Hon. Rolando Olvera
Nominee, United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas
Responses to Questions for the Record
From Senator Chuck Grassley

1. What is the most important attribute of a judge, and do you possess it?

Response: The most important attributes of a judge are a combination of the following: (1) a commitment to enforce and administer the law; (2) an unwavering demeanor of courtesy and respect to all before the court; (3) a hard work ethic to move the docket quickly and efficiently; and (4) a goal of fair, consistent, and sagacious rulings. I believe I have demonstrated the foregoing qualities during my tenure as a state district judge and presiding judge for the state of Texas.

2. Please explain your view of the appropriate temperament of a judge. What elements of judicial temperament do you consider the most important, and do you meet that standard?

Response: The fundamental cornerstone of judicial temperament is one based in respect for every aspect of the judicial and legal system; one must respect the law, the parties, the attorneys, and the public. In summary, one is a judicial public servant, and must honor said duty at all times. I believe I have demonstrated the foregoing qualities during my tenure as a state district judge and presiding judge for the state of Texas, and if confirmed, will continue to do so as a federal district judge.

3. In general, Supreme Court precedents are binding on all lower federal courts and Circuit Court precedents are binding on the district courts within the particular circuit. Please describe your commitment to following the precedents of higher courts faithfully and giving them full force and effect, even if you personally disagree with such precedents?

Response: My term as a state district court judge for approximately twelve years demonstrates a proven record of commitment to the doctrine of stare decisis and the rule of law. If confirmed as a federal district judge, I would continue said commitment, without regard to whether I agreed or disagreed with any precedent.

4. At times, judges are faced with cases of first impression. If there were no controlling precedent that was dispositive on an issue with which you were presented, to what sources would you turn for persuasive authority? What principles will guide you, or what methods will you employ, in deciding cases of first impression?

Response: In the scenario of a case of first impression, my first source would be the plain language of the statute, and if clear, I would base my decision on said language. If the statutory language was ambiguous, I would then follow analogous authority in Supreme Court and Fifth Circuit cases.
5. What would you do if you believed the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals had seriously erred in rendering a decision? Would you apply that decision or would you use your best judgment of the merits to decide the case?

Response: My term as a state district court judge for approximately twelve years demonstrates a proven record of commitment to the doctrine of stare decisis and the rule of law. If confirmed as a federal district judge, I would continue said commitment, without regard to whether I believed an opinion was erroneously decided.

6. Under what circumstances do you believe it appropriate for a federal court to declare a statute enacted by Congress unconstitutional?

Response: Statutes enacted by Congress are presumed to be constitutional; a constitutional challenge should only be considered as an option of last resort, and limited in scope to a statute which violates the Constitution or exceeds congressional authority under the Constitution.

7. In your view, is it ever proper for judges to rely on foreign law, or the views of the “world community”, in determining the meaning of the Constitution? Please explain.

Response: No, in my opinion, it is not appropriate for United States judges to rely on foreign law or the views of the “world community” in determining the meaning of the United States Constitution, unless required to do so by binding Supreme Court and Fifth Circuit precedent.

8. What assurances or evidence can you give this Committee that, if confirmed, your decisions will remain grounded in precedent and the text of the law rather than any underlying political ideology or motivation?

Response: My term as a state district court judge for approximately twelve years demonstrates a proven record of commitment to the doctrine of stare decisis and the rule of law. If confirmed as a federal district judge, I would continue said commitment, without regard to any underlying political ideology or motivation.

9. What assurances or evidence can you give the Committee and future litigants that you will put aside any personal views and be fair to all who appear before you, if confirmed?

Response: My term as a state district court judge for approximately twelve years demonstrates a proven record of commitment to the doctrine of stare decisis and the rule of law. If confirmed as a federal district judge, I would continue said commitment, without regard to any personal views.

10. If confirmed, how do you intend to manage your caseload?

Response: As a state district judge for approximately twelve years presiding in a court of general jurisdiction which includes a criminal, civil and family law docket, I have extensive experience in managing a large caseload. If confirmed as a federal district judge, I would continue my practice of setting reasonable deadlines at every stage of a trial, including but not limited to scheduling orders with pleading and discovery deadlines, status hearings, and pretrial requirements as to contested issues and exchange of exhibits and discovery. In summary, detailed supervision enhances the work effort by the attorneys and the likelihood of settlement and/or alternatively, an efficient contested trial.

