overriding the statute, Section 655.059(2)(b), Florida Statutes restricts Bank of America from disclosing the borrower account and loan information the subpoenas request, on pain of liability for a third degree felony as provided by § 655.059(2)(c). A review of the confidentiality order indicates that it does not address this statutory restriction on disclosure. To protect itself, Bank of America must wait for the written consent of Sunbeam, n/k/a American Household, Inc., or an order from the Court that specifically addresses § 655.059(2)(b) before it can produce the bulk of the responsive documents it has agreed to produce to Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc. If you are aware of any legal authority to the contrary, or an opinion construing the statute differently, please advise me of the same.

Dear Mr. Scarola:

We received a fax copy of your Motion to Compel Production ("Motion"). We wish to cooperate with the scheduling of a hearing on your Motion. As you know, we have previously filed a Notice of Filing Response and Objections to Subpoenas ("Objections"), which covers a broader range of issues than the Motion. It may make sense to set the Motion and the Objections for hearing together at the same mutually agreeable time. Please let me know whether you will be contacting Judge Maas' chambers to procure potential hearing dates and who from your office will then be contacting us to discuss scheduling.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS LLP'S MOTION FOR PROTECTIVE ORDER AND OBJECTIONS AND RESPONSES TO SUBPOENA DUCES TECUM WITH DEPOSITION

Pursuant to and in accordance with the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure, non-party PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP ("PwC") hereby moves for a protective order with respect to, and objects to, the Subpoena Duces Tecum With Deposition dated September 26, 2003 (the "Subpoena") served on PwC by Plaintiff Coleman (Parent) Holdings Inc. ("Plaintiff" or "Coleman"). The Subpoena seeks to impose upon PwC – a non-party that is not mentioned in either the Complaint or Answer in this case, much less accused of any wrongdoing – the enormous burden of producing hundreds of thousands of pages of documents relating to every aspect of the services its predecessor, Coopers & Lybrand L.L.P. ("Coopers"), performed for Sunbeam Corporation ("Sunbeam") at various times between 1996 and June 1998. The Subpoena also seeks the deposition of the records custodian of PwC, and commands appearance on October 17, 2003. As set forth below, there is simply no way that PwC can comply with the Subpoena by October 17, 2003. Nor can PwC produce a records custodian by that date, if ever.

GENERAL OBJECTIONS AND MOTION FOR PROTECTIVE ORDER

1. Coleman's Subpoena contains thirty (30) separate document requests which collectively seek hundreds of thousands of documents from PwC. PwC is the successor in interest to Coopers. In 1996, Sunbeam Corporation ("Sunbeam") hired Coopers to assist Sunbeam in arriving at a restructuring plan. That engagement was completed in 1996 and had no relationship to Coleman or any of the claims in this action. Following that initial engagement, Sunbeam engaged Coopers on various other projects. Most of these engagements did not involve Coleman in any way. The above-captioned case relates to Sunbeam's March 1998 acquisition of The Coleman Company, Inc., First Alert, Inc., and Signature Brands USA, Inc. (the "Acquisition").

2. The Subpoena requests PwC to produce a host of documents related to all of Coopers' various consulting engagements with Sunbeam. Although several of the requests contained in the Subpoena are appropriately limited to those relating to the issues in this case, many of the requests seek documents that are wholly irrelevant to any issue in this case and are not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

3. Accordingly, PwC objects to the Subpoena on the basis that it: (1) is overly broad, unduly burdensome, oppressive, and harassing; (2) seeks documents which have no relevance whatsoever to Coleman's claims and are not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence; (3) seeks documents that contain proprietary, confidential business records of PwC and/or Sunbeam which are the subject of a Confidentiality Agreement between Sunbeam and PwC; (4) seeks documents containing personal, private, or sensitive information protected from disclosure by the United States Constitution and/or Florida State Constitution; and (5) seeks documents protected by the attorney-client privilege and/or work-product doctrine.

4. For example, according to the Subpoena's Instructions, the time period for the requests is "from January 1, 1996 through the date of trial of this matter." Coopers' services for Sunbeam ended in May 1998. As a result of this instruction, many of the requests are rendered overly broad, unduly burdensome, oppressive, and harassing. In addition, also as a result of this instruction, many requests seek documents subject to the attorney-client privilege or work-product doctrine.

5. Likewise, Coleman seeks all documents produced by any party or non-party in thirteen (13) different "Litigations" (defined to include nine lawsuits, two SEC administrative proceedings, and two arbitrations), even though PwC is a party in only one of those matters.¹ See Subpoena, Request No. 29(d). Coleman also seeks all documents, including invoices, time records, individual diaries and calendars, or any other documents reflecting any services performed by Coopers for Sunbeam. See Subpoena, Request No. 20. This request is made without regard to whether the services at issue relate to the Acquisition and later integration of the acquired companies. Indeed, the work performed by Coopers in 1996 and 1997 – all of which is the subject of the Subpoena – has absolutely nothing to do with the issues in this action.

6. The Subpoena is also oppressive and imposes an undue burden on PwC in light of the fact that many of the documents requested can be obtained from court files (e.g., all of the pleadings, filings, orders, etc. in nine of the thirteen Litigations) or parties to those matters (e.g., all of the fact and expert discovery in nine of the thirteen Litigations and all available materials from the two SEC administrative proceedings and the two arbitrations).

¹ The one lawsuit in which PwC is a party is captioned Sunbeam Corp. v. PricewaterhouseCoopers, LLP, No. CL 003444 AN (15th Jud. Cir., Fla.) (the "Sunbeam litigation"). In the Sunbeam litigation, Sunbeam asserted claims of, among other things, negligence and professional malpractice against PwC based on consulting services Coopers provided in 1996 and 1998.

7. In addition, the Subpoena seeks documents which are protected by the attorney-client privilege and/or work product doctrine. For instance, to the extent that PwC has obtained materials generated in any of the other 12 Litigations, many of those materials were collected by PwC exclusively for its defense of the Sunbeam litigation and therefore are protected by the work-product doctrine. Such documents reflect the selection process employed by PwC and/or its counsel in defending the Sunbeam litigation. Were PwC to produce those documents in this case, PwC would be waiving the work product protection and necessarily provide Sunbeam, its adversary in the Sunbeam litigation, with insight into its defense strategy.

8. PwC further objects to the Subpoena to the extent it calls for disclosure of documents which contain trade secrets and information that are confidential and proprietary in nature, the disclosure of which would be harmful to PwC and would violate public policy. Such documents have been developed over time at great expense and effort to PwC, and constitute trade secrets and confidential research, development or commercial information.

9. PwC further objects to the Subpoena to the extent that it seeks confidential documents with respect to any person where disclosure of such documents would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, and which would violate, among other things, the United States Constitution and/or the Florida State Constitution. For example, as worded, numerous requests seek individual calendars, diaries, and or billing reports that contain personal and private information, including but limited to employee social security numbers and/or financial information.

10. PwC further objects to the Subpoena on the basis that, given the enormous volume of materials sought by the Subpoena, PwC cannot possibly comply with the Subpoena by October 17, 2003. Nor can PwC provide a records custodian for deposition. The consulting division of PwC (into which the Coopers' consulting division was incorporated upon the merger of PriceWaterhouse and Coopers) was acquired by IBM in 2002. In addition, most of the documents requested by the Subpoena are in the possession of and being maintained by the undersigned counsel for PwC in the Sunbeam litigation, and Coleman has offered no basis for deposing counsel with respect to the subpoenaed documents.

11. Finally, PwC objects to the Subpoena to the extent that it does not provide for payment of attorneys' fees, paralegal time, and the costs of outside services necessary to produce the documents requested. Although the Subpoena provides that PwC "may condition the preparation of copies upon the payment in advance of the reasonable costs of preparation," in light of the volume of documents sought, and the significant amount of attorney and paralegal oversight that will be required in order to complete the production, PwC seeks an Order establishing a procedure for the advance payment of such costs. PwC proposes that it submit an estimated budget to Coleman and that, upon Coleman's approval of the budget and advancement of 50% of the amount of the estimated budget, PwC will undertake the process of preparing the documents for production. Following preparation of the documents but prior to and as a condition of production, Coleman shall then pay to PwC the remainder of the attorneys' fees, costs and other expenses. Upon such payment, PwC will produce the documents at Issue.

12. PwC makes these objections (including the Objections and Responses to Specific Requests set forth below) without in any way waiving or intending to waive, but preserving and intending to preserve:

a. all questions as to the competency, relevancy, materiality, privilege or admissibility as evidence, for any purpose, at any trial or hearing in this case or in any related or subsequent action or proceeding, of any of the documents produced or the subject matter thereof;

- b. the right to object on any ground at any time to a demand for further documents; and
- c. the right to revise, supplement, amend, correct or add to these responses and objections.

13. By stating that PwC will produce documents responsive to a particular request, PwC does not represent that such documents exist.

PROCEDURE FOR PRODUCTION OF RESPONSIVE DOCUMENTS

1. If and when the Court denies PwC's Motion for Protective Order, in whole or part, PwC will produce existing non-objectionable documents consistent with the Court's order at a time and place to be mutually agreed upon.

OBJECTIONS AND RESPONSES TO SPECIFIC REQUESTS

Subject to the General Objections above, which are expressly incorporated by reference as to each response below, PwC responds to the specific paragraphs of Coleman's Subpoena as follows:

CASE NO: 03 CA-005045 A1

v.

MORGAN STANLEY & CO., INC.,

Defendant.

DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO COMPEL PLAINTIFF TO PRODUCE SETTLEMENT AGREEMENT WITH ARTHUR ANDERSEN

Defendant, Morgan Stanley & Co, Inc., pursuant to Fla.R.Civ.P., Rules 1.280 and 1.380, moves to compel Plaintiff to produce the Settlement Agreement between Plaintiff and Arthur Anderson, LLP and states:

1. Several years ago, long before it filed this lawsuit against defendant Morgan Stanley & Co. Incorporated ("MS & Co."), plaintiff Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc. ("CPH") filed nearly identical claims against Arthur Andersen arising out of the same financial transaction. That prior lawsuit against Arthur Andersen — filed by the very same counsel who represent CPH here — was based on the same series of financial transactions, contained substantially identical factual allegations and legal theories, and sought to recover exactly the same damages CPH seeks to recover from MS & Co. in this case. See March 15, 2002 1st Am. Compl., Coleman (Parent) Holdings v. Arthur Andersen et al., No. CA 01-06062 AN (Rapp, J.) (Ex. 1). CPH settled the case with Andersen in Fall 2002.

2. Now, CPH refuses, in response to MS & Co.'s discovery requests, to produce its settlement agreement with Arthur Andersen. The agreement between CPH and Arthur Andersen is plainly relevant to, among other things, the damages that CPH seeks to recover in this case (including issues relating to mitigation and set-off) --- and to the credibility of a number of Arthur Andersen witnesses that CPH has noticed for deposition beginning October 28, 2003. Florida courts have routinely held that such settlement agreements are discoverable. MS & Co. moves, pursuant to Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.380(a), for an order compelling CPH to produce the Arthur Andersen settlement agreement and all related documents prior to the deposition of any current or former Arthur Andersen employees.

DISPUTE HISTORY

3. This case revolves around negotiations that occurred in New York in mid 1997 and 1998, during which CPH agreed to sell its interest in the Coleman Company ("Coleman") to Sunbeam. MS & Co. served as an advisor to Sunbeam --- CPH's counterparty in the negotiations --- for parts of the deal. CPH now alleges --- five years after the fact --- that it sold its stake in Coleman (and agreed to accept Sunbeam stock as part of the purchase price) based on false representations regarding Sunbeam's financial health. CPH purports to bring these claims against MS & Co., but every factual allegation in the Complaint deals exclusively with misrepresentations by Sunbeam insiders and Sunbeam's auditor, Arthur Andersen. In fact, in June 2001, CPH asserted precisely the same claims against Arthur Andersen, alleging --- through prior filings in this very Court --- that it "directly relied" on financial information provided by Andersen (not MS & Co.) when it agreed to sell its stake in Coleman. See June 8, 2001 Compl., Coleman (Parent) Holdings v. Arthur Andersen et al., No. CA 01-06062 AN (Rapp, J.) (Ex. 2).

4. In the instant case, MS & Co. served its First Request for Production of Documents upon CPH on July 15, 2003, requesting "[a]ll documents referring or relating to the settlement agreement between CPH and Arthur Andersen.” (July 15, 2003 Morgan Stanley & Co. Inc.’s 1st Req. for Prod. of Docs. to Pfl. at Req. 40 (Ex. 3).) CPH objected to producing the Andersen settlement agreement, citing a confidentiality provision in the agreement. MS & Co. attempted to resolve this issue with CPH without the need for judicial intervention. (See Aug. 27, 2003 DeBord Letter to Brody at 4 (Ex. 4).) CPH reiterated its refusal to produce these documents because “CPH would be in violation of the terms of the settlement agreement between CPH and Arthur Andersen if CPH disclosed any of the terms of the settlement agreement.” (See Sept. 12, 2003 Brody Letter to DeBord at 4 (Ex. 5).)

5. Morgan Stanley renewed its request for the settlement agreement, citing well-established Florida law favoring the discoverability of settlement agreements despite confidentiality agreements. (See Sept. 30, 2003 DeBord Letter to Brody at 2 (Ex. 6).) Ultimately, while CPH recognizes that it will eventually be forced to produce the settlement agreement, it refuses to produce the agreement or related documents “at this stage of the litigation.” (See Oct. 7, 2003 Brody Letter to Brown (Ex. 7).) CPH cannot, however, seek hundreds of millions of dollars in damages from MS & Co. and then hide relevant facts. The Court has entered a Protective Order to maintain the confidentiality of the settlement agreement. MS & Co. is entitled to receive the settlement agreement and related documents in sufficient time to allow it to prepare for the deposition of a number witnesses that CPH has noticed.

ARGUMENT

I. A CONTRACTUAL CONFIDENTIALITY PROVISION CANNOT BE USED TO RESIST DISCOVERY.

It is well-established in Florida that a confidentiality provision in a settlement agreement cannot be used as a shield to resist legitimate discovery. The Florida courts have squarely held that the defendant “is entitled to evaluate its potential liability exposure with all information on hand” and that a confidentiality term in a settlement agreement “may not be subsequently employed by a litigant to obscure issues or otherwise thwart an opponent’s discovery.” City of Homestead v. Rogers, 789 So. 2d 483, 484 (Fla. 3d DCA 2001) (reversing district court for failing to grant motion to compel discovery of settlement terms and amount) (quoting Smith v. TTB Bank of the Keys, 687 So. 2d 895, 896 (Fla. 3d DCA 1997)); Griffin v. Mushariki, No. 96 Civ. 6400, 1997 WL 756914 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 8, 1997) (ordering production of settlement agreement despite confidentiality clause); Tribune Co. v. Furciogliotti, No. 93 Civ. 7222 (LAP), 1996 WL 337277 (S.D.N.Y. June 19, 1996) (same).

II. THE ARTHUR ANDERSEN SETTLEMENT AGREEMENT IS HIGHLY RELEVANT TO THE PRESENT ACTION.

CPH’s settlement agreement with Arthur Andersen is highly relevant to the present action. It is axiomatic that CPH cannot be permitted double recovery of its alleged damages. Whalen v. Kawasaki Motors Corp., 703 N.E.2d 246, 248 (N.Y. 1998) (“[T]he possibility of double recovery should be avoided.”).¹ CPH sued — and then settled with — Arthur Andersen to recover the same types of damages it seeks from MS & Co. in the current case. CPH’s recovery from Arthur Andersen (and a prior recovery from Sunbeam) reduces the damages that CPH would be entitled to if it prevailed in this action. MS & Co. is “entitled to evaluate its potential liability exposure with all information on hand.” See City of Homestead, 789 So. 2d at 484 (holding settlement agreement is relevant because “[s]ctoff is an issue in this case”).

Moreover, MS & Co. is entitled to examine CPH’s settlement agreement with Arthur Andersen in order to evaluate witnesses’ potential bias, interest and credibility. See, e.g., Apr. 17, 1998) (discovery of settlement agreements permitted to evaluate a witness' potential bias, interest, and credibility) (collecting cases); Griffin, 1997 WL 756914, at *2 (same) (collecting cases). CPH has already noticed the deposition of 8 current and former Arthur Andersen employees in this case. At the very least, MS & Co. is entitled to explore, during depositions of Arthur Andersen and CPH witnesses, for example, "whether any promises have been made" by Arthur Andersen in the settlement agreement that could affect the present action. White v. Kenneth Warren & Son, Ltd., 203 F.R.D. 364, 367 (N.D. Ill. 2001).

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, MS & Co. respectfully requests an order compelling CPH to immediately produce its settlement agreement with Arthur Andersen and related documents and award such other and further relief as is just and proper.

EXHIBIT 1

NATURE OF THE ACTION

1. This action arises out of Coleman-Parent's sale of its controlling interest in The Coleman Company, Inc. ("Coleman Company") to Sunbeam Corporation, Inc. ("Sunbeam") on March 30, 1998, in exchange for 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam common stock, plus other consideration. In deciding to go forward with that sale, Coleman-Parent relied on Sunbeam's financial statements, which were audited by Andersen and certified on behalf of Andersen by Andersen-US. Andersen promoted itself as the largest accounting firm in the world at the time of the audits.

2. Unbeknownst to Coleman-Parent, however, Andersen had audited and certified financial statements that it knew to be inaccurate and misleading. Those audited financial statements painted a false picture of Sunbeam, depicting it as a company in the midst of an impressive financial turnaround. The reality was that Sunbeam's turnaround was a sham, and when the truth emerged, Sunbeam's stock lost virtually all of its value. The company is now in bankruptcy. By relying on the financial statements improperly certified by Andersen, Coleman-Parent has suffered losses exceeding $600 million.

3. By holding itself out as Sunbeam's independent certified public accountant and certifying Sunbeam's financial statements, Andersen knowingly assumed a responsibility that transcended its relationship with Sunbeam as a client. As an independent public accountant auditing Sunbeam's financial statements, Andersen owed a duty to Coleman-Parent and others whom it knew were relying upon Andersen's certification that Sunbeam's reports fairly depicted the company's financial status. Andersen was required to maintain independence from its client,

Sunbeam, and speak with total honesty befitting the trust that had been placed in its word. In carrying out its audit of Sunbeam's financial statements, Andersen utterly failed to live up to that responsibility. To the contrary, Andersen's audits were not performed in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards ("GAAS"), and the financial statements it certified were not, as Andersen claimed, in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles ("GAAP"). Even more egregious, Phillip Harlow, the audit partner on the Sunbeam account, and others at Andersen knew the financial statements were not prepared in conformity with GAAP, but Andersen certified them nonetheless.

4. Defendants' motivation was simple – to do whatever was necessary to retain a major client. Andersen had served as Sunbeam's independent auditor for many years. In 1993, Andersen's Fort Lauderdale, Florida, office took charge of the account, and Sunbeam became one of the few Fortune 500 clients in that office. Sunbeam's audits generated significant fees. For example, Sunbeam paid Andersen more than $1 million for its 1995 audit. Over the years, in addition to auditing work, Sunbeam also generated numerous consulting engagements and their accompanying fees. Defendants were motivated to preserve the Sunbeam relationship not only to ensure that audit engagements would continue but also to reinforce the opportunity to perform lucrative consulting work. In addition, maintaining the relationship with Sunbeam was important to defendants because being dropped by a high-profile client such as Sunbeam would have brought negative publicity to the Ft. Lauderdale office and to Andersen.

5. However, in 1996 that relationship was threatened by Sunbeam's new CEO, Albert Dunlap. Dunlap was eager to show a turnaround at Sunbeam in order to position the company for a quick sale, as he recently had done at Scott Paper. To accomplish that goal, Dunlap's new management team knowingly employed improper accounting methods that first overstated the company's loss in 1996 and then inflated the company's income in 1997. In total abrogation of its responsibility as an independent auditor, Andersen permitted -- indeed, blessed -- those improper accounting treatments, rather than risk losing Sunbeam's audit business to Dunlap's accountant of choice, Coopers & Lybrand.

6. Ironically, the financial results certified by Andersen for 1996 and 1997 drove the price of Sunbeam stock so high that new management could not locate a willing buyer for a quick sale of the company, as had been hoped. As a result, Sunbeam was forced to shift gears and pursue acquisitions of other companies, including Coleman Company, in the hope that those mergers would obscure Sunbeam's true financial position and forestall revelation of the accounting gimmickry. To effectuate that plan, some of the very same Andersen partners and employees who were functioning as Sunbeam's "independent" auditors (including Harlow) added another role and joined Sunbeam's due diligence team for the acquisitions.

7. Because of the dual roles as auditor and acquisitions consultant that defendants played, defendants knew full well not only that the purchase of Coleman Company was taking place, but also that Coleman-Parent was relying on the financial statements certified by Andersen. Nonetheless, Andersen took no steps before the Coleman Company acquisition closed to correct the grossly misleading impression created by its certifications.

8. At the time of the sale to Sunbeam, Coleman Company was a leading manufacturer and marketer of consumer products for the worldwide outdoor recreation market, with annual revenues in excess of $1 billion. As payment for its stake in Coleman Company, Coleman-Parent was to receive 14,099,749 shares of Sunbeam stock, $160 million in cash and other consideration. Based on Sunbeam's share price at the time of the closing, Coleman-Parent received Sunbeam shares that had an aggregate market value of over $619.5 million.

9. Within weeks of the closing of the Coleman Company acquisition on March 30, 1998, the deception facilitated by Andersen began to unravel. On April 3, 1998, just four days after the closing, Sunbeam's management issued a press release announcing that, despite having predicted positive quarterly results in another press release just two weeks earlier, Sunbeam now would show a loss for the first quarter of 1998. On May 11, 1998, Sunbeam issued an earnings release for the first quarter of 1998 reporting a loss of 52 cents per share, compared with a gain of 8 cents per share in the same quarter of 1997. Press coverage ensued in the following month questioning whether Sunbeam had utilized -- and Andersen had approved -- manipulative and improper accounting practices in order to create the ruse of a turnaround.

10. In June 1998, the Sunbeam board of directors began an inquiry into Sunbeam's accounting practices. On June 15, 1998, the board announced that it had removed Dunlap as Chairman and CEO of Sunbeam. On June 25, 1998, Andersen withheld its consent for use of its unqualified 1997 audit opinion in a registration statement that was to have been filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission ("SEC"). On June 30, 1998, Sunbeam acknowledged that it had undertaken a review of its financial statements and the review could result in a restatement of the financial statements. On October 20, 1998, Sunbeam and Andersen announced a restatement of the financial statements. Thereafter, Andersen issued a new unqualified audit opinion for Sunbeam reporting only $93 million in operating earnings for 1997. That amount was approximately half of the figure that Andersen previously certified.

11. In February 2001, Sunbeam filed a voluntary bankruptcy petition under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. Coleman-Parent's equity stake in Sunbeam is now worthless.

12. In order to retain the Sunbeam account and lucrative auditing and consulting fees, Andersen turned its back on its professional and legal obligations and certified Sunbeam financial statements that it knew to be false and misleading. It did so with full knowledge that Coleman-Parent would be harmed immensely by Andersen's misstatements and omissions. As a direct and foreseeable result of Andersen's actions, Coleman-Parent has sustained damages in excess of $600,000,000.

13. By this complaint, Coleman-Parent seeks recovery of over $600 million in compensatory damages. In addition, Coleman-Parent reserves the right to seek leave to amend its complaint pursuant to Fla. Stat. § 768.72 to assert claims for an additional recovery of punitive damages in excess of $1.2 billion as allowed by law.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

14. This Court has jurisdiction over the subject matter of this action pursuant to Fla. Stat. § 26.012(2)(a). This Court has jurisdiction over Andersen-US, Andersen-Worldwide, Andersen-Canada, Andersen-Hong Kong, Andersen-Mexico, Andersen-Venezuela, Andersen-UK and Harlow pursuant to Fla. Stat. §§ 48.193(1)(a) and (D), (2) and/or (5).

15. Venue is proper in this district pursuant to Fla. Stat. §§ 47.011 and 47.021 because Andersen maintains an office with more than 30 employees and partners in West Palm Beach, Florida, and therefore resides in Palm Beach County. In addition, Harlow is a resident of South Florida.

PARTIES

16. Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc. ("Coleman-Parent") is a corporation incorporated in the state of Delaware with its principal business offices located in New York.

Coleman-Parent is a wholly owned subsidiary of Mafco Holdings Inc. ("MAFCO"). Prior to March 30, 1998, Coleman-Parent owned approximately 81% of Coleman Company.

17. Andersen Worldwide, Société Coopérative, Switzerland ("Andersen-Worldwide") is a partnership organized under the Swiss Federal Code of Obligations. Its partners include more than 2,000 individuals from 390 offices in 84 countries. Various individuals who are partners of Andersen-Worldwide participated in the 1996 and 1997 audits of Sunbeam, and in the 1998 restatement of the reports of those audits. Andersen-Worldwide and Andersen-US dictate the policies and procedures to be used within Andersen throughout the world.

18. Arthur Andersen LLP ("Andersen-Canada") is part of Andersen-Worldwide. Andersen-Canada participated in the 1996 and 1997 audits of Sunbeam and the 1998 restatement of the reports of those audits.

19. Arthur Andersen & Co. ("Andersen-Hong Kong") is part of Andersen-Worldwide. Andersen-Hong Kong participated in the 1996 and 1997 audits of Sunbeam and the 1998 restatement of the reports of those audits.

20. Ruiz, Urquiza Y Cia, S.C. ("Andersen-Mexico") is part of Andersen-Worldwide. Andersen-Mexico participated in the 1996 and 1997 audits of Sunbeam and the 1998 restatement of the reports of those audits.

21. Piermavieja, Porta, Cachafeiro & Avogados ("Andersen-Venezuela") is part of Andersen-Worldwide. Andersen-Venezuela participated in the 1996 and 1997 audits of Sunbeam and the 1998 restatement of the reports of those audits.

22. Arthur Andersen ("Andersen-UK") is part of Andersen-Worldwide.

Andersen-UK participated in the 1996 and 1997 audits of Sunbeam and the 1998 restatement of the reports of those audits.

23. Arthur Andersen LLP ("Andersen-US") is part of Andersen-Worldwide.

Andersen-US is a partnership formed under the laws of the State of Illinois. The partners of Andersen-US are residents of Florida and numerous other states. Andersen-US participated in and coordinated the 1996 and 1997 audits of Sunbeam and the 1998 restatement of the reports of those audits. In addition, Andersen-US partners and employees provided consulting services to Sunbeam as part of due diligence work performed in conjunction with Sunbeam's acquisition of Coleman Company, and on other projects.

24. Phillip E. Harlow ("Harlow") has been a partner at Andersen-US since 1983, and also is a partner of Andersen-Worldwide. He served as the engagement partner on the audits of Sunbeam's financial statements from 1993 to 1998. As engagement partner, Harlow had primary responsibility for supervising the 1996 and 1997 audits of Sunbeam, including overseeing the activities with respect to the Sunbeam work performed by numerous persons at Andersen. Harlow also participated as a member of Sunbeam's due diligence team in connection with Sunbeam's acquisition of Coleman Company.

ANDERSEN AS "ONE FIRM"

25. In 1913, an accounting and consulting partnership was formed in Illinois under the name "Arthur Andersen & Co." The company began to expand internationally in the 1930s. The firm operated on a global scale through a network of international offices, branches and subsidiaries of the U.S. partnership premised under a "one firm" concept.

26. In 1977, as Andersen increased its global presence, it created a new structure: the Andersen Worldwide Organization ("AWO"), comprised of Andersen-Worldwide, the individual partners of Andersen-Worldwide and Andersen-Worldwide's offices around the globe, operating as a single global partnership or joint venture. The AWO structure was and is designed to maintain the "one firm" concept, and was and is intended to foster the belief that Andersen operates as a single entity. In its promotional literature, including its web site, Andersen-Worldwide markets itself as "one firm," "a single worldwide operating structure" that "think[s] and act[s] as one."

27. Andersen-Worldwide is the instrumentality through which the "one firm" concept becomes reality. It achieves this in four distinct ways.

(a) Partner Overlap: Andersen-Worldwide is a partnership made up of more than 2,000 individuals from 390 offices in 84 different countries worldwide. Simultaneously, the partners of Andersen-Worldwide also are partners (or the equivalent) in the entities that make up those offices. Thus, all of those offices are managed by individuals who are both local partners (or the equivalent) and partners of Andersen-Worldwide.

(b) Global Setting of Professional Standards: Andersen-Worldwide purports to establish the professional standards and principles under which its offices operate. Andersen-Worldwide's international offices enter into a standard agreement with Andersen-Worldwide under which they agree to be bound by those professional standards and principles. An office of Andersen-Worldwide that breaches the agreement is subject to removal from the organization. The Assurance Professional Standards Group has firm-wide responsibility for providing guidance on the professional standards to be followed by Andersen-Worldwide's offices.

(c) Sharing of Costs and Profits: Andersen-Worldwide coordinates the sharing of costs and allocation of revenues and profits among its partners and its offices around the world.

(d) Infrastructure and Administration: Andersen-Worldwide handles all borrowing on behalf of its international offices, and maintains the financial records, payroll and employee and health benefits for those international offices as well. All of Andersen's offices also share global computer operations, a worldwide tax structure and training facilities.

28. By establishing a legal, financial and administrative infrastructure, Andersen-Worldwide enables each of its offices around the world to function as, and to appear to clients as, an extension of a single, global entity.

29. Andersen-Worldwide manages, directs and controls its international offices in two overlapping groups: by practice areas (also known as "lines of service") and by geographic location.

30. Each practice group is managed by a global practice director who oversees, directs and controls the operations of each practice group worldwide. Regional practice directors report to the global practice director and manage, direct and control the practice group within their regions. The global practice director and managing partner for the audit practice group of Andersen-Worldwide is C.E. Andrews, a United States-based partner.

31. In addition, Andersen-Worldwide groups its offices into several geographic regions and assigns a managing partner to each region.

32. Andersen-Worldwide has grown to be one of the world's largest accounting firms. The Andersen-Worldwide organization employs over 77,000 professionals in fields such as accounting, taxation, business consulting, corporate finance, risk management and business fraud investigation. Andersen-Worldwide's global revenues for the fiscal year ending August 31, 2001 totaled more than $9.3 billion.

33. Andersen-US is dominant within Andersen-Worldwide. Andersen-Worldwide is largely controlled by its U.S.-resident partners, who also are partners of Andersen-US. Approximately half of the partners of Andersen-Worldwide are also partners of Andersen-US. Likewise, approximately half of the partners of Andersen-US are partners of Andersen-Worldwide.

34. The engagement partner on the Sunbeam audits, Harlow, and the concurring partner on those audits, William Pruitt, are partners of both Andersen-US and Andersen-Worldwide. The engagement partner on the Sunbeam restatement, Donald Denkhaus, who as Audit Division Head also was manager of Andersen's audit practice for the entire South Florida region, also is a partner of both Andersen-US and Andersen-Worldwide.

35. In addition to overlapping partners, Andersen-Worldwide and Andersen-US share officers in common as well. For example, the Chief Executive Officer and Managing Partner of Andersen-Worldwide is Joseph Berardino, who also is the Chief Executive Officer and Managing Partner of Andersen-US. In addition, Andrew Pincus is the General Counsel of both Andersen-US and Andersen-Worldwide. The Andersen-Worldwide regional managing partner for North America is Terry E. Hatchett, who also is the country managing partner for Andersen-US.

36. Andersen-Worldwide and Andersen-US share more than partners and officers -- they share the same address. In its promotional literature, Andersen-Worldwide states that its headquarters are located at 33 West Monroe Street, Chicago, Illinois 60603. That is the same address as the headquarters of Andersen-US.

37. Andersen-Worldwide and its affiliates demonstrate the "one firm" concept not only through their actions relative to the outside world, but also internally within the Andersen organization itself.

38. The components of the Andersen organization ignore corporate formalities in referring to themselves or to each other. Documents by Andersen-US often bear the insignia and logos of Andersen-Worldwide, including "Andersen Worldwide," "Andersen," and "Arthur Andersen Co., SC". In its promotional literature, Andersen uses the names "Andersen Worldwide," "Andersen," and "Arthur Andersen LLP" interchangeably. In addition, Andersen sometimes uses only the name "Andersen" and does not differentiate between Andersen-Worldwide and its offices around the globe. Some promotional literature has stated, "Arthur Andersen will now be known simply as Andersen." Indeed, when Joseph F. Berardino appeared before Congress in December 2001, he supplied written testimony that identified him as "Managing Partner -- Chief Executive Officer, Andersen" (emphasis added).

39. Andersen took the same approach in work relating to Sunbeam. The auditors used Andersen-Worldwide and Andersen-US stationery and logos interchangeably, or otherwise used the identifier "Arthur Andersen," on internal correspondence, on correspondence with Sunbeam and on presentation materials for Sunbeam. Top partners responsible for the Sunbeam audits and restatement were partners of both Andersen-US and Andersen-Worldwide.