11. Do you believe that judges have a role in controlling the pace and conduct of litigation and, if confirmed, what specific steps would you take to control your docket?

Response: Yes, judges play an active role in controlling the pace of the docket. If confirmed, I would follow the steps set forth in my response to the above Question #10.

12. As a judge, you have experience deciding cases and writing opinions. Please describe how you reach a decision in cases that come before you and to what sources of information you look for guidance.

Response: In the scenario where the parties have elected a trial before the court as opposed to a jury trial, the parties present evidence and testimony. At the conclusion of the trial, the case is taken under advisement. By rule, the attorneys of record for the parties must then submit to the court their prospective judgments, along with findings of fact and conclusions of law, and all supporting statutes and case law. I then carefully consider the testimony, evidence, and controlling precedent. Finally, I issue a judgment.

13. President Obama said that deciding the “truly difficult” cases requires applying “one’s deepest values, one’s core concerns, one’s broader perspectives on how the world works, and the depth and breadth of one's empathy . . . the critical ingredient is supplied by what is in the judge's heart.” Do you agree with this statement?

Response: I have no knowledge as to the context of this statement. My term as a state district court judge for approximately twelve years demonstrates a proven record of commitment to the doctrine of stare decisis and the rule of law. If confirmed as a federal district judge, I would continue said commitment.

14. According to the website of American Association for Justice (AAJ), it has established a Judicial Task Force, with the stated goals including the following: “To increase the number of pro-civil justice federal judges, increase the level of professional diversity of federal judicial nominees, identify nominees that may have an anti-civil justice bias, increase the number of trial lawyers serving on individual Senator’s judicial selection committees”.

a. Have you had any contact with the AAJ, the AAJ Judicial Task Force, or any individual or group associated with AAJ regarding your nomination? If yes, please detail what individuals you had contact with, the dates of the contacts, and the subject matter of the communications.

Response: No.
b. Are you aware of any endorsements or promised endorsements by AAJ, the AAJ Judicial Task Force, or any individual or group associated with AAJ made to the White House or the Department of Justice regarding your nomination? If yes, please detail what individuals or groups made the endorsements, when the endorsements were made, and to whom the endorsements were made.

Response: No.

15. Please describe with particularity the process by which these questions were answered.

Response: I received these questions January 29, 2015, and immediately commenced the process of drafting my answers. I discussed the initial draft with a Department of Justice representative, and then finalized my answers for submission.

16. Do these answers reflect your true and personal views?

Response: Yes.

Responses to Questions for the Record
From Senator Ted Cruz

Judicial Philosophy

1. Describe how you would characterize your judicial philosophy.

Response: My judicial philosophy is based on a combination of the following factors: (1) a commitment to enforce and administer the law; (2) an unwavering demeanor of courtesy and respect to all before the court; (3) a hard work ethic to move the docket quickly and efficiently; and (4) a goal of fair, consistent, and sagacious rulings.

2. How does a responsible judge interpret constitutional provisions, such as due process or equal protection, without imparting his own values to these provisions?

Response: My term as a state district court judge for approximately twelve years demonstrates a proven record of commitment to the doctrine of stare decisis and the rule of law. If confirmed as a federal district judge, I would continue said commitment to binding precedent, without regard to personal values or beliefs.

3. With the assumption that you will apply all the law announced by the Supreme Court, please name a Warren Court, Burger Court, and Rehnquist Court precedent that you believe was wrongly decided—but would nevertheless faithfully apply as a lower court judge. Why do you believe these precedents were wrongly decided?

Response: I am firmly committed to the doctrine of stare decisis. My term as a state district court judge for approximately twelve years demonstrates a proven record of commitment to said doctrine and the rule of law; I apply precedent without first asking myself whether a case was wrongly decided. If confirmed as a federal district judge, I would continue said commitment to binding precedent, without regard to personal beliefs.

4. Which sitting Supreme Court Justice do you most want to emulate?

Response: While I respect any individual to have reached the level of a Supreme Court Justice, I would not presume to intimately know the judicial philosophy of any Supreme Court Justice, past or present. Regardless, my judicial philosophy is my own, and if confirmed, I would continue the same philosophy I have demonstrated and developed the past twelve years as a state district judge.

5. Do you believe originalism should be used to interpret the Constitution? If so, how and in what form (i.e., original intent, original public meaning, other)?

Response: I am aware that the Supreme Court evaluated how the words of the Second Amendment were commonly understood by ordinary citizens when that provision was ratified in order to determine its meaning. See District of Columbia v. Heller, 554 U.S. 570 (2008). If confirmed, I would apply Heller and other Supreme Court and Fifth Circuit precedent regarding methods of constitutional interpretation.
6. What role, if any, should the constitutional rulings and doctrines of foreign courts and international tribunals play in the interpretation of our Constitution and laws?

Response: Foreign courts and/or foreign laws play no role in determining the meaning of the United States Constitution, unless required to do so by binding precedent in a specific case set forth by the U.S. Supreme Court and Fifth Circuit.

7. What are your views about the role of federal courts in administering institutions such as prisons, hospitals, and schools?

Response: While the rulings of federal courts may affect said institutions, federal courts administer justice and the courts, nothing else.

8. What are your views on the theory of a living Constitution, and is there any conflict between the theory of a living Constitution and the doctrine of judicial restraint?

Response: As a state district court judge, I have not been involved in any legal debate as to the theory of a living Constitution. I do believe in the doctrine of judicial restraint, which I would define as a judge’s responsibility to decide only the contested issues properly before the court and to base said decision on text and precedent, without regard to personal beliefs. My term as a state district court judge for approximately twelve years demonstrates a proven record of commitment to the doctrine of stare decisis and the rule of law. If confirmed as a federal district judge, I would continue said commitment to judicial restraint, and would apply any binding precedent from the Supreme Court and Fifth Circuit, without regard to how some legal commentators may classify a case.

9. What is your favorite Supreme Court decision in the past 10 years, and why?

Response: In my day to day work experience, any case directly on point as to an issue in controversy before the court may be deemed a favorite case. My term as a state district court judge for approximately twelve years demonstrates a proven record of commitment to the doctrine of stare decisis and the rule of law. If confirmed as a federal district judge, I would continue said commitment to binding precedent, without regard to personal beliefs.

10. Please name a Supreme Court case decided in the past 10 years that you would characterize as an example of judicial activism.

Response: My term as a state district court judge for approximately twelve years demonstrates a proven record of commitment to said doctrine and the rule of law; I apply precedent without first asking myself whether a case is an example of judicial activism. If confirmed as a federal district judge, I would continue said commitment to binding precedent, without regard to personal beliefs.

11. What is your definition of natural law, and do you believe there is any room for using natural law in interpreting the Constitution or statutes?

Response: Legal scholars define natural law as a set of laws inherent to human nature and civilized course of conduct that govern human society. If confirmed, I would look to the text of the constitutional or statutory provision at issue and apply binding precedent to any case requiring the interpretation of the Constitution or statutes.

Congressional Power

12. Explain whether you agree that “State sovereign interests . . . are more properly protected by procedural safeguards inherent in the structure of the federal system than by judicially created limitations on federal power.” Garcia v. San Antonio Metro Transit Auth., 469 U.S. 528, 552 (1985).

Response: My term as a state district court judge for approximately twelve years demonstrates a proven record of commitment to said doctrine and the rule of law. If confirmed as a federal district judge, I would continue said commitment, without regard to personal beliefs. Thus, if presented with a case involving the constitutional limits on federal power versus state sovereign interests, I would apply the Garcia case along with any other relevant binding precedent from the Supreme Court and Fifth Circuit.

13. Do you believe that Congress’ Commerce Clause power, in conjunction with its Necessary and Proper Clause power, extends to non-economic activity?

Response: The Supreme Court has addressed the limits of Congress’ Commerce Clause power as to non-economic activity in the following cases: (1) United States v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549 (1995); (2) United States v. Morrison, 529 U.S. 598 (2000); and (3) Gonzales v. Raich, 545 U.S. 1 (2005). Thus, if confirmed, I would apply all three of the above cases, along with any other relevant binding precedent from the Supreme Court and Fifth Circuit.

14. What limits, if any, does the Constitution place on Congress’s ability to condition the receipt and use by states of federal funds?