40. Andersen's audits and restatement work for Sunbeam illustrate the "one firm" concept in action. Sunbeam was a multinational corporation with operations in Canada, Mexico, Venezuela, Hong Kong and Europe. The engagements required the participation of auditors from each of those countries and numerous American cities. Harlow, on behalf of both Andersen-US and Andersen-Worldwide, developed work plans that he circulated to Andersen-Canada, Andersen-Hong Kong, Andersen-Mexico, Andersen-Venezuela and Andersen-UK. Those offices worked together with Harlow and others to complete the tasks outlined in the plan, and sent their work product to Harlow for inclusion in an Andersen Worldwide Management Letter.

SUBSTANTIVE ALLEGATIONS

A. Sunbeam's New Management Team (1996-1998).

41. In the years leading up to 1996, Sunbeam had experienced increasing financial difficulties and growing losses. In an effort to remedy the situation, Sunbeam's board of directors undertook a change in Sunbeam's management in July 1996. The management team the board brought in was headed by Albert Dunlap, a person who had earned a reputation as a turnaround specialist through brief terms as Chief Executive Officer of a number of publicly traded corporations. Based on his penchant for rapidly slashing personnel and closing plants to achieve quick turnaround results, Dunlap is widely known as "Chainsaw Al."

B. Dunlap Arrives at Sunbeam and Initiates Restructuring.

42. Sunbeam hired Dunlap on July 18, 1996 and installed him as its Chairman and Chief Executive Officer. Immediately after joining Sunbeam, Dunlap hired Russell A. Kersh as Sunbeam's principal financial officer. Kersh had been associated with Dunlap for over 15 years, and had served as a senior executive during various Dunlap turnaround engagements.

Dunlap also brought in other hand-picked executives to make up his senior management team. He hired Donald R. Uzzi as Vice President, Marketing and Product Development. Uzzi later became Executive Vice President, Consumer Products Worldwide. Dunlap also hired Lee B. Griffith as Vice President, Sales. Dunlap retained Robert J. Gluck, formerly Controller of Sunbeam, as Sunbeam's Principal Accounting Officer.

43. Dunlap and the senior members of his management team entered into lucrative employment agreements that gave them a strong financial incentive to cause Sunbeam's stock price to increase and then to sell the company quickly. All stood to make many millions of dollars if that happened. Andersen was fully aware of those audit risks and the fact that a disproportionate share of those executives' potential earnings was dependent on stock options or restricted shares of stock.

44. In addition to the personal financial incentives deriving from his employment contract, Dunlap also had his reputation as a turnaround specialist to protect and advance. Dunlap used his reputation as a specialist in turning around troubled companies to make aggressive promises about Sunbeam's future performance and support false and misleading announcements of record performance -- results that were rendered credible because Andersen had certified Sunbeam's financial statements.

C. Andersen Is Recruited to Help Create the Illusion of a Successful Restructuring.

45. To lay the foundation for the appearance of a successful turnaround in 1997, Sunbeam's new senior management team decided to take improper expenses and record unjustified accounting writeoffs in 1996, thus lowering the benchmark for measuring their ultimate "success" in turning Sunbeam around.

46. Dunlap and his team needed the help of Sunbeam's auditors in approving the improper accounting tactics or the scheme would have had no chance of success. Andersen's Phillip Harlow was such a willing participant. Harlow knew of Dunlap's reputation as a fast-moving turnaround specialist who was quick to fire anyone who did not advance his agenda. Harlow also knew that in other highly publicized turnaround engagements, Dunlap had employed Coopers & Lybrand, one of Andersen's major competitors, as a financial consultant and independent auditor. Consistent with past practice, one of the first things Dunlap did after joining Sunbeam was to hire Coopers & Lybrand as a financial advisor with the lucrative assignment of planning Sunbeam's massive restructuring, which led to the firing of nearly half of Sunbeam's 12,000 employees. Andersen -- and especially Harlow -- were keenly aware that this did not bode well for the future of Andersen's relationship with Sunbeam.

47. Sunbeam had been a major client of Andersen's for many years and Sunbeam had paid Andersen over $1 million in fees for its 1995 audit alone. Harlow had been the Sunbeam engagement partner since 1993. When Dunlap took control of Sunbeam and hired Coopers & Lybrand for the restructuring, Harlow became concerned that Dunlap would fire Andersen as the company's independent auditor and hire Coopers & Lybrand instead. Indeed, Harlow was so concerned about the possible loss of Sunbeam as a client that he agreed to a 30% reduction in Andersen's fee for 1996. A reduction in audit fees was simply one price Andersen had to pay in order to keep Sunbeam as a client.

D. Andersen's Early Assistance in the Scheme.

48. When Harlow began work on the audit of Sunbeam's 1996 financial statements, Harlow and Andersen learned the true price of keeping Sunbeam as an audit client. In addition to reducing its audit fees, Andersen was required to accept the improper and misleading accounting treatments used by Sunbeam's senior management to create the illusion of a successful turnaround. In the end, Andersen's desire to retain a valuable client overrode any sense of duty or professionalism. To keep Sunbeam as an Andersen client, Harlow and Andersen ignored numerous accounting improprieties Andersen knew had been employed. Even when Harlow expressly identified certain of management's bogus accounting treatments, he ultimately acquiesced in management's refusal to correct the improprieties, and Andersen issued unqualified or "clean" audit opinions. Andersen did so despite the harm it knew would be inflicted on all who relied upon Andersen's audit opinions.

1. Improper Accounting Practices In 1996.

49. As set forth below, Andersen and Harlow permitted management to employ numerous accounting practices in 1996 that did not comply with GAAP.

50. One of the accounting practices permitted by Andersen and Harlow was the creation of a massive $338 million non-GAAP reserve for restructuring charges. Although certain types of restructuring reserves may be proper, the reserves created by management included improper reserves and accruals, excessive write-downs and prematurely recognized expenses that were not proper restructuring reserves under GAAP. Those intentionally inflated reserves served two purposes. First, because the reserves were charged as an expense against income, they allowed Sunbeam to overstate its 1996 loss, and lower the benchmark for measuring the eventual success of Sunbeam's turnaround. Second, the inflated restructuring reserves created a "cookie-jar" of overstated liabilities on Sunbeam's books that Dunlap could reduce in the years after 1996, purportedly to correct the overstatements, and at the same time increase income in the year of the corrections. Those adjustments, too, fostered the illusion of a successful turnaround.

51. One of the largest components of the Sunbeam "cookie-jar" reserves permitted by Andersen and Harlow was millions of dollars in items that benefitted future activities, and hence were not properly part of the restructuring reserve. Those items included costs of redesigning product packaging, costs of relocating employees and equipment, bonuses to be paid to employees who were told that they were being laid off but were asked to stay temporarily, advertising expenses and certain consulting fees. Note 2 to the audited 1996 financial statements falsely described the restructuring charges as follows:

In conjunction with the implementation of the restructuring and growth plan, the Company recorded a pre-tax special charge to earnings of approximately $337.6 million in the fourth quarter of 1996. This amount is allocated as follows in the accompanying Consolidated Statement of Operations: $154.9 million to Restructuring, Impairment and Other Costs as further described below; $92.3 million to Cost of Goods Sold related principally to inventory write-downs from the reduction in SKU's and costs of inventory liquidation programs; $42.5 million to Selling, General and Administrative expenses principally for increases in environmental and litigation reserves (see Notes 12 and 13) and other reserve categories; and the estimated pre-tax loss on the divestiture of the Company's furniture business of approximately $47.9 million.

As Sunbeam's eventual restatement of its financial statements showed, those reserves were materially inflated and were not recorded in accordance with GAAP.

52. In connection with the audit of Sunbeam's 1996 year-end financial statements, Harlow discovered that certain components of Sunbeam's restructuring reserves were not being recorded in compliance with GAAP and proposed that the company reverse several of the accounting entries establishing those reserves. As Harlow told Kersh and Gluck, under GAAP, entries that benefitted Sunbeam's future results were not considered to be proper restructuring charges in 1996. But Kersh and Gluck refused to reverse those items. Instead of standing firm, as professional ethics required, Harlow turned a blind eye to his duties as an independent auditor and caused Andersen to acquiesce in management's refusal to reverse those non-GAAP reserves. Those improper reserves caused Sunbeam's 1996 audited financial statements to be materially false and misleading.

53. In connection with the 1996 audited financial statements, Andersen and Harlow also permitted management to create an excessive $12 million reserve for a lawsuit alleging that Sunbeam was liable for a portion of the cleanup costs for a hazardous waste site. In fact, that reserve overstated Sunbeam's estimated liability by at least 100%, and provided Sunbeam with an inflated reserve that could be drawn down to boost income figures artificially in later periods.

54. Andersen and Harlow also permitted Sunbeam to write down its household products inventory in 1996. In connection with the restructuring, Dunlap's management team planned to eliminate half of Sunbeam's product lines and to liquidate Sunbeam's inventory of eliminated product lines at a substantial discount. Notwithstanding that the change affected only half of Sunbeam's product lines, Andersen and Harlow permitted management to reduce the cost basis for Sunbeam's entire inventory of household products at 1996 year end, without distinction between eliminated and continuing product lines (including inventories that were later sold in the ordinary course of business). As a result, the balance sheet value of Sunbeam's inventory at year-end 1996 was understated by approximately $2 million, and Sunbeam overstated its 1996 loss by the same amount. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that (a) Sunbeam had understated the carrying value of its household products inventory, (b) the understatement had contributed to the material misstatement of Sunbeam's financial statements at year-end 1996 and (c) the understatement would improperly increase Sunbeam's income during 1997 when household products were sold at artificially inflated margins.

55. Andersen and Harlow also permitted management improperly to recognize $2.3 million in 1997 advertising expenses and related costs as a 1996 expense. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that the accounting treatment would contribute to the material overstatement of Sunbeam's 1996 year-end loss and exaggerate Sunbeam's so-called turnaround by the same amount in 1997.

56. Finally, Andersen and Harlow permitted Sunbeam to manipulate its 1996 liabilities for cooperative advertising. In addition to buying national advertising to create demand for its products, Sunbeam funded a portion of its retailers' costs of running local promotions. As required by GAAP, Sunbeam accrued its estimated liabilities for such "cooperative advertising," and then charged its expenses in relation to its sales revenue during the year. At year-end 1996, Sunbeam set its cooperative advertising accrual at $21.8 million, an amount that was approximately 25% higher than the prior year's accrual amount, without any basis for the increase. Harlow learned of the inflated accrual for cooperative advertising in connection with Andersen's audit of Sunbeam's year-end 1996 financial statements and discussed it with Kersh and Gluck. Nevertheless, Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts concerning the lack of a proper basis for the accrual and the likelihood that the excess accrual would be released into income in early 1997. In fact, $5.8 million of that excessive accrual was used (without disclosure) to inflate Sunbeam's 1997 income.

2. Andersen's 1996 Unqualified Audit Opinion.

57. In March 1997, Andersen issued an unqualified audit opinion regarding Sunbeam's 1996 financial statements and authorized the inclusion of its audit opinion in Sunbeam's 1996 Form 10-K filed with the SEC. Andersen's opinion stated:

We conducted our audits in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards. Those standards require that we plan and perform the audit to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the financial statements are free of material misstatement. An audit includes examining, on a test basis, evidence supporting the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements. An audit also includes assessing the accounting principles used and significant estimates made by management, as well as evaluating the overall financial statement presentation. We believe that our audits provide a reasonable basis for our opinion.

In our opinion, the financial statements . . . present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of Sunbeam Corporation and subsidiaries as of December 31, 1995 and December 29, 1996, and the results of their operations and their cash flows for each of the three fiscal years in the period ended December 29, 1996 in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles.

58. Andersen's unqualified audit opinion was false in two material respects.

First, the financial statements Andersen audited did not "fairly" present Sunbeam's financial position in conformity with GAAP, as it represented. Second, Andersen did not, as it claimed, conduct its audit in accordance with GAAS.

59. In all, the 1996 financial statements audited by Andersen were materially false and misleading, and overstated Sunbeam's loss for 1996. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that (a) Andersen's unqualified audit opinion was incorrect, (b) Sunbeam's financial statements were materially false and misleading and not in conformity with GAAP and (c) Andersen had failed to perform an audit in accordance with GAAS.

E. Andersen Assists Sunbeam as a Financial Adviser in Sunbeam's Purchase of Coleman Company.

60. During 1997, Sunbeam's senior management continued to use improper accounting to create the illusion that a successful turnaround was underway at Sunbeam. By maintaining that illusion, Dunlap's management team hoped to position Sunbeam for a quick sale. However, the illusion proved too convincing to the market, and the price of Sunbeam stock was driven so high that no willing buyer could be found. Management was aware that, absent a sale, it would be unable to sustain the appearance of a successful turnaround. Therefore, in late 1997, Sunbeam sought to acquire other businesses, in order to consolidate their results with Sunbeam's and thereby continue to obscure Sunbeam's past accounting improprieties. Once again, Sunbeam management required Andersen's assistance in perpetuating the deception.

61. In early December 1997, officers and directors of Sunbeam met with various officers of Coleman Company regarding a potential combination with Sunbeam. After that initial overture was rejected by Coleman-Parent, Dunlap's representative returned with another proposal in January 1998. At that point, Coleman-Parent indicated it was willing to discuss a potential transaction.

62. On January 28, 1998, Sunbeam announced its financial results for 1997, reporting total revenues of $1.168 billion, and total earnings from continuing operations of $189 million (or $1.41 per share). Sunbeam's announcement coincided with Andersen's purported completion of the field work for its audit of Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements, although its work continued for more than a month.

63. On February 3, 1998, Harlow met with key officers of Sunbeam to discuss the acquisition of Coleman Company and its financial impact on Sunbeam. By that time, Harlow knew that Sunbeam had utilized improper accounting to achieve its 1997 results. Harlow also knew Coleman-Parent would insist on reviewing Andersen's 1997 audit opinion before agreeing to consummate any transaction in which the consideration included hundreds of millions of dollars in Sunbeam stock.

64. On February 20, 1998, Andersen agreed to act as a Sunbeam financial advisor and perform financial due diligence in connection with Sunbeam's acquisition of Coleman Company and two other companies, First Alert, Inc. and Signature Brands USA, Inc. In agreeing to undertake that assignment, Andersen became an active member of the team working to assist Sunbeam in acquiring Coleman Company.

65. During the latter weeks of February 1998, representatives of Sunbeam and Coleman-Parent met to negotiate the details of a potential acquisition of Coleman Company and to prepare a proposed structure for that transaction.

66. Between February 23 and 25, 1998, representatives of Andersen, including Harlow, conducted due diligence concerning Coleman Company and the other target companies on behalf of Sunbeam. During that period, Andersen representatives participated in various meetings with officers and consultants of Coleman Company. At no point, however, did Andersen's representatives suggest that Sunbeam's financial statements were materially false and misleading. Meanwhile, Sunbeam worked on negotiating the terms of its acquisition of Coleman Company.

67. On February 27, 1998, Harlow met with Sunbeam executives in New York to discuss Andersen's due diligence. That afternoon, Sunbeam and Coleman-Parent reached an agreement for the sale of Coleman Company.

68. As part of the Coleman Company acquisition agreement, Sunbeam represented and warranted that all of its filings with the SEC, which included the 1996 financial statements audited by Andersen, were accurate and not misleading, and that they would continue to be accurate and not misleading as of the transaction's closing date, which was expected to be several weeks later. Sunbeam also represented that its audited financial statements were prepared in accordance with GAAP, and that at the time of the closing of the transaction, its representation would continue to be true and correct. Andersen was fully aware of those representations and warranties when the merger agreement was executed on February 27, 1998.

69. As a result of Andersen's involvement in the Coleman Company acquisition transaction, it knew that Coleman-Parent would rely on Sunbeam's audited financial statements (1) in deciding to close the transaction, and (2) in accepting 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock and other consideration in return for its stake in Coleman Company. Moreover, as an independent certified public accountant, Andersen had a duty to disclose to Coleman-Parent that Sunbeam's audited financial statements in fact were neither accurate nor reliable. Notwithstanding that Andersen had met with representatives of Coleman-Parent and its auditors during its due diligence review, Andersen remained mute regarding the true financial condition of Sunbeam and the improprieties buried in Sunbeam's audited financial statements.

F. Andersen Issues its 1997 Audit Report.

70. In the first week of March 1998, shortly after the agreement for Sunbeam's purchase of Coleman Company was signed, but before the transaction closed, Andersen updated its audit work to reflect Sunbeam's acquisitions. That work was done by the same individuals who also were working as consultants on the Sunbeam acquisitions. The three acquisitions were specifically described in Note 14 to the audited financial statements. The description included the fact that Sunbeam was paying for the Coleman Company shares with Sunbeam common stock as well as cash and assumption of debt. Andersen then rendered an unqualified audit opinion for Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements. With Andersen's express consent, management included that opinion in Sunbeam's 1997 Form 10-K filed with the SEC.

1. Andersen's 1997 Unqualified Audit Report.

71. In its opinion concerning Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements, Andersen stated:

We conducted our audits in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards. Those standards require that we plan and perform the audit to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the financial statements are free of material misstatement. An audit includes examining, on a test basis, evidence supporting the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements. An audit also includes assessing the accounting principles used and significant estimates made by management, as well as evaluating the overall financial statement presentation. We believe that our audits provide a reasonable basis for our opinion.

In our opinion, the financial statements . . . present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of Sunbeam Corporation and subsidiaries as of December 29, 1996 and December 28, 1997, and the results of its operations and its cash flows for each of the three fiscal years in the period ended December 28, 1997 in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles.

72. Andersen's 1997 audit opinion was false in two material respects. First, the financial statements Andersen audited did not "fairly" present Sunbeam's financial position in conformity with GAAP, as it represented. Second, Andersen did not, as it claimed, conduct its audit in accordance with GAAS.

73. In all, the 1997 financial statements audited by Andersen were materially false and misleading in that they overstated Sunbeam's operating income for the year by 50%. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that (a) Andersen's unqualified audit opinion was incorrect, (b) Sunbeam's financial statements were materially false and misleading and not in conformity with GAAP and (c) Andersen had failed to perform an audit in accordance with GAAS.

2. Improper Accounting Practices In 1997.

74. Harlow was well aware of the potential for fraud and irregularities in Sunbeam's 1997 books, including the risk that Sunbeam management would attempt to claim profits and revenue on transactions before the earnings process was completed. Harlow specifically advised Andersen's foreign offices (including Andersen-Canada, Andersen-Hong Kong, Andersen-Mexico, Andersen-Venezuela and Andersen-UK), for example, that Dunlap had made promises to the public regarding earnings-per-share to be attained in 1997, and that management had a vested interest in achieving the promised earnings levels because management's primary form of compensation was based on the company's stock price. Harlow also noted the presence of the possibility of a third party purchase of the company's stock or assets.

75. Despite having specifically noted key reasons to employ heightened scrutiny in the 1997 audit, Harlow and Andersen permitted Sunbeam to engage in improper "earnings management" practices designed to achieve exactly the result Harlow had warned the Andersen audit team to watch for.

76. One of the most flagrant accounting abuses Andersen and Harlow permitted in 1997 was to allow Sunbeam to record a profit on a sham sale of its warranty and spare parts business to its spare parts provider, EPI Printers, Inc. Prior to 1997, EPI satisfied spare parts and warranty requests of Sunbeam customers on a fee basis. To raise additional revenue at year end 1997, however, Sunbeam entered into a sham sale of the warranty and spare parts inventories already in EPI's warehouse. As a result of the transaction, management fraudulently recognized millions of dollars of phony sales and profits in 1997.

77. The problem with the EPI transaction was that the transaction was not a sale at all, for at least three reasons. First, there was never a final agreement between Sunbeam and EPI. The closest the parties ever came to a meeting of the minds was the execution of a mere "agreement to agree." Second, by its terms, the proposed sale was to terminate on January 23, 1998, with no payment obligation on the part of EPI, absent a subsequent agreement between Sunbeam and EPI on the value of the inventory. In other words, the sale could be completely unwound just after year-end without EPI ever having paid a cent. Third, Sunbeam had agreed as part of the proposed sale to pay certain fees to EPI and to guarantee a 5% profit to EPI on the eventual resale of the inventory. In essence, even after the proposed sale, EPI remained a contractor compensated by Sunbeam on a fee basis for its services. In sum, the relationship between EPI and Sunbeam was not fundamentally altered by the purported "sale."

78. Harlow became aware of the true nature of the EPI transaction and raised it with management as part of Andersen's 1997 year-end audit. Harlow proposed that Sunbeam reverse the accounting entries reflecting the revenue recognition for that transaction, having concluded that the profit guarantee and the indeterminate value of the contract rendered revenue recognition inconsistent with GAAP. Simply stated, there was no revenue to recognize because the transaction was illusory. Kersh and Gluck refused to reverse the transaction. Instead of refusing to lend Andersen's name to management's fraudulent revenue recognition, Harlow again acquiesced in management's actions. As a result, Sunbeam's 1997 audited financial statements reflect almost $10 million of phony profit on the sham EPI transaction.

79. The EPI transaction raised a clear red flag that should have -- and must have -- alerted Andersen to the need for greater scrutiny regarding all of Sunbeam's revenue recognition decisions. At a minimum, Andersen should have been on guard as to all items

Harlow previously identified as proposed audit adjustments (but which Harlow eventually acquiesced in), and any previously recognized improper items that were ultimately dismissed as "immaterial."

80. Another 1997 revenue inflation scheme permitted by Andersen and Harlow was Sunbeam's use of improper "bill-and-hold" transactions. A bill-and-hold transaction is a transaction in which the seller bills a customer for a purchase while holding the merchandise for later delivery. During 1997, Dunlap's management team offered financial incentives to various customers to make purchases earlier than they would otherwise have done so. Management then proposed that Sunbeam hold the merchandise until the normal time for delivery.

81. Under certain limited circumstances, bill-and-hold transactions may be permitted for revenue recognition purposes. However, bill-and-hold transactions must meet specific stringent accounting criteria satisfying GAAP. The relevant criteria include, among others: a requirement that the buyer, not the seller, requested a sale on a bill-and-hold basis; that the buyer had a substantial business purpose for ordering the goods on a bill-and-hold basis; and that risks and rewards of ownership passed to the buyer at the time of the bill-and-hold sale.

82. Bill-and-hold transactions improperly added in excess of $29 million to Sunbeam's 1997 sales and $4.5 million to income. In the course of the audit of Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements, Andersen and Harlow discovered that the purported bill-and-hold customers had not requested the bill-and-hold treatment, and that in numerous cases involving rights of return "the risks of ownership and legal title" were not actually "passed to the customer." Nevertheless, Andersen negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that bill-and-hold transactions did not satisfy the required revenue recognition criteria. Ultimately, Andersen acquiesced in Sunbeam's decisions to recognize revenue for all of those non-GAAP sales in 1997, and to misdescribe the company's bill-and-hold practices in the financial statements as customer-driven legitimate sales.

83. Another income inflation tactic Sunbeam management used in 1997 was to decrease the inflated 1996 reserves to create the illusion of 1997 income. By decreasing the reserves in 1997, management increased Sunbeam's 1997 income by almost $5 million. In connection with Andersen's year-end audit of Sunbeam's financial statements, Harlow discovered that tactic and concluded that it was improper. Harlow proposed reversing management's misuse of the reserves, but management refused to do so. Rather than insisting that the adjustments be made, Andersen gave Sunbeam a pass, and permitted the entries. In doing so, Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that the improper accounting materially distorted Sunbeam's reported results of operations for 1997.

84. Another of Sunbeam's 1997 accounting gimmicks was to record income from non-recurring events as ordinary income. In connection with Andersen's work on the 1997 audit, Harlow learned that management had arranged for the sale of deeply discounted and obsolete inventory during 1997, creating $19 million in non-recurring revenue. Although the recognition of that revenue was permitted under GAAP, Sunbeam was required to disclose in its financial statements that the income from the sale was a non-recurring event. Sunbeam failed to do so. Notwithstanding that material omission, Andersen certified Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements.

85. In addition, during Andersen's 1997 audit, Harlow proposed adjustments to reverse $2.9 million related to a Sunbeam inventory overvaluation and $563,000 in additional items. Management again refused to make appropriate adjustments, and Andersen and Harlow acquiesced in the refusal to reverse those errors. In doing so, Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that those items contributed to the misstatement of Sunbeam's 1997 reported results of operations.

86. International sales represented a significant proportion of Sunbeam's overall income from sales. However, part of Sunbeam's reported income from international sales was artificially inflated. Several of Sunbeam's foreign subsidiaries engaged in guaranteed sales that could not have been booked under applicable accounting principles because they included an unlimited right to return unsold merchandise and because the amount of future returns on such sales could not reasonably be estimated.

87. Sunbeam's Hong Kong subsidiary recorded sales revenue of $8.6 million from various guaranteed sales made during the fourth quarter of 1997. However, that revenue should not have been recognized because sales were made with an unlimited right of return and because the amount of future returns could not reasonably be estimated. Indeed, in 1998 much of the product "sold" in 1997 was returned. Nevertheless, Andersen allowed those sales to be booked in 1997.

88. Sunbeam's Canadian subsidiary similarly engaged in guaranteed sales with an unlimited right of return. The revenue from those sales revenue could not have been recognized because the amount of future returns could not reasonably be estimated. Nevertheless, Andersen permitted those sales to be booked.

89. Sunbeam's Mexican subsidiary engaged in $900,000 in bill-and-hold transactions that should not have been recognized as income until 1998. However, Andersen permitted the full amount of such sales to be booked in 1997. Harlow and Andersen identified a total of $2.9 million in adjustments relating to inventory overvaluation that were proposed to

Sunbeam. Management refused to make those adjustments; Andersen and Harlow nevertheless issued clean audit opinions. In addition, the financial statements for Sunbeam's Mexico operations failed to include an expense for the profit sharing obligations of that business, an adjustment that reduced the earnings of that business by more than $3 million when Sunbeam later restated its 1997 results.

90. Sunbeam's Venezuela subsidiary also improperly valued inventory. Its books reflected purchased raw materials that were held at various suppliers. Andersen failed to confirm that the booked amounts represented materials actually in the possession of suppliers. If Andersen had done so, Andersen would have discovered that the materials did not exist. Nevertheless, Andersen permitted the full amount to be included on Sunbeam's financial statements.

91. In the end, Andersen's 1997 audit opinion certified financial statements that reported Sunbeam's income to be $186 million, much of which was improper under GAAP. The overstatements included in all over $90 million of improper net income including, without limitation, approximately $10 million from the sham sale to EPI, approximately $4.5 million from non-GAAP bill-and-hold sales, approximately $35 million in income derived from the use of non-GAAP reserves and accruals taken at year-end 1996 and approximately $6 million from improper revenue recognition.

92. As Andersen and Harlow knew, Coleman-Parent relied on Sunbeam's report of $186 million in income in deciding to close the sale of its interest in Coleman Company. If Andersen had not issued a materially false and misleading audit report, and instead had complied with GAAP and GAAS, Sunbeam's 1997 operating income would have been approximately half of what Andersen certified in the financial statements.

G. Coleman-Parent Relies on Andersen's Unqualified Audit Opinions and Closes the Sale to Sunbeam.

93. The merger agreement signed by Coleman-Parent on February 27, 1998 provided that a condition precedent to Coleman-Parent's obligation to close the transaction was the absence of any event, change, or development that would have a material adverse effect on the business, results of operation, or financial condition of Sunbeam. The closing also was conditioned on the absence of any material misrepresentation or omissions in Sunbeam's SEC filings, including Andersen's 1996 and 1997 audit reports in the Form 10-Ks. If Andersen had not been negligent or fraudulent in performing its audits, and had issued qualified or adverse reports exposing the falsity of Sunbeam's financial statements, Coleman-Parent would have been put on notice of an adverse material change affecting Sunbeam before closing, and of a material misstatement in Sunbeam's SEC filings. Coleman-Parent's obligation to close the transaction with Sunbeam would have been discharged by the failure of a condition precedent, and Coleman-Parent never would have suffered losses in excess of $600 million. Coleman-Parent directly relied on Andersen's 1996 and 1997 audit reports when it decided to close the transaction with Sunbeam and to accept 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock as consideration for selling its interest in Coleman Company.

94. Andersen was fully aware of the terms and conditions of the Coleman Company transaction and of Coleman-Parent's anticipated and actual reliance upon Andersen's unqualified 1996 and 1997 audit opinions.

95. On March 30, 1998, unaware of the falsity of Sunbeam's financial statements and Andersen's audit reports, Coleman-Parent closed the transaction with Sunbeam and accepted 14.1 million shares of what turned out to be essentially worthless Sunbeam common stock for the sale of its interest in Coleman Company.

H. Andersen's Improper Accounting and Misrepresentations Are Revealed, Causing the Market Value of Sunbeam's Stock to Plummet.

96. Almost immediately after the consummation of Coleman-Parent's sale of Coleman Company to Sunbeam, Sunbeam's facade of financial health began to crumble.

97. In an April 3, 1998 conference call with securities analysts, Sunbeam revealed that sales for the first quarter of 1998 were 5% below reported sales for the same period of the prior year. Only two weeks earlier, on March 19, 1998, Sunbeam had issued a press release in which it announced that sales for the first quarter of 1998 were "expected to exceed" sales for the same period of the prior year.

98. On June 6, 1998, an article was published in Barron's that raised serious questions regarding Sunbeam's apparent success under Dunlap, and suggested it was the result of "accounting gimmickry." On June 15, 1998, Sunbeam's Board announced that it had removed Dunlap as Chairman and CEO.

99. On June 25, 1998, Andersen withheld its consent for use of its 1997 audit opinion in a registration statement that was to have been filed with the SEC.

100. On June 30, 1998, Sunbeam announced that the Audit Committee of its Board of Directors would conduct an inquiry into the accuracy of its 1997 financial statements. The Audit Committee subsequently retained Deloitte & Touche LLP to assist in the review, in addition to Andersen. Sunbeam stated that "pending the completion of its review, its 1997 financial statements and the report of Arthur Andersen LLP should not be relied upon." Sunbeam added that the review "could result in a restatement of the 1997 financial statements and the first quarter 1998 Form 10-Q."

101. On August 6, 1998, Sunbeam announced that its Audit Committee had determined that Sunbeam would be required to restate its audited financial statements for 1997 and possibly for 1996, as well as its unaudited financial statements for the first quarter of 1998.

102. On November 12, 1998, Sunbeam released its restated 1996 and 1997 financial results, again audited by Andersen. The restated 1996 financial statements reported operating losses for 1996 that were approximately $40 million less than originally reported, losses from continuing operations that were approximately $26 million less than previously reported and net losses that were approximately $20 million less than previously reported.

103. The restated 1997 financial statements reported operating earnings for 1997 that were approximately $95 million less than originally reported, earnings from continuing operations that were approximately $70 million less than previously reported and net earnings that were approximately $70 million less than previously reported. The new operating income figure for 1997 was approximately 50% less than the amount Andersen previously certified.

104. In the wake of Dunlap's firing, Sunbeam's board of directors asked members of Coleman-Parent's management to assume key positions within Sunbeam in order to carry out damage control and attempt to salvage the value remaining in the company. New management was unable to overcome the devastating effects of the manipulation and distortion of Sunbeam's business.

105. On February 5, 2001, Sunbeam filed a voluntary petition for Chapter 11.

106. As a result of having been fraudulently induced into exchanging its ownership of Coleman Company for over 14 million shares of Sunbeam stock, Coleman-Parent has suffered direct damages in excess of $600,000,000.

VIOLATIONS OF GAAP AND GAAS IN

107. The objectives of financial reporting are to provide information that is useful in investment and credit decisions, information that is useful in assessing cash flow prospects and information about enterprise resources, claims to those resources and changes in them. (See "Objectives of Financial Reporting by Business Enterprises," Statement of Financial Accounting Concepts No. 1 (Financial Accounting Standards Board, November 1978).) In order to minimize misinterpretation of financial statements, the accounting profession has developed sets of standards regarding financial reporting and auditing practice that are generally accepted and universally practiced. Those standards are known as GAAP and GAAS. The development of common standards for auditing and financial reporting has provided businesspeople and investors with a valuable frame of reference in evaluating the financial condition of enterprises.

108. Auditors know they must adhere to GAAP and GAAS, or the standards would cease to have any meaning. Consistent with the objectives of the profession in developing those standards, the public has come to understand the importance of GAAP and GAAS in enhancing the reliability of audited financial statements. As a result, when an auditing firm represents that it has conducted an audit of a company in accordance with GAAS, and opines that such company's financial statements present the company's financial condition fairly in conformity with GAAP, readers of those financial statements have the right to rely on the integrity of those financial statements.

109. In auditing Sunbeam in 1996 and 1997, and in issuing unqualified opinions regarding Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements, Andersen and Harlow did not adhere to the standards of the profession. Although Andersen's audit opinions stated that the firm had conducted its audits of Sunbeam in accordance with GAAS, and based on those audits had concluded that Sunbeam's financial statements presented the company's financial condition fairly in conformity with GAAP, that simply was not true.

A. Sunbeam's Audited 1996 and 1997 Financial Statements Were Not In Conformity With GAAP.

110. As alleged below, Sunbeam's audited 1996 and 1997 financial statements failed to conform to GAAP in numerous respects.

111. Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements, certified by Andersen, failed to conform to GAAP because those financial statements did not comply with the accounting principle of reliability. That principle requires that the quality of reported information assures that the information is reasonably free from error or bias and faithfully represents what it purports to represent. FASB Statement of Financial Accounting Concepts No. 2, §§ 58-71; APB Statement No. 4, §§ 109, 138, 189.

112. The financial statements also failed to comply with the accounting principle of completeness, which requires that financial information be complete and that it validly represent the underlying event and conditions. FASB Statement of Financial Accounting Concepts No. 2, §§ 79, 80; APB Statement No. 4, § 94.

113. The financial statements also failed to comply with the accounting principle of conservatism, which requires that a conservative approach be taken in the accounting for transactions and the early recognition of unfavorable events. FASB Statement of Financial Accounting Concepts No. 2, §§ 91-97; APB Statements No. 9, §§ 35, 71.

114. The financial statements also failed to comply with the accounting principle of neutrality, which requires that there should be an absence in reported information of bias intended to attain a predetermined result. FASB Statement of Financial Accounting Concepts No. 2, § 98.

115. The financial statements also failed to comply with the accounting principle of relevance, which requires that reported information should have the capacity to make a difference in a decision by helping users to form predictions about the outcomes of past, present and future events. FASB Statement of Financial Accounting Concepts No. 2, §§ 47, 48.

B. Andersen's 1996 and 1997 Audits Were Not Conducted In Accordance With GAAS.

116. As alleged below, Andersen failed in numerous respects to conduct its audits in accordance with GAAS.

117. Andersen and Harlow violated GAAS because they negligently or fraudulently failed to perform the audits with an attitude of professional skepticism as required by Statement on Auditing Standards ("SAS") No. 53, which states: "An audit of financial statements in accordance with generally accepted accounting standards should be planned and performed with an attitude of professional skepticism." AU § 316.16. Thus:

a. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently failed to reach a conclusion that there existed a significant risk of intentional distortion of financial statements by Sunbeam management. Andersen and Harlow should have reached that conclusion because Sunbeam's management was dominated by a single person, Dunlap; because Dunlap's attitude toward financial reporting was unduly aggressive; because Dunlap placed undue emphasis on meeting earnings projections; because of the extremely rapid change in Sunbeam's performance; and/or because Dunlap's plan to quickly "turn around" and sell Sunbeam incentivized him to distort financial statements. See AU §§ 316.10 and 316.12.

b. Andersen and Harlow also were negligent or fraudulent in failing to recognize that the accounting policies employed by Sunbeam were not acceptable in the circumstances. Thus, "when the auditor has reached a conclusion that there is a significant risk of intentional distortion of financial statements, the auditor should recognize that management's selection and application of significant accounting policies, particularly those related to revenue recognition, asset valuation, and capitalization versus expensing, may be misused. Increased risk of intentional distortion of the financial statements should cause greater concern about whether accounting principles that are otherwise generally accepted are being used in inappropriate circumstances to create a distortion of earnings." AU § 316.19.

c. Andersen and Harlow also acted negligently or fraudulently by failing to obtain sufficient competent evidential matter through inspection, observation, inquiries and confirmations to afford a reasonable basis for its opinions regarding Sunbeam's financial statements. That failure violated the third standard of field work adopted by the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants ("AICPA") (AU § 150.02). Furthermore, "[w]hen evaluation at the financial statement level indicates significant risk, the auditor requires more or different evidence to support material transactions than would be the case in the absence of such risk. For example, the auditor may perform additional procedures to determine that sales are properly recorded, giving consideration to the possibility that the buyer has a right to return the product. Transactions that are both large and unusual, particularly at year-end, should be selected for testing." AU § 316.20.

118. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently failed to exercise due professional care in the performance of the 1996 and 1997 audits, in violation of the AICPA's third general auditing standard (AU § 150.02).

119. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently failed to plan the work adequately to uncover the errors and irregularities in Sunbeam's accounting information, in violation of the AICPA's first standard of field work (AU § 150.02).

120. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently failed to obtain a sufficient understanding of Sunbeam's internal control structure to plan the audits and to determine the nature, timing and extent of tests to be performed, in violation of the AICPA's second standard of field work (AU § 150.02). Specifically, Andersen and Harlow fraudulently failed to assess properly the risk of management override of controls in light of Dunlap's plan to quickly "turn around" and sell Sunbeam.

121. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently relied on management representations rather than applying the auditing procedures necessary to afford a reasonable basis for an opinion on Sunbeam's financial statements, in violation of SAS No. 19 (AU § 333.02).

122. Andersen and Harlow were negligent or fraudulent in not recognizing that misstatements resulting from misapplication of GAAP, departures from fact and omissions of necessary information, in aggregate, caused Sunbeam's financial statements to be materially misstated, in violation of SAS No. 47 (AU § 312.04).

123. As alleged above, on numerous occasions Andersen and Harlow concluded that certain misstatements caused Sunbeam's financial statements to be materially misstated. Although they requested that Sunbeam management eliminate the misstatements, management refused. Andersen acted negligently or fraudulently in not issuing a qualified or adverse opinion in such instances, in violation of SAS No. 47 (AU § 312.31).

124. Andersen and Harlow were negligent or fraudulent in concluding that the accounting principles applied by Sunbeam were appropriate in the circumstances and that Sunbeam's financial statements were informative of matters that could affect their use, understanding and interpretation, in violation of SAS No. 69 (AU § 411.04(b) and (c)).

125. Andersen and Harlow were negligent or fraudulent in failing to report that a change in the application of accounting principles in Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements had materially affected their comparability with the financial statements for prior periods, especially 1996, due to a different treatment of sales and reserves in those periods, in violation of SAS Nos. 1 and 43 (AU § 420.02).

126. Andersen's and Harlow's failure to conduct the audits in accordance with GAAS, and Andersen's certification of financial statements that were not in conformity with GAAP, as shown above, caused Coleman-Parent to suffer damages in excess of $600,000,000.

127. Andersen-Worldwide, Andersen-US, Andersen-Canada, Andersen-Hong Kong, Andersen-Mexico, Andersen-Venezuela and Andersen-UK are jointly and severally liable to plaintiff because they participated in the course of conduct that constitutes the wrongful acts alleged herein, acted in concert to injure plaintiff, constituted alter egos of one another, constituted agents of one another, aided and abetted the conduct complained of herein, and/or conspired with each other to injure plaintiff.

COUNT I
Fraudulent Misrepresentation

128. Coleman-Parent repeats and realleges each and every allegation above as if set forth fully herein.

129. At the time Andersen issued its unqualified audit opinions for Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements, Andersen and Harlow possessed knowledge superior to

Coleman-Parent concerning Sunbeam's financial position, the accounting principles Sunbeam used, the results of Sunbeam's operations and cash flows and whether Sunbeam's financial condition was presented in conformity with GAAP.

130. As described in detail above, Andersen and Harlow made representations of fact that were false in the unqualified audit opinions it issued for Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements, including, among other things, (a) that Andersen's audits of Sunbeam were conducted in accordance with GAAS; (b) that Sunbeam's financial statements fairly presented the financial position of Sunbeam during the relevant periods; (c) that Sunbeam's financial statements fairly presented the results of Sunbeam's operations and cash flows during the relevant periods; and (d) that Sunbeam's financial statements were in conformity with GAAP.

131. As described in detail above, Andersen and Harlow knew that those representations were false at the time they were made and/or made those representations with recklessness as to their truth.

132. Andersen consented to the publication of its audit reports to the public and business world by consenting to their inclusion in Sunbeam's SEC filings. Given that publication, Andersen and Harlow intended that the public -- including Coleman-Parent -- would rely on Andersen's representations. Moreover, Andersen and Harlow specifically knew the terms of the agreement for Coleman-Parent's sale of Coleman Company to Sunbeam and consented to the publication of Andersen's audit report in Sunbeam's March 6, 1998 Form 10-K filing with the intent that Coleman-Parent rely upon Andersen's representations.

133. In agreeing to sell its interest in Coleman Company for approximately 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock plus cash and other consideration, Coleman-Parent reasonably and justifiably relied upon Andersen's representations and omissions as to Andersen's 1996 and 1997 audits.

134. But for Andersen's misrepresentations, Coleman-Parent would not have agreed to sell its business to Sunbeam in return for artificially-inflated Sunbeam stock, among other consideration. As a result of Andersen's and Harlow's misconduct, Coleman-Parent has been damaged in excess of $600,000,000.

COUNT II
Fraudulent Inducement To Contract
(Conspiracy and Concerted Action)

135. Coleman-Parent repeats and realleges each and every allegation above as if set forth fully herein.

136. As described in detail above, Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements contained false statements of material fact. Those material misrepresentations included, among other things, (a) overstating Sunbeam's 1996 operating losses by approximately $40 million; (b) overstating Sunbeam's 1996 losses from continuing operations by approximately $26 million; (c) overstating Sunbeam's 1996 net losses by approximately $20 million; (d) overstating Sunbeam's 1997 operating earnings by approximately $95 million; (e) overstating Sunbeam's 1997 earnings from continuing operations by over $70 million; (f) overstating Sunbeam's 1997 net earnings by approximately $70 million; and (g) overstating Sunbeam's 1997 operating income figure by approximately 50%.

137. As described in detail above, Andersen and Harlow made representations of fact that were false in the unqualified audit opinions it issued for Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements, including, among other things, (a) that Andersen's audits of Sunbeam were conducted in accordance with GAAS; (b) that Sunbeam's financial statements fairly presented the financial position of Sunbeam during the relevant periods; (c) that Sunbeam's financial statements fairly presented the results of Sunbeam's operations and cash flows during the relevant periods; and (d) that Sunbeam's financial statements were in conformity with GAAP.

138. As described in detail above, Sunbeam, Andersen and Harlow knew that those representations were false when made and/or made those representations with reckless disregard as to their truth.

139. In order to induce Coleman-Parent further into entering into and fulfilling a contract to sell its interest in Coleman Company to Sunbeam in exchange for approximately 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock, Sunbeam represented that its SEC filings dating back to January 1, 1997 were accurate and not misleading as of February 27, 1998 and would be accurate and not misleading on March 30, 1998. Sunbeam's management, Andersen and Harlow knew and/or recklessly disregarded that those representations were false when made because Sunbeam's SEC filings contained Sunbeam's false and misleading 1996 and 1997 financial statements and Andersen's false and misleading audit reports.

140. In reasonable and justifiable reliance on Sunbeam's representations that its SEC filings – including its financial statements and Andersen's audit reports – were accurate with respect to Sunbeam's financial position and operating results, Coleman-Parent agreed to accept 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock and other consideration in exchange for its controlling stake in Coleman Company.

141. As a proximate result of its reliance on those misrepresentations, Coleman-Parent gave up its stake in Coleman Company in exchange for shares of Sunbeam which, once the truth of Sunbeam's financial situation was revealed, became worthless. Those misrepresentations proximately caused injury to Coleman-Parent in excess of $600,000,000.

142. Andersen and Harlow were part of a team with Dunlap, Kersh and the other senior Sunbeam executives that acted in concert and wrongfully conspired to create the appearance that Sunbeam was performing at a high level to artificially inflate the stock price of Sunbeam and make it attractive for a sale to another company. Andersen and Harlow explicitly or implicitly by acquiescence agreed to become part of that conspiracy and committed overt acts in furtherance of its fraudulent scheme in order to retain Sunbeam as a client and earn significant fees.

143. In furtherance of that conspiracy, Dunlap and the other Sunbeam executives decided to acquire Coleman Company in order to further increase Sunbeam's stock price and maintain the illusion of its good performance. In pursuance of that scheme, Andersen and Harlow committed the overt acts of issuing Andersen's false and misleading March 1998 unqualified audit opinion with respect to Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements and of consenting to its publication to the SEC as part of Sunbeam's Form 10-K filing on March 6, 1998. Andersen and Harlow knew that Andersen's audit opinion would be used by Sunbeam to induce Coleman-Parent into selling its controlling stake in Coleman Company in exchange for shares of artificially-inflated Sunbeam stock. Andersen's audit report also furthered that conspiracy by actively supporting the illusion of Sunbeam's performance that had been created in the market, which helped support the company's artificially-inflated stock price. In doing so, Andersen and Harlow committed the tortious act of fraudulent inducement in concert with Dunlap and the other Sunbeam executives pursuant to a common design.

144. As described above, Coleman-Parent was damaged as a result of those concerted acts performed as part of that conspiracy.

COUNT III
Negligent Misrepresentation

145. Coleman-Parent repeats and realleges each and every allegation above as if set forth fully herein.

146. Andersen provided the information in its audit reports regarding Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements in the course of its business as an accounting firm in the employ of Sunbeam.

147. In issuing its audit report regarding Sunbeam's 1997 and 1996 financial statements and in consenting to that report's inclusion in Sunbeam's March 6, 1998 Form 10-K filing with the SEC, Andersen and Harlow were aware that such information was being provided, in part, for the specific guidance and reliance of Coleman-Parent, which was agreeing to sell Coleman Company to Sunbeam for approximately 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock plus cash. In particular, Sunbeam warranted and represented to Coleman-Parent that its SEC filings, and audited financial statements including Andersen's report, were accurate – a fact that Andersen and Harlow were aware of when Andersen issued its report and consented to its publication. Andersen and Harlow expected that Coleman-Parent would rely on Andersen's 1997 audit report. Andersen and Harlow also were aware and expected that Coleman-Parent specifically was relying on Andersen's previously issued 1996 audit report, which Andersen did not retract until long after the Coleman Company transaction closed.

148. As described in detail above, Andersen's unqualified audit opinions for Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements contained material falsehoods, including, among other things, (a) that its audits of Sunbeam were conducted in accordance with GAAS; (b) that Sunbeam's financial statements fairly presented the financial position of Sunbeam during the relevant periods; (c) that Sunbeam's financial statements fairly presented the results of Sunbeam's operations and cash flows during the relevant periods; and (d) that Sunbeam's financial statements were in conformity with GAAP.

149. As described in more detail above, Andersen and Harlow failed to exercise reasonable care or competence in obtaining or communicating the information contained in their audit reports regarding Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements.

150. Coleman-Parent reasonably and justifiably relied upon the information contained in Andersen's audit reports, including their material falsehoods regarding Sunbeam's financial condition and operating results and regarding the conformance of Sunbeam's financial statements to GAAP. In reliance on those material falsehoods, Coleman-Parent agreed to sell its interest in Coleman Company for approximately 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock, cash and other consideration.

151. As a result of Andersen's and Harlow's misconduct, Coleman-Parent has been injured in an amount in excess of $600,000,000.

WHEREFORE, plaintiff Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc. demands judgment against Andersen-Worldwide, Andersen-US, Andersen-Canada, Andersen-Hong Kong, Andersen-Mexico, Andersen-Venezuela, Andersen-UK and Phillip E. Harlow, jointly and severally, as follows:

- A. Compensatory damages in an amount in excess of $600,000,000;
- B. An award of costs and expenses incurred in this action, including reasonable attorneys' and experts' fees; and
- C. Any further relief as the Court may deem just and proper in light of all the circumstances of the case.

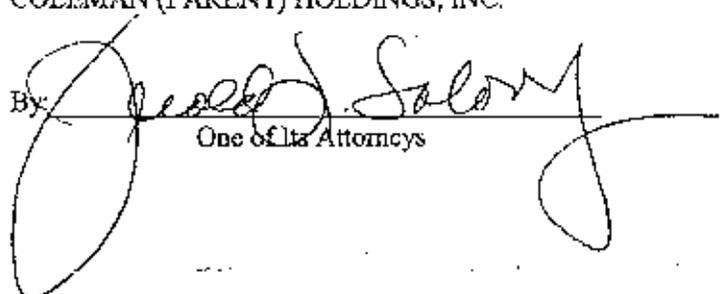

D. Coleman-Parent expressly reserves the right to seek leave to amend its complaint pursuant to Fla. Stat. § 768.72 to assert claims for punitive damages in excess of $1.2 billion as allowed by law.

COLEMAN (PARENT) HOLDINGS, INC.,

Plaintiff,

v.

ARTHUR ANDERSEN LLP and PHILLIP E. HARLOW,

Case No.: CA '01 - 06062 AN

JURY TRIAL DEMANDED

FILED
01 JUN - 8 PM 4:11
CIRCUIT CIVIL 8

COMPLAINT

Plaintiff Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc. ("Coleman-Parent"), by its attorneys, alleges the following against defendants Arthur Andersen LLP ("Andersen") and Phillip E. Harlow ("Harlow"):

NATURE OF THE ACTION

1. This action arises out of Coleman-Parent's sale of its controlling interest in The Coleman Company, Inc. ("Coleman Company") to Sunbeam Corporation, Inc. ("Sunbeam") on March 30, 1998, in exchange for 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam common stock, plus other consideration. In deciding to go forward with that sale, Coleman-Parent relied on Sunbeam's financial statements, which were audited and certified by Andersen, the largest accounting firm in the world.

2. Unbeknownst to Coleman-Parent, however, Andersen had audited and certified financial statements that it knew to be inaccurate and misleading. Those audited financial statements painted a false picture of Sunbeam, depicting it as a company in the midst of an impressive financial turnaround. The reality was that Sunbeam's turnaround was a sham, and when the truth emerged, Sunbeam's stock lost virtually all of its value. The company is now in bankruptcy. By relying on the financial statements improperly certified by Andersen, Coleman-Parent has suffered losses exceeding $600 million.

3. By holding itself out as Sunbeam's independent certified public accountant and certifying Sunbeam's financial statements, Andersen knowingly assumed a responsibility that transcended its relationship with Sunbeam as a client. As an independent public accountant auditing Sunbeam's financial statements, Andersen owed a duty to Coleman-Parent and others whom it knew were relying upon Andersen's certification that Sunbeam's reports fairly depicted the company's financial status. Andersen was required to maintain independence from its client, Sunbeam, and speak with total honesty befitting the trust that had been placed in its word. In carrying out its audit of Sunbeam's financial statements, Andersen utterly failed to live up to that responsibility. To the contrary, Andersen's audits were not performed in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards ("GAAS"), and the financial statements it certified were not, as Andersen claimed, in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles ("GAAP"). Even more egregious, Phillip Harlow, the audit partner on the Sunbeam account, and others at Andersen knew the financial statements were not prepared in conformity with GAAP, but Andersen certified them nonetheless.

4. The motivation of Harlow and Andersen was simple - to do whatever was necessary to retain a major client. Sunbeam was one of few Fortune 500 clients of Andersen's Fort Lauderdale, Florida, office. Andersen had served as Sunbeam's independent auditor for many years. Sunbeam had paid Andersen more than $1 million for its 1995 audit. However, in 1996 that relationship was threatened by Sunbeam's new CEO, Albert Dunlap. Dunlap was eager to show a turnaround at Sunbeam in order to position the company for a quick sale, as he recently had done at Scott Paper. To accomplish that goal, Dunlap's new management team knowingly employed improper accounting methods that first overstated the company's loss in 1996 and then inflated the company's income in 1997. In total abrogation of its responsibility as an independent auditor, Andersen permitted -- indeed, blessed -- those improper accounting treatments, rather than risk losing Sunbeam's audit business to Dunlap's accountant of choice, Coopers & Lybrand.

5. Ironically, the financial results certified by Andersen for 1996 and 1997 drove the price of Sunbeam stock so high that new management could not locate a willing buyer for a quick sale of the company, as had been hoped. As a result, Sunbeam was forced to shift gears and pursue acquisitions of other companies, including Coleman Company, in the hope that those mergers would obscure Sunbeam's true financial position and forestall revelation of the accounting gimmickry. To effectuate that plan, the very same Andersen partners and employees who were functioning as Sunbeam's "independent" auditors (including Harlow) added another role and joined Sunbeam's due diligence team for the acquisitions.

6. Because of Andersen's dual roles as auditor and acquisitions consultant, it knew full well not only that the purchase of Coleman Company was taking place, but also that Coleman-Parent was relying on the financial statements certified by Andersen. Nonetheless, Andersen took no steps before the Coleman Company acquisition closed to correct the grossly misleading impression created by its certifications.

7. At the time of the sale to Sunbeam, Coleman Company was a leading manufacturer and marketer of consumer products for the worldwide outdoor recreation market, with annual revenues in excess of $1 billion. As payment for its stake in Coleman Company, Coleman-Parent was to receive 14,099,749 shares of Sunbeam stock, $160 million in cash, and other consideration. Based on Sunbeam's share price at the time of the closing, Coleman-Parent received Sunbeam shares that had an aggregate market value of over $619.5 million.

8. Within weeks of the closing of the Coleman Company acquisition on March 30, 1998, the deception facilitated by Andersen began to unravel. On April 3, 1998, just four days after the closing, Sunbeam's management issued a press release announcing that, despite having predicted positive quarterly results in another press release just two weeks earlier, Sunbeam now would show a loss for the first quarter of 1998. On May 11, 1998, Sunbeam issued an earnings release for the first quarter of 1998 reporting a loss of 52 cents per share, compared with a gain of 8 cents per share in the same quarter of 1997. Press coverage ensued in the following month questioning whether Sunbeam had utilized -- and Andersen had approved -- manipulative and improper accounting practices in order to create the ruse of a turnaround.

9. In June 1998, the Sunbeam board of directors began an inquiry into Sunbeam's accounting practices. On June 15, 1998, the board announced that it had removed Dunlap as Chairman and CEO of Sunbeam. On June 25, 1998, Andersen withheld its consent for use of its unqualified 1997 audit opinion in a registration statement that was to have been filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission ("SEC"). On June 30, 1998, Sunbeam acknowledged that it had undertaken a review of its financial statements and the review could result in a restatement of the financial statements. On October 20, 1998, Sunbeam and Andersen announced a restatement of the financial statements. Thereafter, Andersen issued a new unqualified audit opinion for Sunbeam reporting only $93 million in operating earnings for 1997. That amount was approximately half of the figure that Andersen previously certified.

10. In February 2001, Sunbeam filed a voluntary bankruptcy petition under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. Coleman-Parent's equity stake in Sunbeam is now worthless.

11. In order to retain the Sunbeam account and lucrative auditing and consulting fees, Andersen turned its back on its professional and legal obligations and certified Sunbeam financial statements that it knew to be false and misleading. It did so with full knowledge that Coleman-Parent would be harmed immensely by Andersen's misstatements and omissions. As a direct and foreseeable result of Andersen's actions, Coleman-Parent has sustained damages in excess of $600,000,000.

12. By this complaint, Coleman-Parent seeks recovery of over $600 million in compensatory damages. In addition, Coleman-Parent reserves the right to seek leave to amend its complaint pursuant to Fla. Stat. § 768.72 to assert claims for an additional recovery of punitive damages in excess of $1.2 billion as allowed by law.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

13. This Court has jurisdiction over the subject matter of this action pursuant to Fla. Stat. § 26.012(2)(a). This Court has jurisdiction over Andersen and Harlow pursuant to Fla. Stat. §§ 48.193(1)(a) and (f), (2), and (5).

14. Venue is proper in this district pursuant to Fla. Stat. §§ 47.011 and 47.021 because Andersen maintains an office with more than 30 employees in West Palm Beach, Florida, and therefore resides in Palm Beach County. In addition, Harlow is a resident of South Florida.

PARTIES

15. Coleman-Parent is a corporation incorporated in the state of Delaware with its principal business offices located in New York. Coleman-Parent is a wholly owned subsidiary of Mafco Holdings Inc. ("MAFCO"). Prior to March 30, 1998, Coleman-Parent owned approximately 81% of Coleman Company.

16. Andersen is a limited liability partnership formed under the laws of the State of Illinois. As the world's largest accounting firm, Andersen employs over 77,000 professionals in fields such as accounting, taxation, business consulting, corporate finance, risk management, and business fraud investigation. Andersen has partners who are residents of Florida and numerous other states. Andersen's global revenues for the fiscal year ending August 31, 2000 totaled more than $8 billion.

17. Harlow has been a partner at Andersen since 1983. He served as the engagement partner on the Andersen audits of Sunbeam's financial statements from 1993 to 1998. Harlow also participated as a member of Sunbeam's due diligence team for Sunbeam's acquisition of Coleman Company.

SUBSTANTIVE ALLEGATIONS

A. Sunbeam's New Management Team (1996-1998).

18. In the years leading up to 1996, Sunbeam had experienced increasing financial difficulties and growing losses. In an effort to remedy the situation, Sunbeam's board of directors undertook a change in Sunbeam's management in July 1996. The management team the board brought in was headed by Albert Dunlap, a person who had earned a reputation as a turnaround specialist through brief terms as Chief Executive Officer of a number of publicly traded corporations. Based on his penchant for rapidly slashing personnel and closing plants to achieve quick turnaround results, Dunlap is widely known as "Chainsaw Al."

B. Dunlap Arrives at Sunbeam and Initiates Restructuring.

19. Sunbeam hired Dunlap on July 18, 1996 and installed him as its Chairman and Chief Executive Officer. Immediately after joining Sunbeam, Dunlap hired Russell A. Kersh as Sunbeam's principal financial officer. Kersh had been associated with Dunlap for over 15 years, and had served as a senior executive during various Dunlap turnaround engagements. Dunlap also brought in other hand-picked executives to make up his senior management team. He hired Donald R. Uzzi as Vice President, Marketing and Product Development. Uzzi later became Executive Vice President, Consumer Products Worldwide. Dunlap also hired Lee B. Griffith as Vice President, Sales. Dunlap retained Robert J. Gluck, formerly Controller of Sunbeam, as Sunbeam's Principal Accounting Officer.

20. Dunlap and the senior members of his management team entered into lucrative employment agreements that gave them a strong financial incentive to cause Sunbeam's stock price to increase and then to sell the company quickly. All stood to make many millions of dollars if that happened. Andersen was fully aware of those agreements and the fact that a disproportionate share of those executives' potential earnings was dependent on stock options or restricted shares of stock.

21. In addition to the personal financial incentives deriving from his employment contract, Dunlap also had his reputation as a turnaround specialist to protect and advance. Dunlap used his reputation as a specialist in turning around troubled companies to make aggressive promises about Sunbeam's future performance and support false and misleading announcements of record performance – results that were rendered credible because Andersen had certified Sunbeam's financial statements.

C. Andersen Is Recruited to Help Create the Illusion of a Successful Restructuring.

22. To lay the foundation for the appearance of a successful turnaround in 1997, Sunbeam's new senior management team decided to take improper expenses and record unjustified accounting writeoffs in 1996, thus lowering the benchmark for measuring their ultimate "success" in turning Sunbeam around.

23. Dunlap and his team needed the help of Sunbeam's auditors in approving the improper accounting tactics or the scheme would have had no chance of success. Andersen's Phillip Harlow was such a willing participant. Harlow knew of Dunlap's reputation as a fast-moving turnaround specialist who was quick to fire anyone who did not advance his agenda. Harlow also knew that in other highly publicized turnaround engagements, Dunlap had employed Coopers & Lybrand, one of Andersen's major competitors, as a financial consultant and independent auditor. Consistent with past practice, one of the first things Dunlap did after joining Sunbeam was to hire Coopers & Lybrand as a financial advisor with the lucrative assignment of planning Sunbeam's massive restructuring, which led to the firing of nearly half of Sunbeam's 12,000 employees. Andersen – and especially Harlow – were keenly aware that this did not bode well for the future of Andersen's relationship with Sunbeam.

24. Sunbeam had been a major client of Andersen's for many years and Sunbeam had paid Andersen over $1 million in fees for its 1995 audit alone. Harlow had been the Sunbeam engagement partner since 1993. When Dunlap took control of Sunbeam and hired Coopers & Lybrand for the restructuring, Harlow became concerned that Dunlap would fire Andersen as the company's independent auditor and hire Coopers & Lybrand instead. Indeed, Harlow was so concerned about the possible loss of Sunbeam as a client that he agreed to a 30% reduction in Andersen's fee for 1996. A reduction in audit fees was simply one price Andersen had to pay in order to keep Sunbeam as a client.

D. Andersen's Early Assistance in the Scheme.

25. When Harlow began work on the audit of Sunbeam's 1996 financial statements, Harlow and Andersen learned the true price of keeping Sunbeam as an audit client. In addition to reducing its audit fees, Andersen was required to accept the improper and misleading accounting treatments used by Sunbeam's senior management to create the illusion of a successful turnaround. In the end, Andersen's desire to retain a valuable client overrode any sense of duty or professionalism. To keep Sunbeam as an Andersen client, Harlow and Andersen ignored numerous accounting improprieties Andersen knew had been employed. Even when Harlow expressly identified certain of management's accounting treatments as improper, he ultimately acquiesced in management's refusal to correct the improprieties, and Andersen issued unqualified or "clean" audit opinions. Andersen did so despite the harm it knew would be inflicted on all who relied upon Andersen's audit opinions.

1. Improper Accounting Practices In 1996.

26. As set forth below, Andersen and Harlow permitted management to employ numerous accounting practices in 1996 that did not comply with GAAP.

27. One of the accounting practices permitted by Andersen and Harlow was the creation of a massive $338 million non-GAAP reserve for restructuring charges. Although certain types of restructuring reserves may be proper, the reserves created by management included improper reserves and accruals, excessive write-downs, and prematurely recognized expenses that were not proper restructuring reserves under GAAP. Those intentionally inflated reserves served two purposes. First, because the reserves were charged as an expense against income, they allowed Sunbeam to overstate its 1996 loss, and lower the benchmark for measuring the eventual success of Sunbeam's turnaround. Second, the inflated restructuring reserves created a "cookie-jar" of overstated liabilities on Sunbeam's books that Dunlap could reduce in the years after 1996, purportedly to correct the overstatements, and at the same time increase income in the year of the corrections. Those adjustments, too, fostered the illusion of a successful turnaround.

28. One of the largest components of the Sunbeam "cookie-jar" reserves permitted by Andersen and Harlow was millions of dollars in items that benefitted future activities, and hence were not properly part of the restructuring reserve. Those items included costs of redesigning product packaging, costs of relocating employees and equipment, bonuses to be paid to employees who were told that they were being laid off but were asked to stay temporarily, advertising expenses, and certain consulting fees. Note 2 to the audited 1996 financial statements falsely described the restructuring charges as follows:

In conjunction with the implementation of the restructuring and growth plan, the Company recorded a pre-tax special charge to earnings of approximately $337.6 million in the fourth quarter of 1996. This amount is allocated as follows in the accompanying Consolidated Statement of Operations: $154.9 million to Restructuring, Impairment and Other Costs as further described below; $92.3 million to Cost of Goods Sold related principally to inventory write-downs from the reduction in SKU's and costs of inventory liquidation programs; $42.5 million to Selling, General and Administrative expenses principally for increases in environmental and litigation reserves (see Notes 12 and 13) and other reserve categories; and the estimated pre-tax loss on the divestiture of the Company's furniture business of approximately $47.9 million.

As Sunbeam's eventual restatement of its financial statements showed, those reserves were materially inflated and were not recorded in accordance with GAAP.

29. In connection with the audit of Sunbeam's 1996 year-end financial statements, Harlow discovered that certain components of Sunbeam's restructuring reserves were not being recorded in compliance with GAAP and proposed that the company reverse several of the accounting entries establishing those reserves. As Harlow told Kersh and Gluck, under GAAP, entries that benefitted Sunbeam's future results were not considered to be proper restructuring charges in 1996. But Kersh and Gluck refused to reverse those items. Instead of standing firm, as professional ethics required, Harlow turned a blind eye to his duties as an independent auditor and caused Andersen to acquiesce in management's refusal to reverse those non-GAAP reserves. Those improper reserves caused Sunbeam's 1996 audited financial statements to be materially false and misleading.

30. In connection with the 1996 audited financial statements, Andersen and Harlow also permitted management to create an excessive $12 million reserve for a lawsuit alleging that Sunbeam was liable for a portion of the cleanup costs for a hazardous waste site. In fact, that reserve overstated Sunbeam's estimated liability by at least 100%, and provided Sunbeam with an inflated reserve that could be drawn down to boost income figures artificially in later periods.

31. Andersen and Harlow also permitted Sunbeam to write down its household products inventory in 1996. In connection with the restructuring, Dunlap's management team planned to eliminate half of Sunbeam's product lines and to liquidate Sunbeam's inventory of eliminated product lines at a substantial discount. Notwithstanding that the change affected only half of Sunbeam's product lines, Andersen and Harlow permitted management to reduce the cost basis for Sunbeam's entire inventory of household products at 1996 year end, without distinction between eliminated and continuing product lines (including inventories that were later sold in the ordinary course of business). As a result, the balance sheet value of Sunbeam's inventory at year-end 1996 was understated by approximately $2 million, and Sunbeam overstated its 1996 loss by the same amount. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that (a) Sunbeam had understated the carrying value of its household products inventory, (b) the understatement had contributed to the material misstatement of Sunbeam's financial statements at year-end 1996, and (c) the understatement would improperly increase Sunbeam's income during 1997 when household products were sold at artificially inflated margins.