Response: In South Dakota v. Dole, 483 U.S. 203, 207-208 (1987), the Supreme Court set forth the following limits on congressional ability to attach conditions upon States with respect to the receipt of federal funds: (1) the conditions must be in pursuit of “the general welfare”; (2) the conditions must be expressed unambiguously enabling the States to exercise an informed decision as to the consequences of using said funds; (3) the conditions must be related to a federal interest in national projects or programs; and (4) the conditions must not violate any constitutional provisions that would bar conditional grants of federal funds. Thus, if confirmed, I would apply the Dole case, along with any other relevant binding precedent from the Supreme Court, such as NFIB v. Sebelius, 132 S. Ct. 2566, 2602 (2012), and Fifth Circuit.

Response: This question is currently being litigated. In the Sebelius case, five justices concluded that Congress did not have sufficient authority under the Commerce Clause and Necessary and Proper Clause to pass the Affordable Care Act.
Presidential Power

16. What are the judicially enforceable limits on the President's ability to issue executive orders or executive actions?

Response: The President’s ability to issue executive orders is addressed by the Supreme Court in cases including Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579 (1952), and Medellin v. Texas, 552 U.S. 491 (2008). These cases stand for the proposition that the President’s executive orders or executive actions must result from either an act of Congress or the Constitution. If confirmed, I would apply these cases along with any other relevant binding precedent from the Supreme Court and Fifth Circuit.

17. Does the President possess any unenumerated powers under the Constitution, and why or why not?

Response: The President’s possession of unenumerated powers is addressed by the Supreme Court in cases including Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579 (1952), and Medellin v. Texas, 552 U.S. 491 (2008). These cases stand for the proposition that the President’s powers must result from either an act of Congress or the Constitution. If confirmed, I would apply these cases along with any other relevant binding precedent from the Supreme Court and Fifth Circuit.

Individual Rights

18. When do you believe a right is “fundamental” for purposes of the substantive due process doctrine?

Response: In Washington v. Glucksberg, 521 U.S. 702, 720-21 (1997), the Supreme Court held that a right is fundamental for purposes of the substantive due process clause when it is “deeply rooted in this Nation’s history and tradition” and “implicit in the concept of ordered liberty such that neither liberty nor justice would exist if they were sacrificed” (internal quotations and citations omitted). If confirmed, I would apply the Glucksberg case along with any other relevant binding precedent from the Supreme Court and Fifth Circuit.

19. When should a classification be subjected to heightened scrutiny under the Equal Protection Clause?

Response: In City of Cleburne v. Cleburne Living Center, 473 U.S. 432, 440 (1995), the Supreme Court held that classifications that are “so seldom relevant to the achievement of any legitimate state interest” such as classifications based upon race, alienage, national origin, gender, or illegitimacy would be subject to heightened scrutiny under the Equal Protection Clause. If confirmed, I would apply the Cleburne case along with any other relevant binding precedent from the Supreme Court and Fifth Circuit.

Response: I have no personal expectations on the issue of the use of racial preferences in public higher education. If confirmed, I would apply Grutter and Fisher v. University of Texas, 133 S.
21. To what extent does the Equal Protection Clause tolerate public policies that apportion benefits or assistance on the basis of race?

Response: In Grutter v. Bollinger, 539 U.S. 306, 308 (2003), the Supreme Court held that race based actions may be valid if “necessary to further a compelling governmental interest”, and would not be a violation of the Equal Protection Clause if such actions were “narrowly tailored to further that interest.” If confirmed, I would apply Grutter and Fisher v. University of Texas, 133 S. Ct. 2411 (2013), along with any other relevant binding precedent from the Supreme Court and Fifth Circuit.

22. Does the Second Amendment guarantee an individual right to keep and bear arms for self-defense, both in the home and in public?

Response: In District of Columbia v. Heller, 554 U.S. 570 (2008), the Supreme Court held the Second Amendment established an individual right for U.S. citizens to possess firearms in the home. Although the Supreme Court has not specifically addressed the issue, related Fifth Circuit case law has established broader restrictions for the use of firearms in public. For example, in National Rifle Association v. McCraw, 719 F.3d 338, 346 (5th Cir. 2013), the court upheld a state law prohibiting individuals aged eighteen to twenty from carrying handguns in public. If confirmed, I would apply the Heller case along with any other relevant binding precedent from the Supreme Court and Fifth Circuit.