32. Andersen and Harlow also permitted management improperly to recognize $2.3 million in 1997 advertising expenses and related costs as a 1996 expense. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that the accounting treatment would contribute to the material overstatement of Sunbeam's 1996 year-end loss and exaggerate Sunbeam's so-called turnaround by the same amount in 1997.

33. Finally, Andersen and Harlow permitted Sunbeam to manipulate its 1996 liabilities for cooperative advertising. In addition to buying national advertising to create demand for its products, Sunbeam funded a portion of its retailers' costs of running local promotions. As required by GAAP, Sunbeam accrued its estimated liabilities for such "cooperative advertising," and then charged its expenses in relation to its sales revenue during the year. At year-end 1996, Sunbeam set its cooperative advertising accrual at $21.8 million, an amount that was approximately 25% higher than the prior year's accrual amount, without any basis for the increase. Harlow learned of the inflated accrual for cooperative advertising in connection with Andersen's audit of Sunbeam's year-end 1996 financial statements and discussed it with Kersh and Gluck. Nevertheless, Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts concerning the lack of a proper basis for the accrual and the likelihood that the excess accrual would be released into income in early 1997. In fact, $5.8 million of that excessive accrual was used (without disclosure) to inflate Sunbeam's 1997 income.

2. Andersen's 1996 Unqualified Audit Opinion.

34. In March 1997, Andersen issued an unqualified audit opinion regarding Sunbeam's 1996 financial statements and authorized the inclusion of its audit opinion in Sunbeam's 1996 Form 10-K filed with the SEC. Andersen's opinion stated:

We conducted our audits in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards. Those standards require that we plan and perform the audit to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the financial statements are free of material misstatement. An audit includes examining, on a test basis, evidence supporting the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements. An audit also includes assessing the accounting principles used and significant estimates made by management, as well as evaluating the overall financial statement presentation. We believe that our audits provide a reasonable basis for our opinion.

In our opinion, the financial statements . . . present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of Sunbeam Corporation and subsidiaries as of December 31, 1995 and December 29, 1996, and the results of their operations and their cash flows for each of the three fiscal years in the period ended December 29, 1996 in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles.

35. Andersen's unqualified audit opinion was false in two material respects. First, the financial statements Andersen audited did not "fairly" present Sunbeam's financial position in conformity with GAAP, as it represented. Second, Andersen did not, as it claimed, conduct its audit in accordance with GAAS.

36. In all, the 1996 financial statements audited by Andersen were materially false and misleading, and overstated Sunbeam's loss for 1996. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that (a) Andersen's unqualified audit opinion was incorrect, (b) Sunbeam's financial statements were materially false and misleading and not in conformity with GAAP, and (c) Andersen had failed to perform an audit in accordance with GAAS.

E. Andersen Assists Sunbeam as a Financial Adviser in Sunbeam's Purchase of Coleman Company.

37. During 1997, Sunbeam's senior management continued to use improper accounting to create the illusion that a successful turnaround was underway at Sunbeam. By maintaining that illusion, Dunlap's management team hoped to position Sunbeam for a quick sale. However, the illusion proved too convincing to the market, and the price of Sunbeam stock was driven so high that no willing buyer could be found. Management was aware that, absent a sale, it would be unable to sustain the appearance of a successful turnaround. Therefore, in late 1997, Sunbeam sought to acquire other businesses, in order to consolidate their results with Sunbeam's and thereby continue to obscure Sunbeam's past accounting improprieties. Once again, Sunbeam management required Andersen's assistance in perpetuating the deception.

38. In early December 1997, officers and directors of Sunbeam met with various officers of Coleman Company regarding a potential combination with Sunbeam. After that initial overture was rejected by Coleman-Parent, Dunlap's representative returned with another proposal in January 1998. At that point, Coleman-Parent indicated it was willing to discuss a potential transaction.

39. On January 28, 1998, Sunbeam announced its financial results for 1997, reporting total revenues of $1.168 billion, and total earnings from continuing operations of $189 million (or $1.41 per share). Sunbeam's announcement coincided with Andersen's completion of the field work for its audit of Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements.

40. On February 3, 1998, Harlow met with key officers of Sunbeam to discuss the acquisition of Coleman Company and its financial impact on Sunbeam. By that time, Harlow knew that Sunbeam had utilized improper accounting to achieve its 1997 results. Harlow also knew Coleman-Parent would insist on reviewing Andersen's 1997 audit opinion before agreeing to consummate any transaction in which the consideration included hundreds of millions of dollars in Sunbeam stock.

41. On February 20, 1998, Andersen agreed to act as a Sunbeam financial advisor and perform financial due diligence in connection with Sunbeam's acquisition of Coleman Company and two other companies, First Alert, Inc. and Signature Brands USA, Inc. In agreeing to undertake that assignment, Andersen became an active member of the team working to assist Sunbeam in acquiring Coleman Company.

42. During the latter weeks of February 1998, representatives of Sunbeam and Coleman-Parent met to negotiate the details of a potential acquisition of Coleman Company and to prepare a proposed structure for that transaction.

43. Between February 23 and 25, 1998, representatives of Andersen, including Harlow, conducted due diligence concerning Coleman Company and the other target companies on behalf of Sunbeam. During that period, Andersen representatives participated in various meetings with officers and consultants of Coleman Company. At no point, however, did Andersen's representatives suggest that Sunbeam's financial statements were materially false and misleading. Meanwhile, Sunbeam worked on negotiating the terms of its acquisition of Coleman Company.

44. On February 27, 1998, Harlow met with Sunbeam executives in New York to discuss Andersen's due diligence. That afternoon, Sunbeam and Coleman-Parent reached an agreement for the sale of Coleman Company.

45. As part of the Coleman Company acquisition agreement, Sunbeam represented and warranted that all of its filings with the SEC, which included the 1996 financial statements audited by Andersen, were accurate and not misleading, and that they would continue to be accurate and not misleading as of the transaction's closing date, which was expected to be several weeks later. Sunbeam also represented that its audited financial statements were prepared in accordance with GAAP, and that at the time of the closing of the transaction, its representation would continue to be true and correct. Andersen was fully aware of those representations and warranties when the merger agreement was executed on February 27, 1998.

46. As a result of Andersen's involvement in the Coleman Company acquisition transaction, it knew that Coleman-Parent would rely on Sunbeam's audited financial statements (1) in deciding to close the transaction, and (2) in accepting 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock and other consideration in return for its stake in Coleman Company. Moreover, as an independent certified public accountant, Andersen had a duty to disclose to Coleman-Parent that Sunbeam's audited financial statements in fact were neither accurate nor reliable. Notwithstanding that Andersen had met with representatives of Coleman-Parent and its auditors during its due diligence review, Andersen remained mute regarding the true financial condition of Sunbeam and the improprieties buried in Sunbeam's audited financial statements.

F. Andersen Issues its 1997 Audit Report.

47. In the first week of March 1998, shortly after the agreement for Sunbeam's purchase of Coleman Company was signed, but before the transaction closed, Andersen updated its audit work to reflect Sunbeam's acquisitions. That work was done by the same individuals who also were working as consultants on the Sunbeam acquisitions. The three acquisitions were specifically described in Note 14 to the audited financial statements. The description included the fact that Sunbeam was paying for the Coleman Company shares with Sunbeam common stock as well as cash and assumption of debt. Andersen then rendered an unqualified audit opinion for Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements. With Andersen's express consent, management included that opinion in Sunbeam's 1997 Form 10-K filed with the SEC.

1. Andersen's 1997 Unqualified Audit Report.

48. In its opinion concerning Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements, Andersen stated:

We conducted our audits in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards. Those standards require that we plan and perform the audit to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the financial statements are free of material misstatement. An audit includes examining, on a test basis, evidence supporting the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements. An audit also includes assessing the accounting principles used and significant estimates made by management, as well as evaluating the overall financial statement presentation. We believe that our audits provide a reasonable basis for our opinion.

In our opinion, the financial statements . . . present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of Sunbeam Corporation and subsidiaries as of December 29, 1996 and December 28, 1997, and the results of its operations and its cash flows for each of the three fiscal years in the period ended December 28, 1997 in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles.

49. Andersen's 1997 audit opinion was false in two material respects. First, the financial statements Andersen audited did not "fairly" present Sunbeam's financial position in conformity with GAAP, as it represented. Second, Andersen did not, as it claimed, conduct its audit in accordance with GAAS.

50. In all, the 1997 financial statements audited by Andersen were materially false and misleading in that they overstated Sunbeam's operating income for the year by 50%. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that (a) Andersen's unqualified audit opinion was incorrect, (b) Sunbeam's financial statements were materially false and misleading and not in conformity with GAAP, and (c) Andersen had failed to perform an audit in accordance with GAAS.

2. Improper Accounting Practices In 1997.

51. One of the most flagrant accounting abuses Andersen and Harlow permitted in 1997 was to allow Sunbeam to record a profit on a sham sale of its warranty and spare parts business to its spare parts provider, EPI Printers, Inc. Prior to 1997, EPI satisfied spare parts and warranty requests of Sunbeam customers on a fee basis. To raise additional revenue at year end 1997, however, Sunbeam entered into a sham sale of the warranty and spare parts inventories already in EPI's warehouse. As a result of the transaction, management fraudulently recognized sales revenue of $11 million and $5 million in income in 1997.

52. The problem with the EPI transaction was that the transaction was not a sale at all, for at least three reasons. First, there was never a final agreement between Sunbeam and EPI. The closest the parties ever came to a meeting of the minds was the execution of a mere "agreement to agree." Second, by its terms, the proposed sale was to terminate on January 23, 1998, with no payment obligation on the part of EPI, absent a subsequent agreement between

Sunbeam and EPI on the value of the inventory. In other words, the sale could be completely unwound just after year-end without EPI ever having paid a cent. Third, Sunbeam had agreed as part of the proposed sale to pay certain fees to EPI and to guarantee a 5% profit to EPI on the eventual resale of the inventory. In essence, even after the proposed sale, EPI remained a contractor compensated by Sunbeam on a fee basis for its services. In sum, the relationship between EPI and Sunbeam was not fundamentally altered by the purported "sale."

53. Harlow became aware of the true nature of the EPI transaction and raised it with management as part of Andersen's 1997 year-end audit. Harlow proposed that Sunbeam reverse the accounting entries reflecting the revenue recognition for that transaction, having concluded that the profit guarantee and the indeterminate value of the contract rendered revenue recognition inconsistent with GAAP. Simply stated, there was no revenue to recognize because the transaction was illusory. Kersh and Gluck refused to reverse the transaction, but agreed to take a $3 million reserve against the transaction, lessening but not eliminating the fraudulent gain. Instead of refusing to lend Andersen's name to management's fraudulent revenue recognition, Harlow again acquiesced in management's actions. As a result, Sunbeam's 1997 audited financial statements reflect approximately $5 million of phony profit on the sham EPI transaction.

54. The EPI transaction raised a clear red flag that should have – and must have – alerted Andersen to the need for greater scrutiny regarding all of Sunbeam's revenue recognition decisions. At a minimum, Andersen should have been on guard as to all items Harlow previously identified as proposed audit adjustments (but which Harlow eventually acquiesced in), and any previously recognized improper items that were ultimately dismissed as "immaterial."

55. Another 1997 revenue inflation scheme permitted by Andersen and Harlow was Sunbeam's use of improper "bill-and-hold" transactions. A bill-and-hold transaction is a transaction in which the seller bills a customer for a purchase while holding the merchandise for later delivery. During 1997, Dunlap's management team offered financial incentives to various customers to make purchases earlier than they would otherwise have done so. Management then proposed that Sunbeam hold the merchandise until the normal time for delivery.

56. Under certain limited circumstances, bill-and-hold transactions may be permitted for revenue recognition purposes. However, bill-and-hold transactions must meet specific stringent accounting criteria satisfying GAAP. The relevant criteria include, among others: a requirement that the buyer, not the seller, requested a sale on a bill-and-hold basis; that the buyer had a substantial business purpose for ordering the goods on a bill-and-hold basis; and that risks and rewards of ownership passed to the buyer at the time of the bill-and-hold sale.

57. Bill-and-hold transactions improperly added in excess of $29 million to Sunbeam's 1997 sales and $4.5 million to income. In the course of the audit of Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements, Andersen and Harlow discovered that the purported bill-and-hold customers had not requested the bill-and-hold treatment, and that in numerous cases involving rights of return "the risks of ownership and legal title" were not actually "passed to the customer." Nevertheless, Andersen negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that bill-and-hold transactions did not satisfy the required revenue recognition criteria. Ultimately, Andersen acquiesced in Sunbeam's decisions to recognize revenue for all of those non-GAAP sales in 1997, and to misdescribe the company's bill-and-hold practices in the financial statements as customer-driven legitimate sales.

58. Another income inflation tactic Sunbeam management used in 1997 was to decrease the inflated 1996 reserves to create the illusion of 1997 income. By decreasing the reserves in 1997, management increased Sunbeam's 1997 income by almost $5 million. In connection with Andersen's year-end audit of Sunbeam's financial statements, Harlow discovered that tactic and concluded that it was improper. Harlow proposed reversing management's misuse of the reserves, but management refused to do so. Rather than insisting that the adjustments be made, Andersen gave Sunbeam a pass, and permitted the entries. In doing so, Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that the improper accounting materially distorted Sunbeam's reported results of operations for 1997.

59. Another of Sunbeam's 1997 accounting gimmicks was to record income from non-recurring events as ordinary income. In connection with Andersen's work on the 1997 audit, Harlow learned that management had arranged for the sale of deeply discounted and obsolete inventory during 1997, creating $19 million in non-recurring revenue. Although the recognition of that revenue was permitted under GAAP, Sunbeam was required to disclose in its financial statements that the income from the sale was a non-recurring event. Sunbeam failed to do so. Notwithstanding that material omission, Andersen certified Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements.

60. Finally, during Andersen's 1997 audit, Harlow proposed adjustments to reverse $2.9 million related to a Sunbeam inventory overvaluation and $563,000 in additional items. Management again refused to make appropriate adjustments, and Andersen and Harlow acquiesced in the refusal to reverse those errors. In doing so, Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently disregarded facts indicating that those items contributed to the misstatement of Sunbeam's 1997 reported results of operations.

61. In the end, Andersen's 1997 audit opinion certified financial statements that reported Sunbeam's income to be $186 million, much of which was improper under GAAP. The overstatements included in all over $90 million of improper revenue including, without limitation, approximately $5 million from the sham sale to EPI, approximately $4.5 million from non-GAAP bill-and-hold sales, approximately $35 million in income derived from the use of non-GAAP reserves and accruals taken at year-end 1996, and approximately $6 million from improper revenue recognition.

62. As Andersen and Harlow knew, Coleman-Parent relied on Sunbeam's report of $186 million in income in deciding to close the sale of its interest in Coleman Company. If Andersen had not issued a materially false and misleading audit report, and instead had complied with GAAP and GAAS, Sunbeam's 1997 operating income would have been approximately half of what Andersen certified in the financial statements.

G. Coleman-Parent Relies on Andersen's Unqualified Audit Opinions and Closes the Sale to Sunbeam.

63. The merger agreement signed by Coleman-Parent on February 27, 1998 provided that a condition precedent to Coleman-Parent's obligation to close the transaction was the absence of any event, change, or development that would have a material adverse effect on the business, results of operation, or financial condition of Sunbeam. The closing also was conditioned on the absence of any material misrepresentation or omissions in Sunbeam's SEC filings, including Andersen's 1996 and 1997 audit reports in the Form 10-Ks. If Andersen had not been negligent or fraudulent in performing its audits, and had issued qualified or adverse reports exposing the falsity of Sunbeam's financial statements, Coleman-Parent would have been put on notice of an adverse material change affecting Sunbeam before closing, and of a material misstatement in Sunbeam's SEC filings. Coleman-Parent's obligation to close the transaction with Sunbeam would have been discharged by the failure of a condition precedent, and Coleman-Parent never would have suffered losses in excess of $600 million. Coleman-Parent directly relied on Andersen's 1996 and 1997 audit reports when it decided to close the transaction with Sunbeam and to accept 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock as consideration for selling its interest in Coleman Company.

64. Andersen was fully aware of the terms and conditions of the Coleman Company transaction and of Coleman-Parent's anticipated and actual reliance upon Andersen's unqualified 1996 and 1997 audit opinions.

65. On March 30, 1998, unaware of the falsity of Sunbeam's financial statements and Andersen's audit reports, Coleman-Parent closed the transaction with Sunbeam and accepted 14.1 million shares of what turned out to be essentially worthless Sunbeam common stock for the sale of its interest in Coleman Company.

H. Andersen's Improper Accounting and Misrepresentations Are Revealed, Causing the Market Value of Sunbeam's Stock to Plummet.

66. Almost immediately after the consummation of Coleman-Parent's sale of Coleman Company to Sunbeam, Sunbeam's facade of financial health began to crumble.

67. In an April 3, 1998 conference call with securities analysts, Sunbeam revealed that sales for the first quarter of 1998 were 5% below reported sales for the same period of the prior year. Only two weeks earlier, on March 19, 1998, Sunbeam had issued a press release in which it announced that sales for the first quarter of 1998 were "expected to exceed" sales for the same period of the prior year.

68. On June 6, 1998, an article was published in Barron's that raised serious questions regarding Sunbeam's apparent success under Dunlap, and suggested it was the result of

"accounting gimmickry." On June 15, 1998, Sunbeam's Board announced that it had removed Dunlap as Chairman and CEO.

69. On June 25, 1998, Andersen withheld its consent for use of its 1997 audit opinion in a registration statement that was to have been filed with the SEC.

70. On June 30, 1998, Sunbeam announced that the Audit Committee of its Board of Directors would conduct an inquiry into the accuracy of its 1997 financial statements. The Audit Committee subsequently retained Deloitte & Touche LLP to assist in the review, in addition to Arthur Andersen. Sunbeam stated that "pending the completion of its review, its 1997 financial statements and the report of Arthur Andersen LLP should not be relied upon." Sunbeam added that the review "could result in a restatement of the 1997 financial statements and the first quarter 1998 Form 10-Q."

71. On August 6, 1998, Sunbeam announced that its Audit Committee had determined that Sunbeam would be required to restate its audited financial statements for 1997 and possibly for 1996, as well as its unaudited financial statements for the first quarter of 1998.

72. On November 12, 1998, Sunbeam released its restated 1996 and 1997 financial results, again audited by Andersen. The restated 1996 financial statements reported operating losses for 1996 that were approximately $40 million less than originally reported, losses from continuing operations that were approximately $26 million less than previously reported, and net losses that were approximately $20 million less than previously reported.

73. The restated 1997 financial statements reported operating earnings for 1997 that were approximately $95 million less than originally reported, earnings from continuing operations that were approximately $70 million less than previously reported, and net earnings that were approximately $70 million less than previously reported. The new operating income figure for 1997 was approximately 50% less than the amount Andersen previously certified.

74. In the wake of Dunlap's firing, Sunbeam's board of directors asked members of Coleman-Parent's management to assume key positions within Sunbeam in order to carry out damage control and attempt to salvage the value remaining in the company. New management was unable to overcome the devastating effects of the manipulation and distortion of Sunbeam's business.

75. On February 5, 2001, Sunbeam filed a voluntary petition for Chapter 11.

76. As a result of having been fraudulently induced into exchanging its ownership of Coleman Company for over 14 million shares of Sunbeam stock, Coleman-Parent has suffered direct damages in excess of $600,000,000.

VIOLATIONS OF GAAP AND GAAS IN ANDERSEN'S 1996 AND 1997 AUDITS

77. The objectives of financial reporting are to provide information that is useful in investment and credit decisions, information that is useful in assessing cash flow prospects, and information about enterprise resources, claims to those resources, and changes in them. (See "Objectives of Financial Reporting by Business Enterprises," Statement of Financial Accounting Concepts No. 1 (Financial Accounting Standards Board, November 1978).) In order to minimize misinterpretation of financial statements, the accounting profession has developed sets of standards regarding financial reporting and auditing practice that are generally accepted and universally practiced. Those standards are known as GAAP and GAAS. The development of common standards for auditing and financial reporting has provided businesspeople and investors with a valuable frame of reference in evaluating the financial condition of enterprises.

78. Auditors know they must adhere to GAAP and GAAS, or the standards would cease to have any meaning. Consistent with the objectives of the profession in developing those standards, the public has come to understand the importance of GAAP and GAAS in enhancing the reliability of audited financial statements. As a result, when an auditing firm represents that it has conducted an audit of a company in accordance with GAAS, and opines that such company's financial statements present the company's financial condition fairly in conformity with GAAP, readers of those financial statements have the right to rely on the integrity of those financial statements.

79. In auditing Sunbeam in 1996 and 1997, and in issuing unqualified opinions regarding Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements, Andersen and Harlow did not adhere to the standards of the profession. Although Andersen's audit opinions stated that the firm had conducted its audits of Sunbeam in accordance with GAAS, and based on those audits had concluded that Sunbeam's financial statements presented the company's financial condition fairly in conformity with GAAP, that simply was not true.

A. Sunbeam's Audited 1996 and 1997 Financial Statements Were Not In Conformity With GAAP.

80. As alleged below, Sunbeam's audited 1996 and 1997 financial statements failed to conform to GAAP in numerous respects.

81. Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements, certified by Andersen, failed to conform to GAAP because those financial statements did not comply with the accounting principle of reliability. That principle requires that the quality of reported information assures that the information is reasonably free from error or bias and faithfully represents what it purports to represent. FASB Statement of Financial Accounting Concepts No. 2, §§ 58-71; APB Statement No. 4, §§ 109, 138, 189.

82. The financial statements also failed to comply with the accounting principle of completeness, which requires that financial information be complete and that it validly represent the underlying event and conditions. FASB Statement of Financial Accounting Concepts No. 2, §§ 79, 80; APB Statement No. 4, § 94.

83. The financial statements also failed to comply with the accounting principle of conservatism, which requires that a conservative approach be taken in the accounting for transactions and the early recognition of unfavorable events. FASB Statement of Financial Accounting Concepts No. 2, §§ 91-97; APB Statements No. 9, §§ 35, 71.

84. The financial statements also failed to comply with the accounting principle of neutrality, which requires that there should be an absence in reported information of bias intended to attain a predetermined result. FASB Statement of Financial Accounting Concepts No. 2, § 98.

85. The financial statements also failed to comply with the accounting principle of relevance, which requires that reported information should have the capacity to make a difference in a decision by helping users to form predictions about the outcomes of past, present and future events. FASB Statement of Financial Accounting Concepts No. 2, §§ 47, 48.

B. Andersen's 1996 and 1997 Audits Were Not Conducted In Accordance With GAAS.

86. As alleged below, Andersen failed in numerous respects to conduct its audits in accordance with GAAS.

87. Andersen and Harlow violated GAAS because they negligently or fraudulently failed to perform the audits with an attitude of professional skepticism as required by Statement on Auditing Standards ("SAS") No. 53, which states: "An audit of financial statements in accordance with generally accepted accounting standards should be planned and performed with an attitude of professional skepticism." AU § 316.16. Thus:

a. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently failed to reach a conclusion that there existed a significant risk of intentional distortion of financial statements by Sunbeam management. Andersen and Harlow should have reached that conclusion because Sunbeam's management was dominated by a single person, Dunlap; because Dunlap's attitude toward financial reporting was unduly aggressive; because Dunlap placed undue emphasis on meeting earnings projections; because of the extremely rapid change in Sunbeam's performance; and/or because Dunlap's plan to quickly "turn around" and sell Sunbeam incentivized him to distort financial statements. See AU §§ 316.10 and 316.12.

b. Andersen and Harlow also were negligent or fraudulent in failing to recognize that the accounting policies employed by Sunbeam were not acceptable in the circumstances. Thus, "when the auditor has reached a conclusion that there is a significant risk of intentional distortion of financial statements, the auditor should recognize that management's selection and application of significant accounting policies, particularly those related to revenue recognition, asset valuation, and capitalization versus expensing, may be misused. Increased risk of intentional distortion of the financial statements should cause greater concern about whether accounting principles that are otherwise generally accepted are being used in inappropriate circumstances to create a distortion of earnings." AU § 316.19.

c. Andersen and Harlow also acted negligently or fraudulently by failing to obtain sufficient competent evidential matter through inspection, observation, inquiries, and confirmations to afford a reasonable basis for its opinions regarding Sunbeam's financial statements. That failure violated the third standard of field work adopted by the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants ("AICPA") (AU § 150.02). Furthermore, "[w]hen evaluation at the financial statement level indicates significant risk, the auditor requires more or different evidence to support material transactions than would be the case in the absence of such risk. For example, the auditor may perform additional procedures to determine that sales are properly recorded, giving consideration to the possibility that the buyer has a right to return the product. Transactions that are both large and unusual, particularly at year-end, should be selected for testing." AU § 316.20.

88. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently failed to exercise due professional care in the performance of the 1996 and 1997 audits, in violation of the AICPA's third general auditing standard (AU § 150.02).

89. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently failed to plan the work adequately to uncover the errors and irregularities in Sunbeam's accounting information, in violation of the AICPA's first standard of field work (AU § 150.02).

90. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently failed to obtain a sufficient understanding of Sunbeam's internal control structure to plan the audits and to determine the nature, timing, and extent of tests to be performed, in violation of the AICPA's second standard of field work (AU § 150.02). Specifically, Andersen and Harlow fraudulently failed to assess properly the risk of management override of controls in light of Dunlap's plan to quickly "turn around" and sell Sunbeam.

91. Andersen and Harlow negligently or fraudulently relied on management representations rather than applying the auditing procedures necessary to afford a reasonable basis for an opinion on Sunbeam's financial statements, in violation of SAS No. 19 (AU § 333.02).

92. Andersen and Harlow were negligent or fraudulent in not recognizing that misstatements resulting from misapplication of GAAP, departures from fact, and omissions of necessary information, in aggregate, caused Sunbeam's financial statements to be materially misstated, in violation of SAS No. 47 (AU § 312.04).

93. As alleged above, on numerous occasions Andersen and Harlow concluded that certain misstatements caused Sunbeam's financial statements to be materially misstated. Although they requested that Sunbeam management eliminate the misstatements, management refused. Andersen acted negligently or fraudulently in not issuing a qualified or adverse opinion in such instances, in violation of SAS No. 47 (AU § 312.31).

94. Andersen and Harlow were negligent or fraudulent in concluding that the accounting principles applied by Sunbeam were appropriate in the circumstances and that Sunbeam's financial statements were informative of matters that could affect their use, understanding, and interpretation, in violation of SAS No. 69 (AU § 411.04(b) and (c)).

95. Andersen and Harlow were negligent or fraudulent in failing to report that a change in the application of accounting principles in Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements had materially affected their comparability with the financial statements for prior periods, especially 1996, due to a different treatment of sales and reserves in those periods, in violation of SAS Nos. 1 and 43 (AU § 420.02).

96. Andersen's and Harlow's failure to conduct the audits in accordance with GAAS, and Andersen's certification of financial statements that were not in conformity with GAAP, as shown above, caused Coleman-Parent to suffer damages in excess of $600,000,000.

COUNT I
Fraudulent Misrepresentation

97. Coleman-Parent repeats and realleges each and every allegation above as if set forth fully herein.

98. At the time Andersen issued its unqualified audit opinions for Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements, Andersen and Harlow possessed knowledge superior to Coleman-Parent concerning Sunbeam's financial position, the accounting principles Sunbeam used, the results of Sunbeam's operations and cash flows, and whether Sunbeam's financial condition was presented in conformity with GAAP.

99. As described in detail above, Andersen and Harlow made representations of fact that were false in the unqualified audit opinions it issued for Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements, including, among other things, (a) that Andersen's audits of Sunbeam were conducted in accordance with GAAS; (b) that Sunbeam's financial statements fairly presented the financial position of Sunbeam during the relevant periods; (c) that Sunbeam's financial statements fairly presented the results of Sunbeam's operations and cash flows during the relevant periods; and (d) that Sunbeam's financial statements were in conformity with GAAP.

100. As described in detail above, Andersen and Harlow knew that those representations were false at the time they were made and/or made those representations with recklessness as to their truth.

101. Andersen consented to the publication of its audit reports to the public and business world by consenting to their inclusion in Sunbeam's SEC filings. Given that publication, Andersen and Harlow intended that the public – including Coleman-Parent – would rely on Andersen's representations. Moreover, Andersen and Harlow specifically knew the terms of the agreement for Coleman-Parent's sale of Coleman Company to Sunbeam and consented to the publication of Andersen's audit report in Sunbeam's March 6, 1998 Form 10-K filing with the intent that Coleman-Parent rely upon Andersen's representations.

102. In agreeing to sell its interest in Coleman Company for approximately 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock plus cash and other consideration, Coleman-Parent reasonably and justifiably relied upon Andersen's representations and omissions as to Andersen's 1996 and 1997 audits.

103. But for Andersen's misrepresentations, Coleman-Parent would not have agreed sell its business to Sunbeam in return for artificially-inflated Sunbeam stock, among other consideration. As a result of Andersen's and Harlow's misconduct, Coleman-Parent has been damaged in excess of $600,000,000.

COUNT II
Fraudulent Inducement To Contract
(Conspiracy and Concerted Action)

104. Coleman-Parent repeats and realleges each and every allegation above as if set forth fully herein.

105. As described in detail above, Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements contained false statements of material fact. Those material misrepresentations included, among other things, (a) overstating Sunbeam's 1996 operating losses by approximately $40 million; (b) overstating Sunbeam's 1996 losses from continuing operations by approximately $26 million; (c) overstating Sunbeam's 1996 net losses by approximately $20 million; (d) overstating Sunbeam's 1997 operating earnings by approximately $95 million; (e) overstating

Sunbeam's 1997 earnings from continuing operations by over $70 million; (f) overstating Sunbeam's 1997 net earnings by approximately $70 million; and (g) overstating Sunbeam's 1997 operating income figure by approximately 50%.

106. As described in detail above, Andersen and Harlow made representations of fact that were false in the unqualified audit opinions it issued for Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements, including, among other things, (a) that Andersen's audits of Sunbeam were conducted in accordance with GAAS; (b) that Sunbeam's financial statements fairly presented the financial position of Sunbeam during the relevant periods; (c) that Sunbeam's financial statements fairly presented the results of Sunbeam's operations and cash flows during the relevant periods; and (d) that Sunbeam's financial statements were in conformity with GAAP.

107. As described in detail above, Sunbeam, Andersen, and Harlow knew that those representations were false when made and/or made those representations with reckless disregard as to their truth.

108. In order to induce Coleman-Parent further into entering into and fulfilling a contract to sell its interest in Coleman Company to Sunbeam in exchange for approximately 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock, Sunbeam represented that its SEC filings dating back to January 1, 1997 were accurate and not misleading as of February 27, 1998 and would be accurate and not misleading on March 30, 1998. Sunbeam's management, Andersen, and Harlow knew and/or recklessly disregarded that those representations were false when made because Sunbeam's SEC filings contained Sunbeam's false and misleading 1996 and 1997 financial statements and Andersen's false and misleading audit reports.

109. In reasonable and justifiable reliance on Sunbeam's representations that its SEC filings – including its financial statements and Andersen's audit reports – were accurate with respect to Sunbeam's financial position and operating results, Coleman-Parent agreed to accept 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock and other consideration in exchange for its controlling stake in Coleman Company.

110. As a proximate result of its reliance on those misrepresentations, Coleman-Parent gave up its stake in Coleman Company in exchange for shares of Sunbeam which, once the truth of Sunbeam's financial situation was revealed, became worthless. Those misrepresentations proximately caused injury to Coleman-Parent in excess of $600,000,000.

111. Andersen and Harlow were part of a team with Dunlap, Kersh, and the other senior Sunbeam executives that acted in concert and wrongfully conspired to create the appearance that Sunbeam was performing at a high level to artificially inflate the stock price of Sunbeam and make it attractive for a sale to another company. Andersen and Harlow explicitly or implicitly by acquiescence agreed to become part of that conspiracy and committed overt acts in furtherance of its fraudulent scheme in order to retain Sunbeam as a client and earn significant fees.

112. In furtherance of that conspiracy, Dunlap and the other Sunbeam executives decided to acquire Coleman Company in order to further increase Sunbeam's stock price and maintain the illusion of its good performance. In pursuance of that scheme, Andersen and Harlow committed the overt acts of issuing Andersen's false and misleading March 1998 unqualified audit opinion with respect to Sunbeam's 1997 financial statements and of consenting to its publication to the SEC as part of Sunbeam's Form 10-K filing on March 6, 1998. Andersen and Harlow knew that Andersen's audit opinion would be used by Sunbeam to induce Coleman-Parent into selling its controlling stake in Coleman Company in exchange for shares of artificially-inflated Sunbeam stock. Andersen's audit report also furthered that conspiracy by actively supporting the illusion of Sunbeam's performance that had been created in the market, which helped support the company's artificially-inflated stock price. In doing so, Andersen and Harlow committed the tortious act of fraudulent inducement in concert with Dunlap and the other Sunbeam executives pursuant to a common design.

113. As described above, Coleman-Parent was damaged as a result of those concerted acts performed as part of that conspiracy.

COUNT III Negligent Misrepresentation

114. Coleman-Parent repeats and realleges each and every allegation above as if set forth fully herein.

115. Andersen provided the information in its audit reports regarding Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements in the course of its business as an accounting firm in the employ of Sunbeam.

116. In issuing its audit report regarding Sunbeam's 1997 and 1996 financial statements and in consenting to that report's inclusion in Sunbeam's March 6, 1998 Form 10-K filing with the SEC, Andersen and Harlow were aware that such information was being provided, in part, for the specific guidance and reliance of Coleman-Parent, which was agreeing to sell Coleman Company to Sunbeam for approximately 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock plus cash. In particular, Sunbeam warranted and represented to Coleman-Parent that its SEC filings, and audited financial statements including Andersen's report, were accurate – a fact that Andersen and Harlow were aware of when Andersen issued its report and consented to its publication. Andersen and Harlow expected that Coleman-Parent would rely on Andersen's 1997 audit report. Andersen and Harlow also were aware and expected that Coleman-Parent specifically was relying on Andersen's previously issued 1996 audit report, which Andersen did not retract until long after the Coleman Company transaction closed.

117. As described in detail above, Andersen's unqualified audit opinions for Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements contained material falsehoods, including, among other things, (a) that its audits of Sunbeam were conducted in accordance with GAAS; (b) that Sunbeam's financial statements fairly presented the financial position of Sunbeam during the relevant periods; (c) that Sunbeam's financial statements fairly presented the results of Sunbeam's operations and cash flows during the relevant periods; and (d) that Sunbeam's financial statements were in conformity with GAAP.

118. As described in more detail above, Andersen and Harlow failed to exercise reasonable care or competence in obtaining or communicating the information contained in their audit reports regarding Sunbeam's 1996 and 1997 financial statements.

119. Coleman-Parent reasonably and justifiably relied upon the information contained in Andersen's audit reports, including their material falsehoods regarding Sunbeam's financial condition and operating results and regarding the conformance of Sunbeam's financial statements to GAAP. In reliance on those material falsehoods, Coleman-Parent agreed to sell its interest in Coleman Company for approximately 14.1 million shares of Sunbeam stock, cash, and other consideration.

120. As a result of Andersen's and Harlow's misconduct, Coleman-Parent has been injured in an amount in excess of $600,000,000.

WHEREFORE, plaintiff Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc. demands judgment against Arthur Andersen LLP and Phillip E. Harlow as follows:

- A. Compensatory damages in an amount in excess of $600,000,000;
- B. An award of costs and expenses incurred in this action, including reasonable attorneys' and experts' fees; and
- C. Any further relief as the Court may deem just and proper in light of all the circumstances of the case.
- D. Coleman-Parent expressly reserves the right to seek leave to amend its complaint pursuant to Fla. Stat. § 768.72 to assert claims for punitive damages in excess of $1.2 billion as allowed by law.

Re: Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc. v. Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc.
MSSF v. MacAndrews & Forbes Holdings Inc. et al.

Dear Mike:

I write regarding your responses and objections to MS & Co.'s and MSSF's First Request for Production of Documents, which were served on August 15, 2003.

I first address your responses and objections to MS & Co.'s Request for Production. I then address your responses and objections to MSSF's Request for Production, to the extent that those responses and objections are unique to MSSF.

Initial Objections to MS & Co.'s First Request for Production of Documents:

1. Initial Objection 1.

You stated in your Initial Objection Number 1 that you would not comply with MS & Co.'s and MSSF's instructions 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 16 to the extent that they exceed or are inconsistent with applicable law. You objected, for example, to MS & Co. and MSSF's instruction number 11, which states: "[i]f the requested documents are maintained in a file, the file folder is included in the request for production of those documents." Likewise, instruction 16 directs that "[u]nless otherwise specified, this Request calls for the production of documents created, delivered, distributed, sent, received, accessed or modified up to the date of your response to this Request." Do you intend to withhold documents (or copies of file folders) based on your objections to any of the enumerated instructions? If so, please inform us promptly what documents you plan to withhold.

In addition, you objected to Definitions 9 (defining "documents") and 15 (defining "identify") to the extent they impose requirements that exceed or are inconsistent with the applicable rules. Do you intend to withhold documents based on your objections to these definitions? If so, please inform us promptly what documents you plan to withhold.

2. Initial Objection 3.

You narrowed MS & Co. and MSSF's definition of the "Coleman Transaction" to exclude "all related communications, agreements, and transactions, including the February 27, 1998 Agreements and the March 30, 1998 closing." We do not accept this limitation and ask you to reconsider.

Responses and Further Objections to MS & Co.'s First Request for Production

1. Request No. 1.

You objected to Request No. 1 on the grounds that the term "implementation" is vague and ambiguous, and you construed "implementation" to refer to the closing of the transaction by which CPH transferred its interest in the Coleman Company to Sunbeam. Your objection is unclear. "Implementation" means "to put into effect," and we are not sure what, if any, documents you are withholding based on your construction. Please inform us if you intend to withhold documents based on your objection.

2. Request No. 8.

Request No. 8 asks for all documents referring or relating to Arthur Andersen's 1996 and 1997 audit of Sunbeam. You construed this request as seeking only those documents relating to any review, investigation, analysis, and due diligence of Arthur Andersen's audit by CPH personnel or advisors of CPH. MS & Co. does not accept your limitation, which excludes documents created by non-CPH entities concerning Arthur Andersen's audit that are equally relevant to this litigation. We ask you to withdraw your objection and limitation. In addition, have you withheld documents based on this objection from your production?

3. Request No. 9.

You construed this request, seeking all documents reflecting, referring or relating to the value of Sunbeam securities, as seeking only those documents referring or relating to the market valuation of Sunbeam securities. This limitation excludes other valuations of Sunbeam securities, such as CPH's internal valuations. Furthermore, your own requests 13 (in the MS & Co. action) and 47 (in the MSSF action) seek "[a]ll documents concerning any valuation of Sunbeam or Sunbeam securities," and yet you object to our request -- seeking the very same types of documents -- as "vague and ambiguous." We ask you to reconsider. In addition, have you withheld documents based on this objection from your production?

KIRKLAND & ELLIS LLP

4. Request No. 15.

Request 15 seeks "All documents referring or relating to any review, investigation, analysis, or due diligence of Sunbeam conducted by CPH or its Advisors..." You limited this request to seek only those documents referring or relating to any review, investigation, etc. concerning the valuation of Sunbeam or Sunbeam securities. This limitation changes the substance of this request and would exclude documents relating to any investigation, analysis, etc. of Sunbeam not necessarily related to the valuation of Sunbeam or Sunbeam Securities. In addition, your own requests 3 (in the MS & Co. action) and 43 (in the MSSF action) are virtually identical to our request. We ask you to withdraw your objection to this request and your limitation of this request. In addition, please inform us if you have withheld documents from your production based on your objection.

5. Request No. 16.

You limited this request to the due diligence performed by CPH or its Advisors in connection with the transfer of CPH's interest in The Coleman Company to Sunbeam and CPH's general due diligence guidelines or policies. We ask that you also produce to us all due diligence-related materials provided to you by your financial advisors (including general due diligence guidelines or policies). In addition, please inform us if you have withheld documents from your production based on your objection.

7. Request No. 28.

You state in your objection to this request that, due to the manner in which Morgan Stanley has chosen to define "your," there are no documents responsive to this request. Please explain what this means. In addition, your objection to this request for organizational charts limits your production to documents sufficient to show the ownership relationship among CPH and its corporate subsidiaries at the time of the February 27, 1998 Agreements. We object to this limitation, which would exclude documents showing your organizational structure, your corporate relationship, and the reporting relationships within your corporation prior to and post February 27, 1998. We ask you to withdraw your objection and limitation. In addition, please inform us if you have withheld documents from your production based on your objection.

KIRKLAND & ELLIS LLP

Michael Brody, Esq.
August 27, 2003

8. Request 31.

You limited our requests for the calendars and dayplanners of "Ronald Perelman, Howard Gittis, William Nesbitt, Lorelie Bertand, Steve Fasman, and James Maher from December 1997 through March 1998" to calendar entries that also relate to the "transaction by which CPH transferred its interest in The Coleman Company to Sunbeam." We do not accept this limitation and ask you to withdraw your limitation and objection. In addition, please inform us if you have withheld documents based on your objection.

9. Request No. 32.

With regard to your objections to and enumerated limitations of this request, do you intend to withhold documents otherwise responsive to this request? If so, what documents?

10. Request No. 33.

With regard to your objections to and enumerated limitations of this request, do you intend to withhold documents otherwise responsive to this request? If so, what documents?

12. Request No. 35.

With regard to your objections to and enumerated limitations of this request, do you intend to withhold documents otherwise responsive to this request? If so, what documents?

13. Request No. 40.

With regard to your objection to producing documents relating to the settlement agreement between CPH and Arthur Andersen, please provide to us the provisions specifying the circumstances under which the terms of the settlement agreement can be disclosed.

Initial Objections to MSSF's First Request for Production of Documents

I refer you to Initial Objection No. 1 in the MS & Co. action discussed above.

2. Initial Objection No. 3

I refer you to Initial Objection No. 3 in the MS & Co. action discussed above.

3. Initial Objection No. 6.

MSSF defined "MAFCO" to mean "MacAndrews & Forbes and any of its officers, directors, former or present employees, representatives and agents." You objected to this definition as "vague and ambiguous" and limited the definition of "MAFCO" to "MacAndrews & Forbes Holdings Inc." You made this limitation despite the fact that you have rejected our efforts to narrow your own definitions of corporate entities and despite the fact that your own requests define "MAFCO" to mean "MacAndrews & Forbes or any of their present and former officers, directors, employees, representatives, and agents." We ask you to withdraw this objection and limitation.

Responses and Further Objections to MSSF's First Request for Production

1. Request No. 1.

I refer you to Request No. 1 in the MS & Co. action discussed above.

2. Request No. 6.

There appears to be a typographical error in your response to Request No. 6. Please confirm that, subject to your objections, CPH and MAFCO will produce all documents referring or relating to the December 1997 meeting.

3. Request No. 8.

I refer you to Request No. 15 in the MS & Co. action discussed above.

4. Request No. 9.

Request 9 seeks "All documents referring or relating to any review, investigation, analysis, or due diligence of Sunbeam conducted by MAFCO or its Advisors..." You limited this request to seek only those documents referring or relating to any review, investigation, etc. concerning the valuation of Sunbeam or Sunbeam securities. This limitation changes the substance of this request and would exclude documents relating to any investigation, analysis, etc. of Sunbeam not necessarily related to the valuation of Sunbeam or Sunbeam Securities. addition, your own Request 3 (in the MS & Co. action) and Request 43 (in the MSSF action) is virtually identical to our request. We ask you to withdraw your objection to this request and your limitation of this request. In addition, please inform us if you have withheld documents from your production based on this objection.

5. Request No. 15.

Your response to this request is ambiguous. Do you intend to withhold documents responsive to this request? If so, please identify those documents.

6. Request No. 22.

You construed this request, seeking all documents reflecting the value of Coleman stock, as seeking only those documents reflecting the market valuation of Coleman stock. This limitation excludes other valuations of Coleman stock, such as internal CPH valuations. Furthermore, your own requests 15 (in the MS & Co. action) and 49 (in the MSSF action) seek "[a]ll documents concerning any valuation of Coleman or Coleman securities," and yet you object to our own request -- seeking the very same types of documents -- as "vague and ambiguous." We ask you to withdraw your objections to and limitations of this request. In addition, please inform us if you have withheld documents based on your objection.

7. Request 30.

Your objection to this request for organizational charts limits your production to documents sufficient to show the ownership relationship among CPH and its corporate subsidiaries the time of the February 27, 1998 Agreements. We object to this limitation, which would exclude documents showing CPH and MAFCO's organizational structure, CPH and MAFCO's corporate relationship, and CPH and MAFCO's reporting relationships prior to and post February 27, 1998. We ask you to withdraw this objection and limitation. In addition, please inform us if you have withheld documents based on your objection.

In addition, of the boxes of documents that you "made available" to us for review, we found that very few of those boxes of documents actually contained CPH or MAFCO documents. The overwhelming majority of those documents were our own documents, third-party documents, or documents from the prior litigations and other related actions. Will your next production include more CPH/MAFCO documents? When can we expect your next production?

*Re: Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc. v. Morgan Stanley & Co.

Dear Kathryn:

I write in response to your letter of August 27, 2003 concerning CPH's objections and responses to Morgan Stanley's first requests for production of documents and CPH's and Mafco's objections and responses to MSSF's first requests for production of documents.

Objections and Responses to Morgan Stanley's Requests For Production

Initial Objection 1. CPH and Mafco produced to Morgan Stanley and MSSF over a million pages of documents within 30 days of receiving your documents requests. We have made every effort to provide complete and accurate responses in accordance with the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure. To the extent Morgan Stanley seeks to impose additional burdens or requirements that exceed or are inconsistent with the Florida Rules, we advised you that CPH and Mafco will not comply with your additional demands. Morgan Stanley has lodged many of the same objections to our document requests, including its General Objections Nos. 3, 5, 8, and 10.

You have inquired whether we intend to withhold documents based upon our objections to your instructions and definitions. To the extent your requests call for the production of documents protected by the attorney-client privilege or work product doctrine, we intend to withhold documents that otherwise would be responsive, as we state in our Initial Objection 2. We will comply with the stipulation entered by the court regarding the production of privilege logs. We stand on our objection that Instructions 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 16, and Definitions 9 and 15 (Morgan Stanley) and 11 and 17 (MSSF) go beyond the requirements of applicable law. We will address these in turn.

Instructions No. 3 and 8: CPH and Mafco will produce all documents in their possession, custody, or control as required by the Florida Rules. We have produced documents originally in the possession of CPH's prior counsel. We note that Morgan Stanley is willing to produce documents in the possession of certain of its counsel, but not others. You have been unwilling to explain your inconsistent position with respect to documents in the possession of third parties.

Kathryn R. DeBord, Esq.
September 12, 2003

JENNER & BLOCK

See Brody to Clare letter, August 20, 2003. CPH and Mafco will not withhold documents on the basis of these objections.

Instruction No. 4: In response to specific document requests, we have identified ambiguities in your requests and have provided the construction we used in our responses to those ambiguous requests. Unless noted in response to a specific request, CPH and Mafco will not withhold documents on the basis of this initial objection.

Instruction No. 5: We will produce a privilege log in accordance with the Florida Rules and in the manner stipulated to by the parties, as entered by the Court on September 4, 2003.

Instruction 6: We object to the production of documents where production would be unduly burdensome. We have not interposed this objection in response to any of your specific requests and therefore will not withhold any documents on the basis of this objection.

Instruction 7: We will produce documents in redacted form when necessary to prevent the production of privileged communications, work product, or non-responsive information in accordance with the Florida Rules. CPH and Mafco will not otherwise withhold documents on the basis of this objection.

Instructions 9 and 10: CPH and Mafco have not withheld documents on the basis of these objections.

Instruction 11: This instruction seeks the production of documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege or work product doctrine. CPH and Mafco will not produce file folders that were created by Jenner & Block, and which therefore constitute work product.

Instruction 16: This instruction is exceptionally broad, and seeks documents over a longer time frame than is encompassed by Morgan Stanley's or MSSF's responses. We invite you to propose a reasonable time frame for your requests.

Morgan Stanley Definition 9 / MSSF Definition 11: CPH and Mafco stand on their objection to the definition of "documents" to the extent the definition is inconsistent with their obligations under the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure. CPH and Mafco will not withhold any documents based on these objections.

Morgan Stanley Definition 15 / MSSF Definition 17: We objected to your definition of "identify," and your August 27 letter does not offer any explanation of the term. We note, however, that this term, although defined, is not used in your document requests.

Initial Objection 3. We remain unwilling to accept Morgan Stanley's definition of "Coleman Transaction." You have defined that term to mean "Sunbeam's acquisition of Coleman Company, Inc. from CPH," which did not occur, and further to include other "related agreements and transactions," which we do not understand. In our objection, we explained that we would

September 12, 2003

produce documents concerning the transaction that actually took place. What more are you interested in receiving?

Morgan Stanley Request No. 1. We objected to the use of the term "implementation." We explained that we would construe that term to mean the closing of the transaction. We further explained that if you meant the term to mean the actual integration of the companies, those documents were encompassed by your Request 26, which seeks "all documents concerning potential or actual integration of Coleman, First Alert, and/or Signature Brands with Sunbeam . . ." Your attempt to clarify your Request by defining "implementation" to mean "to put into effect" is unhelpful and does not allow us to further respond to this Request. Based on our construction of Requests 1 and 26, we believe we have fully responded to your requests.

Morgan Stanley Request No. 8. CPH stands on its objection and response to this Request. CPH will not withhold documents based on this objection.

Morgan Stanley Request No. 9. We are investigating our production regarding this request, and we will respond under separate cover.

Morgan Stanley Request No. 15. This Request sought information concerning due diligence, which we agreed to provide. It continues to state: "including without limitation" documents reflecting all "Financial Information" CPH ever obtained about Sunbeam. As we understand your definition, the request for "Financial Information" is broader than the request for due diligence information, in which it is supposedly encompassed. We have not withheld any documents responsive to what we understand this request to seek -- due diligence. The further request, for all Financial Information, is overbroad.

Morgan Stanley Request No. 16. In this request, you sought various due diligence materials. We agreed to provide exactly what you have agreed to provide: documents relating to due diligence for this transaction, and general due diligence materials. We are not providing (nor are you) due diligence materials from other transactions. Why are you entitled to receive documents you are not willing to produce to us? Do you intend to modify your prior response to our Request No. 43?

Morgan Stanley Request No. 28. In response to this request, we offered to produce more documents than you requested. Morgan Stanley's definition of "your" was limited to "CPH." CPH does not have an organizational chart or a chart of reporting relationships, and therefore there are no documents responsive to this Request. Nonetheless, we responded by voluntarily producing documents sufficient to show the relationship of CPH with its corporate parent at the time of the February 27, 1998 Agreements. We specifically refer Morgan Stanley to the 10-Ks filed by the Coleman Co., Inc. in 1997 and 1998, which we produced, which explain the relationship between CPH and its parent and subsidiaries at all relevant times. We have also provided a written response describing corporate structure. CPH stands on its objections and response to this Request.

Kathryn R. DeBord, Esq.
September 12, 2003

JENNER & BLOCK

Morgan Stanley Request No. 31. CPH produced redacted calendars responsive to this Request that include relevant entries. You apparently want calendar entries that have nothing to do with Coleman or Sunbeam. We invite you to explain what other information from these calendars you believe you are entitled to receive, and why.

Morgan Stanley Request Nos. 32-35. In response to these requests, we outlined precisely what we were producing. We are not producing documents that reflect attorney-client communications or work product from other litigation arising from the Sunbeam transaction. We invite you to explain what other documents you believe you are entitled to receive that we are not providing in our responses.

Morgan Stanley Request No. 40. As we explained in our response, CPH would be in violation of the terms of the settlement agreement between CPH and Arthur Andersen if CPH disclosed any of the terms of the settlement agreement. We therefore are unable to agree to your request to produce a portion of the agreement. We invite you to explain why you believe you are entitled to any portion of the settlement agreement and the legitimate purpose that would be served by disclosure of the terms of the settlement agreement.

Objections and Responses to MSSF's First Request for Production

Certain of the issues you raise relating to the MSSF requests are duplicative of the same issues you raise with regard to the Morgan Stanley requests. I will not repeat the discussion below of items I have already addressed.

Initial Objection No. 6. We objected to MSSF's definition of "MAFCO," because it is incorrect. CPH and Mafco will construe the definition to refer to MacAndrews & Forbes Holdings Inc. and any of its officers, directors, former or present employees, representatives, and agents. We are not withholding any documents based upon this definition, as corrected.

MSSF Request No. 6. Our response to Request No. 6 contained a typographical error. The response should read: "Defendants object to the multiple false premises contained in the request. Subject to and without waiving these objections and the foregoing Initial Objections, including without limitation defendants' objection to the term 'Schedule of Synergies,' CPH and Mafco will produce documents referring or relating to the December 1997 meeting."

MSSF Request No. 9. See our discussion of Morgan Stanley Request No. 15 above.

MSSF Request No. 15. We stand by our objection to this request. There was never any "decision" to make any such "representation," and therefore there are no documents responsive to this Request.

MSSF Request No. 22. We are investigating our production regarding this request, and we will respond under separate cover.

Kathryn R. DeBord, Esq.
September 12, 2003

JENNER & BLOCK

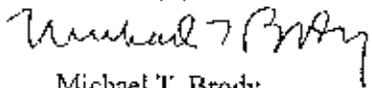

MSSF Request No. 30. We have fully responded to this request. We have produced documents, as you request, sufficient to show the corporate relationships between the relevant entities at the relevant time. CPH and MacAndrews & Forbes Holdings Inc. do not have any organization charts of internal reporting relationships. Please advise me if you believe you are entitled to additional documents.

MSSF Request Nos. 37-42. In response to these requests, we outlined precisely what we were producing. We are not producing documents that reflect attorney-client communications or work product from other litigation arising from the Sunbeam transaction. We invite you to explain what other documents you believe you are entitled to receive that we are not providing in our responses.

Finally, you complain that we have not produced enough documents from CPH or Maeco. CPH and Maeco produced an extraordinary number of documents and other discovery materials to Morgan Stanley and MSSF. As we have advised you on several occasions, a majority of the documents in our production are documents we received from third parties arising from Sunbeam's fraudulent practices and related litigation. We have produced documents from our clients' files relating to the relevant topics. In stark contrast, Morgan Stanley and MSSF, two global financial and investment institutions, have produced a small number of documents and Morgan Stanley has been afforded almost four months to respond to our requests.

Please contact me if you would like to discuss any of these issues.

Very truly yours,

Michael T. Brody

Re: Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc. v. Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc.
MSSF v. MacAndrews & Forbes Holdings Inc. et al.

Dear Mike:

I write as a follow-up to your September 12, 2003 letter. You stated in that letter that you are "investigating" your production and would be providing a follow-up response -- which we still have not received -- to MS & Co.'s Request Number 9 (asking for all documents "reflecting, referring, or relating to the value of Sunbeam securities") and MSSF's Request Number 22 (asking for "all documents reflecting the value of Coleman stock during the Relevant Period."). Please inform me promptly of the status of your investigation.

In addition, you objected in your September 12 letter to producing documents relating to the past or present financial condition of Sunbeam or Sunbeam securities because that request was "overbroad." (MS & Co. Request 15.) We do not agree that this request is overbroad, and refer you to your own Request 41 as a proper example of overbreadth (asking for "all documents concerning the events and matters that are the subject of the complaint filed this [sic] action."). Please inform me if you are withholding documents reflecting the past or present financial condition of Sunbeam or Sunbeam securities.

Finally, you invited me to explain why MS & Co. is entitled to certain categories of documents in this case -- namely, Request 31 (relating to calendar entries), and Request 40 (relating to your settlement agreement with Arthur Andersen). With regard to those Requests, we stand by our position that those documents are discoverable:

- Request 31. You have no grounds for redacting certain portions of the calendar entries. Our request for calendar entries not related to the transaction is plainly relevant to our defense in this case. As you know, we believe that Ron Perelman and other MAFCO representatives were distracted during the critical time periods by external events when it should have been focusing on due diligence for the Coleman transaction.

- Request 40. As for your settlement agreement with Arthur Andersen, Florida courts recognize that discovery of settlement agreements can be appropriate despite the presence of a confidentiality agreement. In this case, the settlement agreement is relevant -- in part because it defines CPH/MAPCO's relationship with Arthur Andersen, and Arthur Andersen is a witness in this case. See City of Homestead v. Rogers, 789 So.2d 483 (Fla. 3d DCA 2001) (stating that the defendant "is entitled to evaluate its potential liability exposure with all information on hand" and holding that "the settlement terms and amount must be disclosed."); Smith v. TIB Bank of the Keys, 687 So.2d 895, 896-97 (Fla. 3d DCA 1997) (holding discovery of terms of settlement agreement proper and stating that "[w]hile confidentiality agreements are necessary in some circumstances...they may not be subsequently employed by a litigant to obscure issues or otherwise thwart an opponent's discovery."). See also Stockham v. Stockham, 168 So.2d 320, 322 (Fla. 1964) ("It would be uneven justice to permit plaintiffs to invoke the powers of this court for the purpose of seeking redress and, at the same time, to permit plaintiffs to fend off questions, the answers to which may constitute a valid defense or materially aid the defense."); Westside-Marrero Jeep Eagle, Inc. v. Chrysler Corp., Inc., 1998 WL 186705 (E.D. La. 1998) (discovery of settlement agreements permitted to evaluate a witness' potential bias, interest, and credibility); Griffin v. Mashariki, 1997 WL 756914 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) (same).

Please inform us whether you will or will not produce documents responsive to these requests.

Sincerely,

Kathryn R. DeBord

Re: Coleman (Parent) Holdings, Inc. v. Arthur Andersen LLP, et al.

Dear Zhouette:

I write in further response to your letter of October 3, 2003 concerning your request for the Andersen settlement agreement. I have now consulted with the individuals who were unavailable yesterday and our position remains the same. We decline to produce the settlement agreement on the ground that it is not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. In addition, the settlement terms are confidential, and we see no reason why any of those terms need to be disclosed at this stage of the litigation.

Very truly yours,

Michael T. Brody

COLEMAN (PARENT) HOLDINGS INC.'S RESPONSES AND OBJECTIONS TO DEFENDANT MORGAN STANLEY & CO., INC.'S
THIRD SET OF INTERROGATORIES

Plaintiff Coleman (Parent) Holdings Inc. ("CPH"), by its attorneys, and pursuant to Florida Rules of Civil Procedure 1.280, 1.340 and 1.350, hereby responds and objects to Morgan Stanley & Co. Incorporated's ("Morgan Stanley") Third Set of Interrogatories ("Interrogatories") dated October 13, 2003 as follows:

INITIAL OBJECTIONS

1. CPH incorporates by reference the Initial Objections set forth in its written response to Morgan Stanley's first set of interrogatories.

INTERROGATORY RESPONSES AND FURTHER OBJECTIONS

INTERROGATORY NO. 1: State with particularity the 1997 and 1998 net worth, income, revenue and global holdings (including non-MAFCO holdings) of MAFCO, CPH, Ronald Perelman, Howard Gittis, and any other MAFCO or CPH employee who participated in the due diligence or financial review of Sunbeam's acquisition of the Coleman Company.

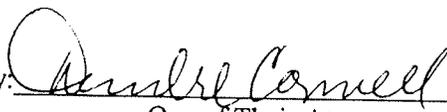

RESPONSE: CPH notes that Interrogatory No. 1 constitutes multiple separate interrogatories. CPH objects to Interrogatory No. 1 as overbroad and not relevant to the litigation nor reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. CPH further objects to Interrogatory No. 1 because it seeks personal information about entities and individuals not party to this lawsuit, including Mafco, Ronald Perelman, Howard Gittis, and other individuals employed by Mafco or CPH.

INTERROGATORY NO. 2: Identify all persons at CPH or MAFCO whose job responsibilities included, in 1997 or 1998, due diligence or financial review of proposed mergers and acquisitions, including a description of each person's educational and employment history, a description of any accounting or financial certifications or licenses held by such persons, and a description of any financial or business training they have had.

RESPONSE: CPH notes that Interrogatory No. 2 constitutes multiple separate interrogatories. CPH objects to Interrogatory No. 2 insofar as it seeks information related to Mafco, a non-party to this lawsuit. CPH further objects to Interrogatory No. 2 as overbroad and as seeking information not relevant to the litigation nor reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence because Interrogatory No. 2 is not limited to individuals who performed due diligence concerning the transaction by which Sunbeam acquired CPH's interest in The Coleman Company, Inc. CPH further objects to Interrogatory No. 2 on the ground that it is vague, ambiguous, and overbroad insofar as it fails to define the term "due diligence" or otherwise identify with sufficient particularity the activities that might be encompassed by that term.

8 MR. SCAROLA: We are going to surprise Your

10 THE COURT: Okay. How are we doing that?

11 MR. SCAROLA: We're going to surprise you by 12 telling you first that with regard to the motion
 13 to compel production of emails, we have come to an 14 agreement.

15 THE COURT: Okay.

16 MR. SCAROLA: And we will describe the terms
 17 of that agreement for the record.

18 For the record, my name is Jack Scarola. I'm 19 hear on behalf of the Plaintiff Coleman (Parent)
 20 Holdings. There are two motions. First is motion
 21 to compel directed to the production of emails.

22 The agreement that we have reached is that 23 the Defendant Morgan Stanley will produce a 24 witness who is knowledgeable with respect to the 25 retention and retrieval -- the retention policies

PINNACLE REPORTING, INC.

1 Stanley's motion to compel the production of a 2 single document, the settlement agreement between 3 Coleman (Parent) and Arthur Andersen. And just 4 briefly, I think it's fairly straightforward in 5 terms of the history of this, that prior to 6 initiating the lawsuit against Morgan Stanley,
 7 Coleman (Parent) brought a virtually identical
 8 lawsuit against Arthur Andersen, same allegations,
 9 same claim of damages, and now have settled.

10 THE COURT: Let me ask you this. This is the 11 notebook you gave me for this; right?

12 MR. CLARE: That includes the cases that 13 we've cited.

14 THE COURT: I can't do this on an 8:45.
 15 Please understand, 8:45's are things -- I can read
 16 everything. I can walk in and not know anything.
 17 I can read everything I've got to read, absorb
 18 everything I've got to, and I can do it in ten 19 minutes. I can't even read your motion in ten 20 minutes.

21 MR. CLARE: I have one case, City of 22 Homestead case, that --

23 THE COURT: I'm happy to get the book and 24 specially set. I'm happy to do it on an expedited
 25 basis. I cannot do this on an 8:45. If you

1 bothered to put together a notebook like this, I
 2 know I need more time with it, okay?
 3 Do you want me to get the book? Do you have
 4 access to your schedules?
 5 MR. CLARE: Sure.
 6 MR. SCAROLA: I don't, but can make a phone
 7 call to my office.
 8 THE COURT: Okay. That's great.
 9 MR. SCAROLA: Would you like me to get my 10 office on the line, Your Honor?
 11 THE COURT: Sure.
 12 MR. CLARE: Just in the interest of 13 completeness and while we're waiting for the 14 schedule, Mr. Scarola described in broad outlines 15 what the agreed upon order would be on this other 16 motion. There is one caveat I explained to 17 Mr. Scarola in the hallway, and we will work it
 18 out between the parties before we submit an agreed 19 upon order to Your Honor. I am not aware as I sit 20 here right now what limitations there are right
 21 now without disclosing to Mr. Scarola's client 22 information we provided to federal regulators. We 23 agreed to provide whatever it is we can provide.
 24 THE COURT: Are you saying we might have a 25 legal dispute later about what you're permitted to

PINNACLE REPORTING, INC.

1 disclose?
 2 MR. CLARE: About what we're permitted to
 3 disclose, and I just don't know all the details
 4 without consulting with my client. We have an
 5 agreement in principle that whatever we can
 6 provide on this, we'll provide. I know there are 7 materials we can provide, I just don't know the 8 scope of it. And I don't want to represent to the 9 court that we're waiving or even have the ability
 10 to waive protections that I'm not aware of right
 11 now.
 12 MR. SCAROLA: The only caveat to that is that 13 there's a commitment that they will provide good
 14 faith cooperation in obtaining whatever
 15 information is necessary in order to make full 16 disclosure.
 17 THE COURT: Okay.
 18 MR. CLARE: That's correct.
 19 THE COURT: We can try the 14th, which is a

 8 We could try 4:30 on Tuesday, November 25.

2. Settlement Payment. On or before October 17, 2002, AALLP shall transfer by wire to Coleman funds in the amount of $70 million U.S. dollars (the "Settlement Payment") as follows:

Coleman and MacAndrews agree that AALLP alone is responsible for making the Settlement Payment, and that neither AWSC nor any AWSC Entity (other than AALLP) shall be responsible for making such payment.

3. Dismissal of Coleman Action.

a. Upon receipt of the Settlement Payment by Coleman (the "Effective Date"), Coleman and AALLP shall promptly file the Joint Motion for Staying the Proceeding in the Coleman Action, which Joint Motion is annexed hereto as Exhibit A. Upon execution of this Agreement, Coleman shall provide to Curtis, Mallet-Prevost, Colt & Mosle LLP ("Curtis") a signed Notice of Dismissal With Prejudice of the Coleman Action (it being understood that each of the parties to the Coleman Action shall bear its own fees and costs), the original of which is annexed hereto as Exhibit B and shall be handled in accordance with the terms of this Paragraph 3. Curtis shall retain the Notice of Dismissal With Prejudice until one hundred (100) days after the Effective Date, at which time Curtis shall, subject to the provisions of this Paragraph 3 and with the authorization of Coleman which is hereby given, file the Notice of Dismissal With Prejudice with the court in the Coleman Action and effectuate service on the parties to the Coleman Action (hereinafter in this Paragraph, all references to filing the Notice of Dismissal With Prejudice shall include service thereof on such parties). If within the 100 day period following the Effective Date, AALLP becomes the subject of a voluntary or involuntary petition under Title 11 of the United States Code, Coleman shall have the right to exercise one of the following options, which option must be exercised by written notice (the "Option Notice") delivered to AALLP within 30 days of the date of the filing of such petition: (i) Coleman shall retain the Settlement Payment, in which case Curtis shall file the Notice of Dismissal With Prejudice promptly upon receipt of the Option Notice; or (ii) Coleman shall return the Settlement Payment in full (together with interest thereon from the Effective Date to the date of the return at the rate of 3% per annum) (the "Return Payment"), in which case Curtis shall not file the Notice of Dismissal With Prejudice, Coleman shall make the Return Payment to AALLP on or before the 40th day following the date of the filing of the petition, and, upon Coleman making the Return Payment, Curtis shall return the Notice of Dismissal With Prejudice to counsel for Coleman, this Agreement, including all covenants, promises, and releases herein, shall be null and void, and subject to the applicable provisions of the Bankruptcy Code, Coleman shall be permitted to seek to have the automatic stay lifted and the stay of the Coleman Action vacated. With respect to the foregoing, it is agreed that, in the event that (x) Coleman fails for any reason to provide the Option Notice to AALLP in accordance with the preceding sentence within the 30 day period following the date of the filing of the petition by or against AALLP, or (y) if Coleman elects the option set forth in (ii) above but fails to make the Return Payment in full to AALLP as required on or before the 40th day following the date of the filing of the petition by or against AALLP, such failure shall be deemed to constitute an automatic election by Coleman under the option set forth in (i) above.

b. Notwithstanding the foregoing, in the event that during the 100 day period following the Effective Date (i) AALLP becomes the subject of an involuntary petition under Title 11 of the United States Code and AALLP challenges the filing of said petition, and (ii) Coleman has given an Option Notice with respect to option (ii) in subsection a. of this Paragraph 3, then Coleman shall have no obligation during the pendency of the challenge by AALLP to make the Return Payment and (x) in the event that AALLP's challenge is upheld such that the involuntary petition is dismissed, Coleman's Option Notice shall be deemed void ab initio, Coleman shall retain the Settlement Payment and Curtis shall file the Notice of Dismissal With Prejudice provided at least 100 days has expired between the Effective Date and the date of dismissal of such involuntary petition (or if 100 days has not expired, upon the expiration of the 100 day period following the Effective Date); or (y) in the event that AALLP's challenge is denied such that the involuntary petition stands, Coleman shall have 30 days from the date that the order of the Bankruptcy Court is entered upholding the validity of the involuntary petition to either (i) make the Return Payment (in which case, Curtis shall return the Notice of Dismissal With Prejudice to counsel for Coleman, this Agreement, including all covenants, promises, and releases herein, shall be null and void, and subject to the applicable provisions of the Bankruptcy Code, Coleman shall be permitted to seek to have the automatic stay lifted and the stay of the Coleman Action vacated), or (ii) change its election and chose option (i) in a. of this Paragraph 3.

c. Up to 10 days prior to the day on which an Option Notice is required to be made, Coleman may elect to extend the date upon which an Option Notice is required to be made for a period of 60 days (the "Extension Period") by giving written notice of such request to AALLP (the "Extension Notice") and such Extension Period shall be deemed to automatically occur unless AALLP gives written notice to Coleman within 5 days of AALLP's receipt of the Extension Notice that AALLP objects to the Extension Period, in which case there shall be no Extension Period and the Option Notice required to be made under subsection a. shall be made within 5 days of the receipt by Coleman of AALLP's objection. In the event an Extension Period is requested and not objected to by AALLP, then, in such event, Coleman shall be entitled to continue to request additional Extension Periods in accordance with this subsection c. until such time as AALLP objects to an Extension Period in which case the Option Notice required to be given pursuant to subsection a. shall be made within 5 days of the receipt by Coleman of AALLP's objection and no further Extension Notices may be given.

d. In the event that an involuntary petition is converted to a voluntary petition or an Order for Relief is entered in the involuntary case, then the provisions of subsection a. above shall control, with the date of conversion or the date on which the Order of Relief is entered constituting the "date of the filing of such petition" as set forth in the fourth sentence of subsection a.

4. Mutual Releases. As of the "Effective Date":

a. Each of Coleman and MacAndrews, for itself and its respective subsidiaries, controlled companies, agents, representatives, officers, directors, employees, partners, successors, assigns, heirs, executors, administrators, attorneys and shareholders (collectively, the "Coleman Releasers"), for good and valuable consideration, receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, releases, remises and forever discharges AWSC, AALLP, Harlow and each and every AWSC Entity, and the present and former subsidiaries, parents, insurers, agents, representatives, officers, directors, employees, principals, partners, members, shareholders, successors, assigns, heirs, executors, administrators and attorneys of AWSC, AALLP, Harlow and every other AWSC Entity (collectively, the "AA Releasees"), from all manner of actions, causes of action, suits, debts, dues, sums of money, accounts, reckonings, bonds, bills, specialties, covenants, contracts, guarantees, controversies, agreements, promises, variances, trespasses, damages, judgments, extents, executions, claims and demands whatsoever, of whatever kind or nature, whether known or unknown, or suspected or unsuspected, direct or by assignment, in law or in equity, that the Coleman Releasers ever had, now have or may have in the future for, upon, or by reason of any matter, cause or thing whatever, from the beginning of the World to the Effective Date, relating in any way to the Released Claims; provided, however, that nothing herein shall constitute a release of AALLP's obligations under this Agreement.

b. AALLP, for itself, Harlow, AWSC and all other AWSC Entities, and each of its or his respective subsidiaries, controlled companies, agents, representatives, officers, directors, employees, partners, successors, assigns, heirs, executors, administrators, attorneys and shareholders (collectively, the "AA Releasers"), for good and valuable consideration, receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, releases, remises and forever discharges Coleman and MacAndrews, and the present and former subsidiaries, parents, insurers, agents, representatives, officers, directors, employees, principals, partners, members, shareholders, successors, assigns, and attorneys of Coleman and MacAndrews (collectively, the "Coleman Releasees") from all manner of actions, causes of action, suits, debts, dues, sums of money, accounts, reckonings, bonds, bills, specialties, covenants, contracts, guarantees, controversies, agreements, promises, variances, trespasses, damages, judgments, extents, executions, claims and demands whatsoever, of whatever kind or nature, whether known or unknown, or suspected or unsuspected, direct or by assignment, in law or in equity, that the AA Releasers ever had, now have or may have in the future for, upon, or by reason of any matter, cause or thing whatever, from the beginning of the World to the Effective Date, relating in any way to the Released Claims; provided, however, that nothing herein shall constitute a release of Coleman's and/or MacAndrews' obligations under this Agreement.

5. Indemnification.

a. In the event that Coleman or MacAndrews commences an action or otherwise pursues a recovery against any person or entity not released hereunder (for purposes of this paragraph 5 a. only, a "Third Party") with respect to any claim based on, arising out of, or related to, directly or indirectly, the transfer or sale by Coleman or MacAndrews of the controlling interest in The Coleman Company, Inc. to Sunbeam on March 30, 1998, in exchange for shares of Sunbeam stock and other consideration, Coleman's and/or MacAndrews' purchase of shares of stock of the Sunbeam Corporation, the settlement between Coleman and/or MacAndrews and Sunbeam pursuant to which Coleman and/or MacAndrews obtained warrants to purchase Sunbeam stock, Coleman's and/or MacAndrews' ownership of shares of stock, and warrants to purchase the stock, of Sunbeam, and such Third Party makes any claim (whether in the same action or otherwise) relating in any manner to Sunbeam or any services (audit, tax, business consulting, or otherwise) provided to Sunbeam (or any entity affiliated with Sunbeam), by AWSC, AALLP or any other AWSC Entity or Harlow against any AA Releasee, then Coleman and MacAndrews shall indemnify and hold such AA Releasee harmless from all losses and damages (including, without limitation, reasonable attorneys' fees) incurred in connection with such claim such that the AA Releasee will have no obligation to make any payment to any such Third Party.

b. In the event that AALLP or any AWSC Entity commences an action or otherwise pursues a recovery against any person or entity not released hereunder (for purposes of this paragraph 5 b. only, a "Third Party") with respect to any claim based on, arising out of, or related to, directly or indirectly, the Settlement Payment made pursuant to this Agreement, the transfer or sale by Coleman or MacAndrews of the controlling interest in The Coleman Company, Inc. to Sunbeam on March 30, 1998, in exchange for shares of Sunbeam stock and other consideration, Coleman's and/or MacAndrews' purchase of shares of stock of the Sunbeam Corporation, the settlement between Coleman and/or MacAndrews and Sunbeam pursuant to which Coleman and/or MacAndrews obtained warrants to purchase Sunbeam stock, Coleman's and/or MacAndrews' ownership of shares of stock, and warrants to purchase the stock, of Sunbeam, and such Third Party makes any claim (whether in the same action or otherwise) relating in any manner to Sunbeam or any services (audit, tax, business consulting, or otherwise) provided to Sunbeam (or any entity affiliated with Sunbeam), by AWSC, AALLP or any other AWSC Entity or Harlow against any Coleman Releasee, then AALLP shall indemnify and hold such Coleman Releasee harmless from all losses and damages (including, without limitation, reasonable attorneys' fees) incurred in connection with such claim such that the Coleman Releasee will have no obligation to make any payment to any such Third Party.

6. Confidentiality of Settlement and Settlement Discussions.

(a) Each of Coleman and MacAndrews, for itself and its subsidiaries, and AALLP, for itself, AWSC, and the other AWSC Entities hereby:

(i) represent, covenant and warrant that they and their counsel shall, for all time, maintain the confidentiality of, and not disclose the terms of this Agreement; the amounts of the payments set forth in Paragraph 2, the identity of the other parties to this Agreement, or the negotiations and discussions that led up to this Agreement (collectively, "Confidential Matters"), and shall agree to take all reasonable steps to ensure the confidentiality of Confidential Matters, including, but not limited to, by not (i) making any statements of any kind to the press concerning any Confidential Matters, or (ii) voluntarily showing or giving this Agreement or disclosing any other Confidential Matters to any other person or entity, except as may be required by statute, rule, regulation, generally accepted accounting principles, court order, subpoena or similar legal process, or as otherwise required by law or relevant stock exchange, and except as may be reasonably necessary for any of the Coleman Releasers or AA Releasers to make claims as to available insurance;

(ii) agree that, notwithstanding the foregoing subsection (i), Coleman and MacAndrews shall be permitted to disclose Confidential Matters to their accountants and in-house counsel and, if truly necessary, to outside counsel (in addition to counsel of record in the Coleman Action), all of whom must agree to be bound by the terms of this Paragraph 6;

(iii) agree, in the event this Agreement is required to be filed or lodged with a court in any proceeding, or Confidential Matters are required to be disclosed in any such court proceeding, the Party seeking to do so shall use reasonable efforts to preserve their confidentiality under seal of court or other applicable procedures at all times;

(iv) agree to inform any person to whom Confidential Matters are disclosed that such matters are confidential and require that such matters not be disclosed to any other person, except as provided in this Paragraph 6; and

(v) agree, in the event that any Party to this Agreement receives a subpoena or similar demand that seeks to compel disclosure of any Confidential Matters, that Party shall promptly inform the other Parties to this Agreement of the receipt of the subpoena or other instrument so that such other Parties shall have an appropriate opportunity to challenge the subpoena or demand or to otherwise seek appropriate protections with respect to the Confidential Matters.

(b) Coleman and MacAndrews agree that, in the event Coleman or MacAndrews discloses Confidential Matters in a manner other than those set forth in paragraph 6(a), it would be difficult, costly or impossible to conclusively establish the amount of actual damages that AALLP would suffer as a consequence thereof, and expressly agree that $3 million U.S. dollars shall constitute liquidated damages for such breach, and that such amount represents a reasonable pre-estimate of the actual costs and damages which would be sustained by AALLP in the event of such a breach, and further agree that such amount is compensatory only, and not punitive or in the nature of a penalty and is, in any event, just, fair and reasonable under the circumstances.

7. No Evidence of Liability. Neither the fact nor the provisions of this Agreement shall in any manner be construed against any Party as an acknowledgement, affirmation, admission or evidence of any violation of law, liability or of any wrongdoing of any nature whatsoever. AALLP denies and continues to deny that it has committed any act or omission giving rise to any violation of law, liability or of any wrongdoing of any nature whatsoever.

8. Representations.

a. Each of Coleman and MacAndrews hereby represents and warrants that neither Coleman nor MacAndrews controls any entity (other than as alleged in the Coleman Action) that holds any potential claim against any AA Releasee based on, arising out of, or related to, directly or indirectly, the transfer or sale by Coleman or MacAndrews of the controlling interest in The Coleman Company, Inc. to Sunbeam on March 30, 1998, in exchange for shares of Sunbeam stock and other consideration, Coleman's and/or MacAndrews' purchase of shares of stock of Sunbeam, the settlement between Coleman and/or MacAndrews and Sunbeam pursuant to which Coleman and/or MacAndrews obtained warrants to purchase Sunbeam stock, Coleman's and/or MacAndrews' ownership of shares of stock, and warrants to purchase the stock, of Sunbeam, or any services (audit, tax, business consulting, or otherwise) provided to Sunbeam (or any entity affiliated with Sunbeam) by AWSC, AALLP or any other AWSC Entity or Harlow. Each of Coleman and MacAndrews further represents and warrants that it has the authority to enter into this Agreement and to bind all persons and entities referred to in the respective definitions of "Coleman" and "MacAndrews" set forth herein. Each of Coleman and MacAndrews further represents and warrants that it has not sold, assigned, transferred, or otherwise conveyed any of the claims, rights or causes of action that it had, has, or may have against the AA Releasees.

b. AALLP hereby represents and warrants that it does not control any entity that holds any potential claim against any Coleman Releasee based on, arising out of, or related to, directly or indirectly, the transfer or sale by Coleman or MacAndrews of the controlling interest in The Coleman Company, Inc. to Sunbeam on March 30, 1998, in exchange for shares of Sunbeam stock and other consideration, Coleman's and/or MacAndrews' purchase of shares of stock of Sunbeam, the settlement between Coleman and/or MacAndrews and Sunbeam pursuant to which Coleman and/or MacAndrews obtained warrants to purchase Sunbeam stock, Coleman's and/or MacAndrews' ownership of shares of stock, and warrants to purchase the stock, of Sunbeam, or any services (audit, tax, business consulting, or otherwise) provided to Sunbeam (or any entity affiliated with Sunbeam) by AWSC, AALLP or any other AWSC Entity or Harlow. AALLP further represents and warrants that it has the authority to enter into this Agreement and to bind all persons and entities referred to in the respective definitions of "AALLP," "AWCS" and "AWSC Entities" and "Harlow" set forth herein. AALLP further represents and warrants that it has not sold, assigned, transferred, or otherwise conveyed any of the claims, rights or causes of action that it had, has, or may have against the Coleman Releasees.

9. Execution in Counterparts. This Agreement may be executed in two or more counterparts, and all such counterparts shall constitute one and the same instrument. This Agreement shall be deemed to have been executed when the Parties hereto each execute and exchange counterparts thereof, which may be accomplished by facsimile or in person in accordance with the convenience of the Parties. This Agreement is not binding and shall be of no force and effect whatsoever unless and until this Agreement is executed by all Parties hereto. To the extent of their full authority, Coleman, MacAndrews and AALLP shall cause their respective affiliates, subsidiaries, controlled companies, agents, representatives, officers, directors, employees, partners, successors, assigns and attorneys to take, or refrain from taking, any action as may be necessary for such affiliates, subsidiaries, controlled companies, agents, representatives, officers, directors, employees, partners, successors, assigns and attorneys to comply with the releases and other undertakings contained in this Agreement. The Parties agree to take all reasonable steps, including the execution of additional documents, to effectuate the provisions hereof, including, without limitation, to effectuate the stay and the dismissal with prejudice of the Coleman Action as contemplated in Paragraph 3.

10. Application of New York Law. This Agreement shall be construed and enforced in accordance with the laws of the State of New York without regard to the conflict of law principles of the State of New York.

11. Entire Agreement. This Agreement represents the entire agreement of the Parties. The Parties acknowledge that no representation or promise not expressly set forth in this Agreement has been made by any of the Parties hereto or any of their agents, employees, representatives or attorneys. No modification of, or amendment to, this Agreement shall be valid unless it is in writing and signed by the Parties.

12. Notice. All notices and other communications required or permitted to be given to the Parties hereto in connection with this Agreement shall be given, in the case of notice to Coleman and any of its affiliates, subsidiaries and/or controlled companies, to:

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

Morgan Stanley has moved to dismiss this case pursuant to Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.061 or, in the alternative, for judgment on the pleadings in its favor pursuant to Rule 1.140(c). The reasons supporting Morgan Stanley's motion are straightforward. First, this case must be governed by the substantive law of New York because it involves only New York parties and because every relevant event took place in New York. Second, the need to apply New York law, combined with the location of the parties, witnesses, and evidence in New York, requires dismissal under Rule 1.061 in favor of a New York forum. Third, the claims must be dismissed because the theories of liability are expressly foreclosed under New York law — and (at best) are wholly unprecedented under Florida law.

CPH has now had more than five months to respond to these points. Yet, in all that time, and even with the benefit of a 57-page Opposition Memorandum, CPH never acknowledges Morgan Stanley's principal arguments, never cites (let alone attempts to distinguish) Morgan Stanley's principal cases and authority, and never discusses undisputed facts that control this motion. Morgan Stanley's reply Memorandum will focus on the omissions in CPH's Complaint and Opposition — and explain how these unrebutted arguments, viewed in the context of controlling New York and Florida precedent, require dismissal or judgment on the pleadings.

With regard to the law that must be applied, CPH omits that its principal place of business is in New York, as CPH has acknowledged in other pleadings filed in this Court, and as its officers have stated in sworn affidavits requesting transfer of other lawsuits to New York. CPH further omits the location of events relevant to its own claims, such as where documents were allegedly drafted, where representations were allegedly made, and where reliance allegedly occurred — events that occurred exclusively in New York. CPH finally omits any discussion or even citation of Trumpet Vine Investments N.V. v. Union Capital Partners I, Inc., 92 F.3d 1110

(11th Cir. 1996), an important Eleventh Circuit decision applying Florida’s choice-of-law rules and holding that New York law must govern facts and claims virtually identical to those presented here. No Florida court has criticized Trumpet Vine, and CPH offers no reason for this Court to depart from it — a departure that, in any event, would be inconsistent with principles articulated by the Florida Supreme Court.

As for Rule 1.061, CPH argues that its chosen forum is presumptively correct, but never acknowledges binding Florida precedent holding that foreign plaintiffs, like CPH, are not entitled to any presumption in the Rule 1.061 inquiry. CPH further omits the most relevant information for that inquiry — such as the location of the parties, relevant witnesses, historical events, and evidence — in favor of wholly irrelevant “contacts” with Florida, and the fact that some witnesses reside in Florida. These arguments rest on a fundamental legal error, however, and confuse the Rule 1.061 inquiry with the “minimum contacts” relevant to personal jurisdiction. Because Rule 1.061 assumes that jurisdiction is proper in Florida, minimum contacts with Florida and the residence of a handful of third-party witnesses are wholly irrelevant to whether Florida is a proper forum for this litigation. Under the proper Rule 1.061 standard, the litigation plainly belongs in New York.

Additionally, Morgan Stanley has discovered important new information regarding the validity of CPH’s assertions regarding why this case belongs in Florida. When MacAndrews & Forbes (the 100% owner of CPH) was recently sued in Alabama, Barry Schwartz, the General Counsel of MacAndrews & Forbes (who was also the Executive Vice President and General Counsel of CPH), submitted a sworn declaration in support of a motion requesting that the case be transferred to New York. In his sworn declaration, Mr. Schwartz affirmed the strong connection between MacAndrews & Forbes (and its shell-company subsidiaries) and New York, and his companies' strong preference to litigate claims arising out of New York-based financial transactions in their home state of New York. Mr. Schwartz declared:

- MacAndrews & Forbes “maintains its principal place of business at 35 East 62nd Street, New York, New York 10021” — the same office building that it shares with CPH.
- “The underwriters and accountants involved in the issuance of the bonds which are the subject of the complaint are also located in New York” — as is the case here.
- “All of the defendants’ employees, officers, or directors with knowledge relevant to the Complaint are currently employed . . . in New York” — as is the case here.
- “All of the defendants’ documents relating to the allegations in the Complaint are maintained . . . in New York” — as is the case here.
- “All of the employees of the Corporate Defendants, . . . all of the investment bankers and all of the advisors who participated in formulating the so-called plan referred to in Plaintiff’s complaint maintain their headquarters or are located in New York” — as is the case here.

Aug. 20, 1997 Schwartz Decl. ¶¶ 2, 5, 7, 8, 9, Keller v. Perelman, No. CV 97-N-2104S (N.D. Ala.) (Ex. G).¹ CPH cannot have it both ways. If MacAndrews & Forbes (which shares officers, employees, headquarters, and office space with CPH) is entitled to litigate fraud-based claims arising from a New York-based transaction in New York, then so is Morgan Stanley.

Finally, should this Court choose to exercise jurisdiction over this case at all, CPH’s claims against Morgan Stanley are legally meritless and should be dismissed. CPH argues that fraud claims are inherently factual and thus largely immune from judgment on the pleadings. But this argument is misplaced. Factual disputes are immaterial to this motion; what matters is that trial courts in this state routinely dismiss claims by foreign plaintiffs who seek to avoid the application of governing claims and extend liability far beyond legal precedent. And that is precisely what is happening here. Having already recovered what it can from Sunbeam and Arthur Andersen, CPH now seeks to launch another lawsuit against another defendant alleging novel liability theories that have been squarely rejected as a matter of law in New York, and never accepted in Florida. There is simply no authority for a sophisticated party like CPH, who was advised at all times by its own team of advisors, lawyers and accountants, to allege that it relied on supposed representations of a counterparty's advisor when closing a $2 billion deal, especially where (as here) that advisor itself lost hundreds of millions of dollars in the same deal.

Indeed, state and federal courts in New York routinely dismiss claims identical in all relevant respects to this case, and CPH cannot obtain a different result by filing its complaint here in Florida. CPH characteristically fails to address or distinguish these cases cited by Morgan Stanley in its opening Memorandum, despite having more than five months and almost 60 pages to do so. Nor does CPH cite any precedent from Florida for its novel theory of financial advisor liability.

* * * * *

In sum, CPH's lengthy Opposition is more relevant for what it fails to say than for what it actually says. Pages of bullet points reciting immaterial events cannot overcome the fact that CPH is based in New York where every event relevant to this case took place. String citations to irrelevant authorities cannot obscure directly on-point authority that compels application of New York law and, thus, strongly directs dismissal under Rule 1.061. And mere recitation of Florida-based witnesses is meaningless since CPH's claims can neither be proved nor disproved without the testimony of far more numerous New York-based witnesses. Accordingly, for the reasons set forth in the opening Memorandum and below, this Court should either (1) dismiss this lawsuit pursuant to Rule 1.061, or (2) dismiss the Complaint outright pursuant to Rule 1.140(c).

STANDARD OF REVIEW

In accordance with Florida law, Morgan Stanley makes reference below to documents directly quoted or relied upon in the Complaint, see, e.g., Boca Raton Transp., Inc. v. Zaldivar, 648 So. 2d 812, 813 (Fla. 4th DCA 1995), as well as to affidavits and other sworn evidence necessary to the choice-of-law and Rule 1.061 inquiries, see, e.g., Botton v. Elbaz, 722 So. 2d 974, 975 (Fla. 4th DCA 1999). On the motion for judgment on the pleadings, the Court accepts as true all well-pleaded factual allegations of the non-moving party, but need not ignore general allegations that are inconsistent with specific facts “revealed by [an] exhibit [attached or referred to in the complaint].” Hillcrest Pac. Corp. v. Yamamura, 727 So. 2d 1053, 1056 (Fla. 4th DCA 1999) (internal quotations & citation omitted; second alternation in original).

ARGUMENT

I. THIS COURT MUST APPLY NEW YORK LAW TO CPH’S CLAIMS.

A. Settled Choice-of-Law Principles Require Application Of New York Law.

Both parties agree that the Restatement (Second) Conflict of Laws governs the determination of which state’s law — New York or Florida — must be applied to CPH’s claims. See Bishop v. Florida Specialty Paint Co., 389 So. 2d 999 (Fla. 1980). Even the most cursory reading of the Restatement confirms, however, that it is impossible to read the applicable provision (§ 148) and apply Florida law to those claims. CPH must recognize this, because it spends eight pages briefing this issue but never once mentions its own principal place of business — New York — which is among the most pertinent factors to be considered in the choice-of-law analysis. See Restatement (Second) Conflict of Laws § 148 cmt. i (1971) (“The plaintiff’s domicile or residence, if he is a natural person, or the principal place of business, if plaintiff is a corporation, are contacts of substantial significance when the loss is pecuniary in nature”). CPH’s omission on this critical point eviscerates its analysis of the Restatement factors.

1. As A Consequence Of Omitting Its Principal Place Of Business CPH Applies The Incorrect Restatement Provision.

CPH incorrectly argues that this case is governed by Restatement § 148(2) and falsely contends that Morgan Stanley applied the “wrong section” by focusing instead on § 148(1). (Nov. 14, 2003 Plf.’s Resp. in Opp. to Def.’s Mot. to Dismiss Under R. 1.061 or, in the Alternative, for J. on the Plds. at 31-32 (“Opp.”).) As an initial matter, Morgan Stanley plainly stated that New York law must be applied under either subsection of Restatement § 148 — a point that is clearly made in comment j of Restatement § 148(2), which Morgan Stanley quoted and discussed in its opening Memorandum. (Mem. at 11 n.7.) Comment j explains that, even where defendants allegedly make representations from more than one state, the governing law is supplied by the state of the plaintiff’s principal place of business and either (i) the place where the plaintiff relied on alleged misrepresentations, or (ii) the place where the plaintiff received the alleged misrepresentations. See Restatement § 148 cmt. j.² CPH never responds to this point; but it squarely compels the application of New York law in light of the undisputed record which shows:

- CPH’s principal place of business is in New York. (Mem. at 3 n.2);
- CPH received every alleged misrepresentation in New York. (Mem. at 11 (citing Stynes Decl. ¶¶ 5, 6 (Ex. A); Porat Decl. ¶¶ 3, 4 (Ex. B)));

² In relevant part, this comment states: “[W]hen the plaintiff acted in reliance upon the defendant’s representations in a single state, this state will usually be the state of the applicable law . . . if (a) the defendant’s representations were received by the plaintiff in this state, or (b) this state is the state of the plaintiff’s domicile or principal place of business”

- CPH relied on alleged misrepresentations in New York — where the Merger Agreement was executed; where CPH tendered its Coleman shares; and where CPH received its shares of Sunbeam in return. (Merger Agmt. §§ 2.2, 3.1(b)(i) (Ex. 1).)

Accordingly, even under the Restatement provision cited by CPH, the substantive law of New York applies to its claims.³

CPH offers no grounds for a contrary finding under Section 148(2) — it simply quotes the relevant factors without explaining how those factors support its proposed application of Florida law. Nor could it, since every factor compels the application of New York law. To summarize briefly, the six factors set forth in Section 148(2) unmistakably point to New York:

- “The place, or places, where the plaintiff acted in reliance upon the defendant’s representations.” It is undisputed that CPH purportedly “acted in reliance” in New York — the place where CPH negotiated and closed the acquisition transaction, and where it tendered its shares of Coleman stock, supposedly in reliance on the representations it allegedly received.
- “The place where the plaintiff received the representations.” It is undisputed that CPH received every alleged misrepresentation in New York, its principal place of business — CPH does not even allege that it received a single representation in Florida.
- “The place where the defendant made the representations.” It is undisputed that every alleged representation made by Morgan Stanley was made in New York. Though CPH points to representations made by, or to, other parties (i.e. Sunbeam and Arthur Andersen), the only relevant representations are those made by the defendant (Morgan Stanley) and received by the plaintiff (CPH), all of which occurred in New York.

³ CPH suggests in a single sentence that “Morgan Stanley’s fraudulent actions and CPH’s reliance took place in at least two states: primarily in Florida, but also in New York.” (Opp. at 31.) This single sentence is then followed by a single “see, e.g.,” citation to ¶¶ 36-44 of the Complaint and pages 10-12 of Morgan Stanley’s opening Memorandum. (Id. at 31-32.) Not surprisingly, the citation does not support the sentence and has nothing to do with the Restatement. The referenced Complaint paragraphs do not identify a single representation made or received in Florida, and the referenced memorandum pages show that every alleged representation was in fact made and received in New York. Representations allegedly made by Morgan Stanley to Sunbeam are irrelevant since the only relevant contact is “the place where the representations were first communicated to the plaintiff.” Restatement § 148(2) cmt. g. In addition, CPH’s choice-of-law argument is completely foreclosed by CPH’s principal place of business and the undisputed fact that every act of reliance took place exclusively in New York, where the underlying acquisition transaction closed. (Mem. at 11 & n.7.)

- “The domicile, nationality, place of incorporation and place of business of the parties.” Both parties are incorporated in Delaware and have their principal place of business in New York. Again, for choice-of-law purposes, the principal place of business is a contact of “substantial significance” where (as here) the alleged injury is “pecuniary in nature.”
- “The place where a tangible thing which is the subject of the transaction between the parties was situated at the time.” The subject of the transaction here was common stock traded on the New York Stock Exchange and, thus, was located in New York at the time of the transaction.⁴
- “The place where the plaintiff is to render performance under a contract which he has been induced to enter by the false representations of the defendant.” It is undisputed that CPH rendered performance, i.e., traded its shares of the Coleman Company for shares of Sunbeam, in New York.

Consequently, because CPH’s only-cited provision expressly forecloses the application of Florida law, CPH lacks any credible argument that Florida law should govern its claims.

CPH’s other arguments are equally meritless. Allegations that “Florida-based outside auditors were shocked,” (Opp. at 35 (citing Compl. ¶ 55)), or that “debentures were sold to investors nationwide, including investors based in Florida,” (id. (citing Compl. ¶ 52)), or that “Arthur Andersen . . . provided outside accounting services to Sunbeam through its West Palm Beach, Florida office,” (id. (citing Compl. ¶ 13)), have nothing whatsoever to do with alleged misrepresentations at issue here, i.e., those made by one New York resident (Morgan Stanley) to another (CPH) in New York.

⁴ Even CPH does not argue that the location of Sunbeam is relevant to the choice-of-law inquiry. Nor could it, since the claim here is that CPH was induced to trade the common stock of the Coleman Company (a Kansas-based corporation) for the common stock of Sunbeam (a Florida-based corporation), and it is undisputed that (i) the shares of both companies were traded on the New York Stock Exchange and (ii) the shares were exchanged by CPH and Sunbeam “at the New York offices of Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom, 919 Third Avenue, New York, New York 10022.” (Merger Agmt. § 2.2 (Ex. 1); see id. § 3.1(b)(i).) See, e.g., Trumpet Vine Invs., 92 F.3d at 1118 (location of corporation that is subject of New York-based merger and acquisition has no bearing on choice-of-law analysis); Trierweiler v. Croxton & Trench Holding Corp., 90 F.3d 1523, 1537 (10th Cir. 1996) (location of the subject of a transaction irrelevant to a purely financial transaction); see also Mem. at 14 n. 10 (citing cases).

2. CPH Misapprehends The “Most Significant Relationship” Test.

CPH argues that, even if Section 148(1) applies to this case, the Court can apply Florida substantive law to its claims because Florida has the “most significant relationship” to the underlying dispute. (Opp. at 31-36 (citing Restatement (Second) Conflict of Laws § 6 (1971)).) But nothing could be further from the truth — legally or factually.

Section 148(1) provides an exception for cases where, despite representations having been made and received in one state, another state has a “more significant relationship under the principles stated in § 6 to the occurrence and the parties.” Restatement § 148. But this exception does not swallow the rule — and certainly does not permit application of Florida law where the parties are from New York, and every relevant occurrence took place in New York.⁵ It is no surprise, therefore, that CPH fails to apply the Restatement’s “most significant relationship” principles to its own Complaint — all of which embody broad-based policy considerations that point exclusively to New York.⁶

There is simply no question that the State of New York, as a worldwide financial center, has the paramount policy interest in having its own laws apply to claims brought by a New York

⁵ Indeed, the comment to § 148(1) makes clear that it is the rare case in which the law of the state where representations are made and received does not control: “A possible example of this sort is where A and B are both domiciled in state X and, by reasons of A’s fraudulent representations made to him in state Y, B signs in Y a long term lease of land in X.” Restatement § 148(1) cmt. d. That, of course, is a far cry from applying Florida law to a dispute between two parties who have their principal place of business in New York, regarding financial transactions that were negotiated and closed in New York, involving common stock that was located in New York — and representations that were made and received in New York.

plaintiff who allegedly suffered injuries in New York on account of alleged misrepresentations made by a New York defendant regarding the value of common stock traded on a New York exchange, and who then, in reliance on those alleged misrepresentations, consummated a merger in New York by tendering and receiving shares of stock in New York. To apply the substantive law of Florida in such a case would turn the Restatement on its head. As the Florida Supreme Court stated, “[t]he state where the injury occurred” remains “the decisive consideration in determining the applicable choice of law.” Bishop, 389 So. 2d at 1001. Consequently, unless there is an overwhelming policy preference for not applying the law of the state where the plaintiff was injured and representations were received, the Section 6 factors simply confirm the appropriateness of applying the law of that state to the underlying dispute.

CPH devotes only three sentences to arguing that Florida has any interest in this case, none of which advances a relevant point. (Opp. at 36.) CPH notes that “at least 24 cases arising from the Sunbeam fraud have been adjudicated in this state” (id.) — but fails to mention that all of those prior cases involved at least one Florida defendant who made representations or misstatements from Florida, and most involved Florida plaintiffs who were injured in Florida.⁷ These “24 cases” are thus irrelevant to the choice-of-law question in this case, which involves no Florida parties and focuses on a financial transaction based entirely in New York.

⁷ Indeed, no less than seventeen of these cases were consolidated into a single action that included a class of nationwide investors, including Florida investors. See Apr. 22, 1998 Compl. – Class Action ¶ 20, Bird v. Sunbeam Corp., No. 98-8258 (S.D. Fla.). CPH refers repeatedly to “Florida investors” and suggests that they somehow have an interest in the outcome of this case. (Compl. ¶ 52; Opp. at 12.) But this is patently untrue, because the only parties here are New York-based corporations, not Florida investors. Accordingly, even if CPH could prove its allegations against Morgan Stanley, any judgment would inure entirely to the benefit of CPH — not Florida residents or investors, who have no stake in those allegations. Furthermore, the referenced “Florida investors” are investors who purchased Sunbeam’s convertible debentures (see Compl. ¶ 52), and thus have nothing to do with CPH’s claims, all of which concern a merger transaction that was negotiated and closed in New York and involved no “investors” other than CPH and Sunbeam.

CPH then cites a single case for the unremarkable proposition that “Florida has an ‘interest in punishing fraudulent actions committed by corporate entities and principals doing business here.’” (Opp. at 36 (quoting Tew v. Chase Manhattan Bank, N.A., 728 F. Supp. 1551, 1564 (S.D. Fla. 1990)).) But in Tew, the plaintiff was a Florida-based trustee of a Florida-based estate; every misrepresentation and all relevant misconduct occurred from and in Florida; and the defendant “offer[ed] no factual support as to the significance of any New York contacts.” Tew, 728 F. Supp. at 1560. Such a case clearly does not support application of Florida law on the facts and circumstances of this case.

3. CPH Cannot Avoid The Application Of New York Law By Pleading “Around” Obvious New York Contacts.

CPH advances the incredible argument that it is “improper” for the Court to consider declarations that show relevant events took place in New York because choice-of-law issues arise on a motion for judgment on the pleadings. (Opp. at 36-38.) This argument fails for a number of reasons. To begin with, CPH does not argue that Morgan Stanley made representations from Florida, or that CPH received and relied on representations in Florida, or that CPH is based in Florida. CPH instead contends that Morgan Stanley improperly based its choice-of-law argument on declarations “[i]nstead of addressing the complaint allegations.” (Id. at 36.) That is not true. Morgan Stanley’s opening Memorandum contains a point-by-point discussion of CPH’s allegations with citations to the declarations and the Merger Agreement which prove that every relevant event (including where representations were made and received) took place in New York. (Mem. at 5-9, 11.) CPH cannot secure application of Florida law by hiding behind a complaint that repeatedly and consistently omits the location of relevant events.⁸

Indeed, CPH's argument on this score is (at best) a transparent effort to hide the ball. Citing no authority, it asks this Court to believe that plaintiffs can simply plead around unfavorable law by failing to disclose their principal place of business or domicile and then omitting from their own complaint the location of every event relevant to choice of law. That is not the law. Though reported cases are few, where plaintiffs have had the temerity to raise this sort of argument, it has been rejected out of hand. As the federal district court in Maine recently explained, while the merits of a motion to dismiss "must be evaluated primarily by considering the allegations in the complaint, the act of determining what law must be applied to those allegations is not and cannot be limited to those allegations." Ingram v. Rencor Controls, Inc., 217 F. Supp. 2d 141, 146 (D. Me. 2002). The court then elaborated on this point:

The defendant, which takes the position that its motion to dismiss must be addressed under New York law, must be allowed to present evidence on these [choice-of-law] factors without turning the motion to dismiss into one for summary judgment Otherwise, an artful plaintiff could prevent a court from determining whether his action should proceed under the state law that should be applicable to his claim merely by omitting certain facts essential to the choice-of-law issue from his complaint.

⁸ For example, the only paragraph to allege that Morgan Stanley made representations to CPH — the representations relevant for the choice-of-law inquiry — discusses "face-to-face negotiations" and a "course of negotiations" that took place between January and February 1998. (Compl. ¶ 39.) This paragraph omits where these "negotiations" took place, because, as the declarations attached to the opening Memorandum show, they took place exclusively in New York. (See Stynes Decl. (Ex. A); Porat Decl. (Ex. B).) Even without these declarations, moreover, the Complaint never alleges that Morgan Stanley made any representations from Florida or that CPH received representations in Florida. Likewise, the Complaint discusses the closings of the underlying transactions — an event fundamental to choice-of-law as it shows where reliance was rendered — but omits the fact that these transactions closed in New York. (See id. ¶ 72.) Finally, CPH deletes its principal place of business from its Complaint (id. ¶ 8) despite acknowledging in prior filings and in virtually identical complaints filed in this Court that its "principal offices [are] located in New York." March 15, 2002 1st Am. Compl. ¶ 16, Coleman (Parent) Holdings v. Arthur Andersen, No. CA 01-06062 AN (Rapp, J.) ("CPH v. Andersen, Am. Compl.") (Ex. D). The notion that this Court is bound to select the governing law on the basis of such willful pleadings deficiencies is simply incorrect.

Id.; see also Mayo v. Hartford Life Ins. Co., 220 F. Supp. 2d 714, 730 n.37 (S.D. Tex. 2002) (“The facts on which choice-of-law rulings depend must be determined by the Court after considering the affidavits, depositions, and other matters submitted by the parties.”). CPH advances no reason for a different conclusion.

Regrettably, CPH’s argument is also disingenuous. As the Court is aware, shortly after CPH filed its complaint in this case, Morgan Stanley moved to set a briefing schedule that would have allowed this Court to determine the choice-of-law question first, and then allowed the parties to brief the sufficiency of the pleadings under the appropriate substantive law. CPH opposed Morgan Stanley’s briefing proposal, arguing at a June 2, 2003 hearing that “[t]o brief choice of law issues in the abstract before the issues have been defined simply doesn’t make any sense . . . and appears only to be a means by which to delay these proceedings.” (June 2, 2003 Hrg. at 7.) Yet now CPH asks this Court to do exactly what it said should not be done: decide choice of law “in the abstract” without the benefit of knowing where relevant choice-of-law events took place, or even that CPH is a foreign plaintiff based in New York.

Such gamesmanship should be rejected. It would be one thing if CPH claimed that Morgan Stanley’s declarations were false, or that it actually received representations in Florida, or rendered reliance in Florida, or that Morgan Stanley made representations to CPH from Florida. But it claims no such thing, because it knows that every relevant event took place in New York. There is no basis for CPH’s argument that this Court must blind itself to critical facts when making the choice-of-law determination.

B. CPH Ignores (And Therefore Concedes) The Eleventh Circuit’s Holding In Trumpet Vine.

CPH’s Opposition completely ignores the salient holding in Trumpet Vine Investments, N.V. v. Union Capital Partners I, Inc., 92 F.3d 1110 (11th Cir. 1996) — a case arising out of comparable financial transactions and involving nearly identical tort theories of fraud, conspiracy, and misrepresentation. Applying the same Florida choice-of-law rules that apply in this case, the Trumpet Vine court held that New York law applies when: (1) the misrepresentations complained of are made in New York; (2) the misrepresentations are received in New York; and (3) the plaintiff acted in reliance on the misrepresentations in New York. See id. at 1118. Those same considerations apply with even greater force where, as here, CPH and its parent company are headquartered in New York. (Mem. at 13-14 & Trumpet Vine Chart (Ex. F).)

Indeed, Trumpet Vine squarely rejects all of the arguments posited by CPH. The Trumpet Vine court held that the plaintiff's fraud-based claims must be governed by New York law, regardless of whether: (i) some due diligence took place in Florida, (ii) some acts in reliance occurred in Florida, (iii) some misrepresentations were made in Florida, (iv) a Florida company was the subject of the transaction, or (v) the plaintiff had its principal base of business and suffered injury in Florida. See Trumpet Vine, 92 F.3d at 1118. There is simply no meaningful distinction between that holding and this case — which explains why CPH never cites, much less tries to distinguish, Trumpet Vine.

In fact, CPH presents choice-of-law arguments that are significantly weaker than those advanced by the plaintiff (and rejected by the Eleventh Circuit) in Trumpet Vine. The plaintiff in Trumpet Vine sought the application of Florida law chiefly on the ground that it was based in Florida and suffered injury in Florida — arguments that are unavailable to CPH in this case. See Jan. 17, 1996 Reply Br. of Appellant at 12, Trumpet Vine Invs. v. Union Capital Partners, Inc., No. 95-4520 (11th Cir.) (Ex. H). The Trumpet Vine plaintiff further argued that the parties' relationship was "clearly centered in Florida" because "the contract was formed in Florida," it received representations at meetings held in Florida, and “[its] acts of detrimental reliance occurred in great part if not exclusively in Florida.” See id. at 23. These arguments are also unavailable to CPH. The Trumpet Vine plaintiff finally argued that “the subject of the entire transaction was obviously Del Monte which was headquartered in Florida and where the three-day due diligence meeting and exchange of Proprietary Information took place.” Id. Even this argument is unavailable to CPH. Although Sunbeam is located in Florida, the “subject of the entire transaction” was common stock of a Delaware corporation traded on New York stock exchanges — and there is no allegation that CPH received any fraudulent information from anyone in Florida.

In short, there is no credible argument that would compel the application of Florida law in this case. Apart from the straightforward application of the Restatement discussed above, Trumpet Vine stands on all fours with CPH’s complaint, and has never been criticized by a Florida court. Accordingly, the application of New York law has the added virtue of ensuring the uniform application of choice-of-law principles in this state — itself a paramount objective of the Restatement. See, e.g., Brown v. National Car Rental Sys., Inc., 707 So. 2d 394, 396 (Fla. 3d DCA 1998) (noting that the Restatement cites “certainty, predictability and uniformity of result . . . as major factors in determining the proper choice of law”) (internal quotations omitted).

II. THIS CASE SHOULD BE DISMISSED PURSUANT TO RULE 1.061.

The application of New York law alone warrants dismissal of the case pursuant to Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.061. See Kinney Sys., Inc. v. Continental Ins. Co., 674 So. 2d 86, 92 (Fla. 1996) (dismissal warranted where “foreign law will predominate if jurisdiction is retained”) (internal quotations & citation omitted); Trujillo v. Banco Central del Ecuador, 35 F. Supp. 2d 908, 911 (S.D. Fla. 1998) (“choice of law matters” support forum non conveniens dismissal); see also Fla. Rule Civ. P. 1.061 (commentary) (“[A] trial court has discretion to grant a forum-nonconveniens dismissal upon finding that . . . foreign law will predominate if jurisdiction is retained.”). Although the Court could obviously elect to retain jurisdiction over the case and apply New York law, there is no compelling reason why a Florida court should undertake this additional burden, especially since the courts of New York provide an adequate alternative forum, are familiar with the substantive law that must be applied, and have a fundamental interest in applying New York law to this case. See Linea Naviera de Cabotaje, C.A. v. Mar Caribe, de Navegacion, C.A., 169 F. Supp. 2d 1341, 1350 (M.D. Fla. 2001) (forum non conveniens recognizes “the appropriateness of litigation at home with . . . the law that must govern the case”) (internal quotations & citation omitted; alteration in original).

This reasoning is especially powerful where, as here, the parties and a substantial majority of witnesses are located in New York, the claims arise from events and injuries that occurred in New York, and — as demonstrated below — CPH has advanced no credible reason why this case should be heard in Florida.

A. CPH Errs In Arguing That Its Forum Choice Is Presumptively Correct.

In framing its Rule 1.061 argument, CPH asserts that Morgan Stanley must “overcom[e] the presumption against disturbing CPH’s choice of Florida as the forum for this lawsuit.” (Opp. at 20.) CPH fundamentally misstates the law. As the Fourth District has consistently recognized, a foreign plaintiff (like CPH) enjoys no presumption under Rule 1.061. See Ciba-Geigy Ltd. v. Fish Peddler, Inc., 691 So. 2d 1111, 1118 (Fla. 4th DCA 1997) (reversing denial of motion to dismiss under Rule 1.061(a) because “no special weight should have been given to a foreign plaintiff’s choice of forum”); Woods v. Nova Cos. Belize Ltd., 739 So. 2d 617, 621 n.3 (Fla. 4th DCA 1999) (foreign plaintiffs “are not entitled” to any presumption against disturbing plaintiff’s initial forum choice). CPH is surely aware of this binding authority since Morgan Stanley explained in its opening Memorandum that, where a corporate defendant is headquartered and based outside of Florida, its “choice of a Florida forum is entitled no weight in the Rule 1.061(a) inquiry.” (Mem. at 16 (citing Ciba-Geigy)). CPH’s failure to respond to this basic point — and its omission of its own principal place of business from its own pleadings — speaks to the weakness of its position under Rule 1.061.⁹

CPH compounds this error with a fundamental misunderstanding of the Rule 1.061 inquiry. The Opposition is larded with so-called “significant and numerous Florida contacts” and assertions that “Morgan Stanley most certainly could expect to be haled into Florida to answer for its conduct.” (Opp. at 27, 29.) But “contacts” with a forum state and expectations of being “haled into Florida” are relevant to whether personal jurisdiction is proper in Florida — a question not at issue here. Rule 1.061, by contrast, presumes that “personal jurisdiction and venue are otherwise proper,” and requires dismissal “where there is a more convenient forum for the case to be litigated.” Esfeld v. Costa Crociere, S.P.A., 289 F.3d 1300, 1302 n.4 (11th Cir. 2002); see also Camp Illahee Invs. Inc. v. Blackman, No. 2D202-4324, 2003 WL 22715216, at *2 (Fla. 2d DCA Nov. 19, 2003) (personal jurisdiction and venue must be satisfied before a court can entertain a Rule 1.061 challenge).

For this reason, Rule 1.061 demands a careful analysis of the conveniences and relevant connections between the two competing forums — not a mere counting of contacts (relevant and irrelevant) with the forum in which the plaintiff filed suit. As the Rule itself explains: “An action may be dismissed on the ground that a satisfactory remedy may be more conveniently sought in a jurisdiction other than Florida.” Fla. R. Civ. P. 1.061; see also Kinney Sys., 674 So. 2d at 93 (noting that “a corporation’s various connections with Florida — if any — will only be factors to be weighed in the balance of conveniences”). Accordingly, CPH’s rigid focus on “contacts” with Florida (most of which have nothing to do with its claims) is irrelevant to whether this case warrants dismissal under Rule 1.061.¹⁰

B. Private Interests Favor A New York Forum For This Case.

Shorn of its erroneous legal foundation, CPH’s position on Rule 1.061 collapses under the weight of its own claims. For the record is uncontradicted that (1) every factual predicate to those claims occurred in New York and (2) the vast majority of party and non-party witnesses lives in New York.

1. All Relevant Events Took Place In New York.

CPH tries mightily to claim that events relevant to this case took place in Florida because Sunbeam is located here and Al Dunlap lives here. (Opp. at 1, 21.) But this is not a case against Sunbeam or Al Dunlap. It is a case against Morgan Stanley, a New York-based financial advisor whose only work for Sunbeam was performed primarily by New York-based personnel, and conducted primarily out of New York offices.¹¹ More significantly, the only activities relevant to CPH’s actual claims — and thus the only activities relevant to Rule 1.061 — took place exclusively in New York. CPH alleges (1) that Morgan Stanley made misrepresentations directly to CPH during face-to-face negotiations (Compl. ¶ 39); (2) that Morgan Stanley made (or allowed Sunbeam to make) misrepresentations in the March 19, 1998 press release and at a Boston road show presentation soon after the press release was issued (id. ¶¶ 59-68); and (3) that Morgan Stanley “allowed” Sunbeam’s acquisition and financing transactions to close (id. ¶¶ 72-73). CPH pleads these allegations ambiguously to avoid revealing where the purported misconduct occurred; but artful pleading cannot change the unassailable fact that the purported misconduct occurred in New York.

Indeed, juxtaposing the ambiguous allegations in the Complaint with the unambiguous Rule 1.061 record now before this Court, leaves no doubt that this case belongs in New York, not Florida. This point is best summarized in a chart, as follows:

	¶	Allegation	Location
Negotiations With CPH	¶ 39	“During the course of negotiations, Morgan Stanley prepared and provided CPH with false financial and business information about Sunbeam designed to create the appearances that Sunbeam was prospering and that Sunbeam’s stock had great value.”	New York
	¶ 39	“Together, in face-to-face discussions, Morgan Stanley and Sunbeam assured CPH that (a) Sunbeam would meet or exceed its first quarter 1998 earnings estimates; (b) analysts’ 1998 earnings estimates for Sunbeam were correct; and (c) Sunbeam’s plan to earn $2.20 per share in 1998 was easily achievable and probably low.”	New York
	¶ 39	“Morgan Stanley and Sunbeam together specifically advised CPH that Sunbeam’s first quarter 1998 sales were ‘tracking fine’ and running ahead of analysts’ estimates.”	New York
Press Release	¶ 59	“Instead, with Morgan Stanley’s knowledge and assistance, Sunbeam prepared and issued a false press release on March 19, 1998 that affirmatively misstated and concealed Sunbeam’s true condition.”	Drafted in New York Reviewed by Morgan Stanley in New York
	¶ 68	“One of Sunbeam’s senior outside auditors, Lawrence Bornstein, has testified under oath that on March 19, 1998, he told Morgan Stanley’s John Tyree that the statement in Sunbeam’s March 19, 1998 press release – that Sunbeam would at least exceed first quarter 1997 sales of $253.4 million – was not credible”	Global Financial Press (New York)

Road Show	¶ 63	"After Sunbeam's false press release was issued, Morgan Stanley stood arm-in-arm with Sunbeam while Dunlap and Kersh told CPH, analysts, and investors that the March 19, 1998 release was a purely cautionary statement because some first quarter 1998 sales might simply 'spillover' into the second quarter and that Sunbeam still believed that it actually would meet analysts' estimates of $285 million to $295 million in the first quarter 1998 sales."	Boston, MA
Allows Transaction To Close	¶ 72	"Morgan Stanley had a duty to disclose the true facts before the closing of the debenture offering and the Coleman acquisition Instead, Morgan Stanley marched forward and closed the $750 million debenture offering on March 25, 1998, which was needed to close the Coleman transaction, and assisted Sunbeam in closing the acquisition of Coleman on March 30, 1998."	Debenture offering closes in New York Coleman acquisition closes in New York

Since CPH filed its Complaint, it has repeatedly and consistently admitted (as it must) that the events relevant to its claims took place in New York. For example:

- "On December 12, 1997, Coleman representatives and Sunbeam representatives met in New York to discuss the Transaction."
- "On January 23, 1998, Morgan Stanley representatives met with a Mafco representative in New York to discuss the Transaction."
- On January 29, 1998, Sunbeam and Morgan Stanley representatives met with Coleman, Mafco, and Credit Suisse First Boston representatives in New York to discuss the Transaction."
- "On February 6, 1998, Morgan Stanley, Mafco, and Credit Suisse First Boston met in New York to negotiate the Transaction."
- "On February 25, 1998, Sunbeam, Coleman, Wachtell, and Skadden representatives met to discuss the Transaction in New York."
- "On February 25, 1998, Coleman's Board of Directors met in New York with Mafco, Wachtell, and CSFB representatives to discuss the transaction."
- On February 27, 1998, Coleman's Board of Directors met in New York to discuss the Transaction"

(Oct. 13, 2003 CPH Resps. to Morgan Stanley's 2d Set of Interrogs. at Resp. 1 (Ex. J).) These admissions refer to the "who," "what," "when," and "where" of this case — the crux of the Rule 1.061 inquiry.

At bottom, every event relevant to proving CPH's claims took place exclusively in New York — and the record is uncontradicted on this score. A case between New York parties arising out of New York events with a voluminous documentary record located almost exclusively in New York — at the New York offices of CPH, MacAndrews & Forbes, and Morgan Stanley; the New York law firms Davis Polk & Wardwell, Skadden Arps, and Wachtell Lipton; the New York investment bank Credit Suisse First Boston; the New York accounting firms Ernst & Young and Coopers & Lybrand; and the New York public relations firms Hill & Knowlton and Sard Verbinnen — belongs in New York.¹²

2. Most Non-Party Witnesses Are New York Residents.

CPH purports to list sixteen “important non-party witnesses” and contends that these witnesses may be unavailable if the litigation proceeds in New York. (Opp. at 23.) This is a red herring. To begin with, of these so-called “important non-party witnesses,” two have been deposed thus far, and both admitted that they have nothing relevant to say about any pending claim.¹³ And even if these witnesses did have something relevant to say, it is simply not true that most “important non-party witnesses” reside in Florida — for the vast majority of such witnesses reside in New York.

As noted, the primary allegations in CPH’s complaint are that Morgan Stanley misled CPH in “face-to-face discussions” in New York (Compl. ¶ 39); assisted in preparing the March 19, 1998 press release from New York (id. ¶ 59); stood “arm-in-arm” with Sunbeam at a road show in Boston (id. ¶ 63); and proceeded with the closings in New York (id. ¶¶ 72-73). Obviously, the witnesses needed to prove these allegations are those witnesses who were actually present when the negotiations and discussions took place, the press release was prepared, the road show was conducted, and the closing occurred — substantially all of whom reside in New York. As CPH’s own discovery responses make clear, the New York-based advisors, experts, attorneys and accountants, who were involved in these events make up the vast majority of “important” non-party witnesses should this case ever reach the trial stage:

Institution	# of Potential Witnesses	Location
Davis Polk & Wardwell	15	New York
Skadden Arps	19	New York
Wachtell Lipton	9	New York
Credit Suisse First Boston	3	New York

(Sept. 2, 2003 CPH’s Resp. to Morgan Stanley & Co.’s 1st Set of Interrogs. (Ex. N).) CPH’s argument to the contrary is not credible, because for every Florida witness it purports to list, at least two or three New York witnesses are equally, if not more, important to relevant testimony.

The arguments relating to Lawrence Bornstein illustrate the point well. CPH contends that Mr. Bornstein is a “key witness” because he is alleged to have “warned” Morgan Stanley about Sunbeam’s earnings shortfalls immediately prior to the March 19 press release (Opp. at 23), an allegation at the heart of the Complaint. (Opp. at 23.) But even this allegation has scant connection to Florida: the alleged “warning” was made in New York, at the offices of Global Financial Press; almost all witnesses present at the time — including attorneys from Davis Polk and Skadden Arps, and John Tyree of Morgan Stanley — were New York residents with no connection to Florida; and at least some of these critical witnesses are under the control of no party and would not be subject to the compulsory process of a Florida court. Based on CPH's own logic, the residences of these "key witnesses" render New York, not Florida, the appropriate forum for this case. For the truth or accuracy of CPH's central allegation turns on events that occurred in New York and the testimony of mostly New York witnesses.

In any event, CPH makes no showing that Bornstein, or any other "important non-party witnesses" would be unwilling to come to New York to testify, or that the cost of their doing so would be burdensome. Indeed, Bornstein himself was represented by New York counsel, as are two other "key witnesses" (Dunlap and Kersh), and all three have been deposed in New York in the course of prior Sunbeam-related litigation.¹⁴ The notion that it is inconvenient for these well-traveled parties to take a trip to New York, or that their mere maintenance of a Florida residence makes it more convenient to litigate this New York-based case in Florida, is not credible and contrary to the principles of Rule 1.061.¹⁵

¹⁴ See Jan. 10, 2001 Bornstein Dep. at 2, In re Sunbeam Secs. Litig., 98-8258 (S.D. Fla.); Apr. 23, 2001 Kersh Dep. at 1, In re Sunbeam Secs. Litig., 98-8258 (S.D. Fla.); July 12, 2000 Dunlap Dep. at 1, Dunlap v. Sunbeam, RE 32160008899 (AAA) (Ex. O).

¹⁵ CPH notably fails to cite any Rule 1.061 authority to support this Court's retention of jurisdiction over this case. Indeed, the only cases CPH cites as authority for its private interest analysis discuss personal jurisdiction — not Rule 1.061 — and have no relevance to this motion. (See Opp. at 29 (citing Execu-Tech Bus. Sys., Inc. v. New Oji Paper Co., 752 So. 2d 582, 585 (Fla. 2000); Acquardo v. Bergeron, 851 So. 2d 665, 670 (Fla. 2003)).) CPH commits the same error when it argues that Florida courts have a "virtually 'unflagging obligation' to exercise jurisdiction over lawsuits filed here." (Opp. at 30 (citing 12A Fla. Jur. 2d Courts and Judges § 71 (1998)).) As the attributed source explains in the very next paragraph, courts may "decline to exercise jurisdiction" where (as here) "the cause of action is not sufficiently related to the court's forum." 12A Fla. Jur. 2d § 71. In fact, this secondary source and the cases cited therein strongly support dismissal, not retention, of jurisdiction in this case. It says: "The doctrine of forum non conveniens is a common-law doctrine addressing the problem that arises when a local court technically has jurisdiction over a suit but the cause of action can be fairly and more conveniently litigated elsewhere. It serves as a brake on the tendency of some plaintiffs to shop for the 'best' jurisdiction in which to bring suit." Id. (citations omitted). That is wise counsel here, since CPH's forum shopping is readily apparent.

C. Public Interests Favor A New York Forum For This Case.

CPH musters only a few sentences to argue that Florida has an interest in this case, focusing exclusively on “[t]he fact that many Sunbeam cases have been adjudicated in this State.” (Opp. at 30.) As noted, however, this fact is irrelevant to Florida’s interest in this case, which (unlike previously-filed actions) involves no Florida parties and no Florida events. See supra at 18-21. CPH’s half-hearted argument simply underscores that public interests favor the forum where local law applies, where both parties are based, and where relevant events took place — a New York-only denominator. And while CPH purports to cite a case in support of its few sentences on public interest, that case involved a single defendant in a single tribunal in a single case, and clearly has no bearing here. (Opp. at 30 (citing Pafco Gen. Ins. Co. v. Wah-Wai Furniture Co., 701 So. 2d 902, 904 (Fla. 3d DCA 1997) (eleven indemnity claims brought against single manufacturer of defective chairs sold in many states including Florida).) Morgan Stanley has never been sued in this court for Sunbeam-related claims, and there is no possibility of duplicative litigation since the relevant statute of limitations is now expired.

Finally, CPH scoffs at the notion that Florida courts should conserve their limited resources for cases that involve Florida parties and / or Florida-based claims. (Opp. at 31.) But this very interest is built into Rule 1.061, see Rule 1.061 (commentary) (“‘Public interests’ [include] the ability of courts to protect their dockets from causes that lack significant connection to the jurisdiction”), and no less than the Supreme Courts of both the United States and Florida have explained that conservation of judicial resources is fundamental to the forum non conveniens doctrine. See Kinney, 674 So. 2d at 90 (“Florida’s judicial interests are at their zenith, and the expenditure of tax-funded judicial resources most clearly justified, when the issues involve matters with a strong nexus to Florida’s interests. But that interest and justification wane to the degree such a nexus is lacking.”) (citing Gulf Oil Corp. v. Gilbert, 330

U.S. 501, 508 (1946)); see also id. at 92 (“[C]ourts may validly protect their dockets from cases which arise within their jurisdiction, but which lack significant connection to it”) (internal quotations & citation omitted). CPH characteristically fails to acknowledge these binding authorities, and its response that courts cannot “decline jurisdiction on the ground of overwork” (Opp. at 31) is rhetorical and meaningless.

For all of these reasons, even if private interests could be said to be in equipoise where a case involves New York law, New York parties, and New York events, the public interest tips such equipoise overwhelmingly in favor of resolving the case in New York. See, e.g., Kinney, 674 So. 2d at 92 (“[E]ven when the private conveniences of the litigants are nearly in balance, a trial court has discretion to grant forum non conveniens dismissal upon finding that retention of jurisdiction would be unduly burdensome to the community, that there is little or no public interest in the dispute, or that foreign law will predominate if jurisdiction is retained.”) (internal quotations & citation omitted). The proper disposition, therefore, is to dismiss this action pursuant to Rule 1.061 and allow the litigation to proceed in New York, where it belongs.

D. CPH’s Parent Company (A Key Non-Party Witness) Has Successfully Argued For Transfer Of Litigation To New York.

CPH’s dogged insistence that this case must be litigated in Florida is ironic in light of the sworn arguments advanced by its own General Counsel that claims of fraud and misrepresentation arising from New York-based financial transactions should be litigated in New York. See Keller v. Perelman, Nos. CV-97-TMP-1895-S and CV-97-N-2104-S (N.D. Ala.). In Keller, MacAandrews & Forbes (the 100% owner of CPH) was sued on a series of fraud-based claims arising from various transactions involving the defendant and several of its “shell-company” subsidiaries. As here, all of these transactions were negotiated and closed in New York. And as here, the plaintiffs alleged that the defendant issued a materially misleading press release regarding the financial health of a company. Unlike this case, however, the plaintiffs chose to sue in their home forum (Alabama) where their alleged injuries were suffered.

Almost immediately, MacAndrews & Forbes and its subsidiaries filed a motion to transfer the case to New York. That filing is remarkable, because it is totally inconsistent with CPH's position in this case — as well as with the pleadings CPH has filed with this Court. Barry F. Schwartz, then the general counsel of both MacAndrews & Forbes and CPH — and an important fact witness in this case — submitted a sworn declaration attesting to the following facts, all of which MacAndrews & Forbes argued required transfer of the case to New York:

- “MAFCO is a Delaware corporation and maintains its principal place of business at 35 East 62nd Street, New York, New York 10021.” Schwartz Decl. ¶ 2 (Ex. G).
- “All of the defendants’ documents relating to the allegations in the Complaint are maintained at either MAFCO’s or MacAndrews’ headquarters in New York.” Id. ¶ 5.
- “All of the defendants’ employees, officers or directors with knowledge relevant to the Complaint are currently employed at MAFCO’s and MacAndrews’ offices located in New York.” Id. ¶ 7.
- “All of the employees of the Corporate Defendants . . . all of the investment bankers and all of the advisers who participated in formulating the so-called plan referred to in Plaintiff’s complaint maintain their headquarters or are located in New York.” Id. ¶ 8.
- “The underwriters . . . involved in the issuance of the bonds which are the subject of the complaint are also located in New York . . .” Id. ¶ 9.

This, of course, is precisely the information that this Court needs to determine whether dismissal is warranted here — and it is precisely the information that CPH omits from its pleadings. These considerations apply with even greater force in this case, because all of the parties have their headquarters and principal place of business in New York. Accordingly, for substantially the reasons sworn to by CPH’s general counsel (but never acknowledged by CPH here) this case belongs in New York and should be dismissed pursuant to Rule 1.061.

III. PLAINTIFF'S FRAUD CLAIM (COUNT I) MUST BE DISMISSED

Quite apart from Rule 1.061 grounds, the fraud count is fatally defective and must be dismissed as a matter of law. (Mem. at 17-27.) CPH contends that fraud claims are "especially ill-suited for resolution on the pleadings." (Opp. at 40.) But that argument is badly misplaced in this case. Indeed, CPH wholly ignores the many cases cited in Morgan Stanley's opening Memorandum that confirm the necessity of dismissing fraud counts in circumstances identical in all relevant respects to this case. (Mem. at 17-27 & 20-21 n.14.) For this is not a typical fraud case. Rather, it is a case in which a sophisticated plaintiff, worth billions of dollars, who specializes in mergers and acquisitions and is represented at all times by its own legal counsel and financial advisors, alleges that it closed a $2 billion acquisition based on a press release issued by a non-party and relied on representations made by the non-party's financial advisor, which itself lost hundreds of millions of dollars in the same deal. (See Compl. ¶¶ 39,59-66,82.) Such a novel claim cannot survive merely because it sounds in fraud.

To the contrary, settled law demands (at the very least) that "the asserted reliance must be found to be justifiable under all the circumstances before a complaint can be found to state a cause of action in fraud." Belin v. Weissler, No. 97 Civ. 8787 (RWS), 1998 WL 391114, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. July 14, 1998) (quoting Danann Realty Corp. v. Harris, 157 N.E.2d 597, 599-600 (N.Y. 1959) and granting a motion to dismiss); see First Union Brokerage v. Milos, 717 F. Supp. 1519, 1525 (S.D. Fla. 1989) ("The reasonableness of reliance is distinct from the reliance itself."), aff'd, 997 F.2d 835 (11th Cir. 1993); Restatement (Second) of Torts § 545A cmt. b (1977) (justifiable reliance must be evaluated in light of the "characteristics of the particular plaintiff, and the circumstances of the particular case"). And on the pleadings before this Court, not only is CPH's asserted reliance manifestly unjustifiable as a matter of law, every other element of its fraud claim is riddled with legal deficiencies — none meaningfully addressed in CPH’s Opposition.

A. The Complaint Fails To State A Fraud Claim Against Morgan Stanley.

1. Plaintiff Fails To Allege That Morgan Stanley Knew The Representations Were False When They Were Made And Received.

Only one paragraph in the Complaint alleges that Morgan Stanley (as opposed to Arthur Andersen or Sunbeam) made representations to CPH. (See Compl. ¶ 39.) Yet the Complaint nowhere alleges that Morgan Stanley knew or had reason to know that the representations contained in this paragraph were false or misleading when made. In fact, the Complaint itself forecloses such an allegation since it elsewhere alleges that Morgan Stanley first learned of Sunbeam’s financial shortfalls in March 1998 (id. ¶¶ 53-58), more than a month after these representations were supposedly made and received.

CPH’s Opposition does not address (and therefore concedes) this pleading defect, which alone is fatal to plaintiff’s fraud claim. Dismissal of the fraud count is appropriate — and indeed required — on this ground alone. (Mem. at 25-27.)

2. Plaintiff Does Not Allege That It Relied On The March 19, 1998 Press Release.

The Complaint alleges that the March 19, 1998 press release — which “Sunbeam prepared and issued” (Compl. ¶ 59) — supports a fraud claim against Morgan Stanley. But the Complaint makes no particularized allegation that CPH relied on this press release — which communicated “bad news” about Sunbeam’s sales to the financial markets — when it agreed to purchase Sunbeam. (Mar. 19, 1998 Press Release at 2 (Ex. 6).) Nor could there be such an allegation, since the press release contains only forward-looking statements and explicitly warned readers not to rely on such projections. (Mem. at 18-19.) CPH’s responses on this point are inadequate to sustain a fraud claim. It argues, for example, that the press release failed to disclose material information and that “cautionary statements” cannot foreclose a fraud claim. (Opp. at 47-48.) But those arguments beg two crucial questions:

First, how could CPH, one of the most sophisticated players in the world of mergers and acquisitions, justifiably rely on a press release that contained numerous warnings and cautionary statements about projected earnings whose express purpose was to warn the financial markets about lower sales at Sunbeam? CPH never addresses these elementary points, either of which warrant dismissal of the fraud count.

Second, how as a matter of law could the March 19, 1998 press release give rise to a fraud claim against Morgan Stanley — as opposed to Sunbeam, who issued the press release, or Arthur Andersen, whose publicly audited records were in part the basis of the press release? On that score, CPH would have this Court believe that Arthur Andersen was a “white knight” in this episode, valiantly striving to warn all who would listen that Sunbeam was poised for imminent implosion. But that is flatly inconsistent with CPH’s own earlier lawsuit against Arthur Andersen, in which Andersen allegedly engaged in “flagrant accounting abuses” and “remained mute regarding the true financial condition of Sunbeam” through at least mid-1998. CPH v. Andersen, Am. Compl. ¶¶ 69, 76 (Ex. D).

Indeed, CPH’s conclusory allegations in this case are expressly contradicted by the detailed and specific allegations against Arthur Andersen. With respect to reliance, for example, CPH alleged in its prior lawsuit that it “directly relied on Andersen’s 1996 and 1997 audit reports when it decided to close the transaction with Sunbeam.” Id. ¶ 93. Having recovered what it could from Arthur Andersen, CPH now adjusts its story and fixes its sights on Morgan Stanley, pretending that a lone press release issued by someone else was what really persuaded CPH to execute the $2 billion Sunbeam transaction. These radically inconsistent allegations do not reveal a fraud claim against Morgan Stanley — if anything, they reveal a deliberate hunt for deeper pockets and solvent defendants through artful and strategic pleading.

CPH points to now-completed SEC investigations to lend its Complaint an aura of credibility. (See Compl. ¶¶ 11-12; id. ¶ 20 (stating that “SEC officials subsequently described [Sunbeam] as a ‘case study’ in financial fraud”).) These investigations, of course, are not pertinent to any issue in this case. But CPH cannot have it both ways. If the SEC investigations are somehow relevant to the Complaint, then the actual findings of the SEC must also be relevant — and those findings render CPH’s allegations demonstrably baseless. Indeed, despite having conducted one of the largest and most extensive financial investigations up to that point in time, the many pleadings and findings issued by the SEC contain not even a hint of wrongdoing by Morgan Stanley. To the contrary, the SEC found that: “Uzzi recklessly disregarded facts indicating that the information he provided to [Morgan Stanley] was materially false and misleading.” Jan. 27, 2003 2d Am. Compl. ¶ 126, SEC v. Uzzi, No. 01-8437-Civ. (S.D. Fla.).

B. CPH Cannot Escape Its Own Integration Clause.

In any event, the Merger Agreement’s integration clause expressly disclaims reliance on the very representations that form the basis of CPH’s fraud claims. (Mem. at 18-20.) CPH advances three grounds for ignoring the integration clause — all without merit.

First, CPH claims Morgan Stanley “cannot invoke” the integration clause because Morgan Stanley “is not a party to the agreement.” (Opp. at 41-42.) It then cites authority for the principle that “[a] person who is not a party to a contract may not sue for breach.” (Id. at 41.) This argument is both misplaced and backwards: Morgan Stanley is not seeking to “invoke” the integration clause or “sue for breach” — it is merely pointing out that CPH expressly contracted to rely on certain representations (including the same audited financial statements relied upon by Morgan Stanley) when it agreed to purchase Sunbeam. The idea that CPH disclaimed reliance on pre-contractual representations made by Sunbeam but not by Sunbeam's financial advisor — a party twice removed from CPH — is fallacious. If the idea were accepted, moreover, it would render integration clauses virtually meaningless since the disclaiming party could simply reach behind its contractual partner to sue a deeper-pocketed advisor. In any event, CPH cannot believe its own argument, because it specifically invoked the Merger Agreement in its lawsuit against Arthur Andersen, see CPH v. Andersen, Am. Compl. ¶ 68 (Ex. D), even though Arthur Andersen was the auditor to Sunbeam and thus (like Morgan Stanley) was not a party to the Merger Agreement.

Second, CPH claims that an integration clause cannot preclude a claim for fraud or fraudulent inducement of an agreement. (See Opp. at 42-43.) But that is not true where (as here) an agreement expressly includes detailed representations and warranties and the plaintiff later proclaims reliance on altogether different representations that could have been (but were not) included in the agreement. See, e.g., Consolidated Edison, Inc. v. Northeast Utilities, 249 F. Supp. 2d 387, 402 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (reasonable reliance precluded where sophisticated party “could have made [alleged representations] a basis for a specific representation and warranty in the Merger Agreement but failed to do so”); Dyncorp v. GTE Corp., 215 F. Supp. 2d 308, 322-23 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (dismissing fraud claim based on extra-contractual representations where plaintiff negotiated a merger agreement with express representations, warranties, and an integration clause); Hillcrest Pac. Corp. v. Yamamura, 727 So. 2d 1053, 1056 (Fla. 4th DCA 1999) (“A party cannot recover in fraud for alleged oral misrepresentations that are adequately covered or expressly contradicted in a later written contract.”). Tellingly, CPH neither mentions the Merger Agreement's detailed representations and warranties, nor discusses any of the cases cited by Morgan Stanley on this dispositive point. (Mem. at 18-20.)

Third, CPH claims that “Morgan Stanley cannot escape responsibility for its fraud” because “the Merger Agreement is dated February 27, 1998” and thus cannot apply to representations made after that date. (Opp. at 43.) But this argument confirms that CPH’s fraud claims hinge on the March 19, 1998 press release — not the representations contained in Paragraph 39 of the Complaint, which are the only representations attributed to Morgan Stanley. See supra at 28-29. It also acknowledges that the bulk of CPH’s allegations — i.e., those discussing pre-February 27, 1998, events — are not relevant to the claims against Morgan Stanley. Finally, to the extent the integration clause could be read not to cover the March 19, 1998 press release, the Complaint still does not allege, and cannot allege, that CPH justifiably relied on the press release.¹⁶

In short, CPH cannot escape the terms of the integration clause, which supply an independent ground for dismissing the fraud count as a matter of law.

C. CPH Cannot Excuse Its Failure To Inspect Books And Records

CPH specifically contracted for the right to inspect the books and records of Sunbeam and thus had access to the same information available to Morgan Stanley. (Mem. at 21-23 (discussing Merger Agmt .§§ 1.1, 4.11, 6.7 (Ex. 1)).) In light of this contractual right, CPH cannot state a claim for fraud without any allegation that it sought to verify the representations upon which it now claims to have justifiably relied. See, e.g., UST Private Equity Investors Fund, Inc. v. Salomon Smith Barney, 288 A.D.2d 87, 88 (N.Y. App. Div. 2001) (“As a matter of law, a sophisticated plaintiff cannot establish that it entered into an arm’s length transaction in justifiable reliance on an alleged misrepresentation if the plaintiff failed to make use of the means of verification that were available to it, such as reviewing the files of the other parties.”).

CPH’s counterarguments make no sense. First, CPH contends that the New York rule does not apply because “Florida procedural law still applies to the question of what CPH need and need not plead in its complaint.” (Opp. at 44.) But the requirements for stating a claim for fraud in New York are part of the substantive law of New York. New York courts recognize (and rightly so) that sophisticated parties should generally protect themselves ex ante before entering into binding agreements. Accordingly, if CPH wishes to allege that it relied on a press release to execute a $2 billion acquisition, it must also allege that it “made an independent inquiry” into the accuracy of that information before rendering such reliance. Giannacopoulos v. Credit Suisse, 37 F. Supp. 2d 626, 632 (S.D.N.Y. 1999). This is a reasonable rule; it is required under the governing substantive law of New York; and it cannot be circumvented by selectively filing suit outside of New York.¹⁷

Second, CPH repeats its argument that “reliance is a question for the trier of fact that generally is considered unsuited for disposition on a threshold motion such as this.” (Opp. at 45.) As explained above, that argument does not work here, because courts routinely dismiss claims identical to this one, without discovery. (See supra 29-31; Mem. at 20-21 n.14.)

Third, CPH cites a Florida decision purporting to hold that “whether a public record disclosed the truth could not be resolved through a motion to dismiss.” (Opp. at 45.) This is of course irrelevant in light of (and inconsistent with) CPH’s earlier argument that Florida courts do not recognize its duty to inspect the books and records of its counterparty. The cited case, moreover, obviously has nothing to do with the obligation to exercise contractual rights to inspect books and records before asserting justified reliance on extra-contractual representations. In fact, the Florida Supreme Court took pains to note that, where “an examination of [certain] documents prior to the transfer of . . . property is entirely expected,” an action for fraud will not lie when the purchaser has failed to conduct such an examination. See M/I Schottenstein Homes, Inc. v. Azam, 813 So. 2d 91, 95 (Fla. 2002). Surely it is “entirely expected” that a sophisticated party such as CPH would investigate the books and records of its counterparty in a $2 billion merger; and yet, CPH has failed to allege that it made any such investigation.

Fourth, CPH contends that its inquiry duty was not triggered because “the truth was peculiarly within the knowledge of Morgan Stanley and the other defrauders.” (Opp. at 45.) This argument is irrelevant since the Complaint never alleges that information was “peculiarly within the knowledge of Morgan Stanley.” Moreover, the argument merely highlights that the Complaint fails to allege Morgan Stanley knew Sunbeam’s financial statements and/or Andersen’s audit reports were false or misleading. These were of course the same financial statements and audit reports that were fully available to CPH, and upon which CPH “directly relied” when closing the Sunbeam acquisition. See CPH v. Andersen, Am. Compl. ¶ 93 (Ex. D). Accordingly, because both parties had the same access to Sunbeam’s financial information, there is no basis for CPH to argue that certain information was peculiarly within Morgan Stanley's knowledge — an allegation that, in any event, is not in the Complaint.

D. The Scierter Allegations Fail As A Matter Of Law.

CPH responds to the fatal defects in its scierter allegations by making up facts that appear nowhere in the Complaint and are simply not true. (Opp. at 48-50.) To begin with, it draws an inflammatory analogy to the Enron scandal, replete with citations to front-page articles from the New York Times entitled “A Warning Shot to Banks on Role in Others’ Fraud,” and “2 Banks Settle Accusations They Aided in Enron Fraud.” (Id. at 50.) The Enron scandal has nothing to do with Morgan Stanley, however, and if such grossly prejudicial arguments are what CPH hopes to present to a jury, then there is every reason for this case never to get that far. Indeed, the distinction between Enron and the allegations here is apparent in CPH's own Opposition, which says, “the SEC and the U.S. Attorney in Manhattan both accused banks of assisting Enron in misrepresenting its true financial condition for years — and the banks ended up paying $300 million in fines and penalties to resolve the matter.” (Id.) The Sunbeam matter has similarly been investigated to the hilt by state and federal officials but, as noted above, has never resulted in any allegations against Morgan Stanley. Nor have any of the Sunbeam-related lawsuits cited in CPH's own pleadings (involving thousands of plaintiffs and every manner of claim) ever so much as alleged that Morgan Stanley played a role in the Sunbeam fraud. CPH's argument on this score, in short, borders on the defamatory and speaks volumes about the lack of merit in any underlying claim.

CPH lacks a credible argument for resurrecting its factually deficient scierter allegations. The pleadings reveal that Morgan Stanley lost hundreds of millions of dollars in the same transaction upon which CPH now bases its claims against Morgan Stanley. This fact destroys CPH's theory of scierter, where the only relevant allegation is that Morgan Stanley hoped to collect an ordinary fee and retain a client. (Mem. at 25-27.) Morgan Stanley cited a number of cases showing that in like circumstances courts routinely dismiss allegations of fraud and misrepresentation. See, e.g., Shields v. Citytrust Bancorp, Inc., 25 F.3d 1124, 1130 (2d Cir. 1994) (“In looking for a sufficient allegation of motive, [courts] assume that the defendant is acting in his or her informed economic self-interest.”); THC Holdings Corp. v. Chinn, No. 95 Civ. 4422 (KMW), 1998 WL 50202, at *9 (S.D.N.Y. Feb 6, 1998) (“A mere allegation that defendant was in a position to receive normal compensation for professional services rendered is not sufficient to support a showing of motive in the fraud scienter analysis.”) (citing, inter alia, Friedman v. Arizona World Nurseries Ltd. P’Ship, 740 F. Supp. 521, 532 (S.D.N.Y. 1990) (dismissing fraud-based claim on ground that incentive of receiving fee for professional services is insufficient to allege scienter), aff’d, 927 F.2d 594 (2d Cir. 1991)). Yet CPH once again responds with no cases of its own, and fails to acknowledge controlling authority that disposes of its own allegations.

CPH’s own arguments in fact confirm the wisdom of these decisions. For example, CPH argues that “Morgan Stanley wanted to work for Sunbeam into the future and was deeply concerned that it would be replaced if it did not participate in the fraud.” (Opp. at 49.) But this is almost verbatim what Sunbeam alleged to constitute scienter against Arthur Andersen and other defendants: “Defendant’s motivation was simple — to do whatever was necessary to retain a major client.” CPH v. Andersen, Am. Compl. ¶ 4 (Ex. D); see also June 8, 2001 Compl. ¶ 4, Coleman (Parent) Holdings v. Arthur Andersen LLP & Phillip Harlow, No. 01-06062AN (“The motivation of Harlow and Andersen was simple — to do whatever was necessary to retain a major client.”) (Ex. E). In other words, CPH’s scienter allegation is mere boilerplate, which, if accepted, would render the scienter element of fraud meaningless in suits against financial services firms. As Morgan Stanley explained in its opening Memorandum: “[I]f retention of a client and collection of fees is enough to plead scienter as a matter of law, then the scienter element would be rendered a dead letter in Florida — and the floodgates would be open to a wave of frivolous claims based on ordinary economic motive.” (Mem. at 25.) CPH’s assembly-line approach to litigation in this Court proves this sentiment all too true.

Finally, CPH dismisses the fact that Morgan Stanley Senior Funding (“MSSF”) — a sister company to Morgan Stanley — lost hundreds of millions of dollars of its own money when Sunbeam collapsed. Desperate to avoid the implications of this argument for its fraud claim, CPH resorts to making up facts about the loan to save its own deficient pleadings. CPH asserts, for example, that Morgan Stanley and MSSF “expected” to “syndicate most or all of the loan” to other potential lenders, and “in fact MSSF did so.” (Opp. at 50.) This assertion is supported with no citation to the pleadings, and thus is irrelevant to this motion for judgment on the pleadings. It is also simply not true: as soon as Sunbeam’s financial troubles and suspicion of fraud came to light, MSSF and other lenders to Sunbeam suspended syndication of the loan. CPH’s efforts to distort the historical record notwithstanding, its theory of fraud — that Morgan Stanley knowingly lent hundreds of millions of dollars of its own money to a corrupt client in order to make tens of millions of dollars of fees — simply makes no sense on the face of the pleadings, and thus compels dismissal as a matter of law. (See Mem. at 26-27.)

IV. PLAINTIFF’S AIDING-AND-ABETTING CLAIM (COUNT II) MUST BE DISMISSED.

CPH’s position on aiding-and-abetting liability is unprecedented — and asks this Court to sanction a novel cause of action against financial advisors who (until now) hold no independent obligation to re-audit the financial records of their clients. Indeed, as the Complaint itself acknowledges, Morgan Stanley was retained by Sunbeam to provide financial advice to Sunbeam with respect to potential mergers and acquisitions. (Compl. ¶¶ 29-31.) Morgan Stanley was not retained to verify the accuracy of Sunbeam's professionally audited financial reports. (Feb. 27, 1998 Fairness Op. at 2-3 (Ex. 4); Note Offering Mem. at 2-3, 12-17, 72 (Ex. 5).) To the contrary, the pleadings reveal that Morgan Stanley relied exclusively on financial information provided by Sunbeam, Coleman, and their respective financial accountants — the same information that was available to CPH. (See Merger Agmt. § 6.7 (Ex. 1).) This fact is uncontradicted and fatal to any so-called “aiding and abetting” claim.

Indeed, CPH's own cited authority again supports dismissal of its Complaint. CPH relies chiefly on Houbigant, Inc. v. Deloitte & Touche LLP, 753 N.Y.S.2d 493, 498 (N.Y. App. Div. 2003), which it reads to “embrace” a liberal pleading standard “in cases like this.” (Opp. at 52.) But that case was not like this one — it involved a suit against an accountant for certifying “several years’ worth of audited financial statements” that overstated earnings “by nearly $200 million.” 753 N.Y.S.2d at 495. The court held:

[C]areful review of these cases [dismissing fraud claims for deficient allegations of scienter] impels us to emphasize that at the pleading stage of a fraud claim against an accountant, the plaintiff need not be able to make an evidentiary showing of exactly what the accountant knew as to falsehoods in the certified financial statements.

Id. at 497. The court then made clear that its holding applies to claims against accountants, citing various authorities for the principle that accountants hold a special duty to “independently verify information provided by the client.” Id. at 499. There is no basis for extending this holding to claims against underwriters, who have no such duty.

CPH's unparalleled attempt to hold a financial advisor liable for the sins of its client's accountants is clear from the face of the Complaint. CPH simply retools its earlier allegations against Arthur Andersen with no factual allegation as to how or why Morgan Stanley knew (or should have known) that Arthur Andersen's audited financial reports were false or misleading.

Because Morgan Stanley was entitled to rely on these financial reports, the Complaint is manifestly insufficient to state a claim for aiding and abetting fraud, which requires some factual allegation that the defendant actually knew of the alleged fraud. Indeed, CPH asserts that “[t]he complaint alleges that Morgan Stanley ‘knew of Dunlap’s fraudulent scheme and helped to conceal it,’ which should be the end of the matter.” (Opp. at 51 (quoting Compl. ¶ 86).) In fact, this does end the matter, in favor of dismissal, because a single conclusory allegation of knowledge cannot state a claim for aiding and abetting fraud:

While not unmindful of the inherent difficulty in pleading a defendant’s actual state of mind, plaintiffs’ allegations of the [defendants’] purported knowledge of [underlying misconduct] are extremely sparse and wholly conclusory consisting of this single statement: “Upon information and belief, [defendants] were aware of Cohen’s and plaintiff’s prior involvement with and beneficial ownership interest in the Falchi Building, and therefore knew of the fiduciary duty owed to plaintiffs by Cohen or acted in reckless disregard of the same.”

Kaufman v. Cohen, 760 N.Y.S.2d 157, 169 (N.Y. App. Div. 2003). The court then dismissed the aiding-and-abetting claim because “[a]part from this conclusory allegation, there are no facts in the complaint from which it could be inferred that the [defendants] had actual knowledge” of the underlying tort. Id.; see also Parrott v. Coopers & Lybrand, L.L.P., 702 N.Y.S.2d 40, 53 (N.Y. App. Div. 2000) (“Defendant cannot be held liable for another’s intentional tort ‘unless the circumstances of his connection therewith [and knowledge thereof] can be alleged in detail from the outset.’”) (citation omitted). The same conclusion is warranted here. For the only allegation that Morgan Stanley made actual representations to CPH refers to “false 1996 and 1997 sales and revenue figures” and other information based on Andersen’s audited financials (Compl. ¶ 39) — the truth or accuracy of which CPH never alleges Morgan Stanley had reason to doubt.

Finally, CPH’s allegations of “substantial assistance” in the Sunbeam fraud amount to no more than Morgan Stanley’s assistance in advising a client and investing hundreds of millions of dollars of its own money in the underlying transaction. (See Opp. at 43-54.) At most, the allegation here is that the transaction would not have closed “but for” Morgan Stanley’s role in it — an allegation that falls short of stating a claim for aiding and abetting a known fraud. See, e.g., Bloor v. Carro, Spanbock, Londin, Rodman & Fass, 754 F.2d 57, 62-63 (2d Cir. 1985) (“In alleging the requisite ‘substantial assistance’ by the aider and abettor, the complaint must allege that the acts of the aider and abettor proximately caused the harm to the [plaintiff] on which the primary liability is predicated Allegations of a ‘but for’ causal relationship are insufficient.”).¹⁸ The unprecedented nature of CPH’s theory of liability is again revealed by its complete failure to cite a single case (from New York or Florida) in support of its “substantial assistance” allegations — and we are aware of no case that supports those allegations.

V. PLAINTIFF’S NEGLIGENT MISREPRESENTATION CLAIM (COUNT IV) MUST BE DISMISSED

The negligent misrepresentation claim fails for the same reason: CPH relies on a single case that is specific to accountants and the issuance of audited financial statements — not advisors who rely on audited financial statements to render financial advice. (See Opp. at 55-56 (citing Credit Alliance Corp. v. Arthur Andersen & Co., 493 N.Y.S.2d 435 (N.Y. 1985)).) The manipulation of authority in this regard is particularly misleading. CPH contends that Credit Alliance establishes a “three-prong test” for pleading negligent misrepresentation, the first prong of which (according to CPH) is that “the defendant must have been aware that its representation would be used for a particular purpose.” (Opp. at 55.) But here is what Credit Alliance actually says in the referenced passage:

Before accountants may be held liable in negligence to noncontractual parties who rely to their detriment on inaccurate financial reports, certain prerequisites must be satisfied: (1) the accountants must have been aware that the financial reports were to be used for a particular purpose or purposes

Credit Alliance, 493 N.Y.S.2d at 443. That CPH believes it must import this holding — one the New York Court of Appeals itself characterized as “the law of accountants’ liability,” id. — into a case that involves neither accountants nor the auditing of financial reports,¹⁹ illustrates the unprecedented nature of its negligent misrepresentation claim.¹⁹

Indeed, the governing standard generally forecloses a negligent misrepresentation claim where the defendant served as the financial advisor to the defendant’s counterparty during contentious arm’s length negotiations. (See Mem. at 32-34 (citing United Safety of Am. Inc. v. Consolidated Edison Co. of N.Y., Inc., 213 A.D.2d 283, 286 (N.Y. App. Div. 1995) (“A simple arm’s length relationship is not enough.”) (other citations omitted)); Dyncorp v. GTE, 215 F. Supp. 2d 308, 329 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (The requisite “special relationship of trust generally does not exist between sophisticated commercial entities entering into arms-length business transactions.”). This is especially true here, since CPH was represented at all times by its own stable of advisors, attorneys, and accountants, and Morgan Stanley — which was twice removed from CPH — was manifestly not in the position of a fiduciary to CPH. See, e.g., Butvin v. Doubleclick, Inc., No. 99 Civ. 4727, 2000 WL 827673, at *10 (S.D.N.Y. June 26, 2000) (“[A] plaintiff may only recover for negligent misrepresentation where the defendant owes him a fiduciary duty.”) (citations omitted), aff’d, 2001 WL 1486519 (2d Cir. Nov. 15, 2001). Even CPH cannot bring itself to argue that the Complaint meets this heightened pleading standard, relying instead on the lesser standards for accountant liability, which obviously do not apply here.

In any event, the negligent misrepresentation claim fails on the additional and independent grounds that (i) there is no factual allegation that Morgan Stanley knew or should have known that the only representations it ever made to CPH — those set forth in Compl. ¶ 39 — were false or misleading when made, and (ii) there is no factual allegation that CPH justifiably relied on those representations. Accordingly, as explained in the opening Memorandum, this claim must be dismissed for substantially the same reasons that the fraud claim must be dismissed. (See Mem. at 34.)

VI. PLAINTIFF’S CONSPIRACY CLAIM (COUNT III) MUST BE DISMISSED.

Because CPH fails to state a fraudulent or negligent misrepresentation claim, it cannot state a civil conspiracy claim under either Florida or New York law. (See Mem. at 34.) CPH concedes this point — acknowledging that the conspiracy claim is “derivative” of other claims — so there is no dispute that this claim rises or falls largely on arguments already discussed. (See Opp. at 57.) But even if CPH could state an underlying claim, its conspiracy claim fails because it rests on the conclusory statement that “Morgan Stanley conspired with Dunlap and other senior Sunbeam executives to conceal the truth about Sunbeam’s financial performance and business operations.” (Compl. ¶ 90.) That will not suffice, because “a complaint must contain more than general allegations in support of the conspiracy.” Gabriel Capital, L.P. v. NatWest Fin., Inc., 94 F. Supp. 2d 491, 511 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (internal quotations & citation omitted), cited in Opp. at 57. The Complaint here simply does not specifically allege any requisite “agreement between the conspirator and the wrongdoer.” Id.

Moreover, even if the Complaint specifically alleged such a conspiratorial agreement, the “overt acts” identified by CPH refer almost exclusively to events that occurred before there is even an allegation that Morgan Stanley knew of Sunbeam’s true financial situation. (See Opp. at 57.) The only possible exception is the March 19, 1998 press release, but (again) there is no factual allegation that CPH ever read the press release, much less relied on it to close the Sunbeam acquisition. See supra at 29-31. CPH points to no authority that would permit such tendentious allegations to support a civil conspiracy claim as a matter of law — and we are aware of none. The claim, accordingly, must be dismissed.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, and for the reasons stated in Morgan Stanley's opening Memorandum, plaintiff's Complaint should be dismissed in its entirety pursuant to Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.061(a). Alternatively, defendant is entitled to judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Florida Rule of Civil Procedure 1.140(c).

forth in the initial brief (pp.29-33) and below, Florida law clearly applies to UCP's entire breach of fiduciary duty claim.

First, governing Florida state case law holds that in all tort actions, including commercial injury claims for breach of fiduciary duty, the "lex loci delicti" or "place of injury" is presumptively controlling and only displaced if the other Restatement factors show that another jurisdiction has a more significant relationship. See Bates v. Cook, Inc., 509 So. 2d 1112, 1113-14 (Fla. 1987) ("we see no reason to treat an action for theft of trade secrets differently than other tort actions"); State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Olsen, 406 So. 2d 1109, 1111 (Fla. 1981); Bishop v. Florida Specialty Paint Co., 389 So. 2d 999, 1001 (Fla. 1980); Tinwood N.V. v. Sun Banks, Inc., 570 So. 2d 955, 959 n.3 (Fla. 5th DCA 1990) (applying State Farm to breach of fiduciary duty claim).⁷ It is settled that the lex loci delicti of a fiduciary duty claim is the place of plaintiff's pecuniary injury. E.g., Sound Video Unlimited, Inc. v. Video Shack Inc., 700 F. Supp. 127, 133-34 (S.D. N.Y. 1988). Accordingly, the law of Florida - the situs of UCP's pecuniary injury and principal place of business - presumptively controls. Appellees' arguments to the contrary are meritless.⁸

⁷This Court has recognized that it is "bound to adhere to decisions of the state's intermediate appellate courts absent some persuasive indication that the state's highest court would decide the issue otherwise." Fioretti, 53 F.3d at 1236 n.28.

⁸The federal district court decisions cited by appellees do not support their argument. In International Tele-marine Corp. v. Malone & Assocs., Inc., 845 F. Supp. 1427 (D. Colo. 1994), the court merely found that the other MSR factors outweighed the place of injury. Id. at 1430-31. Significantly, the court relied on Bishop - a lex loci delicti-presumption case - in applying the MSR test to a breach of fiduciary duty claim. Id. Default Proof Florida); Restatement of Conflict of Laws §377 n.4 (1934). Here, the evidence shows - and the court found - that this was Florida.

Moreover, appellees' contention that the evidence establishes that New York was the sole place of appellees' fraud is erroneous and hotly disputed. Florida is clearly the situs where UCP executed the confidentiality agreement and received NAFINSA's fraudulently stated intention to "enter into discussions slating to possible acquisitions, equity investments, partnerships or joint venture operations involving [Del Monte]." Aziz also had telephone conversations with Van Diepen from Florida on July 14 and 16 - and, of course, prior to the July 8 meeting in New York - during which appellees' fraudulent intentions of using UCP as an "entry ticket" were never revealed. Appellees surely committed fraud in Florida.

Further, in reliance on appellees' false statements of "joining forces," UCP not only arranged for appellees entrance into due diligence from Florida but exchanged Proprietary Information in Florida as well. Appellees' assertion that the parties agreed to enter the confidentiality agreement at their initial New York meeting is controverted by Van Diepen's own testimony that an agreement would not be reached until UCP obtained a due diligence date for the parties. Thus, UCP's acts of detrimental reliance occurred in great part if not exclusively in Florida.

As previously detailed, Florida is also the state where the parties' relationship was centered. Contrary to appellees' assertion, the subject of the entire transaction was obviously Del Monte which was headquartered in Florida and where the three-day due diligence meeting and exchange of Proprietary Information took place. Appellees additionally ignore that the confidentiality agreement was executed by UCP and Del Monte in Florida - i.e., the contract was formed in Florida. Under appellees' own case law, therefore, Florida plainly has the most significant relationship. See Merriman, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10528 at *29-30:

CPH'S RESPONSE TO MORGAN STANLEY & CO. INCORPORATED'S
FIRST SET OF REQUESTS FOR ADMISSION

Plaintiff Coleman (Parent) Holdings Inc. ("CPH"), by its attorneys and pursuant to Florida Rules of Civil Procedure 1.370, hereby responds and objects to Morgan Stanley & Co. Incorporated's ("Morgan Stanley") First Set of Request for Admission ("Requests for Admission") dated August 18, 2003:

INITIAL OBJECTIONS

1. CPH objects to the definition of "Transaction" because Morgan Stanley's definition mischaracterizes the transaction that closed on March 30, 1998 and because the definition is vague and ambiguous to the extent it includes "all related communications, agreements, and transactions." CPH will construe the term "Transaction" to mean the transaction by which CPH transferred its interest in The Coleman Company, Inc. ("Coleman") to Sunbeam Corporation ("Sunbeam").
2. CPH objects to the definition of "Coleman" to the extent that it includes CPH. CPH will construe the term "Coleman" to mean The Coleman Company, Inc.

3. CPH objects to the Requests for Admission on the basis that many of them are duplicative and constitute an unnecessary waste of time.

4. CPH objects to the Requests for Admission on the basis that they are abusive and vexatious.
